Ripalda, Juan Martínez de (1594–1648), *Jesuit theologian. One of the most famous theologians of his time, he taught philosophy at Monforte, theology at Salamanca, and, in the last years of his life, moral theology at the Imperial College at Madrid. His chief work is his treatise on the supernatural, De Ente Supernaturali (3 vols., 1634, 1645, and 1648, vol. 3 being mainly an attack on M. *Baius). Among his other published works are an exposition of the *Master of the Sentences, Brevis Expositio Magistri Sententiarum (1635), and the posthumous De Virtutibus Fide, Spe, et Charitate (1652). Several other treatises, among them 'De Visione Dei', 'De Voluntate Dei', and 'De Praedestinatione', are preserved in MS in the National Library at Salamanca.

A. Arbeloa Egüas, La doctrina de la predestinación y de la gracia eficaz en Juan Martínez de Ripalda (Pamplona, 1950); A. Kaiser, Natur und Gnade im Urstand: Eine Untersuchung der Kontroverse zwischen Michael Bajus und Johannes Martinez de Ripalda (Münchener Theologische Studien, Abt. 2, Bd. 30; 1965). Sommervogel, 5 (1894), cols. 640–3; Polgár, 3 (1990), p. 505. P. Dumont, SJ, in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2712–37, s.v.

ripidion. See FAN, LITURGICAL.

Ripon (Lat. Ad Ripam). Not long before 661, Ahlfrith, a son of Oswui, King of Northumbria, founded a monastery at Ripon which he peopled with monks from Melrose, but when shortly afterwards he required them to abandon their *Celtic customs and adopt Roman discipline, Eata, the abbot, St *Cuthbert, the guestmaster, and others returned to Melrose, and St *Wilfrid was made abbot (661). In 950 the monastery was destroyed by King Edred (d. 955) in his war with the Danes. It was rebuilt later by Abps. of *York. In the 11th cent. *Augustinian canons raised a new church, dedicated to Sts Peter and Paul, upon the ruins of that of St Wilfrid. This foundation was dissolved by *Henry VIII, but refounded in 1604 as a collegiate church. In 1836 the church became the cathedral of the new diocese of Ripon. Beneath it is the 7th-cent. crypt featuring the small aperture connecting the crypt with an adjacent passage, known as 'St Wilfrid's Needle'.

Primary material ed. J. T. Fowler, Memorials of the Church of SS Peter and Wilfrid, Ripon (Surtees Society, 74, 78, 81, and 115; 1881–1908). Id., Acts of Chapter of the Collegiate Church of SS Peter and Wilfrid, Ripon, A.D. 1452 to A.D. 1506 (ibid. 64; 1875). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 2 (1819 edn.), pp. 131–3. M. F. Hearn, Ripon Minster: The Beginning of the Gothic Style in Northern England (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, 73, pt. 6; 1983). Bill [i.e. W. A.] Forster and others, Ripon Cathedral: Its History and Architecture (York [1993]). G. G. *Scott, 'Ripon Minster', The Archaeological Journal, 31 (1874), pp. 309–18. R. L. Poole, 'St. Wilfred and the See of Ripon', EHR 34 (1919), pp. 1–24. A. H. Thompson in VCH, York, 3, ed. W.

Page (1913), pp. 367–72. G. Crosse in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), p. 536, s.v.

Rita of Cascia, St (1381–1457), *Augustinian nun. Acc. to her biographers, she was a native of Roccaporena in the Apennines who wished from early childhood to become a nun, but was forced by her parents into marriage. For the next 18 years, despite tyrannical treatment from her husband, she behaved as an exemplary wife and mother. When after his death she sought admission to the Augustinian convent at Cascia, she was at first refused, as a widow, but later, owing (it is related) to supernatural intervention, was received and professed, and lived her last years with great austerity. Her symbol is roses, which are blessed in Augustinian churches on her feast day, 22 May.

There is very little early or reliable information. An Italian Life by A. Cevallucci is tr. into Latin in AASS, Mai. V (1694), pp. 224–9, with introd., pp. 223 f., and other material, pp. 230–2. The many popular Lives incl. those by J. Sicardo, AA (Madrid, 1701; modern edn., Naples, 1924), L. Tardi, AA (Foligno, 1805; modern edn., 1925; Eng. tr. by R. Connolly, OSB, 1903), M. J. Corcoran (New York, 1919), A. C. De Romanis, AA (Rome, 1923), and L. Vannutelli, OESA (Perugia, 1925). N. Del Re in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (Rome, 1968), cols. 212–18, with further bibl.

Rites, Congregation of Sacred. This Congregation was established by *Sixtus V in 1588 for the purpose of carrying out the decrees of the Council of *Trent with regard to the uniformity of public worship. It was responsible for the direction of the Liturgy of the Latin Church and everything relating to *canonization, *beatification, and the veneration of *relics, as well as for all *faculties, *indulgences, and *dispensations in liturgical matters. In 1930 *Pius XI imposed upon it the duty of correcting and improving liturgical books and established a historical section.

In 1969 the Congregation of Rites was divided into the Congregation for the *Causes of Saints and the Congregation for Divine Worship. The former deals with beatification and canonization procedures and the authentication and preservation of relics; the latter succeeded the Consilium set up in 1964 by the Second *Vatican Council for the reform of the liturgy, and liturgical documents are issued under its authority. It has already issued a new *Missal, *Lectionary and *Breviary, and new orders for administering the Sacraments. By the Apostolic Constitution 'Pastor Bonus' of 1988 it is again (as from 1975 to 1984) combined with the Congregation for the Discipline of the Sacraments.

The Decisions of the Congregation of Sacred Rites prior to 1926 are collected in Decreta Authentica Congregationis Sacrorum Rituum . . . sub Auspiciis SS. Domini Nostri Leonis Papae XIII (5 vols., Rome, 1898–1901; vols. 1–3, decisions issued from May 1588 to 15 Dec. 1899, nos. 1–4051, with enumeration of older collections in brackets; vol. 4, the 'Instructio Clementina' with comm. by A. Gardellini and further Suffragia and Adnotationes to decrees; vol. 5, index; vol. 6, Appendix I (1912), continuing the decrees to 1911 (nos. 4052–284), with index; and Appendix II (1927), containing the decrees (nos. 4285–404), issued 1912–26; later decrees are published in the Acta Apostolicae Sedis). An index of the archives placed in the Bibliothèque Nationale by order of Napoleon I was made by Amedeus Comes de Bourmont and pr. in Anal. Boll. 5 (1886), pp. 147–61. F. R. McManus, The Congregation of Sacred Rites (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, 352; 1954). B. Ojetti, SJ, in CE 13 (1912), pp. 144 f., s.v. 'Roman Congregations', with bibl.; F. R. McManus in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 518 f., s.v. See also works cited under ROMAN CONGREGATIONS and CANONIZATION.

Ritschl, Albrecht (1822–89), German Protestant theologian. He was the son of Georg Karl Benjamin Ritschl (1783–1858), a pastor in Berlin who later became bishop in the Prussian Church of the Union (*Lutheran and *Calvinist) in Stettin, Pomerania. After studying at Bonn, Halle, Heidelberg, and *Tübingen, he was successively extraordinary (1851–9) and full (1859–64) Professor of Theology at Bonn; and then, from 1864 until his death, Professor of Theology at Göttingen.

Ritschl began his career as a disciple of F. C. *Baur and the *Tübingen School (qq.v.), defending in Das Evangelium Marcions und das kanonische Evangelium des Lukas (1846) and Die Entstehung der altkatholischen Kirche (1st edn., 1850) Baur's thesis of the radical conflict in the primitive Church between Petrinism and Paulinism. But his partial independence of Baur was already clear in his Entstehung, and when in 1857 he issued a second edition of this work he had completely abandoned the Tübingen doctrines.

From 1852 onwards Ritschl lectured regularly on 'Systematic Theology'. He insisted on the irreducibility of religion to other forms of experience. We apprehend by faith, not by reason, and this faith rests not on the intellectual apprehension of a series of facts but on the making of value-judgements (Werturtheile). To take a concrete instance, the Lord's Divinity is to be understood not as an historical statement of fact but as an expression of the 'revelational-value' (Offenbarungswert) of Christ for the community which trusts in Him as God. The theologian will reject all forms of philosophical Idealism as irrelevant to the Christian faith. Ritschl believed that his doctrines were in essence a reaffirmation of the NT message, which, despite their serious endeavours, even the 16th-cent. Reformers did not wholly understand.

Ritschl insisted further that it was to a community, not to individuals, that the Gospel was, and still is, committed. The Church was the immediate subject of Divine revelation and of God's redemptive work. The forgiveness of sins ('justification') is primarily achieved in and through the community for which, in His priestly office and in loyalty to His vocation, Christ died; and the final purpose of God for redeemed man is the moral integration of humanity in the Kingdom of God. The 'faith' by which man receives this gift is totally different from every form of mystical experience, of which Ritschl and his followers showed a deep distrust.

Ritschl elaborated his main conceptions in Die christliche Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung (3 vols., 1870–4; Eng. tr. of vol. 1 by J. S. Black, 1872, of vol. 3 ed. H. R. Mackintosh and A. B. Macaulay, 1900). The work exercised an immense influence on the theology of Germany in the latter half of the 19th cent. Of his later writings the two most considerable were Theologie und Metaphysik (1881) and Geschichte des Pietismus (3 vols., 1880–6).

The so-called 'Ritschlian School' was characterized by its stress on ethics and on the 'community', and by its repudiation of metaphysics and religious experience. Its principal organs were the Theologische Literaturzeitung, founded by E. *Schürer in 1876, Die christliche Welt (1887 ff.), and the Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche (1891 ff.). Apart from a more rigidly 'Ritschlian' inner circle, the school counted a great number of important Protestant theologians among its members, among them J. W. M. *Kaftan, W. *Herrmann, F. *Kattenbusch, F. *Loofs, A. *Harnack, and E. *Troeltsch.

There is no collected edn. of Ritschl's works. Eng. tr. by P. Hefner of the 'Prolegomena' to Geschichte des Pietismus, Theologie und Metaphysik, and Unterricht in der christlichen Religion (pub. 1875), under the title Three Essays (Philadelphia [1972]), with introd., pp. 3–50. Life by O. Ritschl (son), 2 vols., Freiburg i.B. and Leipzig, 1892–6. W. Herrmann, Der evangelische Glaube und die Theologie Albrecht Ritschls (1890); F. Kattenbusch, Von Schleiermacher zu Ritschl (1892; rev. as Die deutsche evangelische Theologie seit Schleiermacher, 2 vols., 1926–34). P. Wrzecionko, Die philosophischen Wurzeln der Theologie Albrecht Ritschls (1964); P. Hefner, Faith and the Vitalities of History (New York, 1966); H. Timm, Theorie und Praxis in der Theologie Albrecht Ritschls und Wilhelm Herrmanns (Gütersloh, 1967), esp. pp. 29–88; R. Schäfer, Ritschl: Grundlinien eines fast verschollenen dogmatischen Systems (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 41; 1968); D. L. Mueller, An Introduction to the Theology of Albrecht Ritschl (Philadelphia [1969]); D. W. Lotz, Ritschl & Luther: A Fresh Perspective on Albrecht Ritschl's Theology in the Light of his Luther Study (Nashville and New York [1974]); J. Richmond, Ritschl: A Reappraisal (1978); H. Kuhlmann, Die theologische Ethik Albrecht Ritschls (Beiträge zur evangelischen Theologie, 112; 1992). C. Welch, Protestant Thought in the Nineteenth Century, 2 (New Haven, Conn., and London [1985]), esp. pp. 1–30, with bibl. pp. 303 f. O. Ritschl in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 22–34; E. Schott in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 1114–17, s.v.

ritual. Strictly, the prescribed form of words of a liturgical function. By common usage the word is also employed, often in a derogatory sense, of the accompanying ceremonial. In the 19th cent. the term 'Ritualist' was commonly used of those who introduced or reintroduced medieval or modern RC ceremonial practices into the C of E.

Ritual Commission. The Royal Commission created in 1867 to inquire into the differences of ceremonial practice in the C of E. Its appointment followed the creation of a Committee of the *Canterbury Convocation on the subject, set up on the motion of Harvey Goodwin, afterwards Bp. of *Carlisle, early in 1866. Among the Commissioners were Abp. C. T. *Longley, Bp. A. C. *Tait, Bp. S. *Wilberforce, Bp. C. *Thirlwall, Dean R. *Gregory, Dean A. P. *Stanley, and Sir Robert *Phillimore. The Commission published its evidence in four reports issued between 1867 and 1870. The first (1867) confined itself to the question of Eucharistic *vestments; the second (1868) dealt with *incense and lights; the third (1869) was concerned with the *lectionary; and the fourth (1870) dealt with Prayer Book revision and other subjects. The Commissioners were almost unanimous in their wish to forbid the use of vestments, but in the second and fourth reports there were great divergences of opinion. As a general rule, practices which had prevailed in the C of E for the last 300 years were to be the standard of Anglican usage, and the bishop, on receiving complaints relating to any variation from such established use from churchwardens or from five resident parishioners, was to enforce obedience. The proposals met with much criticism, esp. from *High Churchmen, and failure to bring them into effect led ultimately to the *Public Worship Regulation Act 1874.

The reports, with appendices, are to be found respectively among the Parliamentary Papers, 1867, 20, pp. 719–896 (of the MS pagination of the vols. arranged for the House of Commons) (Cd. 3951); 1868, 38 (whole vol.; Cd. 4016); 1870, 19, pp. 437–59 (C. 17); and 1870, 19, pp. 461–742 (C. 218).

Ritual Masses. The Masses provided in the 1970 Roman Missal for use on the various occasions when Sacraments or other solemn acts are included in the Eucharist, e.g. at *Baptism, *Confirmation, *Ordination, the administration of *Viaticum, weddings, wedding anniversaries, the consecration of virgins, and the renewal of religious *vows. The Ritual Mass may take precedence over the Mass of the Day except on the most important Sundays and festivals. See also NUPTIAL MASS.

Rituale Romanum. The official service book of the Roman Rite, containing the prayers and formulas for the administration of the Sacraments and other liturgical actions of a priest apart from the Mass and the Divine Office. The first edition appeared under *Paul V in 1614; it was enlarged in 1752, revised in 1925, and has recently been under radical revision. The revised rites appeared separately between 1969 and 1976.

Before the pontificate of Paul V, various dioceses had issued their own Rituale. An editio typica of the Rituale Romanum was issued by Pope *Leo XIII (Ratisbon, 1884). F. A. Zaccaria, Bibliotheca Ritualis, 1 (Rome, 1776), pp. 137–60. L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 1 (1932), pp. 100–13, and, on the Rituale of the E. Churches, pp. 111–18. A. *Fortescue in CE 13 (1912), pp. 88–90, s.v. 'Ritual'; G. Löw, CSSR, in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1010–17, s.v. 'Rituale Romanum', with further bibl. On the Rituale of the E. Churches see also J. *Goar, Εὐχολόγιον sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647).

Ritus Servandus. Two liturgical items relating to the traditional RC Latin rite have this title.

(1) The rules about the customs and ceremonial of the Mass which, from the time of *Pius V until recent years, were printed at the beginning of the *Missal ('Ritus Servandus in Celebratione Missae'). It has now been replaced by the 'Instructio Generalis' issued in 1969 and attached to the 1970 Roman Missal.

(2) The book, formerly officially approved by the RC hierarchy in England, containing the directions and prayers for *Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament and certain other non-liturgical services (Ritus Servandus in Solemni Expositione et Benedictione Sanctissimi Sacramenti). This has now been replaced by the section of the *Rituale Romanum, De Sacra Communione et de Cultu Mysterii Eucharistici extra Missam (1973).

Robber Council of Ephesus (449). See LATROCINIUM.

Robbia, della. See DELLA ROBBIA.

Robert, St (*c.*1027–1111), Abbot of Molesme. A member of a noble family of Champagne, he entered the abbey of Moutier-la-Celle at the age of 15 and later became prior. After 1060 he was appointed abbot of St-Michel-de-Tonnerre, but failed to reform its greatly relaxed discipline and returned to Moutier-la-Celle. After a brief period as prior of St-Aiyoul, some hermits living in the forest of Colan asked to be placed under Robert's direction, and with the approval of the Pope he founded a monastery for them at Molesme (Burgundy) in 1075. The saintly life of its abbot and the original monks caused the house to flourish. But increasing wealth and the influx of unsuitable new members gradually brought about divisions in the community, and in 1098 Robert and several of his monks left Molesme and founded the monastery of *Cîteaux, to be made famous in the following century by St *Bernard of Clairvaux. When 18 months later the monks of Molesme asked to have their abbot back, Robert returned and under his government Molesme became a famous Benedictine centre. Permission for his cultus was granted by *Honorius III in 1222. Feast day, 29 Apr.

The principal authority is a 12th-cent. Life by a monk of Molesme, pr. in AASS, Apr. 3 (1675), pp. 668–76; Process of canonization, ibid., pp. 676–8. Life repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 157. 1269–94, with three letters, cols. 1293 f. Modern edn. of Life by K. Spahr, S. O. Cist. (Freiburg i.B., 1944), with bibl. M. F. Delehaye, 'Un Moine saint Robert fondateur de Cîteaux', Collectanea Ordinis Cisterciensium Reformatorum, 14 (1952), pp. 83–106; J. A. Lefèvre, 'Saint Robert de Molesme dans l'opinion monastique du XII[e] et du XIII[e] siècle', Anal. Boll. 74 (1956), pp. 50–83.

Robert Bellarmine, St. See BELLARMINE, ST ROBERT.

Robert of Holcot. See HOLCOT, ROBERT.

Robert of Melun (d. 1167), Scholastic theologian. An Englishman by birth, he studied at *Paris, where he became the successor of *Abelard at the school on Mont Ste-Geneviève and *John of Salisbury was among his pupils. In 1142 he went to Melun, where he directed a school, and in 1148 took part in the condemnation of *Gilbert de la Porrée at the Synod of *Reims. Recalled to England by Henry II *c.*1160, he was made Bp. of *Hereford in 1163. His works comprise 'Quaestiones de divina pagina', 'Quaestiones de epistolis Pauli' and the unfinished 'Sententiae'. His Trinitarian doctrine, which contradicted that of St *Bernard, came nearer to Abelard and was generally accepted by the 13th-cent. Schoolmen. Acc. to Robert, power is to be esp. attributed to the Father, wisdom to the Son, and goodness to the Holy Spirit, without, however, robbing the other two Persons of the quality predicated in a particular way of the one. Robert had a wide knowledge of the work of his contemporaries, and critically examined certain aspects of the Trinitarian doctrines of Gilbert de la Porrée and his followers, and theses of *Thierry of Chartres that tended to Pantheism. He used every known device of dialectic to maintain a conservative position.

'Quaestiones de divina pagina', 'Quaestiones de epistolis Pauli' and the first Book of the 'Sententiae' ed. R. M. Martin, OP, and R. M. Gallet, OP (SSL 13, 18, 21, 25; 1932–52), with series of arts. by Martin listed in vol. 2 (SSL 18), p. 326, and vol. 3 (pt. 1, SSL 21), p. 315. R. M. Martin, 'L'Œuvre théologique de Robert de Melun', RHE 15 (1920), pp. 456–89, with refs. and biog. introd. F. Anders, Die Christologie des Robert von Melun (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur und Dogmengeschichte, 15, Heft 5; 1927). R. P. Nash, SJ, 'The Meaning of Est in the Sentences (1158–1160) of Robert of Melun', Mediaeval Studies, 14 (1952), pp. 129–42. U. Horst, OP, Die Trinitäts- und Gotteslehre des Robert von Melun (Walberger Studien des Albertus-Magnus-Akademie. Theologische Reihe, 1; 1964); id., Gesetz und Evangelium: Das Alte Testament in der Theologie des Robert von Melun (Veröffentlichungen des Grabmann-Institutes, NF 13; 1971). R. P. Nash, SJ, in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 533 f., s.v.

Robert of Winchelsea. See WINCHELSEA, ROBERT OF.

Robert, Pierre. See OLIVETAN.

Robertson, Archibald (1853–1931), Bp. of *Exeter. Educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1876, he became Principal of Hatfield Hall, *Durham (1883–97), and later of *King's College, London (1897–1903). From 1903 to 1916 he was Bp. of Exeter. He was the principal Athanasian scholar of his generation. In 1882 and 1893 he issued editions of the text of the De Incarnatione, and in 1892 published the Select Writings of Athanasius, based on J. H. *Newman's translations, but with the addition of important prolegomena and notes. His other writings include Regnum Dei (1901; *Bampton Lectures).

C. Jenkins in DNB, 1931–1940 (1949), pp. 734 f., s.v.

Robertson, Frederick William (1816–1853), 'Robertson of Brighton', Anglican preacher. After abandoning an earlier intention of entering the army, he matriculated in 1837 at Brasenose College, Oxford, to prepare for the ministry. In 1840 he was ordained to a title at *Winchester and in 1842 became curate of Christ Church, Cheltenham. Here he gradually abandoned his earlier *Evangelicalism in favour of a *Broad Church type of theology. In 1846 he was for a short time minister of the English Church at Heidelberg. After returning to England and working for a brief space as rector of St Ebbe's, Oxford, he was appointed in 1847 minister of Trinity Chapel, Brighton, a small *proprietary chapel. Here his influence as a preacher extended far and wide. Though in no sense a scientific theologian, he appealed through his manifest sincerity, his great spiritual insight, and his remarkable capacity for analysing motive and character. He had a powerful influence with the working classes, at that time largely untouched by the C of E, and some of his best lectures were delivered to working men. The opposition he had to face throughout his time at Brighton, largely through his support of the revolutionary ideas of 1848, hastened his early death.

His sermons and lectures were pub. posthumously from shorthand notes: Sermons Preached at Brighton (1st and 2nd ser., 1855; 3rd ser., 1857; 4th ser., 1863); Lectures and Addresses on Literary and Social Topics (1858); Expository Lectures on St Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians (1859). Selection of Sermons in Everyman's Library, nos. 37–9 (1906). Life and Letters, ed. S. A. *Brooke (2 vols., London, 1865). Other Lives by F. Arnold (ibid., 1886) and H. H. *Henson (ibid., 1915). C. Beardsley, 'Frederick William Robertson of Brighton: Prince of Preachers', in M. J. Kitch (ed.), Studies in Sussex Church History (1981), pp. 157–71. R. Garnett in DNB 48 (1896), pp. 404–7.

Robertson, William (1721–93), a pivotal figure in the Scottish *Enlightenment. He was ordained in 1744 and came to prominence in the 1750s, when he helped to formulate the policies of the *Moderate party within the Church of Scotland and published the first of his widely acclaimed historical works, the History of Scotland during the Reigns of Mary and James VI (1759). Presented to the living of Old Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in 1761, he became principal of the University in the following year, holding both offices until his death. He enhanced his reputation as a philosophical historian with the History of the Reign of Charles V (1769) and the History of America (1777). As a university administrator he was extremely effective; he gathered a constellation of brilliant scholars and teachers, ended the imposition of religious tests for professors, and inspired the construction of new and impressive buildings. He was largely responsible for the foundation of the Royal Society of Edinburgh (1783). As leader of the General Assembly (1752–80) he helped to revolutionize the government and ethos of the Church. Unlike the leaders of the Popular party, who deplored the operation of the Patronage Act (1712) and supported opposition to it by parishes and presbyteries, Robertson and his friends insisted on obedience to civil and canon law. Their 'Reasons of Dissent' (1752), the manifesto of their emergent Moderate party, persuaded the Assembly to adopt more inflexible policies; conscientious scruples were henceforth disregarded, and dissenting ministers and congregations learned to submit or secede. He also turned his back on the controversial theology of the 17th cent., distrusting dogmatism and Puritanical other-worldliness, and freeing the clergy to contribute to the secular culture of their time. Though the upheavals of the late 18th cent. heralded the passing of his authoritarian and rational world, Scottish religion still bears the impress of his 'enlightened' regime.

Works pub. in 12 vols., London, 1812, incl. the Life by D. Stewart (orig. pub. in 1801). I. D. L. Clark, 'From Protest to Reaction: The Moderate Regime in the Church of Scotland, 1752–1805', in N. T. Phillipson and R. Mitchison (eds.), Scotland in the Age of Improvement (Edinburgh, 1970), pp. 200–24. R. B. Sher, Church and University in the Scottish Enlightenment: The Moderate Literati of Edinburgh (Princeton, NJ [1985]), passim.

Robinson, Henry Wheeler (1872–1945), theologian and OT scholar. Born in Northampton of humble parentage, he was educated for the *Baptist ministry in the universities of Edinburgh and Oxford. After short pastorates at Pitlochry and Coventry, he was appointed in 1906 to the staff of Rawdon Baptist College and quickly made his mark as teacher and writer. From 1920 to 1942 he was Principal of Regent's Park College and was chiefly responsible for its transference from London to Oxford. His main interests were in the fields of OT theology and the doctrines of the Holy Spirit and redemption. Among his principal writings were The Christian Doctrine of Man (1911), The Religious Ideas of the Old Testament (1913), The Christian Experience of the Holy Spirit (1928), Redemption and Revelation (1942), and Inspiration and Revelation in the Old Testament (1946). A man of wide intellectual interests and deep piety, his influence extended far beyond his own communion.

E. A. Payne (ed.), Studies in History and Religion Presented to Dr. H. Wheeler Robinson . . . on his Seventieth Birthday (1942), incl. list of his Works, pp. 254–7. Id., Henry Wheeler Robinson: A Memoir (1946). Id. in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 727–9.

Robinson, John (*c.*1575–1625), pastor to the *Pilgrim Fathers. Very little is known about his early life. He was a native of Lincs or Notts, probably studied at Cambridge, was ordained in the C of E, and seems to have held a curacy at *Norwich. He later became a *Puritan, joining the 'gathered Church' at Scrooby Manor, Notts. In 1608, owing to severe measures against Nonconformity, Robinson and his congregation were forced to flee to the *Netherlands. In 1609 he settled at *Leiden, of which university he became a member in 1615. From 1617 he interested himself in the project of his Leiden community to emigrate to America, as their strict *Calvinism had brought them into conflict with the *Arminianism of which Leiden was a centre. Though he was prevented from joining the Pilgrim Fathers in the Mayflower, he assisted them in their preparations and encouraged them by his letters. He was an able controversialist: in 1610 he published Justification of Separation from the Church, and in his Apologia (1619) he defended the principles of Congregationalism. He also wrote A Defence of the Doctrine Propounded by the Synod at Dort (1624). His Observations Divine and Moral, a collection of 62 essays on spiritual and moral subjects, was published posthumously (1625).

Collected edn. of his works, 3 vols., London, 1851, with memoir by R. Ashton in vol. 1, pp. xiii–lxxiv. Modern studies by F. J. Powicke (London [1920]) and W. H. Burgess (ibid., 1920). T. George, John Robinson and the English Separatist Tradition (Macon, Ga. [1982]). A. C. Carter, 'John Robinson and the Dutch Reformed Church' Studies in Church History, 3, ed. G. J. Cuming (Leiden, 1966), pp. 232–41; S. Brachlow, 'John Robinson and the Lure of Separatism in Pre-Revolutionary England', Church History, 50 (1981), pp. 288–301. See also bibl. to CONGREGATIONALISM and SEPARATISTS.

Robinson, John Arthur Thomas (1919–83), Anglican theologian and bishop. Educated at Marlborough and at Jesus College and Westcott House, Cambridge, he was ordained to the parochial ministry but subsequently taught at *Wells Theological College (1948–51), and then was Dean of Clare College (1951–9) and later (1969–83) of Trinity College, Cambridge. In the intervening period he was Suffragan Bishop of Woolwich (1959–69). In 1963 he published a paperback, Honest to God, advocating new ways of interpreting traditional Christianity and conceiving the supernatural. It proved a best-seller and, although it deeply disturbed some and caused controversy, it helped many both inside and outside the Church to appreciate the need for a reformulation of religious faith in the light of the contemporary situation. The ideas were largely derived from the writings of P. *Tillich, R. *Bultmann, and D. *Bonhoeffer; the strong impact they made was partly due to the lively and original way in which they were synthesized and to the fact that the writer was a bishop. His more academic writings were mainly concerned with the NT; his study of Pauline theology (The Body, 1952) and his Twelve New Testament Studies (1962) established his reputation as a learned and original biblical scholar, though his later books, which argue that all the Gospels, incl. Jn., are very early, have not carried widespread conviction. His Hulsean Lectures for 1970 (published as The Human Face of God, 1973) revealed his continuing concern with the need to reformulate traditional doctrines, in this case the doctrine of the Incarnation, while Truth is Two-Eyed (1979) was an essay in the comparative study of religions; he also wrote on liturgy. His father, Arthur, and two of his uncles (J. Armitage *Robinson and Forbes Robinson) were theologians of an older generation and the influence of their way of thinking has been detected in his very conservative views on the origins of the NT. The radicalism of his other writings should not be exaggerated; he regarded himself as an exponent of historic Christianity.

Life by E. James (London, 1987). D. L. Edwards (ed.), The Honest to God Debate (1963). E. James in DNB, 1982–1985, pp. 347 f.

Robinson, Joseph Armitage (1858–1933), NT and patristic scholar. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was a Fellow from 1881 to 1899, he was ordained priest in 1882 and devoted himself to patristic studies. In 1891 he founded the series of monographs Texts and Studies, in which he edited the Passion of Perpetua in the same year. In 1893 he published an edition of *Origen's 'Philocalia'. In 1899 he became a canon, and in 1902 Dean, of *Westminster. In 1903 he published his commentary on St Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, in which he defended the authenticity of the letter. In 1911 he resigned the Deanery of Westminster to become Dean of *Wells. Here he took a lively interest in the cathedral and the early history of the see and wrote The Saxon Bishops of Wells (1919) and St Oswald at Worcester (1919). In 1920 Robinson published an English translation of the recently recovered 'Apostolic Preaching' of St *Irenaeus and his Donnellan Lectures on Barnabas, Hermas, and the Didache, in which he attempted to prove a late date for the Didache*. His later publications include The Times of St Dunstan (1923), which became a standard work. He was one of the Anglican participants in the *Malines Conversations.

Life by T. F. Taylor (Cambridge, 1991). C. Jenkins in DNB, 1931–1940 (1949), pp. 743–5, s.v.

Roch, St (*c.*1295–1327), also Rocco (Ital.), healer of the plague-stricken. Very little is known of his life. Acc. to Francis Diedo, his Venetian biographer (1478), he was a native of Montpellier, who on a journey to Italy stopped at the plague-ridden town of Aquapendente, where he cured many by the sign of the cross. He afterwards performed similar miracles at Cesena, Mantua, Modena, Parma, and elsewhere, himself fell a victim at Piacenza, but recovered and returned to his native city. A miraculous cross is said to have been discovered on his body after his death. He was regularly invoked against the plague, notably in an outbreak in 1414 during the Council of *Constance. In 1485 his relics were moved to Venice, where they are still venerated. There is no sufficient evidence for the *Franciscan tradition that he was a *tertiary of the Order. Feast day, 16 Aug.

AASS, Aug. 3 (1727), pp. 380–415. Life by J. Phelipot, orig. pub. Brescia, 1494, re-ed. by M. Luthard (Paris, etc., 1917), with introd. and notes. Abbé Recluz, Histoire de saint Roch et de son culte (Avignon, 1858); G. Ceroni, San Rocco nella vita, nel culto, nell'arte (1927); M. Bessodes, Saint Roch: Histoire et légendes (Turin and Rome, 1931). A. Fliche, 'Le Problème de saint Roch', Anal. Boll. 68 (1950), pp. 343–61, with bibl. M.-T. Schmitz-Eichhoff, St Rochus: Ikonographische und medizin-historische Studien (Kölner medizinhistorische Beiträge, 3; 1977). A. P. Frutaz in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1054–9, s.v. 'Rocco'.

Rochester (Lat. Durobrivae or Roffa). This, the oldest and smallest of the suffragan sees of *Canterbury, was founded by St *Augustine, who consecrated St *Justus its first bishop in 604. The cathedral, which was dedicated to St *Andrew and served in early times by a college of secular canons, was damaged in 676 by the Mercians and later by the Danes. Gundulf (Bp., 1077–1108) began a new cathedral, probably at the request of *Lanfranc, and in 1083 replaced the secular canons with *Benedictines. His nave is the oldest in England, and a fine example of rich and varied Norman work. The cathedral was consecrated in 1130 by the Abp. of Canterbury in the presence of Henry I, but a fire which occurred at the time damaged much of the cathedral and city. In 1343 the choir was rebuilt and a central tower added (replaced 1825–7) out of the offerings at the shrine of 'St William of Rochester' (a baker from Perth who was murdered here *c.*1201, while on pilgrimage; feast day, 23 May). At the *Dissolution, the priory surrendered in 1540; the secular foundation of a dean and six canons (now reduced to four) was established in 1541.

C. Johnson (ed.), Registrum Hamonis Hethe, Diocesis Roffensis A.D. 1319–1352 (*Canterbury and York Society, 48 and 49; 1948). 'Ernulfi Episcopi Roffensis Collectanea', in H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, 1 (1691), pp. 329–40; 'Annales Ecclesiae Roffensis, ex Historia Ecclesiastica Edmundi de Hadenham', ibid., pp. 341–55; William de Dene, 'Historia Roffensis ab anno MCCCXIV. ad MCCCL.', ibid., pp. 356–83. T. *Hearne, Textus Roffensis (Oxford, 1720; a collection of docs. by Ernulf, many of them relating to the see of Rochester); facsimile of MS ed. P. Sawyer (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, 7 and 11; Copenhagen, 1957–62). J. Thorpe and J. Thorpe (son) (eds.), Registrum Roffense: Or a Collection of Antient Records, Charters, and Instruments of Divers Kinds, necessary for illustrating the Ecclesiastical History and Antiquities of the Diocese and Cathedral Church of Rochester (1769); J. Thorpe (ed.), Custumale Roffense (London, 1788). A. Campbell (ed.), Charters of Rochester (Anglo-Saxon Charters, 1; 1973). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 153–88. The History and Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Rochester (anon., ascribed to J. Lewis, but generally supposed to have been written by Dr Rawlinson; 1717). A. I. Pearman, Rochester (Diocesan Histories; 1897); W. H. St J. Hope, The Architectural History of the Cathedral and Monastery of St Andrew at Rochester (1900). W. N. Yates (ed.), Faith and Fabric: Rochester Cathedral 604–1994 (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1996). R. A. L. Smith, 'The Early Community of St. Andrew at Rochester, 604–*c.*1080', EHR 60 (1945), pp. 289–99. R. C. Fowler in VCH, Kent, 2, ed. W. Page (1926), pp. 121–6. E. M. Blackie in DECH (1912), pp. 520–3, s.v.

rochet. A white linen vestment, resembling the *surplice but with tight sleeves, which is worn by bishops and occasionally by other ecclesiastical dignitaries. It is derived from the *alb, and until the 14th cent. was in use outside Rome by all clerics (and even sacristans). The rochet worn by Anglican bishops under the *chimere has wide lawn sleeves. In the 18th cent. these sleeves developed to such balloon-like dimensions that they were commonly detached from the rest of the garment and sewn on to the chimere separately.

Braun, LG, pp. 125–35. W. B. Marriott, Vestiarium Christianum: The Origin and Gradual Development of the Dress of Holy Ministry in the Church (1868), p. 226.

Rock, Daniel (1799–1871), ecclesiologist and antiquary. He was ordained to the RC priesthood in 1824. He took a keen interest in the English medieval religious ceremonial customs, and his chief work, The Church of our Fathers (3 vols. in 4, 1849–53), did much to spread knowledge of them, esp. of the *Sarum Rite. His other well-known work is his Hierurgia, or the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass (2 vols., 1833). He took an active part in furthering the restoration of the RC hierarchy in England, and in 1852 he was appointed one of the first canons of *Southwark RC Cathedral.

His Church of our Fathers ed. G. W. Hart and W. H. *Frere, CR (4 vols., London, 1903–4), with Life by B. W. Kelly, vol. 1, pp. xvii–xxvi; his Hierurgia was also ed. and rev. by W. H. J. Weale ('Catholic Standard Library', 2 vols., 1892).

rococo. A development of *baroque architecture and decoration, which originated in France and lasted from *c.*1715 to 1760. It endeavoured to substitute gracefulness for the dignity of the Louis XIV period, but was often overornate. The name is derived from the French rocaille ('shell-work'), the twisted curves of a shell typifying freedom and irregularity.

[S.] F. Kimball, The Creation of the Rococo (Philadelphia, 1943). Rococo: Art and Design in Hogarth's England. Exhibition Catalogue, Victoria and Albert Museum, ed. M. Snodin (1984).

Rogation Days (Lat. rogare, 'ask'). In W. Christendom certain prescribed days of prayer and fasting in the early summer, associated with intercession esp. for the harvest. The 'Major Rogation', which was on 25 April, was a Christianized version of the pagan observance of the 'Robigalia', which took the form of processions through the cornfields to pray for the preservation of the crops from mildew. Historically it had no connection with the Feast of St *Mark, of later institution, also kept on 25 Apr. The 'Minor Rogations' were kept on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday before *Ascension Day. These rogations, which derived from the processional litanies ordered by St *Mamertus of Vienne (*c.*470), when his diocese was troubled by volcanic eruptions, spread through Gaul and later to other places. They are first found at Rome in the *Gregorian Sacramentary. In England they were adopted in 747 by the Council of *Clovesho (can. 16).

The outdoor Rogation processions were suppressed in England in 1547, but under Elizabeth I the Royal *Injunctions of 1559 (no. 19) ordered the perambulation of the parish at Rogationtide and the Second 'Book of *Homilies' contained two homilies for the Rogation Days. The observance is not mentioned in the earlier issues of the BCP. In that of 1662 the three (minor) Rogations (only) were ordered to be observed as 'Days of Fasting and Abstinence'.

In the RC Church the Rogation Days were replaced in 1969 by periods of prayer for the needs of mankind, the fruits of the earth, and the work of men's hands. The observance of these periods, which may be of one or several days' duration and may take place at different times of the year, is decided by conferences of local bishops. Suitable Masses are included in the 1970 Missal.

D. de Bruyne, OSB, 'L'Origine des processions de la chandeleur et des rogations à propos d'un sermon inédit', R. Bén. 34 (1922), pp. 14–26, esp. pp. 14–18. W. E. Scudamore in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 1809 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1740 f., s.v. 'Marc (Procession de saint)'; id. ibid. 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2459–61, s.v. 'Rogations'; P. Siffrin, OSB, in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1084–6, s.v. 'Rogazioni'.

Roger Bacon. See BACON, ROGER.

Rogers, John (*c.*1500–55), editor of '*Matthew's Bible' and first British Protestant Martyr under *Mary. Educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, in 1534 he became chaplain to the English merchants in Antwerp. Soon after meeting W. *Tyndale (d. 1536), then engaged on his translation of the Scriptures, he accepted the Protestant faith. In 1537 under the name of 'Thomas Matthew' he published the first complete version of the Bible in English, which was hence known as 'Matthew's Bible' (q.v.). Rogers's own share in it was confined to contributing some valuable prefaces and marginal notes. At about this time he gave evidence of his Protestantism by marrying. His wife was an Antwerp lady, Adriana de Weyden (later Anglicized as 'Pratt'). Having returned to London in 1548, he was given first the living of St Matthew, Friday Street, and then in 1550 the Crown livings of St Margaret Moses and St Sepulchre, all in London; in 1551 he became prebendary, and later divinity lecturer, at *St Paul's Cathedral. For preaching Protestant doctrine at Paul's Cross at the beginning of Mary's reign, he was first confined to his house, and then taken to Newgate prison, where he was kept for a year with J. *Hooper and others. In Jan. 1555 sentence of death was pronounced for denial of the Papal claims and of the Real Presence in the *Eucharist, and he was burnt at Smithfield on 4 Feb.

J. L. Chester, John Rogers: The Compiler of the First Authorised English Bible; the Pioneer of the English Reformation; and its first Martyr (1861). The attempt of W. T. Whitley ('Thomas Matthew's Bible', Church Quarterly Review, 125 (Oct. 1937), pp. 48–69) to deny that Matthew was an alias for John Rogers seems to have failed. Cf. J. F. Mozley, William Tyndale (1937), Appendix E, 'Thomas Matthew', pp. 354 f.; H. H. Hutson and H. R. Willoughby, Decisive Data on Thomas Matthew Problems [Chicago, 1938], with refs. S. Lee in DNB 49 (1897), pp. 126–9.

Rolle of Hampole, Richard (*c.*1300–49), English hermit and spiritual writer. The facts of his life have been much discussed in modern times. According to the account in the office drawn up in view of his (never realized) canonization, he was born at Thornton, near Pickering in N. Yorkshire, and studied at *Oxford under the patronage of Thomas Neville, Archdeacon of Durham. He broke off his studies at the age of 18 to become a hermit, first on the estate of his friend, John Dalton, and later in various other places, where he prayed, wrote, and gave guidance to others. Scholars disagree as to whether or not he studied for a time at the *Sorbonne. His last years were spent near the convent of Cistercian nuns at Hampole, where he died and was buried in 1349. He was held in considerable veneration as late as the 17th cent., when 'Blessed Richard, Confessor and Ermite' was commemorated in martyrologies of 1608 and 1672 (1 Nov. and 20 Jan.).

The canon of Rolle's writings, established by H. E. Allen, contains: (1) scriptural commentaries, incl. the popular commentary in English on the Psalter (some manuscripts of which were interpolated by the *Lollards); (2) Latin treatises, incl. 'Incendium Amoris' and 'Emendatio Vitae' (both later translated into English); (3) English treatises, incl. 'The Form of Living', written for the recluse Margaret Kirkby; and (4) a number of English poems. His authorship of the English 'Meditations on the Passion' is uncertain. His spiritual doctrine is greatly influenced by his own experience, to which he alludes several times. The contemplative life, in his view, begins with the experience of 'the opening of Heaven's door' and is thereafter characterized by 'heat', 'sweetness' and 'angel-song'. He was criticized by some of his contemporaries for teaching an unduly subjective religion. He defended the advantages of the solitary life in extreme and rather polemical terms.

Collections of his Lat. works were pr. at Antwerp, 1533; Cologne, 1535 and 1536; and in M. de la Bigne, Magna Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 15 (Cologne, 1622), pp. 817–38, and id., Maxima Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 26 (Lyons, 1677), pp. 609–32. His Comm. on the lessons from Job in the Office of the Dead was pr. at Oxford, 1483, and Paris, 1510. 'Incendium Amoris', ed. M. Deanesly (Publications of the University of Manchester, Historical Series, 26; 1915); 'Canticum Amoris', ed. A. *Wilmart, OSB, in Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 21 (1940), pp. 131–48, and ed. G. M. Liegey in Traditio, 12 (1956), pp. 369–91; 'Melos Amoris', ed. E. J. F. Arnould (Oxford, 1957; repr., with introd. by F. Vandenbroucke, OSB, SC 168 f.; 1971); 'Contra Amatores Mundi', ed. P. F. Theiner (University of California Publications, English Series, 33; 1968); Comm. on Rev., ed. N. Marzac (Paris, 1968); 'Judica Me Deus' ed. J. P. Daly, SJ (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 92. 14; 1984); and 'Tractatus super Psalmum Vicesimum' ed., with Eng. tr., by J. C. Dolan (Texts and Studies in Religion, 57; Lewiston, NY, etc. [1991]). Collections of his Eng. writings ed. G. G. Perry, English Prose Treatises of Richard Rolle of Hampole (EETS 20; 1866); C. Horstman (ed.), Yorkshire Writers: Richard Rolle of Hampole . . . and his Followers (2 vols., 1895–6); H. E. Allen (ed.), English Writings of Richard Rolle (Oxford, 1931; repr., Gloucester, 1988); and S. J. Ogilvie-Thomson (ed.), Richard Rolle: Prose and Verse (EETS 293; 1988). Modernized versions by G. E. Hodgson (ed.), Some Minor Works (1930), and The English Writings, tr. by R. S. Allen (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York, etc. [1988]). H. R. Bramley (ed.), The Psalter or Psalms of David and Certain Canticles, with a Translation and Exposition in English by Richard Rolle of Hampole (Oxford, 1884). 'Meditatio de Passione Domini' ed. H. Lindkvist (Skrifter utgifna af K. Humanistiska Vetenskaps-Samfundet i Uppsala, 19, no. 3; 1917).

The principal authority for his life is the office prepared for his canonization, ed. F. Procter, Breviarium ad Usum Insignis Ecclesie Eboracensis, 2 (Surtees Society, 75; 1883), Appendix 5, cols. 785–820; crit. edn. by R. M. Woolley (1919). H. E. Allen, Writings ascribed to Richard Rolle Hermit of Hampole and Materials for his Biography (Modern Language Association of America Monograph Series, 3; 1927). N. Watson, Richard Rolle and the Invention of Authority (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Literature, 13; 1991), with extensive bibl. E. J. F. Arnould, 'Richard Rolle of Hampole', The Month, NS 23 (1960), pp. 13–25, repr. in J. Walsh, SJ (ed.), Pre-Reformation English Spirituality (1966), pp. 132–44; D. Everett, 'The Middle English Prose Psalter of Richard Rolle of Hampole', Modern Language Review, 17 (1922), pp. 217–27, 337–50; 18 (1923), pp. 381–93; M. M. Morgan, 'Versions of the Meditations on the Passion ascribed to Richard Rolle', Medium Ævum, 22 (1953), pp. 93–103; G. M. Liegey, 'Richard Rolle's Carmen Prosaicum, an Edition and Commentary', Mediaeval Studies, 19 (1957), pp. 15–36; R. Allen, ' "Singuler Lufe": Richard Rolle and the Grammar of Spiritual Ascent', in M. Glasscoe (ed.), The Medieval Mystical Tradition in England: Papers read at Dartington Hall, July 1984 (Cambridge [1984]), pp. 28–54, and other papers, pp. 55–103. R. Woolf, The English Religious Lyric in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1968), pp. 159–79 and 380–382. W. Riehle, Studien zur englischen Mystik des Mittelalters unter besonderer Berücksichtigung ihrer Metaphorik (Anglistiche Forschungen, 120; 1977; Eng. tr., 1981), passim. J. P. H. Clark, 'Richard Rolle: a theological re-assessment', Downside Review, 101 (1983), pp. 108–39. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1586–7. M. Sargent in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 572–90, s.v. 'Richard (9) Rolle de Hampole'.

Rolls Chapel. A chapel which once stood on the site of the Public Record Office, London, and from the time of Edward III was annexed to the Keeper of the Rolls ('Custos Rotulorum'). The first chapel (begun in 1233) was part of a foundation by King Henry III for the reception of converted Jews; this was destroyed in the 17th cent. After extensive rebuilding and repairs in the 17th, 18th, and 19th cents., in 1895 it was decided to pull down the crumbling walls of the chapel and erect a museum incorporating any remains of historical value; these include fragments of the 13th cent. chancel arch. J. *Butler held the office of Preacher at the Rolls Chapel from 1718 to 1726 and delivered his famous sermons here. The records (Rolls) of Chancery were formerly kept in the chapel.

H. C. Maxwell Lyte, 'The Rolls Chapel', in The Fifty-seventh Annual Report of the Deputy-Keeper of the Records [C. 8271] (1896), pp. 19–47.

Romaine, William (1714–95), *Calvinist preacher. He was educated at Hart Hall (later Hertford College), and *Christ Church, Oxford, and was ordained in 1736. In his early years he followed the scholarly traditions of the C of E, to which he made an important contribution with his edition of the Hebrew Concordance of Marius de Calasio (1748). In 1749 he was appointed lecturer at St Dunstan's-in-the-West and in 1750 at St George's, Hanover Square. In 1755 he came under the influence of G. *Whitefield and became one of the principal representatives of rigid Calvinism. His preaching attracted vast crowds of the poor and uneducated, whose presence in church was resented by his fashionable parishioners, so that he had to give up his lectureships. After holding brief appointments at some other London churches he became incumbent of St Anne's, Blackfriars, in 1766, where his revivalist preaching continued to draw large congregations till his death. He was a powerful preacher; he held an extreme form of predestinationism which he expounded in several writings, e.g. The Life of Faith (1763), The Walk of Faith (1771), and The Triumph of Faith (1795).

Works ed. by his son (8 vols., bound in 4, London, 1796), with Life by W. B. Cadogan in vol. 7, pp. 9–111, and list of Romaine's works, ibid., pp. 112–16. The last three works mentioned in the text were repr., with introd. by P. Toon (Cambridge and London, 1970). A further contemporary Life, emphasizing his part in the Countess of *Huntingdon's Connexion, by T. Haweis (London, 1797). J. C. *Ryle, The Christian Leaders of the Last Century (1869), pp. 149–79. H. L. Bennett in DNB 49 (1897), pp. 175–7.

'Roman Catechism'. The Catechismus ex Decreto Concilii Tridentini (1566) is commonly known as the 'Roman Catechism'. Although a RC counterpart to the Protestant *catechisms was called for at the Council of *Trent as early as 1546, the text was produced only after the end of the Council and issued by Papal authority. It is not a catechism in the ordinary sense of a work arranged in question and answer form; it is a doctrinal exposition of the Creeds, Sacraments, Ten Commandments, and Prayer (incl. the *Lord's Prayer), intended for the use of parish priests. It owed much to earlier suggestions, including the controversial Comentarios sobre el Catechismo Christiano (1558) by the *Dominican Bartolomé de Carranza, Abp. of Toledo, which had been attacked by the Spanish *Inquisition, though it was approved by a group of bishops at the Council of Trent. Despite the authority of the Roman Catechism, difficulties over vernacular translations left room for local catechisms.

Crit. edns. of the Roman Catechism by P. Rodríguez, I. Adeva, F. Domingo, R. Lanzetti, and M. Merino (Vatican City and Pamplona, 1989), and of Carranza's Comentarios by J. I. Tellechea Idígoras (2 vols., Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1972). Catechism pr. in Mirbt and Aland, pp. 655–93 (nos. 957–1094). P. Paschini, Il Catechismo Romano del Concilio di Trento: Sue Origini e sua Prima Diffusione (Lateranum, 1923), repr. in id., Cinquecento Romano e Riforma Cattolica (ibid., NS 24; 1958), pp. 33–91. G. [J.] Bellinger, Der Catechismus Romanus und die Reformation (Konfessionskundliche und Kontroverstheologische Studien, 27; 1970). P. Rodríguez and R. Lanzetti, El Catecismo Romano: Fuentes e Historia del Texto y de la Redacción. Bases Críticas para el Estudio Teológico del Catecismo del Concilio de Trento (Pamplona, 1982). G. J. Bellinger, Bibliographie des Catechismus Romanus . . . 1566 1978 (Bibliotheca Bibliographica Aureliana, 87; Baden-Baden, 1983).

Roman Catholic Church in England and Wales after the Reformation. Although there was strong Catholic sentiment in parts of the kingdom and some notable figures, including J. *Fisher and T. *More, were executed rather than agree to the royal *supremacy, the majority of the population acquiesced in the *Reformation of the *Church of England under *Henry VIII and *Edward VI. Legislation provided for the punishment of holders of benefices who refused to use the BCP, but much Catholic practice probably continued and the Papacy gave no clear guidance to Catholics regarding their attitude to the C of E. The restoration of Catholicism under *Mary made promising beginnings, but her early death prevented further progress, and her persecution of the Reformers created a legacy of bitterness which helped to ensure that under *Elizabeth I the breach between the C of E and the Papacy became complete. The distinction between RCs and Anglicans was made clear through the 1559 Act of *Uniformity's imposition of fines on those who failed to attend the services of the C of E, as well as fines and imprisonment on clergy who refused to accept the BCP. Over 400 clergy refused to conform to the Elizabethan settlement and many Catholics continued to practise their faith in secret, but at first there was little persecution. However, the presence of *Mary, Queen of Scots, in England from 1568, the Catholic leadership of the Northern Rebellion of 1569–70, and the excommunication of Elizabeth by *Pius V in 1570 led to a hardening in attitude. The arrival in 1574 of the first of the missionary priests from the Continent, to be followed by *Jesuits from 1580 onwards, strengthened the RC community, but was met with legislation making it treasonable to reconcile any of the Queen's subjects from the established Church, and in 1585 Jesuits and seminary priests were ordered to leave the realm within 40 days under penalty of death. The threat of the Spanish *Armada (1588) reinforced official fears of *recusancy and 189 RCs were executed during the reign of Elizabeth, including most of the *Forty Martyrs canonized in 1970. The foundation of *Douai (1568) was followed by other seminaries in Europe, but many of the missionary priests were at liberty only briefly in England, and their uneven distribution reduced their impact, esp. among the poor. Their training in seminaries throughout Europe, however, enabled the English RC clergy to contribute to and absorb *Counter-Reformation ideals and practices. Nevertheless, disputes between the regular and secular clergy weakened the RC Church in England after the death of Card. W. *Allen in 1594. The appointment by *Clement VIII of an *archpriest (G. *Blackwell) over all the clergy brought into the open controversy about the proper attitude of RCs to the government. This dispute ended only when *Paul V deposed Blackwell for taking the Oath of Allegiance to *James I, an oath imposed in the aftermath of the *Gunpowder Plot (1605).

In the later part of James I's reign, the penal laws against RCs were often not strictly enforced, and their suspension was one of the conditions of *Charles I's marriage to *Henrietta Maria. Another was that she should have free exercise of her religion, and a considerable RC establishment developed around her court. In 1623 William Bishop had been consecrated Bp. of Chalcedon to serve the RCs in England, but his successor retired to France in 1631 and resigned after a dispute with the regular clergy. After the Civil War, in which many of the RC aristocracy and gentry supported the King, the penal laws were revived, but there was in fact a measure of toleration. *Charles II promised toleration in the Declaration of *Breda (1660) and sought to circumvent the legislation against RCs and Protestant Nonconformists by *Declarations of Indulgence in 1662 and 1672. Parliamentary opposition, heightened by the conversion to RCism of his brother, the future *James II, forced Charles to abandon his attempts to secure toleration and rather to accept the *Test Act and other legislation which excluded RCs from office and parliament. The strength of popular anti-Catholic feeling was further demonstrated in the *Exclusion Controversy. When James came to the throne (1685), he at first supported the C of E, while openly professing his personal allegiance to the RC Church. Soon, however, he claimed power to dispense from the provisions of the Test Act and promoted RCs to high office. This policy, culminating in his second Declaration of Indulgence and the Trial of the *Seven Bishops (1688) led to his replacement by William and Mary. The Bill of Rights 1688 and the Act of *Settlement 1700 debarred from the throne any RC or anyone who should marry a RC, and other legislation excluded RCs from the professions. The loyalty of many RCs to the exiled king and his successors in the early 18th cent. accentuated their alienation from the majority of the population.

In 1685 John Leyburn was appointed the first *Vicar Apostolic. Three other Vicars were appointed in 1688 and England and Wales was divided into four districts. This form of episcopal government survived until the restoration of the hierarchy in 1850. The most distinguished 18th-cent. Vicar Apostolic was R. *Challoner, whose Garden of the Soul (1740) influenced much subsequent RC piety. From the middle of the 18th cent. there was a shift in the pattern of RC Church life. Whereas previously the houses of the nobility and gentry had been the centres of RC worship, as they declined in number, the great Embassy chapels in London helped to provide for the needs of an expanding urban RC population, and chapels (similar in external appearance to the Dissenting chapels) were built here and in other towns. These last were technically illegal, but little action was taken. At the same time influence was passing from the regular to the secular clergy, and patterns of worship were affected by contemporary English culture. The need to recruit Irish and Scottish clansmen for the American War of Independence prompted the government to negotiate with a body of RC laymen who were ready to profess loyalty to the Crown and restrict Papal authority to spiritual matters; one result was the first *Catholic Relief Act of 1778. Despite the hostility manifested in the *Gordon Riots, subsequent legislation allowed for RC worship and schools (1791), made RCs eligible for commissions in the Army and Navy (1817), and in 1829 removed nearly all disabilities, so that RCs could stand for parliament and most public offices. The sufferings of the RC Church on the Continent as a result of the French Revolution (from 1789) created a degree of sympathy for Catholicism in England unprecedented since the Reformation; many French clergy arrived as refugees, and English religious communities and seminaries returned from abroad. In the 19th cent. the RC population was further increased by Irish immigrants. There were also some converts from the *Oxford Movement, such as J. H. *Newman.

In 1840 the number of Vicars Apostolic was increased from four to eight and ten years later a hierarchy of 12 *suffragan dioceses under an archbishop was established. This so-called '*Papal Aggression' aroused protest, but the *Ecclesiastical Titles Act 1851, which forbade RC bishops to assume territorial titles within the United Kingdom, was a dead letter from the start. N. P. S. *Wiseman was appointed first Abp. of Westminster and made a Cardinal. He introduced into England the *Ultramontanism which was further fostered by his successor, H. E. *Manning. This provoked some resentment among members of the older English RC families, such as Lord *Acton. Italianate devotions gained a foothold in the traditionally restrained worship of English Catholicism. Manning's radical social activity was not continued by Card. H. *Vaughan, who did, however, defend the denominational schools promoted by his two predecessors. He secured the removal of the ban placed by Manning on RC attendance at the Universities and began building *Westminster Cathedral.

Despite the presence in England of leading *Modernists such as F. *von Hügel and G. Tyrrell, the Modernist crisis disturbed the RC Church here less than on the Continent. In 1908 England and Wales (for which a separate Vicar Apostolic had been appointed in 1895) ceased to be missionary territory, and in 1918 'missions' became legally constituted parishes under the Codex Iuris Canonici. By 1924 the hierarchy of England and Wales consisted of 4 metropolitan sees (including Cardiff, created an archbishopric in 1916) and 14 suffragan sees. The bishops continued to defend denominational schools and to speak on matters of social justice. Card. A. *Hinsley became something of a national figure through his foundation in 1940 of the '*Sword of the Spirit' and his broadcasts in the early years of the Second World War.

The RC Church has undergone considerable change in the post-war period. In 1945, after a century of growth and consolidation, it was still widely regarded with hostility and had practically no official part in national life, while relations with other Churches in England and Wales were generally frosty. The educational expansion of the years following the 1944 Education Act resulted in a large growth in the numbers of RCs in higher education and the professions. The Second *Vatican Council (1962–5) drew the whole RC Church into a new relationship with other Churches; dialogues were established, including the *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission, and from its inception in 1990 the RC Church in England and Wales has been a full member of the *Council of Churches in Britain and Ireland. The liturgical reforms foreshadowed by the Vatican Council met with some initial resistance from English RCs, but the introduction of the use of the vernacular in the liturgy made the RC Church appear less 'foreign'. After the Council another archdiocese (*Southwark) and four new dioceses were created and the organization of the national Bishops' Conference developed. (There are separate Conferences for Scotland and Ireland.) While here, as elsewhere, there has been a decline in vocations to the priesthood and the religious life, and a drop in Mass attendance since the 1960s, membership of the RC Church in England and Wales has steadily increased (esp. among the middle classes) and now exceeds four million. See also HUME, G. B.

D. Mathew, Catholicism in England: The Portrait of a Minority. Its Culture and Traditions (1936; 3rd edn., 1955); E. [R.] Norman, Roman Catholicism in England from the Elizabethan Settlement to the Second Vatican Council (Oxford, 1985). J. Bossy, The English Catholic Community 1570–1850 (1975); J. C. H. Aveling, The Handle and the Axe: The Catholic Recusants in England from Reformation to Emancipation (1976); A. Walsham, Church Papists: Catholicism, Conformity and Confessional Polemic in Early Modern England (Royal Historical Society Studies in History, 68; Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1993). A. Pritchard, Catholic Loyalism in Elizabethan England (1979); P. Holmes, Resistance and Compromise: The Political Thought of the Elizabethan Catholics (Cambridge, 1982). C. Haydon, Anti-Catholicism in Eighteenth-Century England, c.1740–80 (Manchester, 1993). J. D. Holmes, More Roman than Rome: English Catholicism in the Nineteenth Century (1978); E. R. Norman, The English Catholic Church in the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1984). G. A. Beck (ed.), The English Catholics 1850–1950 (1950). A. Hastings, A History of English Christianity 1920–1985 (1986), pp. 131–55, 273–87, 473–90, 561–79, and 630–48; 3rd edn., entitled A History of Christianity in England 1920–1990 (1991), with additional material pp. xix–xxv.

C. M. Hibbard, 'Early Stuart Catholicism: Revisions and Re-Revisions', Journal of Modern History, 52 (1980), pp. 1–34. C. [A.] Haigh, 'The Continuity of Catholicism in the English Reformation', Past and Present, 93 (1981), pp. 37–69, repr. in id. (ed.), The English Reformation Revised (Cambridge, 1987), pp. 176–208; P. McGrath, 'Elizabethan Catholicism: a Reconsideration', JEH 35 (1984), pp. 414–28; further discussion, ibid. 36 (1985), pp. 394–406. J. J. LaRocca, SJ, 'Time, Death and the Next Generation: The Early Elizabethan Recusancy Policy, 1558–1574', Albion, 14 (1982), pp. 103–17; id., ' "Who Can't Pray With Me, Can't Love Me". Toleration and the Early Jacobean Recusant Policy', Journal of British Studies, 23, pt. 2 (1984), pp. 22–36. L. Ward, 'The Treason Act of 1563: A Study of the Enforcement of anti-Catholic Legislation', Parliamentary History, 8 (1989), pp. 289–308. See also works cited under RECUSANCY and WALES, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Roman Catholicism. The term, which denotes the faith and practice of Christians who are in communion with the Pope, is used particularly of Catholicism as it has existed since the Reformation, in contradistinction to Protestant bodies. On its doctrinal side it has been characterized by strict adherence to tradition combined with acceptance of the living voice of the Church, which is held to expound infallibly the revealed truths contained in the deposit of faith. Whereas in the early centuries the Church had to clarify especially the great mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation, and in the Middle Ages doctrines concerning the relation of God and man through grace and the sacraments, post-Tridentine theologians have been especially concerned with the structure and prerogatives of the Church, the position of the BVM in the economy of salvation, and the function of the Pope as the Vicar of Christ on earth, culminating in the dogma of *Infallibility promulgated at the First *Vatican Council of 1870. In recent years there has been some reaction against the positions developed at the end of the 19th cent. and an attempt to bring the Church into closer communication with the modern world. This movement is closely connected with the Second *Vatican Council, with its doctrine of the *collegiality of bishops, the use of the vernacular in worship, and a more liberal attitude towards Christians of other denominations.

From an external point of view RCism presents itself as an organized hierarchy of bishops and priests with the Pope at its head. This structure has been built up during a long history and rests its claims on the powers entrusted by Christ to His Apostles in general (Jn. 20: 23) and to St *Peter in particular (Mt. 16: 18 f.; Lk. 22: 32; Jn. 21: 15–17), as whose successors the Popes are traditionally regarded. Their supremacy over the Church, though sometimes contested by representatives of the *Conciliar theory and of *Gallicanism, was widely accepted in the W. from early times, as is shown by the appeals to Rome in the *Donatist and *Pelagian controversies of the 4th and 5th cents. Papal supremacy was positively accepted at the Council of *Trent and only slightly modified by the Second Vatican Council, which emphasized the position of the bishops. Acc. to RC teaching this hierarchy represents the Divine authority to whom obedience is due. Supernatural life is normally mediated to individual Christians by members of this hierarchy in the *seven sacraments. The emphasis in recent years on the part of the whole Church and the desirability of the participation of the community, e.g. in the administration of *Baptism, has not altered the essential position of the ordered episcopate and priesthood. An elaborate sacramental theology was developed by the Schoolmen and post-Tridentine theologians, and the sacramental system covers the whole life of RCs. The centre of the liturgical life of RCism is the Mass, which is regarded as a re-presentation of the redeeming work of Christ in His passion, death, and resurrection. Frequency of Communion has been encouraged by modern Popes, esp. *Pius X, and has been made easier by drastic relaxations in the *Eucharistic fast and by the introduction of *Evening Masses. Communion is, however, required only at Easter, and should then be preceded by the Sacrament of *Penance. Attendance at Mass on the other hand is compulsory on all Sundays and *Feasts of Obligation. Other devotions are left to the free choice of individuals and the traditional extra-liturgical exercises, such as *Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, the *Rosary, and *Stations of the Cross, have recently come to play a less prominent part in RC life than formerly. This development may be partly explained by the introduction of the use of the vernacular in liturgical worship obviating the need for popular services, and more particularly by the increased emphasis on the liturgical life of the whole Church which is reflected not only in the new *Missal and *Breviary but also in the customary arrangement of services at times convenient for those engaged in secular life. The reformed liturgy has laid stress on the centrality of Sunday and drastically reduced the importance of saints' days. At the same time, devotion to the saints has been fostered by the large number of canonizations in modern times, such as those of St *Teresa of Lisieux and the *Forty Martyrs of England and Wales.

The religious life, confined in the Middle Ages to the comparatively few older orders of monks, friars, canons regular, and enclosed nuns, in post-Reformation Catholicism grew both in size and in scope. The most influential of the modern orders is the Society of Jesus (see JESUITS), beside which grew up a multitude of congregations and other associations of both men and women, often pursuing particular aims, such as teaching, nursing and social work. The period since the Second World War has seen the growth of 'lay congregations', such as the 'Little Brothers' and 'Little Sisters' inspired by the ideals of Charles *de Foucauld; they live in small communities in conditions prevailing among the poorest sections of the world, seeking to combine an element of contemplation with the discipline of earning their living, often in industrial society. Since the Second Vatican Council the traditional religious orders have also been undergoing considerable modernization and reform. But, despite all the apparent changes in the outward presentation of the RC faith, and despite the active interest of recent Popes and other RC agencies in social work throughout the world, the primary aim of the RC Church still remains the sanctification of its members and the conversion of souls. See also previous entry.

Introductions by RCs include K. *Adam, Das Wesen des Katholizismus (1924; Eng. tr., 1929); P. L. T. G. Goyau, Le Catholicisme ('Les Religions'; 1931); P. Hughes, The Faith in Practice: Catholic Doctrine and Life (1938); T. Corbishley, SJ, Roman Catholicism (Hutchinson's University Library, 51; 1950); S. Bullough, OP, Roman Catholicism (Penguin, 1963); J. L. McKenzie, SJ, The Roman Catholic Church (1969); R. P. McBrien, Catholicism (2 vols., 1980; 3rd edn. in 1 vol., 1994). T. M. Gannon (ed.), World Catholicism in Transition (New York, etc. [1988]). A. Hastings (ed.), Modern Catholicism: Vatican II and After (1991). For works on RCism in England, see previous entry; for the history of the RC Church in other parts of the world, see bibl. to the various countries. For works on RC theology, see bibls. to MORAL THEOLOGY; TRENT, COUNCIL OF; VATICAN COUNCILS, etc. There is also abundant information in CE, DTC, L.Th.K., EC, and NCE, also in W. E. Addis and T. Arnold, A Catholic Dictionary (1884; 16th edn. by T. B. Scannell and others, 1957), D. Attwater (ed.), The Catholic Encyclopaedic Dictionary (1931; rev. edn., 1949), and R. P. McBrien (ed.), The Harper Collins Encyclopedia of Catholicism [1995].

Roman Catholic Relief Acts. See CATHOLIC RELIEF ACTS.

Roman Congregations. The executive departments of the Roman *Curia responsible for the ordinary central administration of the RC Church. Established by *Sixtus V in 1588 and reorganized by Pius X in 1908, their number was originally 14 but it was reduced to 11 in the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 242–57). In the complete reorganization of the Curia effected by the Apostolic Constitution 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae' (15 Aug. 1967), nine congregations emerged, most of them with a modified title and redefined competence. After further changes in 1967, 1975, 1984, and 1988, there are now again nine congregations. The former *Holy Office, now styled Congregatio de Doctrina Fidei, still heads the list, with a wide-ranging competence. As formerly, each congregation consists primarily of cardinals under a cardinal-prefect, assisted by a secretary and lesser officials, but since 1967 each has attached to it as full members some diocesan bishops chosen by the Pope from various parts of the world, along with a panel of consultors similarly selected. Major appointments are for a five-year term. The official organ of the Roman Congregations is the Acta Apostolicae Sedis*. See also CAUSES OF SAINTS, CONGREGATION FOR THE; PROPAGANDA FIDEI, CONGREGATION OF; and RITES, CONGREGATION OF SACRED.

V. Martin, Les Congrégations romaines (1930). The Apostolic Constitution 'Regimini Ecclesiae Universae' is pr. in AAS 59 (1967), pp. 885–928; that of 'Pastor Bonus' (effecting the changes made in 1988) is pr. ibid. 80 (1988), pp. 841–934. L. L. McReavy, 'The Reorganization of the Roman Curia', Clergy Review, 53 (1968), pp. 306–13; R. Ombres, OP, 'The Roman Curia Reorganised', Priests and People, 3 (1989), pp. 59–65. The names of the holders of the various posts are recorded in the Annuario Pontificio, the official Vatican yearbook. See also works cited s.v. CURIA.

Roman Martyrology (Martyrologium Romanum). The official *martyrology of the RC Church. It was compiled by a commission of ten scholars, among them C. *Baronius and A. Agellius (d. 1608), and issued by *Gregory XIII in 1584 to replace the various local adaptations of *Usuard's text current since the later Middle Ages. Several later Popes have subjected it to revisions demanded by the progress in historical knowledge and fresh canonizations. Of these the most radical was that of *Benedict XIV (1748), the principles of which are contained in a prefatory letter to John V, King of Portugal. More recent revisions are due to *Pius IX (1870), *Pius X (1913), and *Benedict XV (1922). A further revision is in progress.

The Roman Martyrology in which are to be found the eulogies of the saints and blessed approved by the Sacred Congregation of Rites up to 1961. An Eng. tr. from the 4th edn. after the Typical Edition (1956) approved by Pope Benedict XV (1922), ed. J. B. O'Connell [1962].

Roman Psalter. The text of the biblical Psalter which was used in all churches in Rome, as well as elsewhere in Italy, down to the time of Pope *Pius V (1566–72), when it was virtually replaced, except at *St Peter's, Rome, by the '*Gallican Psalter' (q.v.). Earlier scholarship equated it with revision of the Latin Psalter which St *Jerome says he compiled hastily ('cursim') on the basis of the *Septuagint. Few scholars now think that the Roman Psalter was produced by Jerome, though he may have used it as a basis for his first attempt to translate the Psalms. See also PSALTER.

Crit. edn. by R. Weber, OSB (Collectanea Biblica Latina, 10; Rome, 1953), with bibl. D. de Bruyne, 'Le Problème du psautier romain', R. Bén. 42 (1930), pp. 101–26; A. Allgeier, 'Die erste Psalmenübersetzung des hl. Hieronymus und das Psalterium Romanum', Biblica, 12 (1931), pp. 447–82.

Romania, Christianity in. Roman Dacia, which roughly covered the W. parts of present Romania, may have received Christianity through Roman soldiers and colonists by the 4th cent. or earlier, though evidence is scanty. Under Bulgarian rule its ecclesiastical affairs were placed under *Constantinople, and its worship gradually took on an E. character. In the 14th and 15th cent., when the Romanian Principalities stood in the outer line of defence of Europe against the Turks, they retained their national religion and culture. Under Turkish rule Christianity was not proscribed, but under the Phanariot hospodars (1721–1812), the episcopate was generally filled by Greeks, who upheld Greek customs in ecclesiastical matters. In the 19th cent. Romania gradually emerged as an independent state. In 1859 she claimed the independence of her national Church from the metropolitan jurisdiction of Constantinople, and in 1885 this claim was allowed by the *Oecumenical Patriarch and a Holy Synod was constituted. After the First World War (1914–18), Romania's territorial gains included Transylvania, where a *Uniat Church had existed since 1700, and whose large Hungarian and German minorities adhered to the RC, *Lutheran, *Calvinist, and *Unitarian Churches. In the 1923 constitution the Romanian Orthodox Church was recognized as the national Church. In 1935 the National Synod of the Romanian Orthodox Church recognized the Anglican Communion as part of the Catholic Church and its orders as valid.

After the Romanian surrender to Russia in 1944, a new constitution was enacted in 1948. In theory this guaranteed religious freedom and recognized the existence of the Romanian Orthodox Church, but until 1989 the Church was closely controlled by the communist government. Enforced retirement of bishops and other measures ensured that it supported government policy at home and abroad. A renewal movement within the Romanian Orthodox Church, the 'Lord's Army' (Oastea Domnului), which began in the 1920s, was legalized in 1989, and is active in schools and social work. All denominations have enjoyed greater freedom since 1989. The RC Church, which had suffered persecution, but whose position had eased earlier in the 1980s, has now received back some of its property. The Uniat Church, which had been forced to join the Orthodox Church in 1948, was legally reconstituted in 1990. *Baptists increased in number in the Communist period and have benefited from the new freedom. The Orthodox Church seeks to identify itself with Romanian nationality, posing a potential threat to other denominations. Ethnic discrimination affects the Hungarian minority in Transylvania, many of whom are Calvinist.

The main lit. is in Romanian. In Eng. there is a brief sketch by M. Beza, The Rumanian Church (1943). A. *Fortescue, The Orthodox Eastern Church (1907), pp. 328–34; D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wis. [1935]); id., The Dissident Eastern Churches (ibid. [1937]), pp. 110–18, both rev. as The Christian Churches of the East (2 vols., London, 1961), 1, pp. 105–11; 2, pp. 87–94. Ş. Meteş, Istoria bisericii şi a vieţii religioase a românilor din Transilvani şi Ungaria, 1 [to 1689] (Sibiu, 1935). M. Păcurariu, Istoria Bisericii Ortodoxe Române (3 vols., Bucharest, 1980–1). G. Rosu and others, 'Church and State in Romania', in V. Gsovski (ed.), Church and State Behind the Iron Curtain (New York, 1955; London, 1956), pp. 253–99. F. Popan and Č. Drašković, Orthodoxie heute in Rumänien und Jugoslawien (Vienna, 1960), pp. 9–135. Two books pub. by the Romanian Orthodox Church: De la Théologie Orthodoxe Roumaine des origines à nos jours (Bucharest, 1974), and The Romanian Orthodox Church yesterday and today (ibid., 1979). P. Walters (ed.), World Christianity: Eastern Europe (Keston Book, 28; Eastbourne, 1988), pp. 247–70. G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity, 3rd ser., 1930–48 (1948), pp. 43–50 (nos. 158 f.). On the general history of the country, N. Iorga, Histoire des Roumains et de leur civilisation (Paris, 1920; 2nd edn., Bucharest, 1922; Eng. tr., 1925); R. W. Seton-Watson, A History of the Roumanians from Roman Times to the Completion of Unity (1934). M. Lacko in NCE 12 (1969), pp. 714–17, s.v.; L. Tautu, ibid., pp. 718–21, s.v. 'Rumanian Rite'.

Romanos, St (*fl. c.*540), 'Melodus' (ὁ μελῳδός), Greek religious poet, the most significant composer of the *kontakion, the metrical sermon chanted to music. A Syrian by birth, he made his way to Constantinople, where he achieved fame. Eighty metrical sermons have come down to us under his name, but not all are genuine. Some of these, like his celebrated kontakia 1 On the Nativity, 4 On the Presentation in the Temple, and 29 On the Resurrection VI (ed. Maas and Trypanis), are considered among the masterpieces of world literature. Feast day, 1 Oct.

Crit. edn. of his works by P. Maas and C. A. Trypanis (genuine Cantica, Oxford, 1963; Cantica dubia, Berlin, 1970). There is a much less satisfactory edn. by N. B. Tomadakes (4 vols. + suppl., Athens, 1952–9). Works also ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Grosdidier de Matons (SC 99, 110, 114, 128, 283; 1964–81). Eng. tr. of works, with comm., by M. Carpenter (2 vols., Columbia, Oh. [1970–3]). J. Grosdidier de Matons, Romanos le Mélode et les Origines de la Poésie religieuse à Byzance [1977]. W. L. Petersen, The Diatessaron and Ephraem Syrus as Sources of Romanos the Melodist (CSCO 475, Subsidia, 74; 1985). S. P. Brock, 'From Ephrem to Romanos', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 20 (Louvain, 1989), pp. 139–51. M. Arranz, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 898–908, s.v. 'Romanos le Mélode'.

Romans, Epistle to the. The longest of St *Paul's Epistles and the most systematic. It was dispatched from *Corinth, prob. c. AD 58, when Paul was about to leave for *Jerusalem at the close of his 'Third Missionary Journey'; he is now proposing to go on from Jerusalem to *Rome, which he had not previously visited, and then on to *Spain. It is the only Epistle which Paul addressed to believers where he or one of his circle had not founded the Church. He writes as one conscious of his Apostolic commission from Christ, yet deferentially, as 'not wishing to build upon another man's foundation' (15: 20).

After a formal opening, Paul gives an epitome of the Gospel of salvation which he preaches (1: 16 f.). The universality of sin, both in the Gentile world with its idolatry and vice, and among the Jews, who have equally failed to keep the Mosaic law, is argued (1: 18–2: 29), and leads to the conclusion that 'by the works of the law no flesh is justified before God' (3: 20). On the contrary, *justification occurs 'apart from law' (3: 21) by 'the righteousness of God' which is revealed in the Gospel of His Son, whom God 'set forth to be a propitiation [or expiation]' to reconcile sinners to God (3: 25). This free gift is appropriated by faith, acc. to the example of *Abraham (4), whose trust in God, rather than any legal observance, was counted to him for righteousness (Gen. 15: 6). By such faith Christians obtain not only peace with God but also the hope of glory, God's love imparted through the gift of the Holy Spirit, and salvation mediated by the atoning death of Christ, the Second *Adam (5).

Paul next rebuts the objection that in such a situation we might as well continue to sin so that grace might abound. In reply he points to the accepted belief that *Baptism entails (i) a death to sin and a sharing in Christ's death and resurrection, (ii) a transfer, as of a slave, to a new ownership, that is, from sin to righteousness, or (iii), like the death of a spouse, the end of one marriage-bond and the beginning of another (6: 1–7: 4). Lest these analogies might seem to make the law equivalent to sin, he stresses that the law itself is good; it is human weakness which frustrates it. What the law achieves is to bring human sinfulness to light (7: 5–25 and cf. 8: 1–3). It is by the Spirit through Christ that we are freed from sin and the resulting condemnation, and that we walk not by flesh but by the Spirit. The life according to the Spirit, in which as 'joint heirs with Christ' we are led to eternal life, is celebrated in a hymn of confidence in the glory of our redemption (8).

The next section deals with the problem of the destiny of Israel. There is a new situation in which, while salvation is now offered freely also to the Gentiles, most Jews have rejected it. But, as in His dealings with the patriarchs and Pharaoh, God is sovereign in His choice or rejection of whom He will, even though only a remnant of Israel at present responds. Paul also claims that the falling-away of Israel is only temporary, to provide an occasion for the bringing in of the Gentiles, and that we can trustfully await the eventual restoration of 'all Israel' in God's providence (9–11).

Paul now turns to the practical obligations of the Christian life. We are to live not acc. to the fashion of this present world but acc. to the will of God in the unity of the Body of Christ, 'overcoming evil with good' (12). Due obedience must be given to the civil government, for the ruler is a 'minister of God' (13: 1–7). The whole law is summed up in the command to love one's neighbour. All this is the more urgent, as the *Parousia is at hand (13: 8–14). There must be mutual tolerance. Those who do not share the sensitiveness of others about foods and days must respect the consciences of the scrupulous, who in turn must not judge their brothers (14: 1–15: 13).

In the final section Paul treats of his personal plans, conveys his greetings to some 25 named persons, adds yet a word more on unity, and concludes with further greetings, the 'grace', and a doxology (15: 14–16: 27).

The integrity of the text of Romans has been much discussed. There is evidence of one ancient recension which ended at 14: 23 and of another ending at 15: 33, in each case followed immediately by the doxology (16: 25–27). The doxology thus appears in three different places in different MS traditions and in some MSS is lacking altogether; whatever their views on other matters, most scholars reject the Pauline authorship of the doxology. There are also texts which omit the name 'Rome' in 1: 7 and 1: 15. There is no completely satisfactory explanation of the existence of these recensions, but it seems more likely that the short recensions represent abbreviations of the full text rather than that the full text is an expansion of the recensions. A few modern scholars have contended (independently of the textual evidence) that the long list of personal greetings in ch. 16 suggests that this chapter at least was designed for some Church in which Paul had a number of friends (most prob. *Ephesus) rather than Rome, which he explicitly states (1: 13) that he had never visited.

Why Paul wrote as he did, with far more quotation of the OT than usual, is much discussed. He perhaps envisaged Rome as a base for his planned mission to Spain (cf. 15: 24) and a full account of his strongly contested understanding of the Gospel and some specimens of his moral preaching would help prepare the way for this impending visit. There were both Jewish and Gentile believers in Rome and Paul may have hoped to improve relations between them (15: 7–9). Most importantly he will have wanted some understanding of his law-free Gentile mission as he went to Jerusalem with the collection for the poor, and to possible disaster (15: 25–31). Rom. is best read as a theological defence of his Gospel and mission, conciliatory to Jewish-Christians (unlike Gal.), but maintaining no less strongly that salvation is through faith in Christ, not by observance of *Torah.

Whatever the contingent historical circumstances that led Paul to unfold his message in this way, heavily dependent on scriptural language (notably the Greek Psalter which is quoted 33 times and echoed in the thematic statement of 1: 17), Rom. is a text of primary importance for the Christian theological tradition. Its influence is perhaps already to be traced in other Books of the NT (Eph., 1 Pet., Heb., Jas.) and it is quoted or alluded to by the Fathers from St *Clement of Rome onwards. From the 4th cent. it stood first in the Pauline corpus. From *Origen onwards it has been the subject of many commentaries and its teaching was esp. influential in St *Augustine's anti-*Pelagian works and has profoundly affected the W. Christian outlook on *sin, *grace, *merit, free will, *justification, and *predestination. The strong interest of medieval theology in the 'righteousness of God' was intensified among the Reformers and continues in classical Protestantism. Meditation on Rom. 1: 16 f. strongly influenced M. *Luther's conviction of the truth of justification by faith, and J. *Wesley's conversion was also connected with his study of it. K. *Barth's theological revolution originated in his study of this Epistle, and recent attempts at rapprochement with Judaism take their start from Rom. 11. In addition to the religious (cf. Augustine's Confessions, 8.29) and theological impact of Paul's rhetoric, his advice at 13: 1–6 has been a force for social and political conversatism, esp. in German *Lutheranism.

The principal Gk. commentators are Origen (whose Comm., written at *Caesarea in his later life, survives, apart from frags., only in *Rufinus' paraphrase) and *Chrysostom (written during his Antiochene years). Lat. commentators incl. *Ambrosiaster, Pelagius, P. *Abelard, and St *Thomas Aquinas. Luther's early lectures on Rom. (1515–16), long thought lost, were pub. in a provisional edn. at Leipzig in 1908; also in the Weimar edn. of his works, vol. 56, 1938 (Eng. tr., Library of Christian Classics, 15; 1961). Important comm. of the Reformation period came from P. *Melanchthon (Nuremberg, 1522, on Rom. and Cor.; more fully on Rom. only, Wittenberg, 1532; enlarged edn., Strasbourg, 1540), H. *Bullinger (Zurich, 1533), and J. *Calvin (Strasbourg, 1540).

For English-speaking students, a new era in the study of Rom. was opened by the comm. of W. *Sanday and A. C. *Headlam (ICC, 1895). The many that have appeared since then incl. those by H. *Lietzmann (Hb. NT, 3, pt. 1; 1906; 3rd edn., 1928), T. *Zahn (Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 6; Leipzig, 1910), F. Kühl (Leipzig, 1913), M. J. *Lagrange OP, (Études bibliques, 1916), C. H. *Dodd (Moff. Comm., 1932), K. E. *Kirk (Clar. Bib., 1937), A. Nygren (Stockholm, 1944; Eng. tr., 1952), C. K. Barrett (Black's NT Comm., 1957), O. Michel (KEK, Abt. 4, 10th edn., 1955), F. J. Leenhardt (Neuchâtel, 1957; Eng. tr., 1961), E. Best (Cambridge, 1967), M. Black (New Cent. Bib., 1973), E. Käsemann (Hb. NT, 8a; 1973; Eng. tr., 1980), C. E. B. Cranfield (ICC, new edn., 2 vols., 1975–9), H. Schlier (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 6; 1977), U. Wilckens (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 6; Zurich, 3 parts, 1978–82), J. D. G. Dunn (Word Biblical Comm. 38A–B; Dallas, Tex. [1988]), and J. A. Fitzmyer (Anchor Bible, 33; 1993). K. Barth's comm., Der Römerbrief (1918; 2nd edn., 1921; Eng. tr., 1933), often throws flashes of illumination on the Epistle. Other influential studies incl. J. C. Becker, Paul the Apostle: The Triumph of God in Life and Thought (Philadelphia and Edinburgh, 1980), and E. P. Sanders, Paul, the Law, and the Jewish People (Philadelphia [1983]; London, 1985). C. D. Myers in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 816–30, s.v.

Romanticism. The word is used for the movement in literature and art reasserting passion and imagination in reaction from the classicism and rationalism which marked the 18th cent. It is a vague term, and describes a mood or tendency rather than a system. Such a reaction against the *Enlightenment is found first in Germany, among such writers as Goethe, F. *Schlegel, F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, and *Novalis. Its influence spread to other countries and in England can be seen in the work of W. *Blake, W. *Wordsworth, S. T. *Coleridge, P. B. Shelley, and J. Keats, among others, and in France in *Chateaubriand, Victor Hugo, etc.

Romanus, St. A deacon and exorcist of a church of *Caesarea in Palestine, who was martyred at *Antioch (*c.*304) in the *Diocletianic Persecution. The contemporary account of *Eusebius (De mart. Pal. 2) was embellished by later writers. *Prudentius mentions a boy associated with him in martyrdom, whom later tradition, perhaps through some confusion with an authentic Syriac martyr Barlaha or Balaam, names Barulas. The two saints are mentioned together in the *Roman Martyrology. Feast day, 18 Nov.

H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'S. Romain martyr d'Antioche', Anal. Boll. 1 (1932), pp. 241–83, with text of sources. On the entry in the Roman Martyrology, id. in AASS, Nov. 2 (1931), pp. 650 f. Id., 'S. Barlaam, martyr à Antioche', Anal. Boll. 22 (1903), pp. 129–45, with text of 'Passio'. R. Henke, Studien um Romanushymnus des Prudentius (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 15, 27; 1983). J.-M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (1968), cols. 338–42, s.v. 'Romano e Barula'.

Romanus, St, 'Melodus'. See ROMANOS, ST.

Rome (early Christian). An early but not well-grounded tradition asserts that St *Peter reached Rome in AD 42. When the Ep. to the *Romans was written (c. AD 58), a large Christian community already existed at Rome, and *Suetonius almost certainly refers to Christians in Claud. 25. 4 (Judaeos impulsore Chresto tumultuantes Roma expulit). St Paul arrived between AD 59 and 61 (Acts 28: 16) and many scholars hold that his '*Captivity Epistles', as well as Mk., Lk., Acts, and 1 Pet., were written in Rome. The burning of the City under *Nero (AD 64) was a pretext for a general *persecution of the Christians (*Tacitus, Ann. 15. 44; I Clem. 6). Ancient tradition held that both St Peter and St Paul were martyred at Rome in the 60s.

There may have been further persecution of Christians under the Emp. Domitian (81–96).

The early Roman bishops, of whom we have exceptionally reliable lists, were all Greek-speaking before *Victor I (*c.*189) and mostly administrators rather than theologians. In the first two cents. AD the most notable bishops were St *Clement I (*c.*88–97), author of an Ep. to the Church in Corinth; St *Telesphorus (*c.*126–36), prob. the only martyr among them; St *Pius I (*c.*141–54), said by the *Muratorian Canon to be the brother of the *Hermas who was author of 'The Shepherd'; Anicetus (*c.*155–66), who received St *Polycarp of Smyrna and discussed with him the dating of *Easter; and St Victor I, the first Latin-speaking bishop, whose action in the *Quartodeciman Controversy reflects the growing importance of the see. St *Ignatius of Antioch was martyred at Rome (*c.*110–17), as also was St *Justin Martyr (*c.*165). During the 2nd cent. Christians and semi-Christians of the most diverse views (*Tatian, *Hegesippus, *Valentinus and *Marcion) congregated in Rome.

During the early 3rd cent., a number of *Monarchians of varying schools taught in the capital and were opposed by the rigorist theologian, St *Hippolytus. Hippolytus' disputes with St *Callistus (Bp. 217–22) on disciplinary and dogmatic matters led to a serious schism, which continued until the episcopate of Pontian (230–5), when persecution issued in the exile of the leaders of both parties and their consequent reconciliation. During the persecution of *Decius (249–51) St *Fabian (Bp. 236–50) was martyred and the see kept vacant for 13 months. Another rigorist schism, led by the presbyter *Novatian, took place under Fabian's successor, *Cornelius (251–3), who died in exile, acc. to tradition as a martyr. *Stephen I, the next Pope (253–7), is known for his controversy with St *Cyprian of Carthage about rebaptism. Persecution began once more under Valerian (253–60), who struck at both the clergy and the property of the Church, and in 258 the Bp., *Sixtus (Xystus) II, and all his deacons, incl. St *Laurence (q.v.), were martyred. Bp. *Dionysius of Rome (259–68) is best remembered for his intervention in a doctrinal dispute in the Church of Alexandria.

By this date the Roman Church was already highly organized. Under Cornelius there were 46 presbyters, seven deacons, and a large number of lesser ministers (*Eusebius, HE 6. 43. 11). The considerable property of the Church included private houses (tituli) in the City for worship and burial-places (*catacombs, q.v.) outside the walls. Both these would be made over to the Church by wealthy Christians who presumably held them in custody for the community. The administration of this property, together with the relief of a large number of poor, fell to the *deacons, each of whom had a district and a staff under him.

Little is recorded of the course taken at Rome of the persecution which broke out under *Diocletian in 303. Bp. Marcellinus (296–304) seems to have handed over copies of the Scriptures, and perhaps even offered incense to the gods; the later account of his being martyred is spurious. The Church's property was certainly confiscated and a number of other Christians fell away. With the accession of the Emp. Maxentius in 306, persecution in the W. ceased. The next two Bps. of Rome, Marcellus (306–8 or 308–9; the dates are disputed) and Eusebius (310) had to face opposition from the lapsed, who wished to be readmitted to communion with little or no penance. The disorders which arose led to the exile of both bishops and their chief opponent, Heraclius. The re-establishment of the tituli by Marcellus and the return of the Church's property under Bp. *Miltiades (311–14) were the prelude to the grant of full toleration. This was achieved by *Constantine's victory at the *Milvian Bridge (312) and the so-called Edict of *Milan (313).

The period between the middle of the 4th and the end of the 5th cents. saw the steady growth of the authority of the bishops, or Popes, of Rome. They consistently intervened on the orthodox side in the theological disputes of the time. Their characteristics were common sense, firm adherence to traditional belief, distrust of theological niceties, and support of orthodox leaders in adversity, qualities which made appeal to their authority increasingly general. St *Athanasius was welcomed in Rome during his second exile (339–46). *Julius I (337–52) and *Liberius (352–66) upheld the Nicene faith against the *Arians, *Damasus I (366–84) condemned *Apollinarianism, *Innocent I (402–17) *Pelagianism, and *Celestine I (422–32) *Nestorianism, while the '*Tome' of *Leo I (the Great) (440–61), a masterly statement of the orthodox doctrine of the Incarnation, greatly assisted the defeat of *Eutychianism at the Council of *Chalcedon (451).

During this period the disciplinary authority of the Papacy increased steadily despite the exile of Liberius, the intrusion of the antipope Felix, and the tumults which accompanied the elections of Damasus and *Boniface (418–22). The Canons of *Sardica (343) and the legislation of Gratian (Emp., 375–83) and *Theodosius (d. 395) firmly established the Roman see as a court of appeal. The earliest genuine decretal dates from the reign of *Siricius (384–99), and Innocent I and Leo I frequently intervened in the affairs of other Churches.

Meanwhile paganism lingered on among the aristocracy in Rome. Not before 382 was Christian influence sufficiently strong to cause the removal, by Gratian, of the Altar of Victory from the Senate-house; but there soon followed the anti-pagan legislation of Theodosius and the decree of Honorius (408) denying the right of property to the pagan religions. The growth of Christianity in Rome in the period is reflected in the building of churches under Pope *Sylvester (314–35) and his successors (see ROME, CHURCHES OF), the restoration by Pope Damasus of the tombs of the martyrs, the introduction of monastic life by St Athanasius and St *Jerome, and the beginnings of the latter's new Latin version of the Bible (the *Vulgate) at the instance of Damasus.

In political significance Rome suffered greatly after the removal of the capital of the Empire to *Constantinople (330). Even in the W. Milan and later *Ravenna became the effective capitals rather than Rome. In the 5th cent. Italy was invaded by *Alaric, *Attila, and Gaiseric the Vandal king, and Rome was sacked twice before, with the end of the W. Empire, it came under the authority of barbarian rulers in 476. The policy of Odoacer and of *Theodoric was one of tolerance, and a far greater disaster was the long Gothic War (537–53) between the Goths and Byzantines, during which Rome changed hands several times, and at one point was almost completely abandoned by its inhabitants. The partial conquest of Italy by the Lombards, some of whom were pagan and the rest *Arian, and the decline of the Byzantine power, made it necessary for the Popes to assume political authority in Rome. Fortunately for the Papacy, this coincided with the pontificates of the able Pelagius II (579–90) and his greater successor St *Gregory I ('the Great') (590–604). The defence of the 'Roman Duchy' was assured by the Papal policy of holding the balance of power between Byzantines, Lombards, and (later) Franks. Gregory's missionary and pastoral zeal, united with his remarkable statesmanship, make his pontificate one of the outstanding eras in the history of the Papacy. In Rome he founded a monastery on the Celian Hill which gave refuge to monks whose houses had been destroyed in other parts of Italy. He also made important changes in the Roman liturgy and fostered the development of liturgical chant (see SCHOLA CANTORUM). From Rome, he sent St *Augustine to Britain.

Relations between the Papacy and the Byzantine Emperors, the nominal overlords of Rome, deteriorated during the 7th cent. Pope *Martin I (649–55) died a prisoner in exile because of his opposition to *Monothelitism and *Gregory II (715–31) was a prominent opponent of the *Iconoclast Emperor, *Leo III (the Isaurian). We have the beginnings of the Temporal Power of the Papacy in the Donation of Sutri to 'St Peter' (729) by the Lombard King, Liutprand. The growth of the Lombard power led Pope Stephen III (752–7) to appeal in 753 to the Frankish King *Pepin for support and in 773 *Hadrian I (772–95) followed his example with Pepin's son, *Charlemagne. The Frankish intervention led to the destruction of the Lombard kingdom, to the restoration of the Roman Duchy and the Exarchate of Ravenna not to the Byzantine Empire but to the Papacy, and, in 800, to the coronation by St *Leo III (795–816) in Rome of Charlemagne as Roman Emperor.

See also following entry, PATRIMONY OF ST PETER, and under individual Popes.

The most important single early source is the Liber Pontificalis* (q.v.). Much primary material is also to be found in the extant Papal Letters (conveniently catalogued in Jaffé, 1). The subject naturally occupies a place in all histories of the early Church, notably those of L. *Duchesne, P. *Batiffol, H. *Lietzmann, Fliche and Martin, and in C. *Baronius's Annales. Much information also in the earlier vols. of F. *Gregorovius, Geschichte der Stadt Rom im Mittelalter (8 vols., 1859–72; Eng. tr., 8 vols., 1894–1902). H. Grisar, SJ, Geschichte Roms und der Päpste im Mittelalter, 1: Rom beim Ausgang der antiken Welt (14 Lieferungen, [1898–] 1901; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1911–12). H. Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom: Liturgische und archäologische Studien (1915; 2nd edn., 1927). E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums (2 vols., 1930–3). C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome, son organisation, sa politique, son idéologie de Miltiade à Sixte III (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976). R. Krautheimer, Rome: Profile of a City 312–1308 (Princeton, NJ, 1980). On the transition to Medieval Rome, cf. also L. Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical, 754–1073 (1898), and T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia [1984]).

Rome, churches of. From the innumerable Roman churches of historic and ecclesiastical interest, only a selection, necessarily somewhat arbitrary, can be listed in this article. For the four 'Major *Basilicas'—(1) *St Peter's, (2) St John *Lateran, (3) *Santa Maria Maggiore, and (4) *St Paul's outside the Walls—see separate entries.

In addition to these Major Basilicas three further churches (here listed first, nos. 5, 6, and 7) also rank as 'Patriarchal Basilicas'.

(5) S. CROCE IN GERUSALEMME (Basilica Sessoriana). It was founded towards the middle of the 4th cent. within the precincts of an imperial residence (the Sessorian Palace) that had belonged to St *Helena, and endowed with relics of the Passion. Very little of the original building remains except a subterranean chapel and the pillars of the nave. From at least the 8th cent. Popes went barefoot on Good Friday from the Lateran to S. Croce, carrying a relic of the Cross. The church was rebuilt by Lucius II (1144), much restored at the end of the 15th and beginning of the 16th cent., and modernized under *Benedict XIV (1744).

(6) S. LORENZO FUORI LE MURA. In the Cemetery of S. Ciriaco where St *Laurence was buried. The original basilica, already mentioned by *Prudentius (d. *c.*410), was superseded by a nearby building constructed by Pelagius II (579–90); this in turn was remodelled and extended by *Honorius III (d. 1227), who transferred the façade and porch to the W. end. *Pius IX (d. 7 Feb. 1878) is buried in the crypt. The church was damaged by a bomb on 19 July 1943.

(7) S. SEBASTIANO FUORI LE MURA (4th–5th cent.). On the *Appian Way over the catacombs. The relics of St *Peter and St *Paul were possibly removed here during the Valerianic Persecution (258), and the basilica, built during the first half of the 4th cent., was initially known as the basilica apostolorum [sc. Petri et Pauli] and only later (from the 7th cent.) by the name of St *Sebastian. The present church is mainly the work of Card. Scipio Borghese (1612); it contains, in addition to the reputed remains of the saint, a statue of him designed by G. L. Bernini (1589–1680).

(8) S. AGNESE. On the Via Nomentana, adjoining the catacombs where St *Agnes was buried. The church (now subterranean) has a fine mosaic in the apse depicting St. Agnes between Popes *Symmachus (498–514) and *Honorius I (625–38); the latter was responsible for the present building, which replaced the original, mid 4th-cent. foundation. In a chapel is the shrine of St Emerentiana (feast day, 23 Jan.), Agnes's foster sister. Annually on 21 Jan. the lambs to provide wool for the archiepiscopal *pallia are blessed here. The church is served by *Canons Regular of the Lateran.

(9) S. CLEMENTE. Near the *Colosseum. The present church dates from the 12th cent. (*Paschal II, d. 1118); but excavations begun in 1858 revealed the existence of a much larger church (mentioned by St *Jerome in 392; the scene of a Council in 417) at a lower level, which was severely damaged at the sack of Rome under Robert Guiscard (1084). The latter has some highly interesting 9th–11th cent. mural paintings depicting the legends of Sts *Cyril and Methodius and of St *Clement. The white marble altar canopy, choir screen, and ambones of the present church no doubt belonged to this earlier structure. At a still lower level is a chapel of *Mithras dating from the Imperial Age. The church, with the adjacent priory, is now in the hands of Irish *Dominicans.

(10) SS. Cosmas and Damiano. On the edge of the Forum. One of the first Roman churches to be constructed from public buildings, it consists of a rectangular hall (probably the audience hall of the city prefect, built by Vespasian, d. AD 79) to which a rotunda has been added (perhaps to be identified with a temple of Romulus built by the Emp. Maxentius c.310). It was consecrated as a Christian church by Felix IV (528), who inserted the notable mosaics (subjects from the Apocalypse etc.) and dedicated it to Sts *Cosmas and Damian, the two 'anarguroi' who enjoyed great popularity at Rome in the 6th cent.

(11) S. Francesca Romana (S. Maria Nuova). In the Forum. *Leo IV (d. 855) erected the church, formerly known as Sta Maria Nuova, on a site partly occupied by a ruined Temple of Venus and Rome, to replace the ruined S. Maria Antiqua. The mosaics in the apse date from 1161; the beautiful campanile from the 13th cent. St *Frances of Rome (q.v.), whose labours were centred here, was buried in the church (1440), which was restored by Carlo Maderna (1556–1629) after her canonization (1608). It is served by *Oblates of the Order of St Benedict.

(12) The Gesù. The principal church of the *Jesuits and one of the most ornate in Rome, enshrining the body of St *Ignatius Loyola, their founder. It was built (1568–75) in the *baroque style by Card. Alessandro Farnese (1520–89, nephew of *Paul III) after designs by Vignola and Giacomo della Porta.

(13) SS. Giovanni and Paolo. On the Celian Hill. Built by *Pammachius over the supposed house of the two Roman saints, *John and Paul (4th cent.). Interesting remains of an ancient dwelling (discovered 1887) contain some famous frescoes (Christ between Sts Michael and Gabriel, Sts John and Paul). The church, which with other buildings on the Celian Hill was severely damaged by the Normans in the sack of Rome, was enlarged in 1154. It was extensively restored in the late 17th and early 18th cents. and again in the mid-20th. In a chapel lies the body of St *Paul of the Cross, founder of the *Passionists, who now serve the church.

(14) S. Gregorio Magno. Also on the Celian Hill, close to the site of a monastery established between 575 and 581 by St *Gregory the Great (Pope, 590–604) in his paternal house (gens Anicia) and dedicated to St *Andrew the Apostle. The present church, which claims to possess the stone bed and marble chair of Gregory (himself buried in St Peter's), was constructed in the 12th cent. It was extensively restored by G. B. Soria in 1633 under Card. Borghese and the interior modernized in 1725–34. St Gregory's has close connections with England as the orig. home of St *Augustine of Canterbury and the titular church of Cards. H. E. *Manning and H. *Vaughan, successive Abps. of *Westminster. There are some frescoes by Guido Reni (1574–1642). Since 1573 the church has been served by *Camaldolese.

(15) S. Maria in Ara Coeli (so named since the 14th cent.). On the site of the ancient Roman citadel and the Temple of Juno Moneta. A monastery of 'S. Maria in Capitolio' is already mentioned in the 10th cent.; the present church dates from the 13th and 14th cents. It was here that E. *Gibbon conceived the plan of his Decline and Fall. A chapel in the transept ('Cappella Santa di Sant'Elena') contains an altar commemorating an early legend, acc. to which a vision of the BVM and the Christ Child on an altar in heaven (ara coeli) was granted to the Emp. Augustus (d. AD 14) when sacrificing. Beneath this altar in a porphyry sarcophagus are the reputed remains of St Helena. The church was the scene of Marcantonio Colonna's solemn thanksgiving for the victory of *Lepanto (5 Oct. 1571). Since c.1250 it has been served by *Franciscans.

(16) S. Maria in Cosmedin (also 'Bocca della Verità'). On the site of an ancient temple, perhaps the 'Temple of Fortune', and in a region formerly inhabited by Greek refugee Christians, it was prob. so named from its beauty (Gk. κοσμέω, 'adorn'; or perhaps from a square named 'Cosmedin' in *Constantinople). The present form of the church results from a 12th-cent. remodelling of a building erected in the time of *Hadrian I (d. 795) and itself based partly on a 6th-cent. structure. Acc. to a late tradition, St *Augustine of Hippo taught at a neighbouring house.

(17) S. Maria ad Martyres (also 'S. Maria Rotonda', the 'Pantheon') was prob. the first pagan temple in Rome to be turned into a Christian church. The foundations go back to a building erected by Marcus Agrippa, son-in-law of the Emp. Augustus, in 27 BC; the present round structure and vaulting are due to Hadrian (d. 138), who rebuilt it after it had been struck by lightning. On 13 May 609 it was dedicated as a Christian church by Boniface IV (608–15) under the name of 'S. Maria ad Martyres', large quantities of relics being brought from the catacombs to mark the event and the Feast of *All Saints (orig. 13 May) instituted. *Urban VIII (Maffeo Barberini) removed the bronze panels from the ceiling of the portico to provide metal for the spiral columns for the baldacchino of St Peter's (hence 'Quod non fecerunt barbari, fecerunt Barberini'). The church contains the tomb of *Raphael.

(18) S. Maria sopra Minerva. On the ruins of an ancient temple of Minerva which later became the site of a Greek monastery. The present church (completed 1453), the only Gothic Church in Rome, was begun c.1280 by Fra Sisto and Fra Ristoro, two *Dominicans, and has been continuously served by members of the Order. It contains statues, frescoes, and paintings by *Michelangelo, Filippino Lippi, Giacomo della Porta, and other famous artists.

(19) S. Pietro in Vincoli (also 'Basilica Eudoxiana'). The church, which may go back to c.400, was rebuilt as the titulus apostolorum by Sixtus III (432–40) and received the reputed chains of St Peter. At around the same time, or shortly afterwards, it was the object of a pious benefaction by the Empress Eudoxia, wife of Valentinian III. Among its monuments are the celebrated *Moses of Michelangelo, a relief of *Nicholas of Cusa, and the tomb of *Julius II (1503–13). It is served by Canons Regular of the Lateran.

(20) S. Prassede. On the Esquiline. The present church, which contains the reputed remains of St *Praxedes and St *Pudentiana, was built by Paschal I (817–24) near an earlier church of the same dedication. A chapel near the W. end contains some furniture which belonged to St *Charles Borromeo, titular Card. of this church. The 9th-cent. mosaics, among the best in Rome, depict subjects from the Apocalypse. A column in the chapel of St *Zeno is traditionally reckoned that to which Christ was bound. The church, which is served by *Vallumbrosans, inspired R. Browning's 'Tomb at St Praxed's'.

(21) S. PUDENZIANA. Near the foot of the Esquiline. It is traditionally believed to have been founded on the site of the mansion of the senator, Pudens, whose daughters, Praxedes and Pudentiana, are said to have given it to *Pius I (d. 154?). Excavations have revealed the remains of a 2nd-cent. house and adjacent bath building; the latter was converted into a Christian church in the time of *Siricius (d. 395). The apse has a fine early mosaic (*c.*400, but much restored; incl. Christ enthroned with the Apostles, and two female figures, prob. representing the Jewish and Gentile Churches). A table in the church is venerated as that on which St Peter celebrated Mass.

(22) SS. QUATTRO CORONATI. On the Celian Hill. Perhaps as early as the 4th cent. a church (titulus Aemilianae) existed on or near the site; this was later rebuilt, incorporating the walls of a large secular reception hall, and was dedicated to the *Quattro Coronati whose bodies it enshrines. After its destruction by Robert Guiscard (1084), it was rebuilt in 1111 by Paschal II, who reduced its size. It is served by *Capuchins.

(23) S. SABINA. On the Aventine. Founded by an Illyrian priest, Petrus, during the pontificate of *Celestine I (423–32), it is one of the most impressive Roman basilicas (admirably restored in the first half of the 20th cent.). It contains a fine series of columns of Proconnesian marble and, between the vestibule and nave, a large wooden door (5th–6th cent.) with a series of remarkable wood-carvings (incl. a very early Crucifixion). The church has been served by Dominicans since the time of *Honorius III (d. 1227).

(24) S. STEFANO ROTONDO. On the Celian Hill not far from the Lateran. It was built by Pope *Simplicius (468–83), decorated with marbles in the 6th cent., and adorned with mosaics (Christ above a jewelled cross; Sts Primus and Felicianus, martyrs from the age of the Persecution of Diocletian) in the 7th cent. Under Innocent II (1130–43) a third outside circle of pillars was demolished and the church correspondingly reduced in size; but it is said to be still the largest circular church in existence. It contains an ancient episcopal throne from which St Gregory I (d. 604) delivered one of his homilies.

M. Armellini, Le chiese di Roma dalle loro origini fino al secolo XVI (1887; new edn., continuing history to 19th cent., ed. C. Cecchelli, 2 vols., 1942). O. *Marucchi, Basiliques et églises de Rome (1902). J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 9, Hefte 1–2; 1918). Id., Die Stationskirchen des Missale Romanum (Ecclesia Orans, 19; 1926). C. Hülsen, Le chiese di Roma nel medio evo: Cataloghi ed appunti (1927). F. X. Zimmermann, Die Kirchen Roms (1935). R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae (Monumenti d'Antichità cristiana pubblicati dal Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana, 2nd ser. 2; 5 vols., 1937–77). R. Vielliard, Recherches sur les origines de la Rome chrétienne: Les Églises romaines et leur rôle dans l'histoire et la topographie de la ville depuis la fin du monde antique jusqu'à la formation de l'état pontifical (Mâcon, 1941; repr. with illustrations, Rome, 1959). É. Mâle, Rome et ses vieilles églises ([1942]; Eng. tr., 1960). F. W. Deichmann, Frühchristliche Kirchen in Rom (Basle, 1948). C. G. Paluzzi (ed.), Roma cristiana; vol. 2: P. Testini, Le catacombe e gli antichi cimiteri cristiani in Roma [1966]; vol. 3: G. Matthiae, Le chiese di Roma dal IV al X secolo [1962]; vol. 4: V. Golzio and G. Zander, Le chiese di Roma dall'XI al XVI secolo [1963]; vol. 5: V. Mariani, Le chiese di Roma dal XVII al XVIII secolo [1963]; vol. 6: C. Cheschi, Le chiese di Roma dagli inizi del neoclassico al 1961 [1963]; vol. 7: M. Dejonge, Roma Santuario Mariano [1969]. H. Brandenburg, Roms frühchristliche Basiliken des 4. Jahrhunderts (Munich, 1979). R. Krautheimer, Rome: Profile of a City, 312–1308 (Princeton, NJ, 1980), passim. J. Wilpert, Die römische Mosaiken und Malereien kirchlicher Bauten vom IV. bis XIII. Jahrhundert (4 vols., 1916); section on mosaics rev. by W. N. Schumacher, Die römischen Mosaiken der kirchlichen Bauten vom IV.–XIII. Jahrhundert (1976). Popular surveys in Eng. by E. Hutton, Rome (1909; 7th edn., 1950); R. Thynne, The Churches of Rome (1924); R. Lanciani, Wanderings through Ancient Roman Churches (1925); and R. Beny and P. Gunn, The Churches of Rome (1981). U. Benigni in CE 13 (1912), pp. 164–79, s.v. 'Rome', esp. pp. 169–75; E. Josi in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1208–45, s.v. 'Roma V: topografia'.

Romero, Oscar Arnulfo (1917–80), Abp. of San Salvador. He was born into a poor family at Ciudad Barrios in El Salvador. When he was 12 years old his non-believing father arranged for him to be apprenticed as a carpenter, but through the intervention of a visiting priest he was accepted for a seminary and at the age of 18 he went to the *Gregorianum in Rome. Ordained priest in 1942, he was made an auxiliary bishop in 1970 (to his predecessor as Abp, Luis Chávez). At this stage he had a member of *Opus Dei as a confessor and in 1972, when he took charge of the country's national theological seminary, he attempted to reverse many of the liberalizing changes that had taken place under the previous *Jesuit management. In 1974 he was appointed a diocesan as Bp. of Santiago de María, an area that included his home town. Even as late as 1976 he was still attacking *Liberation Theology as expounded by Jon Sobrino, SJ, the country's leading theologian, and it was thus as a noted conservative that he was appointed Abp. of San Salvador in 1977. But, partly as a result of the murder of his friend, Fr. Rutilio Grande, and partly because of the general polarization caused by the worsening situation in the country, he soon espoused the principles of Liberation Theology and became an opponent of the then dictator of El Salvador, also called Romero. While the majority of the clergy supported him and his broadcast sermons attracted large audiences, all but one of his fellow bishops opposed him. Among his more controversial acts were the use of a single archdiocesan Mass as a form of protest and two apparent exceptions to his normal advocacy of peaceful means of opposition, his agreement to conduct a public funeral for one of his priests, generally acknowledged to have been a terrorist (Ernesto Barrera), and the endorsement in his fourth pastoral letter of proportionate counter-violence. After the overthrow of his namesake he tried to negotiate between the three main factions in the country, but he was assassinated on 24 Mar. 1980 while celebrating Mass at the Divine Providence (cancer) Hospital in San Salvador.

Four Pastoral Letters and other statements were pub. as La Voz de los sin voz (San Salvador, 1980; Eng. tr., Maryknoll, NY, 1985), with introd. essays by I. Martín Baró and J. Sobrino. P. Erdozaín, Monseñor Romero: Mártir de la Iglesia Popular (San Jose, 1980; Eng. tr., 1981). J. R. Brockman, The World Remains: A Life of Oscar Romero (Maryknoll, NY, and London, 1982).

Romuald, St (*c.*950–1027), founder of the *Camaldolese Order. A nobleman of *Ravenna, he entered the abbey of Sant'Apollinare in Classe through horror at his father's having killed a man in a duel. In 998 he was appointed abbot, but the life not proving sufficiently severe, he resigned in the next year and retired to the neighbouring marshes to practise rigid asceticism. In his later years he wandered round Italy, founding hermitages and monasteries, that at Campus Malduli becoming the centre of the Camaldolese Order. Feast day, formerly 7 Feb., now 19 June.

Frag. of exposition on Ps. 68 attrib. to Romuald in J. P. Migne, PL 140. 1125–8. Life by St *Peter Damian (*c.*1040); repr. from A. *Mai's edn. of Damian's works in J. P. Migne, op. cit., 144. 953–1008; and ed. G. Tabacco (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, 94; 1957). F. M. da Napoli, O. Camald., Delle notizie storiche della vita di San Romoaldo (Naples, 1716). B. Collina, Vita di San Romualdo, fondatore della religione camaldolese (2 pts., Bologna, 1752). W. Franke, Quellen und Chronologie zur Geschichte Romualdo von Camaldoli und seiner Einsiedlergenossenschaften im Zeitalter Ottos III (Diss., Halle, 1910); id., Romuald von Camaldoli und seine Reformtätigkeit zur Zeit Ottos III (Historische Studien, 107; 1913). Modern Lives by A. Pagnani (Sassoferrato, 1927; 2nd edn., 1967) and T. Ciampelli (Ravenna, 1927). J. Leclercq, OSB, 'Saint Romuald et le monachisme missionnaire', R. Bén. 72 (1962), pp. 307–23. G. Tabacco, 'Romualdo di Ravenna e gli inizi dell'eremitismo camaldolese', L'eremitismo in occidente nei secoli XI e XII (Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, 4; Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Contributi, Serie Terza, Varia, 4 [1965]), pp. 73–119. L. A. St L. Toke in CE 13 (1912), p. 179. G. Tabacco and P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (1968), cols. 365–84, s.v.

Roncalli, Angelo Giuseppe. See JOHN XXIII.

'Root and Branch'. An expression originally taken from the wording of the London Petition of 11 Dec. 1640 (itself modelled on Mal. 4: 1) in which it was demanded 'that the said government [i.e. the episcopal system] with all its dependencies, roots, and branches, be abolished'. The petition thus became known as the Root and Branch Petition, and the bill of 1641 embodying its demands the Root and Branch Bill; and the expression hence came to be applied to any thoroughgoing policy.

Ropes, James Hardy (1866–1933), NT scholar. Born at Salem, Mass., he was educated at Harvard and Andover and in Germany. From 1903 until his death he was a professor at Harvard University. His principal writings were Die Sprüche Jesu (Texte und Untersuchungen, 14. 2; 1896), an edition of the uncanonical sayings of Christ; a Commentary on the Ep. of St James (ICC, 1916); and an edition of the texts (based on *Codex Vaticanus and *Codex Bezae) of the Acts of the Apostles (Beginnings of Christianity, ed. F. J. Foakes-Jackson and K. *Lake, vol. 3; 1926).

E. C. Moore in Dict. Amer. Biog. 16 (1935), pp. 151 f.

rosary. A form of prayer in which 15 *decades of *Hail Marys are recited, each decade being preceded by the *Lord's Prayer and followed by the *Gloria Patri; the prayers are counted on a string of beads or sometimes on a ring. Each decade is accompanied by meditation on one of a sequence of *Mysteries running from the *Annunciation of the BVM. Usually only five decades (the so-called *chaplet) or less are recited at a time. The practice of saying a prayer a set number of times, often with some device to help keep count, is attested in early Christian monasticism. In the E. it developed into the '*Jesus Prayer'. In the W. at first the dominant equivalent was the repeated recitation of the Lord's Prayer which came to be seen as equivalent to the recitation of the Psalter for people who could not read. In the 12th–13th cent. some people began adding or substituting Hail Marys; 150 Hail Marys came to be known as the Marian Psalter, recited whole or in part. The development of the cycle of meditations owes much to the *Carthusians in Trier in the early 15th cent.; they influenced the *Dominican Alain de la Roche (c. 1428–75), who used this devotion to revive the Dominican Confraternity of the BVM. The tradition that the BVM gave the rosary to St *Dominic as a weapon against the *Albigensian heresy derives from revelations which Alain claimed to have received. The rosary was propagated by the establishment of rosary confraternities, which were increasingly under Dominican control; in 1559 *Pius V gave the Dominican Master General exclusive control over them. As a consequence, until 1984 the blessing of rosaries came to be reserved to Dominicans or priests having special faculties. Besides the Dominican rosary, there are various other forms. The *Servite rosary, for instance, has seven sections in memory of the *Seven Sorrows of the BVM, each consisting of the Lord's Prayer and seven Hail Marys; it apparently dates from the 17th cent. and was approved by the General Chapter of the Servites in 1646. The feast of the BVM of the Rosary on 7 Oct. was instituted by *Pius V in 1572 in memory of the Christian victory over the Turks at *Lepanto (1571); in 1573 it was moved to the first Sunday in Oct., but in the present RC calendar it has returned to 7 Oct. See also FRATERNITIES.

J. M. Larroca, OP (ed.), Acta Sanctae Sedis necnon Magistrorum et Capitulorum Generalium Sacri Ordinis Praedicatorum pro Societate SS. Rosarii (2 vols. in 4, Lyons, 1890–91). E. Wilkins, The Rose-Garden Game: The Symbolic Background to the European Prayer-Beads (1969). G. G. Meersseman and G. P. Pacini, Ordo Fraternitatis: Confraternite e pietà dei laici nel medioevo (Italia Sacra, 24–6; Rome 1977), pp. 1144–232. K. J. Klinkhammer, SJ, Adolf von Essen und seine Werke: Der Rosenkranz in der geschichtlichen Situation seiner Entstehung und in seinem bleibendem Anliegen (Frankfurter Theologische Studien, 13; 1972). On the Servite rosary, Corona dell'Addolorata, issued by the General Curia of the Servites (Rome, 1986; Eng. tr., Rosary of our Lady of Sorrows, Chicago, 1986). W. A. Hinnebusch, OP, in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 667–70, s.v.; A. Duval, OP, in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 937–80, s.v. 'Rosaire'.

Roscelin (d. 1125), *Scholastic philosopher and theologian. The facts of his life are very imperfectly known. Probably a native of Compiègne, he studied at Soissons and *Reims. He was accused of *Tritheism at a Council at Soissons *c.*1092, but denied having taught it and went to England, where his doctrines were opposed by St *Anselm. After his return to France he taught at Loches, Besançon, and Tours (where he held canonries), his most famous pupil being P. *Abelard, who attacked his teaching *c.*1120.

Roscelin's theories have been known principally through the works of his opponents Anselm, Abelard, and *John of Salisbury. He was one of the first and most outstanding defenders of *Nominalism. He stressed that universal terms were voces, claiming to establish that a being can have no parts. These philosophical tenets led him to identify the three Persons of the Trinity as distinct things (res), on the consideration that if they were identical in substance, the Father and the Holy Spirit would have become incarnate together with the Son.

His letter to Abelard ed. J. A. Schmeller in Abh. (Bayr.), 5 (Heft 3; 1849), pp. 189–210; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 178. 357–72; crit. edn. by J. Reiners, Der Nominalismus in der Frühscholastik (BGPM 8, Heft 5; 1910), pp. 62–80, with discussion of his position, pp. 25–41. Two essays on the Trinity and a Psalm comm. are attributed to him by C. J. Mews, 'Nominalism and Theology before Abaelard: New Light on Roscelin of Compiègne', Vivarium, 30 (1992), pp. 5–37. Letter from Walter of Honnecourt to Roscelin ed. G. *Morin, OSB, R. Bén. 22 (1905), pp. 172–5. F. Picavet, Roscelin, philosophe et théologien, d'après la légende et d'après l'histoire (École pratique des Hautes Études. Section des sciences religieuses. Rapports annuels, 1896; greatly enlarged edn., 1911). M.-M. Gorce, OP, in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2911–15, s.v.

Rose of Lima, St (1586–1617), the first canonized saint of America. She lived all her life in Lima, Peru, and from childhood practised the severest austerities. In her 20th year she joined the *Third Order of St *Dominic. A vow of virginity and her strictness of life incurred persecution from her family and friends, and she also suffered intensely from interior desolation. Long sickness and early death crowned her self-sought mortifications. She was canonized by Clement X in 1671 and is the Patroness of S. America and the *Philippines. Feast day, 23 Aug.

AASS, Aug. 5 (1741), pp. 892–1029, incl. text of Life by L. Hansen, OP, pr. at Louvain, 1668, pp. 902–84, and bull of canonization, pp. 1027–9. Short Life by J. B. Feuillet (Paris, 1671; Eng. tr. in The Lives of St Rose of Lima, the Blessed Columba, etc., ed. F. W. *Faber, London, 1847, pp. 3–195). M. T. de Bussierre, Le Pérou et sainte Rose de Lima (1863); F. M. Capes, The Flower of the New World: Being a Short History of St Rose of Lima (1899); R. Vargas Ugarte, SJ, Vida de Santa Rosa de Santa María (Lima, 1951). F. Parkinson Keyes, The Rose and the Lily (1962), pp. 55–138.

Rose, Golden. See GOLDEN ROSE.

Rose, Hugh James (1795–1838), pre-*Tractarian Anglican High Churchman. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and after ordination as priest in 1819 held the vicarage of Horsham, W. Sussex, from 1821 to 1830, and of Hadleigh, Suffolk, from 1830 to 1833. A year's absence in Germany from May 1824 bore fruit in The State of the Protestant Religion in Germany (1825), warning of the dangers of contemporary rationalism in German theology and attributing this to laxity in relation to creeds and Church formularies and the absence of episcopacy having an authoritative teaching office. It provoked a reply from E. B. *Pusey, who in his early years was more sympathetically disposed than later towards German theology. Rose responded to Pusey in A Letter to the Lord Bishop of London (1829). In 1832 he founded the British Magazine to further High Church doctrines. A meeting in July 1833 in his rectory at Hadleigh, attended by W. *Palmer (of Worcester College), A. P. *Perceval, and R. H. *Froude, was an important landmark in the beginnings of the Tractarian Movement. Later Rose became somewhat more critical of the Tractarian ideals. In 1833–4 he held the chair of divinity at *Durham University and in 1836 he was appointed Principal of *King's College, London.

J. W. *Burgon, The Lives of Twelve Good Men, 1 (1888), pp. 116–283 (no. 2: 'The Restorer of the Old Paths'). J. M. Rigg in DNB 49 (1897), pp. 240–2. See also bibl. to OXFORD MOVEMENT.

Rosetta Stone, the celebrated basalt stele which provided J. F. Champollion (1790–1832) and others with the key to the Egyptian hieroglyphics. Discovered in 1799 by a party of French soldiers in the neighbourhood of Rosetta on the W. bank of the western mouth of the Nile, it records in Egyptian (both hieroglyphic and demotic) and in Greek a decree of the priests assembled at Memphis in favour of Ptolemy V Epiphanes, dated 27 March 196 BC. At the fall of *Alexandria in 1801 it passed into the hands of the British Government and is now in the British Museum. The interpretation of the demotic text was mainly the work of Thomas Young (1773–1829), who published his conclusions in 1815.

E. A. W. Budge, The Rosetta Stone and the Decipherment of Egyptian Hieroglyphs (1929), with Gk., Demotic, and Egyptian texts, Eng. trs., and full bibl. Popular booklet by C. Andrews, The Rosetta Stone [1981]. H.-J. Thissen in W. Helck and W. Westendorf (eds.), Lexikon der Ägyptologie, 5 (1984), cols. 310 f., s.v. 'Rosette, Stein von', with bibl.

Rosicrucians. The name assumed by certain secret societies similar to the *Freemasons, who venerated the emblems of the Rose (or perhaps the Dew, ros) and the Cross as twin symbols of the Lord's Resurrection and Redemption. Early in the 17th cent. two anonymous writings, the so-called 'Rosicrucian Manifestos' were published in Germany, the Fama Fraternitatis (1614) and the Confessio Fraternitatis (1615). They were followed in 1616 by the Chymische Hochzeit Christiani Rosenkreutz, now ascribed to the *Lutheran pastor J. V. Andreae (1586–1654), to whom the earlier works are also sometimes attributed. The ideas in these writings derive from the occult philosophy of the British mathematician and astrologer John Dee (1527–1608), as expressed in his Monas hieroglyphica (1654). The Chymische Hochzeit narrates the fabulous story of a certain Christian Rosenkreutz, who, having learned the wisdom of the Arabs in the E., became the founder of a secret society devoted to the study of the hidden things of nature and an esoteric and anti-catholic kind of Christianity, which acc. to the author was still in existence. The books were taken seriously and aroused a very wide interest. A flood of literature about the mysterious society followed, and the curiosity kindled was so great that even men like R. *Descartes and G. W. *Leibniz tried in vain to get into touch with its genuine members, while a number of new societies with alchemistic tendencies actually came into being under their influence. The best-known English representative of these tendencies was Robert Fludd (1574–1637), a London physician who spread Rosicrucian ideas in a number of medico-theosophical books. In the 18th cent. the name 'Gold- und Rosenkreuzer' ('Gold- and Rosicrucians') was adopted by a society started in Vienna which, spreading rapidly through Germany, Russia, and Poland, received only Freemasons of the master grade and generally followed masonic ideas. One of its most famous members was the Prussian minister, J. C. von Wöllner (1732–1800), through whom Rosicrucian ideas exercised a strong influence on Friedrich Wilhelm II of Prussia; but this society became extinct before the end of the 18th century.

The Fama Fraternititis, Confessio Fraternitatis, and Chymische Hochzeit, ed., with introd., by R. van Dülmen (Quellen und Forschungen zur Württembergischen Kirchengeschichte, 6; 1973). Fr. tr. of these works, with introd., by B. Gorceix, La Bible des Rose-Croix (1970). F. A. Yates, The Rosicrucian Enlightenment (1972), with Eng. tr. of the 'Manifestos', pp. 238–60 (and bibl. note, pp. 235–8). Most other lit. is uncritical, being mainly the work of authors of Rosicrucian leanings or profession, incl.: A. E. Waite, The Real History of the Rosicrucians (1887), with refs. to earlier Eng. lit.; id., The Brotherhood of the Rosy Cross (1924); W. E. Peuckert, Die Rosenkreutzer: Zur Geschichte einer Reformation (1928); and P. Arnold, Histoire des Rose-Croix et les origines de la Franc-Maçonnerie (1955); id., La Rose-Croix et ses rapports avec la Franc-Maçonnerie (1970). R. Kienast, Johann Valentin Andreae und die vier echten Rosenkreutzer-Schriften (Palaestra, 152; 1926); J. W. Montgomery, Cross and Crucible: John Valentin Andreae (1586–1654), Phoenix of the Theologians (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 55; 2 vols., Leiden, 1973), incl. photographic repr. of (1690) Eng. tr. of Chymische Hochzeit, vol. 2, pp. 288–486. A. C. Jones in HERE 10 (1918), pp. 856–8, s.v., with bibl.; H. Hermelink in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 150–6, s.v. 'Rosenkreuzer'.

Rosmini-Serbati, Antonio (1797–1855), Italian philosopher and founder of the 'Institute of Charity'. Born at Rovereto of a noble family, he studied at Padua and was ordained priest in 1821. With the aid of Pius VIII, *Gregory XVI, and *Pius IX, he undertook the renewal of Italian philosophy, beginning with the systematic study of St *Thomas Aquinas, a translation of whose Summa Theologiae he had attempted in 1819. Following a suggestion of the Bl. Maddalena di Canossa, the foundress of a society of Daughters of Charity, he established, in 1828, his congregation of the 'Fathers of Charity' (see ROSMINIANS), without, however, relaxing his efforts to construct a satisfying philosophical synthesis. His first and most important work, Nuovo saggio sull'origine delle idee, appeared in 1830 and was supplemented by Il rinnovamento della filosofia in Italia in 1836. Through his attack on *Probabilism in his Trattato della coscienza morale (1839) he incurred the hostility of the *Jesuits, and in the following years was repeatedly accused of *Jansenist and *pantheistic teaching. In 1848 he proposed ecclesiastical reforms in the Costituzione secondo la giusticia sociale, which, along with his Cinque piaghe della Chiesa, was condemned by the Congregation of the *Index in 1849. Rosmini submitted at once and retired to Stresa, where, a year before his death, he had the satisfaction of seeing his works, which had been denounced to the Index in their entirety, returned with a dimittantur, i.e. without censure. After his death, however, and esp. after the posthumous publication of his voluminous synthesis La teosofia (5 vols., 1859–74), the accusations against his teaching continued and a second examination of his works resulted in a mild condemnation of 40 propositions by *Leo XIII in 1887–8. The cause for the beatification was opened in 1994.

Rosmini's system, which is a form of Idealism, is founded on the leading idea of indeterminate being, innate in the human soul. If analysed this idea divides itself into a plurality of other ideas which are identical with those that are in the mind of God. Rosmini distinguished between degrees of being acc. to their completeness, God alone being absolutely complete. The being, however, which actualizes finite nature and which is the object of human intuition, is 'something of God', though not God Himself. Among the 40 condemned propositions were several on this metaphysical doctrine of the idea. Others related to the mystery of the *Trinity, which Rosmini thought capable of rational explanation, to *transubstantiation, and to *Original Sin, which he seems to have believed to be only a physical infection of the human flesh.

His influence, though negligible outside Italy, was considerable in his own country. A number of periodicals were founded after his death with the object of defending his teaching, and A. Manzoni, M. Minghetti, and G. Cavour were among those who came under his influence.

Edizione Nationale of Rosmini's Opere edite e inedite (49 vols., Rome, 1934–77); new crit. edn. by the Istituto di Studi Filosofici, Rome, and the Centro (Internazionale) di Studi Rosminiana, Stresa (ibid., 1979 ff.). Works tr. into Eng. incl. Eng. trs. by D. Cleary and T. Watson, of Cinque piage della Chiesa as The Five Wounds of the Church (Leominster, 1987); of Nuovo saggio sull'origine delle idee, vol. 2 (abridged) as The Origin of Thought (ibid., 1987) and vol. 3 as Certainty (Durham [1991]); of Principi della scienze morali as Principles of Ethics (Leominister, 1988); of Antropologia in servizio della scienza morale as Anthropology as an Aid to Moral Science (Durham [1991]); and Filosofia del Diretto, 1, as The Philosophy of Right (ibid. [1993 ff.]). For his correspondence, Epistolario completo (13 vols., Cassale Monferrato, 1887–94); Eng. tr. of A Selection of Ascetical Letters by J. Morris, Inst.Ch. (Loughborough, 1993 ff.). Lives incl. those by G. B. Pagani (2 vols., Turin, 1880–4; Eng. tr., 1907; and the anonymous Life which he pub. as La vita di Antonio Rosmini scritta da un sacerdote dell'Istituto della Carità, 2 vols., ibid., 1897, rev. by G. Rossi, 2 vols., Rovereto, 1959), G. S. Macwalter (vol. 1 only, London, 1883) and W. Lockhart (2 vols. [vol. 1 being a reissue of the previous item without the author's name], London, 1886), B. Brunello (Milan, 1941), and C. Leetham (London, 1957). A. Luciani [*John Paul I], L'Origine dell'anima umana secondo Antonio Rosmini (Rome diss., 1950; 2nd edn., Padua, 1958). F. Evain, Être et Personne chez Antonio Rosmini (Bibliothèque des Archives de Philosophie, NS 32; 1981). B. M. G. Reardon, Religion in the Age of Romanticism (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 156–75. Bibl. by C. Bergamaschi (2 vols., Milan, 1967). G. Bozzetti in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1359–71, s.v.; F. Évain in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 987–91, s.v.

Rosminians, the 'Fathers of Charity'. The congregation was founded by A. *Rosmini in 1828 and formally approved by *Gregory XVI in 1838. Its chief aim is the sanctification of its members, combined with such works of charity as they may be called upon to perform, e.g. teaching, preaching, popular missions, and literary activities. There are the two grades of presbyters and coadjutors, the presbyters taking a special fourth vow of obedience to the Pope; and persons living in the world may be affiliated to the Institute. The congregation, which was introduced into England by A. Gentili in 1835, now has houses in Italy, England, Ireland, America, Tanzania, New Zealand, and Venezuela. The women's branch of the congregation, the 'Sisters of Providence', was founded in 1831–2 and has houses in Italy, England, Tanzania, and Venezuela; they devote themselves esp. to the instruction of converts.

Modern edn. of Rosmini's Constitutions by A. Valle (Stresa, 1974). Eng. tr., from Latin MS, by D. Cleary and T. Watson (Durham [1989]). C. J. Emery, IC, The Rosminians (1960). C. R. Leetham, IC, in NCE 12 (1967), p. 679, s.v.; C. Riva, IC, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 133–6, s.v. 'Istituto della Carità'; A. Franchi, ibid.

7 (1983), cols. 1091–3, s.v. 'Provvidenza (Rosminiane), Suore della'. See also Lives of ROSMINI-SERBATI, A., cited s.v.

Rossetti, Christina Georgina (1830–94), poetess. She was a younger sister of M. F. *Rossetti and D. G. *Rossetti, and closely associated with the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. The first of her poems to be published (some had been privately printed earlier) appeared in the Germ (1850), the organ of the Brotherhood, under the pseudonym of 'Ellen Alleyne'. Marked by great beauty and care in the selection of words and pervaded by a deep melancholy (not, as is sometimes asserted, morbidity), they are the expression of a strong Christian faith. Besides those dealing with definitely religious subjects, many give expression to the agonies that come from disappointed love. She also wrote a number of religious books, among them Seek and Find (1879) and Time Flies, a Reading Diary (1885). Her hymns include 'What are these that glow from afar?' and the well-known carol 'In the bleak mid-winter'.

Poetical Works ed. with memoir and notes by W. M. Rossetti, brother (London, 1904; memoir, pp. xlv–lxxi); Variorum edn. of Poems by R. W. Crump (3 vols., Baton Rouge, La., and London [1979–90]). Family Letters, ed. W. M. Rossetti (London, 1908). Further letters in J. C. Troxell (ed.), Three Rossettis: Unpublished Letters to and from Dante Gabriel, Christina, William (Cambridge, Mass., 1937), esp. pp. 138–80, and in L. M. Packer (ed.), The Rossetti Macmillan Letters: Some 133 Unpublished Letters written to Alexander Macmillan, F. S. Ellis, and Others, by Dante Gabriel, Christina, and William Michael Rossetti, 1861 1889 (Berkeley, Calif., and Cambridge, 1963). Brief memoir by E. A. Proctor (London, 1895); much fuller Life by M. Bell (ibid., 1898). Modern studies by L. M. Packer (Berkeley, Calif., and Cambridge, 1963) and [E.] G. Battiscombe (London, 1981). D. A. Kent (ed.), The Achievement of Christina Rossetti (1987). R. Garnett in DNB 49 (1897), pp. 282–4. Further bibl. by W. E. Fredeman in NCBEL 3 (1969), cols. 496–500. See also bibl. to following entry.

Rossetti, Dante Gabriel (1828–82), English Pre-Raphaelite poet and painter. He was for a short time a pupil of Ford Madox Brown, and with J. E. Millais, Holman *Hunt, and T. Woolner founded the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood in 1848. In 1860 he married Elizabeth Siddal, whose death in 1862 marked a turning-point in his life. The principal influence of Rossetti's early years was *Dante, whom he began to translate in 1845. In his own poetry of this period Christian themes abound, and his ideal of womanhood is expressed by the BVM and Beatrix. Among his poems of this period are 'Ave', a beautiful prayer to the Blessed Virgin, the well-known 'The Blessed Damozel' (1847) with its Dantesque conception of heaven, and the weird 'Sister Helen' (1850–1), characteristic of his love for mystery and magic. Of his paintings The Girlhood of Mary Virgin (1849), and Ecce Ancilla Domini (1850), both in the Tate Gallery, London, recall something of the spiritual beauty of medieval pictures, but this simplicity is lacking in most of his work, including the triptych The Seed of David in *Llandaff Cathedral and Beata Beatrix (*c.*1863–70; Tate Gallery, London). In the second period, from *c.*1863 to his death, religious motives disappear, and the inherent sensuality of his poetry and art, which now came more and more to the fore, brought upon him the charge of being a 'fleshly poet'. The eroticism of these years was coupled with a pessimistic outlook on life and an intensified interest in its morbid aspects which comes out, e.g., in his poem 'Rose Mary'.

Collected Works [prose and poetry], ed. W. M. Rossetti, brother (2 vols., London, 1886; enlarged edn., 1911); Family Letters, ed. id. (2 vols., ibid., 1895), with memoir as vol. 1. Further material in id. (ed.), Præraphaelite Diaries and Letters (1900), esp. pp. 3–47 ('Some Early Correspondence of Dante Gabriel Rossetti'), and id., Rossetti Family Papers, 1862 to 1870 (1903). Modern edn. of Letters by O. Doughty and J. R. Wahl (5 vols., Oxford, 1965 ff.). L. M. Packer (ed.), The Rossetti–Macmillan Letters: Some 133 Unpublished Letters written to Alexander Macmillan, F. S. Ellis, and Others, by Dante Gabriel, Christina, and William Michael Rossetti, 1861–1889 (Berkeley, Calif., and Cambridge, 1963). Correspondence of D. G. Rossetti and J. Morris, ed. J. Bryson and J. C. Troxell (Oxford, 1976). W. M. Rossetti, Dante Gabriel Rossetti as Designer and Painter (1889). W. Sharp, Dante Gabriel Rossetti: A Record and a Study (1882); T. H. Caine, Recollections of Dante Gabriel Rossetti (1882; fuller edn., 1928). Later general studies incl. those of A. C. Benson ('English Men of Letters', 1904), E. Waugh (London, 1928), R. L. Mégroz (ibid., 1928), O. Doughty, A Victorian Romantic (London, 1949; 2nd edn., 1960), H. R. Angeli (niece; ibid., 1949), and R. G. Grylls (ibid., 1946). [L.] J. Rees, The Poetry of Dante Gabriel Rossetti: Modes of Self-Expression (Cambridge, 1981); D. G. Riede, Dante Gabriel Rossetti and the Limits of Victorian Vision (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1983). Works dealing specifically with his art, incl. reproductions, by H. C. Marillier (London, 1899) and V. Surtees, The Paintings and Drawings of Dante Gabriel Rossetti (1828–1882): A Catalogue raisonné (2 vols., incl. plates, Oxford, 1971). J. Savarit, Tendances mystiques et ésotériques chez Dante-Gabriel Rossetti (1961). G. H. Fleming, Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood (1967). W. E. Fredeman, Pre-Raphaelitism: A Bibliocritical Study (Cambridge, Mass., 1965), pp. 90–132; id. in NCBEL 3 (1969), cols. 490–96.

Rossetti, Maria Francesca (1827–76), Anglican religious. The eldest of the Rossetti family, she was, in the opinion of her agnostic brother William (W. M.), 'more warmly and spontaneously devotional than any person I have ever known'. Feeling herself free from domestic responsibilities on his marriage in 1874, she joined the sisterhood of All Saints', Margaret Street, London, but died shortly afterwards. In 1871 she published A Shadow of Dante.

The principal sources are W. M. Rossetti's Lives of C. G. and D. G. Rossetti, cited s.vv. R. D. Waller, The Rossetti Family, 1824–1854 (Manchester, 1932), pp. 171–80. See also other works cited in the two previous entries.

Rosvitha. See HROSVIT.

Rosy Sequence. A part of the hymn '*Jesu, dulcis memoria' (q.v.), used as a sequence for the Feast of the *Name of Jesus in the *Sarum Gradual. A form of the hymn in 50 stanzas was formerly used as a kind of *rosary in five decades.

Rota Romana. The normal RC appeal tribunal for judging cases brought before the *Holy See. It dates from the reorganization of the Papal administration by *John XXII in 1331 and derives from the audientia sacri palatii and other judicial arrangements employed to decide causes by the Papacy since the 12th cent. Its name appears to derive from the circular table used by the judges at *Avignon. Its power was at a maximum in the 15th and 16th cents., but under Pope *Gregory XVI its duties were restricted, and with the cessation of the temporal power of the Papacy in 1870 they almost ended altogether. In its present form it was created by *Pius X in 1908 by the Apostolic Constitution 'Sapienti Consilio'; since then it has been reorganized a number of times, notable changes being introduced with the new Norms of 18 Apr. 1994. Basically it is the court of appeal for all ecclesiastical cases first heard in the diocesan and other courts and then coming under the Roman *Curia, unless they are reserved for others. It also deals with ecclesiastical appeal cases in the *Vatican City state. In addition it judges at first instance cases reserved to the Holy See or set aside by the Pope. The judges, who are known as auditors (auditores) and form a college, must be priests who are at least doctors in civil and canon law. The President is called the 'Dean' and is primus inter pares. It is prob. best known as the court to which certain *nullity of marriage cases are referred.

Its decisions for various periods from the mid-14th cent. onwards survive in MSS and pr. collections; cf. J. H. Baker, 'Dr. Thomas Fastolf and the History of Law Reporting', Cambridge Law Journal, 45 (1986), pp. 84–96. Modern decisions are reported, until recently after an interval of 10 years now of 5 years, in S. Romanae Rotae Decisiones seu Sententiae (Rome, 1912 ff.). The Norms issued by *John Paul II in 1994 are pr. in AAS 86 (1994), pp. 508–40; the Rota is also governed by CIC (1983), cans. 1405 and 1443–4. D. Bernini, Il tribunale della S. Rota Romana (1717). E. Schneider, Die römische Rota nach geltendem Recht auf geschichtlicher Grundlage, 1. Die Verfassung der Rota (all pub. Görres-Gesellschaft. Veröffentlichungen der Sektion für Rechts- und Sozialwissenschaft, 22; 1914), with bibl. to date. E. Cerchiari, Capellani Papae et Apostolicae Sedis Auditores Causarum Sacri Palatii Apostolici seu Sacra Romana Rota ab Origine ad diem usque 20 Septembris 1870: Relatio historica-juridica (4 vols., Rome, 1919–21). E. Schneider, 'Über den Ursprung und die Bedeutung des Namens Rota als Bezeichnung für den obersten päpstlichen Gerichtshof', RQ 41 (1933), pp. 29–43, with further refs. C. Lefebvre in DDC 7 (1965), cols. 742–71, s.v. 'Rote Romaine (Tribunal de la Sainte)', with bibl.; E. A. Fusin in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 683–5, s.v. See also works cited s.v. CURIA.

Rothe, Richard (1799–1867), *Lutheran theologian. He taught successively at *Wittenberg (from 1828), Bonn (from 1849), and Heidelberg (from 1854). A disciple of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and J. A. W. *Neander, he combined a devout and even pietistic spirit with a keenly critical and historical sense. He emphasized the inseparable relation between religion and morals in his great work Theologische Ethik (3 vols., 1845–8; 2nd edn., 5 vols., 1867–71). He also wrote a book on the beginnings of the Christian Church (1837). He is best known in Britain by his Stille Stunden (1872), a collection of devotional essays and reflections translated under the title Still Hours (1886).

Several treatises, based on Rothe's unpub. papers, were issued posthumously. There is a brief sketch by J. Macpherson prefixed to Rothe's Still Hours (Eng. tr. by J. T. Stoddart, 1886), pp. 9–41. Studies on Rothe incl. W. Hoenig, Richard Rothe (Berlin, 1898); A. Hausrath, Richard Rothe und seine Freunde (2 vols., 1902–6); and H. J. Birkner, Spekulation und Heilsgeschichte: Die Geschichtsauffassung Richard Rothes (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Zehnte Reihe, 17; 1959). A. E. F. Sieffert in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 169–78; E. Schott in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 1197–9, s.v.

Rothmann, Bernt (or Bernhard) (*c.*1495–*c.*1535), German *Anabaptist preacher and theologian. He was educated by the *Brethren of the Common Life and in 1529 appointed chaplain of St Maurice's church in Warendorf near Münster. He visited *Wittenberg and Strasbourg, where he met P. *Melanchthon and W. *Capito in 1531. On his return he supported the cause of the Reformation, and in the autumn of 1531 he debated the doctrine of *Purgatory with Johannes à Daventria, Guardian of the *Minorites in Hamm. He was then silenced by his bishop, but he had the support of the town Council and guilds of Münster and an Imperial mandate gave him safety and freedom of movement. In Jan. 1532 he moved into Münster and was given the pulpit of the large church of St Lambert. In the same year he published his confession of faith which was *Lutheran in most respects but *Zwinglian in regard to the Sacraments. In a public disputation in Münster in Aug. 1532 he was opposed by Lutherans from *Marburg; at this he won the continued support of the civic officials as well as the people of Münster and he and his fellow ministers were able to occupy the leading churches. His position was strengthened by the arrival of the 'Wassenberg preachers', a group of six clerics from Wassenberg in Jülich, who were also *Sacramentarian in their view of the Eucharist. Rothmann now replied to the Marburg theologians and wrote his Bekenntnisse van beyden Sacramenten (1533). This confession showed that Rothmann and his circle had not only rejected M. *Luther but had moved beyond U. *Zwingli to repudiate *Infant Baptism. In Jan. 1534 they were rebaptized by followers of Melchior *Hoffmann and Münster became an Anabaptist city-state. Under the fanatical leadership of John of Leiden (d. 1536), and while the city was under siege, community of goods and polygamy were established. Rothmann's role in this is uncertain, but he became 'court preacher' and wrote Restitution rechter und gesunder christlicher Lehre and Bericht von der Wrake (both 1534) in an attempt to justify the 'New Jerusalem' of Münster. The town fell to the prince-bishop and his allies in June 1535; many of the Anabaptists were killed and their leaders tried and executed, but the fate of Rothmann is not known.

Die Schriften Bernhard Rothmanns, ed. R. Stupperich (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission Westfalens, 32: Die Schriften der Münsterischen Täufer und ihrer Gegner, 1; 1970), with introd. See also bibl. to ANABAPTISTS.

Rousseau, Jean-Jacques (1712–78), French author. He was the son of a French refugee family at Geneva, and, though brought up a Calvinist, became a Catholic in 1728 through the influence of Mme de Warens, his benefactress and later his mistress, herself a convert from Protestant Pietism. She had a large share in his religious formation, combining *Deistic beliefs, which excluded doctrines such as Hell and Original Sin, with a kind of *Quietist sentimentalism. During the years spent with her (1731–40), Rousseau completed his sketchy education by omnivorous reading, including the works of R. *Descartes, G. W. *Leibniz, J. *Locke, B. *Pascal, and others. In 1741 he went to Paris, where he met Thérèse Levasseur, a servant girl, by whom he had five children whom he placed in a foundlings' hospital. Through D. *Diderot he was introduced to the circle of the *Encyclopaedists, for whom he wrote several contributions, all but one of them on musical subjects. In 1750 he published his Discours sur les sciences et les arts, a prize essay for Dijon Academy, in which he defended the thesis that technical progress and material goods corrupt human morals. In 1754 he returned to Geneva and once more became a Calvinist, and in the same year wrote his Discours sur l'origine et les fondements de l'inégalité parmi les hommes. Inspired by H. *Grotius, S. *Pufendorf, and others, he treated the subject regardless of historical reality, and, on the gratuitous assumption that the primitive man was a free and happy being living in acc. with his instincts, without virtue or vice, alleged that human inequalities arose from the undue development of his social and proprietary instincts. In 1756 Rousseau settled near Montmorency, where he wrote the works which made him world-famous. In Julie, ou La Nouvelle Héloïse (1761), a passionate love story, he condemned a society which for the sake of convention divorced love from marriage, and put forward a defence of a natural religion based on an undogmatic personal interpretation of the Gospels which, he maintained, is necessary for morality. In Émile, ou de l'Éducation (1762) he developed a Utopian programme of an education far from the corrupting influence of society and in acc. with nature. In the famous chapter entitled 'La Profession de foi du vicaire savoyard' he summed up his religious ideas. He advocated a Deism which, although similar to that of the Philosophes in affirming belief in the existence of God, the soul, and a future life, found its ultimate justification in the individual's sense of a personal relationship with God through the conscience, of which He is the source and inspiration. Du contrat social (1762) set out his theory of the just state, resting on the general will of the people, the expression of which are the laws. This too, contained a chapter on religion, 'De la religion civile', in which 'civic religion' was distinguished from natural religion. The articles of this civic religion, which are fixed and enforced by the state, bear on the same subjects as natural religion, forbid all dogmatic intolerance, and admit only those religions which do not claim to possess the absolute truth. Émile, put on the *Index in 1762, and Du contrat social were condemned in France and at Geneva, and Rousseau fled first to Neuchâtel, then to an island in the Canton of Berne, and, in 1766–7, he was the guest of D. *Hume in England. But, suffering from persecution mania, he went back to France, where he married Thérèse Levasseur 'before nature' in 1768, and in 1772 completed his Confessions, with their curious mixture of vanity and self-accusation.

After his death Rousseau became one of the most powerful influences in Europe. In France his ideas were taken up by the Revolution, in Germany by the 'Storm and Stress' movement. His religious impact was the deeper as, unlike *Voltaire, he offered man a substitute for revealed religion which was not only doctrinally simple and unelaborate in its moral prescriptions, but also addressed to his emotional as well as his intellectual needs. It has sometimes been asserted that he served Christianity by propagating its fundamental truths among his unbelieving contemporaries. A more just estimate might point out that, by eliminating the idea of original sin and replacing the need for grace by belief in the complete adequacy of reason, conscience, and free-will, he removed the foundations of sound religion and became a forerunner of humanistic liberalism.

Many edns. of his collected works, incl. that of V. D. Musset-Pathay (24 vols., Paris, 1823–6). Convenient edn. by B. Gagnebin, M. Raymond, and others (Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, 4 vols., 1959–69), but this does not incl. correspondence. Religious Writings, ed. R. Grimsley (Oxford, 1970). Correspondance complète, ed. R. A. Leigh (vols. 1–14, Geneva, 1965–71; 15–24, Thorpe Mandeville, Banbury, 1972–5; 25–53, Oxford, 1976–97). There have been innumerable edns. of individual works; useful edns. of his Political Writings, with full introd. and notes in Eng., by C. E. Vaughan (2 vols., Cambridge, 1915). His more important works were tr. into Eng. soon after publication; there have been many reprs. and new trs., incl. that of The Social Contract by M. Cranston (Penguin Classics, 1968), and also, with The Discourses, by G. D. H. Cole (Everyman's Library, 660 [1913]); of Émile by B. Foxley (ibid. [1911]); of his Confessions by J. M. Cohen (Penguin Classics, 1953). The numerous studies incl. those of J. Morley (2 vols., London, 1873) and J. H. Broome (ibid., 1963); also M. Cranston, Jean-Jacques: The Early Life and Work of Jean-Jacques Rousseau 1712–1754 (1983); id., The Noble Savage: Jean-Jacques Rousseau 1754–1762 (1991). A. Schinz, La Pensée de Jean-Jacques Rousseau (2 vols., Northampton, Mass., 1929). R. Derathé, Jean-Jacques Rousseau et la science politique de son temps (1950). S. Baud-Bovy and others, Jean-Jacques Rousseau (Université Ouvrière et Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Genève, Neuchâtel, 1962). Études sur le Contrat social de Jean-Jacques Rousseau: Actes des journées d'étude organisées à Dijon pour la commémoration du 200e anniversaire du Contrat social (Publications de l'Université de Dijon, 30; 1964). R. A. Leigh (ed.), Rousseau after Two Hundred Years: Proceedings of the Cambridge Bicentennial Colloquium (Cambridge, 1982). P. M. Masson, La Religion de J.-J. Rousseau (3 vols., 1916); R. Derathé, Le Rationalisme de J.-J. Rousseau (1948); J. F. Thomas, Le Pélagianisme de J.-J. Rousseau (1956); R. Grimsley, Rousseau and the Religious Quest (Oxford, 1968). J. Starobinski, Jean-Jacques Rousseau: La transparence et l'obstacle (1957; 2nd edn., 1971); R. Grimsley, Jean-Jacques Rousseau: A Study in Self-awareness (Cardiff, 1961). H. Roddier, J.-J. Rousseau en Angleterre au XVIIIe siècle (Études de Littérature étrangère et comparée [1950]). J.-A. E. McEachern, Bibliography of the Writings of Jean Jacques Rousseau to 1800 (Oxford, 1989 ff.). Annales de la Société Jean-Jacques Rousseau (Geneva, 1905 ff.).

Routh, Martin Joseph (1755–1854), patristic scholar and president of Magdalen College, Oxford. A strong supporter of the traditional High Church position in Anglican theology, he was much respected and revered by the *Tractarians, J. H. *Newman in dedicating to him his Lectures on the Prophetical Office of the Church (1837) declaring that he had 'been reserved to report to a forgetful generation the theology of their fathers'. It was he who advised S. *Seabury, when sent to Europe to inaugurate an episcopal succession in the American (Anglican) Church, to seek it from the Scottish Episcopal Church.

Elected a demy at Magdalen College in 1771, he was ordained deacon in 1777, and, after holding College appointments, was elected president in 1791 (in succession to G. *Horne), to hold the office for 63 years. His Reliquiae Sacrae, an edition of scattered pre-Nicene patristic texts first announced in 1788, was published in 4 vols., Oxford, 1814–1818; a complete revision ('ed. altera'), with an additional volume, was issued in 5 vols., 1846–8. Routh also published Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Opuscula Praecipua Quaedam (2 vols., 1832).

Life by R. D. Middleton (London, 1938). J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men, 1 (1888), pp. 1–115. G. C. Boase in DNB 49 (1897), pp. 324–7.

Rowites. The disciples of J. McLeod *Campbell, who was in charge of the parish of Row, near Cardross, Dumbarton, from 1825 to 1830. They are also known as 'Campbellites'.

Rowntree, Joseph (1836–1925), *Quaker philanthropist and social reformer. Educated at Bootham School, *York, he entered the grocery business established by his father in the city in 1822, and eventually, on the death of his elder brother, Henry Isaac Rowntree, in 1883, became head of the cocoa business of Rowntree & Co. He was a pioneer in the movement for securing for workpeople reasonable hours and conditions of labour, higher wages, and provision against old age and unemployment. He established three trusts to carry some of his ideals into effect and in 1904 founded the model village of New Earswick. He was an ardent *temperance reformer, did much to promote adult education, esp. in the Society of Friends, and took a prominent part in the civic life of York.

A. Vernon, A Quaker Business Man: The Life of Joseph Rowntree 1836–1925 (1958). A. E. Watkin in DNB, 1922–1930 (1937), pp. 731 f., s.v.

Royal Chapels. See CHAPEL ROYAL.

Royal Declaration. See DECLARATION OF THE SOVEREIGN.

Royal School of Church Music (RSCM). An organization founded in 1927 as the School of English Church Music, and granted its present title in 1945. Till his death in 1947 its Director was Sydney H. Nicholson (b. 1875; organist of *Westminster Abbey, 1918–27). Its work has consisted in advice to choirs affiliated to the School, provision of suitable music, and the organization of choral festivals. In 1929 the College of St Nicholas was founded at Chislehurst, London, to provide courses for organists, choristers, clergy, and ordinands, with both resident and non-resident students. In 1945 the work, interrupted by the War since 1939, was resumed at *Canterbury, and in 1954 was removed to Addington Palace (an archiepiscopal residence 1807–96) near Croydon, London.

Royal Supremacy. See ESTABLISHMENT, para. 2.

Rubric, Black. See BLACK RUBRIC.

Rubric, Ornaments. See ORNAMENTS RUBRIC.

rubrics. Ritual or ceremonial directions, printed at the beginning of service-books, or in the course of the text. The word originated from the fact that in medieval books they were written in red (Lat. ruber), to distinguish them from the text of the services.

Rucherat (or Ruchrat), John. See JOHN OF WESEL.

Rufinus, Tyrannius or Turranius (*c.*345–411), monk, historian, and translator. Born near *Aquileia in N. Italy, he went to a school in Rome, where he became friends with St *Jerome. About 373 he went to Egypt; here he met *Melania the Elder and visited the monks of the desert. He also studied for several years in *Alexandria under *Didymus the Blind, and was deeply influenced by his *Origenism. In 381 he was in Jerusalem. With Melania he founded a *double monastery on the Mount of *Olives. After the outbreak of the controversy about the teaching of *Origen, he returned to Italy in 397.

Though he was also an original writer, Rufinus is mainly important as a translator of Greek theological works into Latin at a time when knowledge of Greek was declining in the W. His free translation of Origen's 'De Principiis', the only complete text now surviving, was intended to vindicate Origen's orthodoxy, and involved Rufinus in bitter controversy with his former friend, St Jerome, who criticized the tendentious character of his rendering. He also translated some of Origen's scriptural commentaries, the 'Sentences' of Sextus (which he attributed to Pope *Sixtus II), the '*Clementine Recognitions', some works of *Basil and *Gregory of Nazianzus, the 'Historia Monachorum' (long thought to be his own original work) and, in a free rendering, the 'Ecclesiastical History' of *Eusebius, with two additional books (possibly based on the lost history of *Gelasius of Caesarea), bringing the narrative up to the death of the Emp. *Theodosius I (395). His commentary on the *Apostles' Creed, which is partly based on the 'Catechetical Discourses' of St *Cyril of Jerusalem, gives the earliest continuous Latin text of the 4th-cent. form of the creed, as used at Aquileia and Rome. At the invitation of *Paulinus of Nola, he wrote a commentary on the Benedictions of the Twelve Patriarchs in Gen. 49 which, though not original, is of some importance in the history of exegesis.

D. *Vallarsi projected a collected edn. in 2 vols., fol., but only vol. 1, containing Rufinus' independent works, appeared (Verona, 1745); this is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 21. Works ed. M. Simonetti (CCSL 20; 1961). The 'De Benedictionibus' is repr., with Fr. tr. by H. Rochais and P. Antin and introd. by M. Simonetti (SC 140; 1968). Rufinus' Historia Monachorum, ed. E. Schulz-Flügel (Patristische Texte und Studien, 34; 1990). Rufinus' other trs. are to be sought in the edns. of their corresponding Gk. authors. Eng. tr. of his 'Commentary on the Apostles' Creed', with crit. introd. and notes, by J. N. D. Kelly (ACW 20; 1955). The most comprehensive study is F. X. Murphy, CSSR, Rufinus of Aquileia, 345–411 (Catholic University of America. Studies in Mediaeval History, NS 6; 1945). Id., 'Rufinus of Aquileia and Paulinus of Nola', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 2 (1956), pp. 79–91. R. *Reitzenstein, Historia Monachorum [by Rufinus] und Historia Lausiaca [by *Palladius] (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, NF 7; 1916). J. E. L. Oulton, 'Rufinus's Translation of the Church History of Eusebius', JTS 30 (1928–9), pp. 150–74; F. Thelamon, Païens et Chrétiennes au IVᵉ Siècle: L'apport de l'"Histoire ecclésiastique" de Rufin d'Aquilée (Études Augustiniennes, 1981); T. Christensen, Rufinus of Aquileia and the Historia Ecclesiastica, Lib. VIII–IX, of Eusebius (Kongelige Danske Videnskabernes Selskab, Historisk-filosofiske Meddelelser, 58; 1989). H. Chadwick, 'Rufinus and the Tura Papyrus of Origen's Commentary on Romans', JTS NS 10 (1959), pp. 10–42; C. P. H. Bammel, Der Römerbrieftext des Rufin und seine Origenes-Übersetzung (Vetus Latina. Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, 10; 1985). Id., 'The Last Ten Years of Rufinus' Life and the Date of his Move South from Aquileia', JTS NS 28 (1977), pp. 372–429. CPL (3rd edn., 1991), pp. 63–8 (nos. 195–201). J. Gribomont, OSB, in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 247–54. M. Simonetti in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 702–4, s.v.; F. Thelamon in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 1107–17, s.v. 'Rufin d'Aquilée'.

Rufinus (fl. 399–401?), commonly called the Syrian, author of a Liber de Fide which is described in the only known surviving MS (St Petersburg, Public Library MS Q. v. I. 6) as the work of Rufinus, priest of the province of Palestine. This work, formerly ascribed to Tyrannius *Rufinus, is marked by hostility to *Arianism, to *Origen, and to the doctrine of *Original Sin; these features have led to the identification of the author with the Rufinus natione Syrus, said by *Marius Mercator to have corrupted the theology of *Pelagius at Rome during the pontificate of Anastasius (399–401), and with the deceased priest mentioned by *Celestius in his trial in *Carthage in 411. Further attempts to clarify Rufinus' identity remain controversial.

Editio princeps of the Liber de Fide by J. *Sirmond, SJ, Paris, 1650. Modern edn., with Eng. tr., by M. W. Miller (Catholic University of America Patristic Studies, 96; Washington, DC, 1964). B. *Altaner, 'Der Liber de Fide, ein Werk des Pelagianers Rufinus des "Syrers" ', TQ 130 (1950), pp. 432–49; H.-I. Marrou, 'Les attaches orientales de Pélagianisme', Comptes Rendus des Séances de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, 1968 (1968), pp. 459–72; G. Bonner, 'Rufinus of Syria and African Pelagianism', Augustinian Studies, 1 (1970), pp. 31–47; id., Augustine and Modern Research on Pelagianism (St Augustine Lecture, 1970; Villanova, Pa., 1972), esp. pp. 19–31, repr. in id., God's Decree and Man's Destiny (1987), nos. 10 and 11; W. Dunphy, 'Rufinus the Syrian's "Books" ', Augustinianum, 23 (1983), pp. 523–9. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 67 f. (no. 200).

Ruinart, Thierry (1657–1709), *Maurist scholar. From 1674 he was a monk of St-Rémi at *Reims and from 1682 an assistant to J. *Mabillon at *St-Germain-des-Prés. The most celebrated of his writings is his Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (1689), a collection to which he admitted only those acta which seemed to him authentic, though some of its contents are no longer regarded as genuine. Among his other works were an edition of St *Gregory of Tours (1699) and a life of Mabillon (1709).

V. Thuiller, OSB (ed.), Ouvrages posthumes de D. Jean Mabillon et de D. Thierri Ruinart (3 vols., Paris, 1724; repr. Farnborough, 1967), vol. 2, pp. 399–554, and vol. 3. His Journal for 1698–9 is pr. in A.-M.-P. Ingold, Histoire de l'édition bénédictine de saint Augustin (Documents pour servir à l'histoire religieuse des XVII^{e} et XVIII^{e} siècles, 1903), pp. 155–93. Modern edn. of his Acta Martyrum (Ratisbon, 1859). H. Jadart, Dom Thierry Ruinart (1657–1709): Notice suivie de documents inédits sur sa famille, sa vie, ses œuvres, ses relations avec D. Mabillon (1886). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 163–82, s.v., with bibl.; J. Daoust in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 704 f., s.v.

Rule, Golden. See GOLDEN RULE.

Rule of Faith (Regula Fidei). One of the names used to describe outline statements of Christian belief which circulated in the 2nd-cent. Church and were designed to make clear the essential contents of the Christian faith, to serve as guides in the exegesis of Scripture (e.g. *Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1. 9. 4), and to distinguish the orthodox tradition from traditions to which heretics appealed. Alternative names were the 'rule of truth', the 'law of faith' or the 'norm (κανών) of truth'. Unlike *creeds, which came later, these formularies varied in wording, though it was claimed that they faithfully reflected NT teaching, and did not differ from one another in their essential content. This content was held to have descended unchanged from apostolic times, in contrast to the spurious traditions of the heretics, which were taken to be later developments and mutually incompatible.

Gal. 6: 16 is the biblical origin of this terminology. Other patristic instances include Irenaeus, Demonstration, 3 and 6, and Tertullian, De Pud. 8. 15, De Virg. Vel. 1. 4. D. van den Eynde, Les Normes de l'Enseignement Chrétien dans la littérature patristique des trois premiers siècles (1933), pp. 281–313, with full refs. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), pp. 76–88. G. H. Tavard, Holy Writ or Holy Church [1959], pp. 3–11. J. Quasten in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 1102 f., s.v. 'Regula Fidei'.

Rule of St Benedict. See BENEDICT, RULE OF ST.

ruler. A name formerly applied to those who presided in cathedrals over the singing in the choir, esp. over the psalms. The office, which goes back to medieval times, when the rulers frequently wore copes, was revived in a few places in the C of E in the 19th cent.

Rumania, Christianity in. See ROMANIA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Rupert of Deutz (*c.*1075–1129 or 1130), monastic theologian. At an early age he entered the Abbey of St Laurent in Liège. In 1092 he went into exile for three years with his abbot, who was expelled during the troubles of the *Investiture Controversy. Rupert himself was not made priest until 1106, because he refused to accept ordination from a bishop who was excommunicated. His first work, 'Liber de divinis officiis' (*c.*1111), was concerned to expound the ecclesiastical year; it made much use of *allegory. In it he used language about the Real Presence in the Eucharist which provoked a fatherly rebuke from *William of St-Thierry, who accused him of holding the doctrine later known as *Impanation. There followed long Homilies on the Gospel of St John. Then came the 'De Trinitate' in 42 books. This work is in effect concerned with the history of salvation. It is based on an analysis of the historical books of the Bible. In 1116 a fellow monk returned from a period of study under *Anselm of Laon and proclaimed that he had taught that God willed that evil should happen. Rupert was scandalized and wrote a rejoinder, 'De voluntate Dei', which created a storm. Rupert had to retire to the monastery of Siegburg in the Rhineland. From here he was summoned to Liège in 1117 for examination of his thesis. He emerged unscathed and wrote his treatise 'De omnipotentia Dei'. At Siegburg he came to the notice of the Abp. of Cologne, who secured his election as abbot of Deutz in 1120. He continued his writing and produced a Commentary on the Twelve Minor Prophets, the 'De victoria Verbi Dei', and a Commentary on the Song of Songs in which he interprets the bride as the BVM, providing an early example of this interpretation. He also engaged in controversy, defending the historical Benedictine way of life against the new orders (*Cistercians and *Canons Regular). Rupert's work demonstrates the interaction between the older monastic theology and the nascent scholastic way of thinking. When his writings were printed in the 16th cent., the Reformers sought to find in them support for their own doctrines, esp. on the Eucharist.

Opera Omnia, ed. M. Pleunich (4 vols. bound in 2, Venice, 1748–51), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 167–170. Crit. edns. by R. Haacke, OSB, of his Liber de divinis officiis (CCCM 7; 1967); of his Commentary on St John's Gospel (ibid. 9; 1969); of De Sancta Trinitate et operibus eius (ibid. 21–4; 1971–2); of his Commentary on the Song of Songs (ibid. 26; 1974); of De gloria et honore filii hominis super Mattheum (ibid. 29; 1979); and of De victoria Verbi Dei (MGH, Quellen zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, 5; 1970), and by P. Dinter of his Vita Heriberti [Abp. of Cologne, 999–1021] (Veröffentlichungen des Historischen Vereins für den Niederrhein, 13; 1976). Part III of De Trinitate also ed., with Fr. tr., by É. de Solms, OSB, and useful introd. and notes by J. Gribomont, OSB (Les Œuvres du Saint-Esprit, 1–2; SC 131 and 165; 1967–70). The Chronicon Sancti Laurentii Leodiensis is no longer attributed to Rupert; cf. H. Silvestre, Le Chronicon Sancti Laurentii Leodiensis dit de Rupert de Deutz: Étude critique (Université de Louvain. Recueil de Travaux d'histoire et de philosophie, 3rd ser. 43; 1952). W. Beinert, Die Kirche—Gottes Heil in der Welt: Die Lehre von der Kirche nach den Schriften des Rupert von Deutz, Honorius Augustodunensis und Gerhoch von Reichersberg (BGPM, NF 13; 1973), with introd. on his life and works, pp. 12–37. M. L. Arduini, Ruperto di Deutz e la Controversia tra Cristiani ed Ebrei nel Secolo XII, with text of 'Anulus seu dialogus inter Christianum et Iudaeum', ed. R. Haacke, OSB (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, 119–21; 1979); id., Rupert von Deutz (1076–1129) und der 'Status Christianitatis' seiner Zeit (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 25; 1987), and other works of this author. J. H. van Engen, Rupert of Deutz (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1983]). Id. in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 1126–33, s.v. 'Rupert (1) de Deutz'.

rural dean. In the C of E, the head of a group of parishes in a given area ('rural deanery'). He is appointed by the bishop of the diocese, usually, but not necessarily, from among the beneficed clergy of the deanery, and may be removed by the bishop at any time. The boundaries of a rural deanery can, if necessary, be modified under the Archdeaconries and Rural Deaneries Act 1874.

The office is ancient and formerly the duties were important, but they were gradually absorbed by the *archdeacons. The office was revived in 1836; and since the later 19th cent. rural deans have again come to play a considerable part in the life of the diocese, e.g. as a channel of communication between the smaller parishes and the bishop. The rural dean is president of the ruridecanal chapter, i.e. the incumbents and clergy licensed under seal in the deanery, and co-chairman of the deanery synods established by the *Synodical Government Measure 1969.

In the RC Church rural deans are technically known as 'vicars forane'. See DEAN.

W. Dansey, Horae Decanicae Rurales (2 vols., London, 1835). J. B. Hughes, Deans Rural: The History of their Office and Duties (rev. edn., 1889). F. Makower, Die Verfassung der Kirche von England (1894), pp. 334–9; Eng. tr. (1895), pp. 321–6. A. H. Thompson, 'Diocesan Organization in the Middle Ages. Archdeacons and Rural Deans', Proceedings of the British Academy, 29 (1943), pp. 153–94, esp. pp. 184–94. E. W. Watson in DECH, pp. 527–9, s.v.

Ruskin, John (1819–1900), art critic and social reformer. The son of a puritanical mother and an art-loving father, Ruskin was brought up at home. From 1836 to 1840 he studied at *Christ Church, Oxford, where he retained a simple *Evangelical piety and was completely untouched by the *Tractarian Movement. The first book that established his fame was Modern Painters (1843; four more volumes appeared at intervals to 1860, treating not only contemporary artists such as J. M. W. Turner, but also the old Italian masters, esp. Fra *Angelico and *Tintoretto). It was followed by The Seven Lamps of Architecture (1849). In these and later works Ruskin expounded his spiritual interpretation of art in which moral and aesthetic ideals were closely linked; he held that the art and architecture of a people are the expression of its religion and morality. From 1851 to 1853 appeared his Stones of Venice, with the famous chapter on 'The Nature of Gothic' which became an important influence in the growth of the Gothic Revival in architecture. About the same time he became connected with the Pre-Raphaelites, whom he defended in his work on Pre-Raphaelitism (1851). His interest in Protestant reunion resulted in his pamphlet Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds (1851), in which he proposed as a basis a simple NT Christianity, though retaining the episcopate. After the completion of the series Modern Painters in 1860, he devoted himself almost entirely to social and economic problems. In Unto This Last (1862) he defended the dignity and moral destiny of man. He stressed nobility of character and aesthetic development as the only true wealth of humanity and upheld national education, organization of labour, old-age pensions, and other social institutions as against the laissez-faire principles of the age. In Time and Tide (1867), Munera Pulveris (1872), and other works, he further elaborated his views. By this date his early Evangelicalism had given place to a vague Theism, and among his ideas for social reforms was the plan of a completely dependent State Church with state-salaried officials and with a minimum of dogma. From 1871 onwards he attempted to put his principles into practice, and he established the 'Guild of St George', comprising agricultural and also industrial settlements; but they did not succeed. From Brantwood on Coniston Water he wrote monthly letters 'to the workmen and labourers of Great Britain' which are collected in the volumes of Fors Clavigera as a means of propagating his ideas. In 1870 he was elected the first professor of fine arts in Oxford. Here he also worked out his social programme, which was among the main influences leading to the establishment of university settlements. From *c.*1875 he returned to a more Christian standpoint, his partiality for the Middle Ages and his friendship with H. E. *Manning at one time giving rise to the rumour that he was about to become a RC. But the religion of his last period seems to have been rather an undogmatic kind of Bible Christianity without attachment to any Church. From 1884 he lived in retirement.

Best edn. of his Works by E. T. Cook and A. Wedderburn (39 vols., 1903–12). J. H. Whitehouse (ed.), The Solitary Warrior: New Letters by Ruskin (1929); J. L. Bradley (ed.), Ruskin's Letters from Venice 1851–1852 (Yale Studies in English, 129; 1955); H. I. Shapiro (ed.), Ruskin in Italy: Letters to his Parents 1845 (Oxford, 1972); V. A. Burd (ed.), The Ruskin Family Letters: The Correspondence of John James Ruskin, His Wife, and Their Son John, 1801–1843 (2 vols., Ithaca, NY, and London, 1973). There are also various collections of his correspondence with individuals. Selections from Diaries ed. J. Evans and J. H. Whitehouse (3 vols., Oxford, 1956–9). W. G. Collingwood, The Life and Work of John Ruskin (2 vols., 1893); id., The Life of John Ruskin (1900); E. T. Cook, The Life of John Ruskin (2 vols., 1911). Other studies by R. H. Wilenski (London, 1933), P. Quennell (ibid., 1949), J. Evans (ibid., 1954), J. D. Rosenberg (New York and London, 1961), G. P. Landow (Princeton, NJ, 1971), E. K. Helsinger (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1982), P. L. Sawyer (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1985), W. Kemp (Munich, 1983; Eng. tr., The Desire of my Eyes, New York, 1990; London 1991) and T. Hilton (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1985 ff.). P. Walton, The Drawings of Ruskin (Oxford, 1972). R. Hewison (ed.), New Approaches to Ruskin (1981). Useful introd. by G. P. Landow, Ruskin (Past Masters, Oxford, 1985). H. G. Pollard in NCBEL 3 (1969), cols. 1340–64.

Russell, Charles Taze (1852–1916), 'Pastor Russell', founder of Zion's Watch Tower Tract Society in 1881, the forerunner of the organization now popularly known as *Jehovah's Witnesses (q.v.). He worked in his father's drapery business in Pennsylvania, and was active in the *Congregational Church before he encountered *Adventism. His intensive but untutored study of the Bible led him to reject the doctrine of eternal punishment, to believe that the Second Coming of Christ had already taken place, invisibly, in 1874, and to expect the end of the world in 1914. His first pamphlet, The Object and Manner of Our Lord's Return (1873), and his collaboration with another Adventist publisher, helped to attract many fellow students of biblical prophecy to the groups who regarded Russell as their Pastor, though he had never received any formal ordination. He began publishing the magazine Zion's Watch Tower and Herald of Christ's Presence in 1879, and his articles and pamphlets eventually formed the basis for his Studies in the Scriptures (6 vols., 1886–1904). Under Russell's presidency, the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, as it was renamed in 1896, quickly developed into a flourishing business, publishing numerous books, pamphlets, magazines, and tracts. At the same time Russell became a controversial figure in the *United States of America not only because of his involvement in several personal and business scandals but also on account of the attacks against Churches that he launched in his widely syndicated newspaper column.

The number of Bible Students, as Russell's followers were called, continued to grow in many countries in spite of the fact that the outbreak of war in 1914 did not appear to be an unequivocal confirmation of his interpretation of prophecy. The succession crisis which followed his death in 1916 brought J. F. *Rutherford (q.v.) to the presidency of the Bible Students and split the organization into various groups, some of which dispute the claim of Jehovah's Witnesses to be Russell's true successors.

E. S. Bates in Dict. Amer. Biog. 16 (1935), p. 240. See also bibl. to JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES.

Russia, the Soviet Union, and the Commonwealth of Independent States, Christianity in. Christian missionaries first preached extensively in Russia in the 9th and 10th cents. About 988 Prince *Vladimir (canonized, 13th cent.) was baptized and established Christianity as the official religion in his dominions. Anxious to bring Russia into closer relationship with Europe, he brought priests from the Byzantine Empire and established a Greek hierarchy under a metropolitan. From the first the Slav tongue was used in worship and gradually a Russian clergy replaced the Greeks. At the *Great Schism of 1054 the Russian Church took the E. side. Monastic life began with the coming from Mount *Athos in the first half of the 11th cent. of the monk Antony, who established himself in a grotto near Kiev and laid the foundations of the great Kiev Monastery of the Caves, organized (*c.*1062–74) by his disciple Theodosius. Monasticism spread rapidly, so that by the 12th cent. in Kiev alone there were 17 monasteries.

During the invasions of the Tartars from Mongolia, which began in 1237, several Russian princes suffered martyrdom for their faith. The monastic movement continued to grow, and in 1329 two Russian monks, Sergius and Germanus, founded the famous monastery of Valamo on an islet in Lake Ladoga. Later St *Sergius of Radonezh (*c.*1314–92), one of the most honoured saints in Russia, began a reform of monastic life. He founded the monastery of the Most Holy Trinity at Sergievo, and gave the impulse to the wave of monasticism which in the following cent. resulted in the building of monasteries all over Russia. Monasteries supplied bishops, while the secular clergy were commonly married. When the Church eventually emerged from the ruins left by the invasions she had become the embodiment of the Russian people.

During the early years of the 14th cent. the metropolitical see was moved from Kiev to Moscow. In 1461 the Russian Church was divided between two Metropolitans, centred at Moscow and Kiev, the former entirely Russian and rigidly Orthodox, the latter more exposed to pressure and influences from the W. During the 15th and 16th cents. the missionary activity of the Russians continued to the south and east of their borders.

Russia wholly refused the findings of the Council of *Florence (1439). Since the official Church at Constantinople for a time accepted the Florentine Union, in 1448 a Council of Russian bishops elected a Metropolitan of Moscow without reference to the Greek ecclesiastical authorities, and in this way the Russian Church became *autocephalous. Two outstanding religious leaders in the see of Moscow during this period were St *Macarius (1542–63) and St Philip II, the latter slain by the order of Ivan the Terrible (1533–84) in 1569.

In 1503 a famous dispute broke out concerning the monastic ownership of property. One group of monks, the 'Possessors', led by St *Joseph of Volokalamsk (1439/40–1515), stressed the social responsibilities of the monasteries—their duty to provide schools, orphanages, hospitals, and relief for the poor—and therefore insisted on the need for adequate endowments. The other party, the 'Non-Possessors', led by St *Nil Sorsky (1433–1508), underlined the more spiritual and mystical aspects of monasticism, and demanded a stricter interpretation of the vow of poverty. The Non-Possessors, who came into conflict with the Tsar, were largely suppressed and their centres closed, to the grave impoverishment of Russia's future religious development. In 1551 the celebrated Council of the Hundred Chapters was called to reform the clergy. In the reign of Theodore (1584–98), the second son of Ivan the Terrible, the Russian Church realized her greatest ambition in the creation of the Patriarchate of Moscow by Jeremias II, Patriarch of Constantinople (1589). The first Patriarch was St Job (1589–1605; canonized in 1989).

Since the Council of Florence RCs had been severely repressed in the Moscow Tsardom, but Russians in the metropolis of Kiev to the south, falling as they did within the territory of *Poland and Lithuania, found themselves under constant pressure from their RC masters. A large part of the Russian Church in this area acknowledged the Papacy at the Synod of *Brest-Litovsk in 1596. The Orthodox metropolis of Kiev, however, despite persecution, still continued in existence, organizing a vigorous opposition to the *Uniats, and attaining considerable intellectual brilliance in the 17th cent., esp. under Peter *Mogila, Metropolitan from 1632 to 1646. In 1606–12 a determined effort was made by the Poles to impose a RC Tsar at Moscow itself, but this was eventually repulsed.

Outstanding among the Patriarchs of Moscow during the 17th cent. was *Nikon (q.v.; d. 1681). A man of great ability and sincerity but of autocratic temper, he pushed forward too hastily with the work of revising the service-books, inaugurated under his predecessors, esp. Patriarch *Philaret (Romanov), and his liturgical reforms precipitated the schism of the 'Old Believers' (q.v.). This tragic division grievously weakened the Church in Russia.

Peter the Great (1672–1725), anxious to secure the subjugation of the Church to his authority, abolished the office of Patriarch, and in his 'Spiritual Regulation' of 1721 he replaced it with the *Holy Synod, the members of which were nominated by the Emperor and could be dismissed by him at any time. All its meetings were attended by a lay official, the Chief Procurator, who wielded considerable influence over Church affairs.

From the inclusion of part of Poland in the Russian Empire, which took place by stages at the end of the 18th cent., RC activity was intensified and sternly repressed by imperial ukases. In the reign of Catherine the Great (d. 1796) the *Jesuits, after their suppression by *Benedict XIV in 1773, found a home in Russia, but, proving unwelcome guests, they were shortly afterwards expelled. The RC cause was bound up with Polish and Lithuanian nationalism while these countries were under Russian rule, and even the edict of toleration to all faiths, issued by Nicholas II in 1905, had almost at once to be modified and limited in respect of the RCs.

In 1917–18 a council of bishops, parish clergy, and laity met in Moscow and initiated a thorough reorganization of all aspects of Church life. In particular, the office of Patriarch was restored with the election of Metropolitan *Tikhon of Moscow. The Revolution of 1917, however, completely disrupted its work. Except for granting some latitude to the scattered Protestants, who had suffered under Tsars, the Bolshevik government persecuted the 'progressive' and 'conservative' elements in the Church indiscriminately. Public worship was never forbidden by law, but it became difficult after Lenin's decree of 1918 had removed the legal right of the Church to own property. During the famine of 1921–2 the State appropriated all Church valuables, including priceless *icons; resistance provided a pretext for the arrest of many clergy and large numbers were condemned to death or banished to prison camps. Lenin's decree had also made the formal teaching of religion to anyone under 18 a criminal offence; monasteries and all theological schools (except one for the *Baptists) were closed, and the Church's public role ceased. Islam, Judaism, and Buddhism suffered equally, and the RC Church virtually ceased to exist in the Soviet Union. In the early 1920s a reform movement began within the Orthodox Church, known as the 'Living' or 'Renovationist Church', which had the backing of the government; it formed a schismatic body but lacked general support and its membership dwindled until it died out during the Second World War. When Patr. Tikhon died in 1925, no successor could be elected. In 1927 Metropolitan Sergius of Moscow reached a limited understanding with the government, but this occasioned sharp opposition among the remaining bishops and further persecution resulted. Stalin's 'Law on Religious Associations' (1929) formalized the situation and prepared the way for the suppression of virtually all religion during the Great Purge (1934–7). The Constitution of 1936 proclaimed 'freedom of religious worship', but this was a paper guarantee only, while State organs enjoyed to the full the 'freedom of anti-religious propaganda' also embodied in the Constitution. In practice, by 1939 in the whole of the USSR only a few hundred churches remained open and the ranks of the clergy were depleted to a critical degree. Underground and in exile the faith survived, ready to emerge when Sergius supported the war effort after the German invasion in 1941. The resulting concessions by the Soviet government allowed the reopening of some 20,000 Orthodox churches, eight seminaries for the training of clergy, two academies for advanced study, and some monasteries, as well as the election of Sergius as Patriarch. After his death in 1944, a synod of 44 bishops elected Metropolitan Alexis of Leningrad as Patriarch in 1945.

With the defeat of Germany and increasing tension between the USSR and the W., anti-religious propaganda was resumed. The Orthodox Church in the Soviet Union (as in other countries of E. Europe) retained a limited degree of freedom, but it was required to support the Government position. At home, Church leaders justified the suppression of the *Ukrainian Eastern-rite Catholic (Uniat) Churches in 1946 and the incorporation of the remnants into the Russian Orthodox Church. At the same time there was widespread persecution of the *Lutheran and RC Churches in the newly conquered western territory, including the Baltic states. Abroad, the Moscow Patriarchate supported Soviet foreign policy. A conference held at Moscow in 1948, attended by delegates from most of the Orthodox Churches, displayed considerable reserve towards the W., passing resolutions hostile to the *Vatican and the *World Council of Churches; it also reached an unfavourable (though qualified) decision on *Anglican Ordinations, but a constructive dialogue between Anglican and Russian theologians took place in Moscow in 1956 and relations between the Churches have been maintained. Under Khrushchev there was a further wave of persecution (1959–64), with the closure of two thirds of the churches still in use, five of the eight seminaries, and most of the monasteries, and widespread imprisonment of religious activists. In 1961 the major denominations in Russia (except the RCs) joined the World Council of Churches, though the Moscow Patriarchate was forced to conceal the new persecution. While the closure of churches slowed after 1964, pressure remained severe until the accession of President Gorbachev in 1985. Until then the Council for Religious Affairs (reconstituted in 1965) kept a tight grip on religious activity. In the early 1960s one group of Baptists formally seceded from the registered 'All-Union Council of Evangelical Christians and Baptists' on the ground that the movement was under the control of secular rather than Christian authority. The subsequent imprisonment of Baptist and *Pentecostal leaders became internationally known, largely through the works of the emergent Soviet human rights movement, in which the Council of Baptist Prisoners' Relatives was prominent. Under President Gorbachev these prisoners were freed. In June 1988 on the occasion of the celebrations of the millennium of the conversion of the Eastern Slav lands to Christianity, a Council of the Russian Orthodox Church was held at Zagorsk, near Moscow. This Council, which was attended by delegates from all the dioceses of the Russian Orthodox Church both in the Soviet Union and abroad, accepted new statutes governing the Church and canonized nine saints. In April of that year President Gorbachev had received Patr. Pimen (elected 1971; d. 1991) and promised concessions and new legislation in return for help in rebuilding society. The restored Danilov monastery became the headquarters of the Moscow Patriarchate, plans were made for the opening of new churches and monasteries by the Orthodox Church, while in the Baltic states RC and Lutheran cathedrals began to reopen, and in W. Ukraine there were demands for the restoration of the Eastern-rite Catholic (Uniat) Church, which was finally achieved in Dec. 1989. In Oct. 1990 a new law on religious freedom was adopted (for which significant revisions were discussed in 1992–3) and the Council for Religious Affairs was disbanded. With the advent of religious freedom, however, interdenominational hostility increased. There was much resentment both of Protestant missionary groups from the W. and of the establishment of parallel RC dioceses. Within the Orthodox community the long-standing conflict between the Moscow Patriarchate and the Russian Orthodox Church Abroad (ROCA) was aggravated in 1990 by the formation on Russian soil of the Free Russian Orthodox Church, whose parishes give their allegiance to the ROCA. In 1991 Committees to Liaise with Religious Organizations were established in Moscow and St Petersburg and in April 1992 a Government decree placed a new Commission on Religious Denominations at the head of this new structure for state regulation of religion; its members include many who served earlier on the Council for Religious Affairs.

The principal material is in Russian. The best general history in a W. European language is A. M. Ammann, SJ, Storia della Chiesa russa e dei paesi limitrofi (Turin, 1948). Other general works incl.: N. *Zernov, The Russians and their Church (1945); G. P. Fedotov, The Russian Religious Mind (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1946–66); É. Behr-Sigel, Prière et sainteté dans l'Église russe (1950; rev. edn., Bégrolles-en-Mauges, 1982); M. Rouët de Journel, SJ, Monachisme et monastères russes (1952); I. Kologrivof, Essai sur la sainteté en Russie (Bruges, 1953); I. Smolitsch, Russisches Mönchtum: Entstehung, Entwicklung und Wesen 988–1917 (Das Östliche Christentum, NF 10–11; 1953); N. Zernov, The Russian Religious Renaissance of the Twentieth Century (1963); A. Schmemann (ed.), Ultimate Questions: An Anthology of Modern Russian Religious Thought (New York, 1965); and K. C. Felmy and others (ed.), Tausend Jahre Christentum in Russland: Zum Millennium der Taufe der Kiever Rus' (Göttingen, 1988).

L. K. Goetz, Staat und Kirche in Altrussland . . . 988–1240 (1908). G. Podskalsky, Christentum und theologische Literatur in der Kiever Rus' (988–1237) (Munich, 1982). P. Pierling, SJ, La Russie et le saint-siège: Études diplomatiques (5 vols., 1896–1912). I. Smolitsch, Geschichte der russischen Kirche, 1700–1917, 1 (Studien zur Geschichte Osteuropas, 9; Leiden, 1964). G. L. Freeze, The Russian Levites: Parish Clergy in the Eighteenth Century (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1977); id., The Parish Clergy in Nineteenth Century Russia: Crisis, Reform, Counter-Reform (Princeton, NJ [1983]). J. S. Curtiss, Church and State in Russia: The Last Years of the Empire, 1900–1917 (New York, 1940); id., The Russian Church and the Soviet State, 1917–1950 (Boston, 1953). M. Spinka, The Church in Soviet Russia (New York, 1956); W. Kolarz, Religion in the Soviet Union (1961); N. Struve, Les Chrétiens en U.R.S.S. (1963; enlarged Eng. tr., 1967). Johannes Chrysostomus [Blaschkewitz], Kirchengeschichte Russlands der neuesten Zeit (3 vols., Munich and Salzburg, 1965–8). W. C. Fletcher, A Study in Survival: The Church in Russia 1927–1943 (1965); id., The Russian Orthodox Church Underground, 1917–1970 (1971); id., Religion and Soviet Foreign Policy 1945–1970 (1973). M. [A.] Bourdeaux, Opium of the People: The Christian Religion in the U.S.S.R. (1965); id., Religious Ferment in Russia: Protestant Opposition to Soviet Religious Policy (1968); id., Patriarch and Prophets: Persecution of the Russian Orthodox Church Today [1969]; id., Land of Crosses: The Struggle for Religious Freedom in Lithuania, 1939–78 (Keston Book, 12; Chulmleigh, Devon, 1979); id., Gorbachev, Glasnost & the Gospel (1990). H. Fireside, Icon and Swastika: The Russian Orthodox Church under Nazi and Soviet Control (Cambridge, Mass., 1971). R. H. Marshall (ed.), Aspects of Religion in the Soviet Union 1917–1967 (Chicago and London, 1971). G. Simon, Church, State and Opposition in the U.S.S.R. [1974; Eng. tr. of Die Kirchen in Russland, pub. 1970, with rev. documentation]. D. [V.] Pospielovsky, The Russian Church under the Soviet Regime 1917–1982 (2 vols., Crestwood, NY, 1984); id., A History of Soviet Atheism in Theory and Practice, and the Believer (3 vols., Basingstoke, 1987–8). J. Ellis, The Russian Orthodox Church: A Contemporary History (1986). T. [R.] Beeson, Discretion and Valour: Religious Conditions in Russia and Eastern Europe (2nd edn., 1982), pp. 23–153; P. Walters (ed.), World Christianity: Eastern Europe (Keston Book, 29; Monrovia, Calif., and Eastbourne, Sussex, 1988), pp. 15–106.

K. K. Grass, Die russischen Sekten (2 vols., 1907–9); F. C. *Conybeare, Russian Dissenters (Harvard Theological Studies, 10; 1921). S. Bolshakoff, Russian Nonconformity (Philadelphia [1950]). W. Sawatsky, Soviet Evangelicals since World War II (Kitchener, Ont., and Scottdale, Pa., 1981). M. Rowe, Russian Resurrection: Strength in Suffering—A History of Russia's Evangelical Church (1994). S. Bolshakoff, The Foreign Missions of the Russian Orthodox Church (1943). J. Glazik, MSC, Die russisch-orthodoxe Heidenmission seit Peter dem Grossen (Missionswissenschaftliche Abhandlungen und Texte, 19; 1954); id., Die Islammission der russisch-orthodoxen Kirche (ibid. 23; 1959).

Ruth, Book of. The Book tells the story of Ruth, a Moabitess, who had married a Hebrew when he was compelled during a famine in the land of Judah to take refuge in Moab. It is narrated how, after the death of her husband, Ruth determined to return to Judah with her mother-in-law, and how Boaz, a kinsman of her former husband, took her under his protection and married her. The incident is set in the later days of the Judges (before 1000 BC), and this explains the position of the Book in the English Bible (as in the Greek and Latin Versions) after *Judges. The Book itself, however, is evidently of a relatively late date, certainly not earlier than the Exile (6th cent. BC); and in the Hebrew Bible it appears as one of the 'Five *Megilloth', i.e. in the third and latest division of the Hebrew OT, the *Hagiographa. The genealogy at the end (4: 18–22) indicates one of the apparent aims of the book, that is, to record the Moabite strain in *David's ancestry. This shows that the writer had a broader view on the legitimacy of the marriage of Jews with foreigners than was inculcated by *Nehemiah and *Ezra, and the story may point to his disapproval of the exclusive attitude of many of the Jews of his time. He probably also wished to insist on the duty of marriage on the part of the next-of-kin with a widow left without male offspring. In St *Matthew's genealogy, Ruth is specifically mentioned as the great-grandmother of David, and so as an ancestress of Christ (1: 5–16).

Comm. by H. W. Hertzberg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 9, on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1953; 2nd edn., 1959, pp. 257–83), E. Würthwein (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 18, 2nd edn., on Ruth, Song of Songs, Est., Eccles., and Lam., 1969, pp. 1–24), J. Gray (New Cent. Bib. on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1967, pp. 397–424; 2nd edn., 1986, pp. 365–403), E. F. Campbell (Anchor Bible, 1975), and E. Zenger (Zürcher Bibelkommentare, Altes Testament, 8; 1986). J. M. Myres, The Linguistic and Literary Form of the Book of Ruth (Leiden, 1955). H. H. Rowley, 'The Marriage of Ruth', HTR 40 (1947), pp. 77–99, repr. in The Servant of the Lord (2nd edn., Oxford, 1965), pp. 171–94, with bibl. D. R. G. Beattie, Jewish Exegesis on the Book of Ruth (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 2; Sheffield, 1977).

Ruthenian Churches. See UKRAINIAN CHURCHES.

Rutherford, Joseph Franklin (1869–1942), 'Judge Rutherford', second President of the *Adventist organization popularly known as the '*Jehovah's Witnesses' (q.v.). Of *Baptist family, he practised law in his native Missouri. In 1906 he joined the Bible Students of C. T. *Russell and quickly became the organization's legal counsel. The succession crisis following Russell's death led to Rutherford's election as President of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society in 1917. With other Directors of the Society he was imprisoned in 1918 on a charge of inciting insubordination, disloyalty, and refusal of duty in the American armed forces, but the conviction was overturned in 1919. Rutherford then moulded the Society into a *theocratic organization, known as Jehovah's Witnesses, which questioned the authority of sovereign states. He vilified religion as a 'snare and a racket' in his many publications, but at the same time he succeeded in welding Jehovah's Witnesses into an expansive religious organization resilient enough to withstand persecution in many countries during the Second World War.

H. Stroup in Dict. Amer. Biog., Suppl. 3 (1973), pp. 678 f. See also bibl. to JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES.

Rutherford, Mark, pseudonym of William Hale White (1831–1913), author of religious works. The son of William White, a Nonconformist bookseller who was later a doorkeeper of the House of Commons and author of The Inner Life of the House of Commons (1897), Hale White had orig. intended to enter the *Congregational ministry. He spent most of his life as a civil servant. He won recognition as a religious author by The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford (1881), marked by its unusual combination of spiritual depth, irony, and humour. It was followed by Mark Rutherford's Deliverance (1885) and other works, incl. Catharine Furze (1893), Pages from a Journal (1900), More Pages from a Journal (1910), and Last Pages from a Journal (posthumous, 1915). He also issued under his real name an Eng. tr. of B. de *Spinoza's writings. Though he has never made more than a limited appeal, the freshness and penetration of his books have won him an assured place among English religious writers.

W. R. *Nicoll, A Bookman's Letters (1913), pp. 364–412; repr. separately as Memories of Mark Rutherford (1924). Lives by C. M. Maclean (London, 1955) and I. Stock (ibid., 1956). S. Merton, Mark Rutherford (William Hale White) (New York [1967]). W. Stone, Religion and Art of William Hale White ('Mark Rutherford') (Stanford University Publications, University Series. Language and Literature, 12; Stanford, Calif., 1954). H. W. Massingham in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 573 f.

Rutherford, Samuel (*c.*1600–61), also 'Rutherfurd', Scottish *Presbyterian divine. After studying at Edinburgh University, he was elected regent of humanity in 1623, but deprived in 1626 for a pre-nuptial scandal. Soon afterwards he became fervently religious. In 1627 he was appointed minister at Anwoth, Dumfries and Galloway. His Exercitationes Apologeticae pro Divina Gratia (Amsterdam, 1636), written from a rigidly *Calvinist standpoint, led to his prosecution before the High Commission, and in 1636 he was deposed and exiled at Aberdeen till 1638. In 1639 he became professor of divinity at, and in 1647 principal of, St Mary's College, St Andrews. His Plea for Presbytery appeared in 1642. In 1643 he was one of the eight Scottish Commissioners at the *Westminster Assembly and for four years he defended the Presbyterian cause at London. His Lex Rex, a Dispute for the Just Prerogative of King and People (1644), which was an attack on monarchical absolutism, brought him considerable repute as a constitutional theorist. There followed The Divine Right of Church Government and Excommunication (1646), on behalf of Presbyterian Church polity, and A Free Disputation against Pretended Liberty of Conscience (1649), a vigorous defence of religious persecution in reply to Jeremy *Taylor, on the ground that the advocacy of toleration put conscience in the place of God and the Bible. Several devotional writings also belong to these years. At the Restoration (1660) his Lex Rex was publicly burnt and a charge of high treason was preferred against him, but he died shortly afterwards.

Collection of his letters pub. under the title Joshua Redivivus or Mr Rutherford's Letters [ed. by R. McWard], no place, 1664; the best edn. is that of A. A. Bonar (London, 1848), with sketch of Rutherford's life, pp. v–xxxiii, frequently repub.; in edn. of 1891 there is also a list of Rutherford's works, pp. 31 f.; modern selection ed. H. Martin (London, 1957). A collection of his Sermons also ed. A. A. Bonar (ibid., 1885). Lives by T. Murray (Edinburgh, 1828), A. Thomson ('Men Worth Remembering', London, 1884), and R. Gilmour (Edinburgh and London, 1904). A. Whyte, Samuel Rutherford and some of his Correspondents (Lectures delivered in St George's Free Church, Edinburgh; 1894). G. W. Sprott in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 7–9; B. Hall in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 1190–3.

Rutilius Claudius Namatianus (5th cent.), Latin poet. In 416 or 417 he returned to his native Gaul after some time spent in Rome; in his 'De Reditu Suo' he described the journey homewards. By religion he was almost certainly a pagan, despite H. Schenkl's attempt (1911) to prove him a Christian. He was conservative in his outlook, despised all religious innovations and was esp. critical of the monastic movement which, under St *Jerome's influence, had then become very popular at Rome. Stilicho (the Roman general and virtual ruler of the W. Empire) he regards not as a restorer of traditional pagan practices (the usual Christian conception of him), but as their uncompromising enemy. His poem throws important light on the background of the Church in the period.

Editio princeps by J. B. Pius, Bologna, 1520. Crit. texts by J. Vesserau, with full study (Paris, 1904), id. and F. Préchac (Collection des Universités de France, Paris, 1933; with Fr. tr.), P. van de Woestijne (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent. Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Wijsbegeerte en Letteren, Afl. 76; Antwerp, 1936), and E. Castorina (Florence, 1967). Further frag. ed. M. Ferrari in Italia Medioevale e Umanistica, 16 (1973), pp. 15–30. Convenient edn., with Eng. tr. and introd., by J. W. and A. M. Duff, Minor Latin Poets (Loeb, 1934), pp. 753–829. I. Lana, Rutilio Namaziano (Turin, 1961); F. Corsaro, Studi Rutiliani (Bologne, 1981). H. Schenkl, 'Ein spätrömischer Dichter und sein Glaubensbekenntnis', Rheinisches Museum für Philologie, NF 66 (1911), pp. 393–416. A. Cameron, 'Rutilius Namatianus, St. Augustine, and the Date of the De Reditu', Journal of Roman Studies, 57 (1967), pp. 31–9.

Ruysbroeck or more correctly Ruusbroec, Bl Jan van (1293–1381), mystic. His name derives from his birthplace, a small village in Brabant. About 1304 he went to Brussels for his education, living in the house of his relative, J. Hinckaert, a canon of St-Gudule, and remaining there after his ordination, *c.*1317. His biographer, Pomerius, states that he opposed a woman heretic (Bloemardinne), who seems to have been connected with the *Brethren of the Free Spirit; this assertion has been questioned in recent years. In 1343 he retired with Hinckaert and another priest to a hermitage at Groenendaal, near Brussels, where they were joined by others. In 1350 the group became a community of Canons Regular, with Ruysbroeck as prior until his death. Groenendaal became prominent in the religious movement later known as Devotio Moderna, with which were also associated the *Brethren of the Common Life and the Canons Regular of *Windesheim, and such eminent spiritual writers as *Thomas à Kempis.

Ruysbroeck wrote almost entirely in the vernacular of the country, Middle Dutch. His works (with their titles in English) include The Spiritual Espousals (later criticized on doctrinal grounds by J. *Gerson), The Kingdom of the Lovers of God, The Book of Supreme Truth, The Mirror of Eternal Salvation, The Seven Steps of the Ladder of Spiritual Love, The Sparkling Stone (also known as The Treatise of Perfection of the Sons of God), and The Book of the Spiritual Tabernacle. Several of these works were translated into Latin during the 14th cent., and all of them by L. Surius in the 16th cent. His writings show the influence of St *Augustine, *Bede, St *Bernard, *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, *Eckhart (though some of his opinions were rejected), *Hadewijch, and *Peter Comestor; their authority has endured. He was beatified in 1908. Feast day, 2 Dec.

Works ed. J. [B.] David (6 vols., Ghent, 1858–68); also under the auspices of the Ruusbroec-Genootschap at Antwerp by J. B. Poukens, SJ, and others (4 vols., Malines and Amsterdam, 1932–4; rev. edn., Tielt, 1944–8) and by G. de Baere, SJ, and others (10 vols., Tielt and Leiden, 1981 ff.); this last edn. repr. the Lat. tr. of L. Surius, orig. issued at Cologne in 1552, and a fresh Eng. tr. There are separate modern Eng. trs. of many of his works. The Life by H. Pomerius (1382–1469) is pr. in Anal. Boll. 4 (1885), pp. 257–308. A. Auger, De Doctrina et Meritis Johannis van Ruysbroek (Louvain, 1892). Jan van Ruusbroec: Leven, Werken, onder de redactie van het Ruusbroec-Genootschap, Antwerpen (Malines and Amsterdam, 1931). P. Mommaers, Waar naartoe is nu de gloed van de liefde? (Antwerp and Utrecht, 1973; Eng. tr., The Land Within: The Process of Possessing and being Possessed by God according to the Mystic Jan van Ruysbroeck, Chicago [1975]). A. Ampe, SJ, Ruusbroec: Traditie en werkelijkheid (Studiën en Tekstuitgaven van Ons Geestelijk Erf, 19; 1975). P. Mommaers and N. de Paepe (eds.), Jan van Ruusbroec: The Sources, Content and Sequels of his Mysticism (Mediaevalia Lovaniensia, Series 1, Studia 12; 1984). Jan van Ruusbroec, 1293–1381: Tentoonstellingscatalogus . . . georganiseerd door het Comité-Jan van Ruusbroec, 1981 (Brussels, 1981), with detailed bibl. E. Colledge, OSA, in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 763–5, s.v.; A. Ampe, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 659–97, s.v. 'Jean Ruusbroec'.

Rycaut, Paul (1628–1700), also 'Ricaut', traveller and author. Born at Aylesford, Kent, after studying at Trinity College, Cambridge, he spent most of his life abroad. In 1661 he was appointed secretary to the British Embassy at *Constantinople, where he collected extensive materials on the life and customs of Turkey and the Muslim religion, which were published later as The Present State of the Ottoman Empire (1668; acc. to S. Pepys, the original edition was almost completely destroyed in the Great Fire). From 1667 to 1679 he was consul to the Levant Company at Smyrna. On his return to England he issued an essay on The Present State of the Greek and Armenian Churches (1679), which remains an important contemporary source of information on the E. Churches. He was also the author of The History of the Turkish Empire from the Year 1623 to the Year 1677 (2 parts, 1679–80), and translated a large number of Latin and Greek treatises into English, incl. B. *Platina's Lives of the Popes (1685).

S. P. Anderson, An English Consul in Turkey: Paul Rycaut at Smyrna, 1667–1678 (Oxford, 1989).

Ryder, Henry (1777–1836), Bp. of *Gloucester and then of Coventry and *Lichfield. The younger son of the first Lord Harrowby, he was educated at Harrow and St John's College, Cambridge. In 1801, the year after his ordination, he became rector of Lutterworth. At first he stood aloof from the *Evangelicals, attacking their principles as at variance with those of the C of E, but he was soon won over and became one of their most prominent leaders and the first Evangelical to be made a bishop. He was a canon of *Windsor (1808–12) and Dean of *Wells (1812–15) before he became Bp. of Gloucester in 1815, an appointment aided by the influence of his brother. Though his ecclesiastical position at first made him suspect among the clergy of the diocese, his personal qualities made him greatly loved both in Gloucester and in Lichfield, to which he was translated in 1824. He was one of the earliest bishops to introduce reforms into his dioceses, including the more careful administration of *Confirmation. He preached much more frequently than most bishops, and he worked hard to recover the masses, building a number of new churches. He had a special concern for the industrial areas of his Lichfield diocese which included Birmingham and the Potteries. He was a friend and confidant of Hannah *More.

T. D. Ryder (son), A Memoir of the Hon. and Rt. Rev. Henry Ryder (pr. for private circulation, 1886). G. C. B. Davies, The First Evangelical Bishop: Some Aspects of the Life of Henry Ryder (Tyndale Church History Lecture, 1957; 1958). J. H. Overton in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 45–7.

Rylands St John. Part of one page of a papyrus codex (P. 52), now in the John Rylands University Library of Manchester. It contains on the recto chapter 18, verses 31–3, and on the verso verses 37–8, of St John's Gospel. It is written in a clear quasi-documentary hand and may be assigned to the first half of the second cent. and prob. to the early part of it. It is thus both the earliest known MS of any part of the NT and the earliest distinct evidence for the existence of the Fourth Gospel. It was found in Egypt, prob. either in *Oxyrhynchus or the Fayum. The text exhibits no striking divergences from the known text. The complete Gospel would have occupied some 150 pages, and it may be assumed that the codex contained no other work.

Text first pub. by C. H. Roberts, An Unpublished Fragment of the Fourth Gospel in the John Rylands Library (Manchester, 1935); also in Catalogue of the Greek and Latin Papyri in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, 3, ed. id. (ibid., 1938), pp. 1–3. H. I. Bell, Recent Discoveries of Biblical Papyri (lecture; Oxford, 1937), esp. pp. 20 f. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (2nd edn., Oxford, 1968), pp. 38 f.

Ryle, Herbert Edward (1856–1925), Dean of *Westminster. The son of J. C. *Ryle, he was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, where in 1881 he was elected a Fellow. Apart from a short period as principal of St David's College, Lampeter (1886–8), he remained at Cambridge until his appointment to the see of *Exeter in 1900. Translated in 1903 to the see of *Winchester, he resigned this office to become Dean of Westminster in 1911. From 1919 to 1925 he was *Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation of Canterbury. His writings include The Early Narratives of Genesis (1892), The Canon of the OT (1892), and Genesis (Camb. Bible, 1914).

Memoir by M. H. FitzGerald (London, 1928). Id. in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 733–5.

Ryle, John Charles (1816–1900), Bp. of Liverpool. He was born at Macclesfield and educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. When his wish to become a Member of Parliament had been frustrated by lack of financial means, he decided to take orders. He was ordained priest in 1842, and after holding several parochial cures, was consecrated bishop of the newly created Anglican see of Liverpool in 1880, which he held till shortly before his death. A strong Evangelical in his beliefs, he defended his convictions in forceful and simple language in a number of tracts which had a wide circulation. Among his publications are The Bishop, the Pastor, and the Preacher (1854; studies on H. *Latimer, R. *Baxter, and G. *Whitefield), The Christian Leaders of the Last Century (1869), What do we owe to the Reformation? (1877), and Principles for Churchmen (1884).

Life by P. Toon and M. Smout (Cambridge, 1976). J. M. Rigg in DNB, Suppl., 3 (1901), pp. 334 f., s.v.

Rynsburgers. See COLLEGIANTS.

Ryswick (or Rijswick) Clause. The clause 'Religione tamen Catholica Romana in locis sic restitutis, in statu quo nunc est, remanente', inserted into Article IV of the Treaty of Ryswick (30 Oct. 1697). It modifies the general rule that the religious frontiers should revert to their position at the time of the Treaty of Nijmegen (1679) in favour of the Catholic communities in those places where they had been re-established by Louis XIV in the interval.

Text of the Treaty of Ryswick between the Emp. Leopold and Louis XIV, pr., with comm., in H. Vast, Les Grands Traités du règne de Louis XIV, 2 (1898), pp. 228–53, this stipulation occurring on p. 232; most imp. sections of Treaty repr. in E. Reich (ed.), Select Documents Illustrating Mediaeval and Modern History (1905), pp. 25–32, with this stipulation, pp. 26 f. C. T. G. von Scheurl in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 273 f., s.v. 'Ryswicker Klausel'.

S

Sá, Manoel de (*c.*1530–96), Portuguese theologian. He entered the *Jesuit novitiate at Coimbra in 1545. In 1551 he became professor of philosophy at Alcalá and in 1557 was called to teach theology at the Roman College. *Pius V appointed him a member of the *Septuagint Commission. The last years of his life he spent in pastoral work at *Loreto and Genoa. Besides several scriptural Commentaries he published, in 1595, Aphorismi Confessariorum, a manual of casuistry in dictionary form which was temporarily placed on the *Index in 1603 for allowing confession and absolution to be made by letter, but in its corrected edition of 1607–8 enjoyed great authority among moral theologians.

G. Barbieri, 'Spunti sociali ed economici nell'opera del gesuita portoghese Manuel Sà', Estudos italianos em Portugal, 23 (1964), pp. 25–41. Sommervogel, 7 (1896), cols. 349–54; 9 (1900), col. 829; and 12 (1911–31; repr. 1960), cols. 775 f. R. Brouillard, SJ, in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 425–8, s.v. 'Sa (Emmanuel)', with bibl.

Sabaoth (Heb. צְבָאוֹת; Gk. Σαβαώθ). This Hebrew word, which denotes 'armies' or 'hosts', is preserved untranslated in the phrase 'Lord of Sabaoth' in older translations of the NT (Rom. 9: 29, Jas. 5: 4) and in the traditional English version of the *Te Deum. See also LORD OF HOSTS.

Sabas, St (439–532), monk. A native of Mutalaska in Cappadocia, after leading the life of a monk and solitary in several places in the E., in 478 he founded a large *lavra (still extant as 'Mar Saba') in Palestine in the wild country between *Jerusalem and the Dead Sea (the Wadi en-Nar). With reluctance he accepted ordination to the priesthood (then not usual for monks) in 490, and in 492 the Patr. of Jerusalem created him superior of all the hermits in Palestine. A strong supporter of theological orthodoxy, he took a prominent part in the campaign against *Origenism and *Monophysitism. A *typicon circulates under his name in the E. Church, Feast day, 5 Dec.

The principal authority is the Life by *Cyril of Scythopolis, pr., with Lat. tr., by J. B. *Cotelier, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, 3 (Paris, 1686), pp. 220–376; modern edn. by E. *Schwartz in TU 49 (Heft 2; 1939), pp. 85–200. Fr. tr. by A. J. Festugière, OP, Les Moines d'orient, 3, pt. 2 (1962). BHG (3rd edn., 1957), 2, pp. 228 f. (nos. 1608–10). D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City (Oxford, 1966), esp. pp. 105–24. History of the Lavra of St Sabas (in Gk.) by J. Phocylides (Alexandria, 1927). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 189–211, s.v., with full bibl. on the churches and monastery.

Sabas, St, Patron of Serbia. See SAVA, ST.

Sabatier, Auguste (1839–1901), French Protestant theologian. He was professor of reformed dogmatics at Strasbourg University from 1868 to 1873, and from 1877 at the newly established Protestant theological faculty at *Paris. He propagated the theories of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher and A. *Ritschl in France, applied the methods of historical criticism to the NT, and, esp. by his interpretation of Christian dogma as the symbolism of religious feelings, exercised a profound influence not only on French Protestantism but also in Catholic theological circles, thus helping to prepare for the *Modernist Movement. Among his best-known works are L'Apôtre Paul (1870; Eng. tr., 1891), La Vie intime des dogmes (1890), Esquisse d'une philosophie de la religion (1897; Eng. tr., 1897) and his posthumous Les Religions d'autorité et la religion de l'esprit (1903; Eng. tr., 1904).

T. Silkstone, Religions, Symbolism and Meaning: A Critical Study of the Views of Auguste Sabatier (Oxford, 1968). B. Reymond, Auguste Sabatier et le procès théologique de l'autorité (Lausanne [1976]), with bibl., pp. 307–27.

Sabatier, Paul (1858–1928), *Calvinist pastor and Franciscan scholar. After completing his theological studies at Paris, where he had Auguste *Sabatier and E. *Renan among his teachers, he held pastoral cures in Strasbourg, where he had been born, and then at St-Cierge-le-Serre. At the latter he began his studies on St *Francis. Soon compelled by frail health to give up his pastoral work, he devoted the rest of his life to his research, spending long periods in Italy, esp. at *Assisi. His Vie de S. François (1893; Eng. tr. 1894), depicting the mission of Francis as a renewal of the medieval Church in the light of the 'pure Gospel', was based on a close study of the sources, brilliant in presentation and penetrating in its psychological understanding. The work was widely read, but, on account of its liberal outlook, was soon put on the *Index (8 June 1894).

Sabatier's further researches brought to light much important new material, notably the Speculum Perfectionis, the Tractatus de Indulgentia S. Mariae de Portiuncula, and the Regula Antiqua of the Franciscan *Third Order, though some of his contentions on the primitive sources turned out to be mistaken. He also directed two series of publications, Collection de documents pour l'histoire religieuse et littéraire du moyen âge (1898–1909) and Opuscules de critique historique (1901–19). In 1902 he founded the 'Società Internazionale di Studi Francescani' at Assisi and in 1908 the British Society of Franciscan Studies at London. He was also an active sympathizer with the RC *Modernist Movement, on which he delivered a course of Jowett Lectures in London in 1908 (pub. later in the year).

A. G. Little, Franciscan Papers, Lists and Documents (Publications of the University of Manchester, no. 284; 1943), pp. 179–88 ('Paul Sabatier, Historian of St Francis'; lecture delivered in 1929); C. [N. L.] Brooke, Medieval Church and Society (1971), pp. 197–213 ('Paul Sabatier and St Francis of Assisi'; composed 1957–8); R. Manselli, 'Paul Sabatier e la "Questione Francescana" ', in La 'Questione Francesana' dal Sabatier ad oggi: Atti del I Convegno Internazionale, Assisi, 18–20 ottobre 1973 (Società Internazionale di Studi Francescani, Assisi, 1974), pp. 51–70.

Sabatier, Pierre (1682–1742), *Maurist scholar. After joining the *Benedictine Order at *Reims in 1700, he went to *St-Germain-des-Prés, where he was trained in historical method by T. *Ruinart. His monumental work, the fruit of many years' research, was a virtually exhaustive collection of the material then available for the *Old Latin (i.e. pre-*Vulgate) text of the Bible. It was published posthumously as Bibliorum Sacrorum Latinae Versiones Antiquae (3 vols., fol., 1743[-9]) at Reims, whither the author had been transferred in 1727 on account of his supposed *Jansenist tendencies. The importance of his work is acknowledged by the fact that his name still occurs in the title of the edition in process of publication by the Vetus Latina Institute at the Archabbey of *Beuron.

[R. P. Tassin, OSB,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (1770), pp. 617–21. P.-M. Bogaert, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 10 (1985), cols. 1127–30, s.v., with further refs. In English, L. F. Hartman in NCE 12 (1967), p. 777.

Sabbatarianism. Excessive strictness in the observance of the Divinely ordained day of rest. Although there is evidence of a similar rigidity in the observance of *Saturday among the *Anabaptists of E. Europe in the 16th cent., the rigorous observance of *Sunday is a peculiar development of the English and Scottish Reformation, being unknown on the Continent even among *Calvinists. The beginning of 17th-cent. Sabbatarianism is connected with the publication in 1595 of Nicholas Bound's True Doctrine of the Sabbath, which advocated its strict enforcement on OT lines. The book caused a lively controversy, which assumed political importance when *James I issued his Book of Sports* (1618), enjoining cessation of work but allowing lawful recreation. When reissued by *Charles I in 1633, the Book roused a storm of protest, and was burned by Parliament in 1643. The Puritan Sabbath was imposed by successive Acts of legislation (1644, 1650, 1655) prohibiting any kind of recreation on Sunday, even going for a walk. After the Restoration observance was slightly relaxed when under *Charles II the Act for the Better Observance of the Lord's Day (1677) was passed which, though it forbade all work and travel by horse or boat on Sunday, was silent on recreations. Under the influence of the *Evangelical Revival at the end of the 18th cent. rigorism took a new lease of life by the Lord's Day Observance Act, drawn up by Bp. B. *Porteus in 1781, which laid down that any place of entertainment or debate where admission was gained by payment of money should be closed to use on Sunday. In Scotland Sabbatarianism was carried to extremes from the beginning of the 17th cent., all recreation including even books and music not strictly religious being disallowed. Here, as well as in England, relaxation has been progressive since the latter part of the 19th cent. The Puritan point of view is today represented by the *Lord's Day Observance Society. See also SUNDAY.

Full bibl. of the older literature (which, though abundant, is very repetitive) in R. Cox, The Literature of the Sabbath Question (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1865). K. L. Sprunger, 'English and Dutch Sabbatarianism and the Development of Puritan Social Theology (1600–1660)', Church History, 51 (1982), pp. 24–38. D. S. Katz, Sabbath and Sectarianism in Seventeenth-Century England (Studies in Intellectual History, 10; Leiden, 1986). K. L. Parker, The English Sabbath: A Study of the Doctrine and Discipline from the Reformation to the Civil War (Cambridge, 1988; cf. review by A. Milton in JEH 41 (1990), pp. 491–4). B. W. Ball, The Seventh-day Men: Sabbatarians and Sabbatarianism in England and Wales, 1600–1800 (Oxford, 1994). See also bibl. to SUNDAY.

Sabbath. The seventh day of the Jewish week. It is sanctified by complete abstinence from work (Exod. 20: 10) and in OT times it was marked by the doubling of the daily sacrifices (Num. 28: 9 f.) and special gatherings for worship (Lev. 23: 2 f.). The particular distinction of the seventh day may be connected with the phases of the moon. No exact parallels are known from other ancient Near Eastern cultures; the word may be connected with the Akkadian shapattu, the day of the full moon, but there are no resemblances to the way this day was observed in Mesopotamia. In the Bible its origin is accounted for in a double way. Acc. to Exod. 20: 11 and 31: 17 it represents the rest God took on the seventh day from His work of Creation (cf. Gen. 2: 2–3), whereas acc. to Deut. 5: 15 it is apparently kept in remembrance of the deliverance from Egypt. The Sabbath served the twofold purpose of being a day set apart for the worship of God (Exod. 31: 13–17) as well as for the rest and recreation of man, esp. slaves, and cattle (Deut. 5: 14). The prohibition of work was regulated by detailed prescription, forbidding e.g. the gathering of manna, cooking (Exod. 16: 22–30), and the lighting of fire (Exod. 35: 3). In the *Maccabaean period there was a tendency for regulations to become increasingly strict, and some pious Jews let themselves be killed rather than defend their lives on the Sabbath (1 Macc. 2: 32–8). In NT times activities such as healing (e.g. Mt. 12: 10) and plucking of ears of corn (Mt. 12: 1 f.) were sometimes considered forbidden, but debate about the precise definition of the work to be prohibited continued until rabbinic times. One of the Pharisees' chief grievances against Christ was that He declared the Sabbath to have been made for man and not vice versa (Mk. 2: 27). Though the primitive Christians largely continued to keep the seventh day as a day of rest and prayer, the fact that the Resurrection and Coming of the Holy Spirit had taken place on the first day of the week soon led to the observance of that day (i.e. *Sunday), to the exclusion of the Jewish Sabbath on Saturday. In modern times a few sects, such as the *Seventh-day Adventists, observe Saturday in literal fulfilment of the Fourth Commandment rather than the Sunday adopted by most Christian bodies.

The details of rabbinic Sabbath observances are set out in the *Mishnah tractate 'Shabbath'; Eng. tr. with notes by H. Danby, The Mishnah (1933), pp. 100–21. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 371–82, with bibl. pp. 456 f. (Eng. tr., 2nd edn., 1965, pp. 475–83, with bibl. p. 550). E. P. Sanders, Jewish Law from Jesus to the Mishnah (1990), pp. 6–23. R. North, SJ, 'The Derivation of Sabbath', Biblica, 35 (1955), pp. 182–201. E. Lohse in TWNT 7 (1964; Eng. tr., 1971), pp. 1–35, s.v. σάββατον. M. Greenberg in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 14 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 557–62, s.v.; J. Briend in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 10 (1985), cols. 1132–70, s.v. 'Sabbat'; G. F. Hasel in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 849–56, s.v.

Sabbatical Year. The one year in seven which the *Mosaic legislation (Exod. 21: 2–6; Deut. 15: 1–3; 15: 12–18; 31: 10–13; Lev. 25, etc.) ordered to be observed as a 'Sabbath', i.e., requiring the land to remain fallow and all debtors and Israelite slaves to be freed. In Lev. 25 a simultaneous fallow year is prescribed, and its observance is attested in Neh. 10: 31 and 1 Macc. 6: 49, 53; cf. *Josephus, Antiquities, 14. 202, where Julius Caesar is said to have exempted the Jews from taxes in the sabbatical year. In the older strata of the *Pentateuch it seems to have been intended that each husbandman and slave-owner should be at liberty to decide which seventh year he would observe, so that the whole land should not go out of cultivation at once. See also JUBILEE, YEAR OF.

R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 1 (1958), pp. 264–7, with bibl. pp. 338 f. (Eng. tr., 2nd edn., 1965, pp. 173–5, with bibl. p. 532). E. Neufeld, 'Socio-Economic Background of Yōbēl and Šemiṭṭā', Rivista degli Studi Orientali, 33 (1958), pp. 53–124. M. Greenberg and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 14 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 574–86, s.v. 'Sabbatical Year and Jubilee'. See also comm. on Deut., ad loc.

Sabbatine Privilege. An indulgence granted to the *Carmelite Order. On the basis of a bull, 'Sacratissimo uti culmine', ascribed to *John XXII (1322), which was held to rest on an apparition of the BVM, certain privileges were granted to the Carmelite Order and its confraternities. They include unfailing salvation and early release from Purgatory through the intervention of the BVM (esp. release on *Saturdays, Our Lady's day), provided certain conditions such as wearing the brown *scapular, keeping certain fasts, and reciting the *Little Office of Our Lady, are observed. The Sabbatine Privilege has been confirmed by several Popes, e.g. by *Pius XI in 1922. The authenticity of the original bull was widely contested in the 16th and 17th cents., esp. by the Jesuit D. *Papebroch, and some violent controversies ensued. Its spuriousness is now admitted even by Carmelites themselves, such as B. Zimmerman. It prob. dates from the latter half of the 15th cent.

A note of the bull of John XXII occurs in G. Mollat (ed.), Jean XXII (1316–1334): Lettres communes analysées d'après les registres dits d'Avignon et du Vatican, 4 (1910), p. 169 (no. 16193). B. Zimmerman, ODC, Monumenta Historica Carmelitana (Lérins, 1907), pp. 356–63. See also bibl. to SIMON STOCK, ST.

Sabellianism. An alternative title for the Modalist form of *Monarchianism (q.v.). It is so named from Sabellius, of whom, however, very little is known. He was perhaps, like his fellow-Monarchians *Noetus and *Praxeas, an early 3rd-cent. theologian of Roman origin, though he is described by later 4th–5th-cent. Gk. writers (*Basil, *Timothy of Constantinople) as belonging to Libya or the Pentapolis.

Sabina, St (c.126), Roman martyr. Acc. to her late and untrustworthy acta, she was a widow of Umbria who was converted by the virtuous life of her servant, Serapia, a native of Antioch in Syria. Both Sabina and Serapia were arrested in the persecution under Hadrian, and Serapia beaten to death, while Sabina was discharged on account of her rank. A year later, however, Sabina was again apprehended and martyred at Rome. There seems no probability even of the existence of such a saint. The acta were perhaps fabricated to account for the church of Sta Sabina (originally 'titulus Sabinae', later 'titulus Sanctae Sabinae') on the Aventine Hill, which is believed to contain her relics. Feast day, 29 Aug. She is commemorated by name in the canon (now the first Eucharistic Prayer) of the *Ambrosian rite.

On SS Sabina and Serapia, AASS, Aug. 6 (1743), pp. 496–504; cf. also H. *Delehaye, SJ, in his edn. of the *Hieronymian Martyrology (AASS, Nov. 2 (pt. 2; 1931), p. 475). J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 9, Hefte 1–2; 1918), pp. 163–6.

On the church, J. J. Berthier, L'Église de Sainte-Sabine à Rome (Rome, 1918); id., Le Couvent de Sainte-Sabine à Rome (ibid., 1912). A. Muñoz, Il restauro della basilica di Santa Sabina (1938). F. Darsy, OP, Santa Sabina (Le chiese di Roma illustrate, 63–4; 1961). Id., Recherches archéologiques à Sainte-Sabine (Monumenti dell'Antichità Cristiana, 2nd ser., Monumenti, 9; 1968). R. Krautheimer and S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 4 (Rome, 1970), pp. 72–98 [in Eng.]. J. P. Kirsch, op. cit., pp. 96–100. H. I. Marrou, 'Sur les origines du titre romain de Sainte-Sabine', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 2 (1932), pp. 316–25. M. D. Darsy, OP, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 218–38, s.v. 'Sabine (Basilique de Sainte-)'.

Saccas, Ammonius. See AMMONIUS SACCAS.

saccos. See SAKKOS.

Sacheverell, Henry (1674–1724), *High Church divine and pamphleteer. Born at Marlborough, he was educated at the Grammar School and at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1701. In 1705 he was elected chaplain of St Saviour's, Southwark (now *Southwark Cathedral). On 15 Aug. 1709 he preached the assize sermon at Derby and on 5 Nov. 1709 before the Lord Mayor at *St Paul's. On both these occasions he upheld the doctrine of non-resistance and emphasized in violent language the perils facing the Church from the Whig government's policy of toleration and allowance of *Occasional Conformity. In the latter sermon (The Perils of False Brethren) he also openly attacked G. *Burnet, Bp. of *Salisbury. In Dec. 1709 the Commons condemned the sermons as seditious and, despite the opposition of the Tories and of many Whigs, as well as strong feeling in the country, Sacheverell was impeached for high crimes and misdemeanours. The sentence (suspension from preaching for three years) was so light as to be a triumph for the accused and he became a popular hero. When the three years had passed, Sacheverell preached on Palm Sunday, 1713, to a packed gathering at St Saviour's, Southwark. The sermon, The Christian Triumph; or, The Duty of Praying for Our Enemies, sold for £100 and had a very wide circulation. In 1713 he was presented by Queen *Anne, who had openly shown him sympathy, to the living of St Andrew's, Holborn.

Although the fall of the Whigs in 1710 was largely the result of the impeachment of Sacheverell, he would prob. not have made his mark in history had he not become the champion of the High Church and Tory parties. Among his pamphlets were Character of a Low Churchman (1701) and The Rights of the Church of England (1705; with Edmund Perkes).

Perils of False Brethren was repr. in facsimile (Exeter, 1974). J. R. *Bloxam, Register of Magdalen, 6 (1879), pp. 98–110. F. Madan, A Bibliography of Dr. Henry Sacheverell (1884). A. T. Scudi, The Sacheverell Affair (New York, 1939). G. Holmes, The Trial of Doctor Sacheverell (1973). W. Hunt in DNB 1 (1897), pp. 80–3.

Sacrament. The word is derived from the Lat. sacramentum, which was used to translate the Gk. μυστήριον ('mystery') in the Lat. NT; sacraments are thus means by which Christians partake in the 'mystery of Christ' (cf. Col. 1: 26 f.; Eph. 3: 4, 9; 6: 19, etc.). The fundamental mystery is the *Incarnation of Christ, and, depending on that, the Church, His Body, through which He communicates Himself to mankind. This communication is accomplished through certain symbolic acts (e.g. the washing of *Baptism, the meal of the *Eucharist) interpreted by the Gospel and the response of faith.

In Christian theology the scope of what the word comprises has varied widely. St *Augustine, who defined it as the 'visible form of invisible grace' or 'a sign of a sacred thing', applied it to formulae such as the Creed and the *Lord's Prayer, and such a wide application was commonplace for the first 1,000 years of the history of the Church. The earliest attempt to classify the sacraments was made by *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite (*c.*500), who distinguished three 'rites' (τελεταί)—Baptism, the Eucharist, and *Unction—to which he added priestly *ordination, monastic consecration, and the funeral service. The same combination is found as a list of six sacraments in St *Theodore of Studios (d. 826), and the threefold classification is presupposed in the De Vita in Christo by N. *Cabasilas (14th cent.).

In the W. a general connotation of the term is still found in *Hugh of St-Victor (d. 1142), who has a large number of sacraments divided into three groups. Very soon, however, W. theology narrowed the connotation by regarding institution by Christ as an essential characteristic. In *Peter Lombard (Sentences, Bk. 4, dist. 1, num. 2) the seven which have become traditional in the W., i.e. Baptism, *Confirmation, the Eucharist, *Penance, Extreme Unction, Orders, and *Matrimony, are enumerated. Other symbolic rites came to be called 'sacramentals' (q.v.). The list was accepted by St *Thomas Aquinas and formally affirmed at the Councils of *Florence (1439; in the 'Decretum pro Armenis') and *Trent (1545–63). Despite the importance of the notion of institution, in several cases no occasion of explicit institution by Christ is apparent, so such institution had to be held to be implicit. Clearly the symbolic significance of the number seven played a part in the formation of the list. A more critical attitude to the Gospels in modern times has increased these difficulties and led to more emphasis on the Church as the fundamental sacrament of Christ in which all the commonly enumerated sacraments are implicit. The W. list of seven sacraments was imposed on the Emp. Michael Palaeologus in 1267, but such a list is rarely found in Orthodox circles until the 16th cent. It was never formally adopted by the Orthodox Church and is rejected by many modern Orthodox authorities.

From early times a special rank among the sacraments was given to Baptism and the Eucharist, both of which are clearly referred to in the Gospels (Mt. 28: 19 and 26: 26–9). In the *Thirty-Nine articles (Art. 25) of the C of E they are differentiated as the 'two Sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the Gospel' as distinct from the other 'five commonly called Sacraments'.

In the Middle Ages, under the influence of *Aristotelian *hylomorphism, a distinction was made between the 'matter' (materia) and the 'form' (forma) of the sacraments, the matter being the undetermined material element (in Baptism, water; in the Eucharist, the bread and the wine) and the form the consecratory words (in Baptism, the pronouncement of the Triple Formula; in the Eucharist, the words 'This is My Body', 'This is My Blood'). This distinction is first found in *William of Auxerre (d. 1231). Despite problems such as that of determining the 'matter', in e.g. Penance and Matrimony, such hylomorphism became the norm in W. theology until the middle of the 20th cent. According to such an approach the right matter and the right form, used with the right *intention, are among the minimal conditions for the validity of the sacrament. Where these conditions are all present the due performance of the act is sufficient to ensure that the sacrament will normally convey grace, since, acc. to Catholic theology, the validity of the sacraments is independent of the worthiness or unworthiness of the minister and hence their working is normally ex opere operato. Nevertheless they do not convey grace to the recipient if he is not rightly disposed. In the absence of faith and repentance he may put an impediment (obex) in the way of the grace which would normally flow from the sacrament. In such cases the sacramental act, though 'valid' is not 'efficacious'.

The theological significance of the sacraments lies in: (1) The exhibition of the principle of the Incarnation. By the embodiment of spiritual reality in material form an appropriate counterpart of the union of God with man in the Person of Christ is made patent. (2) Their expression of the objectivity of God's action on the human soul. The reception of God's gifts is normally dependent not on changing subjective feelings, but on obedience to the Divine will. (3) As ordinances mediated through the Church, their essentially social structure. They are the means whereby the union of God and man consequent on the Incarnation is perpetuated in Christ's mystical Body of His Church, its members incorporated in Him, and through Him united to one another.

Recent theology has reaffirmed the primary NT and patristic understanding of the sacraments as a way of participating in the mystery of Christ through symbolic actions. This was reflected in the documents of the Second *Vatican Council (1962–5) and the rites which have been subsequently authorized. There has been an increased emphasis on the word in the celebration of the sacraments, so that the reading of Scripture and a homily have come to form a normal part of sacramental celebration. The 'word' is thus more than the 'form' of the sacrament; rather it effects an encounter with the Word of Christ by which the mind and heart of the Christian is opened to the incoming grace of God. The suspicion, often aroused by traditional RC theology, of a 'mechanical' understanding of the sacraments with its hylomorphism and notion of ex opere operato causality, is thus dispelled; the Christian can rely on the sacraments because Christ is faithful in His sacraments, not simply because certain rules are observed.

Three of the sacraments, namely Baptism, Confirmation, and Orders, are held to imprint an abiding mark or *character (character indelibilis) on the soul and therefore cannot be repeated. When there is uncertainty as to whether a person has already received these sacraments, they are administered 'conditionally'.

Among the Protestant Churches the *Quakers and the *Salvation Army are the only two large bodies which make no use of sacraments. In Protestantism in general, though the technicalities of sacramental theology are less developed, the greatest importance is often attached to Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The comparative rarity of celebrations of the latter in Protestant Churches in the past, which has survived in some cases, is often matched by a correspondingly high degree of seriousness and devotion in its reception. Great emphasis has always been laid on the belief that the sacraments are expressive of the Word of God.

See also the entries on separate sacraments; also '*Baptism, Eucharist and Ministry'.

Introductory modern studies incl. P. T. *Forsyth, Lectures on the Church and the Sacraments (1917); O. C. Quick, The Christian Sacraments (1927); J. W. C. Wand, The Development of Sacramentalism (1928). F. *Probst, Sakramente und Sakramentalien in den drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderten (1872). W. Knoch, Die Einsetzung der Sakramente durch Christus: Eine Untersuchung zur Sakramententheologie der Frühscholastik von Anselm von Laon bis zu Wilhelm von Auxerre (BGPM, NF 24 [1983]). J. B. *Franzelin, SJ, Tractatus de Sacramentis in Genere (Rome, 1868); P. Schanz, Die Lehre von den heiligen Sakramenten der katholischen Kirche (1893); N. Gihr, Die heiligen Sakramente der katholischen Kirche (Theologische Bibliothek, 2 vols., 1918–21). [E.] H. *Schillebeeckx, OP, De Sacramentele Heilseconomie: Theologische bezinning op S. Thomas' sacramentenleer in het licht van de traditie en van de hedendaagse sacramentsproblematiek (Antwerp, 1952). Id., Christus, Sacrament van de Godsontmoeting (Bilthoven, 1960; Eng. tr., 1963); B. Leeming, SJ, Principles of Sacramental Theology (1956; new edn., 1960). D. M. Baillie, The Theology of the Sacraments and Other Papers (1957), pp. 37–124. K. *Rahner, SJ, Kirche und Sakramente (Quaestiones Disputatae, 10; 1960; Eng. tr., 1963). J. D. Crichton, Christian Celebration: The Mass (1971); id., Christian Celebration: The Sacraments [except the Eucharist] (1973). H. Rondet, SJ, La Vie Sacramentaire: Théologie, histoire et dogme [1972]. B. Spáčil, SJ, Doctrina Theologiae Orientis Separati de Sacramentis in Genere (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 113; 1937). A. Schmemann, Introduction to Liturgical Theology (Eng. tr. from Russ., 1966; Orthodox). J. de Ghellinck, SJ, and others, Pour l'histoire du mot 'Sacramentum' (SSL 3; 1924). A. Michel in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 485–644, s.v. 'Sacrements', with further bibl. See also bibls. to separate sacraments.

sacrament house. A shrine-like receptacle for the *reservation of the Blessed Sacrament. It developed from the stone niche in the wall ('*aumbry'), and in Scotland it always retained this form. Elsewhere, after the introduction of the Feast of *Corpus Christi (1264), it began to take the shape of a small tower, the central part of which was often done in open-work. These sacrament houses, which were popular esp. in Germany, Belgium, and France, were frequently decorated with reliefs depicting the Last Supper, the Passion, or other subjects. From the 16th cent. onwards they were largely displaced by *tabernacles, but current RC legislation permitting reservation away from the altar has led to the revival in some places of receptacles similar to the medieval sacrament houses.

J. Hertkens, Die mittelalterlichen Sakraments-Häuschen (Frankfurt am Main [1908]); E. Maffei, La Réservation eucharistique jusqu'à la Renaissance (Brussels, 1942), pp. 91–122. A. Macpherson, 'Scottish Sacrament Houses', Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, 25 (1891), pp. 89–116. Braun, CA 2, pp. 585–97 passim. F. X. Noppenberger in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 9 (1964), col. 244, s.v. 'Sakramentshäuschen'. See also works cited under RESERVATION.

sacramentals. Acc. to RC theology, sacred signs with spiritual effects, resembling the *sacraments. When the theology of the sacraments was defined and their number limited to seven in the W. Church in the 12th cent., analogous religious practices, not held to have been instituted by Christ, came to be known as 'sacramentals'. In contrast to the sacraments, which are held to convey grace primarily through the power of the rite itself (ex opere operato), sacramentals do so ex opere operantis ecclesiae, that is through the intercession of the Church. Some are closely associated with sacraments (e.g. the blessing of baptismal water, holy oils, or the ring in marriage), and by them men and women are prepared to receive the chief fruit of the sacrament; by others (such as *grace at meals or religious *profession), various human activities are rendered holy. In the nature of the case there is no definitive list of sacramentals.

For current formulas, see the section of the *Rituale Romanum, De Benedictionibus (1984). The subject is treated in the Catechism of the Catholic Church* (1992), nos. 1667–79. Popular account in M. Donovan, Sacramentals (1925). F. *Probst, Sakramente und Sakramentalien in den drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderten (1872), pp. 16–96. J. R. Quinn in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 790–2, s.v. See also s.v. BLESSING.

Sacramentarians. The name which M. *Luther gave to those theologians (esp. U. *Zwingli and J. *Oecolampadius) who maintained that the Bread and Wine of the *Eucharist were the Body and Blood of Christ in only a 'sacramental', i.e. metaphorical, sense. The word thus came to be commonly used in the 16th cent. for all those who denied the doctrine of the *Real Presence of Christ in the Eucharist. It has occasionally been applied also in other senses.

Sacramentary (Lat. Liber Sacramentorum). In the W. Church, the liturgical book in use down to the 13th cent. for the celebrant at Mass; it contained the *Canon of the Mass and the proper *Collects, *Prefaces, and other prayers for use throughout the year, but not the *Epistles or *Gospels, nor those parts of the rite (e.g. the *Gradual) which were sung. Sacramentaries also contained *Ordination formularies, blessings, and other prayers used by priests and bishops. From the 10th cent. onwards, the desirability of having all the parts of the service in a single book led to the gradual replacement of the Sacramentary by the *Missal and *Pontifical.

Older edns. of the texts incl. G. M. *Tommasi, Codices Sacramentorum (Rome, 1680); id., Antiqui Libri Missarum (ibid., 1691); L. A. *Muratori, Liturgia Romana Vetus (2 vols., Venice, 1748); J. A. *Assemani, Codex Liturgicus Ecclesiae Universae (13 vols., Rome, 1749–66; repr. in facsimile, Farnborough, Hants, 1968–9). For more recent edns., see GELASIAN, GREGORIAN and LEONINE SACRAMENTARIES, MISSALE FRANCORUM, MISSALE GALLICANUM VETUS, and MISSALE GOTHICUM. L. Delisle, Mémoire sur d'anciens sacramentaires (1886); F. *Probst, Die ältesten römischen Sakramentarien und Ordines (1892); E. Bourque, Étude sur les sacramentaires romains (1, Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 20, 1948; 2. 1, Bibliothèque Théologique de Laval, Quebec; 1952; 2. 2, Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 25, 1958), with extensive bibl. C. Vogel, Medieval Liturgy: An Introduction to the Sources, rev. Eng. tr. by W. G. Storey and N. K. Rasmussen, OP (Washington, DC [1988]), pp. 61–134. K. Gamber (ed.), Sakramentartypen: Versuch einer Gruppierung der Handschriften und Fragmente bis zur Jahrtausendwende (Texte und Arbeiten, 1. Abteilung, Heft 49/1; 1958); id., Codices Liturgici Latini Antiquiores (Spicilegii Friburgensis Subsidia, 1; Fribourg, 1963; with Suppl., ibid. 1A; 1988) [both books are useful but inaccurate]. V. Leroquais, Les Sacramentaires et les missels manuscrits des bibliothèques publiques de France (1924; with plates). M. Andrieu, 'Quelques remarques sur le classement des sacramentaires', JLW 11 (1931), pp. 46–66. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 242–85, s.v. 'Sacramentaires'; A. Bugnini in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1558–69, s.v. 'Sacramentario'; H. Ashworth, OSB, in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 792–800, s.v. See also bibl. to MISSAL and to ORDINES ROMANI.

Sacred College (Lat. Sacrum Collegium). The former and still commonly used designation of the college of *cardinals (q.v.), though, in common with other such bodies, 'sacrum' has now been dropped from the official title.

Sacred Heart. Devotion to the physical heart of Jesus, though theologically defined and officially practised only since the 18th cent., can be traced back to the Middle Ages. It seems to have sprung from the cult of the Wound in the Side. It is to be met with in two treatises of St *Bonaventure, 'Vitis mystica' (formerly attributed to St *Bernard) and 'De ligno vitae'. Extracts from the latter are incorporated in the present Office of the feast, and the devotion appears richly developed in the visions attributed to St Mechtild of Hackeborn (d. 1299) and St *Gertrude (d. *c.*1302), both at the convent of Helfta. But the devotion was long confined to a relatively small number of mystics and saints, e.g. *Julian of Norwich and St *Frances of Rome. A new departure was made in the 16th cent., when the devotion extended from the visions of the mystics to the regular practice of many given to the ascetic life, and it was fostered esp. by the *Carthusians. A little later the *Jesuits became its most ardent advocates in France and St *Francis de Sales imbued with it his *Visitandines, and these two orders worked together to obtain for the Sacred Heart a place in the official as well as the popular life of the Church. The first to provide an elaborate theological and liturgical foundation for both devotion and feast, however, was St John *Eudes (q.v.). But his efforts remained without much response until the famous visions (1673–1675) of the Visitandine nun, St *Margaret Mary Alacoque, which gave a definite shape to the object of the devotion and its practices. Its most prominent feature was reparation for the outrages committed against the Divine Love, esp. in the Blessed Sacrament. From that time it became one of the most popular RC devotions, though its liturgical observance was not permitted until 1765, when *Clement XIII authorized the Mass and Office of the feast. It is observed on the Friday in the week after *Corpus Christi. In 1856 *Pius IX extended the feast to the universal Church; in 1889 *Leo XIII raised it to a *Double of the First Class, and ten years later solemnly consecrated all mankind to the Sacred Heart. The Mass and Office of the feast were revised by *Pius XI in 1928 when it received a privileged octave. The octave was dropped in 1960. In the 1969 Roman calendar the observance is now classed as a '*solemnity'.

J. Croiset, La Dévotion au Sacré-Cœur de N.S. Jésus-Christ (Lyons, 1691; 3rd and definitive edn., 1694; Eng. tr. from Ital., London, 1863; modern Eng. tr. from 1694 edn., Dublin and London, 1949). J.-B. Terrien, SJ, La Dévotion au Sacré-Cœur de Jésus d'après les documents authentiques et la théologie (1893). J. V. Bainvel, La Dévotion au Sacré-Cœur de Jésus (1906; Eng. tr., 1924). D. Chastelain, De Cultu Eucharistici Cordis Jesu: Historia Doctrina—Documenta (Paris, 1928). Useful material in the Encyclical of Pius XI revising the Mass and Office (8 May 1928), pr. in AAS 20 (1928), pp. 165–78. P. Debongnie, CSSR, 'Commencement et recommencements de la dévotion au Coeur de Jésus', in Le Coeur: Les Études Carmélitaines (1950), pp. 147–92; K. *Rahner, SJ, ' "Siehe dieses Herz!" Prolegomena zu einer Theologie der Herz-Jesu-Verehrung', Schriften zur Theologie, 3 (1956), pp. 379–90; id., 'Einige Thesen zur Theologie der Herz-Jesu-Verehrung', ibid., pp. 391–415; Eng. tr. of both arts. in Theological Investigations, 3 (1967), pp. 321–52. G. de Becker, SSCC, Les Sacrés-Cœurs de Jésus et de Marie (Études Picpuciennes, 5; 1959), pp. 9–235; J. Le Brun, 'Politics and Spirituality: The Devotion to the Sacred Heart', Concilium, 9, no. 7 (1971), pp. 29–43. J. Bainvel in CE 7 (1910), pp. 163–7, s.v. 'Heart of Jesus. Devotion to the'; id. in DTC 3 (1908), cols. 271–351, s.v. 'Cœur Sacré de Jésus (Dévotion au)', with bibl.; L. Penzo in EC 4 (1950), cols. 1059–64, s.v. 'Cuore di Gesù', with bibl.

Sacred Heart of Mary. Devotion to the heart of the BVM was first seriously fostered in the 17th cent. by St John *Eudes (q.v.), who linked it closely with the cult of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. In 1805 *Pius VII allowed the observance of a feast of the Pure Heart of Mary; in 1855 a proper Mass, based on texts proposed by Eudes, was authorized for use in some places, and an Office followed in 1857. Words attributed to the BVM at *Fátima popularized the cult; in 1942 *Pius XII consecrated the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary and in 1944 he made universal a corresponding feast to be observed on 22 Aug., the *Octave day of the *Assumption. In the 1969 RC calendar this observance became an optional '*memoria'.

Pius XII's Oratio consecrating the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary is pr. in AAS 34 (1942), pp. 345 f.; the new Office and Mass provided for the feast in Aug. 1944 are pr. ibid. 37 (1945), pp. 44–52. G. de Becker, SSCC, Les Sacrés-Cœurs de Jésus et de Marie (Études Picpuciennes, 5; 1959), pp. 239–437, with bibl. pp. 243–5. J. Arragain, 'La Dévotion au Cœur de Marie' in H. du Manoir, SJ (ed.), Maria, 5 (Paris, 1958), pp. 1007–48. See also works of St John Eudes.

sacrifice. Sacrifice is fundamentally the offering to the Deity of a gift, esp. a living creature. It is a widespread feature of religion, incl. that of the Hebrews. Early in the OT there is the record of the sacrifice of Cain and *Abel (Gen. 4: 3–5), while the demand for the sacrifice of *Isaac (Gen. 22) underlies the need for the offering to be a costly one and may be taken to suggest that human sacrifice was not excluded (cf. Jephthah's daughter, Jgs. 11: 32–40; also Exod. 22: 29 and Mic. 6: 7). From the earliest times also sacrifice was particularly associated with the making of covenants; the most important of these were God's covenants with *Noah after the Flood (Gen. 8: 20–9: 17), with *Abraham (Gen. 15), and with Israel at *Sinai (Ex. 24: 4–8). After the settlement in Canaan sacrificial observances became increasingly elaborate and they provoked considerable criticism from some of the 8th–7th-cent. Prophets (e.g. Amos 5: 21–5, Hos. 6: 6, and Jer. 7: 21–3). At the end of the 7th cent. King Josiah (*c.*640–*c.*608 BC) prohibited sacrifices except at the *Temple in Jerusalem, and when the city was destroyed at the Exile (*c.*586) the regular round of official sacrifices temporarily ceased. After the Exile, when the Temple was rebuilt, an even more elaborate system of sacrifices was devised; it is described in detail in the final form of the *Pentateuch, and esp. in Leviticus. Apart from a brief interruption by *Antiochus Epiphanes (168), this sacrificial system was practised in the restored Temple until its destruction in AD 70. The chief annual sacrifices were those of the *Paschal Lamb sacrificed for each household at the Passover in memory of the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt (Exod. 12: 1–28) and those of the Day of *Atonement (q.v.).

In the NT Christ appears to have tolerated the current practice of sacrifice (cf. Matt. 5: 23 f., 8: 4); but He quoted with approval the teaching of Hosea subordinating 'sacrifice' to 'mercy' (Matt. 9: 13, 12: 7: cf. Hos. 6: 6). At the Institution of the *Eucharist, which took place in the sacrificial context of the Passover (whether on 14 Nisan or 15 Nisan) and with reference to the covenant-sacrifice of Exod. 24: 4–8, He pointed to the sacrificial quality of His death (cf. Mk. 10: 45), speaking of the shedding of His blood in a New Covenant. Both St *John the Baptist (Jn. 1: 29) and the Evangelist (Jn. 19: 14 and 36) appear to imply that Christ, as the 'Lamb of God', is Himself a Sacrificial Victim, a doctrine endorsed by St *Paul in 1 Cor. 5: 7, and made more explicit in Eph. 5: 2 (cf. also 1 Pet. 1: 19), while Rev. 13: 8 emphasizes the eternal nature of the Lord's Sacrifice. The author of *Hebrews (q.v.) stresses the High Priesthood of Christ, who by His perfect obedience in the voluntary offering of Himself (9: 26, cf. 10: 5 ff.) made 'one sacrifice for sins for ever' (10: 12), in contrast to the deficiencies of the OT sacrifices, and he compares the Lord's Passion to the sin-offering (13: 11 f.).

The implications of these biblical ideas are developed by the Fathers, who stress esp. the uniqueness of Christ's sacrifice in that He was (1) a voluntary victim, (2) a victim of infinite value, and (3) also Himself the Priest. See also ATONEMENT.

The chief development of the patristic and medieval period was in regard to the *Eucharist (q.v.). From early times the Eucharistic Offering was called a sacrifice in virtue of its immediate relation to the Sacrifice of Christ (e.g. by *Serapion of Thmuis). While it can also be said that in the Eucharist Christ is sacrificed 'again', yet St *Thomas Aquinas insisted that the Mass was itself an 'immolation' only in so far as it was an 'image' of the Passion which was the 'real immolation' (Summa Theol. III. 83. 1). In rejecting the doctrine of 'the sacrifices of Masses' the Anglican *Thirty-Nine Articles (Art. 31) is perhaps more concerned to deny the idea, current in the Middle Ages, of the repeated 'immolation' of Christ than to repudiate belief in the Eucharistic Sacrifice altogether. See also EUCHARIST.

In accordance with such passages as Ps. 40: 6–8 and Rom. 12: 1, Christian theology has commonly asserted that the individual's conscious obedience, active or passive, to the will of God may be a form of sacrifice which can be offered to God the Father in imitation of, and in union with, the Sacrifice of Christ.

E. O. James, Origins of Sacrifice (1933). W. R. *Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites (1889), pp. 196–419; 3rd edn. by S. A. *Cook (1927), pp. 213–440, with full notes; S. C. Gayford, Sacrifice and Priesthood (1924); G. B. *Gray, Sacrifice in the Old Testament (posthumous, 1925); W. O. E. Oesterley, Sacrifices in Ancient Israel (1937); R. de Vaux, OP, Les Sacrifices de l'Ancien Testament (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, 1; 1964; Eng. tr., Cardiff, 1964). J. Lécuyer, CSSP, Le Sacrifice de la nouvelle alliance (1962). F. M. Young, Sacrifice and the Death of Christ (1975). R. J. Daly, SJ, The Origins of the Christian Doctrine of Sacrifice (1978). G. [W. E. C.] Ashby, Sacrifice: Its Nature and Purpose (1988). S. W. Sykes (ed.), Sacrifice and Redemption: Durham Essays in Theology (Cambridge, 1991). L. Sabourin, SJ, 'A Bibliography of Sacrifice in the Bible and the Ancient Near East', in S. Lyonnet, SJ, and L. Sabourin, Sin, Redemption, and Sacrifice: A Biblical and Patristic Study (Analecta Biblica, 48; 1970), pp. 299–333, incl. a section on the Eucharistic Sacrifice. On the Eucharist as Sacrifice, as well as works cited s.v. Eucharist, K. [W.] Stevenson, Eucharist and Offering (New York [1986]), with bibl.; id., Accept This Offering: The Eucharist as Sacrifice Today (1989). A. Gaudel in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 662–92, s.v., with bibl.

sacrilege. Strictly a violation or contemptuous treatment of a person, thing, or place, publicly dedicated to the worship of God. Moral theologians hold that it may be either personal, i.e. directed against a person in holy orders or a religious (e.g. ill-treatment or sins against chastity), or real, i.e. committed against a thing, esp. the Sacraments (e.g. treating irreverently the Blessed Sacrament or administering or receiving the Sacraments in a state of mortal sin), or local, i.e. committed in a holy place (e.g. homicide in a church). Sacrilege is held to be a grave sin in itself, though venial if the matter is trivial. In everyday language the term is used more vaguely, though in a sense similar to that of moral theology.

The subject is regularly treated in works on moral theology. N. Iung in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 692–703, s.v. 'Sacrilège'.

sacring bell. A bell, also known as a 'Sanctus bell', rung at Mass to focus the people's attention. The use of a bell, esp. at the *Elevation of the Elements, dates from the 12th cent. The *Ritus Servandus required the bell to be rung at the *Sanctus and at the Elevation, and it became customary to ring it at certain other moments as well. Where bells are used at all, they are now usually rung at the Elevation and before the communion of the celebrant.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Bells of the Mass', The Month, 123 (1914), pp. 389–401. Braun, CA, pp. 573–80. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 261 f.; Eng. tr., 2, p. 131, with refs.

sacristan. The term is used either (1) for a *sexton or (2), more commonly, for the sacrist or official who has charge of the contents of a church, esp. those used in Divine worship such as sacred vessels, vestments, etc. He may be in holy orders, as is usual in a cathedral, or a layman.

sacristy (Lat. sacristia, sacrarium, or secretarium; Gk. διακονικόν). A room annexed to a church or chapel for keeping the sacred vessels and for the vesting of priests and other clerics. Sacristies were introduced *c.*400 in Syria as annexes to the apse; in the Middle Ages they came to be built behind or on either side of the high altar. In large conventual churches and cathedrals they often consist of a suite of separate rooms for the higher and the lower clergy and for lay servers. They are furnished with chests, cupboards, and a table for vestments, liturgical books, and vessels, a basin for the washing of hands, a prie-dieu, and a crucifix. In early times the sacristy was often used for the permanent reservation of the Blessed Sacrament, and it is commonly still so used for the purpose when the Blessed Sacrament is removed from the church between Good Friday and the Paschal Vigil Service. In current Anglican usage, the room where the clergy vest is often known as the (priests') vestry, the term sacristy tending to be restricted to vestries in churches with an elaborate ceremonial, where a larger number of liturgical objects need to be stored.

Sadducees. A Jewish politico-religious sect, opposed to the '*Pharisees'. The name is probably derived from the high priest Zadok (2 Sam. 8: 17). The party originated at the time of the *Hasmonaeans. Its members were never numerous, but they included wealthy men of high standing, such as some *High Priests. Though their teachings were never popular, individual Sadducees exercised great political influence from the reign of John Hyrcanus (135–104 BC) onwards, and in the time of Christ they were of particular importance in *Jerusalem and in the *Temple. Little can be recovered of their beliefs, but they rejected the traditional interpretations accepted by the Pharisees and accepted the written Law only. Thus they rejected belief in retribution in an afterlife and in the resurrection of the body (Mt. 22: 23), and also the existence of angels and spirits (Acts 23: 8). In the NT they appear to have taken a leading part against Jesus, perhaps because they feared trouble with the Roman power, and in any case because they opposed His doctrines (Mt. 22: 23–33, etc.). They also repeatedly attacked the Apostles for teaching the Resurrection of Christ (Acts 4: 1–3; 5: 17; cf. 23: 6–10). After the fall of Jerusalem they disappear from history.

For works dealing with the Pharisees and the Sadducees, together, see also bibl. to PHARISEES. G. Hölscher, Der Sadduzäismus (1906); R. Leszynsky, Die Sadduzäer (1912); J. Le Moyne, OSB, Les Sadducées (Études Bibliques, 1972), with good bibl. T. W. Manson, 'Sadducee and Pharisee—The Origin and Significance of the Names', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 22 (1938), pp. 144–59, esp. pp. 144–53. J. Jeremias, Jerusalem zur Zeit Jesus (3rd edn., Göttingen, 1962), pp. 259–64; Eng. tr., Jerusalem in the Time of Christ (1969), pp. 228–32. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 404–14, with bibl. pp. 381 f. H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrash, 4 (1928), pp. 339–52. K. Kohler in JE 10 (1905), pp. 630–3, s.v.; R. Meyer in TWNT 7 (1964; Eng. tr. 1971), pp. 35–54, s.v. Σαδδουκαῖος, with bibl.

Sadhu, the. See SUNDAR SINGH, SADHU.

Sadoleto, Jacopo (1477–1547), cardinal. A classical and philosophical scholar and favourite of Card. O. Carafa, he was appointed secretary to *Leo X in 1513, and in 1517 Bp. of Carpentras. A man of pure and blameless character and unselfish zeal, he soon became one of the most influential ecclesiastics of his time, one of his chief concerns being the reconciliation of the Protestants. In 1536 he was made cardinal by *Paul III together with R. *Pole, and in 1537 he became a member of the special commission for the reform of the Church and the preparation of a General Council. At the same time he endeavoured unsuccessfully to win back P. *Melanchthon (1537) and the city of *Geneva (1539) to the Catholic faith. In 1542 as Papal legate he failed to effect a reconciliation between the French King Francis I and the Emp. *Charles V. During his last years he was among the most trusted advisers of Paul III, constantly advocating reform. Among his writings are the treatise De Peccato Originali and De Exstructione Ecclesiae Catholicae as well as a commentary on Romans, which was forbidden at Rome until its doctrine of grace, which was suspected of *Semipelagianism, had been corrected in the *Augustinian sense.

Works [ed. D. Raustius] (Mainz, 1607), with Life by A. Florebelli prefixed [no pagination]; also ed. in 4 vols., Verona, 1737–8. Eng. tr. of his De Pueris Recte Instituendis by E. T. Campagnac and K. Forbes (London, 1916) and of his letter to the city of Geneva, along with Calvin's reply, by J. C. Olin, A Reformation Debate (New York, 1966). Modern studies by G. von Schulthess-Rechberg (Zurich, 1909), S. Ritter, Un umanista teologo (Rome, 1912), and R. M. Douglas (Cambridge, Mass., 1959). W. Reinhard, 'Jacopo Sadoleto' in E. Iserloh (ed.), Katholische Theologen der Reformationszeit, 4 (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 47; 1987), pp. 29–42, with bibl. J. E. Sandys, A History of Classical Scholarship, 2 (1908), pp. 115 f. F. Gagliuolo in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1611 f., s.v.; R. M. Douglas in NCE 12 (1967), p. 846, s.v.

Sahdona (or, from the Gk., 'Martyrius'), 7th-cent. spiritual writer. A native of the Persian Empire, he was educated at Nisibis and about 615/20 entered a monastery. About 635/40 he became Bp. of Mahoze in the *Church of the East. He was, however, expelled from that Church because of his teaching on the Person of Christ and fled to *Edessa. It was very probably here that he wrote 'The Book of Perfection', one of the masterpieces of Syriac spiritual writing.

Œuvres spirituelles, ed., with Fr. tr., by A. de Halleux, OFM (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 86–7, 90–1, 110–13; 1960–5). S. P. Brock, 'A further fragment of the Sinai Sahdona Manuscript', Muséon, 81 (1968), pp. 139–54; A. de Halleux, 'Un chapitre retrouvé du Livre de Perfection de Martyrius', ibid. 88 (1975), pp. 253–96. L. Leloir, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 737–42, s.v. 'Martyrius (Sahdona)'.

Sahidic. One of the principal dialects of Coptic (q.v.; see also BOHAIRIC and FAYUMIC). Among older scholars it was known as 'Thebaic', from Thebes, the chief city of Upper (i.e. Southern) Egypt, where Sahidic was used early in the Christian era. The Scriptures were translated into Sahidic prob. as early as the 3rd or even the end of the 2nd cent. In recent times a large number of papyrus fragments and parchment manuscripts have been discovered. Notable biblical MSS include *Bodmer Papyrus 23 (4th cent.), containing Is. 47: 1–66: 24, an almost complete Acts (also containing Deut. and Jonah; early 4th cent., British Library Or. 7594), and the Gospels of Sts Mark, Luke, and John in Barcelona (P. Palau Rib. Inv. no. 181–3; 5th cent.). The text of the NT in the Sahidic version has both '*Neutral' and '*Western' elements, though the extent of the W. elements is less considerable than used to be supposed. Sahidic was the principal literary dialect from the 4th to the 10th cent. and has an extensive body of ecclesiastical literature, mostly translated from Greek; native writers include *Pachomius, *Shenoute, and his disciple Besa.

The edn. of the Sahidic NT by G. Horner (7 vols., Oxford, 1911–24) now needs to be supplemented; the Barcelona texts of Mk., Lk., and Jn., with variants from certain other MSS, ed. H. Quecke (Papyrologica Castroctaviana, 4, 6, and 11, respectively; Barcelona, 1972, 1977, and 1984). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 99–152. T. Orlandi, Elementi di lingua e letteratura copta (Milan [1970]). For works on grammar and dictionaries, see COPTIC (LANGUAGE).

St Albans. A church has existed at Verulam on the site of the reputed martyrdom of St *Alban from at least the time of *Bede; and *c.*794 King Offa endowed a monastery here in expiation of the murder of St *Ethelbert, King of the East Angles, which soon became one of the most famous in the country. In 1077 Paul of Caen, the first Norman abbot, began to rebuild it. Its wealth continued to increase, esp. after *Hadrian IV gave it precedence over all other English monasteries and exempted it from episcopal jurisdiction. At the Reformation the church was bought from *Edward VI (1553) for use as a parish church. In 1877 a see of St Albans was constituted, by taking Hertfordshire and Essex from London and N. Woolwich from *Rochester to make the new diocese; and the abbey became the new cathedral church. In 1914 Essex and N. Woolwich were transferred to the new see of Chelmsford, while the county of Bedford was taken from *Lincoln and added as compensation to St Albans. See also MATTHEW PARIS.

Thomas Walsingham, Gesta Abbatum Monasterii Sancti Albani, ed. H. T. Riley (3 vols., RS, 1867–9); fuller text of the St Albans Chronicle, 1406–1420, ed. from Bodley MS 462 by V. H. Galbraith (Oxford, 1937). John Amundesham, Annales Monasterii S. Albani, ed. H. T. Riley (2 vols., RS, 1870–1). Chronica Monasterii S. Albani: Registra Quorundam Abbatum Monasterii S. Albani, qui Saeculo XVmo floruere, ed. id. (2 vols., ibid., 1872–3). W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 2 (1819 edn.), pp. 178–255. P. Newcome, The History of the Ancient and Royal Foundation, called the Abbey of St Alban . . . from the Foundation thereof in 793, to its Dissolution in 1539 (2 pts., bound in one, 1793–5); J. C. and C. A. Buckler, A History of the Architecture of the Abbey Church of St Alban, with especial reference to the Norman Structure (1847). L. F. R. Williams, History of the Abbey of St Alban (1917). Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England), A Guide to Saint Albans Cathedral (1952; 2nd edn., 1982). E. Toms, The Story of St Albans (1962). R. [A. K.] Runcie (ed.), Cathedral and City: St Albans Ancient and Modern (1977). C. R. Peers, W. Page, and others in VCH, Hertfordshire, 2, ed. W. Page (1908), pp. 469–515. W. Levison, 'St. Alban and St. Albans', Antiquity, 15 (1941), pp. 337–59. The St Albans Psalter, a richly illuminated 12th-cent. MS prob. written at St Albans for Christina, anchoress of Markyate, ed. O. Pächt, C. R. Dodwell, and F. Wormald (Studies of the Warburg Institute, 25; 1960).

St Asaph. The church of St Asaph (called Llanelwy in earlier Welsh sources) was in origin a monastic settlement, traditionally held to be founded by St *Kentigern in the late 6th cent. According to a 12th-cent Life of the saint, he was succeeded at Llanelwy by his disciple, St *Asaph, from whom the church later took its name. It became a territorial diocese in the early 12th cent. The present Anglican diocese comprises the whole or parts of the counties of Conwy, Flintshire, Denbighshire, and Wrexham. The present cathedral is largely the work of Bp. Redman (*c.*1480); the choir was rebuilt *c.*1770; and the whole restored by G. G. *Scott (1869–75). Notable Bishops of St Asaph include *Geoffrey of Monmouth (1152–4), Adam Parvipontanus (1175–80), R. *Pecock (1444–50), W. *Morgan (1601–4), I. Barrow, the elder (1670–80), W. *Beveridge (1704–8), and S. *Horsley (1802–6).

'Summi Libri Rubei Asaphensis communiter dicti "Llyfr Coch Asaph", exscrpt. ex Originali 26° Octobris 1602', in Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica, 2 (1835), pp. 255–79; 'Index to "Llyfr Coch Asaph" copied out of a MS. in the Bishop's Library at St. Asaph', ed. G. Roberts in Archaeologia Cambrensis, 3rd ser. 14 (1868), pp. 151–66, 329–40, with notes pp. 433–43. The Registers of the 13 ancient parishes of the Diocese in the County of Shropshire, ed. W. P. W. Phillimore, W. G. D. Fletcher, and D. R. Thomas (Shropshire Parish Register Society, 8 vols. bound in 11, 1899–1922). B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of St Asaph and the Edifices belonging to it (1720; enlarged edn. by E. Edwards, 2 vols., 1801). D. R. Thomas, Esgobaeth Llanelwy: A History of the Diocese of St Asaph (1874; enlarged edn., 3 vols., Oswestry, 1906–13). Id., St Asaph (Diocesan Histories, 1888); P. B. I. Bax, The Cathedral Church of Saint Asaph (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1904). J. Fisher in DECH (1912), pp. 532–5, s.v. See also works cited s.v. WALES, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Saint-Cyran, Abbé de (1581–1643), Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, one of the authors of *Jansenism. A protégé of Justus Lipsius at the *Jesuit College at Louvain, and then a fellow-student at Paris (1604–10) and Bayonne (1611–17) with C. *Jansen, with whom he made a close friendship, he was attracted to St *Augustine's writings, the theology of which he preferred to the prevailing scholasticism. In 1617 he settled for a time at Poitiers, where he was secretary to the Bishop, de la Rocheposay. In 1620 he was created commendatory Abbot of Saint-Cyran and thenceforward lived mainly in Paris, seeking out all the chief personalities of the time (*Vincent de Paul, J.-J. *Olier, G. Tarisse, P. de *Bérulle). He made it his object to reform Catholicism on Augustinian lines, largely in the hope of defeating Protestantism with its own weapons. From 1623 he became closely associated with the influential *Arnauld family and with *Port-Royal, and from 1633 as spiritual counsellor of the convent exercised an immense religious influence. Between 1617 and 1635 he was the recipient of a long series of letters from Jansen (pub. Louvain, 1654). His power led *Richelieu to consider him a dangerous character, and from 1638 until 1643 after Richelieu's death he was incarcerated in the fortress of Vincennes, where he wrote his Lettres chrétiennes et spirituelles (pub. 1645). He was held in great veneration by later Jansenists, who looked up to him as a martyr. His writings include Somme des fautes . . . du P. Garasse (1626), an attack on the *Jesuits; Petrus Aurelius de Hierarchia Ecclesiastica (1631), a plea for the rights of the episcopate against the Papacy, partly based on M. Antonio *de Dominis's De Republica Christiana; and Théologie familière (1642).

C. Lancelot, Mémoires touchant la vie de M. de S. Cyran (2 vols., Cologne, 1738). J. Lafferière, Étude sur Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, abbé de Saint-Cyran (Louvain, 1912). J. Orcibal, Les Origines du jansénisme (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 16), 2 and 3, Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, abbé de Saint-Cyran et son temps, 4, Lettres inédites de Jean Duvergier de Hauranne, abbé de Saint-Cyran, ed. A. Barnes, and 5, La Spiritualité de Saint-Cyran avec ses écrits de piété inédits (1947–62). J. Orcibal in DHGE 14 (1960), cols. 1216–41, s.v. 'Duvergier de Hauranne (Jean-Ambroise)'; B. Chédozeau in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 140–50, s.v. See also bibl. to JANSENISM and PORT-ROYAL.

St Davids. Acc. to tradition a monastery was founded in Menevia by St *David (6th cent.), the Patron of *Wales, which was thereafter called St Davids. The early history is fragmentary and uncertain, but a succession of bishops followed. The Life of St David, written by Rhygyfarch in the late 11th cent., was designed to bolster the claims of the Welsh bishops to independence from *Canterbury. On the death of the last native Welsh bishop in 1115, however, King Henry I forced on the claswyr or clergy as their bishop Bernard, chaplain of Queen Matilda, who was prepared to recognize the authority of the Archbishop. Some time between 1124 and 1130 the Chapter of St Davids addressed to Pope Honorius II a letter claiming metropolitan status. In the latter part of his episcopate Bp. Bernard also tried to secure Papal recognition of this claim, but without success, even though in 1140 two other Welsh bishops were ready to recognize his primacy. The attempts of *Giraldus Cambrensis to secure metropolitan status for St Davids in 1198–1203 were equally unsuccessful. Meanwhile, the shrine of St David became famous, and was visited by *William I, Henry II, Edward I and his Queen Eleanor; and, acc. to an inscription found on the shrine by Abp. *Pecham (1240–92), two pilgrimages to St Davids were the equivalent of one to Rome. Today only the stone base of the shrine survives, but the reputed relics of St David are preserved close by. The present beautiful cathedral was begun by Bp. Peter de Leia (1176–98). Among his successors were Henry Gower (1328–47), the 'Menevian [*William of] Wykeham', who built the stone rood-screen and the fine episcopal palace (now in ruins); Henry *Chichele (1408–14), afterwards Abp. of Canterbury; W. *Barlow (1536–48), the chief consecrator of Abp. M. *Parker (1559); and W. *Laud (1621–6). The official title of the Bishop of St Davids is 'Episcopus Menevensis'.

The Episcopal Registers of the Diocese of St David's, 1397 to 1518, ed., with Eng. tr., by R. F. Isaacson (Cymmrodorion Record Series no. 6, vols. 1 and 2, 1917; vol. 3, A Study of the Published Registers by R. A. Roberts, 1920). J. W. Willis-Bund (ed.), An Extent of all the Lands and Rents of the Lord Bishop of St David's, made by Master David Fraunceys, Chancellor of St David's . . . in the Year of Our Lord 1326: Usually called the Black Book of St David's (ibid., no. 5; 1902). J. C. Davies (ed.), Episcopal Acts and Cognate Documents relating to Welsh Dioceses 1066–1272, 1 (Historical Society of the Church in Wales, 1; 1946), pp. 233–413. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of St David's, and the Edifices belonging to it as they stood in the Year 1715 (1717). W. B. Jones and E. A. Freeman, The History and Antiquities of Saint David's (1856). [J.] W. Evans and R. Worsley, Eglwys Gadeiriol Tyddewi, St Davids Cathedral, 1181–1981 (Aberystwith, 1981). D. W. James, St Davids and Dewisland: A Social History (Cardiff, 1981), esp. chs. 2, 3, 6, 7, and 8. F. Morgan in DECH (1912), pp. 535–9, s.v. See also works cited under DAVID, ST, and WALES, CHRISTIANITY IN.

St-Denis. The *Benedictine abbey at St-Denis, four miles N. of *Paris, which was founded *c.*625 and contained the reputed shrine of St Denis (see DIONYSIUS, ST [3]), was for centuries the richest and most important in France. As it became the regular burying-place of the kings of France and other French princes and nobles, it long enjoyed royal favour, and over the high altar was suspended the 'Oriflamme' of the kings of France (originally the banner of the abbey). Here St *Joan of Arc hung up her arms in 1429, and *Henry IV renounced his Protestantism in 1593. Early in the 17th cent. it was constituted the chief abbey of an independent Benedictine congregation, but in 1633 it was attached to the *Maurists. The abbey (which had been reduced to the rank of a priory in 1691 by Louis XIV) was dissolved and sacked at the Revolution (1792–3), but the buildings were restored under Napoleon III, and are now a 'national monument'.

The best edn. of the book of Abbot *Suger (q.v.), Sugerii Abbatis Sancti Dionysii Liber, is that, with Eng. tr. and introd., by E. Panofsky (Princeton, NJ, 1946). G. G. Meerssseman, OP (ed.), Les Capitules du Diurnal de Saint-Denis (Cod. Verona Cap. LXXXVIII, Saec. IX) (Spicilegium Friburgense, 30; 1986); E. B. Foley (ed.), The First Ordinary of the Royal Abbey of St-Denis in France (Paris, Bibliothèque Mazarine 526) (ibid. 32; 1990). J. Doublet, OSB, Histoire de l'abbaye de S. Denys en France (1625); M. Félibien, OSB, Histoire de l'abbaye royale de Saint-Denys en France (1706). [F.] de Guilhermy, Monographie de l'église royale de Saint-Denis: Tombeaux et figures historiques (1848). J. Formigé, L'Abbaye royale de Saint-Denis: Recherches nouvelles (1960). S. McK. Crosby, The Royal Abbey of Saint-Denis from its Beginnings to the Death of Suger, 475–1151, ed. P. Z. Blum (Yale Publications on the History of Art, 37 [1987]), and earlier works of this author. L. Grodecki, Les Vitraux de Saint-Denis, 1 (Corpus Vitrearum Medii Aevi, France, Études, 1; 1976). Le Trésor de Saint-Denis (Catalogue of exhibition at the Musée du Louvre, Paris, 12 mars–17 juin 1991).

St Gall. See GALL, ST.

St-Germain-des-Prés. An abbey in Paris on the S. bank of the Seine, founded in the 16th cent. St *Germanus of Paris dedicated the church to the Holy Cross and St Vincent on a 23 Dec. between 557 and 559, but it later assumed his name. In the 17th cent. it gained great celebrity when it adopted the *Maurist reform and became the headquarters of such scholars as J. *Mabillon and B. de *Montfaucon. Most of the abbey was destroyed by fire during the French Revolution, but its fine collection of MSS was saved, and mostly passed in 1795–6 to the Bibliothèque Nationale.

J. Bouillart, OSB, Histoire de l'abbaye royale de Saint-Germain-des-Prez (1724). F. Ribadeau Dumas, Histoire de Saint Germain des Prés, abbaye royale [1958]. M. Ultee, The Abbey of St Germain des Prés in the Seventeenth Century (1981). J. B. Vanel (ed.), Nécrologe des religieux de la Congrégation de Saint-Maur décédés à l'Abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés (1896). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1102–50, s.v. 'Germain-des-Prés (Saint-)', with refs. L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 2710 f. See also bibl. to MAURISTS.

St-Maur, Congregation of. See MAURISTS.

St-Omer. The *Jesuit college of St-Omer in Artois was founded by R. *Parsons *c.*1592 for the education of the English RC laity and, in the first ten years of its existence, numbered already over 100 pupils. After a fire in 1684 it was rebuilt on a large scale. When, in 1762, the Parlement of Paris ordered the expulsion of the Jesuits and the Society transferred its school to Bruges, the buildings at St-Omer were used for the preparatory school of the English clergy at *Douai until they removed to England in 1795. The house at St-Omer was afterwards sold to the French Government and used for secular purposes.

Hubert Chadwick, SJ, St Omers to Stonyhurst (1962), pp. 1–311. G. Holt, SJ, The English Jesuits in the Age of Reason (Tunbridge Wells, Kent, 1993), esp. pp. 110–13 and 127–41.

St Patrick's Purgatory. Since the 12th cent., a place of pilgrimage on Station Island, Lough Derg, Co. Donegal, where Christ is supposed to have revealed to St *Patrick an entrance to *purgatory and the earthly paradise. The earliest recorded visit, by an Irish knight named Owein c. 1146/7, is reported by the *Cistercian H[enry] of Sawtrey (or Saltrey) *c.*1180–4 in the Tractatus de Purgatorio Sancti Patricii. Widely copied and translated, this text motivated occasional visits to the Purgatory by knightly pilgrims from different countries in the late 14th and 15th cents. and influenced their accounts of what they experienced. This knightly pilgrimage, initially fostered by R. *FitzRalph, Abp. of *Armagh, led to a popular pilgrimage to the site in the 16th cent. and later. Drawn by Patrick's promise of a *plenary indulgence to those who visited the sanctuary in penitence and faith, pilgrims continue to come to the island, which is now dominated by a modern basilica.

Various MSS containing the legend in different forms have been ed., mainly in specialized periodicals; details to date are given in a collection of the legends, tr. into Eng. by [J. R.] S. Leslie, Saint Patrick's Purgatory: A Record from History and Literature (1932), with bibl. pp. 195–215. The best available Lat. text is that ed. K. Warnke, Das Buch vom Espurgatoire S. Patrice der Marie de France und seine Quelle (Bibliotheca Normannica, 9; Halle/Saale, 1938). Eng. tr. of this text by J.-M. Picard, Saint Patrick's Purgatory (Blackrock, Co. Dublin [1985]), with introd. by Y. de Pontfarcy, pp. 9–40. For list of MSS see R. J. Hayes (ed.), Manuscript Sources for the History of Irish Civilization, 2 (Boston, 1965), pp. 455 f., and First Supplement 1965–75, 1 (1979), pp. 673–6. Two medieval Eng. trs., with one recension of the Lat. text, ed., with full introd., by R. [B.] Easting, St Patrick's Purgatory (EETS, OS 298; 1991). M. Haren and Y. de Pontfarcy (eds.), The Medieval Pilgrimage to St Patrick's Purgatory: Lough Derg and the European Tradition (Clogher Historical Society, Enniskillen [1988]).

St Paul's Cathedral, London. A church was built *c.*607 by *Ethelbert, King of Kent, as a cathedral for St *Mellitus, first Bp. of London. This was rebuilt in stone between 675 and 685 by St *Erconwald, whose shrine attracted pilgrims throughout the Middle Ages. The Saxon building, the scene of many of the early synods of the English, was burnt in a great fire which destroyed much of London in 1087. The new Norman cathedral was begun in the same year and completed in 1240. In the later 13th cent. the Norman apse was replaced by a Gothic choir and presbytery, completed in 1313. The largest building in England, it was 690 ft. long and covered an area of $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The spire was 498 ft. high. The Bishop's Palace adjoined the NW corner of the Nave. In the NE part of the Close stood 'St Paul's Cross', originally a rallying-place for Folkmoots, but from the mid-13th cent. until 1633 the national centre for religious and political proclamations, sermons, and disputations. It was destroyed in 1643. During W. *Laud's episcopate (1628–33) a restoration of St Paul's was begun with Inigo *Jones as architect, but this ceased under the Commonwealth, when the Nave became a cavalry barrack and the Lady Chapel a preaching-house. The old building, already ruinous, perished in the Great Fire of 1666.

The present Cathedral, designed by Sir Christopher *Wren, combines with much success the classical style and a traditionally Gothic ground-plan. Rebuilding began in 1675, the choir was opened for service in 1697, and the whole was completed by 1710. The restrained Baroque of the interior was enriched considerably by the woodwork of Grinling Gibbons (1648–1720) and the iron-work of Jean Tijou (fl. 1690–1711). Later generations have removed Wren's fine organ-screen and filled the vaulting and saucer-domes of the E. end with mosaics. Since 1906 the SW chapel, formerly the *Consistory Court, has been the religious centre of the Most Distinguished Order of St Michael and St George. The chapel of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire is in the crypt. Also in the crypt are the tombs of Lord Nelson and the Duke of Wellington and of Wren, with its famous inscription Lector si monumentum requiris circumspice. Because of its position St Paul's is frequently the scene of great national services. Very many buildings in the surrounding area were destroyed by bombing in 1940, but St Paul's escaped serious damage. Notable Deans include J. *Colet, A. *Nowell, J. *Overall, J. *Donne, W. *Sancroft, E. *Stillingfleet, J. *Tillotson, H. H. *Milman, H. L. *Mansel, R. W. *Church, R. *Gregory, and W. R. *Inge. Among the residentiary canons Sydney Smith (1771–1845) and H. P. *Liddon are outstanding.

W. *Dugdale, The History of St Paul's Cathedral in London from its Foundation Untill these Times (1658; 3rd edn., with continuation by H. Ellis, 1818). W. Sparrow Simpson (ed.), 'The Charter and Statutes of the College of the Minor Canons in S. Paul's Cathedral, London', Archaeologia, 43 (1871), pp. 165–200; id. (ed.), Registrum Statutorum et Consuetudinum Ecclesiae Sancti Pauli Londinensis (London, 1873); id. (ed.), Documents Illustrating the History of S. Paul's Cathedral (Camden Society, NS 26; 1880); M. Gibbs (ed.), Early Charters of the Cathedral Church of St Paul, London (ibid., 3rd ser. 58; 1939). J. *Le Neve, Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae: 1066–1300, 1, rev. by D. E. Greenway (1968); 1300–1542, 5, rev. by J. M. Horn (1963); 1541–1857, 1, rev. by id. (1969). H. H. Milman, Annals of S. Paul's Cathedral (1868); W. Longman, A History of the Three Cathedrals Dedicated to St Paul in London (1873); W. Sparrow Simpson, Chapters in the History of Old S. Paul's (1881); id., Gleanings from Old S. Paul's (1889); id., S. Paul's Cathedral and City Life: Illustrations of Civil and Cathedral Life from the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth Centuries (1894); W. M. Sinclair, Memorials of St Paul's Cathedral (1909); C. H. Cook, Old S. Paul's Cathedral (1955). W. R. Matthews and W. M. Atkins (eds.), A History of St Paul's Cathedral and the Men associated with it (1957). G. L. Prestige, St Paul's in its Glory: A Candid History of the Cathedral 1831–1911 (1955). J. Lang, Rebuilding St Paul's after the Great Fire of London (1956). [J.] K. Downes, Sir Christopher Wren: The Design of St Paul's Cathedral. Introduction and Catalogue (1988). S. A. Warner, St Paul's Cathedral (1926); P. [A. T.] Burman, St Paul's Cathedral (New Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1987).

St Paul's outside the Walls, Rome (San Paolo fuori le Mura). The church, one of the four 'Major *Basilicas', lies on the W. side of the Ostian Way about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles beyond the Porta S. Paolo. The Liber Pontificalis states that the original building was erected over the relics of St *Paul by the Emp. *Constantine. While there are difficulties about this assertion, the rebuilding of a large basilica was planned at the end of the 4th cent. and completed by the Emp. Honorius (395–402/3); this latter suffered little change until it was destroyed by fire on 15 July 1823, with only the triumphal arch and its mosaics surviving. The present building, which conforms closely to the plan of the earlier basilica, was consecrated on 10 Dec. 1854, two days after the Definition of the *Immaculate Conception. Until the Reformation the kings of England were honorary members of the Chapter and the Abbot of the monastery a Prelate of the Order of the Garter (hence the insignia of the Garter incorporated in the arms of the church). The basilica has long been served by *Benedictines.

N. M. Nicolai, Della basilica di S. Paolo (1815). I. Schuster, La basilica e il monasterio di S. Paolo fuori le Mura: Note storiche (1934). S. Pesarini, 'La basilica di S. Paolo sulla Via Ostiense prima delle innovazioni del sec. XVI', Studi romani, 1 (1913), pp. 386–427. L. de Bruyne, L'antica serie di ritratti papali della basilica di S. Paolo fuori le Mura (Studi di antichità cristiana, 7; 1934). R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 5 (Rome, 1977), pp. 93–164 [in Eng.], with full bibl. See also works cited under ROME, CHURCHES OF.

St Peter's, Rome. The present 16th-cent. building replaced a much older basilican structure, erected by *Constantine (d. 337) on the supposed site of St *Peter's crucifixion. After it had fallen into serious disrepair by the later Middle Ages, *Nicholas V (1447–55) planned to replace it by a new church in the form of a Latin cross, selecting Bernardo Rosselino (1409–64), the restorer of the church of St *Francis at *Assisi, as architect. Little had been done when the work was suspended on Nicholas's death. It was resumed under *Julius II (1503–13), who laid the first stone on 18 April 1506, and continued by a succession of architects—Bramante (d. 1514), *Raphael (d. 1520), Peruzzi (d. 1536), Sangallo (d. 1546)—all in turn making drastic changes in the design. The dome followed closely a design of *Michelangelo (d. 1564). By a radical change in plan the nave was lengthened under *Sixtus V to accommodate a vast congregation; the effect of this extension was to spoil the view of the dome from the Piazza. The building was finished in 1614 and consecrated by *Urban VIII on 18 Nov. 1626. Excavations carried out under the basilica since 1940 have revealed the existence of a Christian shrine dating from the first part of the 3rd cent., if not earlier.

St Peter's, which is the largest church in Christendom (length, 619 ft.; *St Paul's Cathedral, London, *c.*517 ft.), contains the remains of over 130 Popes. The traditional burial-place of St Peter is the confessio under the high altar. The baldachino over the high altar, supported on four massive spiral columns of bronze, is the work of G. L. Bernini (1598–1680). Around the base of the dome are inscribed the words Tu es Petrus . . . cœlorum (from Mt. 16: 18 f.). See also VATICAN.

Modern studies incl. [S.] Schüller-Piroli, 2000 Jahre Sankt Peter: Die Weltkirche von den Anfängen bis zur Gegenwart (Olten, 1950); J. Lees-Milne, Saint Peter's: The Story of Saint Peter's Basilica in Rome (1967); C. Galassi Paluzzi, La Basilica di S. Pietro (Roma Cristiana, 17 [1975]). R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 5 (Rome, 1977), pp. 165–279 [in Eng.], with bibl. J. H. Jongkees, Studies on Old St Peter's (Archaeologica Traiectina, 8; Groningen, 1966); E. Francia, 1505–1606: Storia della costruzione del nuovo San Pietro (Rome [1977]).

The official report of the modern excavations was issued under the title Esplorazioni sotto la confessione di San Pietro in Vaticano eseguite negli anni 1940–1949, relazioni a cura di B. M. Apollonj Ghetti, A. Ferrua, SJ, E. Josi, and E. Kirschbaum, SJ (2 vols., 1951). J. [M. C.] Toynbee and J. [B.] Ward-Perkins, The Shrine of St Peter and the Vatican Excavations (1956). J. Carcopino, Études d'histoire chrétienne [1953]; 2nd edn., with rev. subtitle: Les Fouilles de Saint-Pierre et la tradition [1963]; id., Études d'histoire chrétienne, 2: Les Reliques de saint Pierre à Rome [1965]. T. Klauser, Die römische Petrustradition im Lichte der neuen Ausgrabungen unter der Peterskirche (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen. Geisteswissenschaften, 24 [1956]). E. Kirschbaum, SJ, Die Gräber der Apostelfürsten (Frankfurt a.M. [1957]; 3rd edn., 1974; Eng. tr., 1959). M. Guarducci, I graffiti sotto la Confessione di San Pietro in Vaticano (3 vols., 1958 [conclusions largely contested; cf. A. Ferrua, SJ, in Rivista di Archeologia Cristiana, 35 (1959), pp. 231–47; M. Guarducci in Archeologia Classica, 13 (1961), pp. 183–239]. Id., Pietro in Vaticano (1983). D. W. O'Connor, Peter in Rome: The Literary, Liturgical and Archeological Evidence (New York and London, 1969). J. Ruysschaert, 'Les premiers siècles de la tombe de Pierre. Une discussion dégagée d'une hypothèse', Revue des Archéologues et Historiens d'Art de Louvain, 8 (1975), pp. 7–47. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 51–69. A. Arbeiter, Alt-St. Peter in Geschichte und Wissenschaft: Abfolge der Bauten, Rekonstruktion, Architekturprogramm (Berlin, 1988), with full bibl. A. G. Martimort, 'Vingt-cinq ans de travaux et recherches sur la mort de saint Pierre et sur sa sépulture (1946–1971)', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 73 (1972), pp. 73–101, with refs. H. I. Marrou in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 3290–334, s.v. 'Vatican (Fouilles du)', with refs.; E. Josi in EC 12 (1954), cols. 1053–97, s.v. 'Vaticano. III: Zona archeologica e basilica', with further bibl. See also bibl. to ROME, CHURCHES OF.

Saint-Simon, Claude Henri de Rouvroy (1760–1825), one of the earliest exponents of French socialism. Of noble family, he fought on the American side in the War of Independence and then led a life of adventure in various European countries. In the French Revolution of 1789 he abandoned his titles and changed his name. In the following years he took part in various financial enterprises designed to further his ideal of service to humanity, but was reduced to great poverty. From 1797 his interest in science and the reorganization of society rapidly increased, and he worked out the ideas which he later embodied esp. in L'Industrie (1817), L'Organisateur (1819; a periodical), Du système industriel (1821), and Catéchisme des industriels (1823–4). In these works he developed and expounded his thesis that only the industrial classes work for the moral and physical welfare of mankind and that they should be preferred to those who have hitherto been privileged. In the last years of his life his thought turned into more religious channels and was expressed in the Nouveau Christianisme (1825). The one Divine principle in Christianity is that men must behave as brothers towards each other, i.e. must organize society in the way that will be most advantageous to the majority. Religion, therefore, ought to provide a speedy amelioration of the lot of the poorest. A truly Christian priest will regard dogma and cult as negligible accessories and give his chief attention to morals and social betterment.

This teaching, which won little following in Saint-Simon's lifetime, was later propagated by his disciples, esp. O. Rodrigues, S. A. Bazard, and B. P. Enfantin. In the two collective volumes, Exposition de la doctrine de Saint-Simon (1829 and 1830), Bazard and Enfantin sought to substitute for the traditional structure of society a religious system of social solidarity with the object of the progressive disappearance of the leisured classes and the abolition of all privileges, including interest and inheritance. This Saint-Simonian tendency to generalize and unify everything eventually led his disciples, esp. Enfantin, to a pantheism that divinized the universe and the carnal instincts of man and resulted in a semi-religious sect given to immorality. In 1832 Enfantin was imprisoned; but the ideas of his master exercised a great influence not only in France but also in other Continental countries and in England.

Saint-Simon was one of the first representatives of *Positivist science, industrialism, and socialism as well as the apostle of a new humanitarian lay religion, whose suggestions were destined to have a great future in the 19th and early 20th cents. For a time A. *Comte, the Positivist leader, was under his influence.

Works in Œuvres de Saint-Simon et d'Enfantin publiées par les membres du conseil institué par Enfantin (47 vols., Paris, 1865–78), vols. 15, 18–23, 37–45, and 47, with Notice Historique in vol. 1, pp. 1–133. Eng. trs. of Selected Writings [on politics], by F. M. H. Markham (Oxford, 1952), and on science, industry, and social organization by K. Taylor (London [1975]). P. A. Janet, Saint-Simon et le saint-simonisme (Bibliothèque de Philosophie contemporaine, 1876); [J.] G. Weill, Saint-Simon et son œuvre (1894); S. Charléty, Essai sur l'histoire du saint-simonisme (Paris thesis, 1896; rev. edn., 1931); M. Leroy, La Vie véritable du Comte Henri de Saint-Simon (1925); E. Durkheim, Le Socialisme, ed. M. Mauss (1928; Eng. tr. as Socialism and Saint-Simon, Yellow Springs, Oh., 1958; London, 1959); F. E. Manuel, The New World of Henri Saint-Simon (Cambridge, Mass., 1956); id., The Prophets of Paris (ibid., 1962), pp. 103–93; P. Ansart, Sociologie de Saint-Simon (1970); T. Petermann, Claude-Henri de Saint-Simon: Die Gesellschaft als Werkstatt (Beiträge zur politischen Wissenschaft, 34 [1979]). J. Tonneau in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 769–99, s.v. 'Saint-Simon et saint-simonisme'.

St Sophia. See SANCTA SOPHIA.

Saint-Sulpice, Society of. The congregation of secular priests founded by J.-J. *Olier in the parish of St-Sulpice, *Paris, in 1642 with the aim of forming a zealous clergy, esp. suited to be directors of seminaries. The Society, which spread to Canada in 1657, was granted Papal approbation in 1664. Under its second Superior General, A. de Bretonvilliers (1657–76), it received its constitutions, which were further elaborated by his successor, L. Tronson (1676–1700), who also developed the Sulpician method of prayer and asceticism. Acc. to their rule, modelled on that of the French *Oratory and adapted to the double purpose of studies and spiritual formation, the members of the Society take no vows, keep their property, which they are expected to use in the spirit of poverty, and live in close community with their pupils, whose spiritual and other exercises they share.

St-Sulpice soon gained a profound influence on the ecclesiastical life of France, to which it gave a great number of bishops. After a period of partial eclipse during the French Revolution, it was restored soon after the *Concordat of 1801 by its resolute Superior General J. A. Emery, who, in 1791, had opened a house in Baltimore. Though again hard hit by the anti-ecclesiastical legislation in France of 1903 and 1906, the Society still trains many of those destined for the French priesthood and has provinces in Canada and the USA and missions in the Far East, Central Africa, and Central and S. America.

The theology of St-Sulpice, which, until at least the 1930s, was considered solid and traditional, has been deeply imbued with *Thomism. Its spirituality followed the lines of the French School, professed by its founder, Olier, and laid down in the ascetical textbooks of Tronson. Past members of the Society include B. Joubert, who prepared new editions of the *Missal (1777) and the *Breviary (1778), F. Vigouroux, the author of La Bible et les découvertes modernes (1877) and editor of the Dictionnaire de la Bible (1895–1912), A. A. *Tanquerey, P. Pourrat, whose La Spiritualité chrétienne (1917) is a standard work on the history of spirituality, and F. Amiot, author of L'Enseignement de Saint Paul (1938) and numerous other works.

H. Joly, La Compagnie de Saint-Sulpice (1914); J. Montval, Les Sulpiciens (1934); J. Gautier, PSS, Ces Messieurs de Saint-Sulpice (Bibliothèque Ecclesia, 33; 1957). C. G. Herbermann, The Sulpicians in the United States (New York, 1916). L. Bertrand, PSS, Bibliothèque sulpicienne, ou Histoire littéraire de la compagnie de Saint-Sulpice (3 vols., 1900). Bremond, 3, pp. 419–507. C. Hamel, Histoire de l'église de Saint-Sulpice (1900). E. Levesque, PSS, in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 802–32, s.v.; I. Noye, PSS, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 24–8, s.v. 'Sacerdoti di San Sulpizio'; id. in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 170–81, s.v.

St-Victor, Abbey of. See VICTORINES.

Sainte-Chapelle, *Paris. The chapel was built by St *Louis IX of France to house the *Crown of Thorns. Begun *c.*1245, it was consecrated in 1248, and forms part of the Palais de Justice, formerly the royal residence. It was desecrated in 1791, restored to religious use in 1837, and again secularized and dismantled in 1906. This masterpiece of Gothic architecture is traditionally ascribed to Pierre de Montereau, and though zealously restored in the 19th cent. by E. E. Viollet-le-Duc (1814–79) and J. B. A. Lassus (1807–57), in the upper chapel it still contains notable medieval glass.

H. Stein, Le Palais de Justice et la Sainte-Chapelle de Paris (1912), pp. 191–239; F. Gebelin, La Sainte-Chapelle et la Conciergerie (Petites Monographies des Grands Édifices de la France, 1931), pp. 1–86; L. Grodecki, Sainte-Chapelle (Caisse Nationale des Monuments historiques [1964]). Y. Bottineau, Notre-Dame de Paris et la Sainte-Chapelle [1966], pp. 155–221. M. Aubert and others, Les Vitraux de Notre-Dame et de la Sainte-Chapelle de Paris (Corpus Vitrearum Medii Aevi, France, 1; Paris, 1959), pp. 71–328. R. Branner, Saint Louis and the Court Style in Gothic Architecture (1965), pp. 56–84. See also works cited s.v. PARIS.

saints, devotion to the. The practice of venerating and invoking the saints has long been a regular element in Catholic devotion. Its justification rests on the beliefs that the saints are both close to God (because of their holiness) and accessible to man (whose nature they share), and in the efficacy of intercessory prayer.

A Jewish anticipation of the conception is found in 2 Macc., where *Judas Maccabaeus sees Onias and *Jeremiah in a dream 'with outstretched hands invoking blessings on the whole body of the Jews' (15: 12). In the NT the gift of special privileges for certain persons in the next world is held to be indicated in Christ's promises to the Apostles (Mt. 19: 28), while support for the idea that the dead may intercede on behalf of the living has been found in the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16: 19–31). Other NT references commonly invoked are the description of the saints of the Old Covenant as a 'cloud of witnesses' (Heb. 12: 1), which Christians are to imitate (13: 7), and the martyrs who pray before the throne of God (Rev. 6: 9 f.) and receive white robes (7: 14–17) as a reward of their martyrdom. But the principal theological basis of the practice is the Pauline doctrine of the Body of Christ, in which all members have their particular office (Rom. 12: 4–8) as 'fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God' (Eph. 2: 19). It is the implications of this teaching about the Church rather than specific references to the subject that are commonly held by its advocates to constitute the biblical foundation of devotion to the saints.

For the pre-Nicene period, literary evidence for the practice continues scanty, though the 'Odes of *Solomon' (2nd cent.) and the (largely *Gnostic) Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles attest a developing cult. The first incontrovertible documentary witness is the 'Martyrium *Polycarpi' (*c.*156), where his followers express their intention of 'celebrating the birthday of his martyrdom' in days to come. The practice was furthered by the growing cultus of the relics of those who had suffered death for their faith. Besides the actual martyrs, those who had survived their sufferings ('confessores') were also paid special honours, and their power of intercession after death was asserted e.g. by St *Cyprian. *Origen was apparently the first of the Fathers to give the cult of martyrs an express theological foundation. He placed it within the doctrine of the Communion of Saints and taught that the prayer of the saints is efficacious in so far as the faithful follow in their footsteps.

From the 4th cent. devotion to the saints spread rapidly. St *Cyril of Jerusalem distinguished the saints commemorated at the Eucharistic Sacrifice who offer our prayer to God from the ordinary dead who would be benefited by the sacrifice. The same distinction is found in St *Chrysostom, who exhorted his hearers to have confidence in the intercession of the martyrs. About the same time the ranks of those accounted saints were enlarged by the addition of 'confessors' and 'virgins', on the ground that a life of renunciation and holiness might equal the devotion of those who had actually died for Christ. Thus ascetics such as St *Antony and bishops such as St *Athanasius and St Chrysostom were soon venerated in the E., and in the W. St *Augustine was honoured as a saint at Carthage before 475. The abuses connected with the cultus met, however, with occasional opposition, e.g. from *Vigilantius (q.v.). Later theologians sought to rebut the charge of idolatry by a distinction between the worship of God, expressed in the Gk. word λατρεία, and the cult of honour and imitation due to the saints, expressed in the term δουλεία. Among later Fathers who contributed to the theology of the cultus were St *Leo, St *Gregory the Great, and St *John of Damascus. St Leo affirmed that the saints as our special intercessors obtain for us the mercy of God by their prayers; St Gregory, who did much to further the cultus, exhorted the faithful in his 'Dialogues' to place themselves under the protection of the saints; and St John of Damascus stressed the theocentric character of the cult.

Liturgical developments followed popular devotion and the current of patristic teaching. The mention of saints in the Mass is already attested by St Augustine (De Civ. Dei, 22. 10). From the 5th cent. onwards *diptychs of martyrs and confessors found a place in the *Gallican, *Mozarabic, and *Celtic liturgies, and from the early 6th cent. also in the *Roman Mass. From the 8th cent. the Lives of the saints were read at *Mattins. At the beginning of the Middle Ages their cult was greatly extended through the conversion of the barbarians. The Irish monks, themselves influenced by the E., spread it to England, and thence to the Continent. From the 9th cent. saints' Lives and edificatory sermons, often resting on very slender historical evidence, enjoyed increasing popularity and Councils frequently found it necessary to curb the excesses and superstitions of popular devotion. The fervour of even such preachers as St *Peter Damian, St *Anselm, and St *Bernard attracted the disapproval of the great 13th-cent. Scholastics.

The large amount of superstition surrounding the practice in the later Middle Ages had led the *Bogomils and *Waldensians to attack the practice, and at the Reformation it was fiercely repudiated, esp. by the *Zwinglians and *Calvinists, on the ground that it was not explicitly recommended in Scripture. In the *Thirty-Nine Articles (Art. 22) of the C of E the 'Romish Doctrine' on the subject is designated 'a fond thing vainly invented'; but it is debated by modern Anglican theologians whether the Article forbids the invocation of saints altogether, or only condemns exaggerations in the RC Church. Under the influence of the *Oxford Movement the practice has been widely revived in the C of E in modern times, though the early Tractarians viewed the veneration of the saints with considerable misgivings.

In the RC Church the practice is everywhere upheld. The Council of *Trent, however, treated the subject with studied moderation, the bishops being merely asked to remind the faithful to address themselves to the saints to obtain their assistance in winning the favours of God and Christ. The post-Tridentine theologians carried on and developed the teaching of the Schoolmen. The modern cult of the saints in the RC Church is regulated by canon law (CIC (1983), cans. 1186–7), which recommends the veneration of the saints and esp. of the BVM. The attitude of the E. Churches to the subject is closely akin to that of Rome. See also BEATIFICATION, CANONIZATION.

On the history of the cult of the saints: I. C. Trombelli, De Cultu Sanctorum (2 vols., Bologna, 1740–3); H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Origines du culte des martyrs (Brussels, 1912; 2nd edn., Subsidia Hagiographica, 20; 1933); id., Sanctus: Essai sur le culte des martyrs dans l'antiquité (Subsidia Hagiographica, 17; 1927). P. Dörfler, Die Anfänge der Heiligenverehrung nach den römischen Inschriften und Bildwerken (Veröffentlichungen aus dem Kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, 4. Reihe, 2; 1913). L. Bieler, Θεῖος ἀνήρ. Das Bild des 'göttlichen Menschen' in Spätantike und Frühchristentum (2 vols., Vienna, 1935–6). A.-J. Festugière, OP, La Sainteté (1949). A. Vauchez, La Sainteté en Occident aux derniers siècles du moyen âge d'après les procès de canonisation et les documents hagiographiques (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 241; 1981). P. [R. L.] Brown, The Cult of the Saints: Its Rise and Function in Latin Christianity (1981); cf. J. Fontaine in Anal. Boll. 100 (1982), pp. 17–41. S. Wilson (ed.), Saints and their Cults: Studies in Religious Sociology, Folklore and History (1983). On the theological principles involved J. P. Kirsch, Die Lehre von der Gemeinschaft der Heiligen im christlichen Altertum (1900; Eng. tr. [1911]); M. Perham, The Communion of Saints: An Examination of the Place of the Christian Dead in the Belief, Worship and Calendars of the Church (Alcuin Club Collections, 62; 1980). H. Thurston, SJ, in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 51–9, s.v. 'Saints and Martyrs (Christian)'; P. Séjourné, OSB, in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 870–978, s.v. 'Saints (Culte des)'; T. Baumeister in RAC 14 (1988), cols. 96–150, s.v. 'Heiligenverehrung I.' Much material will be found also in the Analecta Bollandiana* (q.v.). See also bibls. to MARTYR and MARTYROLOGY.

sakkos (Gk. σάκκος). In the E. Church, an embroidered liturgical vestment similar in form to the *dalmatic in the W. It prob. dates from the 11th cent. It is the chief Eucharistic vestment of those of high rank and was orig. confined to archbishops and metropolitans. It is now normally worn instead of the *phelonion (q.v.) by all bishops.

Salamanca, School of. See SALMANTICENSES.

Salesians. Of the many orders known under this name, the principal is the 'Society of St *Francis de Sales', founded near Turin in 1859 by St John *Bosco for the Christian education of boys and young men of the poorer classes, esp. with a view to their ordination. In 1846 Bosco began to gather them together in what he termed 'festive oratories' and night schools; the first 'festive oratory' was established in Turin, but similar foundations soon followed in other parts of Italy. A religious congregation of priests and teachers under the patronage of St Francis de Sales came into being to develop the work, and in 1859 began to live by a rule drawn up by Bosco two years earlier. In 1874 the rule was approved by *Pius IX, and the Society spread rapidly to many parts of the world, including England. It now has about 17,500 members—priests and lay brothers. A sister congregation of Daughters of Our Lady Help of Christians was founded by Bosco in 1872, out of a small community started independently in 1852 by St Mary Mazzarello at Mornese, for similar work among girls. This congregation now has just under 17,000 members with houses in England and many other parts of the world.

E. Ceria, Annali della Società Salesiana [1841–1921] (4 vols., Turin, 1941–51); also other specialized works by the same author. E. J. Doherty, Lambs in Wolfskins (New York, 1953). A. M. Gonzalez, SDB, Origen de las Misiones Salesianas: La Evangelizacion des las gentes según el pensamiento de San Juan Bosco (Guatemala, 1978), with docs. W. Kelley in NCE 12 (1969), pp. 982 f., s.v.; R. Alberdi, SDB, and C. Semeraro, SDB, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1689–714, s.v. 'Società Salesiana di San Giovanni Bosco'; G. Capetti, FMA, ibid. 3 (1976), cols. 1609–13, s.v. 'Figlie di Maria Ausiliatrice'. J. Struś, SDB, ibid. 8 (1988), cols. 383–5, s.v. 'Salesiane, Salesiani', for refs. to other orders inspired by St Francis de Sales. See also Lives of BOSCO, ST JOHN, cited s.v.

Salette, La. See LA SALETTE.

Salisbury. From the see originally founded in 634 by St *Birinus at *Dorchester in Oxfordshire sprang the later sees of *Winchester, *Sherborne, Ramsbury, and Salisbury. Herman, Bp. of Ramsbury, who united the dioceses of Ramsbury and Sherborne in 1058, transferred the see to Old Sarum in 1075. Here his successor, St *Osmund, completed a cathedral, constituted a chapter, and drew up offices, which perhaps formed the basis of the Sarum rite. Richard *Poore, the seventh Bp. of Old Sarum, moved the see to New Sarum or Salisbury in 1219, and laid the foundation of the new cathedral (of the BVM) on 28 Apr. 1220. Three altars at the E. End were consecrated in 1225 in the presence of Stephen *Langton, Abp. of Canterbury (St *Edmund, afterwards Abp. of Canterbury, was also there). The whole cathedral was consecrated in 1258 and completed when the roof was finished in 1266. Built throughout in the Early English style, it is a rare example of architectural unity. Cloisters and chapter-house were added later in the 13th cent. The spire, built between 1334 and 1350, is the highest in England. See following entry.

Registers of Simon of Ghent, Bp. 1297–1315, ed. C. T. Flower and M. C. B. Dawes (*Canterbury and York Society, 40 and 41; 1934); of Roger Martival, Bp. 1315–30, ed. K. Edwards, C. R. Elrington, and others (ibid. 55, 57–59; 1959–75); of Robert Hallum, Bp. 1407–17, ed. J. M. Horn (ibid. 72; 1982); and of Thomas Langton, Bp. 1485–93, ed. D. P. Wright (ibid. 74; 1985). W. H. Rich Jones (ed.), Vetus Registrum Sarisberiense alias dictum Registrum S. Osmundi Episcopi (2 vols., RS, 1883–4); id. and W. D. Macray, Charters and Documents Illustrating the History of the Cathedral, City and Diocese of Salisbury in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries, selected from the Capitular and Diocesan Registers (RS, 1891). E. A Dayman and W. H. Rich Jones (eds.), Statutes of the Cathedral Church of Sarum (privately pr., Bath, 1883); C. Wordsworth and D. Macleane (eds.), Statutes and Customs of the Cathedral Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Salisbury (1915), incl. Eng. tr. C. Wordsworth (ed.), Ceremonies and Processions of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury (Cambridge, 1901). J. *Le Neve, Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae: 1066–1300, 4, rev. by D. E. Greenway (1991); 1300–1541, 3, rev. by J. M. Horn (1962); 1541–1857, 6, rev. by id. (1986). R. L. Poole, 'The Muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury', Historical Manuscripts Commission Report on Manuscripts in Various Collections, 1 (1901), pp. 338–88; id., 'The Records of the Bishop of Salisbury', ibid. 4 (1907), pp. 1–12. S. M. Lakin, A Catalogue of the Library of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury (1880). T. Webber, Scribes and Scholars at Salisbury Cathedral c.1075–c.1125 (Oxford, 1992). [R. Rawlinson,] The History and Antiquities of the Cathedral-Church of Salisbury and the Abbey-Church of Bath (1719), pp. iii–xvi, 1–161, and 269–351. W. Dodsworth, An Historical Account of the Episcopal See and Cathedral Church of Salisbury (1814). R. Spring, Salisbury Cathedral (New Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1987). id., Salisbury Cathedral (Salisbury, 1991). S. H. Cassan, Lives and Memoirs of the Bishops of Sherborne and Salisbury, from the Year 705 to 1824 (ibid., 1824). K. Edwards in VCH, Wilts. 3, ed. R. B. Pugh and E. Crittall (1956), pp. 156–210. G. Crosse in DECH (1912), pp. 539–43, s.v.

Salisbury or Sarum, Use of. The local medieval modification of the Roman rite in use at the cathedral church of Salisbury, traditionally ascribed to St *Osmund (d. 1099) but really much later. The *Customary, i.e. the cathedral statutes and customs and a complete directory of services, were compiled by Richard *Poore (d. 1237). The 'New Use of Sarum' was a further (14th-cent.) revision, effecting certain changes in the Calendar. In the later Middle Ages the Sarum Use was increasingly followed, in whole or in part, in other dioceses, and in 1457 stated to be in use in nearly the whole of England, Wales, and Ireland. In 1543 the *Canterbury Convocation imposed the Sarum *Breviary on the whole province, and the books of the Sarum rite furnished the Reformers with their main material for the First (1549) BCP of *Edward VI, in the Preface to which (the section now headed 'Concerning the Service of the Church') the Sarum Use appears as one of the local variations which the new standard order was to replace. In the years preceding the Reformation the output of Sarum books was enormous. The much increased knowledge which followed their discovery and re-editing in modern times led to the revival of Sarum customs and ornaments in many English cathedral and parish churches.

Missale ad Usum Insignis et Praeclarae Ecclesiae Sarum, ed. F. H. Dickinson (Burntisland, 1861–83); The Sarum Missal, tr. into English [by A. Harford Pearson] (1868; 2nd edn., 1884); F. Procter and C. Wordsworth (eds.), Breviarium ad Usum Insignis

Ecclesiae Sarum (3 vols., 1879–86); W. H. *Frere, The Use of Sarum, 1: The Sarum Customs (1898), 2: The Ordinal and Tonal (1901); C. Wordsworth, Ceremonies and Processions of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury (1901); J. W. Legg, The Sarum Missal edited from Three Early Manuscripts (1916); Manuale ad usum percelebris ecclesie Sarisburiensis, ed. J. Collins (HBS 91; 1960). R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970).

Salmanticenses. The customary name for the authors of the Cursus theologicus Summam d. Thomae complectens, a group of Discalced *Carmelites who taught at Salamanca between 1600 and 1725. The authors were anonymous, but their identity is now well established: they were Antonio de la Madre de Dios (1583–1637), Domingo de Sta Teresa (1604–60), Juan de la Anunciación (1633–1701), and three others. The Cursus, which took 70 years to complete (1631–1701), is a gigantic Commentary on the Summa Theologiae of St *Thomas Aquinas, undertaken to provide a sound basis of theological teaching for the friars of the *Teresian reform. It was conceived on the same lines as the philosophical course (Cursus Complutensis) done by their college at Alcalá, and was supplemented by the Cursus Salmanticensis Theologiae Moralis (pub. in its complete form, 1717–24).

O. Merl, OCD, Theologia Salmanticensis: Untersuchung über Entstehung, Lehrrichtung und Quellen des theologischen Kurses der spanischen Karmeliten ([Regensburg] 1947). T. Deman, OP, in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1017–31, s.v. 'Salamanque (Théologiens de)', with bibl.; R. A. Couture in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 987 f., s.v.; E. Llamas in Q. Aldea Vaquero and others (eds.), Diccionario de Historia Eclesiastica de España, 4 (1975), pp. 2151–3, s.v. 'Salmanticenses Dogmaticos'; T. del Santisimo Sacramento, ibid., pp. 2153 f., s.v. 'Salmanticenses Morales'.

Salmasius, Claudius (1588–1653), Claude Saumaise, French classical scholar. At Paris, where he studied from 1604, he became a friend of I. *Casaubon and was converted to *Calvinism. In 1608 he edited two 14th-cent. tracts against the primacy of the Pope. After publishing various classical works, including an edition of Solinus' 'Polyhistor' (1629), he succeeded to the chair of J. J. *Scaliger (d. 1609) at *Leiden in 1632. Here he wrote two books defending the compatibility of *usury with Christian principles, De usuris liber (1638) and De modo usurarum (1639), and a Defensio regia pro Carolo I (1649) which provoked J. *Milton's celebrated and successful reply, Pro populo anglicano defensio (1651). In 1650 he accepted an invitation to visit the court of Queen *Christina of Sweden, but soon afterwards returned to the Netherlands.

Letters ed. A. Clément (Leiden, 1656), with Life of Salmasius prefixed (pp. iii–lxiv). There also exists a MS Life by Philibert de la Mare, which was used by P. Papillon, Bibliothèque des auteurs de Bourgogne (Dijon, 1745), pp. 247–87 [incl. full list of Salmasius' works]. E. and E. Haag, La France Protestante, 9 (1859), pp. 149–73, s.v. 'Saumaise, Claude'. Unsigned art. in EB (11th edn.), 24 (1911), p. 81, s.v.

Salmon, George (1819–1904), mathematician and theologian. He was educated at *Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became a Fellow in 1841, Regius Professor of Divinity in 1866, and Provost in 1888. He was ordained priest in 1845. A strong Protestant, Salmon co-operated with R. *Whately in writing the Cautions for the Times (1853), intended as a reply to the Tracts for the Times* (1833–41). His lectures on the Infallibility of the Church, first published in 1888, were a defence of Protestant principles against the tenets of the Church of Rome, and well illustrate at once his skill, his vigour, and his humour, as a controversialist. In his widely read Introduction to the New Testament (1885), he was more concerned to refute critical theories than to produce a handbook of reference. His distinguished work as a mathematician cannot be described here. Salmon also took a prominent part in the reconstruction of the Church of *Ireland after its disestablishment in 1870.

J. H. *Bernard in DNB, 1901–1911, 3 (1912), pp. 251–4.

Salome. (1) A woman who followed Jesus to Jerusalem, Mk. 15: 40; 16: 1. Matthew (27: 56) appears to identify her with the mother of St *James and St *John, the sons of Zebedee (Mt. 27: 56; cf. Mk. 15: 40). She is sometimes also identified with the sister of the BVM (Jn. 19: 25). See MARYS IN THE NT (4).

(2) The name given by *Josephus (Ant. 18. 136) to the daughter of Herodias, who is mentioned without a name at Mt. 14: 6 and Mk. 6: 22.

Salonica. See THESSALONICA.

salos (Gk. σαλός, silly, mad). One who practised a pecular form of asceticism in the E., presenting himself as a holy fool in society. The best known is the 6th-cent. Simeon, of whom there is an excellent 7th-cent. Life by Leontius of Neapolis. It is, however, uncertain whether the Life of Andrew Salos (date disputed: 7th or 10th cent.) reflects a historical or a fictional character. The practice gained popularity and extended later into the Russian Church with the Yurodivy. Similar characteristics appear independently in the Life of St Benedict Joseph *Labre.

Gk. text of the Lives mentioned pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 93. 1669–748 (Simeon), and ibid. 111. 621–888 (Andrew). Crit. edn. of Life of Simeon by L. Rydén (Studia Graeca Upsaliensia, 4; 1963). S. [C.] Murray, A Study of the Life of Andreas, the Fool for the Sake of Christ (Munich Diss.; Borna and Leipzig, 1910). J. Grosdidier de Matons, 'Les thèmes d'édification dans la Vie d'André Salos', Travaux et Mémoires, 4 (1970), pp. 277–328. L. Rydén, 'Style and historical fiction in the Life of St. Andreas Salos', Jahrbuch der österreichischen Byzantinistik, 32/3. XVI. Internationaler Byzantinistenkongress, Wien, 4.–9. Oktober 1981, Akten 2/3 (1982), pp. 175–83. J. [N.] Saward, Perfect Fools: Folly for Christ's Sake in Catholic and Orthodox Spirituality (1980), pp. 19–21 (on Simeon and Andrew). Beck, pp. 140, 456, 567 f., with bibl.

salt. Owing to its preservative quality salt was a sign of purity and incorruptibility, esp. among the Semitic peoples. As such, it served to confirm contracts and friendship, the covenant between Yahweh and Israel on *Sinai, e.g., being called a 'covenant of salt' in Num. 18: 19. This symbolism, taken together with its seasoning properties, explains the Lord's saying 'Ye are the salt of the earth' (Mt. 5: 13, cf. also Mk. 9: 50), where the salt represents Christian wisdom and integrity, as also in Col. 4: 6. The ritual use of salt is very old and widespread. It was prescribed in the OT for every oblation (Lev. 2: 13) and played an important part in the sacrifices of the Greeks and Romans. The old pagan Roman custom of placing a few grains of salt on the lips of an infant on the 8th day after his birth to chase away the demons prob. lay behind the offering of blessed salt to *catechumens which formerly formed part of the RC rite of *Baptism. Salt may also be used for the preparation of *Holy Water.

V. Hehn, Das Salz: Eine kulturhistorische Studie (1873; 2nd edn. by O. Schader, 1901). J. E. Latham, The Religious Symbolism of Salt (Théologie Historique, 64 [1982]). F. Hauck in TWNT 1 (1933), p. 229 (Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 228 f.), s.v. ἅλας, with bibl.

Saltmarsh, John (d. 1647), preacher and writer. He crowded much controversy into a short life of some 35 years. About 1639 he became rector of Heslerton, N. Yorks, and was at first an ardent supporter of episcopacy and conformity; but his opinions gradually changed and he became equally ardent in advocating complete religious liberty. In 1644 he was appointed to the sequestered rectory of Brasted, Kent, and in 1646 became a chaplain in Fairfax's army. All the time he was pouring forth a stream of books and pamphlets of which the best known are Holy Discoveries (1640) and Sparkles of Glory (1647).

L. F. Solt, 'John Saltmarsh: New Model Army Chaplain', JEH 2 (1951), pp. 69–80. A. L. Morton, The World of the Ranters (1970), pp. 45–69. A. Gordon in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 220–2.

saltum, per. See PER SALTUM.

salutary act. In RC theological terminology a human act which contributes to the salvation of the person performing it. To be 'salutary', it must be carried out in a state of grace and with the co-operation of the will, i.e. it must not be a purely instinctive reaction.

Salvation Army. An extensive international Christian organization for evangelistic and social work. It was founded by W. *Booth (q.v.) in 1865, received its present form and title in 1878, and from that time spread rapidly all over the world. It is organized on a strictly military basis, with a 'General' at its head. On W. Booth's death (1912), his son, William Bramwell Booth, succeeded to the Generalship on his father's nomination, but since 1931 the General has been elected by the High Council, consisting of commanders and other leading officers. 'Unquestioning obedience' is required from all members of the Army, which is divided into 'territories', acc. to the national frontiers of the respective countries, which, in their turn, are subdivided into 'provinces' and 'divisions'. The religious teaching of the Salvation Army is largely in harmony with traditional evangelical belief, but rejects all Sacraments and stresses esp. the moral side of Christianity. The technique of producing conversions is aggressive and emotional and makes extensive use of public testimony and penance; its realistic methods of presenting religion to the people, in which open-air meetings with brass bands and banners play an important part, differ greatly from those of other Christian bodies. The Army carries on a great variety of social activities, including all kinds of rescue work, care of criminals and drunkards, soup kitchens, workers' hostels and night shelters, as well as hospitals and schools. The Army, which is esp. strong in the USA, has its headquarters in London.

R. Sandall, A. R. Wiggins, and F. Coutts, The History of the Salvation Army (7 vols., 1947–86). G. K. Horridge, The Salvation Army: Origins and Early Days. 1865 1900 (Godalming, 1993). See also Lives of W. Booth, cited s.v.

Salvator Noster. The bull of *Sixtus IV, dated 3 Aug. 1476, granting an indulgence to the church of Saintes. It is the first instance of the issue of an indulgence granting plenary remission of sins for the dead (plenariam remissionem per modum suffragii).

Text in Archives historiques de la Saintonge et de l'Aunis, 10 (1882), pp. 56–69. The clauses concerning the souls in purgatory also pr. in H. Lea, A History of Auricular Confession and Indulgences in the Latin Church, 3 (1896), pp. 585 f., with discussion, pp. 345–51, and extracts from other allied docs., pp. 586–96; extracts of the text repr. in Kidd, pp. 3 f. (no. 2). A. Teetaert, OFM Cap., in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2210 f., s.v. 'Sixte IV'. See also works cited under INDULGENCES.

Salve Regina (Lat., 'Hail, Holy Queen'). One of the oldest Marian *antiphons, sometimes recited in the W. Church at the end of the canonical hours. It is among the most widely used Catholic prayers to the BVM, owing its popularity to its tender devotional language and beautiful plainsong. The earliest MS evidence is usually dated at the end of the 11th cent. The chronicle of Alberic of Trois-Fontaines (d. 1241) mentions the Salve Regina under the year 1130 in connection with a story about St *Bernard, who is said to have referred to it as the antiphon of Le Puy ('Antiphona de Podio'), the famous pilgrim shrine of Le Puy-en-Velay. The authorship is unknown. It has been variously ascribed to Adhémar, Bp. of Le Puy (d. 1098), Peter, Bp. of Compostela (d. 1003), *Herimannus Contractus, and St Bernard.

From the middle of the 12th cent. the Salve Regina was used by the *Cistercians as an antiphon for either the *Benedictus or the *Magnificat on the four great feasts of the BVM and from early in the 13th cent. they sang it daily. It was adopted by both the *Franciscans and the *Dominicans. The *Breviary of *Pius V in 1568 made it generally obligatory to recite the Salve Regina after Compline, and after Lauds on Sunday, from Trinity to Advent; in the 1971 Breviary it is one of five antiphons which may be used at the end of Compline. From 1884 to 1964 its recitation was also required after Low Mass.

Crit. edn. of text by G. M. Dreves, Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, 2 (AHMA 50; 1907), pp. 318 f. J. de Valois, En marge d'une antienne: Le 'Salve Regina' (1912); J. Maier, Studien zur Geschichte der Marienantiphon 'Salve regina' (Regensburg, 1939); J. M. Canal, Salve Regina Misericordiae: Historia y leyendas en torno a esta antífona (Temi e Testi, 9; Rome, 1963). H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Salve Regina', The Month, 128 (1918), pp. 248–60 and 300–14; text (without illustrations) repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), no. 7, pp. 115–45, with refs. I. Cecchetti in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1719–21, with bibl.

Salvian (*c.*400–*c.*480), 'of Marseilles', ecclesiastical writer. Born in the vicinity of *Cologne or Trier, of noble family, he married one Palladia. After the birth of a daughter, he and his wife decided to adopt a life of asceticism, thereby alienating her parents who were still pagans. After a period spent at *Lérins (from *c.*424), Salvian moved (prob. in the 430s) to Marseilles, where he appears to have spent the rest of his life. He was already a priest in 431. The author of numerous works, many of which are now lost, he is best known for his treatise De Gubernatione Dei, in which, by contrasting the vices of decadent Roman civilization with the virtues of the victorious barbarians, he used the latter as a witness to God's judgement on society and as an incentive for Christians to purity of life and faith in Providence. Also extant are a treatise Ad Ecclesiam (against avarice), issued under the pseudonym of 'Timothy', and 9 letters. Written in a clear and vigorous style, his works provide valuable evidence of contemporary attitudes and social conditions.

Works repr. from edn. of S. *Baluze in J. P. Migne, PL 53. 25–238; crit. edns. by F. Pauly (CSEL 8; 1883), by C. Halm in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 1 (pt. 1; 1887), and, with Fr. tr., by G. Lagarrigue (SC 176 and 220; 1971–5). Eng. tr. of his works by J. F. O'Sullivan (Fathers of the Church, 3; 1962) and of his De Gubernatione Dei by E. M. Sandford (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies; New York, 1930), with notes on early edns. of his works. M. Pellegrino, Salviano di Marsiglia (Lateranum, NS 6, fascs. 1–2; 1940). P. Badot, 'La Notice de Gennade relative à Salvien', R. Bén. 84 (1974), pp. 352–66; S. Prococo, 'Una nota biografica su Salviano di Marsiglia', Siculorum Gymnasium, NS 29 (Catania, 1976), pp. 351–68. J. Badewien, Geschichtstheologie und Sozialkritik im Werk Salvians von Marseille (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 32; Göttingen, 1980). A. Hamman in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 528–37. G. Lagarrigue in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 290–7, s.v., with bibl.

Samaria. The capital of the kingdom of *Israel, i.e. of the 'Ten [northern] Tribes', founded by King Omri (*c.*880 BC) and in *c.*721 BC captured by the Assyrians, who resettled the territory with pagans from other parts of their empire (2 Kgs. 18: 9–12 and ch. 17). According to Jewish tradition, the Samaritans known to later Judaism and the NT were the descendants of these settlers, though precisely when they became a separate religious sect with a temple of their own on Mt. Gerizim is disputed; opinions vary between the 5th and the 1st cent. BC, most scholars favouring a date in the 4th cent. The hostility of the Jews to the Samaritans was proverbial (Jn. 4: 9 and 8: 48). The Lord's sympathy to them is shown in the parables of the Good Samaritan (Lk. 10: 33) and the Ten Lepers (Lk. 17: 16). Apparently St *Philip the Evangelist was the first to preach the Gospel to them. A small Samaritan community survives at Nablus.

G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (25th edn., 1931), pp. 323–63. J. A. Montgomery, The Samaritans (Philadelphia, 1907); M. Gaster, The Samaritans (Schweich Lectures for 1923; 1925); J. Macdonald, The Theology of the Samaritans (1964); A. D. Crown, (ed.), The Samaritans (Tübingen, 1989). Id., A Bibliography of the Samaritans (American Theological Library Association Bibliography Series, 10; Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1984). J. Jeremias in TWNT 7 (1960–4), pp. 88–94 (Eng. tr., 7 (1971), pp. 88–94), s.v. Σαμάρεια, with bibl.; J. Macdonald and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 14 (Jerusalem, 1971), cols. 725–58; R. T. Anderson in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 940–7, these last two both s.v. 'Samaritans'. R. W. Hamilton, Guide to Samaria-Sebaste (Jerusalem, 1944). A. Alt, Der Stadtstaat Samaria (Ber. (Sachs.), 101, Heft 5; 1954). A. Parrot, Samarie, capitale du royaume d'Israël (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, 7; 1955; Eng. tr., 1958). K. [M.] Kenyon, Royal Cities of the Old Testament (1971), pp. 71–89. J. D. Purvis in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 914–21, s.v.; N. Avigad in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 4 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 1300–10, s.v. 'Samaria (City)'; E. Hovers and others, ibid., pp. 1310–18, s.v. 'Samaria (Region)'. See also bibl. to following entry.

Samaritan Pentateuch. A slightly divergent form of the *Pentateuch in Hebrew, current since pre-Christian times among the Samaritans and the only part of the OT accepted by them. Where it differs from the *Massoretic (i.e. the standard Jewish) text, it seems usually to be inferior in value. Though the differences for the most part are only verbal, it is worth noting that they not infrequently agree with divergent readings found in the LXX, and they sometimes accord with the more developed ideas of reverence of a later date, e.g. in the substitution of 'the angel of God' for 'God' in the sentence 'God met Balaam' (Num. 23: 4). A notable difference is the name of the Samaritan holy mountain, Mt. Gerizim, for Mt. Ebal in Deut. 27: 4. No extant MS appears to be older than the 11th cent. AD, apart from a fragment of Num. 26: 62–27: 11 in Manchester, which is dated in the 9th century. There is an Aramaic translation, whose origins may go back to about the 2nd cent. AD; it is known as the Samaritan Targum.

The text was first made known in Europe in 1616 by the traveller Pietro della Valle, who brought home a copy from Damascus, now preserved in the *Vatican Library. The text was first pub. in the Paris *Polyglot of 1645 and repr. by B. *Walton in the London Polyglot of 1657; also ed. separately by B. Blayney (Oxford, 1790) and by A. von Gall (5 pts., Giessen, 1914–18; eclectic text, which makes no use of older MSS preserved at Nablus). Crit. edn. of the Samaritan Targum by A. Tal (3 vols., Tel Aviv, 1980–3). W. *Gesenius, De Pentateuchi Samaritani Origine, Indole et Auctoritate (Halle, 1815; denies its usefulness for OT text). P. Kahle, 'Untersuchungen zur Geschichte des Pentateuchtextes', Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 88 (1915), pp. 399–439, esp. 'I. Der Pentateuch der Samaritaner', pp. 402–10. J. D. Purvis, The Samaritan Pentateuch and the Origin of the Samaritan Sect (Harvard Semitic Monographs, 2; Cambridge, Mass., 1968). Id. in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Suppl. vol. (Nashville, 1976), pp. 772–5, s.v.; B. K. Waltke in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 932–40, s.v., with bibl.

Samson (prob. 11th cent. BC), Hebrew hero, enemy of the Philistines and traditionally the last of the great 'judges'. Acc. to Jgs. 13: 2–16: 31 he was the son of Manoah, of the tribe of Dan, born in answer to prayer and bound throughout his life by a *Nazirite vow. He was endowed with prodigious strength, which enabled him to perform various remarkable exploits (e.g. slaying a lion and moving the gates of Gaza). After marrying a Philistine woman who betrayed him, he wrought havoc among the Philistines, from whom he escaped by his own strength both when surrendered by the men of Judah and when surrounded while visiting a harlot at Gaza. He at last fell victim to his consuming passion for Delilah, to whom he revealed that the secret of his strength lay in his hair. The Philistines put out his eyes, but Samson was granted his revenge in pulling down the pillars of the temple when 3,000 Philistines were assembled.

The name 'Samson' is almost certainly connected with the Hebrew word for 'sun' (shemesh), and some have seen in Samson the hero of a solar myth, derived from either the form of his name or that of his burial-place (Bethshemesh). Recent scholarship thinks of the Samson stories as originally independent tales, perhaps concerning a variety of local heroes, which have been skilfully woven together by the editors of the *Deuteronomistic History. In acc. with the scheme of the Book of Judges, he is said to have 'judged' Israel for 20 years (15: 20 and 16: 31), but the account in general contains nothing to suggest that he was a deliverer of Israel. He was, however, regarded as a recipient of divine favour and in the NT his faith is commended (Heb. 11: 32). In later literature he is the hero of J. *Milton's Samson Agonistes (1671) and one of G. F. *Handel's oratorios (1741).

See comm. on JUDGES, cited s.v., notably C. F. *Burney, The Book of Judges (1918), with bibl. p. 335, and additional note pp. 391–408 ('The Mythical Element in the Story of Samson'), and J. A. Soggin, Judges (1981), pp. 225–59. H. *Gunkel, 'Simson', in Reden und Aufsätze (Göttingen, 1913), pp. 38–64. G. von *Rad, 'Die Geschichte von Simson' [talk broadcast in 1953], in Gottes Wirken in Israel: Vorträge zum alten Testament, ed. O. H. Steck (Neukirchen, 1974), pp. 49–52. J. Blenkinsopp, 'Structure and Style in Judges 13–16', Journal of Biblical Literature, 82 (1963), pp. 65–76. J. L. Crenshaw, Samson: A Secret Betrayed, a Vow Ignored (Atlanta [1978]; London, 1979). Id. in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 950–4, s.v.

Samson, St (*c.*486–after 557), Bp. of Dol in Brittany. Born in S. Wales, he was ordained by St *Dubricius and then entered the monastery on *Caldey Island, in due course becoming abbot. He is said to have visited *Ireland and on his return to have sent his uncle Umbraphel to take charge of a monastery which had been given to him. He retired for a while to a cave near the R. Severn and attended a synod at which he was made a bishop. Instructed in a vision to leave his monastery, he went first to Cornwall and then to Brittany. There he founded the monastery of Dol which became a centre of missionary activity. He attended the councils of Paris in 553 and 557, signing the decrees as Samson peccator episcopus.

His Life, which perhaps dates from the 7th cent., seems to have been the model of many later Lives. His cult became popular soon after his death. Dol was the centre of the Church in Brittany, preserving its independence from Tours from the 6th to the 9th cent. Only in 1199 did Pope *Innocent III finally reject its claim to metropolitan status. Feast day, 28 July.

Life, first pr. by J. *Mabillon, also in AASS, Jul. 7 (1729), pp. 573–93; and ed. by R. Fawtier (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 197; 1912); Eng. tr. of text by T. Taylor ('Translations of Christian Literature'; 1925). F. Duine, 'La Vie de saint Samson, à propos d'un ouvrage récent', Annales de Bretagne, 28 (1913), pp. 332–56; J. Loth, 'La Vie la plus ancienne de saint Samson de Dol d'après des travaux récents: remarques et additions', Revue Celtique, 35 (1914), pp. 269–300; 39 (1922), pp. 301–33; and 40 (1923), pp. 1–50; R. Fawtier, 'Saint Samson abbé de Dol. Réponse à quelques objections', Annales de Bretagne, 35 (1923), pp. 137–70, with reply, pp. 171–86. F. C. Burkitt in JTS 27 (1926), pp. 42–57. G. H. Doble, Saint Samson in Cornwall (Cornish Saints Series, 36 [1935]), J.-C. Poulin, 'Hagiographie et politique. La première vie de saint Samson de Dol', Francia, 5 for 1977 (1978), pp. 1–26; B. Merdrignac, 'La première vie de saint Samson: étude chronologique', Studia Monastica, 30 (1988), pp. 245–89. Further bibl. in M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe, A Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400–1200 (Dublin, 1985), pp. 261 f. (nos. 950 f.).

Samuel, Books of. The two Books of Samuel were originally a single Book, which was divided for convenience by the compilers of the *Septuagint, who also grouped the Books of Samuel with those of *Kings under the one single title of the '[Four] Books of the Reigns'. The English title follows the Hebrew, and is due to the important part played in the opening chapters by the prophet Samuel, in the establishment of the monarchy in Israel. After relating the history of Samuel, the writer sets down a description of the reigns of Saul (*c.*1025–*c.*1010 BC) and *David (*c.*1010–*c.*970). Three ancient poems lie embedded in the narrative: Hannah's prayer (1 Sam. 2: 1–10), David's lament (2 Sam. 1: 19–27), David's song of triumph (2 Sam. 22). As might be expected in such a work, various sources have been used by the compilers. It is widely believed that 2 Sam. 9–20, together with 1 Kgs. 1–2, originally formed an independent work concerned with the succession to the throne of David and accordingly often referred to as the 'Succession Narrative'. There is also evidence of the use of fragmentary sources, ranging from prophetic legends to excerpts from books of annals. The older view, that the Pentateuchal sources '*J' and '*E' continue into the Books of Samuel, is now less commonly held. Many modern scholars have been less interested in the sources than in the religious and theological standpoint of the compilers and regard the Books as an important constituent of the so-called '*Deuteronomistic History' (q.v.).

Comm. by H. W. Hertzberg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 10; 1956; 2nd edn., 1960; Eng. tr. 1964), J. Mauchline (New Cent. Bib., 1971), P. K. McCarter (Anchor Bible, 2 vols., 1980–4), R. P. Gordon (Exeter [1986]); on 1 Sam. by R. W. Klein (Word Biblical Comm. 10; Waco, Tex. [1983]), and on 2 Sam. by P. R. Ackroyd (Cam. Bib., NEB, 1977) and A. A. Anderson (Word Biblical Comm. 11 [1989]). S. R. *Driver, Notes on the Hebrew Text and the Topography of the Books of Samuel (1890); O. Eissfeldt, Die Komposition der Samuelisbücher (1931). R. A. Carlson, David, the Chosen King: A Traditio-Historical Approach to the Second Book of Samuel (Eng. tr., Stockholm, 1964). A. Weiser, Samuel: Seine geschichtliche Aufgabe und religiöse Bedeutung. Traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu 1. Samuel 7–12 (Göttingen, 1962). R. N. Whybray, The Succession Narrative (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 9; 1968); D. M. Gunn, The Story of King David: Genre and Interpretation (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 6; Sheffield 1978). Brief introd. by R. P. Gordon, 1 & 2 Samuel (Old Testament Guides, Sheffield [1984]). A. Caquot in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 11 (1991), cols. 1048–98, s.v.

sanatio in radice (Lat., 'healing at the root'). In canon law, the process whereby an invalid 'marriage' is validated retrospectively, i.e. from the moment at which the 'marriage' was solemnized. Unless special provision is made for sanatio in radice, the marriage is validated only from the moment at which the *impediment is dispensed and valid consent exchanged. In the absence of such retrospective validation, the full legitimacy of children born before validation would not be secured. Under RC canon law (CIC (1983), can. 1165) sanatio in radice can be granted by the Pope, and by diocesan bishops in certain types of cases. See also VALIDATION OF MARRIAGE.

T. P. Doyle, OP, in J. A. Coriden and others (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 822–9, with bibl. p. 833. See also bibl. to discussions in RC handbooks of moral theology.

sanbenito. The penitential garment which the medieval and later the Spanish Inquisition ordered to be worn, either for life or for a specified period, by those who had been sentenced for heresy. It was normally yellow, with one or two crosses on it, but in the case of those to be handed over to the secular authorities at an auto de fé, it was black, with flames, demons, and other decorative matter painted or embroidered on it.

Sánchez, Thomas (1550–1610), Spanish *Jesuit moral theologian. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1567 and was appointed master of novices at Granada, where he also taught moral theology and canon law. He became famous for his Disputationes de sancto matrimonii sacramento (1602), a comprehensive work on the moral and canonical aspects of matrimony which enjoyed high authority in the 17th cent. One volume of its Venetian edition was placed on the *Index because of the omission of a passage, displeasing to the Venetian Republic, defending the legitimization of illegitimate children by the Pope without interference of the civil authorities. In the Opus Morale in Praecepta Decalogi (1613), published posthumously, he undertook to expound a system of casuistry based on the Decalogue, but he did not go beyond the Second Commandment. Much later Sánchez was attacked as a *laxist by B. *Pascal in his Lettres provinciales, but he seems only to have shared some erroneous opinions, e.g. on *mental reservation, with other *probabilists of his time.

Collected edn. of his works, 7 vols., Venice, 1740. H. Zapp, Die Geisteskrankheit in der Ehekonsenslehre Thomas Sanchez' (Forschungen zur kirchlichen Rechtsgeschichte und zum Kirchenrecht, 11; Cologne and Vienna, 1971); M. Bajén, Pensamiento de Tomas Sanchez S.I. sobre Moral Sexual (Granada, 1976). Sommervogel, 7 (1896), cols. 530–7; Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 152 f. R. Brouillard, SJ, in DTC 14 (1939), cols. 1075–85, s.v.

Sancroft, William (1617–93), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was a Fellow from 1642 till 1651, when he was ejected by the *Puritans. At the *Restoration he was appointed chaplain to *Charles II, Prebendary of *Durham (1662), Master of Emmanuel College (1662), and Dean of *York (1664). As chaplain to Bp. J. *Cosin of Durham he acted as secretary to the revisers of the 1662 BCP, which he also saw through the press. In Dec. 1664 he became Dean of *St Paul's, where he reordered the capitular finances; after the disastrous fire of 1666 he collaborated with C. *Wren in rebuilding the cathedral. In 1678 he succeeded G. *Sheldon in the see of Canterbury. His primacy was distinguished by a major effort to renew the strength of the Anglican establishment, both politically, in alliance with the Tory party, and spiritually. He raised the standard of ordination requirements; conducted a Metropolitical Visitation in 1682, and suspended Thomas Wood, Bp. of *Lichfield and Coventry, for negligence in 1684. The accession of the RC *James II caused him to alter the *Coronation rite radically in 1685, so that the Communion could be omitted. James's attack on the inherited position of the C of E soon pushed Sancroft into opposition to the royal policies. His action as leader of the *Seven Bishops who opposed the *Declaration of Indulgence in 1688 led to his imprisonment in the Tower, but on trial he was acquitted. After James's flight he refused, however, to recognize William of Orange as rightful king, was suspended from office on 1 Aug. 1689, and on 1 Feb. 1690 deprived of his archbishopric as a '*Nonjuror'. His later years were spent in retirement in Suffolk, where he came to support schemes to perpetuate the Nonjuring succession. In 1692 he formally delegated his archiepiscopal authority to William Lloyd, the deprived Bp. of *Norwich.

A small collection of his Occasional Sermons was pub., London, 1694. Life by G. D'Oyly (2 vols., London 1821). C. R. L. Fletcher, 'Some Troubles of Archbishop Sancroft', Proceedings of the Huguenot Society of London, 13 (1926), pp. 209–61, with calendar of some of his correspondence in the Tanner Collection [Bodleian Library], pp. 255–61. N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (Ford Lectures, 1958; Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 16–18, 82–9, 134 f., 188–92. R. [A.] Beddard, 'The Commission for Ecclesiastical Promotions, 1681–4: An Instrument of Tory Reaction', Historical Journal, 10 (1967), pp. 11–40; id., 'The Guildhall Declaration of 11 December 1688 and the Counter-Revolution of the Loyalists', ibid. 11 (1968), pp. 403–20. W. H. *Hutton in DNB 1 (1897), pp. 244–50; id. in DECH, pp. 543 f. See also works cited under SEVEN BISHOPS and NONJURORS.

Sancta Clara, Franciscus a. See DAVENPORT, CHRISTOPHER.

Sancta Sophia. The famous church at *Constantinople, dedicated to the 'Holy *Wisdom' (i.e. the Person of Christ), was built under *Justinian by Anthemius of Tralles and Isidore of Miletus between 532 and 537 and consecrated in 538. One of the most perfect examples of Byzantine architecture, its chief feature is the enormous dome, supported by piers, arches, and pendentives, and pierced by 40 windows, which crowns the basilica. In 1453 the church was converted into a mosque by the Turks, and the mosaics which adorned its interior were covered up and partly destroyed. Discovered during restoration work in 1847–9, they have been laid bare and restored during the 20th cent. The church has been a museum since 1935.

W. R. Lethaby and H. Swainson, The Church of Sancta Sophia, Constantinople: A Study of Byzantine Building (1894). E. M. Antoniades, Ἔκφρασις τῆς Ἁγίας Σοφίας (3 vols., Athens, 1907–9). V. R. Zaloziecky, Die Sophienkirche in Konstantinopel und ihre Stellung in der abendländischen Architektur (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 12; 1936). A. M. Schneider, Die Hagia Sophia zu Konstantinopel (Bilderhefte Antiker Kunst herausgegeben vom Archäologischen Institut des Deutschen Reiches, 6 [1938]). E. H. Swift, Hagia Sophia (New York, 1940). H. Kähler, Die Hagia Sophia (1967; Eng. tr., 1967, incl. a section by C. Mango on the mosaics). R. J. Mainstone, Hagia Sophia: Architecture, Structure and Liturgy of Justinian's Great Church [1988]. R. Mark and A. Ş. Çakmak, Hagia Sophia from the Age of Justinian to the Present (Cambridge, 1992). T. Whittemore, The Mosaics of St Sophia at Istanbul (Byzantine Institute, 4 vols., 1933–52); C. Mango, Materials for the Study of the Mosaics of St Sophia at Istanbul (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, 8; 1962). See also works cited under CONSTANTINOPLE.

Sanctorale. The section of a *Missal, *Lectionary, or *Breviary (sometimes made into a separate book) which supplies the variable parts of the Mass or Offices peculiar to the festivals of particular saints.

sanctuary (Gk. ἱερατεῖον, or, more commonly, βῆμα). The part of the church containing the altar (or, if there be several altars, the high altar). In Byzantine churches it is enclosed by the *iconostasis. It is sometimes termed the 'presbytery', as being the portion of the church properly reserved to the clergy.

sanctuary, right of. In the Middle Ages this was of two kinds, ecclesiastical and secular. The former had developed out of the usage that a criminal who had taken refuge in a church might not be removed from it, but was allowed to take an oath of abjuration before the coroner and proceed to a seaport appointed by the latter. If within 40 days he refused to adopt this procedure, he might be forcibly extricated for justice. The privilege was understood not to extend to sacrilege or high treason. Sometimes those claiming the privilege of sanctuary had to touch a particular object in the church (in early times, often the altar). The sanctuary-stool ('frith-stool') survives at *Hexham, the sanctuary-knocker at *Durham and elsewhere.

Secular and jurisdictional sanctuary relied upon royal grant, and in theory at least might be held to apply to every franchise where the lord had jura regalia and the king's writ did not run. This institution is frequently confused with ecclesiastical sanctuary, since criminals commonly repaired to a church in a franchise, esp. in the great ecclesiastical liberties like *Beverley, Durham, and Tynemouth. Such sanctuaries as these latter certainly promoted social disorder in the later Middle Ages. At the Reformation the privilege of sanctuary was drastically curtailed. In 1540 *Henry VIII limited it to seven cities, namely, *Wells, *Westminster, Northampton, Manchester, *York, Derby, and Launceston. A petition from Manchester against the nomination led to *Chester being substituted. By an act of *James I (1623), sanctuary for crime was finally abolished altogether, though it lingered on for civil processes until 1723.

S. Pegge, 'A Sketch of the History of the Asylum, or Sanctuary, from its Origin to the Final Abolition of it in the Reign of James I', Archaeologia, 8 (1787), pp. 1–44. N. M. Trenholme, The Right of Sanctuary in England (University of Missouri Studies, vol. 1, no. 5; 1903). J. C. Cox, The Sanctuaries and Sanctuary Seekers of Mediaeval England (1911). J. H. Baker, 'The English Law of Sanctuary', Ecclesiastical Law Journal, 2 (1990), pp. 8–13. G. Le Bras in DHGE 4 (1930), cols. 1035–47, s.v. 'Asile'; E. Herman and L. R. Misserey in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 1084–9 and 1089–1104, s.vv. 'Asile dans l'Église orientale (Le Droit de)' and 'Asile en Occident' respectively, all with detailed bibl.

Sanctus. The hymn of praise which follows the *Preface in the Eucharist and begins with the words 'Holy, holy, holy' (Is. 6: 3). It appeared in some synagogue prayers, and, though used by Christians from an early date, it was not apparently part of the earliest Eucharistic rite; the allusion to it in St *Clement of Rome (1 Clem. 34: 6 f.) need not be liturgical. By 350, however, its use in the Eucharist in most E. and some W. Churches is reported in the treatise De Spiritu Sancto (PL 17. 1010) attributed to St *Ambrose. Its use in the E. is also attested by sermons ascribed to *Asterius (15. 16 and 29. 10), by St *Gregory of Nyssa (De Baptismo) and St John *Chrysostom (In Eph. 14. 4). It may have been introduced in Rome by Sixtus III (432–40), but it was slow to become established in the W. and as late as 529 the Council of *Vaison had to direct that it be always included. To the angelic cry 'Sanctus' was soon added the human acclamation '*Benedictus qui venit' ('Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord, Hosanna in the highest'). This is found in the 8th-cent. Latin rite, the E. liturgies of St *James and St *Chrysostom, in the 1549 Book of *Common Prayer, and in modern RC and Anglican texts. Originally the Sanctus and Benedictus were not separated from the *Canon which followed immediately afterwards, but the practice of the congregation and choir joining in the words of the Sanctus led to a division here, and the Canon came to be looked on as a separate item. In sung Masses, the Sanctus and Benedictus were at one time separated, with the Benedictus being sung after the *Elevation. In modern liturgies the Sanctus and Benedictus form part of the *Eucharistic Prayers.

A. *Baumstark, 'Trishagion und Qeduscha', JLW 3 (1923), pp. 18–32. E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Sanctus and the Pattern of the Early Anaphora', JEH 1 (1950), pp. 29–36 and 125–34. W. C. van Unnik, '1 Clement 34 and the "Sanctus"', VC 5 (1951), pp. 204–48. H. Auf der Maur, Die Osterhomilien des Asterius Sophistes als Quellen für die Geschichte des Osterfeier (Trierer theologische Studien, 19; 1967), pp. 74–94. B. D. Spinks, The Sanctus in the Eucharistic Prayer (Cambridge, 1991). Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 161–73 (Eng. tr., 2, pp. 128–38), with refs. to ancient sources and older bibl.

Sanctus bell. See SACRING BELL.

Sanctus candle. The rubrics of the Roman Missal long required that at the Epistle side of the altar an additional candle should be lighted at the *Sanctus, and that it should be left burning until after the Communion. The custom seems to have originated at the end of the Middle Ages; but, despite the rubric, it was not generally observed in modern times.

sandals, episcopal. The low shoes with leather soles and the upper part of embroidery which before 1984 could be worn by bishops in the W. Church only at solemn Pontifical Masses and other functions (e.g. Ordination) performed during them. Except in Rome they were usually adorned with a small cross. Their use certainly goes back to the 5th cent. Liturgical stockings (caligae), in modern times of the liturgical colour of the day, were worn with them.

Braun, LG, pp. 384–424. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 13 (1912), pp. 434 f., s.v.

Sanday, William (1843–1920), English NT scholar. He was educated at Repton and at Balliol and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford. In 1876 he was appointed principal of Hatfield Hall, *Durham, and in 1882 recalled to Oxford as Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis, where he remained for the rest of his life. From 1895 to 1919 he was Lady Margaret professor of divinity. His influence went far to winning Anglican clergy to the acceptance of modern methods of NT study. Though his long-projected Life of Christ was never achieved, the plan bore fruit in a large number of books conceived as subsidiary studies. He is now known mainly for his Commentary on Romans (1895, in conjunction with A. C. *Headlam) and his Christologies, Ancient and Modern (1910).

Obituary notice by W. Lock in JTS 22 (1921), pp. 97–104, with bibl. of his published works by A. *Souter, pp. 193–205. M. D. Chapman, 'The Socratic Subversion of Tradition: William Sanday and Theology, 1900–1920', ibid., NS 45 (1994), pp. 94–116. C. H. *Turner in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 482–4.

Sandemanians. See GLASITES.

Sanders, Nicholas (*c.*1530–81), also 'Sander', RC controversialist and historian. Educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, he graduated in 1551 and lectured on canon law. After the accession of *Elizabeth I he fled to the Continent (1559) and was ordained priest at Rome in 1560. In 1561 he accompanied Cardinal S. *Hosius to the Council of *Trent and later on missions to Poland, Prussia, and Lithuania. In 1565 he went to Louvain, where he became professor of theology and, in connection with the controversy aroused by Bp. J. *Jewel's Apology, published The Supper of Our Lord (1565), A Treatise of Images (1567), The Rock of the Church (1567), and De Visibili Monarchia Ecclesiae (1571). The last of these, resuming the general ideas of St *Augustine's De Civitate Dei, gives a comprehensive view of the Church from its first adumbrations at the beginnings of humanity and defends its monarchical government; it also throws much incidental light on the sufferings endured by RCs under Elizabeth. Called to Rome in 1572, he became consultor to *Gregory XIII on English affairs. In 1573 he went to Spain to induce *Philip II to make war on Elizabeth, and in 1579 he went to Ireland as Papal agent to cause an insurrection against the government. After two years of continual failure he died as a fugitive, probably of exhaustion. His unfinished work De Origine ac Progressu Schismatis Anglicani was edited by E. Rishton in 1585 and translated by D. Lewis in 1877. Though sharply criticized at the time, it is now admitted to be accurate in some of its controverted statements.

J. H. Pollen, SJ (ed.), 'Dr Nicholas Sander's Report to Cardinal Moroni N.d. [? May, 1561.]', Catholic Record Society Miscellanea, 1 (*Catholic Record Society, 1; 1905), pp. 1–23, with Eng. tr. pp. 24–47. J. B. Wainewright (ed.), 'Some Letters and Papers of Nicholas Sander, 1562–1580', Catholic Record Society Miscellanea 13 (ibid. 26; 1926), pp. 1–57. J. H. Pollen, SJ, 'Dr. Nicholas Sanders', EHR 6 (1891), pp. 36–47. T. M. Veech, Dr Nicholas Sanders and the English Reformation, 1530–81 (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux publiés par les Membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, 2nd ser., fasc. 32; 1935), with bibl. A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation between 1558 and 1640, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 135–40 (nos. 966–1022). T. G. Law in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 259–62.

Sanderson, Robert (1587–1663), Bp. of *Lincoln. Educated at Rotherham Grammar School and Lincoln College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1606, he was ordained in 1611 and held several livings, as well as prebendal stalls at *Southwell and Lincoln. Gaining the favour of W. *Laud, he was appointed a royal chaplain in 1631 and Regius professor of divinity at Oxford in 1642. During the Civil War he was deprived of his professorship and for a time imprisoned. In 1660 he was reinstated and soon afterwards consecrated to the see of Lincoln. He took a leading part in the *Savoy Conference of 1661 and drafted the preface to the new (1662) Prayer Book. His best-known work is his Nine Cases of Conscience Occasionally Determined (1678), one of the most notable contributions to moral theology in its age. His other writings include: Logicae Artis Compendium (1615); De Juramenti Promissorii Obligatione (1647); and De Obligatione Conscientiae (lectures in 1647; pub. 1660).

Facsimile of his Logicae Artis Compendium, with introd. by E. J. Ashworth (Instrumenta Rationis, 2; Bologna, 1985). An Eng. tr. of his De Obligatione Conscientiae by R. Codrington was also pub., London, 1660; Eng. tr. with preface by C. *Wordsworth, Lincoln, 1877. Collected edn. of his works by W. Jacobson (6 vols., Oxford, 1854), with repr. of the famous Life by I. *Walton, orig. pub. London, 1678, in vol. 6, pp. 265–350. Modern study by G. Lewis (London, 1924). P. G. Lake, 'Serving God and the Times: The Calvinist Conformity of Robert Sanderson', Journal of British Studies, 27 (1988), pp. 81–116. J. H. Legge in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 265 f., with further refs.

Sandys, Edwin (*c.*1516–88), Abp. of *York. A graduate of St John's College, Cambridge, he became master of St Catharine's Hall in 1547, vicar of Caversham in 1548, canon of *Peterborough in 1549, and vice-chancellor of Cambridge University in 1553, in all these posts doing his utmost to further the principles of the English Reformation. A supporter of Lady Jane Grey, he was imprisoned in the Tower in July 1553, but eventually escaped to the Continent. On *Elizabeth I's accession he returned, and was appointed subsequently to the sees of *Worcester (1559), London (1570), and York (1577). A fervent and learned opponent of Romanist practices, with personal leanings towards *Puritanism, he came on several occasions into collision with his clergy. He was one of the translators of the *Bishops' Bible.

Sandys issued a collection of his sermons, London, 1585; ed. T. Whitaker (ibid., 1812), with Life, pp. i–lxiv; also ed., with other miscellaneous pieces, by J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 1841), with biographical introduction, pp. i–xxxii. Further letters in H. Robinson (ed.), The Zürich Letters, 1 (Parker Society, 1842), pp. 3–6, 72–5, 145 f., 264–6, 294–7, 311–13, and 331–3. H. Trevor-Roper, Catholics, Anglicans and Puritans (1987), pp. 195–8. W. A. J. Archbold in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 283–6.

Sanhedrin. The Jewish supreme council and court of justice at *Jerusalem in NT times. The surviving evidence is confused and conflicting as to its precise name, function, composition, competence, and procedures, and it is possible that it was not at all times a formal, clearly identifiable, constitutional body. The name is a Heb. form of the Gk. συνέδριον, 'council', but in Gk. sources the main council of Jerusalem is also designated by the words βουλή (*Josephus, Bell. Jud. 2. 15. 6), γερουσία (Acts 5: 21) and πρεσβυτέριον (Lk. 22: 66, Acts 22: 5). The origin of such a council is obscure, but an assembly of this type in operation is attested before Roman times. Acc. to rabbinic texts, the Sanhedrin consisted of 71 members (cf. Num. 11: 16). Acc. to the NT and Josephus, it included both priests and laymen, and both *Sadducees and *Pharisees. The NT implies that it was presided over by the *High Priest (Mt. 26: 57, Acts. 24: 1). Rabbinic sources, however, make no mention of such a position belonging to the High Priest and refer to its president by such expressions as 'Nasi' ('Prince') or 'the Father of the House of Judgement'. It is debated whether it had the right to try capital cases (Josephus, Antiq. 14. 9. 3 f.; Mt. 26: 3 f.; Acts 4: 5, 6: 12, 22: 30), but such a right may be presupposed by the tradition that it pronounced sentence of death on Christ. After the destruction of Jerusalem in AD 70, when it came to an end in its original form, the *rabbis at *Jamnia claimed the right to take over some of its duties and authority.

Much information is contained in the Tractate 'Sanhedrin' of the *Mishnah (q.v.), but the relevance of this material to the period before AD 70 is disputed. S. B. Hoenig, The Great Sanhedrin: A Study of the Origin, Development, Composition and Functions of the Bet Din ha-Gadol during the Second Jewish Commonwealth (Philadelphia, 1953). H. Mantel, Studies in the History of the Sanhedrin (Harvard Semitic Series, 17; 1961). G. Alon, The Jews in their Land in the Talmudic Age (70–640 C.E.), 1 (Jerusalem, 1980; Eng. tr. of Heb. rev. edn., pub. Tel Aviv, 1967), pp. 185–205; E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 199–226; M. Goodman, The Ruling Class of Judaea (Cambridge, 1987), pp. 112–16. On the disputed right of the Sanhedrin to inflict the death sentence, and its relevance to the Passion Narrative, cf. also A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament (Sarum Lectures, 1960–1; Oxford, 1963), esp. pp. 32–47, with refs.; P. Winter, On the Trial of Jesus (Studia Judaica, 1; Berlin, 1961; 2nd edn., with addenda, by T. A. Burkill and G. Vermes, 1974); D. R. Catchpole, The Trial of Jesus (Studia Post-Biblica, 18; Leiden, 1971). An ingenious solution to some of the problems is proposed by the suggestion that there were two separate bodies, A. Büchler, Das Synedrion in Jerusalem und das grosse Beth-din in der Quaderkammer des Jerusalemischen Tempels (Vienna, 1902). E. Lohse in TWNT 7 (1964), pp. 858–69 (Eng. tr., 7 (1971), pp. 860–71), s.v. συνέδριον; A. J. Saldarini in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 975–80, s.v.

Sankey, Ira David (1840–1908). See MOODY, DWIGHT LYMAN.

Santa Claus. An American corruption of the Dutch form of St *Nicholas, Bp. of Myra, widely venerated as the patron of children. The custom of making Christmas gifts in his name was introduced in America by the Dutch Protestants at New Amsterdam and thence into England. In some countries, e.g. parts of Germany, small presents are given to children on his feast day, 6 Dec.

Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome. The celebrated *basilica on the Esquiline Hill was founded by Pope *Liberius (352–66). The present structure was erected under Sixtus III (432–40). Acc. to a medieval tradition the site was indicated by the BVM, who one August night left her footprints in a miraculous fall of summer snow. This legend was formerly commemorated in the Feast of Our Lady of the Snows (5 Aug.; now renamed as the Dedication of the Basilica of St Mary). Though smaller than the other early basilicas (Old St Peter's, S. Paolo fuori le Mura, and the *Lateran), it is the largest of the 80 churches in Rome dedicated to the BVM. Among the treasures of the church are the reputed remains of parts of the manger in which Christ was born.

A. Valentini, La patriarcale basilica liberiana illustrata (Rome, 1839). A. Schuchert, S. Maria Maggiore zu Rom, 1. Die Gründungsgeschichte der Basilika und die ursprüngliche Apsisanlage (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 15; 1939). R. Krautheimer, S. Corbett, and W. Frankl, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 3 (Rome, 1967), pp. 1–60, with full bibl. [in Eng.]. B. Brenk, Die frühchristlichen Mosaiken in S. Maria Maggiore zu Rom (Wiesbaden, 1975). See also ROME, CHURCHES OF.

Santa Sophia. See SANCTA SOPHIA.

Santiago de Compostela. See COMPOSTELA.

Santiago, Order of. A military order under the patronage of St *James founded in 1170 for the protection of pilgrims and the expulsion of the Moors. Its constitution was closely modelled on that of the *Templars; it was approved by Pope *Alexander III 1175. A distinctive feature of the Order was that the knights were allowed to marry under certain conditions, a right obtained by the other military Orders only at the end of the Middle Ages. The Order rapidly acquired property in Castile and Portugal as well as León, and in 1523 its administration was annexed to the Spanish crown.

J. López Argulета, Bullarium Equestris Ordinis Sancti Jacobi de Spatha (Madrid, 1719). Lat. and Sp. texts of the rule ed., with Eng. tr. and preliminary study, by E. Gallego Blanco (Medieval Iberian Peninsula Texts and Studies, 4; Leiden, 1971). D. W. Lomax, La Orden de Santiago (1170–1275) (1965), with bibl.

sarabaites. A name, of doubtful derivation, given in the early Church to a class of ascetics who dwelt either in their own houses or in small groups near cities and acknowledged no monastic superior. Their mode of life seems to have been regarded with disfavour, notably by St *Benedict, who refers to them adversely in the first chapter of his Rule.

Comm. on Rule of St Benedict (q.v.), esp. that by P. Delatte, OSB (Eng. tr., 1921), pp. 30–2. J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, 7. 2. 4.

Saracens (Lat. Saraceni, Gk. Σαρακηνοί). A term prob. originally applied to the nomads of N. Arabia, who claim descent from Ishmael; hence St. *John of Damascus, De Haeresibus Compendium, 101 (PG 94. 764 AB) calls them Ishmaelites. From at least the 9th cent. it came to be applied to all Muslims, esp. those against whom the *Crusaders fought. Two theories of the origin of the name (which is never used by Muslims themselves) have been advanced: one connects it with Arabic sharqi, 'Easterner', the other with an early use of Arabic sharika in the sense of 'tribal confederacy'.

Sarapion, St. See SERAPION, ST.

Saravia, Hadrian a (c.1532–1613), Protestant divine. Born at Hesdin in Artois of Hispano-Flemish parents, he entered the *Franciscan Order at St-Omer as a youth but left it on his conversion to Protestantism in 1557. From 1559 to 1562 he was in London as a member of the Dutch Reformed Church at Austin Friars. During this time he was consulted over the drafting of the the *Belgic Confession and, on becoming a minister of the Walloon congregation at Antwerp, was instrumental in commending this to William of Orange and other Dutch noblemen. In 1563 Saravia was appointed as the first master of Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and, after being granted English nationality in 1568, settled in Southampton as master of King Edward VI School (1572–8). Returning to the Netherlands, he served as a minister in Ghent (1578–82) and *Leiden (1582–4), before becoming professor of theology at the latter university in 1584. In 1587, his devoted support of the Governor General, the Earl of Leicester, led to his dismissal and flight to England, where he was appointed rector of Tatenhill (1588–95) and later a prebendary of *Gloucester (1591–5). He resigned these offices on becoming a canon of *Canterbury and vicar of Lewisham (1595–1604). In 1601 he added a canonry at *Westminster and, in 1610, the living of Great Chart. With the publication in 1590 of his chief theological work, De Diversis Ministrorum Evangelii Gradibus, Saravia emerged as a zealous champion of episcopacy and as the first Protestant theologian to base this position upon an appeal to the 'ius divinum'. Evidently directed against T. *Beza's teaching on Church government, the work provoked a response from Beza in 1592 to which Saravia replied in 1594. Incidentally his book was among the earliest Protestant writings to urge the apostolic commission to preach the Gospel to the heathen. A cultured and studious man, he was a close friend of R. *Hooker and I. *Casaubon. He was also one of the translators of the AV of the Bible.

A collection of some of his writings was pub. as Diversi Tractatus Theologici (London, 1611). His treatise De Sacra Eucharistica first pub., with Eng. tr. by G. A. *Denison (1885). W. Nijenhuis, Adrianus Saravia (c.1532–1613) (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 21 [in Eng.]; Leiden, 1980).

sarcophagus. Sarcophagi, i.e. stone coffins, usually adorned with bas-reliefs, were much used down to the Byzantine period for the burial of both pagans and Christians. Till a late date Christians continued to adorn them with pagan designs; but from the 4th cent. Christian designs also became common. The Christian subjects illustrated were, however, strictly limited in number, the most popular being *Jonah and the whale, *Moses striking the rock, the apprehension of *Peter, and one or two of the Lord's miracles. Most of the extant Christian sarcophagi are to be found in Italy, esp. in the *Vatican Museum and at *Ravenna. There are also many at Arles.

G. Wilpert, I sarcofagi cristiani antichi (3 vols., bound in 5, 1929–36); F. Gerke, Die christlichen Sarkophage der vorkonstantinischen Zeit (Studien zur spätantiken Kunstgeschichte, 11; 1940); G. Bovini, I sarcofagi paleocristiani: Determinazione della loro cronologia mediante l'analisi dei ritratti (Monumenti di Antichità Cristiana, 2nd ser. 5; 1949). R. [L. P.] Milburn, Early Christian Art and Architecture (Aldershot, 1988), esp. pp. 58–80. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 778–888, s.v.; M. Sotomayor in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3097–102, s.v.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 755 f., with bibl.

Sardica (or Serdica), Council of (mod. Sofia). A Council summoned *c.*343 by Emps. Constans and Constantius principally to settle the orthodoxy of St *Athanasius. It was intended that it should be an Oecumenical Council, but the E. bishops on arrival refused to attend on the ground that Athanasius, whom the E. had deposed, was being regarded by the W. as a proper member of the synod. The W. Bishops therefore met by themselves, under the presidency of *Hosius of Cordova. They confirmed the restoration of Athanasius, acquitted *Marcellus of Ancyra of heresy, and also restored Asclepas, Bp. of Gaza, who had been deposed by a Synod of *Antioch. The Council is famous for the disciplinary canons which it passed, chief among which are the provisions constituting the Bp. of Rome a court of appeal for accused bishops in certain circumstances. The canons of Sardica were at one time held to be canons of *Nicaea and were quoted as such by Pope *Zosimus in a letter sent in 418 to a Council of *Carthage.

The docs. connected with the Council, incl. the text of the canons (both Gk. and Lat. versions), will be found in Hardouin, 1, cols. 635–84, and Mansi, 3 (Florence, 1759), cols. 1–140. Crit. edn. of Lat. text of canons [incl. Gk. text in parallel column] in EOMIA 1. 2. 3 (1930), pp. 441–560. Lat. and Gk. text also pr., with Fr. tr., in Joannou, 1, pt. 2 (1962), pp. 159–89. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 733–823. H. Hess, The Canons of the Council of Sardica, A.D. 343 (Oxford, 1958). L. W. Barnard, The Council of Serdica 343 A.D. (Sofia, 1983). CPG 4 (1980), pp. 16–18 (nos. 8560–71). G. Bardy in Fliche and Martin, 3 (1936), pp. 122–30. Id. in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1109–14, s.v. 'Sardique (Concile de)'. On the Sardican Creed, F. *Loofs, Das Glaubensbekenntnis der Homousianer von Sardika (Abh. (Berl.), 1909, Heft 1); M. Tetz, 'Ante omnia de sancta fide et de integritate veritatis. Glaubensfragen auf der Synode von Serdika (342)', ZNTW 76 (1985), pp. 243–69; and S. G. Hall, 'The Creed of Sardica', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 19 (Louvain, 1989), pp. 173–84.

Sardis, city in Lydia, Asia Minor. The Christian community is one of the '*Seven Churches' addressed in Rev. 3: 1–6. Having a reputation for being alive, though in fact dead, its members are exhorted to repent, as Christ will return without warning. *Melito, Bp. of Sardis in the 2nd cent., also had apocalyptic concerns. The classical city's principal cult was that of Cybele, the ancient mother goddess of Anatolia; there was also a large and ornate synagogue in use c. AD 200–616. In Late Antiquity Sardis was a prosperous city. Despite severe damage in the early 7th cent., it was a significant centre and bishopric in the Middle Ages. However, W. travellers in the 17th cent. found a Turkish village with few Christians and no priest or church building.

The results of the Archaeological Exploration, organized by the Fogg Art Museum of Harvard University and other institutions from 1958 to 1975, are summarized in G. M. A. Hanfmann and others, Sardis from Prehistoric to Roman Times (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1983), with full bibl. There is a popular account by id., Letters from Sardis (Cambridge, Mass., 1972). The series of monographs and reports issued in connection with the Archaeological Exploration incl. J. G. Pedley, Ancient Literary Sources on Sardis (Monograph, 2; ibid., 1972); C. Foss, Byzantine and Turkish Sardis (ibid. 4; 1976); A. R. Seager and others, The Synagogue and its Setting (Report, 4; forthcoming), and R. Thomas and others, A Bibliography of Lydia and Sardis (Monograph, 11; forthcoming). C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1986]), pp. 129–52. J. G. Pedley in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 982–4.

Sarpi, Paolo (1552–1623), Fra Paolo, *Servite jurist and theologian. A native of *Venice, he entered the Servite Order in 1565 or 1566, and was elected Provincial in 1579. From 1585 to 1588 he was Procurator-General. His relations with leading Protestants aroused the suspicion of the Curia, which opposed several times his appointment to an episcopal see. In the struggle between Venice and *Paul V (1606–7) he defended the interests of the Republic, which appointed him its theological consultor in 1606. Largely owing to his influence the interdict placed on Venice remained without effect, and his violent anti-Papal activities resulted in his excommunication in 1607. In the same year an abortive attempt to murder him was made, possibly by his ecclesiastical enemies. Despite his excommunication he remained theological counsellor to the Republic and exercised his priestly functions until his death. His most important work is the Historia del Concilio Tridentino, first published, at London in 1619, under the name of 'Pietro Soave Polano' (an anagram of 'Paolo Sarpi Veneto'). It is based on much authentic material but, lacking in objectivity, it represents the Council as being solely a conspiracy against the reform of the Church. Sarpi's general attitude favoured the Protestants, and he was also keenly interested in the new scientific movement.

Works collected in 5 vols., bound in 6 (Venice, 1677), with Life by F. Micanzio, Ord. Serv. (orig. pub. Leiden, 1646) in vol. 1, pp. 1–326; standard edn., 8 vols. (Helmstadt and Verona, 1761–8); modern edn. by M. D. Busnelli, G. Gambarin, and R. Amerio in the series 'Scrittori d'Italia' (7 vols. in 9, Bari, 1931–51 [incomplete]); Opere [Selections] ed. G. and L. Cozzi (La Letteratura Italiano, Storia e Testi, 35, vol. 1; Milan and Naples [1969]). There are also modern edns. of Lettere ai Gallicani by B. Ulianich (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte Mainz, 26; Wiesbaden, 1961), La Repubblica di Venezia, la Casa d'Austria e gli Uscocchi, aggiunta e supplimento all'Istoria degli Uscocchi trattato di pace et accommodamento, by G. and L. Cozzi ('Scrittori d'Italia', 231; Bari, 1965), and Istoria del Concilio Tridentino by C. Vivanti (2 vols., Turin, 1974). A. Bianchi-Giovini, Biografia di Frà Paolo Sarpi (2 vols., Brussels, 1836). F. A. Yates, 'Paolo Sarpi's "History of the Council of Trent"', Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, 7 (1944), pp. 123–44. L. Salvatorelli, 'Le idee religiose di Fra Paolo Sarpi', Atti della Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei. Memorie, Classe di scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, 8th ser. 5 (1954), pp. 311–60; G. Cozzi, 'Fra Paolo Sarpi, l'anglicanesimo e la "Historia del Concilio Tridentino"', Rivista Storica Italiana, 68 (1956), pp. 559–619. G. Getto, Paolo Sarpi (Biblioteca della Rivista di Storia e Letteratura Religiosa, Studi e Testi, 1; 1967). G. Cozzi, Paolo Sarpi tra Venezia e l'Europa (Turin, 1979). D. Wootton, Paolo Sarpi: Between Renaissance and Enlightenment (Cambridge, 1983). É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1115–21, s.v.; H. Jedin in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1928 f., s.v. with further bibl.

Sartre, Jean Paul. See EXISTENTIALISM.

Sarum; Sarum rite. See SALISBURY; SALISBURY, USE OF.

Satan. In the Judaeo-Christian tradition, the supreme embodiment of evil, also the *devil (q.v.). The word is from the Heb. שָׂטָן (satan), 'adversary', esp. one who plots against another. In the OT it is used of an angelic being hostile to God, esp. in the later Books (Job, Chr., Zech., Ps. 119). The older form of the word ('Satanas', Gk. Σατανᾶς), usual in the Greek NT and the *Vulgate, is found in J. *Wycliffe, but was abandoned in the English Bible from W. *Tyndale onwards.

For bibl., see DEVIL.

Satis Cognitum. The encyclical issued by Pope *Leo XIII on 29 June 1896, on the subject of religious unity. While professing an ardent desire for the reunion of Christendom, it insisted that it was possible only on the basis that the Pope was recognized as the sole source of jurisdiction in the Church and hence the necessary centre of unity. The bull '*Apostolicae Curae' (13 Sept.), pronouncing *Anglican Ordinations invalid, followed shortly afterwards.

The text is in Leonis Papae XIII Allocutiones, Epistolae, Constitutiones, 6 (1900), pp. 156–89. Eng. tr. in C. Carlen, IHM, The Papal Encyclicals 1878–1903 (Salem, NH [1981]), pp. 387–404. Critique in E. Denny, Papalism: The Claims of the Papacy as set forth in the Encyclical Satis Cognitum (1912).

satisfaction. An act of reparation for an injury committed. In Christian theology it is usually applied to the payment of a penalty due to God on account of sin. St *Anselm first gave the term theological currency in reference to the *Atonement (q.v.) by interpreting Christ's death as a sufficient vicarious satisfaction for the sins of the world, which was possible because of the sinlessness of His human nature and its hypostatic union with the Second Person of the Trinity.

In Catholic moral theology satisfaction is held to be a necessary element of the virtue and Sacrament of *Penance, in addition to contrition and confession. The term was used by *Tertullian and *Cyprian of the reparation made for sin by fasting, almsgiving, and other good works, which were already in Scripture regarded as means of averting Divine punishment (cf. Dan. 4: 27, Lk. 16: 9). It became part of the penitential practice of the early Church, which enjoined such works before giving absolution. With the gradual attenuation of penances and the practice of giving absolution before satisfaction was made, the distinction between the forgiveness of the fault and the satisfaction due to it after forgiveness was worked out more clearly, the classic example, adduced by St *Augustine, being the penance inflicted on David after Nathan had pronouced God's forgiveness (2 Sam. 12: 13, 14). Thus satisfactio operis came to be regarded as a necessary means of avoiding punishment in purgatory after the sin itself had been remitted by sacramental absolution, and this doctrine, which had been repeatedly formulated by *Peter Lombard and the later Schoolmen, was defended by the Council of *Trent.

P. Eder, Sühne: Eine theologische Untersuchung (Vienna, 1962), with bibl. On the place of satisfaction in the Sacrament of Penance, cf. St *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologiae, Suppl. qqu. 12–15. Also R. S. Franks in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 207–10, s.v.; P. Galtier, SJ in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1129–210, s.v. See also bibl. to PENANCE.

SATOR. See INSCRIPTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Satornilus. See SATURNINUS.

Saturday. The Jewish '*Sabbath' (q.v.) and the day of the week on which Christ's body rested in the tomb. In the W. Saturday was observed as a fast day as early as the 3rd cent., but never so in the E. (apart from *Holy Saturday). The reason for the fasting was probably the extension of the Friday fast (superponere jejunium) which was subsequently reduced to a semi-fast on both days. In modern times the Saturday fast, except during *Lent and on the *Ember Days, became more and more restricted to Italy and Rome, where it was eventually abolished in 1918. Down to the 5th cent. Mass was not celebrated on that day at Rome and Alexandria, or apparently elsewhere in the W. In most of the E. Church, on the other hand Saturday was marked from the 4th cent. onwards by the celebration of the Liturgy, which in Lent is still confined to Saturday and Sunday.

The special connection of Saturday with the BVM is a W. medieval development. Usually mystical reasons are are given for it, such as the Sabbath rest of the Word in Mary. It found liturgical expression in the recitation of the 'Office of Our Lady' on Saturday, a practice supposed to have been introduced by *Urban II at the Council of Clermont in 1096. Acc. to pre-Tridentine MS breviaries this office (Officium BMV in Sabbato) was said in addition to the ferial office; since the time of *Pius V (1566–72), however, it replaced the ferial office. In the 1971 Breviary an optional memorial of the BVM is provided for use on Saturdays throughout the year, except in Lent and Advent and on certain feasts. On the same occasions a Mass of the BVM may be said in place of the ferial Mass. In the E. Church Saturday is associated with the commemoration of the departed.

G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 11; 1959), pp. 207–20. W. Rodorf, Der Sonntag: Geschichte des Ruhe- und Gottesdiensttages im ältesten Christentum (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 43; 1962), pp. 79–151; Eng. tr. (1968), pp. 80–153.

Saturday, Holy. See HOLY SATURDAY.

Saturninus (2nd cent.), also 'Satornilus', Syrian *Gnostic. Apparently the only authority is St *Irenaeus (Haer. 1. 24), on whom later references to this heretic (*Hippolytus, Ref. 7. 28; *Tertullian, De Anima, 23. 1; *Epiphanius, Haer. 23; *Philaster, Haer. 31; etc.) depend. He is said to have been a pupil of Menander, the Samaritan heretic (himself the disciple of *Simon Magus), and to have taught in *Antioch. He held that the origin of things was to be sought in a Father unknown to all, who created a series of angels and other supernatural beings who in turn created man. As originally formed, man was a powerless entity who wriggled on the ground like a worm (ὡς σκώληκος σκαρίζοντος) until a divine spark set him on his feet. The God of the Jews was one of the creator angels, and the Supreme Father sent the Saviour to destroy this God and to redeem such as were endowed with the divine spark. These cosmological speculations have affinities with those of the *Ophites, with which they are perhaps historically linked. In ethics Saturninus rejected marriage and the use of animals as food.

A. Pourkier, L'hérésiologie chez Épiphane de Salamine (Christianisme Antique, 4 [1992]), pp. 167–204. G. *Salmon in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 587 f., s.v.; G. Bardy in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1310 f., s.v. 'Satornil'. See also bibl. to GNOSTICISM.

Satyrus, St (d. 375 or 377), elder brother of St *Ambrose, whose household and property he administered. He was evidently a much-loved and gentle character. When Satyrus died, Ambrose preached the funeral orations 'De Excessu Fratris'. Feast day, 17 Sept.

Crit. edn. of 'De Excessu Fratris' by O. Faller, SJ, in Ambrose, Opera, 7 (CSEL 73; 1955), pp. 207–325. A. Palestra and C. Perogalli, San Satiro (Milan, 1980).

Saumaise, Claude. See SALMASIUS, CLAUDIUS.

Sava, St (*c.*1175–1235), also 'Sabas', patron of *Serbia. Rastko was the third son of Stephen Nemanja, founder of a strong Serbian dynasty who united the Serbs into a nation. In 1191 he secretly went to Mt. *Athos, where he became a monk under the name of Sava. In 1197 his father followed him, after abdicating in favour of Sava's elder brother, Stephen. Here on Mt. Athos father and son founded the Serbian monastery of Hilandar which became one of the leading centres of Serbian culture in the Middle Ages. In 1206 Sava returned to Serbia, where, as archimandrite of the monastery of Studenica, he took an active part in the political and religious life of the country. He seems to have accepted the policy of his brother, who, *c.*1217, had himself crowned king with the help of the Pope, and in 1219 Sava succeeded in establishing an independent Serbian Church, of which he was consecrated the first archbishop by the Patr. of Nicaea. He organized the Church by establishing several bishoprics, devoted himself to the education of the country, and built and embellished many churches. In 1229 he made a pilgrimage to Palestine, and *c.*1234 went there again, and then went on to Egypt, Asia Minor, and *Constantinople. He died in Tŭrnovo in Bulgaria. Feast day in the Serbian Church, 14 Jan.

D. Obolensky, Six Byzantine Portraits (Oxford, 1988), pp. 115–72, with refs.; I. Dujčev in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (1968), cols. 522–9, s.v. 'Saba'.

Savigny, Abbey of, Normandy. In 1093 Vitalis of Mortain, a canon of the collegiate church of St-Évroul, established a hermitage in the Forest of Savigny. After a time some of the hermits felt a call to follow the *Benedictine Rule in its primitive strictness and by 1112 Vitalis had obtained from Ralph, lord of Fougères, some grants of land. The new house, established by 1115, preserved some distinctive practices, e.g. the wearing of grey habits. It rose to high repute, esp. under the Abbots Geoffrey (1122–38) and Serlo (1140–53); and daughter monasteries were founded in France (*la Trappe), England (Furness, *Quarr), Ireland, and elsewhere. In 1147 Serlo aggregated the houses into the *Cistercian Order (confirmed by Pope *Eugenius III, 10 Apr. 1148), though they continued to retain certain peculiarities. In the later Middle Ages the orig. Abbey of Savigny declined and community life finally came to an end during the French Revolution.

'Vitae BB. Vitalis et Gaufridi, primi et secundi abbatum Saviniacensium', ed. E. P. Sauvage, Anal. Boll. 1 (1882), pp. 355–410. C. Auvray, OSB, Histoire de la congrégation de Savigny, ed. A. Laveille (3 vols., Rouen, 1896–8). B. D. Hill, English Cistercian Monasteries and their Patrons in the Twelfth Century (1968), pp. 80–115. L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 2965–7, with full bibl. E. M. Obrecht, OCR, in CE 13 (1912), p. 489, s.v.; F. R. Swietek in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 991–4, s.v., with bibl.

Savile, Henry (1549–1622), Warden of Merton College, Oxford, and Provost of Eton. He was educated at Brasenose College, became a Fellow of Merton in 1565, and soon acquired a wide reputation as a Greek scholar, mathematician, historian, and antiquarian. In 1578 he travelled in Europe, collecting MSS, and on his return was appointed Greek tutor to Queen *Elizabeth I. In 1585 he was elected Warden of Merton, which greatly flourished under his rule. In 1596 he asked for, and obtained from the Queen, the provostship of Eton, although, not being in holy orders, he was not qualified under the statutes. In 1604 he was named as one of the scholars appointed to prepare the AV of the Bible. In 1610–13 he published in 8 folio vols. his celebrated edition of the works of St *Chrysostom, based on a collation of the best available MSS and earlier editions, and still of great value for determining the correct text of many of St Chrysostom's treatises. It was printed at Savile's private press at Eton, at his own charges (£8,000), in type imported from the Netherlands. He also helped in the foundation of the *Bodleian Library, to which he afterwards presented many MSS and printed books; and he founded at Oxford professorships of geometry and astronomy.

S. L. Greenslade, 'The Printer's Copy for the Eton Chrysostom, 1610–13', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 7 (TU 92; 1966), pp. 60–4. W. Carr in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 367–70, s.v., with refs.

Savonarola, Girolamo (1452–98), Italian preacher and reformer. Born and educated at Ferrara, he entered the *Dominican Order at *Bologna in 1475. He was soon in demand as a preacher, but his first positions were mostly academic. He was appointed lector at San Marco, Florence, in 1482; he was Master of Studies at Bologna, 1487–8; and in 1490 he was again appointed lector at San Marco. During this period he wrote some competent, if unoriginal, textbooks on philosophy. He emphasized the importance of biblical studies, based on knowledge of the original languages, and he succeeded in making San Marco a centre for oriental studies, as well as being a meeting-place for some of the leading Humanist scholars of Florence. In 1491 he became prior of San Marco. From about this time he adopted an apocalyptic style of preaching, prophesying an impending divine chastisement of the corruption of Church and society and claiming to receive special revelations from God. Wanting to go beyond the existing Dominican reform in recalling his Order to its original fervour and austerity, he secured the independence of San Marco from the reformed Congregation of Lombardy in 1493, thus launching a new Congregation, of which he soon became Vicar General, and to which other priories were successively added. Politically, he called for radical social and moral reform and, after the death of Lorenzo de' Medici in 1492, established a kind of theocratic democracy in Florence. He supported Charles VIII of France in his Italian campaign of 1494–5, seeing in him God's instrument for reform. He sought to create a Christian culture, based on the Bible and Christian morality and asceticism, in opposition to the 'pagan' culture of the Humanists. His prophecies and his extremism won him both fervent supporters and determined opponents, and in 1495 *Alexander VI summoned him to Rome to give an account of himself. He pleaded that he was unable to leave Florence. Alexander then tried to return San Marco to the jurisdiction of the Congregation of Lombardy, and forbade Savonarola to preach until his case had been decided by the superior of the Congregation. On the ground that the Pope was acting on false information and that it would be wrong to obey instructions contrary to the commandments of God and the Church, Savonarola, after a brief silence, resumed his preaching, and, with the support of the Dominican authorities, San Marco retained its independence. In 1496 the Pope attempted to create a new reformed Congregation, of which San Marco would be only a part and of which Savonarola would not be superior, but this scheme too was not put into operation until after Savonarola's death. On 13 May 1497 he was excommunicated, but he decided that the excommunication was invalid and continued to preach and to defend the authenticity of his revelations. In the same year he published an impressive apologia for orthodox Catholicism, Triumphus Crucis. Despite conciliatory gestures on both sides, the conflict between Savonarola and the Pope worsened and, in 1498, on the grounds that Alexander was not even a Christian and could therefore not be deemed a legitimate Pope, Savonarola wrote to the major Christian princes asking them to convoke a council. Popular opinion began to turn against him and, abandoned by the Florentine authorities, he was arrested and condemned for schism and heresy. He was hanged and burned on 23 May 1498. After his death an attempt was made to eliminate his influence, but some people, such as St *Catherine de' Ricci, venerated him as a martyr. It is still debated whether he was a prophet and saint or a misguided and fanatical trouble-maker. Steps are now being taken to secure his canonization.

Edizione nazionale of his Works (Rome, 1955 ff.). Poetry and sermons in *Ambrosiana, MS SP II.5 (codex Borromeo), ed. G. Cattin, Il Primo Savonarola (Biblioteca di 'Lettere Italiane', 12; Florence, 1973). Convenient Ital. tr. of his correspondence with Alexander VI between 1495 and 1498 pub. by the Accademia d'Oropa, Alessandro VI e Savonarola (Serie Collegiale, 1; Turin, 1950). Le Procès de Savonarola, ed. R. Klein [1957]. P. Villari, La storia di Girolamo Savonaroli e de' suoi tempi (2 vols., 1859–61; rev. edn. of 1887–8, repr. 1930; Eng. tr., 1863); J. Schnitzer, Savonarola (2 vols., Munich, 1924); R. Ridolfi, Studi Savonaroliani (Florence, 1935); id., Vita di Girolamo Savonarola (2 vols., 1952; 6th edn., 1981; Eng. tr., 1959); M. Ferrara, Savonarola (2 vols., Florence, 1952); R. de Maio, Savonarola e la Curia Romana (Uomini e Dottrine, 15; 1969); D. Weinstein, Savonarola and Florence (Princeton, NJ, 1970); A. Huerga [OP], Savonarola, reformador y profeta (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 397; Madrid, 1978); F. Cordero, Savonarola (4 vols., Rome, 1986–8). R. Ridolfi, Cronologia e Bibliografia delle Prediche (Bibliografia delle Opere del Savonarola a cura del Principe Piero Ginori Conti, 1; Florence, 1939); M. Ferrara, Bibliografia Savonaroliana: Bibliografia ragionata degli scritti editi dal principio del secolo XIX ad oggi (Biblioteca di Bibliografia Italiana, 31; ibid., 1958). A. F. Verde, OP, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 370–88, s.v.

Savoy Conference. The conference which sat by royal warrant, dated 25 March 1661, at the Savoy in the Strand from 15 April until 24 July 1661, to review the BCP. It consisted of 12 bishops, 12 Presbyterian divines, and 9 assessors from each party. The Presbyterians vainly hoped to gain concessions which would enable them to remain members of the Established Church. The bishops, led by G. *Sheldon, Bp. of London (though Accepted Frewen, Abp. of York, was nominal president), ignored R. *Baxter's alternative service-book and his appeal that ministers not episcopally ordained should not be required to seek reordination. In reply to the Presbyterian *Exceptions (q.v.) to the BCP, the bishops made only 17 trivial concessions, 15 of which were embodied in the BCP of 1662. The Presbyterians could not accept the 1662 Book and were deprived of their livings, bringing the total of clergy ejected between 1660 and 1662 to over 2,000.

Proceedings of the Commission for the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer (1661). E. *Cardwell, A History of Conferences and other Proceedings connected with the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer from the Year 1558 to the Year 1690 (1840), chs. 6 and 7. R. Baxter, A Petition for Peace (1661). E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Savoy Conference and the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer', in G. F. Nuttall and [W.] O. Chadwick (eds.), From Uniformity to Unity (1962), pp. 89–148. F. E. *Brightman in DECH, pp. 548–50, s.v.

Savoy Declaration. A statement of *Congregational principles and polity of a moderate type, drawn up at a Conference held at the Chapel of the old Savoy Palace in 1658 by representatives of 120 churches. It consists of a Preface, a Confession of Faith closely akin to the *Westminster Confession, and a Platform of Discipline. The first is largely an apology for the divisions of the Reformed Churches as contrasted with the 'dull and stupid peace' of the Church of Rome and a plea for toleration of the Congregational form of Church government side by side with Presbyterianism. The second professes the modified *Calvinism of the Westminster Confession, with a few alterations, e.g. rejecting the power of the civil authority to punish heresy. The third part, which treats of the Institution of Churches, declares that all necessary power is vested in each individual Church and repudiates the institution, by Christ, of a wider organization.

Text repr. in P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds, 3 (1877), pp. 707–29, with introd. in vol. 1 (1877), pp. 829–33. Modern edn., with introd., by A. G. Matthews (London, 1959). See also works cited under CONGREGATIONALISM.

Sawtrey, William (d. 1401), *Lollard. As a priest at Lynn, Norfolk, he was summoned before his bishop in 1399 to answer charges of heresy; and after ministering in London, he was charged before Abp. T. *Arundel in 1401 with heresies concerning the adoration of the cross, *transubstantiation, and other matters. He appealed to the King in Parliament, and also made a defence from the NT and St *Augustine. On the ground that he had relapsed into heresies which he had abjured in 1399, he was burned, shortly before the statute '*De Haeretico Comburendo' was passed.

K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1952), pp. 150–2. A. M. Cooke in DNB 50 (1897), pp. 380 f.

Saxa Rubra, Battle of. See MILVIAN BRIDGE, BATTLE OF THE.

Saxon Confession (1551). The Protestant Confession of Faith drawn up in 1551 for the Council of *Trent by P. *Melanchthon at the request of the Elector Maurice of Saxony, who wished to strengthen his position in relation to other Protestant princes. It followed the main lines of the *Augsburg Confession of 1530, but was less conciliatory. The distinctive Protestant doctrines were elaborated round the two articles in the *Apostles' Creed on the forgiveness of sins and the Church. The former article was held to exclude merit and justification by works, the latter to prove the Church to be a spiritual though visible communion of believers in Christ. Unlike the Augsburg Confession, the Saxon Confession bore the signatures of theologians only, among them, besides Melanchthon himself, J. *Bugenhagen and G. *Major.

Lat. and Ger. texts pr. among P. Melanchthon's collected works ed. E. H. Bindseil, 28 (Corpus Reformatorum, 28; Brunswick, 1860), cols. 369–568, with introd. cols. 327–68; Lat. text also in his selected works ed. R. Stupperich, 6 (Gütersloh, 1955), pp. 80–167. P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, 1 (1877), pp. 340–3. H. Jedin, Geschichte des Konzils von Trient, 3 (1970), esp. pp. 301–11.

Sayce, Archibald Henry (1845–1933), English oriental scholar. He was elected a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1869, and from 1891 to 1915 was professor of Assyriology at Oxford. He was a member of the company which produced the RV of the OT. After 1885 he was almost wholly absorbed in the history of religion, particularly of Egypt, Babylon, and Israel, and in this connection he travelled and explored extensively in the E. His many publications included works on the Hittites, Hebrews, Assyrians, Babylonians, and Egyptians. In several of them, notably The 'Higher Criticism' and the Verdict of the Monuments (1894), he defended the Mosaic authorship of the *Pentateuch.

A. H. Sayce, Reminiscences (1923). B. Gunn in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 786–8.

Sayers, Dorothy Leigh (1893–1957), novelist, religious playwright and apologist. The daughter of an Anglican clergyman, she qualified for a first class honours degree in modern languages at Somerville College, Oxford, in 1915. For a number of years she worked as a copywriter in an advertising agency until the success of her detective novels, of which the last was published in 1937, gave her financial independence. She established her reputation as a religious writer with The Zeal of Thy House (1937) and The Devil to Pay (1939), plays written for the *Canterbury Festival; it was subsequently extended by her radio dramatization of the life of Christ, The Man Born to be King. This was broadcast at monthly intervals between 21 Dec. 1941 and 18 Oct. 1942, and caused widespread controversy by its representation of Christ by an actor and because the dialogue in which he took part was in modern English. From 1940 she published a number of volumes containing studies, lectures, and essays on theological topics. In these writings, as in her plays, she combined a high degree of professional competence with fresh and penetrating insights into the meaning of the Christian faith in the modern world. Her major work was an annotated English verse translation of *Dante's Divine Commedy. Hell was published in 1949 and Purgatory in 1955, but at the time of her death she had only made a start on Heaven, which was completed by Barbara Reynolds and published in 1962.

J. Hitchman, 'Such a Strange Lady': An Introduction to Dorothy L. Sayers (1975); R. E. Hone, Dorothy L. Sayers: A Literary Biography (Kent, Oh., 1979); J. Brabazon, Dorothy L. Sayers: The Life of a Courageous Woman (1981); C. Kenney, The Remarkable Case of Dorothy L. Sayers (Kent, Oh., and London [1990]); B. Reynolds, Dorothy L. Sayers: Her Life and Soul (1993). C. B. Gilbert, A Bibliography of the Works of Dorothy L. Sayers (Hamden, Conn., 1978; London, 1979); R. T. Youngberg, Dorothy L. Sayers: A Reference Guide (Boston [1982]).

Sayings of Jesus. The name given by their first editors to the texts preserved in two *Oxyrhynchus papyri (nos. 1 and 654). It is now clear that these texts, together with those in no. 655, if not portions of the Greek original of passages in the Gospel of *Thomas (q.v.), are very closely related to it.

B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt, ΛΟΓΙΑ ΙΗΣΟΥ. Sayings of Our Lord from an early Greek Papyrus (1897); idd., New Sayings of Jesus and Fragments of a Lost Gospel (1904). See bibl. to THOMAS, GOSPEL OF.

Sayings of the Jewish Fathers. See PIRQE ABOTH.

Scala Sancta (also known as the Scala Pilati). A staircase of 28 Tyrian marble steps near the *Lateran church at *Rome. Tradition affirms that they were the steps descended by Christ after His condemnation to death and brought to the W. by St *Helena from the palace of *Pilate in *Jerusalem. Now covered with wood, they are a popular place of *pilgrimage in Rome, pilgrims making the ascent on their knees. At the top of the steps is the 'Sancta Sanctorum' chapel (1278), the only surviving piece of the old Lateran Palace.

H. Thurston, SJ, The Holy Year of Jubilee (1900), pp. 185–91, A. Cempanari, CP, and T. Amodei, CP, La Scala santa (Le Chiese di Roma illustrate, 72; 1963), with bibl. L. Oliger, OFM, in CE 13 (1912), pp. 505 f., s.v.

Scaliger, Joseph Justus (1540–1609), French scholar. He was a native of Agen and studied Greek and oriental languages at Paris, where he became a *Calvinist in 1562. After travelling in Italy (1565) and England and Scotland (1566), between 1567 and 1570 he fought on the side of the *Huguenots. From 1572 to 1574 he was professor at *Geneva. The following years he spent in private research until, in 1593, he became the successor of J. Lipsius at *Leiden University, which he made a European centre of philological studies, though he did not lecture himself. His editions of Latin authors such as Festus (1575), Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius (1577), and others were a new departure in the field of textual criticism. His greatest claim to fame, however, is his De Emendatione Temporum (1583), by which he established the modern science of chronology, though his attacks on the newly introduced *Gregorian Calendar and on the genuineness of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite earned him the hostility of the *Jesuits. In 1606 followed the Thesaurus Temporum, containing a brilliant partial reconstruction of the 'Chronicon' of *Eusebius of Caesarea. D. *Petavius' great work, De Doctrina Temporum (1627), directed against Scaliger, whom it corrected, carried on his ideas.

The chief sources for his life are his Epistolae (Leiden, 1627) and his Lettres françaises inédites (ed. P. Tamizey de Larroque, Agen and Paris, 1879). Autobiography of Joseph Scaliger: With autobiographical Selections from his Letters, his Testament and the Funeral Orations by Daniel Heinsius and Dominicus Baudius, tr. . . . with introd. and notes by G. W. Robinson (Harvard Translations, Cambridge, Mass., 1927; good collection of material. 'Autobiography', however, very brief, on pp. 29–33). Life by J. Bernays (Berlin, 1855). Full modern study by A. T. Grafton (2 vols., Oxford, 1983–93). C. M. Bruehl, 'Josef Justus Scaliger. Ein Beitrag zur geistesgeschichtlichen Bedeutung der Altertumswissenschaft', Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, 12 (1960), pp. 201–18; 13 (1961), pp. 45–65. A. T. Grafton and H. J. de Jonge, Scaliger: A Bibliography 1852–1982 (The Hague, 1982).

Scandinavia, Christianity in. See DENMARK; NORWAY; and SWEDEN, CHRISTIANITY IN.

scapular (Lat. scapulare, from scapulae, 'shoulder-blades'). A garment consisting essentially of a piece of cloth worn over the shoulders and hanging down in front and behind. It is usually from 14 to 18 inches wide with its two ends reaching almost to the feet, and forms part of the regular monastic habit. The Rule of St *Benedict (cap. 55) prescribes its use for the monks when engaged in manual labour and the rules of some religious orders require it to be worn also throughout the night. By a natural symbolism it is taken to denote the 'yoke of Christ' (jugum Christi, cf. Mt. 11: 29 f.). A vesture of very much smaller dimensions (known as 'the smaller scapular') is worn by persons living in the world who have become affiliated to the religious orders, e.g. *Tertiaries. In the RC Church important privileges have been attached to wearing the smaller scapular.

Comm. on Rule of St Benedict (q.v.), esp. by P. Delatte, OSB (Eng. tr., 1921), pp. 349 f. P. Oppenheim, OSB, Das Mönchskleid im christlichen Altertum (RQ Supplementheft 28; 1931), esp. pp. 139–42. P. E. Magennis, Ord. Carm., The Scapular Devotion: Origin, Legislation and Indulgences attached to the Scapular (Dublin, 1923). H. Thurston, SJ, 'Scapulars', The Month, 149 (1927), pp. 481–8, and 150 (1927), pp. 44–58. J. Hilgers, SJ, in CE 13 (1912), pp. 508–14, s.v.; P. N. Zammit in NCE 12 (1969), pp. 1114–16, s.v.; L. Saggi in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 390–6, s.v. 'Scapulaire'.

Scaramelli, Giovanni Battista (1687–1752), Italian *Jesuit spiritual writer. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1706 and was ordained priest in 1717. From 1722 onwards he was chiefly engaged in giving missions and retreats in the Pontifical States. He expounded his spiritual teaching in three works, Direttorio ascetico (1752), Discernimento de' spiriti (1753), and Direttorio mistico (1754). In his Ascetic Directory, which has long been regarded as a classic, Scaramelli examines the nature of Christian perfection and the means of attaining it. His books were designed primarily for the use of spiritual directors.

Eng. tr. of Direttorio ascetico by W. Eyre (4 vols., Dublin, 1870; 2nd edn., London, 1879–81). O. Marchetti, SJ, 'Un' opera inedita su di una mistica del 700 attribuita al P. Scaramelli, S.J.', Archivum Historicum Societatis Jesu, 2 (1933), pp. 230–57. L. A. Hogue, SJ, 'The Direttorio mistico of J. B. Scaramelli, S.J.', ibid. 9 (1940), pp. 1–39. Sommervogel, 7 (1896), cols. 689–94; 9 (1900), cols. 840 f.; Polgár, 3 (1990), p. 168. Pourrat, 4, pp. 439–42.; G. Mellinato in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 396–402, s.v.

Scete. The southern portion of the *Nitrian Desert which lies to the west of the mouths of the Nile, celebrated in the 4th and 5th cents. as a centre of monasticism. Among the most celebrated of its monks were Pambo and *Macarius of Egypt.

D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City (Oxford, 1966), esp. pp. 33–6, 56–61, 66–74, and 144–9. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 994–1002.

Schaff, Philip (1819–93), German American theologian and Church historian. Born in Switzerland, he was educated at *Tübingen, Halle, and Berlin, and became professor first in the German Reformed Seminary at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania (1844), and later in *Union Theological Seminary, New York (1870). He saw through the press an immense body of theological literature. The most extensive of his original writings was his History of the Christian Church (12 vols., 1883–93), a popular work from the standpoint of Evangelical liberalism, hortatory rather than scientific in tone. He edited, among other compendious works, the Religious Encyclopaedia (3 vols., 1882–4), an American adaptation of J. J. *Herzog's Realencyclopädie (22 vols., 1854–68), and the sets of patristic translations known as the Nicene and post-Nicene Fathers (Series I, 14 vols., 1886–9; Series II, 14 vols., of varying merit, 1890–1900); and he compiled a valuable collection of credal documents in The Creeds of Christendom (3 vols., 1877). From 1870 he was president of the American committee which co-operated with the British committee responsible for the Revised Version of the Bible. As an exponent of the '*Mercersburg Theology', he was closely associated in outlook with J. W. Nevin (q.v.).

Selected Historical and Theological Writings, ed. C. Yrigoyen and G. 'M' [H.] Bricker (Pittsburgh, 1979). D. S. Schaff (son), The Life of Philip Schaff (New York, 1897). J. H. Nichols, Romanticism in American Theology: Nevin and Schaff at Mercersburg (Chicago, 1961). G. H. Shriver, Philip Schaff: Christian Scholar and Ecumenical Prophet (Macon, Ga. [1987]). D. W. Lotz, 'Philip Schaff and the Idea of Church History', in H. W. Bowden (ed.), A Century of Church History: The Legacy of Philip Schaff (Carbondale, Ill. [1988]), pp. 1–35; other art. on Schaff, pp. 148–67. D. S. Schaff in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 515–22, s.v.; H. E. Starr in Dict. Amer. Biog. 16 (1935), pp. 417 f.

Scheeben, Matthias Joseph (1835–88), German Catholic theologian. He was educated at the *Gregorian University in Rome (1852–9), ordained priest in 1858, and was professor of dogma at the seminary at *Cologne from 1860 to his death. Already in his first speculative work Natur und Gnade (1861) he outlined his doctrine of the supernatural, which he describes as a participation in the Being of God, and popularized this conception in Die Herrlichkeiten der göttlichen Gnade (1863, an independent version of a work of the 17th-cent. author, E. Nieremberg), which had an immediate success and was translated into many languages. In his profound, though sometimes obscure, Mysterien des Christenthums (1865) he attempted to build up the whole organism of Christian doctrine, viewed as a supernatural cosmos with the mystery of the Blessed Trinity as its centre. In the following years his dogmatic work was interrupted by the controversies raised by the impending *Vatican Council, in which he took a vigorous part as one of the chief opponents of J. J. I. von *Döllinger and a passionate defender of Papal *Infallibility. Between 1873 and 1887 he wrote his Handbuch der katholischen Dogmatik, a work of immense erudition, based on Thomist principles but also making extensive use of the Fathers as well as of modern theologians. Scheeben stood for the rights of supernatural faith against the rationalist and naturalist tendencies of 18th- and 19th-cent. theology which had been rife esp. in Germany and Austria.

Gesammelte Schriften, ed. J. Höfer (8 vols., Freiburg i.B., 1941–67). Eng. trs. of Die Mysterien des Christentums by C. Vollert, SJ (St Louis, 1946), and of Natur und Gnade by id. (ibid. and London, 1954). J. Hertkens, Professor M. J. Scheeben: Leben und Wirken eines katholischen Gelehrten im Dienste der Kirche (1892). K. Feckes and others, M. J. Scheeben (Mainz, 1935). F. S. Pancheri, OFM, Il pensiero teologico di M. J. Scheeben e S. Tommaso (1956), with bibl.; B. Fraigneau-Julien, PSS, L'Église et le caractère sacramentel selon M.-J. Scheeben (1958); W. Bartz, Die lehrende Kirche: Ein Beitrag zur Ekklesiologie M. J. Scheebens (Trierer theologische Studien, 9; 1959). N. Hoffmann, SSCC, Natur und Gnade: Die Theologie der Gottesschau als vollendeter Vergöttlichung des Geistgeschöpfes bei M. J. Scheeben (Analecta Gregoriana, 160; 1967). E. Paul, Denkweg und Denkform der Theologie von Matthias Joseph Scheeben (Münchener theologische Studien, II. Systematische Abteilung, 60; 1970), with extensive bibl. T. F. O'Meara, OP, Church and Culture: German Catholic Theology, 1860–1914 (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1991]), pp. 53–67. K.-H. Minz in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 404–8, s.v.

Scheffler, Johannes. See ANGELUS SILESIUS.

Schelling, Friedrich Wilhelm Joseph von (1775–1854), German Idealist philosopher. He was the son of a Württemberg pastor and was educated at the *Tübingen Stift, where G. W. F. *Hegel was one of his elder contemporaries. From 1798 to 1803 he taught at Jena, where he was brought into close contact with the leaders of the *Romantic Movement, and from 1803 at the University of Würzburg. Difficulties with the government led him to retire to Munich in 1806. From 1820 to 1826 he lectured at Erlangen, and in 1827 he became professor at the newly founded University of Munich. In 1841 he was called to Berlin to counteract the influence of Hegel's disciples.

Schelling never elaborated a consistent philosophical system. His constantly changing views owed much to his vivid imagination and were also greatly influenced by current scientific doctrines which, however, he only imperfectly understood. In his early years he was under the influence of J. G. *Fichte and thus mediately of I. *Kant. In his first important work, Vom Ich als Prinzip der Philosophie (1795), he acknowledged only one reality, the infinite and absolute Ego, of which the universe was the expression. In his Ideen zu einer Philosophie der Natur (1797) and Von der Weltseele (1798), this abstract pantheism was modified in favour of his conception of 'Naturphilosophie', acc. to which nature was an absolute being which works unconsciously, though purposively. The problem of the relation of nature to spirit later gave rise to his 'Identitätsphilosophie', expounded esp. in Darlegung des Systems der Philosophie (1802) and Bruno, oder über das göttliche und natürliche Prinzip der Dinge (1802). Acc. to this philosophy, which shows strong traces of B. *Spinoza, both nature and spirit are but manifestations of one and the same being, absolute identity being the ground of all things. In his subsequent speculations he became more and more influenced by *Neoplatonist and *theosophist speculations, esp. by J. *Boehme. Thus in Philosophie und Religion (1804) he explained the universe as a Fall of the ideas into matter and redemption as a return to the world of ideas. His attempt in Philosophische Untersuchungen über das Wesen der menschlichen Freiheit (1809) to reconcile Christianity with his philosophy was carried on later in his Berlin lectures (pub. 1856–8). Here he distinguished three elements in God: (1) the blind primeval necessary being; (2) the three potentialities of the Divine Essence, namely unconscious will (material cause), rational will (efficient cause), and unity of the two (final cause of creation); (3) the Three Persons who evolve from the three potentialities by overcoming the primeval being. In the history of Christianity he also distinguished three periods—the Petrine or Catholic, the Pauline or Protestant, and the Johannine or the Church of the future.

Schelling exercised a profound influence on German thought. His earlier teaching was the point of departure of Hegel's system, and many elements of his nature and religious philosophy were taken up and transformed by E. von *Hartmann. His general philosophical position had a great influence on P. *Tillich and on the Catholic Tübingen School.

Collected works ed. by his son, K. F. A. von Schelling (14 vols., Stuttgart, 1856–61) and ed. M. Schroter (6 vols., Munich, 1927–8, + 6 extra vols., 1943–59). Crit. edn. by H. M. Baumgartner and others (Stuttgart, 1976 ff.). His Munich lectures 'Zur Geschichte der neueren Philosophie' ed. A. *Drews (Leipzig, 1902). Briefe und Dokumente, 1775–1809, ed. H. Fuhrmans (3 vols., Bonn, 1962–75). Among the many studies of his system may be mentioned: J. Watson, Schelling's Transcendental Idealism (1882); E. von Hartmann, Schelling's Philosophisches System (Leipzig, 1897); H. Sueskind, Der Einfluss Schellings auf die Entwicklung von Schleiermachers System (Tübingen, 1909); W. Metzger, Die Epochen der Schellingschen Philosophie v. 1795–1802 (Heidelberg, 1911); É. Bréhier, Schelling ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1912). R. Kroner, Von Kant bis Hegel, 1 (1921), pp. 535–612, 2 (Tübingen, 1924), pp. 1–141. N. Hartmann, Die Philosophie des deutschen Idealismus, 1 (1923), pp. 123–186, with bibl. pp. 279 f. H. Fuhrmans, Schellings letzte Philosophie (Neue Deutsche Forschungen, Abteilung Philosophie, 1940); id., Schellings Philosophie der Weltalter (Düsseldorf, 1954). K. *Jaspers, Schelling: Grösse und Verhängnis (Munich [1955]). E. D. Hirsch, Wordsworth and Schelling: A Typological Study of Romanticism (Yale Studies in English, 145; 1960). X. Tilliette, SJ, Schelling: Une philosophie en devenir (Bibliothèque d'histoire de philosophie, 2 vols., 1970). R. F. Brown, The Later Philosophy of Schelling: The Influence of Boehme on the Works of 1809–1815 (Lewisburg, Pa., and London [1977]). J. L. Esposito, Schelling's Idealism and Philosophy of Nature (ibid. [1977]). T. F. O'Meara, OP, Romantic Idealism and Roman Catholicism: Schelling and the Theologians (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1982]). M. Maesschalck, Philosophie et révélation dans l'itinéraire de Schelling (Bibliothèque philosophique de Louvain, 33; 1989). Bibl. by G. Schneeberger (Berne, 1954). A. Margoshes in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 7 (1967), pp. 305–9, s.v. R. Kroner in EB (1968 edn.), 19, pp. 1153 f., s.v.

Schelstrate, Emmanuel (1649–92), Belgian Church historian and canonist. A native of Antwerp, he early specialized in the study of Christian antiquities. Through his publications, in which he defended the rights of the Holy See, he attracted the attention of *Innocent XI, who made him Prefect of the *Vatican Library and later canon of the *Lateran and of *St Peter's. Among his writings are Antiquitas Illustrata circa Concilia Generalia et Provincialia (1678), in which he undertook to prove the antiquity of the Roman primacy, and the Acta Constantiensis Concilii (1683), defending the supremacy of the Pope over the Council against the *Gallican Articles of 1682. In the considerable controversy created by the latter, J. B. *Bossuet and A. *Arnauld took sides against the author. In the *De disciplina arcani (1685) he developed the view that the 'discipline of the secret', i.e. the secrecy exacted by Christ, the Apostles and their successors, explained the relative weakness of the evidence for the doctrines of the Person of Christ and the Sacraments in the primitive Church.

The primary authority for Schelstrate's life is the introd. to vol. 2 of his Antiquitas Illustrata (Rome, 1697; i.e. five years after his death), written by an unknown Roman friend of the author. L. Ceyssens, OFM, La Correspondance d'Emmanuel Schelstrate, préfet de la bibliothèque vaticane, 1683–1692 (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, fasc. 1; 1949); this vol. has a valuable study of Schelstrate with full bibl. refs. in its introd. (esp. pp. 18–90). J. Ruysschaert, 'Annotations marginales à la biographie d'Emmanuel Schelstrate', Bulletin de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 28 (1953), pp. 137–56. J. Mercier in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1278–80, s.v., also with bibl. refs.

Schenudi. See SHENOUTE.

Schillebeeckx, Edward Cornelis Florentius Alfons (1914–), RC theologian. Born in Antwerp, the son of a prosperous accountant, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1934. From 1935 he studied philosophy and theology at Louvain, and, with interruptions for military service, remained there until the end of the Second World War, becoming lecturer in dogmatic theology. After further study in Paris, he returned to Louvain as professor in 1947. From 1958 until his retirement in 1982 he was Professor of Dogmatics and the History of Theology in the University of Nijmegen. Under growing suspicion from Rome, he attended the Second *Vatican Council as adviser to the Dutch bishops, but not as a peritus; he was subsequently a key figure in the foundation of the RC journal Concilium (1965 ff.). His writings came under investigation by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (see HOLY OFFICE) in 1968 and again in 1979, but the outcome was inconclusive. By contrast, he received numerous academic honours and in 1982 was awarded the European Erasmus prize and made a Commander in the Order of Orange Nassau.

His book Jezus, het verhaal van een levende (1974; Eng. tr., Jesus, 1979), marks a watershed in his writing. Before that he was known primarily within RC circles for collections of articles and a major book, Christus, sacrament van de Godsontmoeting (1959; Eng. tr., Christ the Sacrament of the Encounter of God, 1963), in which he sought to bring out the personal dimension in the Eucharist by means of *existentialist philosophy while remaining within official teaching. Jezus, with its interpretation of the Lord as an eschatological prophet, taking account of modern developments in biblical criticism, caused a furore in Rome and made him an international figure. Its sequel, Gerechtigheid en liefde: Genade en bevrijding (1977; Eng. tr., Christ, 1980), which analyses the nature of experience and relates early Christian experience of salvation to contemporary Christian and non-Christian experience, shows him moving into the centre of mainstream theological discussion. The increasing conservatism of the RC Church in the 1980s led him to postpone the completion of a planned trilogy and instead to call for changes in the RC theology of ministry, on the basis of the pattern of the first millennium and modern needs (Kerkelijk ambt, 1980; Eng. tr., Ministry, 1981; expanded and rewritten as Pleidooi voor Mensen in de Kerk, 1985; Eng. tr., The Church with a Human Face, 1985). This concern, and increasing intervention from Rome in the Dutch Church, cast a shadow over the last volume of his trilogy, Mensen als verhaal van God (1989; Eng. tr., The Church: The Human Story of God, 1990), in which a vision of the future influenced by *liberation theology and inter-faith dialogue is darkened by actual experience of the hierarchical Church.

His numerous works are listed in Tijdschrift voor Theologie, 14 (1974), pp. 491–501, supplemented (to 1982) in H. Häring, T. Schoof, and A. Willems, Meedenken met Edward Schillebeeckx [1983], pp. 320–5, with an account of his teaching method, pp. 11–39. J. [S.] Bowden, Edward Schillebeeckx: Portrait of a Theologian (1983); R. J. Schreiter, CPPS, and M. C. Hilkert, OP (eds.), The Praxis of Christian Experience: An Introduction to the Theology of Edward Schillebeeckx (San Francisco [1989]). P. Kennedy, OP, Schillebeeckx (Outstanding Christian Thinkers Series, 1993).

schism (Gk. σχίσμα, 'tear' or 'rent'). Formal and wilful separation from the unity of the Church. In a technical sense the word is first met with in St *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer. 4. 33. 7). The *Novatians and *Donatists are early instances of schismatic bodies. Schism is distinguished from heresy in that the separation involved is not at basis doctrinal; whereas heresy is opposed to faith, schism is opposed to charity, though in the early Church this distinction was not at all clear-cut. RC theologians account all those out of communion with the Pope, the supreme head of the Church, in a state of schism, though the Decree of the Second *Vatican Council on Ecumenism stated that those baptized into other Christian communions were established in 'a certain, albeit imperfect, communion with the Catholic Church'. The term 'schism' is also often used by Anglican and Protestant theologians of divisions within the Church, e.g. of that between Anglicanism and Roman (or Orthodox) Catholicism. See also ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT and REUNION; also GREAT SCHISM.

T. A. *Lacey, Unity and Schism (1917); S. L. Greenslade, Schism in the Early Church (1953; 2nd edn., 1964).

Schism Act. The popular name for the Established Church Act 1713, passed in 1714 by the English Parliament under the Tory leadership of Bolingbroke, which forbade dissenters to keep schools or engage in tuition. It was repealed by the Religious Worship Act 1718.

The principal clauses of the Act are pr. in W. C. Costin and J. S. Watson (eds.), The Law and Working of the Constitution: Documents, 1 (1952), pp. 121–3.

Schlatter, Adolf (1852–1938), Protestant theologian. Born at St *Gall in Switzerland, he taught first at Berne (1880–8), and later was professor at Greifswald (1888–93), Berlin (1893–98), and Tübingen (1898–1922). He held that the only sound foundation of Systematic Theology lay in biblical exegesis, and wrote commentaries on every book of the NT, the most notable being those on Mt. (Der Evangelist Matthäus, 1929), and on 1 and 2 Cor. (1934) and Rom. (1935). He vigorously opposed all idealistic interpretations of the Christian faith. In these and other respects he anticipated the *Dialectical Theology of K. *Barth. His work on the Fourth Gospel exercised considerable influence on E. C. *Hoskyns. His writings (none tr. into English during his lifetime) include Der Glaube im Neuen Testament (1885), Erläuterungen zum Neuen Testament (3 vols., 1887–1904), Die philosophische Arbeit seit Cartesius (1906; 4th edn., 1959, entitled Die philosophische Arbeit seit Descartes), the classic Die Theologie des Neuen Testaments (2 vols., 1909, of which vol. 1 was revised as Die Geschichte des Christus, 1920, and vol. 2 as Die Theologie der Apostel, 1922), and Das Christliche Dogma (1911).

Collection of his 'Kleine Schriften', Zur Theologie des Neuen Testaments und zur Dogmatik, ed., with introd., by U. Luck (Munich, 1969). Eng. tr. of 'Die Theologie des Neuen Testament und die Dogmatik' (orig. pub. in Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 13, Heft 2 (1909), pp. 7–82) by R. [C.] Morgan, The Nature of New Testament Theology (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 25; 1973), pp. 117–66, with introd. pp. 27–33. T. Schlatter (ed.), Adolf Schlatters Rückblick auf seine Lebensarbeit: Zu seinem hundertsten Geburtstag (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, Sonderheft; 1952). Memorial vol. to A. Schlatter and W. Lütgert by P. Althaus, G. *Kittel, and H. Strathmann (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 40, Heft 1; 1938). U. Luck, Kerygma und Tradition in der Hermeneutik Adolf Schlatters (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 45; 1955); A. Bailer, Das systematische Prinzip in der Theologie Adolf Schlatters (Arbeiten zur Theologie, II. Reihe, 12 [1968]); I. Kindt, Der Gedanke der Einheit: Adolf Schlatters Theologie und ihre historischen Voraussetzungen (Stuttgart [1978]). List of his writings by R. Brezger (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 40, Heft 2; 1938).

Schlegel, Friedrich (1772–1829), *Romantic author and Catholic apologist. From 1793 onwards he devoted himself entirely to literary pursuits. His early leanings were towards Greek ideals, as revealed in his Von den Schulen der griechischen Poesie (1794). Before long, however, he abandoned classicism and became an enthusiast for medieval poetry and the reigning German idealism, esp. the ideas of J. G. *Fichte and F. W. J. *Schelling. In 1797 he settled in Berlin, where he became one of the leaders of the Romantic Movement. His next years were devoted to lectures at Jena, Dresden, and Paris, and the study of oriental languages and literature. In 1808 he and his wife, Dorothea, a daughter of Moses Mendelssohn, were converted to the RC Church. From now on Schlegel became an advocate of Catholic principles. In lectures on literature and modern history which he gave at Vienna (1810–12) he defended the medieval Imperial idea against the Napoleonic state; and, in association with F. X. von Baader and St Clement Maria *Hofbauer, he sought to restore the national life of Austria and Germany on a Catholic basis. When circumstances led him to despair of a reform of the state on these lines, he looked to literature and philosophy for a renewed Catholicism. His Philosophie der Geschichte (2 vols., 1829; Eng. tr., 1835) contained the lectures given to these ends at Vienna in 1828. Philosophically, Schlegel after he became a Catholic was a severe critic of the *pantheism of G. W. F. *Hegel. His own philosophy, based on *Plato rather than *Aristotle, had affinities with some forms of *Ontologism.

Collected works ed., 10 vols., Vienna, 1822–5; crit. edn. by E. Behler and others (Munich and Zurich, 1958 ff.); also of his Literary Notebooks 1797–1801 by H. Eichner (London, 1957). Eng. tr. of selected writings by E. J. Millington (Bohn's Standard Library, London, 1849), and of 'Dialogue on Poetry' and 'Literary Aphorisms' by E. Behler and R. Struc (University Park, Pa., and London, 1968). F. [D. E.] *Schleiermacher, Vertraute Briefe über Lucinde (1800). C. Enders, Friedrich Schlegel: Die Quellen seines Wesens und Werdens (Leipzig, 1913). O. Mann, Der junge Friedrich Schlegel: Eine Analyse von Existenz und Werk (1932). L. Wirz, Friedrich Schlegels philosophische Entwicklung (Grenzfragen zwischen Theologie und Philosophie, 13; 1939). J. J. Anstett, La Pensée religieuse de Friedrich Schlegel (Strasbourg thesis; Lyons, 1941), with extensive bibl. Useful introd. by H. Eichner, Friedrich Schlegel (New York [1970]). G. Fritz in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1492–5; R. Anchor in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 7 (1967), pp. 315 f., s.v.

Schleiermacher, Friedrich Daniel Ernst (1768–1834), German theologian. A native of Breslau in Silesia, he was the son of a Reformed army chaplain, and, after his parents' conversion to the *Herrnhuter Brethren, was educated at their college at Niesky and their seminary at Barby. Finding the teaching imparted at Barby too narrow for his independent intellect, he entered the University of Halle in 1787, where he was introduced to the philosophy of I. *Kant and *Aristotle. In 1790 he accepted a post as tutor to a noble family in W. Prussia. Ordained to the ministry in 1794, he was appointed Reformed preacher at the Charité at Berlin, where he came into close contact with representatives of the *Romantic Movement, esp. F. *Schlegel. In 1799 he published his famous Reden über die Religion (Eng. tr., Religion: Speeches to its Cultured Despisers, 1893). In this work, which shows the influence of B. *Spinoza, G. W. *Leibniz, and I. Kant, he attempts to win the educated classes back to religion, which he defines romantically as 'a sense and taste for the infinite'. Contending that religion was based on intuition and feeling (Anschauung und Gefühl) and independent of all dogma, he saw its highest experience in a sensation of union with the infinite. In 1800 followed the Monologen, a preliminary to his later work on ethics. In 1804 he became professor of theology at Halle, but left it in 1807, after the Prussian defeat, and went to Berlin, where he was appointed preacher at the Dreifaltigkeitskirche in 1809 and dean of the Theological Faculty of the newly founded university in 1810. As such he played an influential part in the Prussian war against Napoleon, esp. through his stirring sermons. From 1819 he was chiefly occupied with his most important work, published in 1821–2 under the title Der christliche Glaube nach den Grundsätzen der evangelischen Kirche im Zusammenhang dargestellt, which is the chief source for his theology. Here he defines religion as the feeling of absolute dependence, which finds its purest expression in monotheism. The variety of forms which this feeling assumes in different individuals and nations accounts for the diversity of religions, of which Christianity is the highest, though not the only true one.

Schleiermacher's strong emphasis on feeling as the basis of religion, inherited from his Herrnhut education, was at once a reaction from contemporary German rationalism and from the ruling formalist orthodoxy. His influence on Protestant thought was enormous; generations of theologians, among whom were authorities such as A. *Ritschl, A. von *Harnack, and E. *Troeltsch, built on, developed, and modified his ideas. There was a powerful reaction against his influence, connected especially with the names of K. *Barth and E. *Brunner, who opposed to Schleiermacher's 'feeling' the scriptural principle of the Reformers. The pendulum has now begun to swing the other way and Schleiermacher's importance is again being recognized.

Crit. edn. of his works by H.-J. Birkner and others (Berlin, 1980 ff.). Older collected edn. of his writings, Berlin, 32 vols., 1834–64. Collected correspondence, ed. L. Jonas and W. *Dilthey, 4 vols., Berlin, 1858–63; Eng. tr. of vols. 1 and 2, 1860; selected correspondence [ed. M. Rade], Jena, 1906. Crit. edns. of his Reden über die Religion by R. *Otto (Jubiläumsausgabe), Göttingen, 1899; of the Monologen by F. M. Schiele, Philosophische Bibliothek, 84; Leipzig, 1902; and of Der christliche Glaube by M. Redeker, 2 vols., Berlin, 1960. Friedrich Schleiermachers Aesthetik, ed. from unpub. sources by R. Odebrecht (Berlin and Leipzig, 1931); Friedrich Schleiermachers Dialektik, also ed. from unpub. sources by id. (Leipzig, 1942). Eng. tr. of Schleiermacher's essay on St Luke's Gospel by C. *Thirlwall, London, 1825; of his Reden über die Religion (from 3rd edn., 1831) by J. *Oman, ibid., 1893, and (from 1st edn., 1799) by R. Crouter, Cambridge, 1988; of 'Selected Sermons' by M. F. Wilson, London, 1890; of the Monologen by H. L. Friess, Chicago, 1926; and of Der christliche Glaube by H. R. Mackintosh and J. S. Stewart, Edinburgh, 1928.

Apart from his edn. of Schleiermacher's correspondence, the primary source for his life is the biog. by W. Dilthey (pt. 1, Berlin, 1870; 3rd edn. by M. Redeker, 2 vols., 1970; pt. 2 first pub., ed. id., 2 vols., 1966). M. Redeker, Friedrich Schleiermacher, Leben und Wirken (1968; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1973]). Studies on Schleiermacher in Eng. by R. R. Niebuhr (New York, 1964; London, 1965), G. E. Spiegler (New York, 1967), S. W. Sykes (London, 1971), R. R. Williams (Philadelphia [1978]), and B. A. Gerrish (London, 1984). E. Troeltsch and others, Schleiermacher, der Philosoph des Glaubens (Moderne Philosophie, 6; 1910). K. Barth, Die Theologie Schleiermachers (lectures given in 1923/4; ed. D. Ritschl in Barth's Gesamtausgabe, Reihe 2, Band 5; 1978; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids, Mich., and Edinburgh, 1982); id., Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (Zurich, 1947), pp. 379–424; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 425–73. E. Brunner, Die Mystik und das Wort: Der Gegensatz zwischen moderner Religionsauffassung und christlichem Glauben dargestellt an der Theologie Schleiermachers (1924). R. Odebrecht, Schleiermachers System der Aesthetik (1932). E. Herms, Herkunft, Entfaltung und erste Gestalt des Systems der Wissenschaften bei Schleiermacher (Gütersloh [1974]); T. H. Jørgensen, Das religionsphilosophische Offenbarungsverständnis des späteren Schleiermacher (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 53; 1977). J. O. Duke and R. F. Streetman (eds.), Barth and Schleiermacher: Beyond the Impasse? (Philadelphia [1988]). R. D. Richardson (ed.), Schleiermacher in Context: Papers from the 1988 International Symposium on Schleiermacher at Herrnhut (Lewiston, NY, etc. [1991]). G. Meckenstock and J. Ringleben (eds.), Schleiermacher und die wissenschaftliche Kultur des Christentums (Theologische Bibliothek Töpelmann, 51; 1991). T. N. Rice, Schleiermacher Bibliography (Princeton, NJ, 1966). Schleiermacher-Archiv, ed. H. Fischer and others (Berlin and New York, 1985 ff.). W. B. Selbie in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 236–9; R. Hermann and E. Weniger in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 1422–36, s.v.

Schmalkaldic Articles (1537). The doctrinal statement drawn up by M. *Luther at the behest of Johann Friedrich, Elector of Saxony, for presentation to the projected General Council convoked by *Paul III to Mantua for 23 May 1537. It consisted of (1) a statement of the doctrines of the Creeds, very brief, as outside controversy; (2) a long section on 'the office and work of Christ, or our redemption', attacking such practices and institutions as the *Mass ('the greatest and most horrible abomination'), *purgatory ('a Satanic delusion'), the *Pope ('Antichrist'), the invocation of *saints, and *monasticism; and (3) a final section on matters on which Protestants were themselves divided, e.g. the *Eucharist. On 23 Feb. 1537 an assembly of Lutheran princes and theologians at Schmalkalden in Thuringia approved the Articles as well as a much more moderate Appendix, added by P. *Melanchthon at the Assembly's request, conceding to the Pope as a matter of human right jurisdiction over the other bishops of Christendom and adopting a markedly conciliatory attitude towards the Papacy. The Articles were issued from the press by Luther (but without Melanchthon's Appendix, which had exposed its author to violent abuse from the stricter *Lutherans) as Artikel christlicher Lehre in 1538, and in 1580 were incorporated in the 'Book of *Concord'. The title Articuli Smalcaldici is first met with in 1553.

Text pr. among the works of Luther, e.g. in the Weimar edn., 1 (1914), pp. 192–254, with introd., pp. 160–91; also ed., with Melanchthon's Appendix, by H. Volz in the Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche (Göttingen, 1930; 10th edn., 1986), pp. 405–98 (with additional bibl. in 10th edn., pp. 1226–8). Eng. tr. by T. G. Tappert, The Book of Concord (Philadelphia [1959]), pp. 287–335. H. Volz, 'Luthers Schmalkaldische Artikel und Melanchthons Tractatus de Potestate Papae', Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 103 (1931), pp. 1–70. Id. (ed.), Urkunden und Aktenstücke zur Geschichte von Martin Luthers Schmalkaldischen Artikeln (1536 1574) (Kleine Texte, 179; 1957). E. Bizer, 'Zum geschichtlichen Verständnis von Luthers Schmalkaldischen Artikeln', ZKG 67 (1955–6), pp. 61–92. H. Volz, 'Luthers Schmalkaldische Artikel', ibid. 68 (1957), pp. 259–86; id., 'Zur Entstehungsgeschichte von Luthers Schmalkaldischen Artikeln', ibid. 74 (1963), pp. 316–20. P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds, 1 (1877), pp. 253–7. T. Kolde in PRE (3rd edn.), 17 (1906), pp. 640–5, s.v. 'Schmalkaldische Artikel'.

Schmalkaldic League. The alliance concluded in Schmalkalden on 27 Feb. 1531 between several German Protestant princes and cities in opposition to *Charles V's 'Recess of Augsburg' (23 Sept. 1530) which suppressed their religious autonomy. The League united *Lutherans and *Zwinglians and by 1537 it included 35 states. In the years 1534–41 it was a considerable anti-Habsburg force and T. *Cromwell wanted England to join it. This wish was never realized and the League was destroyed by Charles V in 1547.

E. Fabian, Die Entstehung des Schmalkaldischen Bundes und seiner Verfassung 1529–1531/33 (Schriften zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, 1; 1956); id. (ed.), Die Schmalkaldischen Bundesabschiede 1530–1532 (ibid. 7; 1958); id. (ed.), Die Schmalkaldischen Bundesabschiede 1533–1536 (ibid. 8; 1958); G. Dommasch, Die Religionsprozesse der rekusierenden Fürsten und Städte und die Erneuerung des Schmalkaldischen Bundes 1534 1536 (ibid. 28; 1961). T. A. Brady, 'Phases and Strategies of the Schmalkaldic League: A Perspective after 450 Years', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 74 (1983), pp. 162–81. H. R. Schmidt, 'Der Schmalkaldische Bund und die oberdeutschen Städte bis 1536', Zwingliana, 18 (1989), pp. 36–61, with further refs.

Schola Cantorum (Lat., 'a school of singers'). In the worship of the early Church all music was rendered by the clergy with the assistance of the congregation, but gradually the practice of having a body of trained singers was introduced. At *Rome the Schola was established on a sound basis by *Gregory the Great (d. 604), and several of his successors were trained in it. From Rome the custom spread rapidly over W. Christendom, the Roman chant being brought to England by St *Benedict Biscop (d. 690) and St *Wilfrid (d. 709). The modern descendant of the Schola is the cathedral choir school and, in certain monasteries (notably *Solesmes), those monks whose special work is the study of the ecclesiastical chant. The term 'Schola Cantorum' is also used for the place where the chant is taught.

Scholarius, George. See GEORGE SCHOLARIUS.

Scholastica, St (*c.*480–*c.*543), sister of St *Benedict of Nursia. The only early source for her life is a brief passage in St *Gregory the Great's 'Dialogues' (2. 33 f.). She is said to have established a convent at Plombariola, a few miles from *Monte Cassino, where brother and sister met annually for the discussion of spiritual matters. Feast day, 10 Feb. She is invoked against storms.

B. Heurtebize, OSB, and R. Triger, Sainte Scholastique, patronne du Mans (Solesmes, 1897). W. Goffart, 'Le Mans, St. Scholastica and the literary tradition of the translation of St. Benedict', R. Bén. 77 (1967), pp. 107–41. A. Pantoni, OSB, 'Sulla località del convegno annuale di S. Benedetto e S. Scolastica, e sul monastero di Piumarola', Benedictina, 15 (1968), pp. 206–28; A. de Vogüé, OSB, 'La rencontre de Benoît et de Scholastique. Essai d'interprétation', Revue d'histoire de la spiritualité, 48 (1972), pp. 257–73; P. A. Cusack, O. Cist., 'St Scholastica: Myth or real person?', Downside Review, 92 (1974), pp. 145–59. A. Lentini, OSB, in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (Rome, 1968), cols. 742–9, s.v. 'Scolastica', with extensive bibl. See also Lives of ST BENEDICT, s.v.

Scholasticism. A method of scholarly inquiry which proceeds by way of questioning ancient and authoritative texts, legal, medical, philosophical, and theological; first by drawing up lists of contradictory statements in these texts and then applying to them the rules of logic to reveal their underlying agreement, thus attaining what the scholastics saw as the one inner truth of things (veritas rerum) to which in the end all these texts bore witness. Originally the scholastic method was a teaching device developed in the schools and universities of W. Europe from the end of the 11th cent. It flourished until the 16th cent., when it came under severe criticism from Humanist scholars, who favoured a more literary and historical approach to ancient literature. Its use then became increasingly restricted to theology. As such scholasticism underwent a revival in the RC Church between 1850 and 1960, which gave rise to the assumption that scholasticism and medieval theology were synonymous. Originally, however, the scholastic method was applied to all branches of scholarship. At the same time not all medieval theology was scholastic, although this entry treats only the area of overlap.

The man who provided the tools which medieval scholars later used to develop the art of logical argument was *Boethius, particularly in his translations of, and commentaries on, *Porphyry's Isagoge and part of *Aristotle's logical works, a collection later known as the logica vetus. Grammatical instruction in the Middle Ages was based on the manuals of Donatus and Priscianus' Instructiones grammaticae. *Charlemagne and *Alcuin created an institutional framework of monastic and cathedral schools in which learning could be cultivated and material collected. From Martianus Capella's De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii and *Cassiodorus' Institutiones divinarum et humanarum litterarum the *Carolingians took over the classical plan of studies based on the seven liberal arts, the trivium (grammar, rhetoric, and dialectic or logic) and the quadrivium* (music, arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy). Within the schools the quadrivium was never developed, as medieval scholarship remained firmly based on the study of texts and thus on the two arts which could help in understanding and explaining texts: grammar and logic, which throughout the Middle Ages formed the heart of the academic curriculum. Already the works of late Carolingian schoolmasters, such as *Remigius of Auxerre, showed a clear preoccupation with logic and its possible use in theology, although their interest did not yet go beyond collecting glosses on the standard texts. The exception was John Scottus *Erigena, whose Periphyseon was the first independent effort to apply logic and *Neoplatonism to the realm of faith. In the 10th cent. the work of collecting and glossing was continued in monastic schools such as *Fleury and St *Gall, so that by 1050 important collections of logical material were at hand to be explored and developed.

By the mid-11th cent. the growth of literacy was making its impact felt and the social and economic environment was improving so rapidly that a more rational approach to life and its problems became feasible for the first time since Late Antiquity. A generation arose which was confident that 'man could control his environment through his mind' (A. Murray). Such was their trust in the written word that the study of grammar and logic was seen as the way to achieve this lofty purpose, in the hope that by laying bare the structure of language and thought they would ultimately be able to unravel the structure of reality itself.

An early example of this confidence is provided in the controversy between *Berengar of Tours and *Lanfranc of Bec about the mystery of the Eucharist. Grammatical analysis of the sacramental formula forced Berengar to state that Christ's presence in the Eucharist was real and spiritual, whereas his adversary, Lanfranc, using the logical categories of *substance and *accident, came to the conclusion that it must be physical, involving a change of substance, a *transubstantiation. Lanfranc's pupil, St *Anselm of Canterbury, went one step further in trying to establish a coherent logical language beyond ordinary speech (usus loquendi) which would enable him to trace the grammar of reality. Thus he thought he could prove the necessity of God's existence and of the Incarnation without appealing to biblical authority. Important as this new beginning was, Anselm's influence on subsequent generations was limited, as his outlook remained monastic in an age when the schools were emerging from the shadow of the monastery to become independent intellectual centres.

Through the Gregorian Reform (see GREGORY VII) formal education and no longer only inheritance or social origin had become a route to preferment in Church and society. And it was in the schools that the scholastic method was fully developed. One of the most important was the school of Laon, where Anselm and his brother, in order to facilitate their lectures on Scripture, collected authoritative statements from the Church Fathers and attached them to the matching texts of the Bible, beginning the Glossa Ordinaria. When two Fathers differed in their interpretation of a biblical passage, their contradictory statements were compared in the classroom and became the subject of a quaestio.

This technique, probably inspired by similar procedures in canon law, was perfected by Peter *Abelard in his Sic et Non, a random collection of 150 theological puzzles. This was a pioneering work in two respects. First, by simply collecting contradictory auctoritates without attaching them to the appropriate biblical passages, Abelard showed a way for later generations of theologians to separate systematic questioning from lecturing on Scripture. In this his example was followed and improved upon by *Robert of Melun and Peter Lombard, who both composed similar anthologies of contradictory texts, called Sententiae, which were carefully arranged by subject and thus formed a much better framework for questioning than the text of a glossed Bible. Secondly, in the prologue Abelard formulated two key doctrines of scholasticism: (1) that questioning is the key to the perception of truth, and (2) that difficulties which arise in questioning can usually be resolved by determining the meaning of terms used by different authors in varying ways. Thus he gave logic and semantics pride of place in theology. This programme immediately met with strenuous opposition from the monastic spokesman of the 12th cent., St *Bernard of Clairvaux, who accused Abelard of arguing about that which could only be accepted in faith. By defending the tradition of theology as a meditation on God's word in Scripture, Bernard inaugurated a form of mystical theology which acted as a constant counterpoint to the rational clarity of scholastic theology. It was unobtrusive at first, but came to the fore in the different social and economic circumstances of the 14th cent. in the works of Meister *Eckhart, *Henry Suso, and John *Tauler.

The introduction from 1150 onwards of the full Aristotelian corpus of logical works, the logica nova, provided a new impulse but did not add any essentially new elements to the scholastic technique. By the end of the 12th cent. *Alan of Lille had devised a complete set of rules for the proper use of language and logic in theology, the Regulae caelestis iuris, which summed up the methodological progress of the century.

The 13th cent. saw the coming of age of the universities and confrontation with the contents of Greek and Arabic learning, which was an altogether different challenge, with fewer consequences for methodology but with many more repercussions on Church doctrine. In the universities the teaching methods of the schools were further developed. *Paris was the first university to separate speculative questioning from lectures on the Bible. Under *Alexander of Hales's influence Peter Lombard's Sententiae was chosen as the textbook for this new lecture course, and remained so until the 16th cent. Robert *Grosseteste, who disliked speculative methods in theology, tried to stem the tide by forbidding *Oxford theologians any textbook but the Bible, but in 1253 lectures on the Sentences were officially introduced in Oxford as well. A last vociferous protest came from Roger *Bacon, who complained unavailingly that modern scholars no longer had any knowledge of Scripture. Besides ordinary lectures, special days in the university calendar were set aside for disputations, in which either the master broached a controversial question or someone in the audience could ask him anything (quaestiones de quodlibet). It was in these quaestiones disputatae and quodlibetales* that the scholastic technique could be exploited most fully, because the master was not hemmed in by auctoritates but free to explore all possible sides to a question. The final stage in the development of the scholastic method in the 13th cent. was reached with the Summae*, freely composed works in which the sequence of questions was not dictated by the text used in the classroom but by the internal progress of the argument.

The chief controversy of the 13th cent. revolved on the contents of Aristotle's natural philosophy and his Arab and Jewish commentators, such as *Avicenna, *Averroes, *Avicebron, and *Maimonides. Using the methods developed in the 12th cent., the great generation of friar scholars, headed by St *Bonaventure, St *Albertus Magnus, and St *Thomas Aquinas, tried to cope with the huge quantity of new information and to prove that there could be no fundamental contradiction between secular learning and theology. At first it seemed as if these daring syntheses were to succeed, but doubts about a possible reconciliation between faith and reason grew as knowledge of Aristotle's natural philosophy, as interpreted by Averroes and other commentators, increased and the full consequences of his naturalism and determinism were drawn out by venturous scholars such as *Siger of Brabant and Boethius of Dacia. In 1277 Étienne Tempier, Bp. of Paris, encouraged by *Henry of Ghent, and Robert *Kilwardby, Abp. of Canterbury, both issued a list of condemnations which voiced some of these doubts.

Although the immediate consequences of this episcopal intervention have often been exaggerated—the scholastic method as such had not been condemned—it was a sign of a profound change in outlook. When after 1300 the economic and political horizon darkened and catastrophes, such as the Black Death, hit the population, the optimism of the previous centuries seemed vacuous. What stood out was the sheer fortuity of man's fate rather than the regularity of nature and the harmony between all its constituent parts. The result was that, although the scholastic technique was, if possible, even more highly developed in the 14th cent, its scope became more narrowly defined.

This apparent paradox is first seen in the work of John *Duns Scotus, perhaps the most subtle mind scholasticism produced. With him even the ordinary quaestio became not so much an attempt to reconcile contradictory authorities as a debate with contemporary scholars and with himself. Problems of the present superseded preoccupation with ancient books, as the connection between text and question, though maintained, became a mere formality. Duns Scotus was also the first theologian to limit the universal validity of logic by stating that the structure of this world, a result of God's potestas ordinata, represented only one possibility of God's potestas absoluta, which was bound by nothing but His will and the law of contradiction. *William of Ockham went even further; he severed the link between logic and reality, maintaining that logic is not about reality, as represented by words, but just about words. It is a science of language studying the ways in which the human mind devises universal concepts to organize its intuitive perceptions of individual things, the only things that really exist. Ockham thought logic of little use in theology, because it obscured the fundamental truth of God's absolute freedom and loving care for mankind with pseudo-explanations. Although often denounced as the destroyer of the medieval synthesis, Ockham had apparently expressed a central concern of his age; he had a host of followers, from *Gregory of Rimini to Gabriel *Biel, who proudly named their way the via moderna, as against the via antiqua of those who followed 13th-cent. theologians.

In the Renaissance Italy of the 15th cent. scholasticism was frontally attacked by L. *Valla who in his Dialecticae disputationes argued that not certainty but persuasion was the central concern of the study of language, that rhetoric was therefore more important than logic. His influence made itself felt in the early 16th cent. At that time most European universities gradually replaced the medieval arts course with the study of Greek and Latin literature and thus put an end to the long reign of logic in the world of scholarship. Later 'scholastic' revivals did not so much try to revive the scholastic methods as to draw attention to the actuality of the contents of medieval philosophy and theology.

The background of scholasticism is portrayed in R. W. Southern, The Making of the Middle Ages (1953), pp. 170–257; id., Scholastic Humanism and the Unification of Europe (3 vols., Oxford, 1995 ff.); A. Murray, Reason and Society in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1978); and B. Stock, The Implications of Literacy: Written Language and Models of Interpretation in the Eleventh and Twelfth Centuries (Princeton, NJ [1983]), pp. 241–454. See also A. B. Cobban, The Medieval Universities: Their Development and Organization (1975), and S. C. Ferruolo, The Origins of the University: The Schools of Paris and their critics, 1100–1215 (Stanford, Calif., 1985).

The scholastic method is discussed by L. M. de Rijk, Middeleeuwse Wijsbegeerte (Assen, 1977; Fr. tr., La Philosophie au Moyen Âge, Leiden, 1985). M. [J.] Haren, Medieval Thought: The Western Intellectual Tradition from Antiquity to the Thirteenth Century (Basingstoke, 1985); J. [A.] Marenbon, Early Medieval Philosophy (480–1150): An Introduction (1983); id., Later Medieval Philosophy (1150–1350): An Introduction (1987); H. Liebeschütz in A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (1967), pp. 538–639; N. Kretzmann and others (eds.), The Cambridge History of Later Medieval Philosophy from the Rediscovery of Aristotle to the Disintegration of Scholasticism 1100–1600 (1982); [E.] P. [M.] Dronke (ed.), A History of Twelfth-Century Western Philosophy (Cambridge, 1988), all with bibl. Classic works still of value incl. M. *Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode (2 vols., Freiburg i.B., 1909–11), and E. *Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955).

On medieval logic, J. Pinborg, Logik und Semantik im Mittelalter: Ein Überblick (Stuttgart [1972]); S. Ebbesen and others in N. Kretzmann, op. cit., pp. 99–381; and A. [R.] Broadie, Introduction to Medieval Logic (Oxford, 1987). On theology, B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1941; 3rd edn. [1983]), with discussion of the development of the quaestio technique; M.-D. Chenu, OP, La Théologie au douzième siècle (Études de philosophie médiévale, 45; 1957; partial Eng. tr. as Nature, Man and Society in the Twelfth Century, Chicago and London, 1968); id., La Théologie comme science au XIII^e siècle (3rd edn., Bibliothèque Thomiste, 33; 1957; orig. pub. in AHDLMA 2 (1927), pp. 31–71); id., Introduction à l'étude de Saint Thomas d'Aquin (Université de Montréal, Publications de l'Institut d'études médiévales, 11; 1950; Eng. tr., Toward Understanding Saint Thomas, Chicago [1964]; wider than its title suggests). Also valuable are J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Le Mouvement théologique du XII^e siècle (1914; 2nd edn., Museum Lessianum, section historique, 10; 1948); J. [J.] Pelikan, The Christian Tradition: A History of the Development of Doctrine, 3: The Growth of Medieval Theology (600–1300) (Chicago and London [1978]). H. A. Oberman, Forerunners of the Reformation: The Shape of Late Medieval Thought (New York, 1966; London, 1967); id., 'Fourteenth-Century Religious Thought. A Premature Profile', Speculum, 53 (1978), pp. 80–93.

There are important collections of texts in J. P. Migne, PL (authors up 1200) and in CCCM; also O. Lottin, OSB, Psychologie et morale aux XII^e et XIII^e siècles (6 vols., Louvain and Gembloux, 1942–60; 2nd edn. of vol. 1, 1957). For other edns. of texts see under individual authors mentioned above; also A. M. Landgraf, Einführung in die Geschichte der theologischen Literatur der Frühscholastik (Regensburg, 1948; Fr. tr., rev. by A.-M. Landry, OP, Introduction à l'histoire de la littérature théologique de la scolastique naissante, Université de Montréal, Publications de l'Institut d'études médiévales, 22; 1973); F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Commentariorum in Sententias Petri Lombardi (2 vols., Würzburg, 1947), supplemented by V. Doucet, OFM, in AFH 47 (1954), pp. 88–170, and by J. van Dijk in Franciscan Studies, 39 (1979), pp. 255–315; P. Glorieux, La Littérature quodlibétique (Bibliothèque Thomiste, 5 and 21; 1925–35). Id., Répertoire des maîtres en théologie de Paris au XIII^e siècle (Études de philosophie médiévale, 17–18; 1933–4); id., La Faculté des arts et ses maîtres au XIII^e siècle (ibid. 59; 1971).

Important periodicals, with bibls. of current lit., incl. the Revue thomiste (Paris, 1893 ff., with separate Bulletin thomiste, ibid., 1924–68, cont. as Rassegna di letteratura tomistica, Naples, 1969 ff.); Revue néo-scolastique (de philosophie) (Louvain, 1894–1945; cont. as Revue philosophique de Louvain, 1946 ff.; with separate Répertoire bibliographique de la philosophie, Louvain, 1934 ff.); Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique (Louvain, 1900 ff.); Ephemerides théologicae Lovanienses (ibid., 1924 ff.); and Recherches de théologie ancienne et médiévale (ibid., 1929 ff., with separate Bulletin). Work in progress is reported in the Bulletin de la Société internationale pour l'étude de la philosophie médiévale (Louvain, 1959–63; cont. as the Bulletin de philosophie médiévale, ibid., 1964 ff.).

I. C. Brady, J. E. Gurr, J. A. Weisheipl in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 1153–70, s.v.

scholia (plur. of Gk. σχόλιον). Notes, esp. of a critical, grammatical, or explanatory kind, inserted in the margins of an ancient MS. Their use was a regular practice in the Greek schools of later classical antiquity, and, probably through the contact between pagan and Christian culture at Alexandria, they were introduced by Christian scholars into the MSS of biblical and ecclesiastical texts. Scholia were often collected and published as a kind of commentary.

School of English Church Music. See ROYAL SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC.

Schoolmen. The teachers of philosophy and theology at the medieval European universities, then usually called 'schools', of which *Paris and *Oxford were pre-eminent. From the 13th cent. many of their greatest representatives belonged to the *Mendicant Orders, among the most famous being the Dominicans St *Albert the Great and St *Thomas Aquinas, and the Franciscans St *Bonaventure and *Duns Scotus. See SCHOLASTICISM.

schools, cathedral. See CATHEDRAL SCHOOLS.

Schools, Sunday. See SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Schopenhauer, Arthur (1788–1860), German philosopher. The son of a wealthy Danzig merchant, he was apprenticed to a Hamburg firm by his father in 1804, but went to Göttingen University in 1809 and to Berlin in 1811, where he attended the lectures of J. G. *Fichte and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. He was a great admirer of I. *Kant, whose only authentic interpreter he professed himself to be, and was also influenced by the nature philosophy of J. W. Goethe and F. W. J. *Schelling. The problem of combining Kant's criticism with the positive view of life of Goethe and Schelling led him to construct a philosophical system which he expounded in his chief work, Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung ('1819' [really 1818]; 2nd edn., 1844). After its completion he travelled in Italy and in 1820 accepted a lectureship at Berlin University which, however, proved a failure. In 1831 he fled from the cholera to Frankfurt, where he spent the latter part of his life in embittered seclusion, publishing only a few works, the chief of which were Die beiden Grundprobleme der Ethik (1841) and Parerga und Paralipomena (1851).

Schopenhauer may be regarded as the classic exponent of Pessimism. The ultimate Reality was Will (Gk. θέλημα, 'impulse', 'striving'; rather than βούλησις, 'the capacity to determine'), which extends far beyond the range of conscious life. Its extinction by pity for creatures and the mortification of the passions was the sovereign remedy for the ills of existence; and Schopenhauer claimed that his teaching was so far essentially at one with that of the Christian mystics. Meanwhile, as a stage towards this goal, he found a transient place of rest in the realms of art, poetry, and above all music. In the formulation of his ethical doctrines he was considerably influenced by Buddhism, though he never made any pretence of himself practising the Buddhist maxims.

Schopenhauer's philosophy, which achieved recognition only at the end of his life, influenced R. Wagner and F. *Nietzsche (in his early years), and was continued and modified by E. von *Hartmann and A. *Drews. It was one of the chief anti-Christian systems in Germany in the 19th century.

Collected works ed. by his pupil, J. Frauenstädt, 6 vols., Leipzig, 1873–4; 2nd edn. by A. Hübscher, 7 vols., Wiesbaden, 1946–50. The most complete edn. of his posthumous writings is that ed. A. Hübscher, 5 vols., Frankfurt am Main, 1966–75; Eng. tr., 4 vols., Oxford, etc., 1988–90. Letters ed. id., Bonn, 1978; 2nd edn., 1987. Eng. tr. of his principal work by R. B. Haldane and J. Kemp, The World as Will and Idea (3 vols., 1883–6; 8th edn., 1937), and by E. F. J. Payne, The World as Will and Representation (2 vols., Indian Hill, Colo., 1958). Many of his other works have also been tr. Studies in Ger. by W. von Gwinner (Leipzig, 1862; 2nd edn., much enlarged, 1878), J. Volkelt (Stuttgart, 1900; 5th edn., 1923), H. Hasse (Munich, 1926), W. Schneider (Vienna, 1937), A. Hübscher, Denker gegen den Strom (Bonn, 1973; Eng. tr., Lewiston, Lampeter, and Queenston [1989]), and R. Malter (Stuttgart and Bad Cannstatt [1991]). Studies in Eng. by H. Zimmern (London, 1876; rev. edn., 1932), W. Wallace (ibid., 1890 and 1913), W. Caldwell (Edinburgh, 1896), F. Copleston, SJ (Bellarmine Series, 11; 1946; repr. 1975), P. [L.] Gardiner (Harmondsworth, 1963), and B. Magee (Oxford, 1983). G. Simmel, Schopenhauer und Nietzsche (1907; 2nd edn., 1920). Schopenhauer-Lexikon, ed. J. Frauenstädt (2 vols., Leipzig, 1871). Jahrbuch der Schopenhauer-Gesellschaft (1912 ff.). C. Gebhardt, Schopenhauer-Bilder (1913). A. Hübscher, Schopenhauer-Bibliographie (Stuttgart and Bad Cannstatt, 1981). P. [L.] Gardiner in Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 7 (1967), pp. 325–32, s.v.

Schürer, Emil (1844–1910), German NT scholar. After lecturing in theology at Leipzig from 1869 to 1878, he was appointed professor at Giessen in 1878, went to Kiel in 1890, and held a chair of NT exegesis at Göttingen from 1895. In 1876 he founded the Theologische Literaturzeitung, which he edited together with A. *Harnack from 1881. His principal work is the Lehrbuch der Neutestamentlichen Zeitgeschichte (1874), published since its 2nd edition (1886–7) under the title Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes im Zeitalter Jesu Christi (Eng. tr., A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ, 5 vols., 1890–1). This monumental treatise gives a detailed and carefully substantiated account of the political history and the religious and social customs and beliefs as well as of the religious and profane literature of the Jewish people from the time of the *Maccabees to the wars under Trajan. There is a completely revised English version, taking account of later scholarship, by G. Vermes, F. Millar, and M. Black (3 vols. in 4 parts, 1973–87).

Obituary notice by A. Harnack in TLZ 35 (1910), cols. 289–92. A. B. Titius in PRE (3rd edn.), 24 (1913), pp. 460–6.

Schütz, Heinrich (1585–1672), German composer. The Latin form 'Henricus Sagittarius' is also found. From 1609 to 1612 he studied music at *Venice, became court organist at Kassel in 1612, and from 1617 was court Kapellmeister at Dresden, where, apart from short periods in Copenhagen during the *Thirty Years War, he remained for the rest of his life. Most of his surviving music was composed for the *Lutheran Church both for Latin and German texts. He is esp. famous for his *Passion music, which is remarkable for its dramatic qualities. He was one of the greatest exponents of the musical *baroque, blending German traditions with Italian innovations in a powerfully expressive manner. His works include the Symphoniae Sacrae, 1 (1629), 2 (1647), and 3 (1650), the Kleine Geistliche Konzerte (1636–9), and Geistliche Chormusik (1648).

Collected edn. of his musical works by P. Spitta and others (18 vols., Leipzig, 1885–1927); Neue Ausgabe, herausgegeben im Auftrag der Neuen Schütz-Gesellschaft, by F. Schöneich and others (Kassel, 1955 ff.); letters and other writings ed. E. H. Müller (Ratisbon, 1931). Annotated Eng. tr. of Letters and Documents 1656–1672 by G. Spagnoli (London [1990]). Modern studies by A. Pirro (Paris, 1913), H. J. Moser (Kassel, 1936; 2nd edn., 1954; Eng. tr., St Louis, 1959; also a shorter study, Kassel, 1940; 3rd edn., 1952; Eng. tr., 1967), and F. Civra (Turin, 1986). W. Bittinger (ed.), Schütz-Werke-Verzeichnis (1960); A. B. Skei, Heinrich Schütz: A Guide to Research (Garland Composer Resource Manuals, 1; New York and London, 1981). J. Rifkin and others in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 17 (1980), pp. 1–37, s.v.

Schwabach, Articles of (1529), the first of the *Lutheran Confessions. These 17 Articles were based on the collection of 15 Articles considered and, with one exception (that on the Eucharist), adopted at the Colloquy of *Marburg (3 Oct. 1529). The revision was due to M. *Luther, assisted by P. *Melanchthon, J. *Jonas, J. *Brenz, and others. On 16 Oct. 1529 they were accepted at Schwabach by the Elector and George, Margrave of Brandenburg-Ansbach, as admitting to membership of the Lutheran League of the N. German States, but they failed to win over the S. German Protestants. They were later taken as the basis of the *Augsburg Confession.

Text of the Articles pr. among the works of P. Melanchthon in the Corpus Reformatorum founded by C. G. Bretschneider, 26, ed. H. E. Bindseil (Brunswick, 1857), cols. 151–60, with introd. cols. 129–50. They are also pr. in a way which shows their relationship to the Augsburg Confession in Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche herausgegeben im Gedenkjahr der Augsburgischen Konfession 1930 (10th edn., Göttingen, 1982), pp. 52–83d. P. *Schaff, The History of the Creeds, 1 (2nd edn., London, 1878), pp. 228 f. Schottenloher, 4 (1938), p. 599 (nos. 42437–44). T. Kolde in PRE (3rd edn.), 18 (1906), pp. 1 f., s.v. 'Schwabacher Artikel'.

Schwartz, Eduard (1858–1940), classical philologist and *patristic scholar. A native of Kiel, he was educated at Göttingen, Bonn (under H. Usener), and Greifswald (under U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff). He held a succession of professorships in German universities, among them Strasbourg (1897–1902; 1913–18), Göttingen (1902–9; here he was closely associated with J. *Wellhausen), and Munich (1919 onwards). His early training, philological rather than theological, gave the stamp to his patristic work. He published editions of *Tatian's 'Oratio ad Graecos' (1888), *Athenagoras (1891), and *Eusebius' 'Ecclesiastical History' (1903–9, in collaboration with T. *Mommsen), the Pseudo-*Athanasian Sermo Major de Fide (1924), *Cyril of Scythopolis (1939), and other patristic texts. His main work, the Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum (1914–40), was a grandly planned edition of the Greek Councils; it was mostly completed at the time of his death. It provided, for the first time, a critical edition of the 'Acts' of *Ephesus (431) and *Chalcedon (451), besides portions of the later Councils. It was in many respects the Greek counterpart of C. H. *Turner's Monumenta, the last part of which, after Turner's death (1930), Schwartz saw through the press (1939). His important collection of papers on Athanasius in the Nachrichten of the Göttingen Gesellschaft (1904–11) inaugurated a new era in Athanasian studies. His other writings include a paper maintaining the early death of *John, the son of Zebedee (1904), Kaiser Konstantin und die christliche Kirche (1913; 2nd edn., 1936), and a paper on the so-called 'Counter-Anathemas' of *Nestorius (1923). Among the many papers subsidiary to his edition of the Councils was an important study of the *Theodosian Collection.

Gesammelte Schriften, ed. E. Schwartz, K. Aland, W. Eltester, and H. D. Altendorf (5 vols., 1938–63). There is much autobiog. material in Schwartz's own Vergangene Gegenwärtigkeiten (1938). A. Rehm, Eduard Schwartz' wissenschaftliches Lebenswerk (Sb. (Bayr.), 1942, Heft 4), with list of his works, pp. 67–75. C. H. Turner, 'Eduard Schwartz and the Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum', JTS 30 (1929), pp. 113–20. A. Momigliano, 'Premesse per una discussione su Eduard Schwartz', Rivista Storica Italiana, 90 (1978), pp. 617–26; id., New Paths of Classicism in the Nineteenth Century (History and Theory, Beiheft, 21; 1982), pp. 59–63, with bibl. p. 64.

Schwartzerdt, Philipp. See MELANCHTHON, PHILIPP.

Schwegler, Albert (1819–57), German patristic scholar and philosopher. At the University of Tübingen, which he had entered in 1836, he came under the influence of F. C. *Baur, and from the standpoint of the *Tübingen School published Der Montanismus und die christliche Kirche des zweiten Jahrhunderts (1841). His other writings in the field of patristics, all written from the same point of view, include a Geschichte des nachapostolischen Zeitalters (2 vols., 1846) and an edition of the '*Clementine Homilies' (1847). He also wrote extensively on the history of philosophy and on Roman history.

E. Zeller, Vorträge und Abhandlungen, 2 (1877), pp. 329–63 ('Drei deutsche Gelehrte: 1. Albert Schwegler'). H. Harris, The Tübingen School (Oxford, 1975), esp. pp. 78–88. W. S. Teuffel in Allgemeine Deutsche Biographie, 33 (1891), pp. 327 f.

Schweitzer, Albert (1875–1965), German theologian, physician, and organist. Born at Kaisersberg in Alsace, he was educated at Strasbourg University, completing his studies at Berlin and Paris. In 1899 he became pastor at Strasbourg. In Das Messianitäts- und Leidensgeheimnis (1901; Eng. tr., The Mystery of the Kingdom of God, 1914, repr. 1925) he expounded what was to be the leading idea of his theological work, that the Lord's teaching centred in His conviction of the imminent end of the world. The book made a great stir, and shortly after its publication he became lecturer at Strasbourg University (1902) and principal of a theological college. In 1906 appeared his brilliant Von Reimarus zu Wrede (Eng. tr., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910). After a review of previous attempts at interpreting the Life of Christ (G. E. *Lessing, D. F. *Strauss, J. E. *Renan, O. Pfleiderer, and W. *Wrede), all of which he held to be inadequate, he expounded an interpretation on the basis of 'thoroughgoing eschatology'.

He held that Christ shared with His contemporaries the expectation of a speedy end of the world and, when this proved a mistake, concluded that He Himself must suffer in order to save His people from the tribulations preceding the last days. In 1911 there followed Die Geschichte der paulinischen Forschung (Eng. tr., Paul and his Interpreters, 1912), in which Schweitzer applied similar eschatological principles to the theology of St *Paul. In the same year he took his medical degree, and in 1913 gave up a career of great academic distinction to devote himself at Lambaréné, Gabon (then French Equatorial Africa) to the care of the sick and to missionary activities. Having been interned in France in 1917, he returned to Strasbourg in 1918. In 1921 he published his widely read reminiscences, Zwischen Wasser und Urwald (Eng. tr., On the Edge of the Primeval Forest, 1922). In 1923 appeared his Kulturphilosophie, summing up his views on ethics as 'reverence for life'. In 1924 he went back to Lambaréné and restored his destroyed hospital, which was his principal concern for the rest of his life. He nevertheless completed his work on St Paul, Die Mystik des Apostels Paulus (1930, Eng. tr., 1931), which is built on the thesis that 'Being in Christ', interpreted as the 'physical union between Christ and the elect', is the centre of the Pauline teaching and is to be distinguished from 'God mysticism', which attains to God directly without the mediation of Christ. At the time of his death he was working on the posthumously published Reich Gottes und Christentum, ed. by Ulrich Neuenschwander (1967; Eng. tr. as The Kingdom of God and Primitive Christianity, 1968).

Schweitzer exercised a very considerable influence on Continental as well as on English and American Protestant theology, though his view of the Lord's Person aroused much opposition not only among conservative, but also among liberal Protestant theologians. He was also an accomplished musician and interpreter of J. S. *Bach, on whom he wrote a monograph (1908; Eng. tr., 1911), and his organ recitals found an enthusiastic public. In 1953 he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for the previous year.

Collections of autobiog. reminiscences pub. as Aus meiner Kindheit und Jugendzeit (1924; Eng. tr. by C. T. Campion as Memoirs of Childhood and Youth, 1924); Aus meinem Leben und Denken (1931; Eng. tr. by id. as My Life and Thought, 1933); and Afrikanisches Tagebuch, 1939–45 (1946). Sermons preached at Strasbourg between 1900 and 1919, ed. U. Neuenschwander, Strassburger Predigten (Munich [1966]; Eng. tr., Reverence for Life, 1970). Collected edn. of his works by R. Grabs (5 vols., Berlin, 1971). Lives by G. Seaver (London, 1947; 6th edn., 1969) and J. Brabazon (ibid., 1976). The numerous other substantial studies incl. R. Grabs, Albert Schweitzer (Berlin, 1949); W. Picht, Albert Schweitzer: Leben und Bedeutung (1960; Eng. tr., 1964); H. W. Bähr (ed.), Albert Schweitzer: Sein Denken und sein Weg (Tübingen, 1962); H. Clark, The Ethical Mysticism of Albert Schweitzer (Boston, 1962; London, 1964, as The Philosophy of Albert Schweitzer); E. Grässer, Albert Schweitzer als Theologe (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 60; Tübingen, 1979). J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 248–65.

Schwenckfeldians. The followers of the Silesian Reformation theologian, Caspar Schwenckfeld (1490–1561).

Schwenckfeld, essentially a mystic by temperament, was much impressed by the writings of J. *Tauler and M. *Luther, and in 1522 made a pilgrimage to *Wittenberg. He soon found, however, that he could not give unreserved assent to many of the Protestant doctrines. He believed that the tenet of justification by faith created serious moral dangers; he was unable to accept the Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist; and he sought to introduce among his followers a strict rule of Church discipline. The opposition which his teaching met with from both Catholics and Protestants led him to leave his native Silesia in 1529 for Strasbourg and other cities in S. Germany. He gradually came to hold also a doctrine of the deification of Christ's humanity, and in 1540 issued an elaborate account (Konfession und Erklärung) of his beliefs on the subject, with a reply to his opponents. Its theses were at once repudiated by the main body of orthodox Protestants, and a few years later Schwenckfeld finally withdrew from the Lutheran Church. After much further persecution from both Church and State he died at Ulm on 10 Dec. 1561.

After his death his small band of disciples, who called themselves the 'Confessors of the Glory of Christ', continued to propagate his teaching, publishing many of his writings from his MSS. They continued to exist in Silesia till 1826, and a branch of their disciples, which established itself at Philadelphia, in 1734, still survives.

Their writings and letters are collected in the Corpus Schwenckfeldianorum, ed. C. D. Hartranft and others (vols. 1–15; Leipzig, 1907–39; vols. 16–19; Pennsburg, Pa., 1959–61). Schwenckfeld's correspondence with *Philip of Hesse, ed. J. L. French (London, 1908). K. [T. C. G.] Ecke, Schwenckfeld, Luther und der Gedanke einer apostolischen Reformation (1911; new edn. as Kaspar Schwenckfeld, ungelöste Geistesfragen der Reformationszeit (Gütersloh, 1952). S. G. Schultz, Caspar Schwenckfeld von Ossig (Pennsburg, Pa., 1946). F. M. Weber, Kaspar Schwenckfeld und seine Anhänger in den freybergischen Herrschaften Justingen und Öpfingen (Stuttgart, 1962). A. Sciegienny, Homme charnel, homme spirituel: Étude sur la christologie de Caspar Schwenckfeld (1489–1561) (Wiesbaden, 1975). P. C. Erb, Schwenckfeld in his Reformation Setting (Valley Forge, Pa. [1978]). Id. (ed.), Schwenckfeld and Early Schwenkfeldianism: Papers Presented at the Colloquium on Schwenckfeld and the Schwenkfelders, Pennsburg, Pa., September 17–22, 1984 (Pennsburg, Pa., 1986). R. E. McLaughlin, Caspar Schwenckfeld, Reluctant Radical: His Life to 1540 (New Haven, Conn., and London [1986]). H. W. Kriebel, The Schwenckfelders in Pennsylvania (Lancaster, Pa., 1904). W. K. Meschter, Twentieth Century Schwenckfelders (Pennsburg, Pa., 1984). R. H. Grützmacher in PRE (3rd edn.), 18 (1906), pp. 72–81; G. Maron in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 1620–3.

Science, Christian. See CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

scientia media (Lat., 'mediate knowledge'). A term coined by the *Jesuit theologian, L. *Molina, in his attempt to reconcile God's foreknowledge with human free will. It designates the knowledge which God has of 'futuribilia', i.e. of things which are not, but which would be if certain conditions were realized, and thus are intermediate between mere possibilities and actual future events. Acc. to Molinist teaching this mediate knowledge is independent of the decree of the Divine Will. This thesis was keenly contested by the *Thomists and remains one of the chief differences between the systems of theology in the Jesuit and *Dominican Orders. See also MOLINA, LUIS DE.

G. de Henao, SJ, Scientia Media Historice Propugnata (Lyons, 1655); id., Scientia Media Theologice Defensata (ibid., 1674). F. Stegmüller in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 9 (1964), col. 551, s.v., with bibl.

Scillitan Martyrs, the. Seven men and five women of Scillium in N. Africa who were executed in 180, by order of the proconsul Saturninus, for refusal to renounce Christianity and to swear by the 'genius' of the Roman Emperor. Their 'Passio', which is authentic, is a valuable document for the *persecutions of the 2nd cent. It shows the pagan authorities eager to obtain a recantation and the martyrs steadfast in their refusal; and it is the first documentary evidence of Christianity in N. Africa. Later a basilica was built over their tomb where St *Augustine preached three sermons. Feast day, 17 July.

Orig. Lat. text of the 'Acta', with Gk. version and later Lat. recension, ed. J. A. *Robinson, The Passion of S. Perpetua (Texts and Studies, 1, no. 2; Cambridge, 1891), pp. 106–21. Original Lat. text repr., with Eng. tr., by H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 86–9. J. den Boeft and J. Bremmer, 'Notiunculae Martyrologicae', VC 35 (1981), pp. 43–56, esp. pp. 44–8. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, 'Le reliquie dei martiri scillitani', RQ 17 (1903), pp. 209–21. H. Karpp, 'Die Zahl der Scilitanischen Märtyrer', VC 15 (1961), pp. 165–72. G. Lanata, Gli Atti dei Martiri come Documenti Processuali (Studi e Testi per un Corpus Iudiciorum, 1; Milan, 1973), pp. 137–44, with further bibl.

scintilla animae (Lat., 'spark of the soul'). A metaphorical expression current in mystical literature, esp. in the writings of Meister *Eckhart, for the element in the soul (also 'ground' or 'apex') in which its union with God is achieved.

SCM. See STUDENT CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT.

Scone, Perthshire, an ancient Scottish religious centre and once the capital of a Pictish kingdom. At an assembly held here in 908, the Scottish king, Constantine, swore to protect the Church and recognized the Bp. of St Andrews as primate. An abbey of *Augustinian canons, succeeding an earlier foundation, was settled there *c.*1115 by King Alexander I (1107–24); it was sacked by a Protestant mob in 1559, and the last Commendator Abbot died in 1573. Kings of Scotland from Malcolm IV (1153) onwards were crowned at Scone. The Stone of Destiny, on which the Celtic kings were crowned, was brought to *Westminster Abbey by Edward I in 1296. It was traditionally believed to be that on which *Jacob laid his head at *Bethel (Gen. 28: 11). In 1996 the British Government announced that it would be returned to Scotland; on 30 Nov. it was transferred to Edinburgh castle.

The Liber Ecclesie de Scon was ed. by W. Smythe for the Bannatyne Society, vol. 82, Edinburgh, 1843. M. E. C. Walcott, Scoti-Monasticon: The Ancient Church of Scotland (1874), esp. pp. 313–16. W. F. Skene, The Coronation Stone (1869). J. Hilton, 'The Coronation Stone at Westminster Abbey', Archaeological Journal, 54 (1897), pp. 201–24. See also bibl. to CORONATION RITE IN ENGLAND.

Scory, John (d. 1585), successively Bp. of *Chichester and *Hereford. Originally a Cambridge *Dominican, he became a secular clerk in 1538 at the *Dissolution of the Monasteries and was appointed in 1551 to the see of *Rochester and in 1552 to that of Chichester. At the accession of *Mary Tudor, Scory was deprived of his see, but submitted and recanted. Nevertheless he left England, going first to Emden and then to Geneva. In 1558 he returned and was in the next year appointed Bp. of Hereford, which see he held until his death. He was a wealthy, able, and not over-scrupulous prelate. He assisted at M. *Parker's consecration (and hence figured prominently in the *Nag's Head Story) and is thus held to be one of the channels through which the episcopal succession was preserved in the C of E.

W. A. J. Archbold in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 8 f., s.v., with further refs. See also H. N. Birt, OSB, The Elizabethan Religious Settlement (1907), pp. 241, 246, 248, 362–70 and passim.

Scotism. The system of Scholastic philosophy expounded by the *Franciscan teacher, *Duns Scotus (q.v.), and defended in the later Middle Ages, esp. in the Franciscan Order.

Scotland, Christianity in. In the early Middle Ages the territory of what is now Scotland was occupied by four different nations. The earliest evidence for Christianity is a number of inscribed monuments of the 5th and 6th cents. in the British area of SW Scotland at sites such as Kirkmadrine (Wigtownshire). The early Christian centre at Whithorn, *Bede's Ad Candidam Casam (HE 3. 4), associated with St *Ninian, lies in the same region. The kingdom of Dalriada in the area of Argyll and northwards was already settled from *Ireland, and by the later 6th cent. St *Columba was one of several Irish saints active here, apparently ministering to a Christian population. His encounters with the Picts suggests that these people were still pagan, but by the beginning of the 8th cent. Pictish tradition asserted that the community of Columba had established many churches in E. Scotland. *Iona had also been largely responsible for the conversion of the Northumbrian kingdom of Bernicia, where St *Aidan's foundation at *Lindisfarne (635) was a major centre of Irish influence in England. From here English bishops were sent to Whithorn (8th–9th cent.) and one to Abercorn (681–5). The Columban Church lost influence in Northumbria after King Oswiu's adoption of the Roman date of Easter in 664, and Northumbrian influence among the Picts led to their adopting Roman practice in 710. Soon afterwards, in 717, the Columban clergy were expelled from Pictish territory. The union of Pictland and Dalriada in the 9th cent. and the gradual settling of the frontier with the English led to the creation of the Scottish kingdom. In the 10th and 11th cents. there is evidence for bishops at St Andrews. Jurisdiction over the originally British see at Glasgow was disputed between the Bps. of St Andrews and the Abps. of *York. Topographical evidence suggests that the 12th cent. dioceses based on Brechin, Dunblane, and Dunkeld, whose territories are intermingled with those of St Andrews, had a comparatively ancient origin based on a proprietory rather than a jurisdictional role.

The *Investiture Controversy had little impact on Scotland, but the English and Anglo-Norman connections of Queen *Margaret (d. 1093) and her three sons who were successively kings in the first half of the 12th cent. (esp. David I, reigned 1124–53) brought new Church leaders with reformed ideas who transformed the structure of the Scottish Church. A territorial episcopate in 11 mainland dioceses with clearly defined boundaries of jurisdiction controlled a system of *c.*1,000 parishes now supported by royally imposed teind (*tithe). But attempts by the Abp.

of *York during much of the 12th cent. to extend his metropolitan authority over the Scottish sees led in 1192 to a compromise unique in the W. Church whereby all of them except Galloway (which remained under York) were exempted from any superior authority except that of *Rome. The Popes regarded themselves as Scotland's metropolitans; and despite the difficulties of travel from the 13th cent. to the 16th there was a regular flow of Scots to the Papal court to take advantage of this Papal interest in Scottish business. The lack of any single pre-eminent bishop in Scotland until changes made at the end of the 15th cent. also meant that the Scottish Church was normally under royal control, with little signs of organized resistance. King and Pope seldom disagreed.

The change of direction among the regular clergy from Irish to reformed Continental models was fostered by King David. He showed special interest in Tironensian monks (a small congregation of reformed *Benedictines centered on Tiron (now Thiron) in France) and *Augustinian canons, who were both more dominant in Scotland than in England. *Cistercians also became important in due course, but the more traditional Benedictines had little support. The friars had warm royal support from 1230 onwards. At first it was bishops appointed from among the regular clergy who kept the Scottish Church abreast of changing ideals in France and England. Then from the late 12th cent. onwards the more ambitious secular clergy sought university education abroad (since there was no university in Scotland until the founding of St Andrews in 1410). They had much Papal support in this movement and ensured on their return that Scotland was kept in touch with current trends in thought and practice. *Duns Scotus was a product of this background.

In the absence of a profession of lay common lawyers, university-trained *canon lawyers played an exceptionally important part in Scottish society. The Church courts of the various dioceses provided a vital service in resolving disputes at a popular level. In general the clergy served the country satisfactorily by the standards of the time. Though they formed only a small group of between 3,000 and 4,000 in a population of some half a million, they were so well renumerated that by the later Middle Ages they were able to pay two-fifths of the national taxation.

The early 15th cent. brought fear of contamination by *Lollardy, and two heretics from England and Bohemia were condemned and burned (Resby in 1408 and Crawar in 1433). But these were the only cases, for the threat to the established order was not a serious or continuing one in Scotland and heresy was long contained. One reason for this was the late spread of literacy and individualistic devotional attitudes among laymen in Scotland compared with some other countries. There was therefore for long little open criticism of the clerical sins of concubinage and pluralism, and enthusiastic acceptance of the attractions of *pilgrimages and *indulgences, along with widespread endowment at all social levels of Masses for the dead. Yet the later 15th cent. was for most people a time of mechanical and perfunctory attitudes to religion: the thoughtful and devout were still a small minority.

The first wave of the Reformation proper was *Lutheran, the second *Calvinist. Heretical books were smuggled into Scotland in spite of an Act of Parliament (1525) against their importation. Patrick *Hamilton, who had been in Germany, was burnt at the stake in St Andrews (1528) for his advocacy of Lutheran principles and his death increased the number of reformers. The policy and campaigns of England under *Henry VIII and *Edward VI added to the pro-Reformation forces but also created patriotic opposition. Cardinal *Beaton led the anti-English party, but his responsibility for the martyrdom of G. *Wishart (1546) led to his murder shortly afterwards. Wishart's mantle fell upon the shoulders of J. *Knox, who, after his labours in England, Frankfurt, and Geneva, ultimately returned to lead the Calvinistic party, now strongly supported by the Lords of the Congregation.

In 1560 the reformed Church of Scotland was established on *Presbyterian lines. It prepared a Confession of Faith (see SCOTTISH CONFESSION) and a 'Book of *Discipline' (1560) and soon adopted the Anglo-Genevan 'Book of *Common Order' as its liturgical directory, but not until 20 years afterwards were presbyteries systematically erected. To make up for the dearth of ministers at first, it was deemed expedient to appoint *superintendents and readers. Soon after the death of Knox (1572) the mantle of leadership was borne by the doughty advocate of high Presbyterianism, A. *Melville. Intimate associations existed between Scottish Presbyterians and the English *Puritans, who, led by T. *Cartwright and W. *Travers, sought by 'Scottizing for Discipline'—to use R. *Bancroft's phrase—to presbyterianize the C of E, but were frustrated by *Elizabeth I and her agent J. *Whitgift.

For more than 100 years the fortunes of Scottish Presbyterians ebbed and flowed owing to the determination of the Stuart kings to make the Kirk episcopal. Now the Crown was dominant and pro-episcopal Acts were passed (1584); now the Kirk came into power again and Presbyterianism was ratified (1592). For some decades the policy of *James VI and I prevailed, Episcopacy being established by the Scottish Parliament in 1612. The Five Articles of *Perth, which enjoined such usages as kneeling at Communion and the observance of holy days, were passed by a packed Assembly in 1618. The imposition of the Prayer Book, known as W. *Laud's liturgy, brought the conflict between the Kirk and *Charles I to a head in 1637. In the following year the pro-Presbyterian *National Covenant was subscribed and the Glasgow General Assembly, the first free assembly for 30 years, swept Episcopacy away. In 1643 the alliance between the Scottish Covenanters and the Long Parliament was cemented by the *Solemn League and Covenant, and the southern Parliament, aiming, under Scottish influence, at Presbyterian uniformity for the British Isles, convened the *Westminster Assembly (q.v.). The *Directory of Church Government, the Directory of Public *Worship, the *Westminster Confession, and the *Westminster Catechisms (qq.v.) were formally accepted as standards by the Church of Scotland.

After the Restoration Episcopacy was re-established and a bitter and bloody struggle between Scottish Episcopalians and Presbyterians ensued. At the Revolution the Church of Scotland became Presbyterian once more (1690) and has remained so ever since. Chiefly owing to the infringement of popular rights by the Patronage Act of 1712 the Church was weakened by secessions in the 18th cent. (Original Secession, 1733; Relief, 1761) and by the *Disruption (q.v.) of 1843, when nearly a third of its ministers and members left the Establishment and formed the *Free Church of Scotland. Among notable modern features of Scottish Presbyterian history may be mentioned foreign and colonial missionary enterprise, Church extension at home, increased interest in worship and Church architecture, the transfer of Church schools to the civil authorities (1872), the abolition of patronage (1874), and the relaxation of the terms of credal subscription. The 19th cent. witnessed a growing movement in favour of the union of the different Presbyterian Churches in Scotland. The chief unions took place in 1847 (Secession and Relief to form *United Presbyterian), 1900 (United Presbyterian and Free to form *United Free), and 1929 (United Free and Church of Scotland under the name of the latter). Each union had its unyielding remnant who continued in their former ways, e.g. Free Church, 1900, and United Free Church, 1929. Attempts to bring about a rapprochement between the Church of Scotland and the (Anglican) Episcopal Church in Scotland were accompanied in the 20th cent. by conversations between the Church of Scotland and the C of E, but the 1957 Report advocating 'Bishops in Presbytery' was defeated by a small majority in the General Assembly, as was the proposal in 1971 that the Episcopal Church should form a Synod of the General Assembly. Negotiations for organic unity have continued in the 1990s through multilateral conversations of which both the Church of Scotland and the Scottish Episcopal Church are members.

After the 1929 reunion among the Presbyterians, the majority of the population of Scotland belonged to the Church of Scotland, which is Presbyterian, national, endowed, and free. Its spiritual independence has been recognized and its patrimony secured by Acts of Parliament (1921, 1925). From those who adhered to Episcopacy after the Revolution settlement (1690) arose the Episcopal Church in Scotland (since 1979 called the Scottish Episcopal Church). Subject because of its Jacobite loyalty to Penal Laws from 1715 to 1792, it was reduced in numbers, but since their repeal it has won growing acceptance. It is an autonomous Province of the *Anglican Communion. Through it the (then Protestant) *Episcopal Church in the United States of America received episcopal *Orders by the consecration of S. *Seabury in 1784. The Church is governed by a General Synod, of which one House comprises the seven diocesan bishops. They elect from among themselves a *Primus who is their chairman, but metropolitical authority resides with the College of Bishops, not an individual. It has maintained a distinctive liturgical tradition (see COMMON PRAYER, BOOK OF). The Prayer Book of 1929, while remaining an authorized liturgy, is being superseded by contemporary revisions. Women have been ordained as deacons since 1986, as priests since 1994. The RC Church always retained its hold on those in some remote parts of the Highlands and Islands who were never much influenced by the Reformation. It has also long been influential among those of Irish extraction in the industrial Lowland areas. In recent years it has attracted a wider following and now comprises *c.*20 per cent of the population, roughly the same proportion as the Church of Scotland. See also CONGREGATIONALISM.

J. H. S. Burleigh, A Church History of Scotland (1960). G. Donaldson, Scottish Church History (Edinburgh, 1985); id., The Faith of the Scots (1990). F. T. Wainwright (ed.), The Problem of the Picts (Edinburgh, 1955). [A.] C. Thomas, The Early Christian Archaeology of North Britain (Oxford, 1971); id., Christianity in Roman Britain to A.D. 500 (1981), pp. 275–94. A. Macquarrie, 'Early Christian Religious Houses in Scotland: Foundation and Function', in J. Blair and R. Sharpe (eds.), Pastoral Care before the Parish (Leicester, 1992), pp. 110–33. J. Dowden, The Medieval Church in Scotland: Its Constitution, Organisation and Law (Glasgow, 1910); id., The Bishops of Scotland: Being Notes on the Lives of all the Bishops under each of the Sees prior to the Reformation (Glasgow, 1912). D. E. R. Watt and others (eds.), Ecclesia Scoticana (Series Episcoporum Ecclesiae Catholicae Occidentalis, 6th ser. 1; Stuttgart, 1991). R. Somerville (ed.), Scotia Pontificia: Papal Letters to Scotland before the Pontificate of Innocent III (Oxford, 1982). Concilia Scotiae: Ecclesiae Scoticanae Statuta tam provincialia quam synodalia quae supersunt, MCCXXV–MDLIX, ed. J. Robertson (Bannatyne Club, 2 vols., 1866); Eng. tr., with introd., by D. Patrick, Statutes of the Scottish Church 1225–1559 (Scottish History Society, 54; 1907). I. B. Cowan, The Parishes of Medieval Scotland (ibid. 93; 1967), and other vols. in this series. G. W. S. Barrow, Kingship and Unity: Scotland 1000–1306 (1981), pp. 61–83; id., The Kingdom of the Scots: Government, Church and Society from the Eleventh to the Fourteenth Century (1973), pp. 165–254. A. Grant, Independence and Nationhood: Scotland 1306–1469 (1984), esp. pp. 89–119; J. Wormald, Court, Kirk and Community: Scotland 1470–1625 (1981), esp. pp. 75–139. D. E. R. Watt, A Biographical Dictionary of Scottish Graduates to A.D. 1400 (Oxford, 1977).

The primary authorities for the period of the Reformation are the histories of J. Knox, J. *Spottiswode, and D. *Calderwood (qq.v.). G. D. Henderson, The Burning Bush: Studies in Scottish Church History [from the Reformation onwards] (Edinburgh, 1957). W. M. Campbell, The Triumph of Presbyterianism (ibid., 1958). G. Donaldson, The Scottish Reformation (Cambridge, 1960). I. B. Cowan, The Scottish Reformation: Church and Society in Sixteenth Century Scotland [1982]. J. Kirk, Patterns of Reform: Continuity and Change in the Reformation Kirk (Edinburgh, 1989). D. Shaw, The General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland 1560–1600: Their Origins and Development (ibid., 1964). W. R. Foster, The Church before the Covenants: The Church of Scotland 1596–1638 (ibid., 1975). D. G. Mullan, Episcopacy in Scotland: The History of an Idea, 1560–1638 (ibid. [1986]). J. Buckroyd, Church and State in Scotland 1660–1681 (ibid. [1980]). R. B. Sher, Church and University in the Scottish Englightenment: The Moderate Literati of Edinburgh (Edinburgh, 1985). A. L. Drummond and J. Bulloch, The Scottish Church 1688–1843: The Age of the Moderates (ibid., 1973); id., The Church in Victorian Scotland 1843–1874 (ibid., 1975); id., The Church in Late Victorian Scotland 1874–1900 (ibid., 1978). J. R. Fleming, A History of the Church in Scotland, 1843–1874 (ibid., 1927); id., A History of the Church in Scotland, 1875–1929 (ibid., 1933). C. G. Brown, The Social History of Religion in Scotland since 1730 (1987). A. C. Cheyne, The Transforming of the Kirk: Victorian Scotlands Religious Revolution (Edinburgh, 1983). H. Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticanae: The Succession of Ministers in the Church of Scotland from the Reformation (3 vols., Edinburgh, 1866–71; new edn., 7 vols., Edinburgh, 1915–28, + 3 additional vols., 8–10, 1950–81). J. T. Cox, Practice and Procedure in the Church of Scotland (1934; 6th edn. by D. F. M. Macdonald, 1976). F. Lyall, Of Presbyters and Kings: Church and State in the Law of Scotland (Aberdeen, 1980). H. J. Wotherspoon and J. M. Kirkpatrick, A Manual of Church Doctrine [1919], revised by T. F. Torrance and R. Selby Wright (1960). D. B. Forrester and D. M. Murray (eds.), Studies in the History of Worship in Scotland (Edinburgh, 1984). G. B. Burnet, The Holy Communion in the Reformed Church of Scotland 1560–1960 (1960). F. Goldie, A Short History of the Episcopal Church from the Restoration to the Present Time (1951). The Scottish liturgies of 1637 and 1764 are pr. in W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Alcuin Club Collections, 40; 1958), pp. 163–82 and 333–48, with comm. pp. 1–18 and 150–9. M. Lochhead, Episcopal Scotland in the Nineteenth Century [1966]. D. Maclean, The Counter-Reformation in Scotland, 1560–1930 [1931]; P. F.

Anson, The Catholic Church in Modern Scotland, 1560–1937 (1937); id., Underground Catholicism in Scotland 1622 1878 (Montrose, 1970); C. Johnson, Developments in the Roman Catholic Church in Scotland 1789–1929 (Edinburgh [1983]); series of essays in the Innes Review, 29 (1978), repr. as Modern Scottish Catholicism 1878 1978, ed. D. McRoberts (Glasgow, 1979). H. Escott, A History of Scottish Congregationalism (Glasgow, 1960).

Scott, George Gilbert (1811–78), ecclesiastical architect. The grandson of T. *Scott, the biblical commentator, he was born at Gawcott, Bucks, and brought up as an *Evangelical. After studying architecture under James Edmeston and Henry Roberts, he began work in partnership with W. B. Moffatt as a designer of workhouses in various styles. His acquaintance with A. W. N. *Pugin and Benjamin *Webb, the secretary of the (High Church) *Cambridge Camden Society, led him to an intensified study of the principles of Gothic art. In 1840 he was selected as architect for the Martyrs' Memorial, Oxford. His first notable church in Gothic style was St Giles, Camberwell (1842–4), and from this time he became the most prominent ecclesiastical architect in England. In 1844 he won a competition for the *Lutheran church of St Nicholas, Hamburg, executed in 14th-cent. German Gothic. He frequently travelled on the Continent, utilizing his studies, esp. of French Gothic, for his work in Britain, e.g. for the chapel of Exeter College, Oxford (1857–9). His later works include the Albert Memorial (1864–71), St Mary Abbots, Kensington (1870–2), and St Mary's (Episcopal) Cathedral, Edinburgh (1874–80). Among the many buildings where he was entrusted with the work of restoration were *Westminster Abbey and the cathedrals at *Ely, *Hereford, *Salisbury, and *Chester. In his 'restorations' he met with resistance owing to his too ready preference for his own designs to existing work, and the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings was founded to oppose the methods of restoration of which Scott was the leading promoter. Well-known ecclesiastical architects who were trained in his office include G. E. *Street and G. F. *Bodley.

His grandson, Giles Gilbert Scott (1880–1960), was also a distinguished architect. His works include the Anglican cathedral at *Liverpool (begun in 1904; completed in 1978 on a modified plan), the University Library at Cambridge (1931–4), the New Bodleian Library (1937–40) and the Deneke Building and Chapel (1931) at Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford.

George Gilbert Scott, Personal and Professional Recollections, ed. by his son, G. Gilbert Scott (1879); D. Cole, The Work of Sir Gilbert Scott (1980). P. Waterhouse in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 19–23. On Giles Gilbert Scott, A. S. G. Butler in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 870–72.

Scott, Robert (1811–87), Greek lexicographer. Educated at Shrewsbury and at *Christ Church, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Balliol in 1835 and Master (with B. *Jowett, who succeeded him at the next election, as rival candidate) in 1854. From 1861 to 1870 he was also Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis, and from 1870 till his death Dean of *Rochester. He is remembered esp. through the famous Lexicon which he edited in conjunction with H. G. *Liddell (q.v. for particulars).

Various letters to and from Scott ed. J. M. Prest, Robert Scott and Benjamin Jowett (Suppl. to Balliol College Record, 1966). H. Craik in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 65 f.

Scott, Thomas (1747–1821), biblical commentator. The son of John Scott (d. 1777), a grazier, Thomas was apprenticed to a surgeon at Alford, Lincs, but after quick dismissal for some misconduct was employed for some nine years in menial work on the land. Eventually he was ordained deacon in 1772 by the Bp. of *Lincoln and held a succession of curacies, in 1781 succeeding John *Newton, whose acquaintance he had made earlier, at Olney. From 1801 till his death he was rector of Aston Sandford, Bucks. In his Force of Truth (1779) he set out the stages in which his theological beliefs developed from a *Unitarian rationalism to a fervent *Calvinism. His chief work, however, was his Commentary on the Bible, issued in weekly numbers between 1788 and 1792. It was remarkable for its endeavour to discover the message of each section of the Bible for his own soul and a persistent refusal to shirk difficulties by falling back on historical or pietistic disquisitions. It had an enormous circulation, though Scott, who shared but few of the financial profits, continued a poor man. J. H. *Newman in the Apologia testifies to Scott as the influence 'to whom (humanly speaking) I almost owe my soul'. See also CMS.

Collected edns. of his works pub. Buckingham, 1805–8 (5 vols.), and 1823–5 (10 vols.). M. L. Loane, Oxford and the Evangelical Succession (1950), pp. 135–92. J. E. Marshall, Thomas Scott (1747–1821) and 'The Force of Truth' (1779) (lecture, 1979). A. Gordon in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 73–5.

Scottish Confession (Lat. Confessio Scotica). The first Confession of Faith of the reformed Church of Scotland. It was adopted by the Scottish Parliament in 1560 and remained the confessional standard until superseded by the *Westminster Confession in 1647. It had been drawn up in four days by J. *Knox and five other ministers in 25 articles, and is a typical Calvinistic document. *Justification by faith is assumed; the doctrine of *election is affirmed; the Real Presence in Communion is emphasized and *transubstantiation and the view that the elements are bare signs are condemned. The Kirk is defined as Catholic; it consists of the elect, and outside of it there is no salvation. The notes of the true Kirk on earth are not lineal descent or numbers, but the true preaching of the Word and the right administration of the sacraments and of discipline. Civil magistrates are stated to be the lieutenants of God, whose duty it is to conserve and purge the Church when necessary; but supreme authority is ascribed to the Word of God.

A supplement to the Confession was issued and subscribed in 1581; it is commonly known as the *King's Confession (q.v.).

Lat. and Scots text repr., with introd. by G. D. Henderson, Scots Confession, 1560 . . . (Edinburgh, 1937); Scots text, with introd. by G. D. Henderson, The Scots Confession 1560 (ibid., 1960), has also modern Eng. rendering by J. Bulloch, pp. 57–80. Further modern Eng. version in W. Croft Dickinson (ed.), John Knox's History of the Reformation in Scotland, 2 (1949), pp. 257–72. K. *Barth's *Gifford Lectures (The Knowledge of God and the Service of God according to the Teaching of the Reformation, 1938) are in the form of a comm. on the 1560 Confession. J. Kirk, 'The Influence of Calvinism on the Scottish Reformation', Records of the Scottish Church History Society, 18 (1974), pp. 157–79, esp. pp. 157–61. W. I. P. Hazlett, 'The Scots Confession 1560: Context, Complexion and Critique', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 78 (1987), pp. 287–320.

Scottish Episcopal Church. See SCOTLAND, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Scottus Erigena. See ERIGENA, JOHN THE SCOT.

Scotus, Duns. See DUNS SCOTUS.

'Scourge of God', the. See ATTILA.

screens. Partitions of wood, stone, or metal, often with painted or sculptural decoration, dividing a church into two or more parts. Chancel- or choir-screens, separating the *choir from the *nave, may be high, solid, and elaborate, as the 13th-cent. German examples at Naumburg and Wechselburg and the 15th-cent. ones at *Canterbury and *York, or, as in Italy in early times, quite low. In the latter form they were sometimes provided with *ambones on either side. When a chancel-screen is surmounted by a cross ('rood') it is termed a 'rood-screen'. See also ICONOSTASIS.

A. W. [N.] *Pugin, A Treatise on Chancel Screens and Rood Lofts, their Antiquity, Use and Symbolic Significance (1851). F. B. Bond and B. Camm, OSB, Roodscreens and Roodlofts (2 vols., 1909). F. Bond, Screens and Galleries in English Churches (1908); [W. H.] A. Vallance, English Church Screens (1936); id., Greater English Church Screens, posthumously ed. E. T. Long (1947). G. W. O. Addleshaw and F. Etchells, The Architectural Setting of Anglican Worship (1948), pp. 37–63. J. Mogin, Les Jubés de la Renaissance (Brussels, 1946). J. Mallion, Chartres: Le Jubé de la Cathédrale (Chartres, 1964); E. Hütter and H. Magirius, Der Wechselburger Lettner: Forschungen und Denkmalpflege (Weimar, 1983).

scriptorium. The room, esp. in a monastery, which was set apart for the scribes to copy MSS. The necessary utensils were provided by a person known as the 'armarius'. As the scriptorium of a particular monastery (or group of monasteries) often adopted a characteristic script, its affiliations can be of great value to palaeographers in assigning the date and place to a MS. A good instance of such a characteristic style of writing is the school of Tours, and of illumination that of *Winchester.

Scrivener, Frederick Henry Ambrose (1813–91), NT textual critic. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he held a number of parochial appointments. From 1846 to 1856 he was headmaster of Falmouth School. He made a very comprehensive study of the text of the NT, publishing collations and detailed descriptions of a large number of (esp. minuscule) MSS, some of them hitherto unexamined. His Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the NT, of which the 1st edition appeared in 1861 (listing some 1,170 MSS) and the 4th (posthumous, ed. E. Miller) in 1894 (listing over 3,000), is still a valuable book of reference, despite the attempt made in it to defend the *textus receptus.

E. C. Marchant in DNB 51 (1897), p. 126, s.v.

scrofula, touching for. See KING'S EVIL, TOUCHING FOR THE.

Scrope, Richard le (*c.*1346–1405), Abp. of *York. Of noble family, he was ordained priest in 1377, became chancellor of Cambridge University in 1378, and in 1382 went to Rome, where he was made auditor of the Curia. He was appointed Bp. of Coventry and *Lichfield in 1386 and, at the request of Richard II, was translated to the archbishopric of York in 1398. Though he assisted in forcing the abdication of the King in 1399 and took part in the enthronement of Henry IV, he soon grew discontented with the latter's government and favoured Northumberland's revolt, to which his reputation for holiness gave additional weight. He also composed a manifesto demanding justice, security, and lighter taxation, and gathered an army which included dissatisfied citizens whom he led against the royal troops. He was tricked, however, into disbanding his followers by the Earl of Westmorland, who feigned compliance with his demands for reform, and was arrested and irregularly sentenced to death at the command of the King. At his tomb in York Minster miracles were soon believed to take place, and he was popularly venerated as a saint, though his cult was never formally approved.

Miscellanea relating to Abp. Scrope in J. Raine (ed.), The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, 2 (RS, 1886), pp. 292–311; account of the proceedings against him, ibid. 3 (1894), pp. 288–91, and letters deprecating the worship at his shrine, pp. 291–4. Life by continuator of chronicle of Thomas Stubbs (perh. William Melton, 1496–1528), ibid. 2, pp. 428 33. Short Life by N. H. Nicolas in his edn. of the Scrope and Grosvenor Roll, The Controversy between Sir Richard Scrope and Sir Robert Grosvenor in the Court of Heraldry, MCCCLXXXV MCCCXC, 2 (1832), pp. 121–6. J. Solloway, Archbishop Scrope ('York Minster Tracts', no. 15 [1928]). J. W. McKenna, 'Popular Canonization as Political Propaganda: The Cult of Archbishop Scrope', Speculum, 45 (1970), pp. 608–23; P. McNiven, 'The Betrayal of Archbishop Scrope', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 54 (1972), pp. 173–213. J. Hughes, Pastors and Visionaries: Religion and Secular Life in Late Medieval Yorkshire (Woodbridge, Suffolk [1988]), passim [see index]. J. Tait in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 144–7, s.v., with refs. to orig. sources. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1659–60; BRUC, pp. 513–14.

scruples (Lat. scrupulus, 'small sharp stone'). In *moral theology, unfounded fears that there is sin where there is none. Scrupulosity may be the result of much ascetic reading of a rigorist tendency, but more often is the outcome of nervous disturbances. It usually manifests itself in the fear of having consented to sinful imaginations and desires, of having made incomplete confessions, and of being unworthy of the reception of the sacraments. It may also err with regard to duties which it is prone to see where they do not exist. Scrupulosity, which often inclines the penitent to refuse submission to the judgement of his confessor, may lead to the sins of obstinacy and despair, or, conversely, to self-indulgence. The scrupulous, who are discouraged from making minute confessions, are usually counselled to disregard their scruples and to act in obedience to the advice of a prudent spiritual director.

scrutiny (Lat. scrutinium). A term applied to the formal testing of *catechumens before their Baptism in the early Church. The 1972 RC Order for Adult Baptism includes three 'scrutinies' of catechumens; these comprise a homily, prayers, and laying on of hands, and take place after the *Gospel at the Eucharist on the third, fourth, and fifth Sundays in Lent (or, if necessary, in the week following). The word also came to be used for the examination of candidates for holy orders.

See works cited s.v. CATECHUMENS.

Sea, Forms of Prayer to be used at. In the BCP, a small collection of prayers and anthems for use in various circumstances at sea. The forms include a prayer to be used daily in the Royal Navy, prayers for use in a storm and before battle, thanksgivings for deliverance from storm and for victory, and directions for general confession and absolution in serious danger. The first special prayers for use at sea were put out as a supplement to the Directory of Public *Worship, issued by the Long Parliament in 1645, and the forms now prescribed were first included in the BCP of 1662.

F. Procter and W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1901), pp. 162, 199, 246, and esp. 644 f. F. S. Horan in PBD, pp. 745 f., s.v.

Seabury, Samuel (1729–96), first bishop of the *Episcopal Church in the USA. After studying theology at Yale University and medicine at Edinburgh, he was ordained priest by the Bp. of *Lincoln in 1753 and served as a missionary in New Brunswick, later holding livings near New York. Remaining loyal to the British Government in the War of Independence, he engaged in controversy in the three 'Farmer's Letters' with Alexander Hamilton and for a time (in 1775) suffered imprisonment. He was elected bishop in 1783; but as his inability, now that the States were independent, to take the Oath of Allegiance precluded his consecration by English bishops, arrangements were made that he should obtain his episcopal Orders from Scotland. Seabury was accordingly consecrated at Aberdeen on 14 Nov. 1784. Later, by his co-operation in the consecration of Bp. T. J. Claggett of Maryland, the Scottish and English successions were united. An able organizer and administrator, he secured for the Episcopal Church in America a structure and a liturgy in which the native High Church tradition could grow and develop. His influence on the history of his Church was immense. His consecration is commemorated on 14 Nov. in the American BCP (1979).

E. E. Beardsley, Life and Correspondence of the Right Reverend Samuel Seabury (Boston, 1881; abridged edn. as The Life of Samuel Seabury, London, 1884). Other Lives by his great-grandson, W. J. Seabury (New York and London, 1908), H. Thoms (Hamden, Conn., and London, 1963), and B. E. Steiner (Athens, Oh. [1971]). C. K. Vance in Dict. Amer. Biog. 16 (1935), pp. 528–30.

Seal of Confession. The absolute obligation not to reveal anything said by a penitent using the Sacrament of *Penance. The obligation includes not only the confessor, but interpreter, bystander, eavesdropper, persons finding and reading lists of sins obviously drawn up for the purpose of the confession, and indeed everyone except the penitent himself. It covers all sins, *venial as well as *mortal, and any other matter the revelation of which would grieve or damage the penitent, or would lower the repute of the sacrament. The obligation arises from a tacit contract between penitent and confessor, from its necessity for the maintenance of the use of the sacrament by the faithful, and from canon law. The obligation covers direct and indirect revelation, e.g. unguarded statements from which matters heard in confession could be deduced or recognized, and admits of no exception, no matter what urgent reasons of life and death, Church or State, may be advanced. The RC ruling on the seal (Sacramentale sigillum) is to be found in CIC (1983), can. 983. In the C of E the relevant proviso in the 1604 *Canons (can. 113) was left unrepealed by the 1969 Canons, which superseded the earlier collection in almost every other respect.

B. Kurtscheid, OFM, Das Beichtsiegel in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1912; Eng. tr. as A History of the Seal of Confession, 1927). L. Honoré, SJ, Le Secret de la Confession (Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, 10; 1924). [J.] P. Winckworth, The Seal of the Confessional and the Law of Evidence (1952).

Sebaldus, St, patron saint of Nürnberg. His date (9th–11th cent.) is disputed, but he is prob. to be placed within the eremetical movement of the 11th cent., and seems to have lived in the woods near Nürnberg. His tomb is attested as a place of pilgrimage from 1072, when miracles were reported to have taken place at it and a church was built over it. From 1300 to 1377 the famous Sebalduskirche was built, and in 1425 the city obtained his formal canonization from Pope *Martin V. His relics rest in the celebrated shrine of Peter Vischer (1508–19), and his name was inserted in the *Roman Martyrology in 1927. Feast day, 19 Aug.

His Acta, of uncertain date, mainly recording miracles, pr., with introd., together with the proper of the Mass for his feast, in AASS, Aug. 3 (1737), pp. 762–77. A. Feulner, Peter Vischers Sebaldusgrab in Nürnberg (Munich, 1924). A. Borst, 'Die Sebaldslegenden in der mittelalterlichen Geschichte Nürnbergs', Jahrbuch für fränkische Landesforschung, 26 (1966 [1967]), pp. 19–178. A. Bauch, 'Der heilige Sebald', in G. Schwaiger (ed.), Bavaria Sancta, 3 (Regensburg, 1973), pp. 156–69. S. Sprusansky and others, Der heilige Sebald, seine Kirche und seine Stadt: Ausstellung des Landeskirchlichen Archivs im Stadtmuseum Nürnberg Fembohaus 24. August–28. Oktober 1979 (Nürnberg [1979]). K. Kunze in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (Rome, 1968), cols. 754–67, with extensive refs.

Se-Baptists (Lat. se baptizare, 'to baptize oneself'). In the 17th cent. a name occasionally given to the followers of John *Smyth (the 'Se-Baptist', q.v.), who after baptizing himself established a church at Amsterdam in 1609.

Sebaste, the Forty Martyrs of. Forty Christian soldiers of the '*Thundering Legion' who were martyred at Sebaste in Lesser Armenia during the Licinian persecution (*c.*320) by being left naked on the ice of a frozen pond, with baths of hot water on the banks as a temptation to apostatize. The place of one who gave way was taken by a heathen soldier of the guard, who was immediately converted. Their martyrdom is narrated by St *Basil of Caesarea and St *Gregory of Nyssa and in works attributed to St *Ephraem Syrus; and their ashes, which were recovered by the Empress *Pulcheria, were very greatly venerated in the E. Feast day in the E., 9 Mar.; in the W., formerly 10 Mar.

Besides the descriptions in Basil, Hom. 19 ('In sanctos quadraginta Martyres'; J. P. Migne, PG 31. 507–26), Greg. Nyss., 'In Laudem SS. Quadraginta Martyrum' (J. P. Migne, PG 46. 749–88), the 'Encomium in Sanctos Quadraginta Martyres' attributed to Ephraem (Opera omnia, 2 (Rome, 1743), pp. 341–56) and the hymns on the 40 martyrs attributed to him (Hymni et Sermones, ed. T. J. Lamy, 3 (Mechlin, 1889), cols. 937–58), there survive an ancient Gk. Passio (not contemporary; ed. O. von Gebhardt, Acta Martyrum Selecta, Berlin, 1902, pp. 171–81) and a Testamentum (διαθήκη; Gk. and Old Slavonic; ed. N. Bonwetsch, Das Testament der vierzig Märtyrer, 1897); the 'Testament' is repr., with Eng. tr., by H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 354–61. M. [E.] Mullett and A. [M.] Wilson (eds.), The Forty Martyrs of Sebasteia (Belfast Byzantine Texts and Translations, 2; 2 vols., 1997), incl., as vol. 2, Eng. tr. of the primary texts. P. F. de' Cavalieri, 'I quaranta martiri di Sebastia', in Note agiografiche, 7 (ST 49; 1928), pp. 155–84 (retracting his earlier views).

Sebastian, St, Roman martyr who is believed to have suffered death during the *Diocletianic Persecution. He is mentioned by the *Chronographer of 354 and in the *Hieronymian Martyrology, and his remains probably gave the name to the Basilica San Sebastiano on the *Appian Way. Acc. to later legend, he was sentenced by the Emp. Diocletian to be shot by archers (hence the representations of him in late medieval and renaissance art as a young man transfixed by arrows), but through the attentions of a widow, named Irene, he recovered from this ordeal and unexpectedly presented himself before the Emperor, who caused him to be clubbed to death. Feast day, 20 Jan.

Gk. text of Martyrium in J. P. Migne, PG 116. 793–816. AASS, Jan. 2 (1643), pp. 257–96. B. Pesci, OFM, 'Il culto di san Sebastiano a Roma nell'antichità e nel medioevo', Antonianum, 20 (1945), pp. 177–200. On the Basilica, A. Ferrua, SJ, S. Sebastiano fuori le mura e la sua catacomba (Le Chiese di Roma illustrate, 99; 1968), and R. Krautheimer and S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 4 (Rome, 1970), pp. 99–147, with extensive bibl. [in Eng.]. A. Amore in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 9 (1964), cols. 557 f.; G. D. Gordini and P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (Rome, 1968), cols. 776–801, both s.v.

Secker, Thomas (1693–1768), Abp. of *Canterbury. He qualifed in medicine at *Leiden, but, having been won over from Dissent to the C of E, he was passed with celerity through Exeter College, Oxford, and deacon's orders, and was ordained priest in 1723. Standing in high favour with Queen Caroline, he was made rector of St James's, *Westminster, in 1733, and Bp. of Bristol in addition in 1735. In 1737 he became Bp. of *Oxford, in 1750 Dean of *St Paul's, and from 1758 till his death was Abp. of Canterbury. Secker was among the better prelates of his age. Though he disliked the enthusiasm of the *Methodists, he admired their piety, and he favoured the dispatch of bishops to the American colonies. He stood for tolerance and good sense in general, and thoroughly eschewed the theology of B. *Hoadly. He published a large number of his sermons, which though of no outstanding merit reflect his sober and judicious outlook.

Best edn. of Secker's Works (6 vols., London, 1811), with Life by B. *Porteus (orig. pub. 1770), repr. in vol. 1, pp. i–lxiv. Articles of Enquiry Addressed to the Clergy of the Diocese of Oxford at the Primary Visitation of Dr. Thomas Secker, 1738, ed. H. A. Lloyd Jukes (Oxfordshire Record Society, 38; 1957). Correspondence, ed. A. P. Jenkins (ibid. 57; 1991). His autobiog., written in the last years of his life, was first ed. by J. S. Macauley and R. W. Greaves (Lawrence, Kan., 1988). N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (Ford Lectures, 1958; Cambridge, 1959), esp. pp. 216–23. J. R. Guy, 'Archbishop Secker as a Physician', in W. J. Sheils (ed.), The Church and Healing (Studies in Church History, 19; Oxford, 1982), pp. 127–35. J. H. Overton in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 170–3.

SECM. See ROYAL SCHOOL OF CHURCH MUSIC.

Second Adam. A title of Christ, the new Head of redeemed humanity, as contrasted with the 'first Adam', the original member and type of fallen man. The conception goes back to St *Paul (Rom. 5: 14, 1 Cor. 15: 45), whose expression, however, is not the 'second' but the 'last Adam' (ὁ ἔσχατος Ἀδάμ).

Second Coming. See PAROUSIA.

Secret (Lat. Oratio secreta). The name long given to a prayer to which the 1970 Roman Missal restores the earlier designation 'Oratio super oblata'. It is said or sung by the celebrant at Mass after the offering of the bread and wine. Until 1964 it was customarily said silently, a practice first recorded in France in the middle of the 8th cent.; it is prob. from this circumstance that the name derived. The prayer varies with the *Proper. It can be traced back to the *Gelasian Sacramentaries.

Secrétan, Charles (1815–95), Swiss Protestant philosopher and theologian. A native of Lausanne, he studied at Munich under F. W. J. *Schelling and Franz Baader (1765–1841), under whose joint influence he was led to a speculative and mystical view of religion. He held professorships at Lausanne (1839–45; there he lost his post in the latter year for political reasons), Neuchâtel (1850–66), and again at Lausanne (from 1866). With his older contemporary, A. R. *Vinet (1797–1847), he was one of the leaders of liberal Swiss Protestant thought in the 19th cent. As his outlook matured he increasingly emphasized, under I. *Kant's influence, the moral significance of faith and the importance of freedom. Among his works were Philosophie de la liberté (2 vols., 1849; later edns., much altered, 1866, 1879), La Raison et le christianisme (1863), La Civilisation et la croyance (1887), and Essais de philosophie et de littérature (1896; posthumous).

L. Secrétan, Charles Secrétan: Sa vie et ses œuvres (1911). F. Pillon, La Philosophie de Charles Secrétan (1898). U. Perone, La filosofia della libertà in Charles Secrétan (Memorie della Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, serie 4, no. 16; 1968). E. Plasshoff-Lejeune in PRE (3rd edn.), 18 (1896), pp. 114–18.

Secrets of Enoch, Book of the. One of the names sometimes given to 2 Enoch. See ENOCH, BOOKS OF.

sectary. The term was applied in the 17th and 18th cents. esp. to Protestant Nonconformists in England. Occasionally it is used in modern writers of those whose zeal for their own religious body is considered excessive.

secular arm. In *canon law, a term used to describe the state or any lay power when intervening in ecclesiastical cases. This intervention was generally of two kinds, (1) unsought, (2) sought, by the Church. (1) Resort was often made by individuals to the lay authorities to interfere with or hinder the process of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. It was frequently invoked as an appeal tamquam ab abusu, i.e. an appeal to the secular arm to see that justice was done, on the grounds that the ecclesiastical authorities had been guilty of a miscarriage of justice. Until recently, such action was punished in the RC Church by excommunication. (2) The Church did not feel justified in imposing in her own tribunals penalties which involved mutilation or death, but the Church courts had to deal with some cases, chiefly those of heresy, in which it was felt that sterner punishments were needed than they could impose. The assistance of the secular arm was therefore sought and, after trial by an ecclesiastical judge, the condemned prisoner was handed over to the secular authorities for punishment. In the Middle Ages this course of action, which was common, was a fruitful source of dispute between the two powers as to the proper method of procedure, and in particular as to whether there should be a second trial in a secular court.

For the action of the secular arm in the trial and punishment of clerks see *Benefit of Clergy.

R. Naz in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 980 f., s.v. 'Bras séculier (Appel au)'; R. Laprat, ibid., cols. 981–1060, s.v. 'Bras séculier (Livraison au)'. See also works cited under INQUISITION.

secular clergy. The term, which seems to have been first used in the 12th cent., is used of priests living in the world, to distinguish them from the 'regular clergy', i.e. members of religious orders, who live acc. to a rule. Secular priests are bound by no vows, may possess property, and owe canonical obedience to their bishops. Acc. to RC canon law those of the Latin Church are normally bound to *celibacy.

Secular Institute. See INSTITUTES OF CONSECRATED LIFE.

secularism. The term, which was first used *c.*1850 by G. J. Holyoake (1817–1906), denotes a system which seeks to interpret and order life on principles taken solely from this world, without recourse to belief in God and a future life. Holyoake's ideas were later developed into extreme atheism by being cast into a more logical form by C. *Bradlaugh. Apart from its negative attitude to Christianity and religion in general, secularism advocated on the positive side social progress and the amelioration of material conditions for the working classes. The term is now widely used in a more general sense for the modern tendency to ignore, if not to deny, the principles of supernatural religion in the interpretation of the world and existence.

sede vacante (Lat., 'the see being vacant'). The period during which a diocese is without its bishop. In the C of E during such vacancy the archbishop of the province is *guardian of the spiritualities of the diocese, which are administered under his commission. The temporalities are in the custody of the sovereign. During a vacancy in the Papal See, the administration of the RC Church is in the hands of the College of Cardinals headed by the 'Cardinale Camerlengo', the Chamberlain at the Vatican, and the Major Penitentiary.

sedia gestatoria. The portable throne on which until recently the Pope used to be carried by 12 footmen (palafrenieri), dressed in red uniforms, on certain prescribed solemn occasions.

sedilia (Lat., 'seats'). The seats, usually three in number, for the celebrant, deacon, and subdeacon, on the south side of the chancel. They were introduced in England about the middle of the 12th cent., and used during those parts of the service at which it was customary for the ministers to sit. In medieval England they were usually stone benches built into a niche in the wall, often richly carved and surmounted by arches or canopies. On the Continent and in modern England wooden seats (scamna) have been more common. Since 1964 sedilia have largely been replaced by a chair for the celebrant placed in the centre of the sanctuary.

F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), pp. 176–203.

Sedulius (5th cent.), Christian poet. Little is known of his life. In his early years he devoted himself to pagan literature. Later (perhaps after conversion to Christianity), he was ordained priest and lived in some kind of religious community. His great poem, the Paschale Carmen, after an introductory book drawing on the OT, in four books traces the life of Christ from His virginal conception to His Resurrection and Ascension, at all points emphasizing the miraculous. He also wrote a prose version, the Opus Paschale. Of his two surviving hymns, one provides two hymns in the Roman Divine *Office (known also in English versions, 'From east to west, from shore to shore' and 'Why, impious Herod shouldst thou fear', EH 18 and 38).

Crit. edn. of his works by J. Huemer (CSEL 10; 1885). Eng. tr. of the Paschale Carmen (into rhyming couplets) by G. Sigerson (Dublin and London, 1922). T. Mayr, OSB, Studien zu dem Paschale Carmen des christlichen Dichters Sedulius (Diss., Augsburg, 1916). F. Corsaro, Sedulio Poeta (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto Universitario di Magistero di Catania, Serie Letteraria, 2; 1956). C. P. E. Springer, The Gospel as Epic in Late Antiquity: The Paschale carmen of Sedulius (Supplements to VC, 2; 1988). CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 474 f. (nos. 1447–54). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 411 and 636. W. Lock in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 598–600, s.v. 'Sedulius (1)'.

Sedulius Scottus (9th cent.), poet, teacher, and biblical critic. Born and educated in Ireland, Sedulius typifies the wandering Irish scholar in Carolingian Europe. Arriving in France between 840 and 851, he was active in Liège and other N. cities as he followed the itinerant royal court. His occasional poems (many of high quality and metrically skilled) show the range of his royal and clerical patrons. The De Rectoribus Christianis (written between 855 and 859) may arise from a formal position as tutor to the future King Lothair II; certainly the extensive grammatical commentaries testify to his work as a teacher. His Collectaneum is further proof of wide reading in sacred and secular texts, both ancient and modern. He commented on Mt. and the Pauline Epistles, drawing for the latter on the genuine commentary of *Pelagius; and he may have provided the Latin gloss to a Greek Psalter now in Basle.

J. P. Migne, PL 103. 9–352, prints the De Rectoribus Christianis, the comm. on the Pauline Epistles and the prolegomena to the Synoptic Gospels (cf. F. Stegmüller, cited below, nos. 7597–605) and to St *Jerome's Prefaces. Crit. edns. of the poems by I. Meyers (CCCM 117; 1991); of De Rectoribus Christianis by S. Hellmann, Sedulius Scottus (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, 1, Heft 1; 1906), pp. 19–91; of comm. on Donatus Major and Minor, Priscian, Institutiones, 1. 1–3. 1 (fragmentary) and Eutyches, by B. Löfstedt, Grammatici Hibernici Carolini Aevi, 3 (CCCM 40B–C; 1977); of Collectaneum by D. Simpson (ibid. 67; 1988, with suppl. by F. Dolbeau, 1990); of a perhaps authentic letter on the Psalter by E. Duemmler in MGH, Epistolae, 6 (1925), pp. 201–5; of comm. on Eph. by H. J. Frede, Pelagius, Der irische Paulustext, Sedulius Scottus (Vetus Latina. Die Reste der Altlateinischen Bibel. Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, 3; 1961), pp. 107–55, and of comm. on Mt. by B. Löfstedt (ibid. 14 and 19; 1989–91). Facsimile of Graeco-Latin Psalter (Codex Basiliensis A. VII. 3), ed. L. Bieler (Umbrae Codicum Occidentalium, 5; Amsterdam, 1960). Six of his poems are pr., with Eng. tr., by P. [J.] Godman, Poetry of the Carolingian Renaissance (1985), pp. 282–301. J. Gross, 'Sedulius Scottus, ein verspäteter Semi-Pelagianer', ZKG 68 (1957), pp. 322–32. R. Düchtung, Sedulius Scottus: Seine Dichtungen (Munich, 1968). P. [J.] Godman, Poets and Emperors: Frankish Politics and Carolingian Poetry (Oxford, 1987), pp. 155–70. Raby (1953), pp. 193–6; F. J. E. Raby, A History of Secular Latin Poetry in the Middle Ages, 1 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1957), pp. 242–7. Manitius, 1, pp. 315–23; F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Biblicum Medii Aevi, 5 (Madrid, 1955), pp. 202–9 (nos. 7595–621); F. Brunhölzl, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters (Munich, 1975), pp. 449–66 and 568; W. Berschin, Griechisch-Lateinisches Mittelalter (Berne, 1980), pp. 172 f. J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, 1 (Records of Civilization, 1929), pp. 553–69; M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe, A Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400–1200 (Dublin, 1985), pp. 177–80 (nos. 672–86).

see. Properly, the official 'seat' (sedes) or 'throne' (cathedra) of a *bishop. This seat, which is the earliest of the bishop's insignia, normally stands in the *cathedral of the diocese; hence the town or place where the cathedral is located is also itself known as the bishop's see. See also HOLY SEE.

Seekers. A loose grouping of defectors from the C of E and esp. from the *Puritan congregations in early 17th-cent. England. They believed that no true Church had existed since the spirit of *Antichrist became uppermost in the Church, and that God would in His own time ordain new Apostles or Prophets to found a new Church. They did not think it right to hasten on this process, with the result that they were vehemently opposed by the *Anabaptists. In their quietistic outlook they had many affinities with the *Quakers. Bartholomew Legate (*c.*1575–1612), one of their preachers, was burnt at Smithfield for heresy. During the Commonwealth period the word was used very loosely to describe people dissatisfied with the existing religious sects. Many of these Seekers were absorbed into the Society of *Friends.

R. M. *Jones, Studies in Mystical Religion (1909), pp. 452–67; W. C. Braithwaite, The Beginnings of Quakerism (1912), esp. pp. 25–7, 58–65, and 78–97. J. F. McGregor, 'Seekers and Ranters', in id. and B. Reay (eds.), Radical Religion in the English Revolution (Oxford, 1984), pp. 121–39, esp. pp. 121–9. R. M. Jones in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 350 f., s.v., with refs. See also bibl. to FRIENDS, SOCIETY OF.

Seeley, John Robert (1834–95), historian. The son of R. B. Seeley, an author and publisher (1798–1886), J. R. Seeley was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and in 1863 appointed professor of Latin at University College, London. His book Ecce Homo* (1865; q.v.) at once made him famous. Later he supplemented this by an essay, Natural Religion (1882), which was designed to reconcile the claims of Christianity with those of natural science, though he denied that the supernatural was an integral part of the Christian faith. In 1869 he was appointed professor of modern history at Cambridge, where he exercised a stimulating influence as a teacher. His later writings were on purely historical subjects, among them his widely read Expansion of England (1883). He was knighted in 1894.

Memoir by G. W. Prothero prefixed to Seeley's The Growth of British Policy, 1 (1895), pp. vii–xxii. D. Wormell, Sir John Seeley and the Uses of History (Cambridge, 1980). G. W. Prothero in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 190–3, s.v.

Segneri, Paolo (1624–94), Italian *Jesuit preacher. Having entered the Society of Jesus in 1637, he was ordained priest in 1653. He is reckoned the greatest pulpit orator of Italy after St *Bernardino of Siena and *Savonarola. Though his sermons show occasional lapses in taste, he was very successful in uniting a vigorous and ordered exposition of his argument with a powerful emotional appeal. His most famous collection of sermons is his Quaresimale (i.e. those delivered in *Lent), first published at Florence in 1679. In the matter of moral theology he opposed both *Probabiliorist and *Quietist doctrines.

Early collected edns. of his works in 2 vols., Parma, 1700–1701; 4 vols., Venice, 1712; and 3 vols., Parma, 1714; several later edns. Lettere inedite, ed. G. Boero (Naples, 1848); further Lettere inedite di P. Segneri al granduca Cosimo Terzo [ed. S. Giamini] (Florence, 1857). P. T. Venturi, SJ (ed.), 'Lettere inedite di Paolo Segneri di Cosimo III e di Giuseppe Agnelli intorno la condanna dell'opera segneriana la "Concordia" ', Archivio storico italiano, 5th ser. 31 (1903), pp. 127–65. The brief Life by G. Massei, SJ (Venice, 1701), is also pr. in the edns. of his works; Eng. tr. ed. F. W. *Faber, Cong. Orat., London, 1851. G. Minozzi, Paolo Segneri (Il pensiero cristiano, 1; 2 vols., Amatrice, 1949). V. Socini, Il p. Paolo Segneri (1624–1694) nella storia farnese a Parma con lettere e documenti inediti (Parma, 1924). G. Marzot, Un classico della controriforma, Paolo Segneri (Saggi di letteratura ital. 10; Palermo, 1950). Sommervogel, 7 (1896), cols. 1050–89, and 9 (1900), col. 849; Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 191–3. C. Testore, SJ, in EC 11 (1953), cols. 239–41, s.v.; G. Mellinato, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 519–22, s.v.

Séguier, Pierre (1588–1672), Chancellor of France from 1635 (with some interruptions) until his death. A keen patron of literature, he possessed one of the finest private collections of (esp. Greek) MSS then in existence. Séguier's great-grandson, H. C. du Cambout de Coislin, Bp. of Metz from 1697 to 1732, into whose hands his library had passed, commissioned the *Maurist scholar, B. de *Montfaucon, to make a catalogue of it, which he issued in 1715 as Bibliotheca Coisliniana olim Segueriana. In 1735 the MSS came into the possession of the abbey of *St-Germain-des-Prés; they passed to the Bibliothèque Nationale during the winter of 1794–5.

Lettres et mémoires adressés au Chancelier Séguier (1633–1649), ed. R. Mousnier (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Paris, Série 'Textes et Documents', 6–7; 1964). Modern catalogue of the MSS by R. Devreesse, Bibliothèque Nationale: Département des Manuscrits. Catalogue des Manuscrits grecs, 2. Le Fonds Coislin (1945). Life by R. Kerviler (Paris, 1874).

Seises, Dance of the. The religious dance performed before the Blessed Sacrament in Seville Cathedral in the course of the celebrations of *Corpus Christi and the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM. It is executed by a group of boys, of whom there were formerly (as their name implies; seis = 'six') only six, but are now ten.

Selborne, First Earl of. See PALMER, ROUNDELL.

Selden, John (1584–1654), author of The History of Tithes. Educated at Hart Hall, Oxford, he was admitted to the bar at the Inner Temple in 1612. Although on several occasions he gave professional opinions to both Houses of Parliament (e.g., in his Privileges of the Baronage of England (1642)) as well as to private individuals, he never made the practice of law more than incidental to his life. He sat in several parliaments, being MP for Oxford University in the Long Parliament. A moderate *Puritan, he became in 1643 a member of the *Westminster Assembly of Divines during whose deliberations he sometimes confounded other members by referring them to the Hebrew and Greek texts of the Bible. His learning was prodigious. In his History of Tithes (1618) he upheld their legal, but denied their Divine, right, and in consequence the book was suppressed and its author forbidden to reply to any of his antagonists. Among his other historico-legal writings are Jani Anglorum Facies Altera (1610), The Duello (1610; a history of trial by combat), Mare Clausum (1635, but for the most part written much earlier; it argued, against H. *Grotius's Mare Liberum (1609), that the sea was capable of sovereignty), and Uxor Ebraica (1646; on Jewish marriage law). Selden was also one of the foremost oriental scholars of his day and the author of De Diis Syris (1617). The greater part of his valuable collection of books passed to the *Bodleian Library. His Table Talk (1689), the utterances of his last twenty years which show a buoyant anticlericalism, was compiled by his amanuensis, Richard Milward.

Opera Omnia, ed. D. *Wilkins (3 vols. bound in 6, London, 1726), with Life by id. in vol. 1, pt. 1, pp. i–lvi. Modern edn. of his Table Talk by F. Pollock (ibid, 1927), with account of his life by E. Fry (repr. from DNB 51 (1897), pp. 212–24, s.v.), pp. 153–85, and introd., pp. vii–xxiv. Eng. tr. of Uxor Ebraica, with comm., by J. R. Ziskind (Leiden, 1991). J. Aikin, The Lives of John Selden, Esq., and Archbishop Usher (1812), pp. 1–199. G. W. Johnson, Memoirs of John Selden and Notices of the Political Contest during his Time (1835). D. S. Berkowitz, John Selden's Formative Years (Washington, DC, and London [1988]). H. D. Hazeltine, 'Selden as Legal Historian: A Comment in Criticism and Appreciation', in Festschrift Heinrich Brunner zum siebzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht von Schülern and Verehrern (Weimar, 1910), pp. 579–630. A. W. Ward, 'Selden's Table Talk', in A. W. Ward and A. R. Waller (eds.), The Cambridge History of English Literature, 8 (1912), pp. 321–7. I. Herzog, 'John Selden and Jewish Law', Journal of Comparative Legislation, 3rd ser. 13 (1931), pp. 236–45. D. M. Barratt, 'The Library of John Selden and its later History', Bodleian Record, 3 (1951), pp. 128–42, 208–13, and 256–74. E. [G. M.] Fletcher, John Selden 1584–1654 (Selden Society Lecture, 1969). M. J. Mulder, 'Von Selden bis Schaeffer: Die Erforschung der kanaanäischen Götterwelt', Ugarit-Forschungen, 11 (1979), pp. 655–71, esp. pp. 655–8.

Seleucia, Synod of. See ARIMINUM AND SELEUCIA, SYNODS OF.

Sellon, Priscilla Lydia (1821–76), a restorer of the religious life in the C of E. She was the daughter of W. R. B. Sellon, Commander RN. When about to leave England for her health on New Year's Day, 1848, she was led to change her plans at the last moment by a public appeal of H. *Phillpotts, Bp. of Exeter, for work among the degraded and destitute of Plymouth, Devonport, and Stonehouse. Here she was gradually joined by others, who, with the help of E. B. *Pusey, created a community life (the 'Devonport Sisters of Mercy'), set up schools and orphanages and heroically tended the sick in the cholera epidemic of 1848. Their conventual mode of life soon provoked local opposition, but the support of Phillpotts (who, however, withdrew from the office of 'visitor' in 1852) enabled them to continue. In 1856 Miss Sellon united her community with the Sisters of the Holy Cross at Osnaburgh Street, Regent's Park, and assumed the title of Abbess of the combined sisterhood of the 'Society of the Most Holy Trinity' (present headquarters at Ascot Priory, Berks). In her last years Miss Sellon was severely paralysed. In 1867 she visited Honolulu, where she founded St Andrew's Priory.

T. J. Williams, Priscilla Lydia Sellon (1950; rev. edn., 1965); id. and A. W. Campbell, The Park Village Sisterhood (1965), passim. P. F. Anson, The Call of the Cloister (1955; 2nd edn., rev. by A. W. Campbell, 1958), pp. 259–79. S. Gill, 'The Power of Christian Ladyhood: Priscilla Lydia Sellon and the Creation of Anglican Sisterhoods', in S. Mews (ed.), Modern Religious Rebels: Presented to John Kent (1993), pp. 144–65.

Selwyn, George Augustus (1809–78), first Bp. of *New Zealand. Educated at Eton and St John's College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1833 and made missionary Bishop of New Zealand in 1841. He was a *Tractarian in his convictions, whose formal protest against a clause in the civil Letter Patent professing to 'give him power to ordain' signalled the beginnings of a less Erastian conception of the Colonial Episcopate. He had a very marked effect on the future of the New Zealand Church, for settling the constitution of which he was himself largely responsible. Returning to England in 1867, he was appointed in 1868 to the see of *Lichfield. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 11 April.

His son, John Richardson Selwyn (1844–98), was Bp. of Melanesia (1877–89) and master of Selwyn College, Cambridge (1890–98), which had been founded in memory of his father in 1881.

Lives by H. W. Tucker (2 vols., London, 1879), G. H. Curteis (ibid., 1889), L. Creighton (ibid., 1923) and J. H. Evans (ibid., 1964). W. E. Limbrick (ed.), Bishop Selwyn in New Zealand, 1841–68 (New Zealand Academic Monographs, General Series, 1; Palmerston North [1983]). R. Bayne in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 232 f.; R. H. Codrington in DECH, pp. 550 f.

On J. R. Selwyn, Life by F. D. How (London, 1899). R. Bayne in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 338 f.

Semiarianism. The name given to the teaching of the theologians who gathered round *Basil of Ancyra from *c.*356 onwards and upheld a doctrine of Christ's Sonship intermediate between that of orthodoxy and *Arianism. Other members of the group were *Macedonius of Constantinople, *George of Laodicea, *Eustathius of Sebaste, and Eleusius of Cyzicus. Over against ὁμοούσιος, they took as their watchword ὁμοιούσιος; but the whole tendency of the group was towards orthodoxy. They were sympathetically treated by St *Athanasius at the Alexandrine Council of 362, and by their theological influence on the '*Cappadocian Fathers' contributed largely to the reaffirmation of orthodoxy at the Council of *Constantinople in 381.

The chief work is J. Gummerus, Die homöusianische Partei bis zum Tode des Konstantius: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des arianischen Streites in den Jahren 356–61 (1900). Much useful material also in H. M. Gwatkin, Studies of Arianism (2nd edn., 1900). M. Simonetti, Studi sull'arianesimo (Verba Seniorum, NS 5 [1965]), pp. 160–86 ('Sulla dottrina dei Semiariani'). G. Rasneur, 'L'Homoiousianisme dans ses rapports avec l'orthodoxie', RHE 4 (1903), pp. 189–206, 411–31. F. J. Foakes Jackson in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 374–6, s.v.; É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1790–6, s.v. 'Semi-Ariens'. See also bibl. to ARIANISM.

Semi-Doubles. Feasts in the RC Calendar which ranked below *Doubles and above *Simple Feasts. By a decree of the Sacred Congregation of *Rites dated 23 Mar. 1955, the rank of Semi-Double was abolished, feasts which had ranked hitherto as such being reduced to Simples.

seminary. In ecclesiastical usage, a school or college devoted to the training of the clergy, esp. used of such institutions in the RC Church. The Council of *Trent ordered the establishment of a seminary in every diocese and this remained roughly the rule in the RC Church. The rules concerning seminaries were revised by the Second *Vatican Council's decree on priestly formation, 'Optatam totius' (28 Oct. 1965) whose principles underly the regulations on seminaries and the formation of clerics contained in CIC (1983), cans. 232–64. This provides for minor and major seminaries. The former are to assist a young man in his spiritual formation while he engages in the same course of arts and sciences as other young men. The purpose of the major seminaries is to form men spiritually, academically, and pastorally for the priesthood.

J. A. O'Donohoe, Tridentine Seminary Legislation: Its Sources and its Formation (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 9; 1957). P. L. Golden, CM, in J. A. Coriden, T. J. Green, and D. E. Heintschel (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 174–90. J. A. O'Donohoe in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 72–5, s.v.

Semipelagianism. The name given to doctrines on human nature upheld in the 5th cent. by a group of theologians who, while not denying the necessity of *grace for salvation, maintained that the first steps towards the Christian life were ordinarily taken by the human will and that grace supervened only later. Their position was roughly midway between the radically opposed doctrines of St *Augustine and *Pelagius.

These teachings were first given expression *c.*425 by representatives of the monastic movement in S. Gaul, the most prominent of whom was J. *Cassian. They were developed mainly in opposition to St Augustine's later writings, which taught an extreme form of *predestination, infallible perseverance, and a 'numerus clausus' of the elect. Augustine's opinions were championed in Gaul by St *Prosper of Aquitaine, whose writings constitute our chief source of information on the early stages of the controversy; they include a treatise 'Contra Collatorem' (directed against Cassian) and another entitled 'Responsiones ad Capitula Objectionum Vincentiarum' (replying to a work almost certainly by *Vincent of Lérins). Although the initial dispute seems to have died down by *c.*435, Semipelagianism continued to be the dominant teaching on grace in Gaul for several generations. The Gallic position was set out in detail in the 'De Gratia' of *Faustus of Riez, a work composed *c.*472 to combat predestinarianism. In the early 520s Faustus' views were denounced as heretical both at *Constantinople and at Rome by a group of Scythian monks led by John Maxentius, who also gained the support of St *Fulgentius of Ruspe. Shortly afterwards a series of capitula condemning key Semipelagian (as well as Pelagian) doctrines was promulgated by a Council convened at *Orange in 529 by St *Caesarius of Arles. From then onwards the Augustinian teaching on grace was generally accepted in orthodox W. theology.

The term 'Semipelagian' appears to have been coined by Dominican opponents of the Jesuit L. Molina during the controversy De Auxiliis, and quickly to have been applied to Cassian and those who followed him. It is used cautiously by modern scholars who have come to recognize that these theologians owed little or nothing to Pelagius.

For an extended treatment, see the classic study of H. *Noris, Historia Pelagiana (Padua, 1673), pp. 158–338. F. Wörter, Beiträge zur Dogmengeschichte des Semipelagianismus ('1898' [1897]); id., Zur Dogmengeschichte des Semipelagianismus (Kirchengeschichtliche Studien, 5, Heft 2; 1899). M. Jacquin, OP, 'A quelle date apparaît le terme "Semipélagien"?', RSPT 1 (1907), pp. 506–8. J. Chéné, 'Le semipélagianisme du Midi de la Gaule d'après les lettres de Prosper d'Aquitaine et de Hilaire à saint Augustin', Rech. S.R. 43 (1955), pp. 321–41; C. Tibiletti, 'Rassegni de studi e testi sui "semipelagiani" ', Augustinianum, 25 (1985), pp. 507–22, and other arts. by this author; R. A. Markus, 'The Legacy of Pelagius: Orthodoxy, Heresy and Conciliation', in R. [D.] Williams (ed.), The Making of Orthodoxy: Essays in Honour of Henry Chadwick (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 214–34. F. A. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 18 (1906), pp. 192–203, s.v. 'Semipelagianismus'; É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1796–1850, s.v. 'Semi-Pélagiens'. See also bibl. to ORANGE, COUNCILS OF, and to the Semipelagians mentioned in the text.

Semi-Quietism. A name sometimes applied to the doctrines of Abp. *Fénelon and other spiritual writers who, though not sufficiently unorthodox to come under the censures attaching to *Quietism and quite free from its anti-ecclesiastical and anti-moral elements, manifest certain quietist tendencies.

Semler, Johann Salomo (1725–91), *Lutheran theologian and biblical critic. Born at Saalfeld in Thuringia, he studied at Halle, where he later became Professor of Theology (1753–91). He soon rejected the *Pietism of his youth for a rationalistic position which he termed 'liberalis theologia'. One of the first German theologians to apply the critico-historical method to the study of the biblical *canon and text, he reached many novel, and often unorthodox, conclusions, at some points anticipating F. C. *Baur. He held, however, that Christian ministers should be required to make external profession of all traditional doctrine. In this matter, finding himself at variance with G. E. *Lessing in the controversy over the *Wolfenbüttel Fragments, he directed against Lessing his Beantwortung der Fragmente eines Ungekannten (1779). In his last years he interested himself in scientific, alchemistic, and theosophical studies. His principal treatises are Historiae Ecclesiasticae Selecta Capita (3 vols., Halle, 1767–9), Abhandlung von freier Untersuchung des Canon (4 parts, ibid., 1771–5), Commentarii Historici de Antiquo Christianorum Statu (2 vols., ibid., 1771–2), and Versuch eines fruchtbaren Auszugs der Kirchengeschichte (3 vols., ibid., 1773–8).

Autobiog., 2 vols., Halle, 1781–2, with list of his writings. Crit. edn. of pt. 1 of his Abhandlung von freier Untersuchungen des Canons by H. Scheible (Texte zur Kirchen- und Theologiegeschichte, 5; 1967). H. Hoffmann, Die Theologie Semlers (1905); P. Gastrow, Johann Salamo Semler in seiner Bedeutung für die Theologie (1905); L. Zscharnack, Lessing und Semler: Ein Beitrag zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Rationalismus und der kritischen Theologie (1905); G. Hornig, Die Anfänge der historisch-kritischen Theologie: Johann Salomo Semlers Schriftverständnis und seine Stellung zu Luther (Forschungen zur systematischen Theologie und Religionsphilosophie, 8; Göttingen, 1961). J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 39–53.

Sempringham. In S. Lincolnshire, the mother-house of the Order founded by St *Gilbert of Sempringham (d. 1189; q.v.). Gilbert was in early life the incumbent of the parish.

Seneca, Lucius Annaeus (*c.*4 BC–AD 65), Roman moralist and tragic poet. The son of a rhetorician of Córdoba, prob. of Italian descent, he embarked on a senatorial career at Rome, but was banished by the Emp. Claudius to Corsica (41–9) and then, through the influence of the Empress Agrippina, recalled to become tutor to her son, the future Emp. *Nero. After Nero's accession in 54, Seneca was the chief adviser of state, but he lost favour, retired from public life in 62, and in 65 he was charged with complicity in Piso's conspiracy and forced to take his own life. His brother *Gallio (q.v.) is mentioned in Acts 18: 12.

Seneca was the author of several surviving tragedies, prob. of the Apocolocyntosis (a skit on the *apotheosis of the late Emp. Claudius), of essays couched as letters to his friend Lucilius, and of various treatises (some now lost); both the treatises and the letters are mostly concerned with ethics, but some bear on physics, psychology, and logic. Seneca was a professed *Stoic, though he took some ideas from other schools, and his writings are one of the chief sources of our knowledge of Stoicism. Both ancient and modern critics have contrasted their moral austerity with his life as a very rich man and a courtier ready to preserve his influence by compromise. Apart from his letters, perhaps the most notable of his writings are the De Clementia, outlining his ideal of the good emperor, and the De Beneficiis, which examines in detail our duty to do good to others and to requite benefits received. The Stoic morality which he mediated has often since *Lactantius been compared and contrasted with that of Christianity.

There is also in existence an apocryphal correspondence of 14 letters between Seneca (8 letters) and St *Paul (6 letters). Their commonplace manner and colourless style show that they cannot be the work either of the moralist or of St Paul. They are prob. the same letters as those known to St *Jerome (De Vir. Ill. 12), who on the strength of them reckons Seneca a Christian, and to St *Augustine (Ep. 153. 14), though some critics have denied the identification and assigned the extant letters to a much later date. The oldest MSS date from the 9th cent., and the text is transmitted in a corrupt state.

There have been innumerable edns. of Seneca's works, beginning with the editio princeps of B. Romerus, Naples, 1475. Modern Lives by R. Waltz (Paris, 1909), C. Marchesi (Messina, 1920; 3rd edn., 1944), and P. Grimal (Paris, 1948). M. T. Griffin, Seneca: A Philosopher in Politics (Oxford, 1976). M. Baumgarten, Lucius Annaeus Seneca und das Christenthum (1895). E. Albertini, La Composition dans les ouvrages philosophiques de Sénèque (1923). W. Trillitzsch, Seneca im literatischen Urteil der Antike (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1971). M. Spanneut in NCE 13 (1967) pp. 80 f., s.v.; L. D. Reynolds, M. T. Griffin, and E. Fantham in OCD (3rd edn., 1996), pp. 96–8, s.v. 'Annaeus Seneca' (2).

Edns. of Seneca's correspondence with St Paul by F. Haase in Senecae Opera, Suppl. (Teub., 1902), pp. 74–9, and by C. W. Barlow (Rome, 1938), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Suppl. 1. 673–8. Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 547–53. Ger. tr., with introd. by C. Römer in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn.; 1989), pp. 44–50; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 46–53. A. Momigliano, 'Note sulla leggenda del cristianesimo di Seneca', Rivista Storica Italiana, 62 (1950), pp. 325–43, with extensive refs.; repr. in his Contributo alla storia degli studi classici (1955), pp. 13–32. On the relations between St Paul and the real Seneca see J. B. *Lightfoot, 'St Paul and Seneca', Philippians (1868), pp. 268–331; K. Deissner, Paulus und Seneca (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, Bd. 21 (2); 1917); and J. N. Sevenster, Paul and Seneca (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 4; 1961).

Sens, Councils of. Of the many provincial Councils held at Sens (e.g. in AD 601(?), 833, 845, 1140, 1225, 1461, 1485), the most renowned is that of 1140 under Abp. Henri le Sanglier, which condemned *Abelard for heresy. Abelard forthwith appealed to Pope Innocent II against its sentence.

On the council of 1140 (formerly dated 1141), Hardouin, 6 (pt. 2), cols. 1219–24; Mansi, 21 (Venice, 1776), cols. 559–70. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 747–90. E. Vacandard, 'Chronologie abélardienne; la date du concile de Sens: 1140', RQH 1 (1891), pp. 235–45. C. J. Mews provides useful background in his introd. to Abelard's 'Theologia "Scholarium"' in the edn. of Abelard's Opera Theologica, 3 (CCCM 13; 1987), pp. 277–92. See also other works cited under ABELARD, P., and BERNARD, ST.

Sentences (Lat. Sententiae), short reasoned expositions of the principal truths of Christian doctrine. The Lat. word 'sententia' orig. meant any exposition of thought. During the early Middle Ages it came to be used esp. of general impersonal maxims, and then later took on a new technical meaning in relation to exegesis. *Hugh of St-Victor distinguished three elements in the explanation of texts: (1) littera, which studied words and their connection with each other; (2) sensus, the obvious meaning; and (3) sententia, which provided understanding of the meaning underlying the text. Collections of Sentences then became systematized, reasoned compilations of opinions; the most famous of these collections was the 'Sententiarum libri quattuor' of *Peter Lombard, which was the subject of numerous commentaries. By the 13th cent. sententia had come to mean an accepted proposition or theological conclusion. See also FLORILEGIUM.

G. Paré, A. Brunet, and P. Tremblay, La Renaissance du XII^e siècle: Les écoles et l'enseignement (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales d'Ottawa, 3; 1933), pp. 240–74.

Separatists. As a title, first applied to the followers of R. *Browne and later to the *Independents (*Congregationalists) and others who separated from the C of E. See also CONGREGATIONALISM, BARROW, H., BROWNE, R., and PENRY, J.

B. R. White, The English Separatist Tradition from the Marian Martyrs to the Pilgrim Fathers (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971); S. Brachlow, The Communion of Saints: Radical Puritan and Separatist Ecclesiology 1570–1625 (ibid., 1988).

Septuagesima (Lat., 'the seventieth [day before Easter]'). The third Sunday before *Lent and hence the ninth before *Easter. The name, which first occurs in the *Gelasian Sacramentary, seems not very appropriate, as the Sunday indicated is in fact only 64, and not 70, days before Easter; but perhaps it was coined by reckoning back the series 'septuagesima', 'sexagesima', 'quinquagesima', from Quinquagesima Sunday, which is exactly 50 days from Easter. In the RC Church it was suppressed in 1969. Previously in the liturgical cycle it marked a stage towards the Lent fast; purple vestments were worn from that day onwards until *Holy Week and the word 'Alleluia' was not used again in the offices or at Mass until the end of Lent. The name passed into the BCP but has been dropped from some modern Anglican liturgies.

C. Callewaert, 'L'Œuvre liturgique de S. Grégoire. La septuagésime et l'alléluia', RHE 33 (1937), pp. 306–26; G. *Morin, OSB, 'La Part des papes du sixième siècle dans le développement de l'année liturgique', R. Bén. 52 (1940), pp. 1–14, pp. 1–8 being relevant; J. Froger, OSB, 'Les Anticipations du jeûne quadragésimal', Mélanges de Science religieuse, 3 (1946), pp. 207–34; A. Chavasse, 'Temps de préparation à la Pâques d'après quelques livres liturgiques romains', Rech. S.R. 37 (1950), pp. 125–45, esp. V, 'La "Septantaine" ou Septuagésime', pp. 143–5. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1262–6, s.v.

Septuagint ('LXX'). The most influential of the Greek versions of the Heb. OT. Jewish tradition attributes its origin to the initiative of Ptolemy Philadelphus (285–246 BC), who desired a translated copy of the Hebrew Law for his famous Library at Alexandria (see ARISTEAS, LETTER OF) and engaged 72 translators (hence the title 'Septuagint') for the work. Gradually the story was improved, and Ptolemy's name was connected not only with the Pentateuch, but with all the OT. Internal evidence indicates that the LXX was really the work of a number of translators (in some cases more than one scholar sharing the responsibility for a single Book), that not all of it was translated at Alexandria, and that the work of translation extended over a considerable period. A passage in the preface to the Greek version of Ecclus. suggests that at the time the author of the preface was writing (132 BC) the Greek OT as we now know it was virtually complete.

The LXX differs from the Hebrew Bible both in the order of the biblical Books and in the fact that it includes more Books. The threefold division into the 'Law', the 'Prophets', and the 'Writings' is abandoned, and several other Books, which are not found in the Hebrew, are included. These, known as the '*Apocrypha' in the English Bible, include Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Judith, Tobit, and Baruch. Also the text of the LXX differs considerably at many points from the corresponding Hebrew. The original LXX of Job is about one-sixth shorter than the Hebrew; there are several interesting passages in the LXX of 1 Kings that are not in the Hebrew; and there are considerable differences in order between the Hebrew and the LXX in Jeremiah.

The early Christian Church inherited the LXX, and the NT writers commonly quoted the OT Books from it. In Mt. 1: 23, where the *Immanuel prophecy of Is. 7: 14 is cited in approximately the LXX form, the Greek is particularly relevant since it here renders the Hebrew word 'almah ('a young woman of marriageable age') by παρθένος ('a virgin'). Commonly, however, the differences between the Hebrew and LXX are only verbal. It must also be noted that in a number of NT passages the Hebrew is followed against the LXX.

In post-NT times, the Christian Fathers down to the later 4th cent. almost all regarded the LXX as the standard form of the OT and seldom referred to the Hebrew. *Origen, however, was greatly interested in the relation of the LXX to the Hebrew and the other Greek versions. The LXX was also the basis of the '*Old Latin Version(s)' of the OT. It was St *Jerome's *Vulgate that first provided Christians with a Latin version of the OT direct from the original, and did most to dispel the belief, common in the early Church, that the LXX was verbally inspired. It is still the canonical text of the OT in the E. Orthodox Church.

The LXX exists in a large number of MSS, uncial and minuscule, as well as in a number of important, though not very extensive, papyrus fragments (esp. the *Chester Beatty Papyri). The MSS include the *Codex Sinaiticus, where, however, only about a third of the OT survives; the *Codex Vaticanus (with Gen. 1: 1–46: 28, and a few other portions, wanting); *Codex Alexandrinus (1 Sam. 12: 18–14: 9, Pss. 49 (50): 19–79 (80): 10, and a few short passages in Gen. 14–16, wanting); and the *Codex Ephraemi, of which only 64 leaves from the poetical Books remain.

The complete LXX was printed for the first time in Cardinal *Ximénez's Complutensian Polyglot (1514–17), the Latin Vulgate being placed between the Hebrew on the left and the LXX on the right ('tanquam duos hinc et inde latrones, medium autem Jesum'*). Later editions are those of Aldus Manutius (1518); 'Auctoritate Sixti V Pont. Max.' (Rome, 1587); J. E. *Grabe (Oxford, 1707–20); R. Holmes and J. Parsons (ibid., 1798–1827); H. B. *Swete (Cambridge, 1887–94); A. E. Brooke, N. McLean, and H. St J. Thackeray (ibid., 1906–40 [Gen.–Tobit only]); the Göttingen Academy (Stuttgart, 1926 ff.); A. Rahlfs (Stuttgart, 1935).

E. *Hatch and H. A. Redpath, A Concordance to the Septuagint (2 vols., 1897; suppl., 1906; repr. Graz, 1954). J. Lust and others, A Greek–English Lexicon of the Septuagint (Stuttgart, 1992 ff.). H. St J. Thackeray, A Grammar of the Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint (vol. 1, all pub., 1909). H. B. Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900, rev. by R. R. Ottley, 1914). A. Rahlfs, Septuaginta-Studien (3 vols., 1904–11; reissued, Göttingen, 1965). J. Ziegler, Die Septuaginta: Erbe und Auftrag (lecture, Würzburg, 1962), repr. in his Sylloge: Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Septuaginta (Göttingen, 1971), pp. 590–614, with other specialized articles. D. Barthélemy, OP, Les Devanciers d'Aquila (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 10; Leiden, 1963). S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968). P. Walters, The Text of the Septuagint, ed. D. W. Gooding (Cambridge, 1973). Id. (ed.), Studies in the Septuagint: Origins, Recensions, and Interpretations (New York [1974]). N. Fernández

Marcos, Introducción a las versiones Griegas de la Biblia (Textos y estudios 'Cardinal Cisneros', 23; 1979). E. Tov, The Text-Critical Use of the Septuagint in Biblical Research (Jerusalem Bible Studies, 3; Jerusalem, 1981). G. Dorival, M. Harl, and O. Munnich, La Bible grecque des Septante: Du judaïsme hellénisitique au christianisme ancien (1988). M. Alexandre, Le Commencement du Livre Genèse I–V: La version grecque de la Septante et sa réception (Christianisme Antique, 3 [1988]). E. Tov, 'The Septuagint' in M. J. Mulder (ed.), Mikra (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, 2. 1; Assen/Maastricht and Philadelphia, 1988), pp. 161–88. M. Hengel and A. M. Schwemer (eds.), Die Septuaginta zwischen Judentum und Christentum (1994). Mitteilungen des Septuaginta-Unternehmens der Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen (Berlin, 1910–32; Göttingen, 1958 ff.). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, Eng. tr. rev. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 474–93. S. P. Brock and others, A Classified Bibliography of the Septuagint (Arbeiten zur Literatur und Geschichte des Hellenistischen Judentums, 6; Leiden, 1973). E. *Nestle in HDB 4 (1902), pp. 437–54, s.v.; S. P. Brock in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 163–8, with bibl., pp. 170 f., s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen', I. 2: 'Die Übersetzungen des Alten Testaments ins Griechische'; M. K. H. Peters in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 1093–104, s.v.; B. Botte and P.-M. Bogaert, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 12 ('1993'), cols. 536–691, s.v. 'Septante et versions grecques'.

Sepulchre, Holy. See HOLY SEPULCHRE.

Sequence (Lat. sequentia). In the liturgy, a chant sung on certain days until 1970 after (now before) the *Alleluia of the Mass. Originally the word seems to have denoted a purely melodic extension of the word 'Alleluia', sung to its final vowel; during the 9th cent. a custom arose of providing a syllabic text (usually called a prosa) for the melody. In due course the term sequentia came to be applied to the resulting musical–textual entity, and hence eventually to the text alone, and in this sense its English equivalent has gained widespread currency.

In the application of a syllabic text to an existing melody (a practice that was also adopted in other types of chant), the word 'Alleluia' might be retained or discarded. The first author to make a systematic collection of such texts was *Notker Balbulus (d. 912); its title, Liber Hymnorum, suggests that the term sequentia was not yet applicable to syllabically texted chants, and also, perhaps, that they were not intended at that stage for liturgical performance. The authenticity of his famous preface, in which he claims to have derived his method of fitting texts to 'melodiae longissimae' from a priest from Jumièges, cannot reasonably be doubted. Later authors of sequences include *Hildegard of Bingen and *Adam of St-Victor; by their day texts had become increasingly rhymed and scanned, and were set to melodies either specially composed or previously devised for poems of similar metrical form. In medieval times a large number of sequences were in popular use, but only five remain. These are the well-known '*Victimae paschali' (at *Easter), the '*Veni, Sancte Spiritus' (at *Whitsun), the 'Lauda Sion' (at *Corpus Christi), the '*Dies Irae' (at *All Souls'), and the '*Stabat Mater' (on the feast of the *Seven Sorrows of the BVM). Acc. to the rubrics of the 1970 Missale Romanum only the first two of these need to be used, and the sequence comes before, instead of after, the Alleluia. See also TROPE.

The principal Sequences ed. C. Blume, SJ, and H. Bannister in AHMA 53–5 (1911–22); further Sequentiae Ineditae are pub. ibid. 8, 9, 10, 34, 37, 39, 40, 42, and 44 (1890–1904). Notker's Liber Hymnorum ed. W. von den Steinen, Notker der Dichter und seine geistige Welt (2 vols., Berne, 1948); Hildegard of Bingen, Sequences and Hymns, ed. C. Page (Newton Abbot, 1983), incl. all pieces labelled sequentia in the two MS sources of her songs. For edns. of the sequences of Adam of St-Victor, see s.v. R. L. Crocker, The Early Medieval Sequence (Berkeley, Calif., etc., 1977). Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 557–64; Eng. tr., pp. 436–41. Raby (1953), pp. 210–19, with bibl. p. 479. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung (2 vols., 1964–5), esp. 1, pp. 282–359, 409–16; 2, pp. 99–121. R. L. Crocker and J. Caldwell in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 17 (1980), pp. 141–56, s.v., with detailed bibl.

Seraphic Order, the. Another name for the *Franciscan Order (q.v.). The name commemorates St Francis's vision on Mount Alverna in which he saw a seraph from heaven impressing the stigmata on his body.

Seraphim. The supernatural creatures, each with six wings, which *Isaiah in his inaugural vision saw standing above the throne of Yahweh (Is. 6: 2–7). Unless they are to be identified with the 'fiery serpents' mentioned in Num. 21: 6 ff., Deut. 8: 15, Is. 14: 29, and Is. 30: 6, they are not mentioned elsewhere in the OT.

From an early date Christian interpreters held the 'Seraphim' to be a category of *angels, and considered them counterparts of the '*Cherubim'; hence their occurrence together in the Preface of the Roman Mass and also in the Te Deum. The further view, which was widely accepted among Christian exegetes, that the Heb. word 'seraphim' was connected with a root meaning 'to burn' led to the notion that they were esp. distinguished by the fervour of their love. As such they came to be ranked highest in the nine orders of angels (the Cherubim filling the next place).

OED (2nd edn., 1989), 15, pp. 2 f., s.v. See also comm. to Isaiah, cited s.v.

Seraphim of Sarov, St (1759–1833), Russian monk and *staretz. He was born at Kursk, into a family of provincial merchants. At 19 he entered the monastery of Sarov, and spent 15 years in the ordinary life of the community, being ordained deacon and then priest. From 1794 to 1825 he lived in seclusion, first as a hermit in the forest close to the monastery, and then enclosed in a small cell within the monastic building itself. In 1825 he opened the door of his cell, and during the remaining eight years of his life he devoted his entire energies to the work of spiritual direction, receiving a constant stream of visitors from all parts of Russia. Astonishingly severe in his personal ascetic practices, towards others he was always gentle, stressing the importance of joy and cheerfulness in the spiritual life, and the need for the transforming presence of the Holy Spirit. His teaching is best summed up in a conversation recorded by his friend Nicolas Motovilov. He was canonized in 1903. Feast day, 2 Jan.

Eng. tr. of extracts from his Life, and also the conversation with Motovilov, in G. P. Fedotov (ed.), A Treasury of Russian Spirituality (1950), pp. 246–79. V. Zander, St Seraphim of Sarov (Eng. tr. from unpub. Fr., 1975). I. de Beausobre, Flame in the Snow (1945; a popular account).

Serapion, St (d. 211), Bp. of *Antioch from 199. Though one of the chief theologians of his age, little is known of him. His writings, of which only a few fragments survive, include a letter to Caricus and Pontius against *Montanism, a work addressed to one Domninus who had lapsed during persecution, and a letter withdrawing his earlier permission to the Church of Rhossus to read the 'Gospel of St *Peter', on the ground that he had now discovered it to be *Docetic. Feast day, 30 Oct.

The principal ancient authorities are *Eusebius, HE 5. 19 and 6. 12, and *Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 31. The frags. are collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 1 (2nd edn; Oxford, 1846), pp. 447–62.

Serapion, St (d. after 360), Bp. of Thmuis in the Nile delta from *c.*339. He was the close friend and protégé of St *Athanasius, probably his junior in age; and before he became bishop had been a monk and a companion of St *Antony, who left in his will one of his two sheepskin cloaks to Serapion and the other to Athanasius. Athanasius selected him for a difficult mission to the Emp. Constantius, and addressed to him a series of important doctrinal letters on the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. Serapion composed some literary works, notably a treatise against the *Manichees; and an early 'Sacramentary' which has come down under his name was probably his compilation. He also corresponded with the heresiarch *Apollinarius, then still orthodox. Feast day, 21 Mar.

Crit. edn. of 'Serapion of Thmuis against the Manichees' by R. P. Casey (Harvard Theological Studies, no. 15; Cambridge, Mass., 1931); older uncrit. text, with other items of Serapion, in J. P. Migne, PG 40. 895–942 (from A. *Gallandi). 'Sacramentary' (or 'Euchologion'), which survives in the single 11th-cent. MS Athos Laura 149, ed. G. Wobbermin, Altchristliche liturgische Stücke aus der Kirche Ägyptens nebst einem dogmatischen Brief des Bischofs Serapion von Thmuis (TU 17. 3b; 1898); also ed. F. E. *Brightman, JTS 1 (1899–1900), pp. 88–113, 247–77. Eng. tr. (based on Wobbermin's edn.) by J. *Wordsworth (Bishop Sarapion's Prayer-Book; Early Church Classics, 1899). R. Draguet, 'Une Lettre de Sérapion de Thmuis aux disciples d'Antoine (A.D. 356) en version syriaque et arménienne', Muséon, 64 (1951), pp. 1–25, incl. text and Lat. tr. Eng. edn. of Athanasius' Epp. to Serapion, with introd. and notes, by C. R. B. Shapland (1951). A. Peters, OFM, 'Het Tractaat van Serapion van Thmuis tegen de Manichaeën', Sacris Erudiri, 2 (1949), pp. 55–94. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'L'Anaphore de Sérapion. Essai d'exégèse', Muséon, 59 (1946), pp. 425–43, repr. in his Travaux Liturgiques, 2 (1962), pp. 344–58; B. Botte, OSB, 'L'Eucologe de Sérapion est-il authentique?', OC 48 (1964), pp. 50–6. G. J. Cuming, 'Thmuis Revisited: Another Look at the Prayers of Bishop Serapion', Theological Studies, 41 (1980), pp. 568–75. K. Fitschen, Serapion von Thmuis: Echte und unechte Schriften sowie die Zeugnisse des Athanasius und anderer (Patristische Texte und Studien, 37; 1992). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 97–100 (nos. 2485–504). Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 98–102. G. Bardy in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1908–12; H. Dörrie in PW, Suppl. 8 (1956), cols. 1260–7, both s.v.

Serbia, Church of. Systematic missionary work in Serbia was first undertaken by the Byzantines during the second half of the 9th cent., in particular by followers of Sts *Cyril and Methodius from Moravia. With the baptism of Prince Mutimir (reigned *c.*860–91) Christianity became the official religion of the country. For some time the Serbs wavered between Constantinople and Rome, and it was not until the start of the 13th cent. that their attachment to E. Christendom became definite. In the closing years of the 12th cent. the Serbian monastery of Hilandar was founded on Mt *Athos by St *Sava and his father; it became an important centre of Serbian spirituality and culture. In 1219 Sava established an *autocephalous Serbian Church, of which he was consecrated the first archbishop by the *Oecumenical Patriarch in Nicaea (Constantinople being at this time in the hands of the Latins). The Serbian medieval empire, and with it the Church, attained its period of greatest brilliance under Stephen Dushan (1331–55). In 1346 the head of the Serbian Church assumed the title '*Patriarch', with his seat at Peć: the Serbian Patriarchate was recognized by Constantinople in 1375. Along with the *Bulgarians and the *Romanians, during the Ottoman period the Serbs passed increasingly under Greek ecclesiastical control, and the Patriarchate of Peć was eventually suppressed in 1766. The Church of Serbia became autocephalous once more in 1879, with the approval of Constantinople. In 1920 the Serbian Patriarchate was restored, its seat being transferred from Peć to Belgrade. The Church of Serbia has always been closely identified with the national aspirations of the people, and in the break up of the old Yugoslavia in the early 1990s it was unable to do more than deplore the violence with which the government pursued its aim of a 'Greater Serbia'.

R. M. French, Serbian Church Life (1942); L. Hadrovics, Le Peuple serbe et son Église sous la domination turque (1947). S. Alexander, Church and State in Yugoslavia since 1945 (1979). J. Kondrinewitsch in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 9 (1964), cols. 684–6, with bibl.; V. J. Pospishil in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 107–11, s.v. 'Serbian Rite'.

Serdica. See SARDICA.

Sergeant, John (1622–1707), RC controversialist. He was educated at St John's College, Cambridge, and afterwards became secretary to T. *Morton, Bp. of *Durham. Later he became a RC. After study at the English College, Lisbon, he was ordained to the priesthood, and in 1652 was attached to the English Mission. The remainder of his life was spent in controversy, for which he had marked gifts. Indeed there was hardly any Protestant writer of standing whose views Sergeant did not attack. The titles of some 34 pamphlets by Sergeant are listed under his name in the DNB.

His 'Literary Life' written by himself is pub. in Catholicon, 2 (1816), pp. 132–6, 169–76, 217–24; 3 (1816), pp. 9–16, 55–64, 97–104, and 121–7, with introd. in 2, pp. 129–31. J. Warner, The History of English Persecution of Catholics and the Presbyterian Plot, ed. T. A. Birrell, with tr. by J. Bligh, SJ (Catholic Record Society, 47–8; 1953), 1, pp. 230–2 (nos. 208–13), pp. 277 f. (nos. 328–30), 2, pp. 456 f. (nos. 606–8), and pp. 527–32. T. Cooper in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 251–3, s.v.

Sergius (d. 638), Patr. of *Constantinople from 610 and the most influential exponent of *Monothelitism. He was of Syrian origin. After elevation to the Patriarchal See he became the trusted adviser of the Emp. *Heraclius, who confided the capital to his care during his absence in his wars with the Persians. To reconcile the disaffected Monophysites Sergius, in his search for a Christological formula acceptable both to them and to the adherents of the Dyophysite *Chalcedonian orthodoxy, began to teach Two Natures but only one 'activity' (ἐνέργεια) in Christ. On being opposed by St *Sophronius of Jerusalem, he issued the 'Psephos' (633) which forbade mention of either one or two 'activities' in Christ. Sergius also appealed to Pope *Honorius I, and together they agreed that there was only one will (ἕν θέλημα) in Christ. This doctrine was promulgated by the Emperor in the famous '*Ecthesis' (q.v.), of which Sergius was the author. Two synods held at Constantinople in 638 and 639 approved this teaching, which was, however, condemned by the Council of *Constantinople in 681. Sergius is believed to have introduced several liturgical innovations, and an old tradition ascribes to him the authorship of the famous hymn known as the '*Acathistus'.

V. Grumel, AA, Les Régestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 211–22 (nos. 278c–293b), with refs. J. L. van Dieten, Geschichte der Patriarchen von Sergios I. bis Johannes VI. (610 715) (Enzyklopädie der Byzantinistik, 24; Amsterdam, 1972), pp. 1–56. L. Magi, La Sede Romana nella corrispondenza degli imperatori e patriarchi bizantini (VI VII sec.) (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 57; 1972), pp. 196–205. F.-X. Murphy, CSSR, and P. Sherwood, OSB, Constantinople II et Constantinople III (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 3; 1974), pp. 133–62 and 305–8. CPG 3 (1974), pp. 418 f. (nos. 7604–8). Krumbacher, pp. 671–3. See also bibl. to MONOTHELITISM, esp. arts. by V. Grumel.

Sergius, St (d. 701), Pope from 687. A native of *Antioch, he was educated at Palermo. On the death of his predecessor, Pope Conon (686–7), Sergius was elected in the face of two rival candidates with the support of the mass of the clergy and people. He took an active part in several English matters. He baptized Caedwalla, King of the West Saxons (689), consecrated St *Willibrord, Bp. of the Frisians (Nov. 695), and ordered St *Wilfrid to be restored to his see (*c.*700). He strongly resisted the attempt of the Emp. Justinian II (685–95) to secure his support for the *Trullan Council (692), which would have placed Constantinople on an ecclesiastical level with Rome, and was saved by the Roman populace from being forcibly conveyed to the E. capital. He made various liturgical innovations, notably the singing of *Agnus Dei in the Mass and the introduction of a litany and processions on the four chief feasts of the BVM. He also did much for the restoration of the Roman basilicas. Feast day, 8 Sept.

Jaffé, 1, pp. 244 f. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 371–82. F. Görres, 'Justinian II und das römische Papsttum', BZ 17 (1908), pp. 432–54, esp. pp. 440–54. J. Gay, 'Quelques Remarques sur les papes grecs et syriens avant la querelle des iconoclastes (678–715)', Mélanges offerts à M. Gustave Schlumberger, 1 (1924), pp. 40–54. O. Bertolini, Roma di fronte a Bisanzio e ai Longobardi (Bologna, 1941), esp. pp. 399–408. P. Conte, Chiesa e Primato nella lettere dei Papi del secolo VII (Milan, 1971), pp. 494–504; see also index. Mann, 1 (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 77–104. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, 2 (1933), pp. 624–36; Fliche and Martin, 5 (1938), pp. 407–9. É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1913–16, s.v. 'Serge Ier'. See also bibl. to TRULLAN SYNOD.

Sergius, St (*c.*1314–92), Russian monastic reformer and mystic. His original name was Bartholomew. He was born at Rostov, and when a boy, fled with his family to Radonezh, nr. Moscow. He founded in the neighbourhood, with his brother Stephen, the famous monastery of the Holy Trinity, and thereby re-established the community life which had been lost in Russia through the Tartar invasion. When his brother opposed his reforms, Sergius, though abbot, retired into seclusion, but was later restored. He had great influence over all classes, stopped four civil wars between Russian princes, and inspired the resistance of Prince Dmitri which saved Russia from the Tartars (1380). In 1378 he refused the metropolitan see. Altogether, Sergius founded 40 monasteries. He was canonized before 1449, and is regarded as the greatest of Russian saints. Feast day, 25 Sept.

The primary authority is the Life written by Epiphanius the Wise, one of his monks, shortened and rev. in the 15th cent. by a Serbian monk, Pachomius. Abridged Eng. tr. in G. P. Fedotov (ed.), A Treasury of Russian Spirituality (1950), pp. 54–83, with introd. pp. 50–3, and notes pp. 487–9. Complete Eng. tr. by M. Klimenko (Houston, Tex. [1980]). N. Zernov, St Sergius: Builder of Russia (New York, 1939), also with Eng. tr. of Life, by A. Delafeld, as pt. 3 (pts. 1 and 2 also pub., London [1939]). P. Kovalevsky, Saint Serge et la spiritualité russe ([1958]; Eng. tr., Crestwood, NY, 1976). G. P. Fedotov, The Russian Religious Mind, 2 (Cambridge, Mass., 1966), pp. 195–229. J. Meyendorff, Byzantium and the Rise of Russia (Cambridge, 1981), esp. pp. 132–6.

Sergius Paulus. The proconsul of *Cyprus who, acc. to Acts 13: 4–12, having invited St *Paul and St *Barnabas to preach before him on their first missionary journey and seen the miracle done by Paul on the sorcerer Bar-Jesus, 'believed' (ἐπίστευσεν). He is perhaps the Paulus mentioned as proconsul in a Cypriot inscription of this time.

J. Devreker, 'Les Sergii Paulli: problèmes généalogiques d'une famille supposée chrétienne', in M. Van Uytfanghe and R. Demeulenaere (eds.), Aevum inter Utrumque: Mélanges offerts à Gabriel Sanders (Instrumenta Patristica, 23; 1991), pp. 109–19, with refs. J. E. Roberts in DAC 2 (1918), p. 471, s.v. 'Sergius Paulus'.

Seripando, Girolamo (1492/3–1563), *Augustinian friar. Born in Naples, he took the Augustinian habit in 1507 and was ordained in 1513. He gained a reputation as a teacher and a preacher and rose to high office; he was General of the Order from 1539 to 1551. Internal troubles, partly connected with the defection of M. *Luther, led him to organize a visitation of the whole Order, which resulted in administrative and educational reforms. He himself undertook the visitation in Italy, *France, *Spain, and *Portugal. From the start he played a significant part in the debates of the Council of *Trent; he was made a legate to the Council in 1561. Anxious to avoid a complete break with the Lutherans, he took a moderate position on *justification, adopting the theory of '*double justice', but he failed to win sufficient support. He became Abp. of Salerno in 1554 and was made a Cardinal in 1561.

Crit. edn. of his treatise De Justitia et Libertate Christiana by A. Forster, OSB (Corpus Catholicorum, 30; 1969). 'Diarium de vita sua' (1513–62), ed. D. Gutiérrez, OSA, in Analecta Augustiniana, 26 (1963), pp. 5–193; Registrum Generalatus, ed. id. (Fontes Historiae Ordinis Sancti Augustini, Prima Series, 25–30; Rome, 1982–90). H. Jedin, Girolamo Seripando: Sein Leben und Denken im Geisteskampf des 16. Jahrhunderts (Cassiciacum, 2–3; Würzburg, 1937; Eng. tr., with abbreviated documentation, Papal Legate at the Council of Trent: Cardinal Seripando, St Louis and London, 1947). A. Forster, OSB, Gesetz und Evangelium bei Girolamo Seripando (Konfessionskundliche und kontroverstheologische Studien, 6 [1963]). J. Mercier in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1923– sermo generalis. The ceremony at which the final decision in trials of heretics by the *Inquisition was pronounced, usually with great solemnity. After a short sermon, from which the ceremony took its name, sentences were pronounced: those found innocent were acquitted; those who recanted were sentenced to the penances prescribed by canon law, incl. imprisonment by the Inquisition; and unrepentant heretics were handed over to the secular authorities for punishment. This invariably took the form of *burning at the stake. The term sermo generalis has come to be replaced in more recent usage by auto de fe*.

40, s.v., with extensive bibl.; D. Gutiérrez, OSA, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 655–61, s.v.

Sermon on the Mount. The compilation of the Lord's sayings in Mt. 5–7 provides an epitome of His moral teaching; it shows Christ as the true interpreter of the *Mosaic Law (5: 17–48) and has always been a central element in Christian ethics. It includes the *Beatitudes (5: 3–12) and the *Lord's Prayer (6: 9–13). The admonition not to resist the evil one but rather to 'turn the other cheek' (5: 39) has been one of the main sources of Christian *pacificism. There is a somewhat parallel, though shorter, discourse of similar content, sometimes known as the 'Sermon on the Plain', in Lk. 6: 20–49 [cf. 6: 17].

The only patristic treatment of the subject as a separate work is St *Augustine, 'De Sermone Domini in Monte' (PL 34. 1229–1308); Eng. tr. by J. J. Jepson, with introd. and notes (ACW 5; 1948). H. *Windisch, Der Sinn der Bergpredigt (1929; 2nd edn., 1937); M. *Dibelius, The Sermon on the Mount (New York, 1940); T. Soiron, OFM, Die Bergpredigt Jesu: Formgeschichtliche, exegetische und theologische Erklärung (Freiburg i.B., 1941); J. Jeremias, The Sermon on the Mount (Ethel M. Wood Lecture; 1961); W. D. Davies, The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount (1964); id., The Sermon on the Mount (1966); G. Strecker, Die Bergpredigt: Ein evangelischer Kommentar (Göttingen, 1984; 2nd edn., 1985; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1988); H. D. Betz, Essays on the Sermon on the Mount, tr. by L. L. Welborn (Philadelphia [1985]); R. A. Guelich, The Sermon on the Mount: A Foundation for Understanding (Waco, Tex. [1982]). C. W. Votaw in HDB, Extra vol. (1904), pp. 1–45; H. D. Betz in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 1106–12. See also comm. to LUKE and MATTHEW, GOSPELS OF.

serpent, brazen. See BRAZEN SERPENT.

Servant Songs. The four passages in *Deutero-Isaiah (Is. 42: 1–4; 49: 1–6; 50: 4–9; and 52: 13–53: 12) describing the person and character of the 'Servant of the Lord'. They were first isolated from their contexts and seen as an entity by B. *Duhm. In his commentary on Isaiah, Duhm challenged the prevalent view that Yahweh's servant in these and other passages in Is. referred to the nation of Israel, or some element in it; he held that the Servant in these four passages was an otherwise unknown individual and that the author of the poems was one of his disciples. There have since then been many attempts to identify the Servant with some historical individual, e.g. Zerubbabel, Jehoiachin, Cyrus, or even *Moses, while in 1921 S. *Mowinckel contended (though he abandoned the theory later) that it was the Prophet himself. Among British OT scholars prevalent opinion still identifies the Servant with Israel in some form. Christian theology has traditionally interpreted the Servant in Isaiah as a prophecy of the Incarnate Christ.

There is a vast lit. Among the more important items are B. Duhm, Die Theologie der Propheten als Grundlage für die innere Entwicklungsgeschichte der Israelitischen Religion dargestellt (Bonn, 1875), pp. 287–301; id., Das Buch Jesaia (KAT 3. 1; 1892), esp. pp. 284–7, 339–43, 351–3, and 365–78; S. R. *Driver and A. Neubauer, The Fifty-Third Chapter of Isaiah according to the Jewish Interpretation (2 vols., 1876–7); S. Mowinckel, Der Knecht Jahwäs (Giessen, 1921); C. R. North, The Suffering Servant in Deutero-Isaiah (1948; 2nd edn., 1956); [C.] J. Lindblom, The Servant Songs in Deutero-Isaiah: A New Attempt to Solve an Old Problem (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, NF, Avd. 1, Bd. 47, Nr. 5; 1951); H. H. Rowley, The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays (1952), pp. 1–88; G. R. *Driver, 'Isaiah 52, 13–53, 12: the Servant Song of the Lord', in M. Black and G. Fohrer (eds.), In Memoriam Paul Kahle (Beihefte zur ZATW, 103; 1968), pp. 90–105; R. N. Whybray, Thanksgiving for a Liberated Prophet (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 4; Sheffield, 1978). The subject is also discussed in all comm. on Isaiah (qq.v.).

Servatus Lupus. See LUPUS, SERVATUS.

server. In the W. Church, a minister in the sanctuary. The principal duties of the server are to make the responses, bring the bread and wine to the altar, wash the celebrant's hands, and ring the *sacring bell at the Elevation if it is used. Until 1994 only boys or adult men could act as servers in the RC Church, though when no male person was available a woman could answer a Mass from outside the sanctuary.

Servetus, Michael (*c.*1511–53), physician and anti-Trinitarian writer. Prob. born in Tudela in Navarre, he studied law in Toulouse, and then, after travelling in Italy, went to Basle and Strasbourg, where he met J. *Oecolampadius and M. *Bucer. In 1531 at Hagenau he published a treatise, De Trinitatis Erroribus Libri VII, in which he attacked the current formulation of the doctrine of the *Trinity, arguing that the term itself was unbiblical. The book shocked his Protestant friends, and he worked for a time as a proof-corrector in Lyons (*c.*1535–7). He then studied medicine at Paris and Montpellier and in 1542 he was appointed physician to the Abp. of Vienne. In the same year he published an edition of S. *Paginus' Latin translation of the Bible, adding his own annotations. In 1546 he entered into correspondence with J. *Calvin, submitting to him the manuscript of his principal work, Christianismi Restitutio, which was to appear anonymously in 1553. In this Servetus not only rejected the traditional doctrine of the Trinity but also developed unorthodox views of the Incarnation; he maintained that an essentially unknowable divinity was manifest as Word and communicated as Spirit, the supreme manifestation of the Word being the historical Jesus, the Son of God, whose existence was limited to His earthly life. With Calvin's collaboration, Servetus' authorship was denounced to the *Inquisition. He was imprisoned but escaped to Geneva; here he was arrested and, refusing to recant, was burnt as a heretic at Champel (near Geneva) on 27 Oct. 1553. This event gave rise to heated controversy among Protestants as to whether heretics should be condemned to death. Servetus himself had argued against the use of force in defence of Christian truth, as well as expressing *millenarian views and rejecting *Infant Baptism. He also promoted belief in the pulmonary circulation of the blood.

Eng. tr. of his Two Treatises on the Trinity by E. M. Wilbur (HTS 16; 1932) and of his Geographical, Medical and Astrological Writings by C. D. O'Malley (Philadelphia, 1953). Sp. tr. of Christianismi Restitutio by A. Alcalá and L. Betés, with introd. and notes by A. Alcalá (Madrid, 1980). R. H. Bainton, Hunted Heretic: The Life and Death of Michael Servetus (Boston, 1953); B. Becker (ed.), Autour de Michael Servetus et de Sébastien Castellion (Haarlem, 1953), pp. 29–157; C. Manzoni, Umanesimo ed eresia: Michele Serveto (Esperienze, 26; Naples [1974]); J. Friedman, Michael Servetus: A Case Study in Total Heresy (Travaux d'Humanisme et de Renaissance, 163; Geneva, 1978). Full bibl. of Servetus' works and of lit. since the 16th cent. by A. G. Kinder, Michael Servetus (Bibliotheca Dissidentium, 10; Baden-Baden, 1989). J. C. Godbey in M. Eliade (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Religion, 13 (1987), pp. 176–8; J.-G. Margolin in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 672–9, s.v.

service, Divine. See DIVINE SERVICE.

servile work (Lat. opus servile, Lev. 23, Num. 28 and 29 passim, Vulg.), a term applied specifically to work which is forbidden on *Sundays or Holy Days, as the work of slaves, in contrast with liberal work, that of free men. Taken in early times to cover agricultural and mechanical work, by the 13th cent., when the prohibition was becoming increasingly unpopular, attempts were made to define it (after St *Augustine, In Jo. 3. 19; J. P. Migne, PL 35. 1404) as work which made a man the slave of sin or had the appearance of making him such. In modern times it has often been interpreted as work in which the body plays a greater part than the mind, or as gainful work. The term was still used in the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici* (can. 1248) but it does not figure in the 1983 Codex. For details of current requirements, see SUNDAY.

Servites, Order of (Ordo Servorum BVM). The Order was founded by seven wealthy Florentine city councillors who abandoned their worldly positions to devote themselves entirely to the service of the BVM, traditionally in 1233. They adopted a black habit and the Rule of St *Augustine, with some additions from the *Dominican constitutions. The Order developed rapidly, esp. after it had been officially sanctioned by a bull of Benedict XI in 1304. Its most influential member in early days was St Philip Benizi (1233–85), under whose generalship Servite missionaries were sent as far as India. The Servite nuns (Second Order) were founded by two of Benizi's penitents about the time of his death; they are chiefly contemplative. The sisters of the *Third Order were founded by St Juliana Falconieri in 1306; they devote themselves to the care of the sick and the poor and to the education of children. The principal Servite devotion is to the Sorrowful Virgin, in whose honour they recite the *Rosary of the *Seven Sorrows. The Feast of the Seven Founders is on 17 (formerly 12) Feb.

A. Gianius, OSM, Annales Sacri Ordinis Fratrum Servorum B. Mariae Virginis (Florence, 1618; 2nd edn. with continuation by A. M. Garbio, OSM, 3 vols., Lucca, 1719–25). Monumenta Ordinis Servorum Sanctae Mariae, ed. A. Morini, OSM, P. Soulier, OSM, and others [to 1750] (20 vols., Brussels and Rome, 1897–1930). A. P. M. Piermejus, Memorabilia Sacri Ordinis Servorum B.M.V. (4 vols., Rome, 1927–34). A. M. Rossi, OSM, Manuale di storia dell'Ordine dei Servi di Maria (MCCXXXIII–MCMLIV) (1956). F. A. dal Pino [OSM], I frati Servi di S. Maria dalle origini all'approvazione 1233 ca.–1304 (Université de Louvain, Recueil de travaux d'histoire et de philologie, 4th ser. 49–50; in 3 vols., 1972). V. Benassi and others, A Short History of the Servite Order (Rome, 1987). Studi storici sull'Ordine dei Servi di Maria (ibid., 1933 ff., incl. bibl. by G. M. Besutti, OSM, in vol. 21, 1971, pp. 90–151). J. M. Ryska, OSM, in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 131–5, s.v.; F. dal Pino and others in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1398–423; E. M. Casalini, OSM, and others in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 695–730.

Servus Servorum Dei (Lat., 'the servant of God's servants'). A title of the Pope employed in official documents. It was first used by St *Gregory the Great (590–604) and has been in general use since the time of *Gregory VII (1073–85).

K. Schmitz, Ursprung und Geschichte der Devotionsformeln bis zu ihrer Aufnahme in die fränkische Königsurkunde (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, ed. U. Stutz, Heft 81; 1913), ch. 5, 'Servus Servorum Dei', pp. 120–39. W. Levison, 'Zur Vorgeschichte der Bezeichnung Servus Servorum Dei', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kan. Abt. 6 (1916), pp. 384–6.

session. See KIRK SESSION.

Seth, Andrew. See PATTISON, ANDREW SETH PRINGLE-.

Settlement, Act of. The Act of Settlement 1700 was passed in 1701 to settle the Crown on the Electress Sophia of Hanover. Since William III had no children, Princess *Anne's only surviving child had died in childhood, and the son of *James II was a RC, the hereditary rights of the descendants of *Charles I were set aside and the succession vested in Sophia of Hanover, daughter of Elizabeth of Bohemia, who was the daughter of *James I. Thus the title of the present monarch rests not so much on hereditary right as on Parliamentary settlement. The opportunity was also taken to extend the provisions of the Bill of Rights (which had debarred RCs and anyone who should marry a RC from the Crown) by positively ordaining that all future sovereigns should 'join in Communion with the Church of England as by law established'.

Text in Gee and Hardy, no. 124, pp. 664–70; C. G. Robertson, Select Statutes, Cases and Documents (1904), no. 20, pp. 87–92; and in W. C. Costin and J. S. Watson, The Law and Working of the Constitution, 1 (1952), no. 36, pp. 92–6.

Seuse, Bl Heinrich. See HENRY SUSO, BLESSED.

Seven Bishops, Trial of the. The trial arose out of *James II's order that his *Declaration of Indulgence should be read in all churches on 20 and 27 May 1688 (London) or 3 and 10 June (elsewhere). W. *Sancroft, Abp. of *Canterbury, summoned a meeting and a protest was drawn up and signed by Sancroft and six other bishops, namely W. Lloyd of *St Asaph, F. Turner of *Ely, J. Lake of *Chichester, T. *Ken of *Bath and Wells, T. White of *Peterborough, and J. Trelawney of Bristol. Their petition was presented on 18 May. The protest, received with approval throughout the country, seemed to James 'a standard of rebellion'. The seven bishops were imprisoned in the Tower on 8 June and tried in Westminster Hall on 29 June on a charge of seditious libel. By ten o'clock on the next day even the King's Brewer (to his sorrow a juryman) had consented to the verdict of 'Not Guilty'. The case marked the limits of Anglican obedience to a RC king; James's authority never recovered, even though five of the bishops remained constant in their allegiance and became *Nonjurors.

Full account in T. B. Howell, A Complete Collection of State Trials and Proceedings for High Treason and other Crimes and Misdemeanours, 12 (1812), cols. 183–434, with other docs. cols. 433–524. Chief relevant docs. in C. G. Robertson, Select Statutes, Cases and Documents to Illustrate English Constitutional History, 1660–1832 (1904), Case 9, pp. 249–67; extracts of the case also in W. C. Costin and J. S. Watson, The Law and Working of the Constitution: Documents, 1660–1914, 1 (1952), pp. 258–71. R. Thomas, 'The Seven Bishops and their Petition, 18 May 1688', JEH 12 (1961), pp. 56–70; G. V. Bennett, 'The Seven Bishops: A Reconsideration', in D. Baker (ed.), Religious Motivation: Biographical and Sociological Problems for the Church Historian (Studies in Church History, 15; Oxford, 1978), pp. 267–87.

Seven Churches. The Churches in Asia Minor to which the letter of St *John, incorporated in Rev. (1–3), was addressed, namely *Ephesus, *Smyrna, *Pergamum, *Thyatira, *Sardis, *Philadelphia, and *Laodicea. A separate message for each of these Churches, appropriate to its particular temporal and spiritual condition, was revealed to John.

W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia and their Place in the Plan of the Apocalypse (1904); C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield, 1986). See also comm. on Revelation, cited s.v.

seven corporal acts of mercy. See CORPORAL WORKS OF MERCY.

Seven Deacons. The title traditionally given to the 'seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom' who, as related in Acts 6: 1–6, were appointed to 'serve tables', i.e. to administer the temporal concerns of the Church. Their names were *Stephen, *Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas. Their appointment has traditionally been regarded as instituting the order of *deacons in the Christian Church, and for many centuries the practice obtained at Rome of restricting the number of its deacons to seven.

S. Bibel, OFM, 'De Septem Diaconis (Act. 6, 1–7)', Antonianum, 3 (1928), pp. 129–50. See also comm. on Acts, cited s.v.

seven deadly sins. They are: (1) *pride; (2) covetousness; (3) lust; (4) envy; (5) gluttony; (6) anger; (7) sloth ('*accidie').

*Cassian, Coll. 5. 10, gives a list of eight sins (dejection and accidie counting as two); the traditional number of seven is found in St *Gregory the Great, Moralia in Job, 31. 45 (where tristitia takes the place of accidie). St Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theol. II (1), qu. 84, art. 4. O. Zöckler, Askese und Mönchtum, 1 (1897), pp. 253–6. K. E. *Kirk, Some Principles of Moral Theology and their Application (1920), pp. 265–7; id., The Vision of God (1931), pp. 201 f. (nn. 4 f.). M. W. Bloomfield, The Seven Deadly Sins: An Introduction to the History of a Religious Concept, with Special Reference to Medieval English Literature ([E. Lansing, Mich.], 1952). S. Wenzel, 'The Seven Deadly Sins: some Problems of Research', Speculum, 43 (1968), pp. 1–22. R. Staats in RAC 13 (1986), cols. 734–70, s.v. 'Hauptsünden'.

seven gifts of the Holy Spirit. They are: (1) wisdom; (2) understanding; (3) counsel; (4) fortitude; (5) knowledge; (6) piety; (7) fear of the Lord. The list is taken from Is. 11: 2 (*Vulgate text, which adds pietas to the six in the AV and RV).

K. Schlütz, Is. 11. 2: Die sieben Gaben des Heiligen Geistes in den ersten vier Jahrhunderten (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, 11, Heft 4; 1932). A. Gardeil, OP, in DTC 4 (1911), cols. 1728–81; G. Bardy and others in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 1579–641, both s.v. 'Dons du Saint-Esprit'.

seven liberal arts. The group of sciences which formed the staple of secular education esp. in the earlier Middle Ages, consisting of the elementary *trivium (grammar, rhetoric, and dialectic) and the more advanced *quadrivium (music, arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy). This grouping derived from Martianus Capella (early 5th cent.), who drew it up on the basis of the ninefold arrangement of Varro by excluding architecture and medicine, but it did not become generally established until the time of *Alcuin. In practice considerably more was covered by the three disciplines of the trivium than their titles might suggest, e.g. classical and philological study as well as the technical rules of grammar were comprised under 'grammar'. It was not till the student had completed his studies in the 'liberal arts' that he was held competent to proceed to theology. See also SCHOLASTICISM.

Seven Penitential Psalms, the. Psalms 6, 32, 38, 51, 102, 130, and 143. They were in liturgical use from early Christian times, and in the later Middle Ages they were ordered to be recited after *Lauds on Fridays in *Lent. The BCP appoints them as Proper Psalms for *Ash Wednesday, the first three at *Mattins, Ps. 51 at the *Commination, and the last three at *Evensong. They were also used in the English *Coronation Service before the revision of 1603.

Seven Sacraments, the. Since the 12th cent. the RC Church has held the number of the sacraments to be seven, namely *Baptism, *Confirmation, *Eucharist, *Penance, Extreme *Unction, *Ordination, and *Matrimony. Though the beginnings of these rites can all be traced back to very much earlier times, it was through the teaching of *Peter Lombard in his 'Sentences' (*c.*1150) that the belief gained general credence that these particular seven constituted a set different in kind from all other religious rites (see SACRAMENTALS). Their sevenfold number was given formal definition at the Council of *Trent (Sess. 7, can. 1). Most of the Reformed Churches rejected this enumeration, coming to hold that there were only two sacraments, viz. Baptism and the Eucharist. The E. Church, however, has generally accepted the W. enumeration. For further discussion, see SACRAMENT.

Seven Sleepers of Ephesus. Seven Christian young men who are said to have been walled up in a cave when taking refuge during the *Decian persecution (c. AD 250) and to have been awakened under the Emp. *Theodosius II (d. 450), as a proof of the *resurrection of the dead. The legend was certainly known in the E. and the W. in the 6th cent., as both *Jacob of Sarug (d. 521) and St *Gregory of Tours record it. It probably arose in a Syriac-speaking Church in connection with the *Origenist controversies over bodily resurrection. The alleged tomb of the Sleepers was much visited by pilgrims from all parts of the world before the Turkish conquest of Asia Minor. Feast day, 27 July.

I. Guidi (ed.), 'Testi orientali inediti sopra i Sette Dormienti di Efeso', Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei. Memorie della classe di scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, 3rd ser. 11 (1884), pp. 343–445, with It. tr.; crit. edn. of the version of Gregory of Tours by B. Krusch in Anal. Boll. 12 (1893), pp. 371–87. M. Huber, OSB, 'Textbeiträge zur Siebenschläferlegende des Mittelalters', Romanische Forschungen, 26 (1909), pp. 462–583 and 825–36. Id., Die Wanderlegende von den Siebenschläfern: Eine literargeschichtliche Untersuchung (1910), with refs. Forschungen in Ephesos veröffentlicht vom Österreichischen Archaeologischen Institute, 4 (Heft 2; 1937): Das Cömeterium der Sieben Schläfer. E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (Studi e Testi, 173; 1953), no. 17, 'Stephen of Ephesus (April 15, 448–Oct. 29, 451) and the Legend of the Seven Sleepers', pp. 125–68. I. Guidi in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 428–30, with refs.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1251–62, s.v. 'Sept Dormants d'Éphèse'; V. Saxer in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (1968), cols. 900–7, s.v. 'Sette Dormienti'.

Seven Sorrows of the BVM. Acc. to the former Roman Breviary, the Sorrows were the following: (1) at the prophecy of *Simeon; (2) at the flight into Egypt; (3) at the loss of the Holy Child; (4) on meeting the Lord on the way to Calvary; (5) at standing at the foot of the Cross; (6) at the taking down of Christ from the Cross; (7) at His burial. Until 1960 the Seven Sorrows were commemorated on two feast days: the Friday after *Passion Sunday (dating locally from the 15th cent., made of universal observance by *Benedict XIII in 1729, but reduced to a commemoration in 1960 and dropped entirely in 1969) and 15 Sept. The September feast, originally observed on the third Sunday in September, was granted to the *Servites in 1668 and extended by *Pius VII to the whole RC Church. In 1913 it was fixed on 15 September, except for the Servites who retain the Sunday. In the 1969 Calendar it was called the feast of Our Lady of Sorrow.

seven virtues. They are (1) faith; (2) hope; (3) charity; (4) justice; (5) prudence; (6) temperance; (7) fortitude. The first three are the '*theological virtues', the remaining four the '*cardinal virtues'.

Seven Words from the Cross. They are (1) 'Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do' (Lk. 23: 34); (2) 'Today shalt thou be with me in paradise' (Lk. 23: 43); (3) 'Woman, behold thy son! . . . Behold thy mother' (Jn. 19: 26 f.); (4) 'Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? [that is to say] My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' (Mt. 27: 46; cf. Mk. 15: 34); (5) 'I thirst' (Jn. 19: 28); (6) 'It is finished' (Jn. 19: 30); (7) 'Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit' (Lk 23: 46).

Seventh-day Adventists. One of the groups of *Adventists who originally expected the Second Coming of Christ in 1844. Later in that year they began to observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, although the name 'Seventh-day Adventist' was not adopted until 1861. In England their beginnings as an organized community go back to a mission started at Southampton by W. Ings in 1878. They are a staunchly Protestant body, believing that the Scriptures provide the unerring rule of faith and practice and that the return of Christ is imminent, although they set no date for that event. Emphasizing that the human body is a temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 6: 19), they require of their members a life of strict temperance; abstinence from alcohol and tobacco is mandatory and that from tea, coffee, and meat is recommended. Members observe the Sabbath from sunset on Friday to sunset on Saturday. They are expected to pay tithe on their income in addition to freewill offerings. They are Trinitarian in belief and adhere to the doctrine of salvation by grace through faith alone. They practise adult Baptism by total immersion. Their current world membership (1994) is over eight million (*c.*18,500 in the British Isles).

D. F. Neufeld and others (ed.), Seventh-day Adventist Encyclopedia (Washington, DC, 1966). A. W. Spalding, Origin and History of Seventh-day Adventists (4 vols., ibid., 1961–2); L. E. Froom, Movement of Destiny (ibid., 1971); G. Land (ed.), Adventism in America: A History (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1986]). On their early history, F. D. Nichol, The Midnight Cry (Washington, DC, 1944); P. G. Damsteegt, Foundations of the Seventh-day Adventist Message and Mission (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1977); R. L. Numbers and J. M. Butler (eds.), The Disappointed: Millerism and Millenarianism in the Nineteenth Century (Bloomington, Ind. [1987]); on their doctrine, Seventh-day Adventists Answer Questions on Doctrine (Washington, DC, 1957), a compilation; B. W. Ball, The English Connection: The Puritan Roots of Seventh-day Adventist Belief (Cambridge [1981]); R. Rice, The Reign of God (Berrien Springs, Mich., 1985); Seventh-day Adventists Believe. . . (Washington, DC, 1988), a compilation; M. Bull and K. Lockhart, Seeking a Sanctuary: Seventh-day Adventism and the American Dream (San Francisco and London [1989] [sociological]).

Seventh Day Baptists. See BAPTISTS.

Severian (fl. *c.*400), Bp. of Gabala. A strong opponent of St *Chrysostom, he played a leading part at *Constantinople in the events leading up to the Synod of the *Oak in 403. He is chiefly important as an exegete of the *Antiochene School. His writings include a collection of six Homilies on the Hexaemeron, other sermons on Genesis, a set of nine Homilies which have come down in Armenian, and several catena fragments. Many of these survive under the name of St Chrysostom.

His writings have not been collected. His six Homilies on the Hexaemeron are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 56. 429–500; Hom. de Serpente, ibid., cols. 499–516; Hom. de Sigillis, ibid. 63. 531–44. Catena frags. from Severian's Comm. on the Pauline Epp. in K. Staab, Die Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 213–351. Fifteen Armenian Homilies ed. J. B. Aucher, Venice, 1827 (several of these, however, are spurious). Further homily, ed., with Ger. tr., by B. M. Weischer, Qērellos IV 3: Traktate des Severianos von Gabala, Gregorios Thaumaturgos und Kyrillos von Alexandrien (Äthiopistische Forschungen, 7; Wiesbaden, 1980), pp. 19–67. M. Aubineau, Un Traité inédit de Christologie de Sévérien de Gabala In Centurionem et contra Manichæos et Apollinaristas: Exploitation par Sévère d'Antioche (519) et le Synode du Latran (649) (Cahiers d'Orientalisme, 5; Geneva, 1983), incl. text. C. Datema, 'Towards a Critical Edition of the Greek Homilies of Severian of Gabala', Orientalia Lovaniensia Periodica, 19 (1988), pp. 107–15. J. Zellinger, Die Genesishomilien des Bischofs Severian von Gabala (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, 7, Heft 1; 1916); id., Studien zu Severian von Gabala (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 8; 1926). H. D. Altendorf, Untersuchungen zu Severian von Gabala (Tübingen diss., 1957). B. Marx ascribed other homilies among the Chrysostomica to Severian in 'Severiana unter der Spuria Chrysostomi bei Montfaucon-Migne', OCP 5 (1939), pp. 281–367. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 468–88 (nos. 4185–295). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 332 and 618. E. Venables in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 625 f.; S. J. Voicu in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 752–63, s.v. 'Sévérien de Gabala'.

Severinus, St (d. 482), 'Apostle of Austria'. He was in early life a monk in the East. After the death of *Attila in 453, he came to Noricum Ripense, then overrun by barbarian invaders, and though never himself a bishop, he rallied the Church, founded two monasteries, and organized relief work, in this way winning the respect of the barbarians (particularly Odoacer) and moderating their cruelty. His body was taken to Lucullanum, nr. Naples, where his companion *Eugippius wrote his Life *c.*511. Feast day, 8 Jan. He is the patron of vine-dressers.

Acc. to the Roman Martyrology, his feast day, Jan. 8, is also observed as that of another Severinus, Bp. of Naples, 'brother of Bl Victorinus, Martyr'. As no Bishop of Naples of this name is known to have existed, there is perhaps some confusion with St Severinus, the Apostle of Austria.

The principal authority is the Life by Eugippius, pr. J. P. Migne, PL. 62. 1167–2000; crit. edns. by P. Knoell (CSEL 9, pt. 2; 1886), T. *Mommsen (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum scholarum; Berlin, 1898), R. Noll (Schriften und Quellen der alten Welt, 11; 1963), and, with Fr. tr. and introd., by P. Régerat (SC 374; 1991). Eng. tr. by L. Bieler and L. Krestan (Fathers of the Church, 55; 1965). P. Dörfler, Severin, der Seher von Norikum (2nd edn., Freiburg i.B., 1947). K. Kramert and E. K. Winter, St Severin (2 vols., Klosterneuburg [1958–9]). F. Lotter, Severinus von Noricum (Monographien zur Geschichte des Mittelalters, 12; Stuttgart, 1976). J. Haberl, Wien ist älter: Der Heilige Severin und die Frühgeschichte Wiens (Vienna, 1981). R. Bratož, Severinus von Noricum und seine Zeit (Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Phil.-hist. Klasse, Denkschriften, 165; 1983). Popular study by R. Zinnhobler (Linz [1982]), with good illustrations. V. Pavan in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1456–9, s.v. 'Severino'.

Severus (*c.*465–538), *Syrian Orthodox Patr. of *Antioch. He studied at *Alexandria and Beirut, was baptized in 488, and later became a monk. About 508 he went to *Constantinople, where he succeeded in securing the support of the Emp. Anastasius (491–518) for the persecuted *Monophysite monks, and in 512 was made Patr. of Antioch in place of the deposed Flavian II. On Justin I's accession (518), he was deposed, took refuge with Timothy IV, the Monophysite Patr. of Alexandria, and after the failure of an attempted reconciliation under *Justinian, was excommunicated by a synod at Constantinople in 536. Severus was the leading theologian of the moderate Monophysites. Many of his works, still not completely edited, survive, including 125 homilies and 400 letters. They are mainly preserved in Syriac translations. His Life to the year 512 was written by his friend *Zacharias Scholasticus.

Severus' Liber contra Impium Grammaticum [sc. against *John the Grammarian] ed. J. Lebon (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 4. 4–6; 1929–38); his Orationes ad Nephalium ed. id. (ibid. 4. 7; 1949) (incl. his correspondence with Sergius Grammaticus); his Philalethes ed. R. Hespel (ibid., Scriptores Syri, 68–69; 1952); other writings against the extreme Monophysite, *Julian of Halicarnassus, ed. id. (ibid. 104–5, 124–7, 136–7; 1964–71). Of his 125 Cathedral Homilies, dating from 512–518, the first, in Coptic, and the rest of the collection in Syr. tr., mainly by *Jacob of Edessa, ed., with Fr. tr., in PO 4–38 (1906–76); for details see PO 38 (1976–7), p. 250 (fasc. 2, p. 6). His 'Sixth Book of Letters', ed. E. W. Brooks (2 vols., Text and Translation Society, 1902–4); further Letters, ed. id., with Eng. tr., in PO 12 (1919), pp. 165–342 (fasc. 2), and 14 (1920), pp. 1–310 (fasc. 1). His Hymns, in the tr. of Jacob of Edessa, ed., with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks, ibid. 6 (1911), pp. 5–179 (fasc. 1); 7 (1911), pp. 597–802 (fasc. 5). Eng. tr. of his correspondence with Sergius the Grammarian by I. R. Torrance, Christology after Chalcedon (Norwich, 1988). The 'Anaphora' traditionally (but wrongly) ascribed to Severus ed. H. W. Codrington, Anaphorae Syriacae, 1, fasc. 1 (Rome, 1939), pp. 51–96, with introd. by A. Raes, SJ, pp. v–xlix. Lives by Zacharias Scholasticus and by John of Beith Aphthonia, with other relevant documents, ed. M. A. Kugener, with Fr. tr., in PO 2 (1907), pp. 5–115 and 203–400 (fascs. 1 and 3). There is also a verse Life by *George, Bp. of the Arabians, ed., with Eng. tr., by K. E. McVey (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 216–17; 1993). The most important modern study is J. Lebon, Le Monophysisme sévérien (Louvain, 1909). A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon (3 vols., 1951–4), passim (see index, 3, pp. 968 f.). R. C. Chesnut, Three Monophysite Christologies: Severus of Antioch, Philoxenus of Mabbug, and Jacob of Sarug (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1976), pp. 9–56. A. Grillmeier, SJ, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2 (pt. 2; Freiburg, etc., 1989), pp. 20–185; Eng. tr. (1995), pp. 19–175. A. *Baumstark, 'Das Kirchenjahr in Antiocheia zwischen 512 und 518', RQ 11 (1897), pp. 31–66; 13 (1899), pp. 305–23. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 327–45 (nos. 7022–81). A. Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), see index, p. 376; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 505–7 and 658. G. Bardy in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1988–2000; F. Graffin, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 748–51, s.v.

Severus, Gabriel, Metropolitan of Philadelphia. See GABRIEL SEVERUS.

Severus, Sulpicius. See SULPICIUS SEVERUS.

Sewell, William (1804–74), Anglican divine. Educated at *Winchester and Merton College, Oxford, where he had a brilliant academic career, he was elected a Fellow of Exeter College in 1827. From 1836 to 1841 he was Professor of Moral Philosophy, publishing in 1840 a significant work, Christian Morals, and in 1845 his popular novel, Hawkstone. He was one of the ablest and most learned of those in general sympathy with the *Tractarian movement in its earlier days, though he dissociated himself from it after the publication of Tract 90 in 1841. He remained a *High Churchman with a particular interest in education in accordance with Anglican principles. He founded St Columba's College, Rathfarnham, near Dublin, in 1843, in association with a group of Irish High Churchmen, and in 1847, St Peter's College, Radley. He was also the author of many theological and classical writings.

L. James, A Forgotten Genius: Sewell of St Columba's and Radley (1945). G. C. Boase in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 290 f.

Sexagesima (Lat., 'the sixtieth [day before Easter]'). The second Sunday before *Lent and hence the eighth before *Easter. Its name, formed on the analogy of *Quinquagesima and *Septuagesima (qq.v.), goes back certainly to the 6th cent. It was suppressed in the RC Church in 1969, and it does not figure in some modern Anglican liturgies. In the W. the Sunday was also known, from the opening words of the *Introit, as Exsurge Sunday.

A. Chavasse, 'Temps de préparation à la Pâques d'après quelques livres liturgiques romains', Rech. S.R. 37 (1950), pp.

125–45, esp. IV, 'La "Soixantaine" ou Sexagésime', pp. 130–43. See also bibl. to SEPTUAGESIMA.

Sext (1). 'Liber Sextus Decretalium', the book of *canon law promulgated by *Boniface VIII in 1298. This 'Sixth Book' contains the *decretals posterior to the five books issued by *Gregory IX (1234), the material being similarly arranged. The bulk of the texts are from the decretals of Boniface VIII himself, notably the bull '*Clericis laicos' (under the title 'De immunitate)', the rest from those of the successors of Gregory IX and the two Councils of *Lyons in 1245 and 1274. The legislation in the Sext, as in most collections of canon law, covers a wide range of miscellaneous subjects and also reflects the growing tendency to centralization in the later medieval Church.

The standard text is that of E. Friedberg (ed.), Corpus Juris Canonici, 2 (Leipzig, 1881), cols. 929–1124. P. Torquebiau in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 632–5, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Canonici III', with list of principal commentators and other bibl. refs.

Sext (2). The 'Little Hour' of the Breviary Office appointed to be recited at noon. See also TERCE, SEXT, NONE.

sexton. Traditionally the sexton was the assistant of the parish clerk. His principal duties consisted of cleaning the church fabric, ringing the bell, and digging graves: he thus combined the ancient offices of fossor, *doorkeeper, and *sacristan. With the division of these duties the title has become obsolescent. The office may be held by a woman. The sexton is appointed by the minister and parochial church council, who determine the nature of the duty and terms of employment (can. E 3 of 1969).

J. Wickham Legg (ed.), The Clerk's Book of 1549 (HBS 25; 1903), esp. pp. xlvii–xlviii and 78–80.

Seymour, Edward. See SOMERSET, DUKE OF.

Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper (1801–85), Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, social reformer and factory legislator. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1826 entered on his Parliamentary career as a member of the Conservative Party. His main concern was with the amelioration of the conditions of the working classes, in whose interest he often pursued an independent line of policy. A personal investigation of the London slums in 1846 bore fruit in the Ten Hours Bill of 1847 and the Factory Act of 1874, for both of which he was largely responsible. He also took up the cause of women and children in the mines and collieries, as well as young chimney sweeps, for whose protection he introduced the Climbing Boys Act. He was for a long time chairman of the Ragged School Union, and in 1872 he laid the foundation stone of Shaftesbury Park Estate at Battersea. He was a fervent *Evangelical, who hated Ritualism and attacked Rationalism. Though a supporter of *Catholic Emancipation, he opposed the *Maynooth Endowment. He was for many years president of the *British and Foreign Bible Society. He was also the first president of the *CPAS; it was in company with Scripture readers from this society and the London City Mission that he went into the slums. He took a deep interest in the work of the *CMS and the *YMCA. He was the trusted adviser of Lord Palmerston for the appointment of bishops and other high preferment in the C of E.

E. Hodder, The Life and Work of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury (3 vols., 1886), with extracts from his diaries passim. J. L. and B. Hammond, Lord Shaftesbury (1923); G. B. A. M. Finlayson, The Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury (1981). Other studies by G. F. A. Best (London, 1964), G. Battiscombe (ibid., 1974), and J. Pollock (ibid., 1985). J. W. Bready, Lord Shaftesbury and Social-Industrial Progress (1926). W. G. Blaikie in DNB 12 (1887), pp. 133–7, s.v. 'Cooper'.

Shakers, also 'The United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Appearing' or 'The Millennial Church', an early communistic body which originated in 1747 in an eccentric group known as 'Shaking Quakers' in Bolton, Lancs; their connection with the main body of *Quakers is unclear. They may have been influenced by survivors of the French Prophets or *Camisards. The original leaders, James and Jane Wardley, were succeeded by Ann Lee, wife of a Manchester blacksmith, known later as 'Mother Ann'. She came to be regarded as 'The female principle in Christ', Jesus being the 'Male principle'; in her the Second Coming was fulfilled. After a period of persecution, in 1774 she led a band of six men and two women to the USA, where they settled near Albany, NY. They were joined by members of existing *revivalist movements in the 1780s and soon founded further communities. After Mother Ann's death in 1784 the leadership passed to Joseph Meacham and Lucy Wright who instituted a more tightly regulated community life.

The name 'Shakers' derived from the shaking by which under the stress of spiritual exaltation they were possessed during their meetings; this later developed into formal ritual dances. They were organized in large 'families' within each community and full members practised community of goods under a hierarchical form of government. They insisted on confession to the Elders before admission, and enjoined it on those conscious of faults thereafter. A minute discipline was exercised over dress and personal behaviour; the use of alcohol and tobacco was severely limited, and herbal medicine was practised along with *spiritual healing. Underlying Shaker teaching and practice was the belief that celibacy was the way to the holy life; it was secured by careful monitoring of relations between the sexes. Relations with the outside world were also restricted, though Shaker opinion was divided on the extent to which separation should be observed. The principle of 'simplicity' was exemplified in Shaker artefacts which are now admired for their aesthetic qualities. The Shakers probably achieved a maximum of 6,000 members at their peak in the 1840s, but by 1994 only one community remained.

Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations, and Doctrines of our blessed Mother Ann Lee (Hancock, Mass., 1816; 2nd edn., Albany, NY, 1888; repr., New York, 1975). Extracts from this and other Shaker writings ed., with introd., by R. E. Whitson, The Shakers: Two Centuries of Spiritual Reflection (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1983). A. White and L. S. Taylor, Shakerism, its meaning and message (Columbus, Oh. [1904]); M. F. Melcher, The Shaker Adventure (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1941); E. D. Andrews, The People called Shakers (New York, 1953; repr., with additional notes [1963]). H. Desroche, Les Shakers américains: D'un néo-Christianisme à un pre-socialisme? (1955; Eng. tr., Amherst, 1971). J. McK. Whitworth, God's Blueprints: A Sociological Study of Three Utopian Sects (1975), pp. 13–88 and 242 f. C. Garrett, Spirit Possession and Popular Religion: From the Camisards to the Shakers (Baltimore, 1987), pp. 14–241. S. J. Stein, The Shaker Experience in America: A History of the United Society of Believers (New Haven and London [1992]). D. W. Patterson, The Shaker Spiritual (Princeton, NJ [1979]). J. Sprigg, Shaker Design (New York and London [1986]). J. P. MacLean, A Bibliography of Shaker Literature (privately pr., Columbus, Oh., 1905).

Shakespeare, John Howard (1857–1928), *Baptist preacher and organizer. After a 15-year pastorate at *Norwich, he became secretary of the Baptist Union in 1898 and gradually won for himself a leading position in the religious world. He made the Baptist Union a highly influential organization, and was mainly responsible for founding the Baptist World Alliance (1905) and the Federal Council of the Evangelical Free Churches (1919; see FREE CHURCH FEDERAL COUNCIL) and for securing the appointment of Baptist and Congregational chaplains in the army. His book, The Churches at the Cross Roads (1918), is a moving and powerful plea for the reunion of Christendom.

G. Shakespeare (son), Let Candles Be Brought (1947), ch. 17, pp. 335–47.

Shammai, School of. The disciples of Shammai, a leading Jewish teacher of the time of Christ. In contrast with the School of *Hillel, the Shammaites interpreted the Mosaic Law strictly and rigidly, following the unbending attitude of their founder, and during the reorganization of rabbinic Judaism after AD 70 generally the moderation of the School of Hillel prevailed.

Bibl. as for School of Hillel, q.v.

Sharp, James (1618–79), Abp. of St Andrews. He was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, where he remained until at least 1638. He seems to have identified himself with the Aberdeen doctors who opposed the *National Covenant, and, acc. to early sources, went to England. By early 1642 he was employed as a regent in St Andrews University, and in 1648 became minister of Crail (in Fife). When the Scottish Kirk was divided into resolutioners and protestors he took sides with the former and soon became one of their leaders. In 1660 he joined General G. Monck, who was then planning to effect the Restoration, and began to work secretly for the re-establishment of Episcopacy while outwardly protesting his loyalty to the Kirk. The services he thus rendered to the King's cause were rewarded by his appointment to the see of St Andrews in 1661. As Archbishop he took severe measures to abolish Presbyterianism and supported the oppressive policy of the Earl of Lauderdale, an attitude which roused the bitter resentment of his opponents. In 1668 James Mitchell made an attempt to shoot him, and when, in 1678, Mitchell was finally executed, the hatred against Sharp increased, and in the next year he was brutally murdered by a party of Fife lairds and farmers.

'Thirty Four Letters written to James Sharp . . . by the Duke and Duchess of Lauderdale and by Charles Maitland, Lord Hatton, 1660–1672', ed. J. Dowden in Miscellany of the Scottish History Society, 1 (Scottish History Society, 15; 1893), pp. 229–92. A number of polemical accounts of his murder were pub. at the time of his death; further contemporary account by James Russell appended to J. Kirkton, The Secret and True History of the Church of Scotland from the Restoration to the Year 1678 (1817), pp. 403–82. J. Buckroyd, Church and State in Scotland 1660–1681 (Edinburgh, 1980), passim; id., The Life of James Sharp, Archbishop of St Andrews 1618 1679 (ibid. [1987]). T. F. Henderson in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 404–7.

Sharp, John (1645–1714), Abp. of *York. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, he became rector of St Giles-in-the-Fields in 1675 and Dean of *Norwich in 1681. A strong High Churchman, he refused to read the *Declaration of Indulgence of 1688. In 1689, however, he took the oaths to William and Mary, but announced that he would not accept any bishopric vacated by a *Nonjuror during the lifetime of the former occupant. In 1691 he accepted the see of York on the death of Thomas Lamplugh, and his episcopate was notable for the high standard of duty which marked it (e.g. in his distribution of patronage). Queen *Anne, who greatly respected him, made him her spiritual adviser.

Life by Thomas Sharp (son), ed. T. Newcome, pub. 2 vols., London, 1825. A. T. Hart, The Life and Times of John Sharp, Archbishop of York (CHS, 1949). G. Le G. Norgate in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 408–11.

Shaxton, Nicholas (*c.*1485–1556), Bp. of *Salisbury. Educated at Cambridge, he was one of the committee appointed by the university in 1530 to consider the royal divorce. He thereby obtained the patronage of *Anne Boleyn, while the favour of T. *Cromwell and his own advocacy of the Royal Supremacy enabled him to survive her downfall unharmed. He soon developed pronounced Protestant views. In 1535 he was made Bp. of Salisbury, but resigned his see in 1539, in protest against the *Six Articles. During the rest of the reign his position was precarious, and in 1546 he was arrested with Anne *Askew and others and charged with heretical views on the Eucharist. He saved himself from the stake by a recantation, apparently quite sincere, since he maintained a Catholic position throughout the reign of *Edward VI. Under *Mary he was appointed a suffragan to the Bp. of *Ely, and took part in the examination of certain Protestants on trial for heresy.

His Injunctions for the Archdeaconry of Dorset in 1538 were pr. in London and pub. at Salisbury. J. *Gairdner in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 452–4, s.v., with refs.

Sheer Thursday. An old name for *Maundy Thursday, perhaps from 'skere' or 'sheer' (= 'clean', 'free from guilt'), with reference to the practice of receiving absolution or (alternatively) of ceremonially washing the altars of the church on that day.

Shekinah (Heb. שְׁכִינָה, 'dwelling'). The word (not found in the OT) is used by the Jews of God's visible Presence, conceived as 'dwelling' among men. The *Rabbis often employed it as one of the circumlocutions for the name of 'God' in cases where it was desired to avoid *anthropomorphism. Hence in the *Targum, Is. 6: 5 becomes 'Mine eyes have seen the glory of the Shekinah of the King of the Ages'. Similarly, in the NT the ideas of God's glory and His dwelling among men are associated in Jn. 1: 14 ('And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory'), and in a number of other passages the word 'glory' (δόξα) occasionally seems to convey the overtones associated with the Jewish Shekinah.

M. Kadushin, The Rabbinic Mind (New York, 1952; 3rd edn., 1972), esp. pp. 222–61. E. E. Urbach, The Sages: Their Concepts and Beliefs, 1 (Jerusalem, 1975; Eng. tr. from Heb. pub. 1969), pp. 37–65.

Sheldon, Gilbert (1598–1677), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Trinity College, Oxford, he was elected Fellow of All Souls in 1622 and ordained in the same year. In 1626 he was made Warden of All Souls and became an active supporter of W. *Laud's reforms at Oxford. During this period he also held in plurality several country livings. In 1638 he was put on the reforming commission which visited Merton College. A strong Royalist, he took part in the negotiations for the Uxbridge treaty of 1644 and in 1647 was with the King at Newmarket and Carisbrooke. In 1648 he was ejected from All Souls and spent some months in prison. During most of the Commonwealth he lived in retirement in the Midlands. Eventually, in 1659, he was restored to his Wardenship. In 1660 he became Bp. of London and Master of the Savoy, and in 1661 the *Savoy Conference met at his lodgings. While W. *Juxon lived he was virtually primate and succeeded him at Canterbury on his death in 1663. As Archbishop he worked hard for the re-establishment of Laudian religious principles. He also carried through the arrangement with Clarendon whereby the Convocations ceased to tax the clergy (1664). After Clarendon's fall in 1667 he was in disfavour at Court for most of the rest of his primacy, and he strongly opposed *Charles II's *Declaration of Indulgence of 1672. Throughout his life he was devoted to his university, and from 1667 to 1669 he was Chancellor. The Sheldonian Theatre at Oxford was built at his expense. Many of his papers are preserved in the *Bodleian Library.

N. Salmon (anon.), The Lives of English Bishops from the Restauration to the Revolution (pt. 1; 1731), pp. 10–47. V. Staley, The Life and Times of Gilbert Sheldon [1913]. N. Sykes, From Sheldon to Secker (Ford Lectures, 1958; Cambridge, 1959), passim. V. D. Sutch, Gilbert Sheldon, Architect of Anglican Survival, 1640–1675 (International Archives of the History of Ideas, Series Minor, 12; The Hague, 1973; cf. review by R. A. Beddard in Historical Journal, 19 (1976), pp. 1005–17). P. Seaward, 'Gilbert Sheldon, the London Vestries, and the Defence of the Church', in T. Harris and others (eds.), The Politics of Religion in Restoration England (Oxford, 1990), pp. 49–73. W. H. *Hutton in DNB 52 (1897), pp. 24–6.

Shema, the (Heb. שְׁמַע, 'hear'). The Jewish confession of faith. Its name is derived from the first word of the first of the three scriptural passages of which it consists, namely Deut. 6: 4–9, 11: 13–21, Num. 15: 37–41. These are preceded and followed by a number of benedictions. The Shema, which is mentioned as a well-known observance in the *Mishnah (Berakoth, 1) and was doubtless known to Christ (cf. Mk. 12: 29), is to be recited every morning and evening by all Jewish men and is included among the passages inscribed in the *phylacteries.

A. Z. Idelsohn, Jewish Liturgy and its Development (New York [1932]), pp. 88–92; L. A. Hoffman, The Canonization of the Synagogue Service (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1979]), pp. 24–49. L. Jacobs in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 14 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1370–74, s.v.

Shemone Esre. See EIGHTEEN BENEDICTIONS.

Shenoute (d. prob. 466), or 'Shenudi', Abbot of Athribis in Egypt. In 370 he entered the White Monastery, nr. Schâg, under his uncle Pgôl, where he became superior *c.*388. His community greatly increased, the numbers being given as 2,200 monks and 1,800 nuns. His government was very severe, esp. in the punishments, which included flogging and imprisonment for light faults, and he added many austerities to the more humane rule of *Pachomius. One of his most important innovations was the introduction of a written profession of obedience for his religious, probably elicited by the frequent cases of revolt and insubordination. He also allowed his older monks to live apart as hermits. An organizer rather than a theologian, Shenoute accompanied St *Cyril of Alexandria to the Council of *Ephesus in 431, where he played an important part opposing *Nestorius. He knew Greek, but wrote in Coptic. The letters, homilies, and apocalypses attributed to him, of which many are spurious, are written in a fiery style and deal chiefly with monastic concerns and with exhortations to practise virtue and avoid vice. Feast day in the Coptic Church, 1 July.

Works ed., with Fr. tr., by E. Amélineau (2 vols. in 3 parts, Paris, 1907–14), and by W. E. Leipoldt and W. E. Crum (CSCO, Scriptores Coptici, 2nd ser. 4–5; 1908–13; with Lat. tr. by H. Weismann, SJ, 1931–6). Some sermons and letters also ed. É. Chassinat (Mémoires publiés par les membres de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale du Caire, 23; 1911). Previously unpublished frags. in the British Library ed., with Eng. tr., by A. Shisha-Halevy in Orientalia, NS 44 (1975), pp. 149–85, with comm., pp. 469–82; others from a work against Origenism ed., with Eng. tr., by id. in Enchoria, 5 (Wiesbaden, 1975), pp. 53–108, with comm., ibid. 6 (1976), pp. 29–61; frags. of the same work in Italian libraries ed., with Ital. tr., by T. Orlandi (Rome, 1985). Pseudo-Shenoute, On Christian Behaviour ed. K. H. Kuhn (CSCO, Scriptores Coptici, 29; 1960, with Eng. tr., ibid. 30; 1960). Life by his pupil Besa, ed. J. Leipoldt and W. E. Crum (CSCO, Scriptores Coptici, 2nd ser. 2; 1906; Lat. tr. by H. Wiesmann, SJ, ibid., Scriptores Coptici, 16; 1951). Eng. tr. by D. N. Bell (Cistercian Studies Series, 73; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1983), with introd. and bibl. J. Leipoldt, Schenute von Atripe und die Entstehung des national-ägyptischen Christentums (TU 25, Heft 1; 1903). D. W. Young, 'The Milieu of Nag Hammadi: Some Historical Considerations', VC 24 (1970), pp. 127–37. J. Horn, Studien zu den Märtyrern des nördlichen Oberägypten, 1: Märtyrerverehrung und Märtyrerlegende im Werk des Schenute (Göttinger Orientforschungen, Reihe IV, Band 15; 1986). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 185–7.

Sheol (Heb. שְׁאוֹל), in the OT, the underworld, the place of the departed spirits. The derivation of the word is not known. In the AV it is translated variously as 'hell', 'grave', or 'pit'; more recent translations usually leave it untranslated as a proper noun. The notion reflects an undeveloped and shadowy belief in the future life which was gradually superseded by the more defined beliefs of later Judaism. The conception was widely held in early Semitic mythology and descriptions of Sheol in the OT can frequently be paralleled from Assyrian and Babylonian sources.

F. *Delitzsch, Das Land ohne Umkehr: Die Gedanken der Babylonier-Assyrer über Tod und Jenseits (1911). P. Dhorme, OP, 'Le Séjour des morts chez les Babyloniens et chez les Hébreux', R Bibl. 16 (1907), pp. 59–78; id., 'L'Idée de l'au-delà dans la religion hébraïque', Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, 113 (1941), pp. 113–42. H. H. Rowley, The Faith of Israel (1956), pp. 157–60, 171–5. W. Eichrodt, Theologie des Alten Testaments, Teile 2 und 3 (5th edn., 1964), pp. 143–7; Eng. tr., vol. 2 (1967), pp. 210–16. N. J. Tromp, MSC, Primitive Conceptions of Death and the Nether World in the Old Testament (Biblica et Orientalia, 21; 1969), passim. R. H. *Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life (1899), see index p. 426.

Shepherd of Hermas, The. The treatise of the sub-Apostolic Christian writer, *Hermas (q.v.). It was so named from the angel who, in the form of a shepherd, is recorded to have communicated to Hermas some of its contents. The identification of Hermas himself with the Shepherd, found in some later writers, seems to have arisen from mere confusion.

For bibl. see HERMAS.

Sheppard, Hugh Richard Lawrie (1880–1937), popularly 'Dick Sheppard', vicar of St Martin-in-the-Fields, London. He was educated at Marlborough, Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and Cuddesdon, ordained deacon in 1907 to Oxford House, Bethnal Green, and in 1911 became curate of St George's, Hanover Square, London. In 1914 he was appointed vicar of St Martin-in-the-Fields. His religious enthusiasm and personal attractiveness won the affection of innumerable people in all stations of life, esp. after the growth of *broadcasting, of which he was the first to sense the full possibilities as a Christian influence. He made his church, with its unique 'parish magazine', the St Martin's Review, the best-known parish church in the British Empire. A keen enthusiast for ecclesiastical reform on unconventional lines, Sheppard identified himself with the Life and Liberty Movement in its earlier stages, and later his ideals for reform were embodied in The Human Parson (1924) and the very widely read The Impatience of a Parson (1927). Ill-health compelled his resignation of St Martin's in 1926. From 1929 to 1931 he was Dean of *Canterbury and for a brief space (1934–5) Canon of *St Paul's. In his last years he was an ardent upholder of the Pacifist cause and devoted his chief energies to its propagation.

R. Ellis Roberts, H. R. L. Sheppard: Life and Letters (1942). C. Scott, Dick Sheppard: A Biography (1977). C. Jenkins in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 809 f.

Sherborne. St *Aldhelm established the seat of the Bp. of W. Wessex here in 705, and founded a church and school. In 978 Bp. Wulfsige introduced the Benedictine Rule, himself becoming the first abbot. In 1058 the see was united with Ramsbury, and in 1075 moved to Old *Sarum. The church was rebuilt in the 12th cent., and again, after a serious fire, in the 15th. At the *Dissolution in 1536, the parishioners purchased the abbey for a parish church, while the conventual buildings (13th, 14th, and 15th cents.) were handed over to the school, which was refounded (1550), with a new charter from *Edward VI. The church is a fine example of the Perpendicular style, with notable fan-tracery in the choir. A bishopric of Sherborne, suffragan to *Salisbury, was founded in 1928.

M. A. O'Donovan (ed.), Charters of Sherborne (Anglo-Saxon Charters, 3; Oxford, 1988). J. H. P. Gibb, The Book of Sherborne (Buckingham, 1981). On the abbey, see also W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 331–41; M. M. C. Calthrop in VCH, Dorset, 2, ed. W. Page (1908), pp. 62–70; Royal Commission on Historical Monuments of England, Dorset, 1 (1952), pp. 200–9.

Sherlock, Thomas (1678–1761), Bp. of London. He was educated at Eton and Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1698, and was Master from 1714 to 1719. In 1704 he had succeeded his father as Master of the Temple and held the office till 1753. Here he established a great reputation as a preacher. In the *Bangorian Controversy he was strongly opposed to B. *Hoadly, thereby temporarily losing his influence at court. Remarkably, his *High Church and Tory principles nevertheless did not prevent his promotion as Bp. in turn of *Bangor (1728–34), of *Salisbury (1734–48), and of London (1748–61). The most celebrated of his writings was his Trial of the Witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus (1729, anon.), a highly characteristic apologetic writing of its age.

Extracts in J. M. Creed and J. B. Smith (eds.), Religious Thought in the Eighteenth Century (Cambridge, 1934), pp. 61–4 and 67–75. E. F. Carpenter, Thomas Sherlock (CHS, 1936). W. H. *Hutton in DNB 52 (1897), pp. 93–5.

Sherlock, William (1641–1707), Dean of St *Paul's. He was a native of Southwark, educated at Eton and Peterhouse, Cambridge, and in 1669 became rector of St George's, Botolph Lane, London. In 1674 he published The Knowledge of Jesus Christ, and Union with Him, in which he attacked Puritan spirituality, esp. the contention of J. *Owen that the mercy of God can be known only through Christ. In his Case of Resistance (1684) he upheld the *Divine Right of Kings and inculcated the duty of passive obedience. In 1685 he was made Master of the Temple. In the Revolution of 1688 he originally sided with the *Nonjurors. In 1690 he published the Vindication of the Doctrines of the Trinity and of the Incarnation. A violent controversy with R. *South and others followed, in which he was charged with teaching Tritheism. In the same year he took the oath, an action which he defended in the Case of Allegiance (1691), and in 1691 he was made Dean of St Paul's. In 1695 his Trinitarian views, propagated at Oxford by J. *Bingham, were condemned by the Hebdomadal Council, and in his Present State of the Socinian Controversy (1698) Sherlock abandoned most of his earlier theological doctrines. He is now best remembered for his Practical Discourse concerning Death (1689).

Sermons Preached upon Several Occasions (1700; 4th edn., 2 vols., 1755); several repr. in T. S. Hughes, Summaries of the Sermons and Discourses of the Most Eminent British Divines (1834), pp. 1–276. Sherlock's Practical Discourse of Religious Assemblies (1681), ed. H. Melvill (1840). C. F. Mullett, 'A Case of Allegiance: William Sherlock and the Revolution of 1688', Huntington Library Quarterly, 10 (1946–7), pp. 83–103. G. Every, The High Church Party, 1688–1718 (CHS, 1956), esp. pp. 79–81; J. P. Kenyon, Revolution Principles: The Politics of Party 1689–1720 (Ford Lectures, 1975–6; Cambridge, 1977), pp. 26–9. A. Gordon in DNB 52 (1897), pp. 95–7.

Shewbread (Heb. לֶחֶם הַפָּנִים; Gk. ὁ ἄρτος τῆς προθέσεως. The English word was adopted by W. *Tyndale from M. *Luther's Schaubrot. Modern translations generally prefer 'Bread of the Presence' (thus RSV, NEB, REB), or 'bread of offering' (JB)). The 12 loaves which, acc. to the practice of the Jewish *Temple, were prepared from the finest flour and, arranged in two piles, set out weekly beside the altar of incense 'before the Lord'. When they were removed for renewal at the end of the week, only the priests might eat them (cf. Lev. 24: 9, Mk. 2: 26). The practice, which is first referred to in 1 Sam. 21: 2–6 (*David at the sanctuary of Nob), was perhaps a survival from the custom of putting out food for the god (cf. Bel and the Dragon; also the Roman lectisternia). Acc. to 1 Kgs. 7: 48, the Table of Shewbread was among the furnishings of *Solomon's Temple. The use of the Shewbread was restored by *Judas Maccabaeus after Antiochus Epiphanes' desecration of the Temple (2 Macc. 10: 3). At the destruction of the Temple under Titus in AD 70, the Table was rescued and its transport to Rome by captured Jews is prominently depicted on the Arch of Titus. It eventually reached *Constantinople, whence it was sent back to *Jerusalem under *Justinian (d. 565). It probably perished in the sack of Jerusalem by Chosroes in 614.

M. Haran in Encylopaedia Judaica, 14 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1394–6, s.v.

shibboleth (Heb. שִׁבֹּלֶת). A word used by Jephthah as a test to distinguish the Gileadites from the Ephraimites, whose local pronunciation of it as 'sibboleth' betrayed their identity (Jgs. 12: 4 ff.). In modern usage it denotes a sectarian or party catchword.

Shortened Services Act. See UNIFORMITY AMENDMENT ACT 1872.

Shorthouse, Joseph Henry (1834–1903), author of John Inglesant. Born at Birmingham, the son of *Quaker parents, he was attracted to Anglicanism under the influence of J. *Ruskin and the Pre-Raphaelites and baptized at St John's, Ladywood, in 1861. From 1866 to 1876, in the intervals of an active business life, he was constantly brooding over and working on John Inglesant, which he wrote down piecemeal. Finishing it at Llandudno in 1876, he was unable to find a publisher and had it printed privately in 1880. Shortly afterwards Mrs Humphry Ward brought it to the notice of A. Macmillan, who published it in 1881. It at once attracted very wide interest, among its admirers being W. E. *Gladstone, C. M. *Yonge, T. H. *Huxley, H. E. *Manning, and E. S. *Talbot. The delicacy and charm with which John Inglesant's spiritual pilgrimage is portrayed, its sympathetic understanding of the religious life of the 17th cent., and its vivid delineation of the community at *Little Gidding made it, apart from its high literary qualities, a powerful apologia for Anglicanism.

Shorthouse also wrote some other works, but they were without merit and have long been forgotten.

Life and Letters of J. H. Shorthouse, ed. by his Widow (2 vols., 1905). T. Seccombe in DNB, 1901–1911, 3, pp. 309 f.

shrine (Lat. scrinium, 'chest'). In its original sense the word is applied to *reliquaries (q.v.), but is now commonly used either of sacred images of special importance usually kept in a church, or of any holy place, esp. one connected with *pilgrimages (q.v.). Among famous English medieval shrines are those of Our Lady of *Walsingham (recently rebuilt), of St *Edward the Confessor at *Westminster Abbey, of St Thomas *Becket at *Canterbury, and of St *Cuthbert at *Durham.

Shroud, Holy. See HOLY SHROUD.

Shrove Tuesday. The day immediately preceding *Ash Wednesday, so named from the 'shriving', i.e. confession and absolution, of the faithful on that day.

Sian-Fu Stone. See SIGAN-FU STONE.

Sibylline Oracles. An amorphous collection of oracles worked up by Jewish and Christian authors in imitation of the pagan 'Sibylline Books'. They consist of 14 books, two of which (9–10) duplicate material in earlier books. Books 1 and 2 give an account of the history of the world, in prophetic form, from the beginning of the world to the fall of Rome. Book 3 contains a defence of Jewish monotheism, together with another history of the world and apocalyptic prophecies. Books 4 and 5 deal with Roman history of Neronian times from the Jewish point of view, whereas Book 6 is a hymn to Christ. Book 7 is a conglomeration of eschatological prophecies and moral and ritual precepts. Book 8 treats of the nature of Christ and of His Incarnation. Books 11 to 14 (transmitted separately from 1–8) are of less religious interest, giving yet another account of world history of more or less imaginative character. The whole collection, which is written in hexameters, is preceded by a prose prologue affirming that the oracles are utterances of Greek Sibyls of various periods.

Many of the Fathers, e.g. *Theophilus of Antioch and *Clement of Alexandria, accepted this view of the Oracles and drew from them arguments in defence of Christianity. Modern critics, however, assign them to Jewish and Christian authors; for, though genuine Greek oracles are inserted in some places, the tendency of the whole is monotheistic and Messianic. They are evidently cast in their particular form to gain the pagan world to Jewish or Christian doctrines. The dates of the definitely Jewish portions of the collection range from the *Maccabaean period to the time of Hadrian, and these were freely used by the Christian *Apologists of the 2nd cent. The Christian additions seem to date from the late 2nd cent. onwards. Books 3–5 in their present form are probably mainly Jewish, of which the third, the oldest, is generally attributed to an Egyptian Jew writing *c.*140 BC, whilst the contents of Books 4 and 5 demand a date after the destruction of Jerusalem in AD 70. The other books are either of Christian origin or heavily interpolated in a Christian sense. Their dates are much disputed. Apart from Books 11–14, which are usually assigned to the 4th cent., or later, the latest seems to be Book 7 (generally dated 3rd cent.). The earliest are the Christian elements in Books 1 and 2, which are prob. to be dated in the second half of the 2nd cent. Books 6 and 8 used to be assigned to the 3rd cent., but most scholars now argue for a 2nd-cent. date for Book 8, and the hymn to Christ (Book 6) is often held to be *Gnostic and 2nd cent. The work, which reflects contemporary popular theology, had considerable influence on *Lactantius and was known to St *Augustine, who quotes a short passage in his 'De Civitate Dei' (18. 23).

Crit. edn. by J. Geffcken (GCS, 1902); more recent edn., with Ger. tr., by E. A. Kurfess [Munich, 1951]. Eng. tr., with introd., by J. J. Collins in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 317–472. Eng. tr. of considerable extracts from Books 1–2 and 6–8 by R. McL. Wilson, with tr. of introd. by U. Treu, in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., Eng. tr., [1992]), pp. 652–80. J. Geffcken, Komposition und Entstehungszeit der Oracula Sibyllina (TU 23, Heft 1; 1902). B. Bischoff, 'Die lateinischen Übersetzungen und Bearbeitungen aus den Oracula Sibyllina', in Mélanges Joseph de Ghellinck, 1 (Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, 13; 1951), pp. 121–47; repr. in his Mittelalterliche Studien, 1 (1966), pp. 150–171. E. *Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1, Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 618–54, with bibl. [A.] Rzach in PW, Zweite Reihe, 2 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2117–69, s.v. 'Sibyllinische Orakel'; J. J. Collins in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 2–7, s.v.

Sicard (*c.*1155–1215), Bp. of Cremona, historian, canonist, and liturgist. A native of Cremona, he was appointed Canon of Mainz in 1183 and Bp. of Cremona in 1185. Having won the confidence of *Frederick I, he played a considerable part in Lombard politics and was entrusted with several missions to Rome. In 1212–13 he was employed by the Pope on behalf of *Frederick II against Otto IV. His principal works are his Chronicon, a history of the world orig. up to 1201, revised and continued up to 1213, which is a primary authority for the Crusade of Frederick I; his Summa on the Decretum of *Gratian; and his Mitrale. The last of these, a moralistic and allegorical interpretation of places, ceremonies and vestments, throws important light on contemporary liturgical practice.

The best edn. of his Chronicon is that of O. Holder-Egger in MGH, Scriptores, 31 (1904), pp. 22–181, with bibl. refs.; the Mitrale is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 213. 13–436. S. Kuttner, 'Zur Biographie des Sicardus von Cremona', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte. Kanonistische Abteilung, 25 (1936), pp. 476–8, with valuable refs. E. Brocchieri, Sicardo di Cremona e la sua opera letteraria (Annali della Biblioteca Governativa e Libreria Civica di Cremona, 11, fasc. 1; 1958). O. Holder-Egger, 'Einiges zur Quellenkritik der Chronik Sicards', NA 26 (1900), pp. 471–555; id., 'Ueber die verlorene grössere Chronik Sicards von Cremona', ibid. 29 (1904), pp. 177–245. P. G. Ficker, Der Mitralis des Sicardus nach seiner Bedeutung für die Ikonographie des Mittelalters (Leipzig Diss., 1889; also pr. as Beiträge zur Kunstgeschichte, NF 9; 1889). J. Sauer, Symbolik des Kirchengebäudes und seiner Ausstattung in der Auffassung des Mittelalters (1902), passim, esp. pp. 22–8. A. Franz, Die Messe im deutschen Mittelalter (1902), pp. 448–52. G. Picasso, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 810–14, s.v.

Sicilian Vespers, the. A general massacre of the French in Sicily on 30 March 1282, the signal for which was the tolling of the bell for *Vespers. The number of the victims was prob. between 3,000 and 4,000.

S. Runciman, The Sicilian Vespers (Cambridge, 1958), with bibl.

Sick, Visitation of the. See VISITATION OF THE SICK.

Sickingen, Franz von (1481–1523), German knight. A native of Ebernburg near Worms, he became the leader of bands of 'Landsknechte' with whose help he conducted many feuds, ostensibly in the cause of the weak and oppressed, but always accompanied by plunder and cruelty. He warred against the cities of Worms and Metz and also fought in the service of Francis I of France and the German Emp. Maximilian I. Having supported the election of *Charles V, he was made Imperial Councillor in 1519. Under the influence of Ulrich von *Hutten he embraced the Reformation, defended J. *Reuchlin, and offered his castles as places of refuge to the Protestants. He also aided the Reformers by literary activities and supported M. *Luther in the hope of wresting their power from the spiritual princes and of increasing the strength of the knights. In 1522 he led an army against the Abp. of Trier, but the campaign was a failure, and in 1523 the archbishop and other princes laid a siege against his castle of Landstuhl. In the defence he was mortally wounded and capitulated shortly before his death.

Studies by E. de Bouteiller (Metz, 1860), H. Ulmann (Leipzig, 1872), and K. H. Rendenbach (Historische Studien, 225; 1933). W. R. Hitchcock, The Background of the Knights' Revolt 1522 1523 (University of California Publications in History, 61; 1958), pp. 42–52. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 2 (1935), pp. 274–276 (nos. 20010–67), and 7 (1966), p. 216 (nos. 58243–55).

sidesmen. The 1604 Canons (can. 90) ordered that two, three or more persons in each parish be chosen as 'Sidemen or Assistants' to the *churchwardens, by agreement between minister and parishioners if possible, or otherwise by the bishop. Their function was to ensure the attendance of parishioners at divine service. They are now optional, but by the 1969 Canons (can. E 2 as amended) if there are to be sidesmen they are elected by the annual parochial church meeting. They must be on the electoral roll, and it is their duty to promote the cause of true religion in the parish, and to assist the churchwardens.

Sidetes, Philip. See PHILIP SIDETES.

Sidgwick, Henry (1838–1900), moral philosopher. A cousin of Abp. E. W. *Benson, he was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1859 elected a Fellow of his college. Here he taught classics and (after 1869) moral philosophy. He gave strong support to the movement for abolishing religious tests at Cambridge, and in 1869, through feeling no longer able to subscribe himself, resigned his fellowship as a public protest. From 1883 till his death he held the Knightbridge professorship at Cambridge. Sidgwick took a keen and active interest in many fields—university administration, psychical research, morality, politics, and the admission of women students to the university. His Methods of Ethics (1874), a thorough, if inconclusive, study of moral philosophy on mainly *hedonistic lines, exercised considerable influence, e.g. on H. *Rashdall and C. D. Broad. Sidgwick's other writings include The Ethics of Conformity and Subscription (1871), The Principles of Political Economy (1883), Outlines of the History of Ethics (1886), and The Elements of Politics (1891).

His posthumous writings include Lectures on the Ethics of T. H. Green, Mr. H. Spencer, and J. Martineau (1902), The Development of European Polity (1903), Miscellaneous Essays and Addresses (1904) and Lectures on the Philosophy of Kant and other Philosophical Lectures and Essays (ed. J. Ward, 1905). A. Sidgwick (brother) and Mrs E. M. Sidgwick, Henry Sidgwick: A Memoir (1906). L. Stephen, 'Henry Sidgwick', Mind, 10 (1901), pp. 1–17. F. H. Hayward, The Ethical Philosophy of Sidgwick (1901); C. D. Broad, Five Types of Ethical Theory (1930), ch. 6 (pp. 143–256); D. G. James, Henry Sidgwick (Riddell Memorial Lectures [not delivered]; posthumously pub., 1970); J. B. Schneewind, Sidgwick's Ethics and Victorian Moral Philosophy (Oxford, 1977). B. Schultz (ed.), Essays on Henry Sidgwick (Cambridge, 1992). L. Stephen in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 342–5.

Sidonius Apollinaris, St (c.430–c.486), statesman, author and Bp. of Clermont. A member of an aristocratic family of the Lyonnais, he received a good classical education at Arles (and perhaps also at Lyons). About 450 he married Papianilla, a daughter of the future Emp. Avitus (455–6), and about the same time entered upon a political career. In 456 he published an elaborate panegyric on his father-in-law for which he was rewarded by a statue in the Forum of Trajan. After the overthrow of Avitus by Ricimer and the Emp. Majorian, he obtained the favour of the latter through another panegyric. On Majorian's fall he retired for a time from public life, but resumed it in 467 with a mission to the Emp. Anthemius, being soon made prefect of Rome (468–9). In 470 or 471, when possibly still a layman, he was elected Bp. of Clermont, partly in order to defend the country against the Goths. He accepted the episcopal office with reluctance and humility, abandoned poetry, became a benefactor of monks, and distributed much of his wealth in charities. His strenuous efforts did not avert the occupation of Clermont by the Visigoths under Euric in 475 after repeated sieges, and he himself was exiled and imprisoned. Freed in 476 and reinstated in his diocese, he spent the leisure of his remaining years in making a collection of his letters.

Sidonius was one of the last representatives of classical culture in Gaul. His poems, of which 24 are still extant, lack poetical inspiration but show great technical skill. They are formed on the models of *Virgil and Horace and filled with pagan mythology. His letters, though often marred by verbosity, are a valuable source for the social, ecclesiastical, and intellectual history of his time; his correspondents included such major figures as *Faustus of Riez, *Lupus of Troyes, and *Claudianus Mamertus. *Gregory of Tours (Hist. Franc. 2. 22) records that Sidonius composed 'missae'; these are perhaps to be identified with the 'contestatiunculae' (commonly thought to be *Contestationes or Eucharistic *Prefaces) to which he himself refers. He is venerated as a saint in Gaul. Feast day, 23 (in modern editions of the Roman Martyrology, 21) Aug.

Editio princeps by E. Vinetus (Lyons, 1552). Improved edn. by J. *Sirmond, SJ, Paris, 1614; new edn., 1652; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 58. 435–752. Crit. edns. by C. Luetjohann (completed by F. Leo and T. *Mommsen; MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 8; 1887) and A. Loyen (Collection des Universités de France, 3 vols., 1960–70). There is also an edn., with Eng. tr., by W. B. Anderson (Loeb, 2 vols., 1936–65). C. E. Stevens, Sidonius Apollinaris and his Age (1933), with bibl. A. Loyen, Sidoine Apollinaire et l'esprit précieux en Gaule aux derniers jours de l'Empire (1943), and other works of this author. R. P. C. Hanson, 'The Church in Fifth-Century Gaul. Evidence from Sidonius Apollinaris', JEH 21 (1970), pp. 1–10; repr. in id., Studies in Christian Antiquity (Edinburgh, 1985), pp. 332–46. P. Rousseau, 'In Search of Sidonius the Bishop', Historia, 25 (Wiesbaden, 1976), pp. 356–77. I. Gualandri, Furtiva Lectio: Studi su Sidonio Apollinare (Testi e Documenti per lo Studio dell'Antichità, 62; Milan, 1979). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 498 and 656 f. A. Klotz in PW, 2te Reihe, 2 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2230–8, s.v. 'Sidonius (1)'; S. Pricoco in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3189–92, s.v. 'Sidonio Apollinare'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 778 f.

Sierra Leone. The modern republic's borders reflect those of a British protectorate, declared in 1896. Previously the name denoted a much smaller area around Freetown, with a special role in African Church history. In 1787 associates of the *Clapham Sect bought land for a self-supporting Christian settlement for poor Blacks. This soon collapsed, but was refounded in 1792 with Black soldiers from America who had supported Britain in the War of Independence. They brought a vigorous Church life, *Methodist, *Baptist, and the Countess of *Huntingdon's Connexion. In 1808, following the abolition of the slave trade, Sierra Leone became a British colony and the landing place for intercepted slave cargoes from all over W. Africa. Uprooted and diverse in origin, most of those who had been recaptured gradually entered the new model of society offered by the missionaries (esp. the *Church Missionary Society) and the 1792 settlers. The resultant Christian, literate, English-speaking Krio community was one of the early Protestant missionary successes. Sierra Leonians travelled extensively in W. Africa, sometimes re-establishing contact with their places of origin and taking Christianity with them. S. A. *Crowther was among the many missionaries, lay or ordained, who served abroad from the 1840s. Fourah Bay College, a CMS institution, was affiliated to Durham University in 1876, and Sierra Leone was the centre of an educated African community. From the 1890s, however, colonial and missionary policy eclipsed the Krio community. The incorporation of the Protectorate changed Sierra Leone's demographic basis; the hinterland dominated as the modern state emerged in 1961.

Hinterland missions began in the 1790s; they were renewed after Mende slaves brought a slave ship to the waters of the United States of America. The Mendi Mission (1841) and United Brethren in Christ (1855) initiated increasing American involvement. Anglican and Methodist missions spread from the colony and the *Holy Ghost Fathers began work in 1895, but everywhere the response was slow, and the Mende rising of 1898 brought attacks on the missions and Krio. Today the United Methodist Church (incorporating the United Brethren in Christ) and the RC Church are the leading Christian bodies in the hinterland. African prophet-healing Churches have been less common than in *Ghana and *Nigeria, but *charismatic movements are becoming increasingly prominent in Freetown.

C. Fyfe, A History of Sierra Leone (Oxford, 1962), passim, and other works of this author. J. Peterson, Province of Freedom: A History of Sierra Leone 1787 1870 (1969), passim. G. W. Olson, Church Growth in Sierra Leone: A Study of Church Growth in Africa's Oldest Protestant Mission Field (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1969]). A. F. Walls, 'Christian Experiment: The Early Sierra Leone Colony', in G. J. Cuming (ed.), The Mission of the Church and the Propagation of the Faith (Studies in Church History, 6; 1970), pp. 107–29; id., 'A Colonial Concordat: Two Views of Christianity and Civilisation', in D. Baker (ed.), Church Society and Politics (ibid. 12; 1975), pp. 293–302; id., 'Black Europeans White Africans: Some Missionary Motives in West Africa', in id. (ed.), Religious Motivation (ibid. 15; 1975), pp. 339–48. A. Hastings, The Church in Africa 1450 1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994), esp. pp. 179–88, 247, and 338–43. D. B. Barrett (ed.), World Christian Encyclopedia (Nairobi, etc., 1982), pp. 609–12 [to be used with caution].

Sigan-Fu Stone. An early monument of the *Church of the East, discovered in 1625 (or perhaps 1623) at Sigan-Fu (Sian-fu, Hsi-an-fu, or Xian) in NW China, where it remains. It is a slab, $7\frac{1}{2}$ ft. high by 3 ft. wide, which was set up in AD 781. The inscription, mainly in Chinese, contains (1) an allusive statement of Christian doctrine; (2) a description of the arrival in 635 from Tuts'in (or the land of Ta-ch'in) of a missionary named Olopan (in Chinese characters, A-lo-pên, believed by some to be a version of the name 'Abraham') and the imperial privileges which he was granted. After relating how Olopan became a 'Guardian of the Empire' and 'Lord of the Great Law', there follows an account of the fortunes of the Church down to the reign of Tih-tsung (780–3); (3) an epitome of (2) in octosyllabic verse; and (4) a series of short additions in *Syriac in the Estrangelo character. The stone is the most considerable extant witness to the growth of Christianity in the Far East before the 13th cent. In 1907 a replica of the stone was made by the Danish traveller, Frits v. Holm, and deposited in 1908 in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

F. v. Holm, The Nestorian Monument (Chicago, 1909); P. Y. Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China (1916): id., The Nestorian Documents and Relics in China (Tokyo, 1937); P. Pelliot, Recherches sur les chrétiens d'Asie centrale et d'Extrême Orient, 2. 1: La stèle de Si-ngan-fou, ed. J. Dauvillier and A. Guillaumont (Œuvres posthumes, Paris [1984]).

Sigebert of Gembloux (*c.*1030–1112), medieval chronicler. He was a monk of the *Benedictine abbey of Gembloux, taught for more than 20 years at the school of St Vincent at Metz, and returned to Gembloux *c.*1071. His principal works are the De Viris Illustribus (an ecclesiastical literary history in biographies), the recently identified Liber Decennalis, in which (following the attempts of *Dionysius Exiguus and *Bede) he endeavoured to fix the dates of Christ's Incarnation and Passion in the overall chronology of the world, and the Chronicon (from 381 to 1111), which uses some first-hand material for the period after 1024. He is also the author of a history of the early abbots of Gembloux (Gesta Abbatum Gemblacensium), as well as of a number of hagiographical works mainly intended for edification and of little historical value. In the great struggle between the Empire and the Papacy he took the side of *Henry IV against *Gregory VII, whose reforms he thought inopportune and whose policy he attacked in several pamphlets. He also wrote against Pope *Paschal II.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL 160. 57–834 (incl. repr. edn. of the Chronicon from L. C. Bethmann in MGH, Scriptores, 6 (1844), pp. 300–74). Apologia contra eos qui calumniantur Missas Coniugatorum Sacerdotum first pr. by E. Sackur in MGH, Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, 2 (1892), pp. 436–464; Passio Sanctae Luciae Virginis and Passio Sanctorum Thebeorum pr. in full by H. Dümmler in Abh. (Berl.), 1893, Abh. 1; Liber Decennalis first pr. by J. Wiesenbach (MGH, Quellen zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, 12; 1986); see also id., 'Der Liber decennalis in der HS. Rom, Biblioteca Angelica 1413, als Werk Sigeberts von Gembloux', Deutsches Archiv, 33 (1977), pp. 171–81. Crit. edn. of De Viris Illustribus by R. Witte (Lateinische Sprache und Literatur des Mittelalters, 1; 1974). The attribution to Sigebert of a treatise 'On the Investiture of Bishops' is uncertain: J. Beumann, Sigebert von Gembloux und der Traktat de investitura episcoporum (Vorträge und Forschungen, Sonderband 20 [1976]), with useful bibl.; id., 'Der Traktat "De investitura episcoporum" von 1109', Deutsches Archiv, 33 (1977), pp. 37–83, incl. text. E. Dekkers, OSB, 'Sigebert van Gembloux en zijn "De viris illustribus" ', Sacris Erudiri, 26 (1983), pp. 57–102. E. de Moreau, SJ, Histoire de l'Église en Belgique, 2 (2nd edn., Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, 2; 1945), pp. 83–6, 95–9, 156–8, 277–81, and 285 f. L. Brigué in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2035–41, s.v.

Siger of Brabant (*c.*1240–*c.*1284), *Averroist philosopher. All that is known of his earlier career is that in 1266 he was a master of arts in the University of *Paris, where he was teaching, and that he was a member of the 'Picard' nation and a canon of St Paul, Liège. He must therefore have come to Paris not later than 1260. He was involved in the condemnation of 13 errors by Stephen Tempier, Bp. of Paris (10 Dec. 1270), and in the same year *Thomas Aquinas wrote the 'De Unitate intellectus contra Averroistas', which is chiefly directed against him. He may have somewhat modified his radicalism, but dissension continued in the Faculty of Arts until 1275, when a Papal legate acted as arbitrator. In 1276 Siger was cited for heresy with two others by Simon du Val, inquisitor of France. It is not known whether he was acquitted, as was one of those associated with him in the charge, or whether he had already fled the kingdom. According to a letter of John *Pecham, written in 1284, he was killed at Orvieto by his clericus in a fit of insanity.

When Siger arrived in Paris the Faculty of Arts had recently revised the curriculum to include the study of the Metaphysics of *Aristotle and his works on natural philosophy. The most substantial works of Siger were commentaries and quaestiones on books of Aristotle, notably quaestiones on the Metaphysics, books 2–7, on the Physics, and De Anima, book 3. He also wrote shorter treatises, including 'De aeternitate mundi' and 'De anima intellectiva'. An early 16th-cent. Italian writer quotes from a 'De intellectu', not known to be extant, which was apparently a reply to Thomas Aquinas. Siger regarded it as his task not to conceal Aristotle's views, even if they were contrary to revealed truth; and, like all medieval interpreters, his views on Aristotle were coloured by study of the works of *Proclus, *Avicenna, and Averroes. The chief doctrines in question were the eternity of the world and the unity of the intellect in the human race, which involved the denial of personal immortality and of rewards and punishments in a future life. Theological critics accused him of holding the position known as the doctrine of the 'double truth', i.e. that the same tenet might be true in theology but false in philosophy. This he would have disputed. He maintained that in cases of conflict, truth was on the side of faith. How far he resolved the status of philosophical truths is not clear from his writings. *Dante (Paradiso, 10. 133–7) did not regard him as a heretic, and placed him among the twelve sages.

Edns. of his treatises in P. Mandonnet, OP, Siger de Brabant et l'averroïsme latin au XIIIme siècle (Collectanea Friburgensia, 8, 1899; 2nd edn. enlarged in 2 vols., 'Les Philosophes belges', 6, 1911, and 7, 1908). Crit. edn. of two texts of his 'Quaestiones in Metaphysicam' by W. Dunphy (Philosophes médiévaux, 24; Louvain etc., 1981) and A. Maurer (ibid. 25; 1983); of his 'Quaestio de necessitate et contingentia causarum' by J. J. Duin (ibid. 3; 1954); of his 'Quaestiones super Librum de Causis' ed. A. Marlasca (ibid. 12; 1972); of his 'Quaestiones in Tertium de Anima', 'De Anima Intellectiva', and 'De Aeternitate Mundi', ed. B. Bazán (ibid. 13; 1972); and of his other nine smaller treatises, ed. B. Bazán (ibid. 14; 1974, incl. 'Quaestiones in Physicam', ed. A. Zimmermann, pp. 141–84). Eng. tr. of 'De Aeternitate Mundi' by L. H. Kendzierski (Mediaeval Philosophical Texts in Translation, no. 16, Milwaukee, 1964, pp. 75–98, incl. introd.). F. van Steenberghen, Maître Siger de Brabant (Philosophes médiévaux, 21; 1977), incl. list of his works, with edns., pp. 184–91; id., La Philosophie au XIIIe siècle (2nd edn., Philosophes médiévaux, 28; 1991), pp. 325–60. B. Nardi, Sigieri di Brabante nel pensiero del rinascimento italiano [1945]. A. Dondaine, OP, and L. J. Bataillon, OP, 'Le Manuscrit Vindob. Lat. 2330 et Siger de Brabant', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 36 (1966), pp. 153–261, incl. attributions of new works. R. A. Gauthier, 'Notes sur Siger de Brabant', RSPT 67 (1983), pp. 201–32; 68 (1984), pp. 3–49. Z. Kuksewicz in N. Kretzmann and others (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Medieval Philosophy (1982), pp. 611–22, with further refs.; see also pp. 885 f., and index.

sign of the Cross. From the time of *Tertullian Christian writers testify to the use of the 'sign of the Lord', partly as sanctifying every action in daily life from rising in the morning to retiring at night, partly as an encouragement in temptation and trial, and partly as a means of mutual recognition in times of persecution. From early times the sign was also employed in *Baptism and *Confirmation, and its use was then extended to the liturgical blessing of persons and things. In the early centuries the sign was drawn upon the forehead by the thumb or finger of the right hand. In later times it has been made by drawing the right hand from forehead to breast, and then from shoulder to shoulder. It is usual in the W. Church to make the cross-stroke from left to right, in the E. from right to left.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Sign of the Cross', The Month, 118 (1911), pp. 586–602, repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), pp. 1–21, with refs. E. Beresford-Cooke, The Sign of the Cross in the Western Liturgies (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 7; 1907), with refs. F. Dölger, 'Das Segnen der Sinne mit der Eucharistie', Antike und Christentum, 3 (1932), pp. 231–44. A. Rücker, 'Die Kreuzzeichen in der westsyrischen Messliturgie', in Pisciculi: Studien zur Religion und Kultur des Altertums Franz Joseph Dölger zum sechzigsten Geburtstag dargeboten von Freunden, Verehren und Schülern (Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband, 1; 1937), pp. 245–51. F. J. Dölger, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte des Kreuzzeichens', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 1 (1958), pp. 5–19; 2 (1959), pp. 15–29; 3 (1960), pp. 5–16; 4 (1961), pp. 5–17; and 5 (1962), pp. 5–22. E. Dinkler, Signum Crucis: Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament und zur Christlichen Archäologie (Tübingen, 1967), esp. pp. 1–76.

Silas, St. St Paul's companion on his first visit to Greece is called Silas in Acts. 15: 22–18: 5 (13 times). Paul calls him 'Silvanus' at 2 Cor. 1: 19 (as does 1 Pet. 5: 12) and associates him with himself in writing to the Thessalonians (1 and 2 Thess. 1: 1). This led some of the Fathers to distinguish between the two, making Silas Bp. of Corinth and Silvanus Bp. of Thessalonica. Acc. to tradition Silas died in Macedonia. Feast day, 13 July; in the Greek calendar, 30 July.

E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of St Peter (1946), pp. 9–17. B. N. Kaye, 'Acts' portrait of Silas', Novum Testamentum, 21 (1979), pp. 13–26. F. F. Bruce, The Pauline Circle [1985], pp. 23–8.

silence, the argument from (Lat. argumentum e silentio). The deduction from the absence of any known reference to a subject in the extant writings of a particular author that he was ignorant of it. Many 19th-cent. critics of historic Christianity carried it to extreme lengths. In a famous set of articles (1874–7) criticizing Supernatural Religion (anon., by W. R. Cassels; 3 vols., 1874–7), in which the argument had been extensively used, J. B. *Lightfoot showed that it is unsafe to employ it, except in the most compelling cases.

Silesius, Angelus. See ANGELUS SILESIUS.

Siloam, Pool of. A pool or reservoir at *Jerusalem, mentioned several times in the OT, and almost certainly the modern Birket Silwān. In the NT it is referred to only twice, namely in the incident of the man born blind (Jn. 9: 1 ff.), whom Christ told to go and wash in this pool, and in Christ's mention of the fall of a tower 'in Siloam' (Lk. 13: 4). In the latter reference, part of the city wall, which ran near the pool, may be intended.

The pool Birket Silwān receives its waters from the 'Virgin's Spring' (Ain Sitti Maryam) on the E. side of Ophel through a tunnel in the rock. The tunnel and the pool are universally identified with the waterworks of King Hezekiah (2 Kgs. 20: 20; 2 Chron. 32: 30). Kathleen Kenyon's argument that the pool was originally a subterranean cistern outside the contemporary city wall, not an open reservoir within it, has not been widely accepted. Since the 4th cent. it has been a place of pilgrimage for Christians.

T. Tobler, Die Siloahquelle und der Oelberg (1852), pp. 1–58. H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem, 2 (1914), pp. 861–4, with refs. K. [M.] Kenyon, Digging up Jerusalem (1974), pp. 156–9; cf. D. R. Ap-Thomas in D. W. Thomas (ed.), Archaeology and Old Testament Study (Oxford, 1967), pp. 283–5 and 290 f.; N. Avigad, Discovering Jerusalem (Oxford, 1984), p. 60.

Silvester. See SYLVESTER.

Silvia of Aquitaine. A relative of the Roman prefect, Rufinus. Her sole interest to the Church historian lies in the fact that she was considered to be the authoress of the 'Pilgrimage of *Egeria' (q.v.), by F. Gamurrini, who discovered the work in MS in 1884. In 1903, however, Dom M. Férotin identified the writer with a Spanish nun, Etheria (now more usually called Egeria), and this view is now generally accepted.

Simeon. (1) In the OT, one of the Hebrew patriarchs, the ancestor of the tribe of the same name. (2) In the NT, the aged and devout Jew who took the infant Christ in his arms in the *Temple at *Jerusalem and spoke the words known as the '*Nunc Dimittis' (Lk. 2: 25–35). (3) In Acts 15: 14, apparently for St *Peter (elsewhere 'Simon Peter'), though St *Chrysostom, perhaps correctly, sees here a reference to the Simeon of Lk. 2. (4) Simeon that was called Niger, a prophet at Antioch (Acts 13: 1).

Simeon, the New Theologian, St (949–1022), Byzantine mystic and spiritual writer. In youth he entered the imperial service at *Constantinople, but in 977 he embraced the monastic life at *Studios. Within a few months he transferred to the monastery of St Mamas, also at Constantinople, becoming priest in 980 and a year later abbot. Because of the fierce opposition which certain aspects of his teaching aroused, in 1005 he was forced to resign from his position as superior, and four years later he was sent into exile in Asia Minor. Although this sentence was quickly revoked, he preferred to remain in voluntary retirement for the rest of his life. He is the greatest of Byzantine mystical writers, with a vivid and highly personal style. In his teaching he assigned a central place to the vision of Divine Light, while being at the same time strongly Christocentric, and underlining the importance of the Eucharist. He combined the contemplative tradition of *Isaac of Nineveh with the *coenobitic tradition of *Basil the Great and *Theodore of Studios. He was much influenced by the Homilies attributed to *Macarius of Egypt, and in his turn he exercised a formative influence upon the rise of *Hesychasm. His appellation 'the New Theologian' implies a comparison with St *Gregory Nazianzen, known in the E. as 'Gregory the Theologian'. Alternatively, but with less probability, it has been understood to mean 'Simeon the Younger, the Theologian'. Feast day in the E., 12 Mar.

'Catecheses' ed. B. Krivochéine, with Fr. tr. by J. Paramelle, SJ (SC 96, 104, 113; 1963–5); Eng. tr. by C. J. deCatanzaro (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1980); 'Kephalaia', ed. *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain and Macarius of Corinth, in Philocalia (Venice, 1782; 2nd edn., Athens, 1893); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 120. 604–688; crit. edn., with Fr. tr., by J. Darrouzès, AA (SC 51; 1957); Ethical and Theological Treatises, also ed., with Fr. tr., by id. (ibid. 122, 129; 1966–7); Eng. tr. of the 'Kephalaia' and Theological Treatises by P. McGuckin, CP (Cistercian Studies Series, 41; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1982); Hymns ed. J. Koder, with Fr. tr. by J. Paramelle, SJ (SC 156, 174, 196; 1969–73) and by A. Kambylis (Supplementa Byzantina, 3; Berlin and New York, 1976); Eng. tr. by G. A. Maloney, SJ (Denville, NJ [1975]). Life by *Nicetas Stethatos ed. I. Hausherr, SJ, with Fr. tr. by G. Horn, SJ (Orientalia Christiana, 12; 1928; fasc. 45). K. *Holl, Enthusiasmus und Bussgewalt beim griechischen Mönchtum: Eine Studie zu Symeon dem Neuen Theologen (Leipzig, 1898). W. Völker, Praxis und Theoria bei Symeon dem neuen Theologen (1974). G. A. Maloney, SJ, The Mystic of Fire and Light: St Symeon the New Theologian (Denville, NJ, 1975). B. Krivochéine, Dans la lumière du Christ: Saint Syméon le Nouveau Théologien, 949–1022. Vie, Spiritualité, Doctrine (Chevetogne, 1980; Eng. tr., Crestwood, NY, 1986). B. Fraigneau-Julien, Les sens spirituels et la vision de Dieu selon Syméon le Nouveau Théologien (Théologie Historique, 67 [1985]). H. J. M. Turner, St Symeon the New Theologian and Spiritual Fatherhood (Byzantina Neederlandica, 11; 1990). J. Gouillard, AA, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2941–56, s.v. 'Syméon le Jeune'; T. Špidlík, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1387–401, s.v. 'Syméon le Nouveau Théologien'.

Simeon of Durham (*c.*1060–*c.*1130), chronicler. He was a monk of the *Benedictine monastery of *Durham, where he was professed in 1085 or 1086 and later became precentor. His first work, inspired by *Bede, was his 'Historia Ecclesiae Dunelmensis', written between 1104 and 1107, which brings the history of the see of Durham down to 1096. It was prob. he who later wrote a general history of England, 'Historia regum Anglorum et Dacorum', wholly based on earlier writers, except for the contemporary period between 1119 and 1129. The latter was continued by Richard and John of *Hexham.

Opera Omnia, ed. T. Arnold (RS, 2 vols., 1882–5), with biog. introd. pp. ix–xv. Eng. tr. of his Historical Works by J. Stevenson (The Church Historians of England, 3, pt. 2; 1855). Preface by J. H. Hinde to his edn. of Symeonis Dunelmensis Opera et Collectanea, 1 (all pub.; Surtees Society, 51; 1868), pp. v–lv. H. S. Offler, Medieval Historians of Durham (Inaugural lecture, Durham, 1958), pp. 6–10. P. H. Blair, 'Some Observations on the "Historia Regum" attributed to Symeon of Durham', in K. [H.] Jackson and others, Celt and Saxon (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 63–118; M. Lapidge, 'Byrhtferth of Ramsey and the Early Sections of the Historia Regum attributed to Symeon of Durham', Anglo-Saxon England, 10 (1982), pp. 97–122. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 52 (1897), pp. 254 f.

Simeon of Mesopotamia (5th cent.). A leader of the *Messalians, mentioned by *Theodoret (HE 4. 11. 2), sometimes identified with the Simeon to whom some MSS attribute the writings of Pseudo-Macarius. See MACARIUS/SIMEON.

Simeon Metaphrastes, St (fl. *c.*960), Byzantine hagiographer. Nothing is known of his life. He owes his fame to his collection of saints' Lives ('Menologion') compiled, it is said, at the bidding of the Emperor. A few of the Lives were simply copied from older collections, but most of them were worked over ('metaphrased', hence his name) to make them acceptable in style and manner of presentation to the taste of his time. They were not, however, subjected to criticism, the historical errors of the models being reproduced in the new versions, as the interest of the author was chiefly moral and devotional. His work was frequently added to in later times. The continuation of the Chronicle of *George Hamartolus to the death of the Emp. Romanus Lecapenus (948) is ascribed in some Greek manuscripts and in the Old Church Slavonic translation to Simeon Logothetes, who has often been identified with Simeon Metaphrastes, though this identification is now disputed. Also ascribed to him are collections of sayings of St *Basil and other Fathers. The Orthodox Church honours him as a saint. Feast day in the E., 9 or 28 Nov.

Texts (many only in mod. Lat. trs.) collected in J. P. Migne, PG 114–16. Old Church Slavonic tr. of the Chronicle, ed. V. I. Sreznevskij (St Petersburg, 1905; repr., London, 1971, with an art. on the subject by G. Ostrogorsky (in Russian), orig. pub. 1932). On Lives of Simeon, see BHG 2 (3rd edn.; 1957), pp. 255 f. (nos. 1675 f.); on works by Simeon, see refs. in index, 3, pp. 263 f. H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'La Vie de saint Paul le Jeune et la chronologie de Métaphraste', RQH 54 (1893), pp. 49–85; id., Les Saints stylites (1923; Lives of St Alypius, pp. lxxvi–lxxxv and 148–94). A. Ehrhard, Überlieferung und Bestand der hagiographischen Literatur der griechischen Kirche, 2 (TU 51; 1938), pp. 306–717; Krumbacher, pp. 200–3 and 358–61; Beck (1959), pp. 570–5; H. Hunger, Die hochsprachliche profane Literatur der Byzantiner, 1 (Byzantinisches Handbuch, Teil 5, Bd. 1; Munich, 1978), pp. 354–7. J. Gouillard, AA, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2959–71, s.v. 'Syméon Logothète'; B. Kötter, OSB, in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 9 (1964), cols. 1214 f., s.v. 'Symeon Metaphrastes'.

Simeon Stylites, St (*c.*390–459). The first of the *Stylites or pillar ascetics. He was born on the Syrian border of Cilicia. After some time as a monk in the monastery of Eusebona (at Tell 'Ada, between *Antioch and Aleppo) he moved to Telanissos, which was not far away. Here, after several years of anchoretic life, he mounted a pillar, at first low, but gradually increased to a height of forty cubits; he lived on the top of it until his death, occupied in adoration and intercession. This novel austerity attracted to him a continuous stream of pilgrims, and was widely imitated. Both by personal intercourse and by correspondence, Simeon exercised considerable influence upon the world of his time, converting pagans, awakening the careless, reconciling enemies, and urging the cause of *Chalcedonian orthodoxy. There are still extensive remains of the church and monastery that were built around his pillar (modern Qal'at Sim'ān). He is not to be confused with his 6th-cent. namesake, also a Stylite, who took up residence on Mons Admirabilis, just to the W. of Antioch. Feast day, 1 Sept. in the E. Orthodox Church; 27 July among the *Syrian Orthodox; 5 Jan. in the W.

Of the early Lives, the most trustworthy is the account in *Theodoret (Hist. Rel. 26). This was used, and the narrative carried to a later date, in the less reliable Gk. Life by a monk Antony (to which a Coptic Life is nearly related). Its Gk. text was first pr. from a St Petersburg MS by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus (St Petersburg, 1907). Coptic text ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Chaine (Publications de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, Bibliothèque des Études Coptes, 3; Cairo, 1948). Syriac Life ed. P. Bedjan, Acta Martyrum et Sanctorum, 4 (Paris, 1894), pp. 507–644; Eng. tr. by F. Lent in Journal of the American Oriental Society, 35 (1915–17), pp. 103–98. This is closely followed by a Georgian Life, ed. G. Garitte (CSCO 171, Scriptores Iberici, 7, 1957, pp. 1–77, with Lat. tr. in CSCO 172, Scriptores Iberici, 8, 1957, pp. 1–53), with suppl. in Muséon, 76 (1963), pp. 79–93. H. *Lietzmann, Das Leben des heiligen Simeon Stylites (TU 32. 4; 1908), with texts and full crit. discussion. H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Saints stylites (1923), pp. i–xxxix. P. Peeters, SJ, 'S. Syméon Stylite et ses premiers biographes', Anal. Boll. 61 (1943), pp. 29–71, repr., with revisions, as 'Un saint hellénisé par annexion: Syméon Stylite', in his Le Tréfonds oriental de l'hagiographie byzantine (Subsidia Hagiographica, 26; 1950), pp. 93–136. A. J. Festugière, OP, Antioche païenne et chrétienne (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 194; 1959), pp. 347–401 and 493–506, incl. Fr. tr. of texts. A. Leroy-Molinghen, 'A propos de la "Vie" de Syméon Stylite', Byzantion, 34 (1964), pp. 375–84. A. Vööbus, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient, 2 (CSCO 197, Subsidia, 17; 1960), pp. 208–23. J. Lassus, Sanctuaires chrétiens de Syrie (Institut Français d'Archéologie de Beyrouth. Bibliothèque archéologique et historique, 42; 1947), pp. 129–32. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 277 f. (nos. 6640–50). D. Stiernon in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (1968), cols. 1116–38, s.v., with extensive bibl.

On the younger Simeon Stylites, P. van den Ven (ed.), La vie ancienne de S. Syméon Stylite le Jeune (521–592) (Subsidia Hagiographica, 32; 2 vols., 1962–70), incl. full introd.

Simeon of Thessalonica, St (d. 1429), Abp. of Thessalonica. Little is known of his life except that he favoured the Venetians who had bought Thessalonica in 1423 and opposed the surrender of the city to the Turks. He was one of the most influential authors of his age. His principal work is a 'Dialogue against all Heresies and on the One Faith' (Διάλογος κατὰ πασῶν τῶν αἱρέσεων καὶ περὶ τῆς μόνης πίστεως), which reflects his predominating interest in the mystical interpretation of the Byzantine cultus. It consists of a shorter treatise on doctrine, dealing chiefly with the Trinity and with Christology, and a longer second part on the Liturgy and the Sacraments. The polemical passages envisage the Jews, *Bogomils, Muslims, and the Church of Rome; these polemical interests are developed in a recently discovered collection of treatises by Simeon. Among his other works are a treatise 'On the Holy Temple' (Περὶ τοῦ θείου Ναοῦ), also mainly a symbolical explanation of the ritual, and an exposition of the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed (Ἑρμηνεία συνοπτική). He was canonized in the Greek Church in 1981; feast day, 15 Sept.

His writings, ed. by *Dositheus (Jassy, 1683), are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 155. Liturgical works also ed. I. M. Phountoules (Thessalonica, 1968 ff.). 20 previously unpub. works ed. D. Balfour: Politico-Historical Works (Wiener byzantinische Studien, 13; 1979); Theological Works (Analecta Vlatadon, 34; Thessalonica, 1981). I. M. Phountoules, Τὸ λειτουργικὸν ἔργον Συμεὼν τοῦ Θεσσαλονίκης (ibid., 1966), with summary in French R. Bornert, OSB, Les Commentaires byzantins de la divine liturgie du VII^e au XV^e siècle (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, 9; 1966), pp. 245–63. M. Kunzler, Gnadenquellen: Symeon von Thessaloniki († 1429) als Beispiel für die Einflussnahme des Palamismus auf die orthodoxe Sakramententheologie und Liturgik (Trierer theologische Studien, 47; 1989). In Eng. there is a convenient introd. by D. Balfour, 'St Symeon of Thessalonica: A Polemical Hesychast', Sobornost, 4 (1982), pp. 6–21. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2976–94, s.v. 'Syméon de Thessalonique'.

Simeon, Charles (1759–1836), leader of the *Evangelical Revival. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1782. In 1783 he was ordained priest, and in the same year was appointed vicar of Holy Trinity, Cambridge, holding this incumbency till his death. At an early date he had come under the influence of the two *Venns and his whole future ministry was strongly coloured by his Evangelical experience. At first he was met by hostility both in the university and among his congregation, but his pastoral zeal broke down all opposition and he exercised a significant influence among Evangelical undergraduates and ordinands. He became a leading figure in the Missionary Movement, being one of the founders of the *CMS (1799) and a prominent supporter of the *British and Foreign Bible Society; and he was frequently consulted by the East India Company on the choice of their chaplains. He was also the founder of a body of trustees (the Simeon Trustees) for securing and administering Church patronage in accordance with his principles. In the ASB, feast day, 13 Nov.; in the American BCP (1979), 12 Nov.

W. Carus, Memoirs of the Life of the Rev. Charles Simeon, ... with a selection from his writings and correspondence (1847). H. C. G. *Moule, Charles Simeon (1892); C. Smyth, Simeon and Church Order (1940). A. Pollard and M. Hennell (eds.), Charles Simeon ...: Essays Written in Commemoration of his Bi-Centenary (1959); H. E. Hopkins, Charles Simeon of Cambridge (1977).

Similitudo Dei (Lat., 'likeness of God'). Acc. to a distinction based on a traditional exegesis of Gen. 1: 26, that element in man's being as originally constituted which he lost through the Fall. See IMAGO DEI.

Simon, St, 'the Less', Apostle. One of the 12 Apostles, called in Mt. 10: 4 and Mk. 3: 18 'the Canaanite' (AV) or 'the Cananaean' (RV and RSV). The Greek word is probably a transcription of the Aramaic, meaning 'zealous', which would account for St *Luke's translation '*zealot' (Lk. 6: 15, Acts 1: 13), though this could imply that he had once been a member of the Zealots, if that party existed at the time. The apocryphal 'Passion of Simon and Jude' related the preaching and martyrdom of these two Apostles in Persia. In the W. the two are always coupled in the ecclesiastical calendar and in dedications of churches. Feast day in E., 10 May; in W. (with St Jude), 28 Oct. See also SIMONS IN THE NT.

AASS, Oct. 12 (1867), pp. 421–36.

Simon of Cyrene. A passer-by who was compelled by the Roman soldiers to carry Christ's cross on the way to the crucifixion (Mt. 27: 32 etc.). Mark (15: 21) describes him as the father of Alexander and Rufus, implying that these were figures known in the early Church. According to *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer. 1. 24. 4) the *Basilideans held that Simon not only carried Christ's cross but was crucified in His place. In modern times Simon of Cyrene has been claimed as patron by groups of people working among outcasts.

See comm. on Mk. 15: 21, etc.

Simon Magus. Acc. to Acts 8: 9–24, a sorcerer, known as 'the Power of God which is called Great', who practised in *Samaria in the time of the Apostles. Having professed Christianity and been baptized, he was later rebuked by St *Peter for trying to obtain spiritual powers from the Apostles for money (hence the term '*simony'). This in substance is all that is recorded in the NT. *Justin Martyr, followed by other writers, suggests that he was a native of Gitta in Samaria, who came to Rome in the time of the Emp. Claudius (AD 41–54). He also affirms that Simon was regarded by his disciples as a god and describes a statue in his honour on an island in the Tiber inscribed 'Simoni Deo Sancto'; but the base of a statue recovered in 1574, and usually regarded as the statue in question, shows by its inscription (Semoni Sanco Deo Fidio) that it was really dedicated not to Simon but to a Sabine god. Simon was said by St *Hippolytus and others to have come into conflict with St Peter again at Rome, and to have perished dramatically there through a failure of his magic powers. He later figures in the '*Clementine Homilies' and 'Recognitions', and also in ancient and medieval legends from which, perhaps, that of Faust evolved.

The Christian fathers of the 2nd–3rd cent. who opposed Gnosticism regarded Simon as its founder. He is said to have been accompanied by a former prostitute called Helen whom he redeemed and whom he called his 'First Thought' (Έννοια) the 'Mother of All'. Hippolytus also ascribes to him a short treatise, the Apophasis Megale (the text of which survives only in the Refutatio, 6. 9–18). There is much dispute about Simon Magus' relationship to Gnosticism and, in particular, to the 2nd-cent. sect of Simonians, to whom, rather than to Simon himself, the Apophasis is prob. to be ascribed.

On the NT account see comm. on Acts, cited s.v. For a brief account of the ancient evidence about Simon, with Eng. tr. of relevant texts, see W. Foerster, Gnosis, 1 (Eng. tr., Oxford, 1972), pp. 27–32. The text of the Apophasis Megale (incl. in edns. of Hippolytus) is also in J. M. A. Salles-Dabadie, Recherches sur Simon le Mage, 1 (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, 10; 1969), pp. 12–39 [the work has been much criticized in other respects]. Convenient Eng. tr. in W. Foerster, op. cit., 1, pp. 251–60. J. Frickel, SJ, Die 'Apophasis Megale' in Hippolyts Refutatio (VI 9–18) (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 182; Rome, 1968); K. Beyschlag, Simon Magus und die christliche Gnosis (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 16; Tübingen, 1974); G. Lüdemann, Untersuchungen zur simonianischen Gnosis (Göttinger Theologische Arbeiten, 1 [1975]). K. Rudolph, 'Simon—Magus oder Gnosticus? Zum Stand der Debatte', Theologische Rundschau, NF 42 (1977), pp. 279–359. C. [J.] Osborne, Rethinking Early Greek Philosophy: Hippolytus of Rome and the Presocratics (1987), pp. 212–27. J. [E.] Fossum, 'Samaritan Sects and Movements', in A. D. Crown (ed.), The Samaritans (Tübingen [1989]), pp. 293–389, esp. pp. 357–89. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 59 f. (no. 1120). G. *Salmon in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 681–8; H. *Lietzmann in PW, Zweite Reihe, 3 (1929), cols. 180–4; É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2130–40, s.v. 'Simon le Magicien'.

Simon Peter, St. See PETER, ST.

Simon Stock, St (*c.*1165–1265), also 'Simon Anglus' or 'Simon of England', Prior General of the *Carmelites. The details of his career are very obscure. He may have been elected Prior General at a chapter held in London in 1254; it is at least clear that he did not (as used to be thought) hold this office in 1247 when Pope *Innocent IV approved changes in Carmelite practices. Acc. to a later tradition, in 1251 Simon received a vision of the BVM which gave rise to the 'Scapular devotion', a devotion based on the belief that all who wore the small Carmelite *scapular would be saved. The name 'Stock' is also of late date. Feast day, 16 May. See also SABBATINE PRIVILEGE.

J. Smet, O. Carm., The Carmelites, 1 (rev. edn., Darien, Ill., 1988), pp. 22–4. B. Zimmerman, ODC (ed.), Monumenta Historica Carmelitana, 1 (Lérins, 1907), pp. 313–22. F. M. Xiberta, O. Carm., De Visione Sancti Simonis Stock (Bibliotheca Sacri Scapularis, 1; Rome, 1950). BRUO 3 (1959), p. 1779, s.v. 'Stock, Simon', with further refs. L. Saggi, O. Carm., and C. M. Carpano in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (1968), cols.1187–92, s.v. 'Simone Stock'.

Simon of Sudbury (d. 1381), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Sudbury in Suffolk, he studied at the University of *Paris, and later became chaplain to Innocent VI, who appointed him Bp. of London in 1361. He was very soon playing a prominent part as a diplomatist and politician, being an adherent of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. In 1375 he was translated to Canterbury, and two years later crowned Richard II. He seems to have been reluctant to take proceedings against J. *Wycliffe until ordered to do so by the Pope, and then was not extreme in his measures. In 1380 he became chancellor and was responsible for the imposition of a poll tax. When in 1381 a great rising took place (the Peasants' Revolt), the Kentish rioters spoiled the archbishop's lands, released from prison John *Ball, the excommunicated priest, and attacked the Tower, where Sudbury had taken refuge with the King. He resigned the chancellorship, but this did not avail to save him, and on Friday, 14 June 1381, the mob captured and beheaded him. The archbishop met his death bravely and was by many regarded as a martyr.

R. C. Fowler (ed.), Registrum Simonis de Sudbiria, Diocesis Londoniensis A.D. 1362–1375 (*Canterbury and York Society, 34 and 38; 1927–38), with introd. by C. Jenkins in vol. 2, pp. v–lxv. W. L. Warren, 'A Reappraisal of Simon Sudbury, bishop of London (1361–75) and archbishop of Canterbury (1375–81)', JEH 10 (1959), pp. 139–152. G. [A.] Holmes, The Good Parliament (Oxford, 1975), esp. pp. 18 f., 47–9, and 140–4. W. Hunt in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 146–9, s.v. 'Sudbury, Simon of'; W. H. *Hutton in DECH (1912), p. 575, s.v. 'Sudbury, Simon of'.

Simon, Richard (1638–1712), biblical scholar. From 1662 to 1678 he was a member of the French *Oratory. After extensive studies in oriental languages, he published in 1678 his Histoire critique du Vieux Testament, in which he denied that *Moses was the author of the *Pentateuch, arguing from the existence of duplicate accounts of the same incident and the variations of style. He is thus generally regarded as the founder of OT criticism. For his boldness Simon was expelled from his order. Much of his work, however, was written in the interests of orthodoxy against B. *Spinoza's OT theories, and Simon continued throughout his life to have the interests of Catholicism at heart. He was strongly opposed to *Jansenism. He lived later at Rouen and at Dieppe, where he wrote several works on the NT.

Of older books the best is the Life by K. H. Graf (Jena, 1847). J. Steinmann, Richard Simon et les origines de l'exégèse biblique (1960). P. Auvray, Richard Simon 1638–1712: Étude bio-bibliographique avec textes inédites (1974). W. McKane, Selected Christian Hebraists (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 111–50, with notes pp. 231–38 and bibl. pp. 250 f. A. Molien in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2094–118, s.v., with bibl.

Simons, Menno. See MENNONITES.

Simons in the NT. Besides (1) Simon *Peter the Apostle, (2) *Simon 'the Less', Apostle, called 'the Cananaean' or 'the Zealot', (3) *Simon Magus, and (4) *Simon of Cyrene, there is mention in the NT of (5) Simon, one of the *Brethren of the Lord, who has been identified with (2) but is almost certainly distinct; (6) Simon the *Pharisee, in whose house Christ was anointed by 'a woman which was a sinner' (Lk. 7: 36–50); (7) Simon the leper, in whose house at *Bethany Christ was anointed by an unnamed woman (Mk. 14: 3–9), sometimes identified with Mary of Bethany (see MARYS IN THE NT); (8) Simon, the father of *Judas Iscariot (Jn. 6: 71); and (9) Simon, a tanner, with whom St Peter lodged at Joppa (Acts 9: 43).

simony. The term, which is derived from *Simon Magus (cf. Acts 8: 18–24), denotes the purchase or sale of spiritual things. The legislation of the early Councils shows that simony became frequent in the Christian Church after the age of the persecutions. The Council of *Chalcedon (451) forbade ordination to any order for money. St *Gregory the Great later vigorously denounced the same evil. It came to be very widespread in the Middle Ages, esp. in its form of traffic in ecclesiastical preferment, which was frequently forbidden, e.g. by the Third *Lateran Council (1179). It was treated in detail by St *Thomas Aquinas and again strenuously opposed by the Council of *Trent. Acc. to current RC canon law, anyone who resorts to simony to celebrate or receive a sacrament is to be punished by an *interdict or *suspension (CIC (1983), can. 1380), while the simoniacal provision of an office is invalid (can. 149). In post-Reformation England the English *Canons of 1604 exacted an oath from all ordinands and recipients of benefices to the effect that their offices had not been obtained by simoniacal transactions. The system of ecclesiastical patronage led almost inevitably to simony in a large number of cases, an evil partly remedied by the English Benefices Act of 1898, initiated by Abp. E. W. *Benson, which, among other anti-simoniacal provisions, forbade sales of next presentations. The form of the Declaration against Simony now required from the recipients of benefices in the C of E is incorporated in Canon C 16 of the 1969 Canons.

A. Leinz, Die Simonie: Eine kanonistische Studie (1902); N. A. Weber, A History of Simony in the Christian Church from the Beginning to the Death of Charlemagne, 814 (Baltimore, 1909); R. A. Ryder, Simony: An historical Synopsis and Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies; 65; 1931). H. Meier-Welcker, 'Die Simonie im frühen Mittelalter', ZKG 64 (1952–53), pp. 61–93. J. Weitzel, Begriff und Erscheinungsformen der Simonie bei Gratian und den Dekretisten (Münchener Theologische Studien, 3. Kanonistische Abteilung, 25; 1967). A. Nothum, SCJ, La Rénumération du travail inhérent aux fonctions spirituelles et la simonie de droit divin (Analecta Gregoriana, 176; 1969). A. Bride in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2141–60, s.v. 'Simonie'.

Simple Feasts. Feasts of the lowest rank in the pre-1960 RC Calendar. They were characterized by having no Second Vespers and only one *nocturn with three lessons at *Mattins. For the classification of feasts, see DOUBLE FEASTS.

Simplicianus, St (d. 400), Bp. of Milan. He is first heard of at *Rome between 350 and 360, where he was instrumental in bringing about the conversion of *Victorinus. Later he played an important part in St *Augustine's conversion by recounting the story, and some of Augustine's early treatises are addressed to him. Augustine refers to him as St *Ambrose's 'father in receiving grace'; this phrase has been variously interpreted, sometimes being taken to suggest that he prepared him for baptism. In 397 he succeeded Ambrose as Bp. of Milan. Feast day, 16 (sometimes 13) Aug.

The chief early sources are Augustine, Confessions, 8. 1–12, and *Gennadius, De Viris Illustribus, 36. Useful note on Simplicianus by A. Solignac in the edn. of Augustine's Confessions in his Œuvres, 14 (Bibliothèque Augustinienne, 1962), pp. 530–33. H. W. Phillpott in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 688 f. with further refs.

Simplicius, St (d. 483), Pope from 468. He was born at Tivoli. During his pontificate, which was marked by the deposition of the last western emperor (476), followed by the rule of Odoacer (an *Arian) as king of Italy, and the spread of the *Monophysite heresy, he considerably advanced the jurisdictional claims and prestige of the Roman see. In the E. he successfully intervened in defence of the *Chalcedonian formula against its Monophysite critics. He also ably organized the ecclesiastical affairs of the city, where he established several new churches, including S. Stefano Rotondo on the Celian Hill. See ROME, CHURCHES OF. Feast day (local), observed at different times on 2 or 10 Mar.

Several of his letters are repr. from the conciliar collections in J. P. Migne, PL 58. 35–62; fourteen from the Collectio Avellana also ed. O. Guenther in CSEL 25 (pt. 1; 1895), pp. 124–55. P. Jaffé, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, 1 (2nd edn. by W. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 77–80. V. Grumel, AA, Les Regestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 112–19 (nos. 149–160a). LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 92 f. and 249–51. É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2161–4, s.v.; J. Chapin in NCE 13 (1967), p. 232, s.v., both with refs.

simultaneum. The term was originally used in the 16th cent. in Germany for the authorization of two or more religious communions in the same territory. It gradually came to be restricted to the simultaneous right of two congregations differing in their faith to use a single ecclesiastical building. Special provisions for this practice were made in the Peace of *Ryswick (1697). Fresh arrangements for the joint use of churches were drawn up by the Prussian state after the First *Vatican Council in 1870 for the newly formed *Old Catholics and the RCs, but on 12 Mar. 1873 *Pius IX expressly forbade RCs to use the churches given by the government to the Old Catholics.

sin. The purposeful disobedience of a creature to the known will of God. Unlike moral evil it is a fundamentally theological conception.

In the OT sin is represented as a constant factor in the experience both of God's people and of the world from the first transgression of *Adam and *Eve in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3) onwards. Its power was aggravated rather than diminished by the moral and ceremonial precepts in the Law of *Moses, which both increased the occasions of sin and developed a keener sense of moral responsibility (cf. Rom. 7: 13). The teaching of the Prophets with its emphasis on the heinousness of injustice (Am. 5: 11–24), lack of mercy (Hos. 4: 1), and idolatry (Am. 5: 4–5, Is. 1: 10–17) deepened the sense of sin in another way; in addition, Ezekiel (18: 1–4) and Jeremiah (31: 29–30) proclaim the personal responsibility of each man for his own sins. The Pss., by their stress on the heart as the seat of sin, are marked by their penetrating insights into its personal and emotional effects.

In the NT the Hebrew and Jewish teaching on sin is summed up and deepened by the clear recognition that its roots lie in a man's character (Mt. 5: 21–5; 15: 18). St *Paul expounds it as a breach of the natural law written in the conscience of man (Rom. 2: 14–16) and asserts its universality. The Epistle of St *James stresses its origin in the human will and again emphasizes personal responsibility. In the Johannine writings sin is seen to consist esp. in disbelief in Christ and the consequent judgement.

Later theology, though it introduced many formal distinctions, has added little if anything to what is implicit in the NT. In the 2nd cent. an acute problem was raised by the question of serious post-Baptismal sins which certain theologians held to be never, or only once (*Tertullian, *Hermas) forgivable; this rigorism, though eventually abandoned, left its mark on the development of the Sacrament of *Penance (q.v.). The Fathers held varying beliefs in the universality or otherwise of sin, e.g. St *Athanasius believed that there were sinless lives both before and after Christ. In the early 5th cent. *Pelagius raised the fiercest of all controversies on the nature of *original sin and grace. St *Augustine's part in the conflict, combined with his own religious experience, issued in an intense personal perception of the gravity of sin. Yet on the theological issue St Augustine emphatically rejected the *Manichaean doctrine that evil was a substance and the created universe inherently wicked, opposing to it the *Platonic view that sin was in essence privative (privatio boni). In this teaching he exercised a decisive influence on the medieval doctrine of sin.

In the 8th–9th cents. the prevalence of feudal notions and the development of the penitential system fostered in many quarters a somewhat external view of sin. For each sin due satisfaction was to be paid in a measurable quantity of penance. But under the influence of such teachers as St *Anselm and the *Victorines a fundamentally personal view of sin reasserted itself. The regularization of confessional practice also led to the elaboration of a corpus of *moral theology in St *Thomas Aquinas and other writers. For the long dispute as to whether or not the BVM was conceived without sin, see IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.

The Reformers were largely concerned to reject the external view of sin which they saw in the later Middle Ages. The doctrine of *justification by faith alone was held by M. *Luther to be the one solvent for every external view of sin. The *Calvinistic teaching on *predestination brought vividly before the imagination of countless Protestants the terrifying consequences of sin. In the 17th cent. the doctrine of sin in the *Jansenist movement in the RC Church had close affinities with the teaching of the Reformers, while in the Protestant Churches certain *Arminian tenets had much in common with Catholic teaching. Among Catholic theologians, the intensive cultivation of moral theology since the 16th cent. has led to such precise distinctions as those currently drawn between *mortal and *venial, and between *formal and *material, sin (qq.v.).

Since the end of the 17th cent. there has been little further development of the doctrine of sin. Under the secularizing influences of the *Enlightenment attempts were made to remove sin from its religious setting and interpret it as moral evil ('philosophic sin'). The liberalistic optimism of the 19th cent. led to the virtual elimination of the notion of sin from much popular religious teaching. Early in the present century the Freudian psychology was invoked in attempts to explain sin in non-moral terms. At a later date the recognition of demonic forces in contemporary civilization led to a renewed theological emphasis on the gravity of sin in the spirit of St Augustine and the Reformers (*Dialectical Theology, etc.).

See also ATONEMENT, ORIGINAL SIN, PENANCE, REDEMPTION, SEVEN DEADLY SINS.

Modern works in Eng. directly on the subject incl. J. *Tulloch, The Christian Doctrine of Sin (1877); F. R. Tennant, The Concept of Sin (1912); T. A. *Lacey, Nature, Miracle and Sin (1916); P. Green, The Problem of Evil (1920); R. S. Moxon, The Doctrine of Sin (1922); C. R. Smith, The Biblical Doctrine of Sin and the Ways of God with Sinners (1953); F. Greeves, The Meaning of Sin (Fernley-Hartley Lecture, 1956; 1956); J. Hick, Evil and the God of Love (1966). Other modern works incl. H. Rondet, SJ, Notes sur la théologie du péché (1957); S. Lyonnet, SJ, De Peccato et Redemptione, 1 (Rome, 1957), largely in Eng. tr. in id. and L. Sabourin, SJ, Sin, Redemption, and Sacrifice: A Biblical and Patristic Study (Analecta Biblica, 48; 1970); P. Delhaye and others, Théologie du péché (Bibliothèque de Théologie, Série 2. Théologie Morale, 7; 1960); P. Ricœur, Finitude et Culpabilité (Philosophie de l'Esprit, 2 vols., 1960; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, as Fallible Man, Chicago, 1965; vol. 2, The Symbolism of Evil, New York, 1967); C. Journet, Le Mal: Essai théologique (1961; Eng. tr., 1963). P. Palazzini (ed.), Il peccato (1959; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1964). P. Schoonenberg in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 2 (Einsiedeln [1967]), pp. 845–941. P. H. Simon, La Littérature du péché et de la grâce: Essai sur la constitution d'une littérature chrétienne depuis 1880 [1957]. Arts. in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 528–71, esp. H. R. *Mackintosh on 'Sin (Christian)', pp. 538–44; T. Deman, OP, in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 140–275, s.v. 'Péché'; G. Quell, G. Bertram, G. Stählin, and W. Grundmann in TWNT 1 (1933), pp. 267–320 (Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 267–316), s.v. ἁμαρτάνω, ἁμάρτημα, ἁμαρτία, with extensive bibl. refs.; P. Schoonenberg and K. *Rahner, SJ, in Sacramentum Mundi, ed. K. Rahner and others, 6 (1970), pp. 87–94, s.v.; S. Lyonnet, SJ, and P. Gervais, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 790–853, s.v. 'Péché-Pécheur'. See also works cited under ORIGINAL SIN.

Sinai. The mountain in the desert between Egypt and Palestine where the Law was given by *Moses (Ex. 19: 1 ff.). From very ancient times it was regarded as the sacred mountain of *Yahweh (Deut. 33: 2, Jgs. 5: 5). The region of the traditional Sinai (now Jebel Musa) became an early centre of Christian *monasticism, the present monastery dedicated to St *Catherine of Alexandria claiming to have been built on the site to which her body was miraculously transported. The name is also used for the whole peninsula in which the sacred mountain was located.

A. P. *Stanley, Sinai and Palestine in connection with their History (1856), ch. 1, 'The Peninsula of Sinai', pp. 3–62. D. Nielsen, 'The Site of the Biblical Mount Sinai', Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society, 7 (Jerusalem, 1927), pp. 187–208; L. H. Vincent, OP, 'Un Nouveau Sinaï biblique', R. Bibl. 39 (1930), pp. 73–83. L. Prévost, Le Sinaï hier-aujourd'hui: Étude topographique, biblique, historique, archéologique (1937). G. I. Davies, The Way of the Wilderness (Society for Old Testament Study, Monograph Series, 5; Cambridge, 1979), pp. 63–9. A. Legendre in Dict. Bibl. 5 (1908), cols. 1751–83, s.v., with bibl.; E. Lohse in TWNT 7 (1960–4), pp. 281–6 (Eng. tr., 7 (1971), pp. 282–7), s.v. Σινᾶ.

C. N. Papamichalopoulos, Ἡ μονὴ τοῦ Ὄρους Σινᾶ (Athens, 1932), with docs. M. H. L. Rabino, Le Monastère de Sainte-Catherine du Mont Sinaï: Souvenirs épigraphiques des anciens pèlerins (Cairo, 1935). G. H. Forsyth, K. Weitzmann, and others, The Monastery of Saint Catherine at Mount Sinai: The Church and Fortress of Justinian (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1974 ff.]). J. Galey, Sinai and the Monastery of St Catherine (1980), with contributions by K. Weitzmann and G. Forsyth. D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City (Oxford, 1966), pp. 168–78.

Sinai, Church of, the smallest independent Church of the Orthodox Communion. It is ruled by the 'Archbishop of Mount Sinai', the abbot of the monastery of St Catherine on the mountain, who has jurisdiction over a few daughter-houses and cells and a small number of Arabs who live in the vicinity of the monastery. The independence of the Church was proclaimed in 1575 and confirmed in 1782. The archbishop must always be consecrated by the Patr. of *Jerusalem, who in consequence has often tried, though with little success, to assert a certain supremacy over the Church.

Sinaiticus, Codex. See CODEX SINAITICUS.

Sinodos. An Ethiopic collection of canons, the first two sections of which are now often referred to as the 'Sinodos Alexandrina', since they are also preserved together in *Sahidic and Arabic; these items are assumed to go back to a lost Greek collection of the 5th cent. The 'Sinodus Alexandrina' contains four distinct documents, the first three of which are run together: the Apostolic Church Order, the Apostolic Tradition, parts of Book 8 of the *Apostolic Constitutions, and the *Apostolic Canons. The first and second of these also feature together in the Latin *Verona palimpsest lv [53].

The edns. of the Sahidic, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions are listed, with further refs., in CPG 1 (1983), pp. 222 f. (no. 1732). Eng. tr. of the first three texts in these versions by G. [W.] Horner, The Statutes of the Apostles (1904), pp. 127–363. Fr. tr. of the Arabic version of the Apostolic Canons in the edn. of the Arabic text by J. and A. Périer in PO 8 (1912), pp. 664–93. A. Faivre, 'La documentation canonico-liturgique de l'église ancienne', pt. 1, Rev. S.R. 54 (1980), pp. 204–19.

Sion. See ZION.

Sion College, London. An ecclesiastical institution founded by Thomas White (*c.*1550–1624), who left £3,000 to purchase premises for a 'college' for a 'corporation' or guild of the clergy of London and its suburbs, with almshouses for 20 people attached. To the original hall, chapel, and almshouses in London Wall, a library was added by the donation of John Simson, White's executor. The College moved to the Victoria Embankment in 1886 and until 1996 functioned chiefly as a theological and historical library. It was then agreed to sell this building and divide most of the books between *Lambeth Palace Library and *King's College, London.

E. H. Pearce, Sion College and Library (1913); G. Huelin, Sion College and Library 1912–1990 (1992).

Si quis (Lat., 'if anyone'). The public notice until 1976 issued on behalf of a candidate for a benefice, holy orders, etc., in the C of E, requiring any objectors to come forward.

Siricius, St (*c.*334–99), Bp. of *Rome from 384. His pontificate is of importance as marking a new stage in the development of Papal authority. His epistle to Himerius, Bp. of Tarragona (385), advocating a relatively lenient treatment of public penitents, is the first of the Papal *decretals. He held a synod at Rome in 386 which passed nine canons on matters of ecclesiastical discipline that were sent to the African Church. He also took active steps towards preventing the Church in E. Illyria from becoming subject to the jurisdiction of *Constantinople. In 390 he dedicated the new *basilica of St Paul on the *Ostian Way, and in 392 condemned *Jovinian. Feast day, 26 Nov.

Letters ed. P. *Coustant, OSB, Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, 1 (Paris, 1721), cols. 623–700; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 13. 1131–96. Jaffé, 1, pp. 40–2. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 216 f. J. Janini, S. Siricio y las cuatro temporas: Una investigación sobre las fuentes de la espiritualidad seglar y del Sacramentario Leoniano (Valencia, 1958). C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . de Miltiade à Sixte III (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 888–909. J. Barmby in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 696–702, s.v.; P. T. Camelot, OP, in NCE 13 (1969), pp. 258 f., s.v.; J. N. D. Kelly, Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 35 f., s.v.

Sirmium, Blasphemy of. The doctrinal formula published in Latin by the Council of Sirmium of 357, setting forth the teaching of the extreme *Arian party. All mention of the term 'substance' (substantia, quae Graece usia appellatur) and its compounds (including the *Homoousion) in Trinitarian speculation was forbidden, and the subordination of the Son to the Father asserted. Its promulgation marked the turning-point in the history of the Arian controversy. It takes its name from the description of it in St *Hilary of Poitiers' 'De synodis' as the Exemplum blasphemiae apud Sirmium.

The text is in A. Hahn, Bibliothek der Symbole und Glaubensregeln der alten Kirche (3rd edn., 1897), §161, pp. 199–201; convenient Eng. tr. in J. Stevenson (ed.), Creeds, Councils, and Controversies (1966), pp. 35–7 (no. 23).

Sirmond, Jacques (1559–1651), French *Jesuit scholar. Having entered the Society of Jesus in 1576, he was professor of literature and rhetoric from 1581 to 1590 at the Collège de *Clermont in Paris, where he numbered St *Francis de Sales among his pupils. From 1590 to 1608 he was secretary to the General of the Jesuits, C. *Aquaviva, at Rome, and while there assisted C. *Baronius in his historical works. After returning to France he became rector of the Paris College (1617) and later confessor to Louis XIII (1637–43). From 1610 onwards he published the works which established his fame as one of the greatest scholars of his century. Esp. important are his editions of the Fathers, which include St *Fulgentius' 'De veritate praedestinationis et gratiae' (1612), the works of *Paschasius Radbertus (1618) and *Theodoret of Cyrrhus (1642), the 'Opuscula' of *Eusebius of Caesarea (now thought to be by *Eusebius of Emesa, q.v.; 1643), and *Rufinus' 'De Fide' (1650). His other writings include Concilia Antiqua Galliae (1629), a dissertation Dionysii Parisiensis et Dionysii Areopagitae discrimen (1641) which raised a long-drawn-out controversy owing to its attack on the traditional identification of the two *Dionysii, and various polemical works.

Opera Varia nunc primum collecta (not quite complete), ed. J. de La Baune, SJ (5 vols., fol., Paris, 1696, with brief biog; repr. Venice, 1728). H. *Valesius, Oratio in Obitum J. Sirmondi (Paris, 1651). H. Mordek, 'Der Codex Andegavensis Jacques Sirmonds', Traditio, 25 (1969), pp. 485–98. Sommervogel, 7 (1896), pp. 1237–61. P. Galtier, SJ, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2186–93.

Sisters of Mercy. (1) A name widely used in the 19th cent. of members of any (esp. Anglican) religious community engaged in nursing or similar work. A penitentiary conducted by such sisters was known as a 'House of Mercy'. (2) A RC sisterhood founded in *Dublin in 1827.

Sistine Chapel. The principal chapel of the *Vatican Palace, so called because it was built for Pope *Sixtus IV (1471–84). It is used for the principal Papal ceremonies and also by the cardinals for the election of a new Pope when there is a vacancy. The chapel is celebrated for the frescoes by *Michelangelo and other artists on its walls and ceiling, chief among them being Michelangelo's Last Judgement covering the altar wall. The decorations of the chapel also included a set of tapestries commissioned from *Raphael by Pope *Leo X illustrating scenes from the lives of St *Peter and St *Paul (now elsewhere in the Vatican Palace).

E. Steinmann, Die Sixtinische Kapelle (2 vols., 1901–5), with plates (2 vols., 1901–5). C. de Tolnay, Michelangelo, 2: The Sistine Ceiling (Princeton, NJ, 1945), incl. full bibl. L. D. Ettlinger, The Sistine Chapel before Michelangelo: Religious Imagery and Papal Primacy (Oxford, 1965). M. Giacometi (ed.), The Sistine Chapel: Michelangelo Rediscovered (1986). F. Hartt and others, The Sistine Chapel (2 vols., 1991). J. Shearman, Raphael's Cartoons in the Collection of Her Majesty the Queen and the Tapestries for the Sistine Chapel [1972].

Sistine Madonna (Madonna di S. Sisto). One of *Raphael's most famous altarpieces, now in Dresden. It shows the BVM and Child floating on the clouds of heaven, between Pope *Sixtus II and St *Barbara, as a transcendent vision, quite different from the realistic treatment of the theme normal in the 15th cent. It was painted in Rome in 1512–13 for Pope *Julius II, whose features are given to St Sixtus, and presented by him to the Benedictine abbey of San Sisto at Piacenza. It has no connection with the *Sistine Chapel.

M. Putscher, Raphaels Sixtinische Madonna (Tübingen, 1955). L. Dussler, Raphael: A Critical Catalogue (1971; rev. Eng. tr. of work pub. in Munich, 1966), pp. 36–8, with plate 83.

Sitz im Leben (Ger., 'place in life'). A term used particularly in biblical criticism, to signify the circumstances (most often in the life of a community) in which a particular story, saying, etc., was either created or preserved and transmitted.

Six Articles. The Articles imposed in June 1539 at the King's bidding by the Religion Act 1539 (sometimes called 'the Whip with Six Strings'), to prevent the spread of Reformation doctrines and practices. They (1) maintained *transubstantiation and (2) *Communion in one kind, (3) enforced clerical *celibacy, (4) upheld *monastic vows and (5) defended private *Masses and (6) *auricular confession. The bill was introduced into the Lords by the Duke of Norfolk, and all the lay peers were subservient. A minority of the bishops, however, resisted. Nicholas *Shaxton, Bp. of *Salisbury, and H. *Latimer, Bp. of *Worcester, resigned their sees, and T. *Cranmer sent his wife back to Germany. In operation the act turned out to be less severe than its critics feared, as its requirements were widely ignored even by those holding high ecclesiastical office. It was repealed in 1547.

Text in Gee and Hardy, pp. 303–19 (no. 65); the Articles, without the rest of the Act, repr. in Bettenson, pp. 328 f. G. Redworth, 'A Study in the Formulation of Policy: The Genesis and Evolution of the Act of Six Articles', JEH 37 (1986), pp. 42–67.

Six Points, the. The *Eastward Position, *Eucharistic Vestments, the *Mixed Chalice, *Altar Lights, Unleavened *Bread at the *Eucharist, and *Incense. Their introduction into the C of E followed a campaign, set on foot *c.*1870 under the indirect influence of the *Oxford Movement, to restore these and many similar ceremonial usages. Their crystallization into 'six points' dates from a resolution of the *English Church Union, proposed by T. T. *Carter and passed at the annual meeting of the Union on 15 June 1875. See also PURCHAS JUDGEMENT, LINCOLN JUDGEMENT.

Six Preachers. In *Canterbury Cathedral, six preachers were part of the New Foundation of 1541, appointed by T. *Cranmer 'to preach against the Pope and his supremacy'. Supplied with an income of £24 a year, lodgings in the Precincts, a horse, and firewood, they were required to preach every saint's day, not being a Sunday, and to travel round the diocese. Still appointed by the Abp. of Canterbury (normally for a period of five years), they now receive no emoluments and are only required to preach once a year at Evensong in the cathedral on a Sunday afternoon.

D. I. Hill, The Six Preachers of Canterbury Cathedral 1541–1982 (Ramsgate, 1982).

Sixtus II, St (d. 258), or 'Xystus', Pope. On his accession in 257 to the Roman see, he resumed relations with St *Cyprian and the Churches of Africa and Asia Minor, which had been broken off under his predecessor St *Stephen I on account of the controversy on the validity of heretical baptism. Sixtus himself, however, continued the Roman practice of not rebaptizing heretics. He suffered martyrdom under the second edict of the Emp. Valerian (Aug. 258) and was buried in the catacomb of St *Callistus. He was one of the most highly venerated of early martyrs. His name is found in the Roman calendar of the middle of the 4th cent. and still stands in the *Canon of the Mass. Feast day, 7 (formerly 6) Aug.

He is to be distinguished from an earlier St Sixtus (I), who was Bp. of Rome *c.*117–*c.*127. Feast day, 3 (before 1922, 6) Apr. (in the *Roman Martyrology).

Jaffé, 1, pp. 21 f. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 155 f. AASS, Aug. 2. (1735), pp. 124–42; also Nov. 2 (pt. 2; 1931), pp. 420 f., with full refs. P. Corssen, 'Der Schauplatz der Passion des römischen Bischofs Sixtus II', ZNTW 16 (1915), pp. 147–166, with refs.; P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, 6 (ST 33; 1920), no. 4, 'Un recente studio sul luogo del martirio di S. Sisto II', pp. 145–78. É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2194–6, s.v. 'Sixte II'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, and M. Combet-Farnoux in DACL 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1501–15, s.v. 'Sixte II', with bibl.; S. Carletti and C. M. Carpano in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (1968), cols. 1256–62, s.v. 'Sisto II'.

The Sayings of a pagan moralist Sextus, wrongly ascribed to the Pope by *Rufinus, ed. H. Chadwick (Texts and Studies, 5; Cambridge, 1959); id., 'The Sentences of Sextus and of the Pythagoreans', JTS NS 11 (1960), p. 349.

Sixtus IV (1414–84), Pope from 1471. Born of a poor family, Francesco della Rovere entered the *Franciscan Order, where he became a successful lecturer, General in 1464, and Cardinal in 1467. Elected Pope in 1471, he undertook a crusade against the Turks, but with little success, and soon turned almost entirely to Italian politics and the aggrandizement of his family. With him the nepotism of the Renaissance Popes entered its worst stage and the spiritual interests of the Church were almost wholly relegated to the background. His nephews, one of whom was the later Pope *Julius II, implicated the Pope in political intrigues with the Italian cities, esp. in the conspiracy of the Pazzi, which resulted in the murder of Giuliano de' Medici and a war with Florence (1478–80). His nepotism also led to considerable confusion of the Papal finances and troubles in the Pontifical States. Besides increasing the privileges of the Franciscans and other Mendicant Orders and furthering the cult of the BVM, Sixtus was a great protector of arts and scholarship. He founded the Sistine Choir, built the *Sistine Chapel, and enriched the *Vatican Library. Sixtus was unfortunate in his training and his circumstances. His extravagance arose from his inexperience as a member of a Mendicant Order and from the want of any worthy relatives on whom to exercise his natural generosity. In his personal life he appears to have been blameless and also a passable theologian.

P. M. Sevesi, OFM (ed.), 'Lettere autografe di Francesco della Rovere da Savona. . .', AFH 28 (1935), pp. 198–234 and 477–99. Account of his life to 1474 by B. *Platina (d. 1481) in L. A. *Muratori (ed.), Rerum Italicarum Scriptores (2nd edn.), 3, pt. 1 (Città di Castello [1932]), pp. 398–420. E. Lee, Sixtus IV and Men of Letters (Temi e Testi, 26; Rome, 1978), with further docs. M. Miglio and others (eds.), Un Pontificato ed una Città, Sisto IV (1471–1484): Atti del Convegno, Roma, 3–7 dicembre 1984 (Scuola Vaticana di Paleografia, Diplomatica e Archivistica, Littera Antiqua, 5; 1986). C. Bauer, 'Studi per la storia delle finanze papali durante il pontificato di Sisto IV', Archivio della R. Società di Storia Patria, 50 (1927), pp. 314–404. A. Matanić, OFM, 'Xystus Pp. IV scripsitne librum "de conceptione beate Virginis Marie"?', Antonianum, 29 (1954), pp. 573–8. Pastor, 4 (1894), pp. 197–471; Fliche and Martin, 15 (1951), esp. pp. 74–90. A. Teetaert, OFM Cap., in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2199–217, s.v. 'Sixte IV', with bibl.

Sixtus V (1521–90), Pope from 1585. The son of a gardener, Felice Peretti was educated by the *Franciscans of Montalto, where he took the habit at the age of 12. Ordained priest in 1547, he soon became a famous preacher and a friend of St *Ignatius Loyola and St *Philip Neri. He was appointed Consultor of the *Inquisition and professor at the Roman University in 1560, and General of his order and Bp. of S. Agata in 1566. In 1570 he was created cardinal by *Pius V, whose confessor he was. He was Bp. of Fermo from 1571 to 1577 and in 1585 was elected Pope. His pontificate was devoted to far-reaching reforms in the government of the Church and of the Papal States, ruthlessly implemented. He suppressed brigandage in his territories and put the Papal finances on a sound basis by the sale of certain offices, the setting-up of more '*montes', and additional taxes. Continuing the reform of the Curia, he fixed the number of cardinals at 70, and by the bull 'Immensa Aeterni' of 1588 established 15 congregations (see ROMAN CONGREGATIONS). In his European policy he endeavoured to uphold the balance of the Catholic powers, and thus distrusted the ambitions of *Philip II, who wished to split up France. A patron of art and scholarship, Sixtus V was esp. concerned with the embellishment of Rome, though he had scant appreciation of its antiquities. He built the *Lateran Palace and the *Vatican Library, had the cupola of St Peter's finished, and supplied the city with drinking water, the 'Acqua Felice', which was conducted over a distance of 20 miles. He also inaugurated an edition of the *Vulgate (q.v.), which, after the corrections made under *Clement VIII, long remained the standard text.

Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 8 (Naples, 1883), pp. 563–1025, and 9 (Turin, 1865), pp. 1–381. 'Acta Consistorialia', Analecta Juris Pontificii, 9 (Rome, Paris, and Brussels, 1872), cols. 841–74. G. Cugnoni, 'Documenti chigiani concernenti Felice Peretti, Sisto V', Archivio della Società Romana di Storia Patria, 5 (1882), pp. 1–32, 210–304, and 542–89. G. Leti, Vita di Sisto V (3 vols., Amsterdam, 1721; Eng. tr., 1724); J. A. de Hübner, Sixte-Quint (2 vols., 1870; Eng. tr., 1872; rev. Ger. tr., 1932). S. Klein, Sixtus der Fünfte nach dem grösseren Werke des Barons von Hübner bearbeitet (Sammlung historischer Bildnisse, 10; 1873). L. M. Personè, Sisto Quinto: Il genio della potenza (Florence, 1935). I. de Feo, Sisto V: Un grande papa tra Rinascimento e Barocco (Storia e documenti, 75; Milan, 1987). E. A. Segretain, Sixte-Quint et Henri IV (1861). M. de Boüard, 'Sixte-Quint, Henri IV et la Ligue. La Légation du Cardinal Caetani en France (1589–1590)', RQH 116 (1932), pp. 59–140. R. Schiffmann, Roma felix: Aspekte der städtebaulichen Gestaltung Roms unter Papst Sixtus V. (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 28, 36; 1985). H. Gamrath, Roma Sancta Renovata: Studi sull'urbanistica di Roma nella seconda metà del sec. XVI con particolare riferimento al pontificato di Sisto V (1585–1590) (Analecta Romana Instituti Danici, Suppl. 12; 1987). U. Balzani in CMH 3 (1904), pp. 422–55. Pastor, 21 (1932) and 22 (1932), pp. 1–312. A. Teertaert, OFM Cap., in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2217–38, s.v. 'Sixte-Quint'; G. B. Picotti in EC 11 (1953), cols. 780–7, s.v. 'Sisto V'; D. R. Campbell in NCE 13 (1969), pp. 273–5, s.v.

slavery. A state of servitude by which a man is the property of another man. It is opposed on the one hand to human dignity, which does not allow a person to be treated as a chattel, and violates a man's rights to liberty of conscience, integrity of soul and body, and the stability of family life, and, on the other hand, tends to breed vice and cruelty in the owner. In the OT, however, a mitigated form of slavery was tolerated by the Mosaic Law (Exod. 21: 1–11, Lev. 25: 44–55), and in NT times it was an integral part of the social system whose sudden abolition would have reduced the Roman Empire to chaos. There is no explicit teaching on the subject in the Gospels, but the spiritual equality of men as children of the same Father, together with the *Golden Rule and the Lord's affection for the poor and oppressed, provided the principles which were slowly to penetrate the nascent Christian society. They were formulated by St *Paul, who recognized neither bond nor free in Christ (Gal. 3: 28, 1 Cor. 12: 13, Col. 3: 11), though he did not condemn slavery but rather strove to imbue both masters and slaves with the new Christian spirit of charity which was finally to abolish the institution itself. This teaching is most conspicuous in his Ep. to Philemon and in the exhortations of Col. 3: 22–4: 1 (cf. Eph. 6: 5–9). A similar attitude was prevalent in the early Church until the 3rd cent., Christian masters and slaves, who shared in the same sacraments, being still more closely drawn together by their common sufferings and experience of martyrdom. From *Constantine onwards the Imperial legislation followed the Christian sentiment and many mitigations were introduced, esp. in the 6th cent., by *Justinian. Slaves who, with the consent of their masters, became priests were automatically freed, whereas entrance into the religious life did not even presuppose this consent. After the christianization of N. and E. Europe slavery was gradually transformed into the much milder institution of serfdom, which in its turn slowly disappeared in and after the Renaissance. A cruel form of slavery, however, reappeared after the fall of *Constantinople in 1453, when the Turks reduced large numbers of Christians to a servitude which was only mitigated by the devoted work of the religious orders such as the *Trinitarians, the *Mercedarians, and St *Vincent de Paul's 'Congregation of the Mission'. A renewed outbreak of slave-owning among Christians took place after the discovery of America, when the Spanish, Portuguese, and British settlers made slaves of the Indians and later also introduced negro slaves from Africa despite the steady resistance of the missionaries, esp. the *Dominicans and the *Jesuits, who set up a model colony without slaves in Paraguay, and despite the condemnations of successive Popes, e.g. *Paul III in 1537, *Pius V in 1567, and *Urban VIII in 1639. In the 18th cent. the movement against slavery was taken up by the *Quakers, esp. W. *Penn, who abolished slavery in Pennsylvania, and philanthropists like T. Clarkson and W. *Wilberforce. The slave trade was made illegal in 1808, and slavery was finally suppressed in the British Empire in 1833. In the USA, at the conclusion of the Civil War in Dec. 1865, a constitutional amendment for ever prohibited slavery throughout the States.

The question of slavery has been much discussed by theologians. Acc. to several of the Fathers, e.g. St *Gregory of Nazianzus and St *Augustine, it was a state of life which was consequent on the Fall; acc. to St *Thomas Aquinas it was a chastisement. It has been admitted as, theoretically, not contrary to the natural law by later theologians such as L. *Lessius and J. de Lugo, if arising from contract, birth, in punishment for a crime, or as the result of a just war. It is now generally condemned on account of the almost inevitable abuses accompanying it and of its opposition to the spirit of the Gospel. The Catechism of the Catholic Church (1992; no. 2414) regards the enslavement or sale of people as contravening the seventh Commandment ('Thou shalt not steal').

T. Clarkson, The History of the Rise, Progress, and Accomplishment of the Abolition of the African Slave-Trade by the British Parliament (2 vols., 1808; new edn. with prefatory remarks on the subsequent abolition of slavery, 1839); W. L. Mathieson, British Slavery and its Abolition 1823–1838 (1926); id., British Slave Emancipation 1838–1849 (1932); id., Great Britain and the Slave Trade 1839–1865 (1929); C. W. W. Greenidge, Slavery (1958), and other works of this author. A. Katz, Christentum und Sklaverei (Vienna [1926]); J. F. Maxwell, Slavery and the Catholic Church: The History of Catholic Teaching concerning the Moral Legitimacy of the Institution of Slavery (Chichester and London, 1975). P. Allard, Les Esclaves chrétiens, depuis les premiers temps de l'Eglise jusqu'à la fin de la domination romaine en Occident (1876); H. Wallon, Histoire de l'esclavage dans l'antiquité (3 vols., 1879); J. Vogt, Sklaverei und Humanität (Historia, Einzelschriften 8; Wiesbaden, 1965; 2nd edn., 1972; Eng. tr., Ancient Slavery and the Ideal of Man (Oxford [1974]); M. I. Finley, Ancient Slavery and Modern Ideology (1980); C. W. Weber, Sklaverei im Altertum (Düsseldorf and Vienna [1981]). H. Langenfeld, Christianisierungspolitik und Sklavengesetzgebung der römischen Kaiser von Konstantin bis Theodosius II (Antiquitas, Reihe I, 26; 1977). F. Laub, Die Begegnung des frühen Christentums mit der antiken Sklaverei (Stuttgarter Bibelstudien, 107; 1982). R. Klein, Die Sklaverei in der Sicht der Bishöfe Ambrosius und Augustinus (Forschungen zur Antiken Sklaverei, 20; Stuttgart, 1988). J. Heers, Esclaves et domestiques au Moyen-Age dans le monde méditerranéen [1981]. J. Höffner, Christentum und Menschenwürde: Das Anliegen der spanischen Kolonialethik im goldenen Zeitalter (Trier, 1947). D. B. Davies, The Problem of Slavery in Western Culture (Ithaca, NY, 1966; Harmondsworth, 1970), and other works of this author; E. D. Genovese, Roll, Jordan, Roll: The World the Slaves Made (New York [1974]; London, 1975); C. D. Rice, The Rise and Fall of Black Slavery (1975); R. Anstey, The Atlantic Slave Trade and British Abolition 1760–1810 (1975); C. Bolt and S. Drescher (eds.), Anti-Slavery, Religion, and Reform: Essays in Memory of Roger Anstey (Folkestone, 1980). For the history of the abolition of slavery in the British Empire see also lives of W. Wilberforce, etc. J. D. Dutilleul in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 457–520, s.v. 'Esclavage'; L. D. Agate in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 601–12, s.v. 'Slavery, Christian'; J. Weeger, SJ, and A. Derville, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 4 (pt. 1; 1960), cols. 1067–80, s.v. 'Esclave'.

Slavonic Book of Enoch. See ENOCH, BOOKS OF.

Sleidanus, Johannes (1506–56), historian of the German Reformation. Born at Schleiden near Aachen, he studied classics at Liège and *Cologne and jurisprudence at *Paris and Orléans. Adopting Protestant views (exact date unknown), in 1536 he entered the service of the Bellay brothers, who were in correspondence with the *Schmalkaldic League, and in 1540–1 he was employed in diplomatic missions for the French crown. In 1545, thanks to the efforts of M. *Bucer and J. *Sturm, he was commissioned by the Schmalkaldic League to write the history of the Protestant cause in Germany. When war interrupted his work, *Edward VI at T. *Cranmer's intercession gave him a stipend in England (1551). But he soon returned to the Continent, where he represented a group of S. German cities at the Council of *Trent (1551–2) and took part in the negotiations of the German Protestants with Henry II of France in 1552. In 1554 he was appointed Professor of Law at Strasbourg, where he completed his De Statu Religionis et Reipublicae Carolo V Caesare Commentarii (2 vols.

[Strasbourg], 1555; Eng. tr. by J. Daws, 1560), now valued chiefly for the many official documents included in it. His other works include a Latin version of Bucer's Shorter Catechism (1544).

Briefwechsel ed. H. Baumgarten (Strasbourg, 1881). Id., Über Sleidans Leben und Briefwechsel (1878); W. Friedensburg, Johannes Sleidanus (Leipzig, 1935), with refs. A. G. Dickens, 'Johannes Sleidan and Reformation History', in R. B. Knox (ed.), Reformation, Conformity and Dissent: Essays in honour of Geoffrey Nuttall (1977), pp. 17–43. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 2 (1935), pp. 279–81 (nos. 20151–78).

Slessor, Mary (1848–1915), missionary of the *United Presbyterian Church. Born in Aberdeen, she spent her early life in work in a factory. In 1875 she offered herself for service in Africa to the Foreign Missions Board of her Church, and the next year sailed for the Calabar coast of W. Africa. Here she gained great influence with the native population, not least in successfully bringing to an end many tribal abuses (twin murder, human sacrifice, witchcraft, cruelty). In 1905 the Government, recognizing her authority, invested 'Ma Slessor' (as she was popularly called) with the powers of a magistrate, which she continued to exercise until her death.

Life by W. P. Livingstone (London, 1915). C. Christian and G. Plummer, God and one Redhead: Mary Slessor of Calabar (1970); J. Buchan, The Expendable Mary Slessor (Edinburgh, 1980).

Smaragdus (d. after 825), abbot of St-Mihiel. Of Spanish or Aquitaine origin, he became abbot of Castellion (near the source of the tiny R. Marsoupe), and was responsible for transferring the community to St-Mihiel, some 5 miles distant, where the Marsoupe flows into the R. Meuse. He took part in the Council of Aachen in 809 and formulated its conclusions in a letter sent by *Charlemagne to Pope *Leo III. He wrote a commentary on the grammarian Donatus and a number of theological and ascetical works, incl. the 'Via Regia', on the spiritual formation of a prince, addressed to either Charlemagne or *Louis the Pious, and, most importantly, an 'Expositio' on the Rule of St *Benedict, composed after 817 and connected with the monastic reforms of St *Benedict of Aniane.

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PL 102. 15–976. Crit. edns. of his 'Carmina' by E. Duemmler in MGH, Poetae, 1 (1881), pp. 605–19; of Expositio in Regulam S. Benedicti by A. Spannagel and P. Engelbert, OSB (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticum, 8; Siegburg, 1974), and of Liber in partibus Donati by B. Löfstedt and others (CCCM 68; 1986). F. Rädle, Studien zu Smaragd von Saint-Mihiel (Medium Aevum, Philologische Studien, 29; Munich, 1974). O. Eberhardt, Via Media: Der Fürstenspiegel Smaragds von St Mihiel und seine literarische Gattung (Münsterische Mittelalter-Schriften, 28; 1977). J. Leclercq, OSB, 'Smaragdus', in P. E. Szarmach (ed.), An Introduction to the Medieval Mystics of Europe (Albany, NY [1984]), pp. 37–51.

Smalkaldic Articles, League. See SCHMALKALDIC ARTICLES, LEAGUE.

Smart, Peter (1569–*c.*1652), *Puritan. He was educated at Broadgates Hall and *Christ Church, Oxford. In 1598 he was appointed Headmaster of *Durham Grammar School, following the move of William James from the Deanery of Christ Church to that of Durham. When James became Bp. of Durham (1607–17), Smart's rise was swift; from 1609 he was James's chaplain and a prebendary of Durham Cathedral, and from 1612 Master of Gateshead Hospital. By 1625 he was a member of the *High Commission for Durham. He strongly resisted the introduction by Richard Neile (Bp. of Durham, 1617–28) of High Church ornaments into the cathedral, and on 27 July 1628 he preached a sermon against J. *Cosin, one of the chief promoters of the advanced ceremonial, which was published as The Vanity and Downfall of Superstitious Popish Ceremonies (1628). Smart was brought before the Durham High Commission and on 2 Sept. sequestered from his prebend. Early in 1629 the case was removed to the Southern High Commission, but referred to the *York High Commission; in 1630 Smart was fined £400 (or possibly £500), and on refusing to pay, imprisoned and degraded. He was released in Nov. 1640, when the Long Parliament ordered the prosecution of Cosin, and in Jan. 1641 he was restored to his preferments. In 1643 he took the *Solemn League and Covenant. In his last years he was given various sequestered benefices.

W. H. D. Longstaffe (ed.), The Acts of the High Commission Court within the Diocese of Durham (Surtees Society, 34; 1858), pp. 197–250 (Appendix A). G. W. Kitchin, Seven Sages of Durham (1911), pp. 97–132. A. Gordon in DNB 52 (1897), pp. 392 f.; L. Pullan in DECH, pp. 560 f., s.v.

'Smectymnuus'. The professed writer of a book pub. in March 1641 to defend the *Presbyterian theory of the Christian ministry in reply to Bp. J. *Hall's Humble Remonstrance. The name was made up of the initials of its five real authors, namely Stephen Marshall, Edmund *Calamy, Thomas Young, Matthew Newcomen, and William Spurstow. The form 'Smectymnuan' was used both of the actual composers of the treatise and of others who accepted its views. On its publication J. Hall replied with a Defence of that Remonstrance; in May 1641 J. *Milton, who had prob. had a hand in the orig. Smectymnuan work, defended 'Smectymnuus' in Of Reformation touching Church Discipline in England and the Causes that hitherto have hindered it, and there were several further polemical exchanges.

Smith, George Adam (1856–1942), OT scholar. Born at Calcutta and educated at Edinburgh, *Tübingen, and Leipzig, he became minister of Queen's Cross Free Church, Aberdeen in 1882, professor of OT at the United Free Church College at Glasgow in 1892 and Principal of the University of Aberdeen in 1909. He travelled extensively in Egypt, Syria, and Palestine. His writings include The Book of Isaiah (Expositor's Bible, 2 vols., 1888–90); Historical Geography of the Holy Land (1894, 25th edn., 1931, still unsurpassed); The Twelve Prophets (Expositor's Bible, 2 vols., 1896–7); *Life of Henry Drummond (1899); Jerusalem (2 vols., 1907–8); The Early Poetry of Israel (Schweich Lectures, 1912); Deuteronomy (Cambridge Bible, 1918); and Jeremiah (1923).

L. Adam Smith, George Adam Smith: A Personal Memoir and Family Chronicle (1943). W. Manson in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 792–4.

Smith, John (*c.*1554–1612), the 'Se-Baptist'. See SMYTH, JOHN.

Smith, John (1618–52), *Cambridge Platonist. He was educated in the *Puritan foundation of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where B. *Whichcote was his tutor. In 1644 he was transferred to Queens' College and here lectured. Under the influence of Whichcote and the study of *Plato and *Plotinus he became one of the leading Cambridge Platonists, upholding spiritual religion against the acrimonious theological disputes of his age. His work was cut short by his early death. S. *Patrick, a warm admirer, preached his funeral sermon.

His Select Discourses, ed. J. Worthington (London, 1660), with the sermon preached at his funeral and a short account of his life and death by S. Patrick, pp. 483–526; 4th edn. rev. by H. G. Williams (Cambridge, 1859). M. Micheletti, Il Pensiero Religioso di John Smith, Platonico di Cambridge (Centro Internazionale di Studi di Filosofia della Religione. Filosofia e Religione, 12; Padua, 1976). E. I. Watkin, Poets and Mystics (1953), pp. 238–56. See also works cited under CAMBRIDGE PLATONISTS.

Smith, William Robertson (1846–94), Scottish theologian and Semitic scholar. Educated at Aberdeen, Edinburgh, Bonn, and Göttingen, he became professor of oriental languages and OT exegesis at the Free Church College, Aberdeen, in 1870. In 1875 he was made a member of the company for the RV of the OT. About the same time his articles in the 9th edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica began to appear, and henceforward Smith was in the centre of the storm provoked by the *Higher Criticism of the OT. His writings having been severely criticized by a committee of the General Assembly of the Free Church as undermining belief in the inspiration of the Bible, in 1881 he was removed from his chair. He spent the rest of his life at Cambridge, where he was elected in 1885 a Fellow of Christ's College. Of his two celebrated books, The OT in the Jewish Church (1881) and The Prophets of Israel (1882; 2nd edn., by T. K. *Cheyne, 1895), both series of lectures, the former popularized among English readers J. *Wellhausen's theory of the structure and date of the Pentateuch and of the development of the Israelite religion; the latter work expounded on this basis the life and teaching of the early prophets. Later Smith extended his researches into the whole field of Semitic religion. Through The Religion of the Semites (1889; 3rd edn., by S. A.*Cook, 1927) his thesis that the original leading idea in sacrifice was that of communion with the Deity rather than propitiation became widely known and accepted, though it is now generally recognized to be an over-simplification.

Collection of his Lectures and Essays (mainly unpub.) ed. J. S. Black and G. Chrystal (London, 1902). Idd., The Life of William Robertson Smith (1912). T. O. Beidelman, W. Robertson Smith and the Sociological Study of Religion (Chicago and London, 1974). J. [W.] Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), pp. 275–81. J. S. Black in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 160–2, s.v.

Smithfield, in London, originally Smoothfield. The place was noted formerly as the site of executions, esp. during the Reformation period, when in the 'fires of Smithfield' during *Mary Tudor's reign about 300 heretics were burnt there. It is now famous as a meat market.

Smyrna. One of the principal cities of Roman Asia, now Izmir on the W. coast of Turkey. The Christian community there was one of the '*Seven Churches' addressed in Rev. (2: 8–11); it was warned of coming persecution and of hostility from the Jewish community, which was numerous in this mercantile port. Later it was visited by St *Ignatius, who afterwards addressed letters to the Church and its bishop, St *Polycarp. The martyrdom of Polycarp in the city's stadium was abetted by a mob of Jews and pagans. St *Irenaeus was prob. a native of Smyrna; later martyrs from Smyrna included St *Pionius.

In Late Antiquity Smyrna's traditional rivalry with *Ephesus was expressed in competition over the relative status of their bishoprics, but the Bp. of Smyrna achieved metropolitan status only in the 9th cent. The city was held by various powers during the Byzantine era. It passed to the Ottoman Turks in 1414, but continued to have a substantial Christian population.

From the 17th cent. Christian numbers were augmented by W. merchants; in the 19th cent. there were also American Protestant missionaries. There was a Muslim majority only after the Greco-Turkish war of 1922–3 and the exchange of population which followed it.

C. J. Cadoux, Ancient Smyrna: A History of the City from the Earliest Times to 324 A.D. (Oxford, 1938). C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1986]), pp. 57–77. H. Ahrweiler, 'L'histoire et la géographie de la région de Smyrne entre les deux occupations turques (1081–1317), particulièrement au XIII^e siècle', Travaux et Mémoires, 1 (1965), pp. 1–204. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 1519–48, s.v. See also bibl. to POLYCARP, ST, and comm. on REVELATION, BOOK OF.

Smyth, or Smith, John (?1570–1612), the 'Se-Baptist' and reputed founder of the *General Baptists. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1594, he was ordained in the C of E. He became a *Puritan preacher at *Lincoln (1600–2) and later (by 1607) was a *Separatist pastor in Gainsborough. He led a company of exiles to Amsterdam *c.*1608 and there, after baptizing himself (hence the name Se-Baptist), established in 1609 the first modern *Baptist Church. He styled his community 'The Brethren of the Separation of the Second English Church at Amsterdam'. Membership consisted of such as had confessed their faith in Baptism. From now onwards Smyth passed increasingly under *Mennonite influence. He died in Amsterdam in 1612. In the same year a company of his associates returned to London to establish the first Baptist Church in Great Britain. Among Smyth's writings were A Pattern of True Prayer (1605; on the *Lord's Prayer) and The Differences of the Churches of the Separation (1608).

Collected edn. of his works by W. T. Whitley (Tercentenary edn. for the Baptist Historical Society, 2 vols., Cambridge, 1915), with Life, vol. 1, pp. xvii–cxxii. W. H. Burgess, John Smith, Se-Baptist, Thomas Helwys and the First Baptist Church in England (1911). B. R. White, The English Separatist Tradition from the Marian Martyrs to the Pilgrim Fathers (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971), pp. 116–41; S. Brachlow, The Communion of Saints: Radical Puritan and Separatist Ecclesiology 1570–1625 (ibid., 1988), passim. J. R. Coggins, John Smyth's Congregation: English Separatism, Mennonite Influence, and the Elect Nation (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, 32; Scottdale, Pa. [1991]).

sobornost. A Russian term with no exact English equivalent. It signifies (1) 'catholicity' (the word soborny is used in Slavonic to translate 'catholic' in the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed); (2) 'conciliarity' (the word sobor in Russian means 'assembly' or 'council'). In modern Russian theology (e.g. of A. S. *Khomiakoff and S. *Bulgakov), the word denotes primarily the unity of many persons within the organic fellowship of the Church. In this unity each member retains his full freedom and personal integrity, while at the same time sharing in the common and corporate life of the whole. Russian writers claim 'sobornost' as a special characteristic of the Orthodox Church, contrasted with the emphasis on juridical authority in the RC Church and the excessive individualism of the Protestant communions.

Social Gospel. The most conspicuous movement representing the social aspects of Christianity in American and Canadian Protestantism in the late 19th and early 20th cents. The impact of the industrial revolution and urbanization led to the emergence of various movements of Christian social thought in W. Europe (e.g. *Christian Socialism), and the work of such British leaders as F. D. *Maurice, C. *Kingsley, and H. S. *Holland was well known to those who shaped the Social Gospel in America. They protested against the injustices suffered by the working classes, championed the rights of labour, and criticized the excessive individualism of prevailing social and economic views. Washington Gladden (1836–1918), a prominent *Congregational minister and prolific author who defended the right of working people to form unions in a time of intense strife between capital and labour, became known as the 'father' of the Social Gospel. Josiah Strong (1847–1916), author of Our Country (1885), organized interdenominational gatherings that promoted the movement while he was secretary of the (American) Evangelical Alliance; the economist Richard T. Ely (1854–1943) contributed two significant books, Social Aspects of Christianity (1889) and The Social Law of Service (1896); while W. *Rauschenbusch became the foremost prophet of the movement. In Canada, Salem Bland (1859–1950) was the leading interpreter of Social Gospel thought and J. S. Woodsworth (1874–1942) its most conspicuous practitioner. The Social Gospel was esp. influential in the Congregational, *Episcopal, *Baptist, *Methodist, and *Presbyterian Churches. It also stimulated the growth of interdenominational organizations, such as the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America (1908).

Though the Social Gospel was not theologically homogeneous, it was based largely on liberal theology, with its characteristic emphases on the immanence of God, the organic nature of society, human brotherhood, the teaching of Christ as the primary source of ethics, and the progressive, post-millennial coming of the Kingdom of God on earth in the near future. The movement had a high view of human nature and its potentiality, stressed the idea of progress, was reformist in tone, and had a somewhat utopian cast. As an aggressive, advancing movement it passed its zenith after the First World War, but it left a legacy of continuing importance in the theological, ecumenical, and social thought of many Churches.

R. T. Handy (ed.), The Social Gospel in America, 1870 1920: Gladden, Ely, Rauschenbusch (Library of Protestant Thought; New York, 1966). C. H. Hopkins, The Rise of the Social Gospel in American Protestantism, 1865 1915 (Yale Studies in Religious Education, 14; 1940); [A.] R. Allen, The Social Passion: Religion and Social Reform in Canada, 1914–1928 (Toronto, 1971); R. C. White, Jun., and C. H. Hopkins, The Social Gospel: Religion and Reform in Changing America (Philadelphia, 1976); D. K. Gorrell, The Age of Social Responsibility: The Social Gospel in the Progressive Era 1900 1920 (Macon, Ga. [1988]); S. Curtis, A Consuming Faith: The Social Gospel and Modern American Culture (Baltimore and London [1991]); R. E. Luker, The Social Gospel in Black and White: American Racial Reform, 1885–1912 (Chapel Hill, NC, and London [1991]).

Socialism, Christian. See CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM.

Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. See SPCK.

Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. See SPG.

Society of Friends. See FRIENDS, SOCIETY OF.

Society of Jesus. See JESUITS.

Society of St John the Evangelist (SSJE). The Anglican society of mission priests and laymen, popularly known as the '*Cowley Fathers'. It was founded in 1865 by R. M. *Benson, then vicar of St James's, Cowley, and is thus the oldest Anglican community for men religious. While a life of prayer under the monastic vows is its first object, the society is also occupied in missionary and educational works. It is now constituted in three congregations—English, American, and Canadian—each with its own superior and chapter, and there are houses in Oxford and London; Cambridge (Mass.) and Boston; and Bracebridge (Ontario).

H. E. W. Slade, SSJE, A Work Begun: The Story of the Cowley Fathers in India, 1874 1967 (1970).

Society of the Holy Cross (SSC from the Latin form, 'Societas Sanctae Crucis'). An *Anglo-Catholic society of clergy founded in 1855 by C. F. *Lowder and others. Modelled on the Mission Priests established by St *Vincent de Paul, it aimed to promote a stricter rule of life among the clergy, home missions to the poor, and the publication of works in defence of Catholic faith and practice. Members were to follow one of three rules of life of varying strictness, the white, the red, and the green. A year after its foundation it began the revival of *retreats in the C of E. In the 1890s the Society pressed for the 1549 Book of *Common Prayer to be made the model for liturgical revision, and it encouraged the revival of sacramental *confession. Lord Redesdale's denunciation in the House of Lords of a privately printed manual for confessors (*The Priest in Absolution, q.v.) whose compilation the Society had encouraged, brought it to public notice and provoked a hostile reaction in *Convocation.

J. Embry, The Catholic Movement and the Society of the Holy Cross (1931).

Socinianism. See the following entry, and UNITARIANISM.

Socinus. The Latinized name of two Italian religious teachers, uncle and nephew.

(1) Lelio Francesco Maria Sozini (1525–62), a native of Siena, came of a cultivated family. He was educated by his father, Mariano Sozini, junior (1482–1556), himself a jurist, at *Bologna, to be a lawyer. Finding that his real interests were in theology he made his way to *Venice, then the headquarters of Protestantism in Italy. In 1547 he came also under the influence of Camillo, a Sicilian mystic of liberal views, at Chiavenna. Between 1547 and 1550 he was received by the Reformers in several countries (Switzerland, France, England, and the Netherlands), and from 1548 to 1550 settled in Switzerland. Later he visited *Wittenberg, where for a time he was the guest of P. *Melanchthon, and later Poland. Changed political conditions in 1552 drew him back to Italy, where he endeavoured to win his nephew (see below) over to his beliefs. Early in 1554 he left Italy again for Switzerland. After brief visits to Basle and Geneva (where he made the acquaintance of J. *Calvin and was challenged on the doctrine of the Trinity), later in the year he settled for the rest of his life at Zurich. Here he found it easier to satisfy H. *Bullinger, though he reserved to himself the right to further inquiry. His surviving writings include a Confession of Faith (1555) and De Sacramentis Dissertatio (1560).

(2) Fausto Paolo Sozzini (1539–1604; he spelled his name with two z's), nephew of the preceding, was also a native of Siena. His early education was neglected. Moving to Lyons in 1561, he there published a work on St John's Gospel (1562) in which he denied the essential divinity of Christ. By 1563 he had also rejected the natural immortality of man. He returned to Italy in 1563 and was in the service of Isabella de' Medici (daughter of the Grand Duke of Tuscany) until 1574; outwardly he conformed to Catholicism. He left Italy after the death of Isabella's father and settled in Basle, where in 1578 he composed his De Christo Servatore (pub. in 1594), directed against the Reformers' teaching on salvation. Later in the year he went to Klausenburg in Transylvania (now Cluj in Romania) in the hope that his liberal teachings would be welcomed under the anti-Trinitarian ruler, John Sigismund. In fact his services were enlisted to moderate the extreme anti-Trinitarianism of the Bishop, Francis David (1510–79). In 1579 he moved to Poland, where he spent the rest of his life and did much to spread moderate *Unitarian doctrines among the upper classes. Several of his writings were now published for the first time. After five years in Cracow, in 1583 he went to Pawlikowice, where he married. He returned to Cracow in 1588, but was forced to flee ten years later when, on Ascension Day 1598, a crowd of students unsympathetic to his teachings was narrowly prevented from lynching him. He spent his last years at Luslawice. See also RACOVIAN CATECHISM and UNITARIANISM.

(1) C. F. Illgen, Vita Laelii Socini (Leipzig, 1814); E. Burnat, Lelio Socin (Vevey, 1894). J. A. Tedeschi (ed.), Italian Reformation Studies in honor of Laelius Socinus (Florence, 1965), esp. pp. 215–41 ('Four Letters from the Socinus–Calvin Correspondence' tr. and ed. R. Lazzaro, and D. Willis, 'The Influence of Laelius Socinus on Calvin's Doctrines of the Merits of Christ and the Assurance of Faith'). G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia and London [1962]), pp. 566–70 and 630–34; 2nd edn. (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 15; Kirksville, Mo., 1992), pp. 876–83 and 965–72.

(2) The works of F. Socinus [ed. by his grandson, A. Wiszowaty] (Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum quos Unitarios vocant, 1–2; Amsterdam, 1656), with Life by S. Przipcovius written in 1636 prefixed to vol. 1 [no pagination]; this Life was repr., with Eng. annotations by 'E.S.' (Manchester, 1912). G. Pioli, Fausto Socino: Vita, opere, fortuna (Modena, 1952). Other modern studies by D. M. Cory (Boston, 1932), L. Chmaj (Warsaw, 1963), and M. Martini, Fausto Socino et la pensée socinienne (Paris [1967]). G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia and London [1962]), pp. 749–63; 2nd edn. (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 15; Kirksville, Mo., 1992), pp. 978–89. Z. Ogonowski, 'Faustus Socinus', in J. Raitt (ed.), Shapers of Religious Traditions in Germany, Switzerland, and Poland, 1560–1600 (New Haven, Conn., and London [1981]), pp. 195–209.

On the two Socini, L. Cristiani in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2326–34, s.v. 'Socinianisme'. See also bibl. to UNITARIANISM.

Socrates (*c.*380–450), 'Scholasticus', Greek Church historian. He was a native of *Constantinople, where he became a lawyer (σχολαστικός). His Church History, in seven books, each covering the life of one of the emperors, was designed as a continuation of *Eusebius' treatise and extends from the abdication of *Diocletian (305) to 439. It draws on *Rufinus and also on *Gelasius of Caesarea. After publishing it, Socrates became possessed of the writings of St *Athanasius, which apprised him of Rufinus' historical blunders, and he accordingly drastically revised the work. Only this later edition survives. For information about the ecclesiastical Councils he made extensive use of a collection of documents issued *c.*375 by the *Macedonian, Sabinus of Heraclea. In general Socrates' history is objective and lucidly written, but its treatment is rather colourless and the author has few theological interests. He shows a certain sympathy with the *Novatianists and gives special attention to events connected with Constantinople. See also SOZOMEN.

Ed. princeps by R. *Stephanus (Paris, 1544). An excellent edn. for its date by H. *Valesius (ibid., 1668); rev. by W. Reading (Cambridge, 1720; repr. J. P. Migne, PG 67. 9–842) and R. Hussey (3 vols., Oxford, 1853). Hussey's text was repr. by W. *Bright (Oxford, 1878). Crit. ed. by G. C. Hansen (GCS, NF 1; 1995). Eng. tr. by A. C. Zenos in NPNCF, 2nd ser., vol. 2, 1890. F. Geppert, Die Quellen des Kirchenhistorikers Sokrates Scholastikus (1898). G. F. Chesnut, The First Christian Histories (Théologie historique, 46 [1978]), pp. 167–89. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 166 f. (no. 6028). W. Eltester in PW, 2te Reihe, 3 (pt. 1; 1927), cols. 893–901; G. Bardy in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2334–6, s.v.; A. Labate in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3248–50 (Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 785), all s.v., with bibl.

sodality (Lat. sodalis, 'companion'). In the RC Church, a common designation for a guild established for the furtherance of some religious purpose by mutual action or assistance.

Söderblom, Nathan (1866–1931), *Lutheran Abp. of *Uppsala and chief promoter of the '*Life and Work' Movement. A native of Trönö, nr. Söderhamn, he studied at Uppsala and was ordained in 1893. In the same year he published a study of M. *Luther's religion. In 1894 he was appointed chaplain to the Swedish legation in *Paris and in 1901 he became a professor at Uppsala. He was appointed Abp. of Uppsala in 1914 despite the opposition of the more conservative elements in the Swedish Church. He was a prominent supporter of the reunion movement and the leading figure in the *Stockholm Conference (1925), his aim being to organize the practical co-operation of the Christian Churches esp. in social questions without consideration of doctrinal differences. His own theological beliefs were largely influenced by A. *Sabatier, A. *Ritschl, and other representatives of Liberal Protestantism.

Söderblom's religious outlook was essentially constructive, despite its challenge to the older orthodoxy. His sense of personal religion went deep. Of his books, comparatively few have been translated into English. In The Nature of Revelation (1903; Eng. tr., 1933) he defended the position of '*Higher Criticism', maintaining that the scientific study of the history of religion will lead to a sure knowledge of God. He criticized here the dogma of the two natures of Christ as unacceptable for modern men and also formulated one of his leading ideas—that God's Revelation is restricted neither to the Bible nor to the Church but continues in history throughout the ages. In his treatise Gudstrons Uppkomst (1914) he argued that the idea of holiness rather than the conception of God was at the basis of religion. Among his other works are Christian Fellowship (Eng. tr., 1923) and The Living God (1933; Gifford Lectures for 1931). He encouraged the liturgical movement in the Swedish Church and was also influenced by Catholic modernist authors such as A. *Loisy and F. *von Hügel.

Tal och Skrifter (5 vols., Stockholm, 1933). Correspondence with F. von Hügel and F. *Heiler, ed. P. Misner (Paderborn [1981]). Good modern study by B. [G. M.] Sundkler, Nathan Söderblom: His Life and Work (1968). Earlier Lives in Swedish by T. Andrae (Uppsala, 1931), in Danish by M. Neiiendam (Copenhagen, 1933). Brief sketch by Y. [T.] Brilioth prefixed to Söderblom's (posthumous) Gifford Lectures (1933). J. G. H. Hoffmann, Nathan Soederblom: Prophète de l'œcuménisme (Geneva, 1948); E. Ehnmark, Religionsproblemet hos Nathan Söderblom (Lund [1949]); H. Åkerberg, Omvändelse och kamp: En empirisk religionspsykologisk undersökning av den unge Nathan Söderbloms religiösa utveckling 1866 1894 (ibid., 1975), with Eng. summary. N. Karlström in R. Rouse and S. C. Neill (eds.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement 1517–1948 (1954), pp. 519–42.

Sodom and Gomorrah. Acc. to Gen. 19: 24 two 'Cities of the Plain' which were destroyed by fire from heaven for their wickedness. They were prob. S. of the *Dead Sea, perhaps at Bab ed-Dra' and Numeira, now in Jordan. Initial claims that the 'Cities of the Plain' are mentioned in the archive of mid-third millennium BC cuneiform tablets found in 1974–5 at Tell Mardikh, ancient Ebla, near Aleppo in Syria, have proved to be erroneous. Sodom and Gomorrah became proverbial both for their sinfulness (see Is. 1: 10–17) and for the scale of their destruction (Is. 1: 5–9); both aspects are present in Christ's saying that in the Day of Judgement even more severe punishment would be meted out to those cities which rejected the Gospel than to Sodom and Gomorrah (Mt. 10: 15). The association of Sodom with *homosexual practice rests only on Gen. 19: 1–14, where the men of Sodom attempt to exploit Lot's hospitality to two angels by seeking to assault them sexually; elsewhere the sin of Sodom is not specified.

On the question of the location of Sodom, F. M. Abel, OP, 'Histoire d'une controverse', R. Bibl. 40 (1931), pp. 388–400, with refs. to earlier lit.; cf. also other arts. by the same author in earlier numbers of the review; M. J. *Lagrange, OP, 'Le Site de Sodome d'après les textes', ibid. 41 (1932), pp. 489–514; F. C. Clapp, 'The Site of Sodom and Gomorrah', American Journal of Archaeology, NS 40 (1936), pp. 323–44, also with refs.; J. P. Harland, 'Sodom and Gomorrah', Biblical Archaeologist, 5 (1942), pp. 17–32, and 6 (1943), pp. 41–54. D. N. Freedman, 'The real story of the Ebla Tablets. Ebla and the Cities of the Plain', ibid. 41 (1978), pp. 143–64; A. Archi, 'Further concerning Ebla and the Bible', ibid. 44 (1981), pp. 145–54, esp. pp. 151 f., pointing out the misreading. J. A. Loader, A Tale of Two Cities: Sodom and Gomorrah in the Old Testament, early Jewish and early Christian Traditions (Contributions to Biblical Exegesis and Theology, 1; Kampen [1990]).

Sodor and Man. The present Anglican diocese of Sodor and Man consists of the Isle of Man. Traditions credit St *Patrick with the establishment of episcopal authority there in the 5th cent. After the arrival of Norwegian rulers in the late 8th cent., Man came to be associated by them with the many islands to the west of the Scottish mainland as part of the Southern Isles ('Sudreys', 'Sodor') as they called them to distinguish them from the Northern Isles of Orkney and Shetland. Before 1134 there was a plurality of bishops under the sub-king of the Isles (rex Insularum); thereafter for two centuries there was one see for the whole island area, which the Norwegians transferred to Scottish rule in 1266. Some of the early bishops were consecrated at York; but after 1154 the see was by Papal authority made part of the province of Nidaros (Trondheim) in Norway. 1331 (by which time the English Crown was assuming control of the Isle of Man) saw the last Scot appointed to the see based there. Then during and after the *Great Schism (1378–1417) there emerged parallel to the bishops on Man a continuous line of Scottish bishops of the Isles resident in the Scottish section of the old unitary diocese. Since 1542 the diocese of Sodor has been in the province of York, but it has its own *Convocation. The termination 'and Man' was apparently added in error by a 17th-cent. legal draughtsman. The Prayer Book was issued in Manx in 1765, the Bible in 1772. In 1895 a *chapter was constituted with four canons, the bishop being dean. The bishop, who is a member of the Upper House of the Tynwald in the Isle of Man, has no seat in the House of Lords. Of the bishops of Sodor and Man the most renowned is the saintly T. *Wilson (bishop 1698–1755). The 13th-cent. cathedral on St Patrick's Isle (now united to the mainland at Peel) fell into disuse in the 18th cent. and is now in ruins. In 1980 the parish church of St German in Peel became the cathedral of the diocese.

The principal source for the early history of the Isle of Man is the Chronica Regum Manniae et Insularum (ed. P. A. Munich, Manx Society, 22 and 23; 1874, with Eng. tr.); facsimile edn. from Cod. Julius A. VI in Brit. Library (Douglas, 1924). W. Harrison (ed.), The Old Historians of the Isle of Man: Camden, Speed, Dugdale, Cox, Wilson, Willis and Crosse (Manx Society, 18; 1871). A. W. Moore and J. Rhŷs (eds.), The Book of Common Prayer in Manx Gaelic: Being translations made by Bishop Phillips in 1610, and by the Manx Clergy in 1765 (2 vols., 1895). A. W. Moore, Sodor and Man (Diocesan Histories, 1893). A. Ashley, The Church in the Isle of Man (St Anthony's Hall Publications, 13; 1958). C. R. Cheney (ed.), 'Manx Synodal Statutes, A.D. 1230(?)–1351', Cambridge Medieval Celtic Studies, no. 7 (1984), pp. 63–89; no. 8 (1984), pp. 51–63. D. E. R. Watt, 'Bishops in the Isles before 1203: Bibliography and Biographical Lists', Innes Review, 45 (1994), pp. 99–119. P. M. C. Kermode, Manx Crosses (1907). E. W. Watson in DECH (1912), pp. 346–9, s.v. 'Man, Isle of, Church in'.

Sohm, Rudolph (1841–1917), jurist and Protestant Church historian. He taught law first at Göttingen, and later as professor at Freiburg i.B. (1880), Strasbourg (1872), and Leipzig (1887). His chief theological works were Verhältnis von Staat und Kirche (1873), Kirchenrecht (vol. 1, 1892; vol. 2, posthumously ed. E. Jacobi and O. Mayer, 1923), and Wesen und Ursprung des Katholizismus (1909). In these and other writings he developed the view that, while the Church was wholly spiritual, law was wholly secular; hence the development of canon law ('Catholicism') was an abandonment of the primitive ideal of the Church, which was a fundamentally '*charismatic' body. Sohm also compiled a manual, Kirchengeschichte im Grundriss (1888; Eng. tr., Outlines of Church History, 1895). His ideas attracted considerable interest, esp. in their implications for the relationship of Church and State.

Festgabe für Rudolph Sohm (Munich, 1914). W. Lowrie, The Church and its Organisation in Primitive and Catholic Times: An Interpretation of Rudolph Sohm's Kirchenrecht (1904); critique of Sohm's theses in A. *Harnack, Entstehung und Entwicklung der Kirchenverfassung und des Kirchenrechts (1910; Eng. tr., 1910). H. Barion, Rudolf Sohm und die Grundlegung des Kirchenrechts (1931); E. Foerster, Rudolph Sohms Kritik des Kirchenrechtes (Haarlem, 1942). W. A. Hauck, Rudolf Sohm und Leo Tolstoi: Rechtsordnung und Gottesreich (Heidelberg, 1950), pp. 11–156. D. Stoodt, Wort und Recht: Rudolf Sohm und das theologische Problem des Kirchenrechts (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Reihe 2, 33; 1962). A. Bühler, Kirche und Staat bei Rudolph Sohm (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, 6; 1965). H.-J. Schmitz, Frühkatholizismus bei Adolf von Harnack, Rudolph Sohm und Ernst Käsemann (Düsseldorf, 1977), pp. 94–144.

Soissons, Councils of. The two principal Councils are:

(1) *c.*1092. The Council was convened by Raynaldus, Abp. of *Reims, against the *nominalist, *Roscelin, who was accused of teaching *Tritheism. Roscelin asserted that *Lanfranc and *Anselm, then abbot of Bec, shared his views; but the latter sent a letter to be read at the Council, denying the charge and professing the Catholic faith. Roscelin was condemned by the Council and recanted, though he later declared that he had done so only through fear of the populace.

(2) 1121. The Council was held by the Papal legate, Conon, Bp. of Palestrina, in order to censure Peter *Abelard's work, 'Theologia Summi Boni'. Conceived as an attack on Roscelin's Tritheistic teaching, it was condemned, according to *Otto of Freising, for the opposite error of *Sabellianism. Abelard's account in his 'Historia Calamitatum' however, shows that he thought he was defending orthodoxy against both these heresies. He was not allowed to dispute about the book at the Council, but forced to burn it.

(1) Hardouin, 6 (pt. 2), cols. 1695–1700; Mansi, 20 (Venice, 1775), cols. 741–4. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 365–7.
(2) Hardouin, 6 (pt. 2), cols. 1103–6; Mansi, 21 (Venice, 1726), cols. 265–70. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 593–602. See also bibl. to ABELARD, P.

soleas (Gk. σωλέας). In the E. Church, the platform immediately in front of the *iconostasis, raised above the nave floor by one or more steps, and on the same level as the sanctuary.

Solemn League and Covenant. The agreement between the Scots and the English Parliament in 1643. Its professed aims were the maintenance of the *Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the reformation of the Church of England, the uniformity of the Churches of the British Isles, the extirpation of Popery and prelacy (i.e. episcopacy), the preservation of the rights of Parliaments and the liberties of the kingdoms, the defence of the King's just power and the suppression of the malignants who sought to divide him from his people. It was also a pact of mutual defence and a covenant of penitents with their God. The English Parliamentarians in their struggle with the Royalists were specially anxious for a civil league; the Scots emphasized the religious side of the agreement. It was formally accepted by the Scottish Convention of the Estates and the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland on 17 Aug. 1643, and by the English Commons and the *Westminster Assembly on 25 Sept. 1643. Shortly afterwards, the proceedings of the Westminster Assembly took a pro-Presbyterian turn and for a time the English allies became nominal 'Covenanters'; but after the Scottish army had helped to turn the tide at Marston Moor (2 July 1644) and the rise of O. *Cromwell and the *Independents to power the Covenant became a dead letter in England. It continued longer, however, to be a living document in Scotland, where it was renewed in 1648 and subscribed by *Charles II in 1650 and 1651.

Text in Gee and Hardy, pp. 569–74 (no. 107). See also bibl. to WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY.

Solemnitas (Lat., commonly rendered in English 'Solemnity'), the name given in the 1969 Calendar and subsequent liturgical documents of the RC Church to feasts of the greatest importance.

Solesmes. The seat of a famous Benedictine monastery, dedicated to St Peter, in the department of Sarthe, France. It was founded in 1010, but in modern times its history goes back to Dom Prosper *Guéranger, who settled there with five other priests in 1833. In 1837 *Gregory XVI constituted it an abbey and head of the French Benedictine congregation, with Guéranger as its first abbot. Under his influence it became, and has remained, a centre of the *Liturgical Movement in France, taking a notable part in the revival and development of liturgical music. After being several times ejected by force by the French Government, the monks were finally expelled from France under the anticlerical legislation in 1901, and for several years *Quarr Abbey in the Isle of Wight was their headquarters. They returned to Solesmes in 1922. Solesmes has numbered among its members many eminent scholars, notably Dom J. B. F. *Pitra (1812–89), Dom P. Cagin (1847–1923), Dom F. *Cabrol (1855–1937), Dom H. *Quentin (1872–1935), and Dom A. *Wilmart (1876–1941). See also PLAINSONG.

H. Quentin, OSB, Notice historique sur l'abbaye de Solesmes, suivie d'une courte description de l'église abbatiale et ses sculptures (Tours, 1924). J. Hourlier, OSB, Les Églises de Solesmes (1951). A. des Mazis, OSB, L'Entrée de Solesmes dans la Congrégation de Saint-Maur (Solesmes, [1950]), and other works of this author. L. Soltner, OSB, Solesmes & Dom Guéranger (1805 1875) (ibid., 1974). N. Rousseau, L'École grégorienne de Solesmes, 1833 1910 (Tournai, 1910). F. Cabrol, OSB, 'L'Œuvre historique et littéraire de Solesmes et de la Congrégation de France (1833–1933)', Revue Mabillon, 23 (1933), pp. 249–65.

Solifidianism. The *Reformation doctrine of *justification by faith alone (per solam fidem), as found esp. in the writings of M. *Luther, who translated πίστει in Rom. 3: 28 as allein durch den Glauben ('only by faith').

Solipsism (Lat. solus, 'alone', and ipse, 'oneself'). The philosophical belief that the individual self is the only existent and that all other selves are illusions. It is doubtful whether any philosopher has ever held this extreme form of theoretical egotism; its chief use in philosophical debate is to reduce opponents to absurdity. The word is less commonly applied to the doctrine that the self is the only object of real knowledge, without prejudice to the existence of other selves. Either doctrine is a particular form of 'Subjective Idealism'.

Solomon (d. c.930 BC), King of *Israel from c.970 BC. No such clear picture of his personality is to be found in the OT as we have of his father, *David, whom he succeeded. The impression made by the account in 1 Kgs. 1–11 is of an oriental despot, honoured for his wealth and wisdom and round whose name much legendary material has gathered. This reputation, which is responsible for the later attribution to him of the Books of *Proverbs, the Song of *Solomon, *Ecclesiastes, and the *Wisdom of Solomon, has probably coloured the history in 1 Kings. His reign marked the zenith of ancient Israel's prosperity and saw the organization of the kingdom on new lines. The *Temple, with the erection of which his name is esp. associated in subsequent history, was part of a grandiose building scheme intended to make *Jerusalem a worthy capital for a kingdom which he determined should rank among the great powers. With such ends in view, he made a marriage alliance with the reigning Pharaoh and, by strengthening the friendly relations established by David with Hiram, King of Tyre, obtained from Phoenicia the skill and materials needed for his building schemes (1 Kgs. 5: 1–12) and also the experienced sailors to direct a short-lived naval experiment (9: 26–8). His other enterprises include a trade in horses with Egypt (10: 28–9), the fortifying of strategic cities (9: 15–19), and the establishment of a standing army (10: 26). But to finance his projects Solomon had to impose on his subjects a system of levies and forced labour, and the resulting discontent led, after his death, to the secession of the ten northern tribes under Jeroboam I. In this the compiler of the Books of Kings saw Divine retribution for Solomon's apostasy in his later years, which is ascribed to the influence of his foreign wives. His son Rehoboam ruled over the kingdom of *Judah (1 Kgs. 11: 43–14: 31).

The main discussions will be found in Histories of Israel and comm. on 1 Kgs. F. Thieberger, King Solomon (1947). B. Porten, 'The Structure and Theme of the Solomon Narrative (1 Kings 3–11)', Hebrew Union College Annual, 38 (1967), pp. 93–128. E. W. Heaton, Solomon's New Men: The Emergence of Ancient Israel as a Nation State (1974). E. Lohse in TWNT 7 (1964; Eng. tr., 1971), pp. 459–65, s.v. Σολομών, with bibl.; J. Briend and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 11 (1991), cols. 431–85, s.v. 'Salomon'; T. Ishida in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1993), pp. 105–13.

Solomon, Odes of. This pseudepigraphical work contains 42 short hymns of a lyrical character. Mention of it occurs in lists of Christian books from the 6th cent. onwards, but until the discovery (1908) by J. R. *Harris of a Syriac MS containing the Odes and Psalms of Solomon, the only known fragments of it were (1) five of the Odes included in the Gnostic Pistis Sophia (where the Odes are treated as of almost equal authority with the Pss. of David) and (2) a short quotation in *Lactantius. The Greek text of Ode 11 is preserved in a *Bodmer papyrus. The Odes are prob. Christian in origin, and though containing thoughts and expressions which lend themselves to a Gnostic interpretation, they are not unorthodox. Their composition is variously assigned to dates ranging from the 1st to the 3rd cent. AD; the late 2nd cent. seems most likely. They were prob. written in Syria, but it is disputed whether their original language was Greek or Syriac. In these Psalms, the terms used of '*Wisdom' in the Wisdom literature are freely applied to Christ. Though there are few references to the Lord's life, the *Descent into Hell is described in some detail in more than one place; but the doctrine of the Holy Spirit is undeveloped and the word 'Church' nowhere occurs. Although there are many allusions to Baptism, it is unlikely that they were specifically baptismal hymns, as J. H. *Bernard suggested.

Syriac text of Odes and Psalms of Solomon ed., with Eng. tr., by J. R. Harris (Cambridge, 1909; 2nd edn., with facsimile, 1911); also ed., with facsimile of the whole MS, by id. and A. Mingana (Manchester, etc., 1916; Eng. tr. and notes, 1920); Syriac text also ed., with Eng. tr., by J. H. Charlesworth (Oxford, 1973). Greek text of 11th Ode ed. from Bodmer Papyrus XI by M. Testuz, Papyrus Bodmer X–XII (Geneva, 1959), pp. 49–69. Eng. tr. of Syriac, with notes, by [J.] R. Harris, An Early Christian Psalter (London, 1909). Further Eng. trs., with introd. and notes, by J. H. Bernard (Texts and Studies, 8, no. 3; Cambridge, 1912); by J. A. Emerton in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 683–731; and by J. H. Charlesworth in id. (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 725–71, the last two both with recent bibl. M. Lattke, Die Oden Salomos in ihrer Bedeutung für Neues Testament und Gnosis (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis, 25; 4 parts in 5, 1979 ff., incl. full bibl. in vol. 3 [1986]). M. Franzmann, The Odes of Solomon: An Analysis of the Poetical Structure and Form (Novum Testamentum et Orbis Antiquus, 20; Göttingen, 1991). H. J. W. Drijvers, 'Die Oden Salomos und die Polemik mit den Markioniten im Syrischen Christentum', in Symposium Syriacum 1976 (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 205; 1978), pp. 39–55; repr. in id., East of Antioch: Studies in Early Syriac Christianity (1984), no. 7; cf. also nos. 8–10.

Solomon, Psalms of. Mention of this Jewish *pseudepigraphical collection of 18 Psalms occurs after the list of OT and NT Books in the catalogue at the beginning of *Codex Alexandrinus (A), as well as in later lists of canonical Books, but the Psalms had little influence on early Christian literature. Though extant only in Greek (and in a Syriac translation of the Greek), almost all scholars are agreed that they were written in Hebrew. Certain historical allusions indicate the date. A period of prosperity has been brought to an end by foreign invasion and the capture of Jerusalem; Jewish kings are condemned as usurpers; and the description of the invader seems most readily to apply to Pompey; thus the Psalms can be assigned with considerable confidence to the post-*Maccabean age and probably to the years 70–40 BC. The Psalms depict the nation as divided into two classes, 'the righteous' (almost entirely the *Pharisees, to which party the author belongs) and the 'sinners' (the *Sadducees), while the writer sees in the catastrophes that have overcome his country Divine retribution for national sin. The last two Psalms are esp. significant as predicting the coming of a Messiah of the house of David who will cleanse *Jerusalem, punish sinners, subdue the nations hostile to Israel and rule in righteousness.

Crit. edn. of Gk. text with Eng. tr. by H. E. *Ryle and M. R. James (Cambridge, 1891); also by O. von Gebhardt (TU 13, Heft 2; 1895). Gk. text also pr. in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, 3 (4th edn., Cambridge, 1912), pp. 765–87, and in A. Rahlfs (ed.), Septuaginta, 2 (Stuttgart [1935]), pp. 471–489. Syriac text first ed., along with that of the Odes of Solomon, with Eng. tr., by J. R. *Harris (Cambridge, 1909; 2nd edn., with additions, 1911); also ed., with facsimile, by [J.] R. Harris and A. Mingana (Manchester, etc., 1916, with Eng. tr. and notes, 1920); standard edn. by W. Baars, The Old Testament in Syriac according to the Peshitta Version, pt. 4, fasc. 6 (Leiden, 1972), separate pagination. Gk. text also pr., with notes of main Syriac variations, Fr. tr. and comm., by J. Viteau (Documents pour l'Étude de la Bible, 1911). Eng. trs. and comm. by G. B. *Gray in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 625–52; S. P. Brock in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (ibid., 1984), pp. 649–82; and R. B. Wright in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 639–70. J. Schüpphaus, Die Psalmen Salomos: Eine Zeugnis Jerusalemer Theologie und Frömmigkeit in der Mitte der vorchristlichen Jahrhunderts (Arbeiten zur Literatur und Geschichte des hellenistischen Judentums, 7; 1977). R. R. Hann, The Manuscript History of the Psalms of Solomon (Septuagint and Cognate Studies, 13; Chico, Calif., 1982). J. L. Trafton, The Syriac Version of the Psalms of Solomon (ibid. 11; Atlanta [1985]). E. *Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 192–7, with bibl.

Solomon, Song of (also known as Song of Songs or as Canticles), OT Book included among the *Hagiographa. It is prob. an anthology of love poems of varying length, ascribed to *Solomon and his beloved (the 'Shulamite') and their friends. The Book, however, must be much later than the time of Solomon; its vocabulary and place in the *Canon suggest that it may date from as late as the 3rd cent BC, though some of the individual poems may be earlier. In the Hebrew Bible it is the first of the five *Megilloth and it is read by the Jews on the eighth day of *Passover.

From an early date Jewish and Christian exegetes alike have interpreted the Book allegorically. Rabbi *Akiba (d. 132) already protested strongly against a literal interpretation of its contents. In the *Talmud it is interpreted as an allegory of God's dealings with the congregation of Israel. Christian exegetes from St *Hippolytus onwards have seen in it a description of God's relations with the Church or the individual soul; and it was already the subject of a commentary in this sense by *Origen. This interpretation became esp. congenial to a long succession of spiritual writers; it received classical form in St *Bernard's 86 homilies on Canticles. Others who have interpreted the Book on the same lines include R. *Rolle, St *Teresa of Ávila, and St *John of the Cross (esp. in his 'Spiritual Canticle'). Indeed among Christian interpreters *Theodore of Mopsuestia seems to have been alone until modern times in upholding a literal exegesis. This was revived in the 16th cent. by S. *Castellio and the *Anabaptists and it is now very generally allowed that the original character of the work was erotic.

Comm. by H. Ringgren (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 16/2, on Song of Songs, Lam., Est., 1958, pp. 1–37; 2nd edn., on Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, Lam., Est., 1967, pp. 257–93), W. Rudolph (KAT 17. 1–3, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Lam., 1962, pp. 73–186), G. Gerleman (Biblischer Kommentar (Altes Testament), 17, on Ruth and Song of Songs, 1965, pp. 43–227), E. Würthwein (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 18, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Eccles., Lam., and Est., 2nd edn., 1969, pp. 25–71), M. H. Pope (Anchor Bible, 1977), and O. Keel (Zürcher Bibelkommentare, Altes Testament, 18; 1986). H. H. Rowley, 'The Interpretation of the Song of Songs', JTS 38 (1937), pp. 337–63; id., 'The Song of Songs. An Examination of Recent Theory', The Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1938, pp. 251–76. A. Feuillet, PSS, Le Cantique des Cantiques: Étude de théologie biblique et réflexions sur une méthode d'exégèse (Lectio Divina, 10; 1953). M. D. Goulder, The Song of Fourteen Songs (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 36 [1986]). H. Riedlinger, Die Makellosigkeit der Kirche in den lateinischen Hoheliedkommentaren des Mittelalters (BGPM 38, Heft 3; 1958); F. Ohly, Hohelied-Studien: Grundzüge einer Geschichte der Hoheliedauslegung des Abendlandes bis um 1200 (Schriften der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft an der Johann Wolfgang Goethe-Universität Frankfurt am Main. Geisteswissenschaftliche Reihe, 1; Wiesbaden, 1958). E. A. Matter, The Voice of My Beloved: The Song of Songs in Western Medieval Christianity (Philadelphia [1990]).

Solomon, Wisdom of. See WISDOM OF SOLOMON.

Solovyov, Vladimir (1853–1900), Russian philosopher and theologian. After lecturing on philosophy at Moscow in 1875 and holding a post in the ministry of education at St Petersburg from 1877 to 1881, he devoted himself entirely to writing. In 1877 he became an intimate friend of F. *Dostoevsky, on whose religious ideas he exercised considerable influence. Down to 1881 he shared the ideas of the religiously minded Slavophils, including their antipathy to the RC Church; but further study and the desire for visible unity led him to modify his attitude, and from that time he regarded the union of the Churches as the main task of Russia, desiring to conserve the characteristic values of E. and W. During this period he wrote a profound ascetical book on the spiritual foundations of life (1882–4) and carried on negotiations with Bp. J. G. *Strossmayer for reunion between the Orthodox and RC Churches. In 1889 he published La Russie et l'Église universelle in which he proclaimed his Catholic ideal. It met with violent opposition in Russia, and when forbidden by the Holy Synod to write on religious questions he confined himself to politics and philosophy. In 1896 he received Communion in a RC church in Moscow, an act, he believed, of adhesion to the universal Church.

In his philosophical and religious ideas he was strongly influenced by B. *Spinoza and the German Idealists, esp. G. W. F. *Hegel. He sought to combine their pantheism with the Christian doctrine of the Incarnation. He admitted into his system, however, Gnostic elements and upheld the existence of a female principle, 'Sophia' or the world-soul. Solovyov also wrote fine religious poetry. His influence, esp. among the refugees from the 1917 Revolution, did much to turn the Russian intellectuals from their 19th-cent. materialism and nihilism to a definitely religious and Christian view of the world.

2nd edn. of his works, pub. in 10 vols., St Petersburg, 1911–14. Letters pub. ibid., 4 vols., 1908–23. All repr., with 2 additional vols., Brussels, 1966–70. La Sophia et les autres écrits français, ed.

F. Rouleau (Lausanne, 1978), with introd. pp. vii–lxxii. There are Eng. trs. of War and Christianity with introd. by S. Graham (London, 1915); The Justification of the Good, by N. A. Duddington (ibid., 1918); Plato, by R. Gill (ibid., 1935), with note by J. Lavrin, pp. 5–21; God, Man and the Church, by D. Attwater (ibid. [1938]); Lectures on Godmanhood, by P. Zouboff (New York, 1944), with introd. pp. 11–77; The Meaning of Love, by J. Marshall (London, 1945); and Russia and the Universal Church, by H. Rees (ibid., 1948). There is also A Solovyov Anthology arranged by S. L. Frank, tr. N. [A.] Duddington (1950), with introd. pp. 9–31.

D. Strémooukoff, Vladimir Soloviev et son œuvre messianique (1935; Eng. tr., Belmont, Mass., 1980). F. Muckermann, SJ, Wladimir Solowiew (Olten, 1945). L. Müller, Das religionsphilosophische System Vladimir Solovjevs (1956). E. Munzer, Solovyev: Prophet of Russian-Western Unity (posthumously pub., 1956). E. Klum, Natur, Kunst und Liebe in der Philosophie Vladimir Solov'evs (Slavistische Beiträge, 14; 1965). A. Paplauskas-Ramunas, Dialogue entre Rome et Moscou: Vladimir Soloviev, porte-parole du mouvement œcuménique en Russie (Ottawa, 1966). M. George, Mystische und religiöse Erfahrung im Denken Vladimir Solov'evs (Forschungen zur systematischen und ökumenischen Theologie, 54; Göttingen [1988]). J. Sutton, The Religious Philosophy of Vladimir Solovyov (1988). K. Pfleger, Geister die um Christus ringen (1934; Eng. tr., 1936), ch. 7 (pp. 223–65 of Eng. tr.); N. *Zernov, Three Russian Prophets (1944), pp. 116–51; F. C. Copleston, SJ, Philosophy in Russia (1986), pp. 201–40. F. Rouleau, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1024–33, s.v.

Somaschi. An order of clerks regular in solemn vows who follow the Rule of St *Augustine. They were founded in 1532 by St *Jerome Emiliani at Somasca in N. Italy to work among the poor and afflicted, and formally constituted by Pope *Pius V in 1568. They still flourish in Italy and have houses in Central and South America as well as the USA. They run schools and orphanages.

L'ordine dei Chierici Regolari Somaschi nel IV centenario della sua fondazione (Rome, 1928). M. Tentorio, CRS, 'I Somaschi', in M. Escobar (ed.), Ordini e Congregazioni Religiose, 1 (1951), pp. 609–30, and other works of this author. P. Bianchini, CRS, in NCE 13 (1969), pp. 424 f., s.v.; id. in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 975–8, s.v. 'Chierici Regolari Somaschi'.

Somerset, Duke of (*c.*1506 [or perhaps *c.*1500]–1552), Protector of England. Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford (1537) and Duke of Somerset (1547), was a brother of Jane Seymour, third wife of *Henry VIII. From 1524 onwards he held a succession of offices in the royal household. He played an important part in the Scottish campaign of 1544, and in 1546 successfully commanded the English forces in France. The fall of the Howards left him the leading figure in the Council when his nephew succeeded as *Edward VI. As protector to the young King he pressed on the reforming cause in the English Church, while attempting to coerce the Scots into co-operation. The offence given by his agrarian policy and his failure to prevent the risings of 1549 contributed largely to his deprival of the protectorship in Oct. 1549 and his ultimate execution on a charge of conspiracy against his rival and successor, Warwick.

W. K. Jordan, Edward VI: The Young King. The Protectorship of the Duke of Somerset (1968); M. L. Bush, The Government Policy of Protector Somerset (1975). A. F. Pollard in DNB 51 (1897), pp. 299–310, s.v. 'Seymour, Edward', with notes on unpub. material. See further bibl. s.v. EDWARD VI.

Son of Man. In the NT, a designation applied to Jesus. With one exception (Acts 7: 56), it is found only in the Gospels and here always on His own lips. The uses of the term in the Gospels are frequently classified as: (1) passages where Jesus refers to Himself in His earthly ministry, e.g. Mt. 11: 19 and Lk. 7: 34. In some other parallel passages one Gospel has 'I' or 'Me' (cf. Lk. 12: 8 and Mt. 10: 32; Mt. 16: 13, Mk. 8: 27, and Lk. 9: 18); (2) passages foretelling suffering, death, and resurrection for the Son of Man, e.g. Mt. 17: 22, Mk. 8: 31, Jn. 3: 14; and (3) passages in which the Son of Man is to appear at the End (Doomsday), 'coming with the clouds of heaven' (Mk. 14: 62), with 'authority to execute judgement' (Jn. 5: 27). In addition the Fourth Gospel uses the phrase in its 'man from heaven' Christology (3: 13 and 6: 62).

In the Aramaic of NT times it seems that the phrase could be used almost as a paraphrase for 'I'. In the OT the corresponding Hebrew expression is often a synonym for 'man', i.e. a human being (e.g. Num. 23: 19; Ps. 8: 4), and in Ezekiel (e.g. 2: 1) the Prophet is addressed by God as 'Son of man', perhaps emphasizing his humanity. This usage may be reflected in some passages in the Gospels (e.g. Mt. 8: 20). In Dan. 7: 13, however, the phrase 'one like a son of man' occurs in the context of the final establishment of God's *kingdom and the vindication of His people, and is used as a symbol representative of God's elect. In Dan. it denotes some angelic being; the identification with an individual leader or Messiah is not found until the Similitudes of *Enoch and 2 Esdras, in passages prob. too late to have influenced the Gospels.

In the Gospels there is an element of mystery about the phrase which confirms the view that it was not an established Messianic title before the time of Jesus. Whether He made the identification Himself either implicitly or explicitly remains a matter of dispute. Some argue that He used it as a personal pronoun, and that the passages echoing Dan. and giving Him the status of judge or redeemer were later Christian developments; others that He spoke of the final vindication through the Son of Man without casting Himself for that role. Perhaps He saw His role as representative of the people of God, and having a crucial part to play in God's drama of salvation.

Later readers of the Gospels have seen 'Son of Man' as denoting esp. the humility of Christ's incarnate manhood as contrasted with the majesty of His Divinity denoted by 'Son of God', and as emphasizing His universalist role as 'son of Adam' in contrast with the nationalist conceptions associated with the title 'Son of David'.

H. *Lietzmann, Der Menschensohn (1896); H. E. Tödt, Der Menschensohn in der synoptischen Überlieferung (Gütersloh, 1959; 2nd edn., 1963; Eng. tr., 1965); A. J. B. Higgins, Jesus and the Son of Man (1964); M. D. Hooker, The Son of Man in Mark: A Study of the Background of the Term 'Son of Man' and its Use in St Mark's Gospel (1967); F. H. Borsch, The Son of Man in Myth and History (1967); id., The Christian and Gnostic Son of Man (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 14; 1970); [P.] M. Casey, Son of Man: The Interpretation and Influence of Daniel 7 (1979); B. Lindars, SSF, Jesus Son of Man: A Fresh Examination of the Son of Man Sayings in the Gospels in the Light of Recent Research (1983). W. *Bousset, Kyrios Christos (1913), esp. pp. 1–27; T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus (1931), pp. 211–36; R. *Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934), pp. 124–220 (Eng. tr., pp. 159–261); W. Manson, Jesus the Messiah (1943), esp. Appendix D ('The Heavenly Man Redemption Myth'), pp. 174–90; J. A.

Emerton, 'The Origin of the Son of Man Imagery', JTS NS 9 (1958), pp. 225–42; S. S. Smalley, 'The Johannine Son of Man Sayings', New Testament Studies, 15 (1969), pp. 278–301; G. Vermes, 'The Use of בר נש/בר נשא in Jewish Aramaic', in M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts (3rd edn., Oxford, 1967), pp. 310–30; id., 'The Present State of the "Son of Man" Debate', Journal of Jewish Studies, 29 (1978), pp. 123–34; C. F. D. Moule, 'Neglected Features in the Problem of the "Son of Man"', in J. Gnilka (ed.), Neues Testament und Kirche: Für Rudolf Schnackenburg (1974), pp. 413–28; repr. in his Essays in New Testament Interpretation (Cambridge, 1982), pp. 75–90; id., The Origin of Christology (ibid., 1977), pp. 11–22. M. D. Hooker, 'Is the Son of Man Problem really insoluble?', in E. Best and R. McL. Wilson (eds.), Text and Interpretation: Studies in the New Testament presented to Matthew Black (Cambridge, 1979), pp. 155–68. W. G. Kümmel, 'Jesusforschung seit 1965', 5: 'Der Persönliche Anspruch Jesu', Theologische Rundschau, NF 45 (1980), pp. 40–84. C. Colpe in TWNT 8 (1969), pp. 403–81; Eng. tr., 8 (1972), pp. 400–77, s.v. υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, with further bibl., 10/1 (1979), pp. 1283–6; G. W. E. Nickelsburg in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 137–50, s.v.

Song of Songs. See SOLOMON, SONG OF.

Song of the Three Children (now often called the 'Song of the Three Young Men'). A short 'Book' of the *Apocrypha. In the *Septuagint and *Vulgate, where its 68 verses are treated as part of the canonical Book of *Daniel (into which they are inserted after Dan. 3: 23), the Song of the Three Children is part of the story of the three young Hebrew exiles thrown into the fiery furnace by Nebuchadnezzar. It consists of (1) the Prayer of Azarias, a petition for national deliverance (which is prescribed as the seventh daily canticle in the Byzantine *Orthros), and (2) the canticle used in Christian worship in both the E. and W. Church under the name of the '*Benedicite'. Neither of these, however, apart from a single verse (66) in the Benedicite, seems to have any immediate relevance to the story of the three young men of Dan., and hence they are both generally supposed to have been written originally for some other occasion or occasions.

Gk. text in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, 2 (1912 edn.), pp. 515–23; also in A. Ralphs (ed.), Septuaginta, 2 (Stuttgart [1935]), pp. 885–94, and, without the introd., among the Odes, pp. 174–7. Eng. trs. and comm. by W. H. Bennett in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 625–37, J. C. Dancy, The Shorter Books of the Apocrypha (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1972), pp. 211–23, and C. A. Moore, Daniel, Esther and Jeremiah: The Additions (Anchor Bible, 44; 1977), pp. 23–76. W. H. Daubney, The Three Additions to Daniel: A Study (1906), pp. 17–99. C. Kuhl, Die drei Männer im Feuer (Beiheft zur ZATW 55; 1930). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1949; London [1954]), pp. 444–8. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2; Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 722–30 (on the additions of Daniel). See also RC comm. on Daniel and bibl. to BENEDICITE and APOCRYPHA.

Songs of Ascent or Songs of Degrees. See GRADUAL PSALMS.

Songs of Praise, a 'national' hymnal designed for the use of Christians of all denominations, first published in 1925. The General Editor was P. *Dearmer (1867–1936) and the Musical Editors Martin Shaw (1875–1958) and R. *Vaughan Williams (1872–1958). It aimed at an improved literary and artistic quality in the words, introducing many poems which had hitherto not found a place in hymnals. Theologically its standpoint was markedly liberal; considerable place was found for the social aspects of religion; and a high standard of musical taste was set. In 1931 it was superseded by a second edition in which the liberal element in the book was carried to a much greater extreme. Many of the hymns were altered, and sometimes rewritten, to eliminate expressions of dogmatic faith, esp. those concerned with the Atonement, and references to penitence, fasting, and the sterner side of Christian practice generally were removed. Though Songs of Praise continues to be used for interdenominational purposes, e.g. in schools, its use in Anglican churches has very largely ceased.

P. Dearmer, Songs of Praise Discussed: A Handbook to the Best-known Hymns and to Others Recently Introduced (1933), with notes on the music by A. Jacob.

Sophia, St. See SANCTA SOPHIA.

Sophronius, St (c.560–638), Patr. of *Jerusalem from 634. His identity with Sophronius 'the Sophist' seems now beyond dispute. He was a monk first in Egypt (c.580), later near the Jordan, and finally (from 619) at *Jerusalem. From 633 onwards he was the chief opponent of *Monothelitism, then being defended by Cyrus, Patr. of Alexandria. He wrote extended Lives of the two Alexandrian saints, Cyrus and John, believed to have been martyred in the *Diocletianic Persecution, and some of his sermons, as well as several poems, have also survived. Shortly before his death he negotiated the surrender of Jerusalem to the Arabs under Caliph 'Umar in 638. Feast day, 11 Mar.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG 87 (3). 3147–4014, with Life (repr. from AASS), 3125–46. Modern edn. of his 'Anacreontica' by M. Gigante (Rome, 1957). C. von Schönborn, Sophrone de Jérusalem: Vie monastique et confession dogmatique (Théologie historique, 20; 1972). H. Chadwick, 'John Moschus and his Friend Sophronius the Sophist', JTS NS 25 (1974), pp. 41–74, repr. in History and Thought of the Early Church (1982), no. 18. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 422–31 (nos. 7635–81). C. Schönborn in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1066–73, s.v.

Sorbonne. The most famous college of the old University of *Paris, originally known as the Collegium Pauperum Magistrorum. It was founded c.1257 by Robert de Sorbon, confessor of St *Louis, for the education of advanced students aspiring to the theological doctorate. Among its many benefactors was St Louis himself, who gave part of the site. It was favoured by the Popes, and Clement IV granted it Papal approbation in 1268. The house was governed by a 'provisor', assisted by the 'bursars', to whom were added the 'socii' without a 'burse' and the 'hospites'. In addition to these were the 'beneficiarii', supported by the college to perform menial offices for the Fellows. The reputation of the Sorbonne, whose examinations were famous for their severity, soon became such that its membership was sought not only by most theological doctors of Paris but also by many otherwise prominent personalities. The college also came to be consulted on theological and even political questions from all parts of Christendom. From 1554 it was the regular meeting-place of the Theological Faculty, and from this date the name Sorbonne was popularly applied to this faculty. From the later Middle Ages the Sorbonne had favoured *Gallican tendencies, and in the 17th and 18th cents., when the royal authority allowed it to do so, it vigorously defended Gallican ecclesiastical views and a typically French approach to ecclesiastical scholarship. It opposed the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713), thus losing its influence with Rome, and also fought the *probabilist moral theology and the educational and missionary aims of the *Jesuits. On the other hand, it stoutly defended Catholic principles against the Reformation theology and the Rationalist philosophy of the 18th cent. The Sorbonne was suppressed in 1793, but re-established as the Theological Faculty of the University of Paris by Napoleon in 1808. Its professors and graduates, however, were theoretically obliged to subscribe to the Gallican Articles, a condition which drew away most theological students to *St-Sulpice and the diocesan seminaries. The faculty was finally abolished in 1885, but the name 'Sorbonne' continued in use for the University of Paris as a whole. Since the latter's reorganization into 13 separate universities in 1969, the term has been attached to those still connected with the original site: Paris I ('Panthéon-Sorbonne'), Paris III ('la Nouvelle Sorbonne'), and Paris IV ('Paris-Sorbonne').

Important docs. in the Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis, ed. H. [S.] *Denifle, OP, and A. Chatelain (4 vols., Paris, 1889–97). J. Duvernet, Histoire de la Sorbonne dans laquelle on voit l'influence de la théologie sur l'ordre social (2 vols., bound in one, 1790). O. Gréard, Nos Adieux à la vieille Sorbonne (1893), with docs. J. Bonnerot, La Sorbonne: Sa vie, son rôle, son œuvre à travers les siècles (1927). P. Glorieux, Aux origines de la Sorbonne (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, 53–4; 1965–6), incl. text of Cartulary of the college in vol. 2. A. Franklin, La Sorbonne: Ses origines, sa bibliothèque, les débuts de l'imprimerie à Paris et la succession de Richelieu (1875). P. Feret, La Faculté de théologie de Paris et ses docteurs les plus célèbres: Moyen Âge (4 vols., 1894–7); Époque moderne (7 vols., 1900–10). J. K. Farge, Biographical Register of Paris Doctors of Theology 1500–1536 (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Subsidia Mediaevalia, 10; Toronto, 1980). See also bibl. to PARIS.

Sorrowful Mysteries, the Five. The second chaplet of the *Rosary, consisting of (1) the Agony in Gethsemane, (2) the Scourging, (3) the Crowning with Thorns, (4) the Carrying of the Cross, and (5) the Crucifixion.

soteriology (Gk. σωτηρία, 'salvation'). The section of Christian theology which treats of the saving work of Christ for the world. It includes not only the doctrines of the *Atonement and of *Grace, but also (1) the doctrine of human nature as affected by the *Fall and by *sin, which is the presupposition of Christ's work, and (2) the doctrine of man's final destiny as the result of that work (see RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD, HEAVEN, HELL).

Soto, Dominic de (1494–1560), *Dominican theologian. A native of Spain who was a student at Alcalá and at Paris, he entered the Dominican Order at Burgos in 1524. Here he taught in his convent for 7 years until appointed in 1532 to a chair of theology at Salamanca University. This office he continued to hold until 1545, when *Charles V chose him as Imperial Theologian for the Council of *Trent, where he ably expounded the *Thomistic teaching on grace and original sin. After spending some time in Germany as confessor to Charles V, in 1550 he returned to Salamanca, where he was elected in 1552 to the principal chair of theology in succession to Melchior *Cano. His principal writings are treatises De Natura et de Gratia (Venice, 1547, repr., Ridgewood, NJ, 1965) and De Justitia et Jure (Salamanca, 1553–4).

V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP, Domingo de Soto: Estudio biográfico documentado (1961). C. Gutiérrez, SJ, Españoles en Trento (Corpus Tridentinum Hispanicum, 50; Valladolid, 1951), pp. 314–38. F. Stegmüller, 'Zur Gnadenlehre des spanischen Konzilstheologen Domingo de Soto', in G. Schreiber (ed.), Das Weltkonzil von Trient, 1 (1951), pp. 169–230. K. J. Becker, SJ, Die Rechtfertigungslehre nach Domingo de Soto (Analecta Gregoriana, 156; 1967). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain: A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963). M. Andrés [Martín], La teología española en el siglo XVI (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 13–14; 1976–7), esp. 2, pp. 362–5, 483–5, and 504–7. Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 171–4. V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2423–31, s.v.

Soubirous, Bernadette. See BERNADETTE, ST.

soul. The idea of a distinction between the soul, the immaterial principle of life and intelligence, and the body is of great antiquity, though only gradually expressed with any precision. Hebrew thought made little of this distinction, and there is practically no specific teaching on the subject in the Bible beyond an underlying assumption of some form of afterlife (see IMMORTALITY). Greek thought, on the other hand, developed various ways of understanding the relation of body and soul: from the *Platonic idea that the immortal soul is the true self, imprisoned for a time in an alien body, to the *Stoic view of the soul as the 'leading element' (ἡγεμονικόν) of a unity which includes the body. No precise teaching about the soul received general acceptance until the Middle Ages.

This uncertainty is reflected in the writings of the Fathers. *Tertullian, supporting his view by the material imagery of the parable of Dives and Lazarus and influenced by Stoic notions, held the corporeity of the soul, an error from which even St *Irenaeus does not seem to have been entirely free. *Origen, on the other hand, was led by his strongly Platonist leanings to affirm its pre-existence and explained its confinement in a body as a punishment for sins committed in its previous incorporeal state. In the post-Nicene period these divergences largely disappeared, and a modified Platonic view, seeing the soul as the true self, immortal but not pre-existent, won acceptance. The soul came to be universally regarded as an image of God (cf. Gen. 1: 26). St *Augustine gave this doctrine a novel turn by seeing the soul (consisting of memoria, intelligentia, and voluntas) as an image of the Trinity; this formulation was destined to have great influence in the W. *Nemesius and St *Maximus the Confessor provide the most elaborate statement of the Greek patristic position.

Acc. to St *Thomas Aquinas, who follows *Aristotle in his definition of the human soul, the soul is an individual spiritual substance, the 'form' of the body. Both, body and soul together, constitute the human unity, though the soul may be severed from the body and lead a separate existence, as happens after death. The separation, however, is not final, as the soul, in this differing from the angels, was made for the body. As it is purely spiritual, the soul is not, as *Traducianism affirms, a product of the generative, and therefore entirely material, powers of man, but each individual soul is a new creation of God, infused into the body destined for it ('Creationism').

From the 17th cent. R. *Descartes's oversimplified dichotomy between soul and body (res cogitans and res extensa) has had a marked effect on subsequent theological thought. In more recent times, philosophical perplexities over such a dichotomy and the recovery of the biblical insight into the unity of man have meant that the doctrine of the soul, if considered at all, is thought of in relation to the whole biblical doctrine of man.

Source Criticism. See HIGHER CRITICISM.

Souter, Alexander (1873–1949), NT and patristic scholar. He was educated at Aberdeen and Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of the Latinist, J. E. B. Mayor. From 1903 to 1911 he was professor of NT Greek at Mansfield College, Oxford, and from 1911 to 1937 Regius Professor of Humanity (in succession to W. M. *Ramsay) at Aberdeen. He came to acquire an unrivalled knowledge of early Christian Latin. His works in the patristic field include *A Study of Ambrosiaster (1905), an edition of the Pseudo-Augustinian Quaestiones Veteris et Novi Testamenti (CSEL, 1908), and, most important of all, his identification of the text of *Pelagius' Commentary on St Paul's Epistles, which he edited (Texts and Studies, 1922–31). He cooperated with W. *Sanday in studies on the text of the NT. He also argued for a late date (370–420) for the Latin version of *Irenaeus. His valuable Glossary of Later Latin (1949) was published posthumously.

R. J. Getty, 'Alexander Souter, 1873–1949', Aberdeen University Review, 33 (1950), pp. 117–24; repr. with expansions in Proceedings of the British Academy, 28 (1952), pp. 255–68.

South, Robert (1634–1716), English divine. Educated at Westminster under R. Busby and at Christ Church, Oxford, he was for a time in sympathy with *Presbyterianism. In 1658, however, he secretly took Orders. He held a varied succession of offices, becoming Public Orator of Oxford (1660), domestic chaplain to Lord Clarendon (1660), Prebendary of *Westminster (1663), chaplain to the Duke of York (1667), canon of Christ Church (1670), and rector of Islip, Oxon (1678). His sermons, smart, witty, and often sarcastic, became exceedingly popular, but his outspokenness precluded him from higher preferment, though in 1713 he was apparently offered, but declined, the see of *Rochester. In 1689 he opposed the *Toleration Act and for a time hesitated before taking the Oath, and in 1710 he sided with H. *Sacheverell. For several years he controverted with vigour W. *Sherlock's dubiously orthodox teaching on the *Trinity, publishing in 1693 some Animadversions on Sherlock's Vindication (1690) and in 1695, in answer to a reply by Sherlock, Tritheism Charged (both anonymous).

South himself began pub. of his Sermons Preached on Several Occasions (Oxford, 1679; new edns., with further sermons, London, 1692, and 3 vols., ibid., 1697–8). Posthumous works, Lat. and Eng., pub. 2 vols., London, 1717, incl. his will and memoir of his life and writings. The many later edns. of his sermons incl. five additional vols., London, 1744; also collected edn., 7 vols., Oxford, 1823. G. Reedy, SJ, Robert South (1634–1716): An Introduction to his Life and Sermons (Cambridge, 1992). A. Gordon in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 275–7, s.v.

South Africa, Christianity in. The first Christian missions to Africa south of the Zambezi river were Portuguese. Their effect on what is now S. Africa was very limited, and Christianity was really introduced by the Dutch, who began to settle in 1652. There was no organized mission to the indigenous inhabitants until some *Moravians went to the Cape in 1737, but the authorities were suspicious and the mission was soon closed; it did not reopen until 1792 at Genadendal, as a complete, self-contained community living a semi-monastic life. During the Napoleonic Wars the British twice occupied the Cape, and they retained the colony at the Peace of Paris (1814). Though they expelled two RC missionaries whom they found, many other agencies began work in this period. The *LMS arrived in 1799 and provided many of the most famous missionaries, including the pioneers J. *van der Kemp, J. *Philip, R. *Moffat, and D. *Livingstone. Among the earliest African converts was the Xhosa poet Ntsikana (died 1821) who, though never baptized, established through his hymns and his example a tradition which has remained central to black Christianity ever since.

The character of Christian work in S. Africa during the past 200 years has been determined by two principal facts. The existence of a large white community (though not large in proportion to the indigenous population) caused the establishment and organization of a settler Church in many places, with duties other than those of missionary propaganda. And the immensity of the field provided room for the missionary activity of religious bodies and societies from almost every part of W. Christendom. *Methodists arrived in 1814; under William Shaw (1798–1872) they established a thriving mission in the E. Cape and came to have the largest number of African adherents in the country. American, German, French, Finnish, Swiss, Scandinavian, Scottish, and English Protestant missions have all been at work for varying periods. The *SPG arrived in 1821. Outstandingly influential was the Church of Scotland mission centred around the educational institution at Lovedale in Ciskei. From it many of the country's leading African Christians have come, including Tiyo Soga (d. 1871), translator into Xhosa of Pilgrim's Progress and of parts of the Bible, and Tengo Jabavu (d. 1921), the first black professor at Fort Hare.

The Great Trek (1837) resulted in the establishment as the State Church in the Transvaal of the Hervormde Kerk, separate from the Dutch Reformed Church. A further separation led to the creation of a free Gereformeerde Kerk. The Dutch Reformed Church was subjected to considerable tensions not unlike those of the controversy surrounding Bp. J. W. *Colenso in the Anglican Church. It later experienced a renewal of missionary zeal as a result of the *pietistic revival led by Andrew Murray (1828–1917). RC missions particularly have grown since the latter part of the 19th cent., the Oblates of Mary Immaculate (founded 1816) playing a leading part. German *Trappists established themselves at Mariannhill in Natal in 1882 and developed one of the great monastic missions of modern Africa but its work proved irreconcilable with the Trappist rule and they became instead a separate order, Missionaries of Mariannhill, in 1909.

The multiplication of missions led to the creation of the first official *ecumenical organization in S. Africa, the General Missionary Conference founded in 1904. It was replaced in 1932 by the Christian Council of South Africa, which was, in turn, reorganized in the early 1960s and became the South African Council of Churches. In 1963 the Anglican, *Congregational, Methodist, and *Presbyterian Churches established a federal theological seminary at Alice in Cape Province, later closed by the government, reopened at Umtata in the Transkei and now at Pietermaritzburg. Racially discriminatory government policies have brought tension with the Churches ever since the time of van der Kemp. The Dutch Reformed Church, whose theology in the 20th cent. for a time backed a policy of 'separate development', left the *World Council of Churches after the Sharpeville crisis of 1960. The other Churches were all more or less opposed to the policies of the State and their work in black education was almost eliminated following the Bantu Education Act of 1954. With the establishment of the Christian Institute in Johannesburg by Beyers Naudé in 1963, Christian criticism of, and opposition to, racialism became more systematic and was led increasingly by black Christians such as Desmond Tutu (Anglican Abp. of Cape Town 1986–96). Some leading churchmen were deported; others, such as Naudé, Gonville ffrench-Beytagh, and Patrick Mkatschwa, tried or imprisoned.

African Independent Churches have been more numerous in S. Africa than elsewhere on the continent, perhaps because of racial tensions. There are thought to be over 3,000 of these bodies. They include at least 30 per cent of African Christians. While some derive from schisms, or sub-schisms, from a mainline mission Church whose doctrine and order they retain (these are frequently described as 'Ethiopian'), others (generally called 'Zionist') have developed their own rituals, especially of healing, and were often founded by a 'prophet' figure. The most famous of these is the Amanazaretha, founded by Isaiah Shembe in Zululand.

The Church of the Province of Southern Africa (as the former province of South Africa became in 1982) is an independent province of the Anglican communion. The archiepiscopal see at Cape Town was founded in 1847, with R. *Gray as its first bishop. The Province as a whole has been strongly influenced by the *Tractarian Movement, and religious communities, both of men and of women, are perhaps more active in S. Africa than in any other Anglican province. An Alternative *Eucharistic Liturgy was approved by the Provincial Synod in 1919; a complete provincial Prayer Book was issued in 1954 and another in 1989.

J. du Plessis, A History of Christian Missions in South Africa (1911); G. B. A. Gerdener, Recent Developments in the South African Mission Field (1958); P. [B.] Hinchliff, The Church in South Africa (CHS, 1968). C. Lewis and G. E. Edwards, Historical Records of the Church of the Province of South Africa (1934). A. T. Wirgman, The History of the English Church and People in South Africa (1895); P. [B.] Hinchliff, The Anglican Church in South Africa: An Account of the History and Development of the Church of the Province of South Africa (1963). W. E. Brown, The Catholic Church in South Africa from its Origins to the Present Day, ed. M. Derrick [1960]. G. B. A. Gerdener (ed.), Boustowwe vir die Geskiedenis van die Nederduits-Gereformeerde Kerk in die Transgariep (Cape Town, 1930). H. D. van Broekhuizen, Die Wordingsgeskiedenis van die Hollandse Kerke in Suid-Afrika, 1652–1804 (Amsterdam, 1922); A. Moorrees, Die Nederduitse Gereformeerde Kerk in Suid-Afrika 1652–1873 (Cape Town, 1937). J. Whiteside, History of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of South Africa (1906); L. A. Hewson, An Introduction to South African Methodists (Cape Town [1951]). B. G. M. Sundkler, Bantu Prophets in South Africa (1948; 2nd edn., 1961). J. Sales, Mission Stations and the Coloured Communities of the Eastern Cape 1800–1852 (Cape Town and Rotterdam, 1975). B. [G. M.] Sundkler, Zulu Zion and some Swazi Zionists (1976). J. W. de Gruchy, The Church Struggle in South Africa (Grand Rapids, Mich., and London, 1979); P. Walshe, Church versus State in South Africa (1983). J. W. Hofmeyr and K. E. Cross, History of the Church in Southern Africa, vol. 1: A select bibliography of published material to 1980 (Pretoria, 1986). Latourette, 3, pp. 245 f.; 5, pp. 319–81, with bibl. pp. 471–506 passim; and 7, pp. 224–31, with bibl. notes.

South India, Church of. The Church inaugurated on 27 Sept. 1947 by the union of three religious bodies: (1) the (*Anglican) Church of India, Burma, and Ceylon, in respect to four of its dioceses, namely Madras, Tinnevelly, Travancore and Cochin, and Dornakal; (2) the South India Province of the *Methodist Church; (3) the South India United Church, itself the result of a movement which brought *Presbyterian, *Congregational, and Dutch Reformed bodies into organic union in 1908 and was joined in 1919 by the Malabar District of the Basel Mission, which drew its foreign workers from Continental *Lutheran and *Reformed Churches. The Church of South India, which numbers somewhat over one and a half million, is based doctrinally on the *Lambeth Quadrilateral (1888) and claims to be a united and visible Church, in which the Congregational, Presbyterian, and Episcopal elements are preserved. The union was achieved by the acceptance of ministers ordained in each of these traditions into a united ministry (without requiring any reordinations), combined with the introduction of an episcopate in the historic succession (from Anglicanism) and its maintainance for the future, with the assurance that all future ordinations would be episcopal. It was expected that at the end of 30 years all presbyters would have been episcopally ordained.

The creation of the Church of South India was the fruit of negotiations which began at a historic conference at Tranquebar in May 1919, when the 33 participants (31 Indians, 1 American, and 1 Englishman, almost all ministers of varying denominations) determined to remedy the evils arising from divisions to Christian mission work in India. The 1920 *Lambeth Conference Appeal to all Christian People quickened hopes, and a Joint Committee of the three bodies concerned was set up. The challenge to traditional Catholic order in the proposed arrangement led to much controversy and many delays; but the 1930 Lambeth Conference gave general encouragement to the scheme, believing that Catholic principles would be sufficiently safeguarded. The scheme was later subjected to considerable revision, and in 1947, if one vote had been differently cast, the union would have been delayed. In the Nandyal district of S. India some 40,000 Anglicans refused to join the Church. It has subsequently been joined by various other small groups, including the Basel Mission Council of Bombay–Karnatik in 1958.

The 1948 Lambeth Conference gave the union a measure of qualified approval, and in 1955 a state of 'limited inter-communion' between the Church of South India and the C of E was approved by the Convocations of Canterbury and York. This was somewhat extended by the General Synod in 1972. The Church of South India is now a member of the Anglican Consultative Council, the *Lambeth Conference, and the Primates' Meeting.

The method of uniting the ministries adopted by the Church of South India has been widely advocated in union negotiations in various parts of the world, but usually rejected in favour of the imposition of hands by bishops on all uniting ministries at the time of union.

G. K. A. *Bell, Documents on Christian Unity (4 vols., 1924–58; nos. 71–81, 139–43, 147, 204–8 and 267–74). B. [G. M.] Sundkler, Church of South India: The Movement towards Union, 1900–1947 (1954). [A.] M. Ward, The Pilgrim Church: An Account of the First Five Years in the Life of the Church of South India (1953).

South Pacific, Christianity in. In 1776 a RC mission was sent by the Viceroy of Peru to Tahiti, but withdrew after a few months. The *LMS sent out evangelists who started work in Tahiti in 1797, and rapidly extended it. Later pioneers included John *Williams, who suffered martyrdom at Erromanga in Vanuatu (formerly the New Hebrides) in 1839. The work of the LMS in the area was more persistent and more widespread than that of any other society, but many other bodies have taken part in attempts to evangelize the Pacific Islanders. In 1822 the Wesleyan *Methodists sent their first missionaries to Tonga; they later went on to the Fiji Islands. In 1854 the control of this mission passed from the Methodists in Britain to those of *Australia. From 1848 onwards *Presbyterians came from Nova Scotia and Scotland, while in 1886 and 1887 two *Lutheran societies took up work in the German part of New Guinea. The South Sea Evangelical Mission began work in the Solomon Islands in 1904. When the Society Islands and the Loyalty Islands came under French colonial rule, the LMS was replaced by the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society. For the missionary work performed by the *Reformed Presbyterian Church, see PATON, J. G.

RC missions entered the field in many places early in the 19th cent. The work was largely undertaken by the newer missionary orders, notably the Picpus Society or Fathers of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary (approved in 1817), who were given responsibility for work in Oceania in 1825, and the *Marists (q.v.). In 1835 the area was divided between the two orders, East Oceania being assigned to the Picpusians and West Oceania to the Marists. The Picpusian mission included the heroic work of Father *Damien in the leper colony at Molokai, Hawaii. The Hawaiian Islands were annexed to the USA in 1898 and created the 50th state of the Union in 1959; but for a long period most of the missionary work in that part of the Pacific had originated in the USA.

Anglican work in the S. Pacific began under G. A. *Selwyn, appointed first Bp. of New Zealand in 1841. One of his disciples, J. C. *Patteson, first Bp. of Melanesia (1861), was killed in 1871. The diocese of Melanesia formed part of the Province of New Zealand until it became an independent Province in 1975. The Anglican mission in Papua, founded from Australia in 1891, developed into the Province of Papua New Guinea, formed in 1977. The South Pacific Anglican Council comprises the Provinces of Melanesia and Papua New Guinea and the diocese of Polynesia, which is part of the Province of New Zealand.

The task which confronted missionaries in the S. Pacific was one of the hardest in missionary history. In addition to the difficulties of communication over a vast area, many of the inhabitants had a reputation for savagery; even to modern times missionaries have suffered martyrdom in the SW Pacific. Here, as elsewhere, during the 20th cent. there has been a marked diminution of hostility between Protestant and RC missionaries, which in the 19th cent. was aggravated by the support given to the latter by French naval power. In the *ecumenical sphere notable events have been the foundation of the Pacific Literature Society, formed in 1943 to prepare literature on an interdenominational basis, the Pacific Theological College in 1965, and the Pacific Conference of Churches in 1966. There has also been an example of interconfessional union in the inauguration in 1968 of the United Church of Papua New Guinea and the Solomon Islands, which brought together Methodists and the Papua Ekalesia, which had grown out of the work of the LMS. Another major trend in the later 20th cent. is the creation of self-governing Churches and the advance towards indigenous leadership. In the RC Church a hierarchy was set up in the South Pacific in 1966. The majority of the inhabitants of the Pacific Islands now profess Christianity. The largest non-Christian population is in Fiji, where descendants of Indian immigrants are mainly Hindus or Muslims.

Primary accounts incl. J. Williams, A Narrative of Missionary Enterprises in the South Sea Islands (1837), and C. E. Fox, Kakamora (1962). J. Colwell (ed.), A Century in the Pacific (1914), pt. 4, 'Missionary', pp. 409–585. J. Garrett, To Live among the Stars: Christian Origins in Oceania (Geneva [1982]) [covers period to 1900, with some material on the 20th cent.]; id., Footsteps in the Sea: Christianity in Oceania to World War II (Suva and Geneva, 1992). C. W. Forman, The Island Churches of the South Pacific: Emergence in the Twentieth Century (American Society of Missiology Series, 5; Maryknoll, NY [1982]). J. A. Boutilier and others (eds.), Mission, Church, and Sect in Oceania (Association for Social Anthropology in Oceania, Monograph, 6; Ann Arbor, Mich. [1978]). [W.] N. Gunson, Messengers of Grace: Evangelical Missionaries in the South Seas, 1797–1860 (Melbourne, 1978). D. [L.] Hilliard, God's Gentlemen: A History of the Melanesian Mission, 1849–1942 (St Lucia, Queensland [1978]). A. H. Wood, Overseas Missions of the Australian Methodist Church, 1–3 (Melbourne, 1975–8) and 5, in conjunction with M. Reeson (Sydney [1987]). R. M. Wiltgen, The Founding of the Roman Catholic Church in Oceania 1825 to 1850 (Canberra, London, and Norwalk, Conn., 1981). A. R. Tippett, Solomon Islands Christianity: A Study in Growth and Obstruction (1967). H. [M.] Laracy, Marists and Melanesians: A History of Catholic Missions in the Solomon Islands (Canberra, 1976). H. Wagner and H. Reiner (eds.), The Lutheran Church in Papua New Guinea: The First Hundred Years, 1886–1986 (Adelaide, 1986). R. Lovett, The History of the London Missionary Society, 1795–1895, 1 (1899), pp. 117–474; N. Goodall, History of the London Missionary Society, 1895–1945 (1954), esp. pp. 352–411, and bibl. refs., p. 592; Latourette, 5, pp. 198–263, with bibl. pp. 471–506 passim, and 7, pp. 192–9, with bibl. notes. J. L. Dunstan in S. [C.] Neill and others (eds.), Concise Dictionary of the Christian World Mission (1970), pp. 459–65, s.v. 'Pacific Islands'.

Southcott, Joanna (1750–1814), self-styled prophetess. She began work as a dairymaid and then became a domestic servant. In 1791 she joined the *Methodists 'by Divine command', and in the following year proclaimed that she was the 'woman clothed with the sun' of Rev. 12. By 1814 she was expecting to give birth to a messianic child, the 'Shiloh'. In the meantime she had been 'sealing' those who hoped to be among the 144,000 elect. Some 20,000 are believed to have been sealed and her total following (largely artisan but with some genteel persons) may have been much larger. She published over 60 pamphlets containing her revelations. The movement survived in the 19th cent. under a variety of leaders who claimed to be her successors but now appears to be extinct. R. T. *Davidson, when Abp. of Canterbury, was constantly pressed to summon the bishops to open a box of her prophecies for the well-being of the country, and the Panacea Society still makes similar demands.

Her own writings are the primary source for her life. A General Index to the Writings of Joanna Southcott (London [1805]). G. R. Balleine, Past Finding Out: The Tragic Story of Joanna Southcott and her Successors (1956). A. Seymour, The Express (2 vols., 1909; sympathetic, with extensive summaries and extracts of her writings). J. K. Hopkins, A Woman to deliver her People: Joanna Southcott and English Millenarianism in an Era of Revolution (Austin, Tex., 1982). J. F. C. Harrison, The Second Coming: Popular Millenarianism 1780–1850 (1979), pp. 86–160. A. Gordon in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 277–9, s.v., with further bibl.

Southwark. The Anglican diocese of Southwark was created in 1905, comprising the deaneries of Greenwich, Lewisham, and Woolwich in Kent and the Parliamentary Divisions of East and Mid-Surrey. In 1877 these deaneries had been taken away from the diocese of *Winchester and added to that of Rochester. Anthony Thorold (Bp. of Rochester 1877–91; Bp. of Winchester 1891–5) worked for the establishment of a separate diocese for S. London and Surrey and for the restoration of St Saviour's, Southwark, as the future cathedral for a new diocese. In 1905, through the efforts of E. S. *Talbot, the diocese of Southwark was created and Talbot translated from Rochester as its first bishop.

The priory of St Mary Overie ('Overie' means 'over the water from the City of London') was founded in 1106, when it was served by *Augustinian canons. The church was severely damaged by fire in 1212. A new Gothic church was built during the next 200 years, though a few traces of the Norman church can still be seen. In 1469 the roof of the nave collapsed and was rebuilt. The priory was surrendered to *Henry VIII in 1539, and it became the parish church of St Saviour, Southwark. By 1815 the church had fallen into disrepair and much work was undertaken between 1818 and 1827. After the roof of the nave was found to be unsafe in 1831, it was removed and the walls were taken down, and in 1841 a new nave was completed. In 1890 the foundation stone was laid for the fourth nave to be built since the Conquest. When the diocese of Southwark was created the church became 'The Collegiate Church of St Saviour and St Mary Overie'. Lancelot *Andrewes, Bp. of Winchester, was buried in the church in 1626.

The RC diocese of Southwark dates from the restoration of the hierarchy in 1850; it was created an archdiocese in 1965.

W. Taylor, Annals of St Mary Overy: An Historical and Descriptive Account of St Saviour's Church and Parish (1833); F. T. Dollman, The Priory of St Mary Overie, Southwark (1881); [W.] Thompson, History and Antiquities of the Collegiate Church of St Saviour (St Marie Overie), Southwark (1904): G. Worley, Southwark Cathedral . . .: A Short History and Description of the Fabric, with some account of the College and See (Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1905); T. P. Stevens, The Story of Southwark Cathedral [1922]; F. [M. G.] Higham, Southwark Story (1955). Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England), An Inventory of the Historical Monuments in London, 5: East London (1930), pp. 58–66.

Southwell. St *Paulinus is said to have founded a collegiate church here *c.*630. The present cathedral church of St Mary the Virgin was begun in the reign of Henry I and has a fine Norman nave and transepts, and a 13th-cent. *chapter house. The early collegiate foundation developed into a college of secular canons, which was dissolved by *Henry VIII in 1540, refounded in 1585, and again dissolved in 1841. In 1884 the church became the cathedral of the new Diocese of Southwell, consisting roughly of the counties of Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire. In 1927 the former was separated off when the Diocese of Derby was constituted. In 1935 the Diocese was transferred from the Province of *Canterbury to that of *York.

A. F. Leach (ed.), Visitations and Memorials of Southwell Minster (Camden Society, 2nd ser. 48; 1891); T. M. Blagg (ed.), Seventeenth Century Parish Register Transcripts Belonging to the Peculiar of Southwell (Thoroton Society, Record Series, 1; 1903); A. H. Thompson (ed.), 'The Certificates of the Chantry Commissioners for the College of Southwell in 1546 and 1548', Transactions of the Thoroton Society, 15 (1900), pp. 63–158. W. D. Macray, 'The Manuscripts of Southwell Cathedral', in Twelfth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, Appendix, pt. 9 (1891), pp. 539–52. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 6 (pt. 3, 1830 edn.), pp. 1312–23. W. Dickinson Rastall, A History of the Antiquities of the Town and Church of Southwell (1787). A. Dimock, The Cathedral Church of Southwell (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1898). A. H. Thompson, 'The Cathedral Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Southwell', Transactions of the Thoroton Society, 15 (1900), pp. 15–62. J. C. Cox in VCH, Nottingham, 2, ed. W. Page (1910), pp. 152–61. G. Crosse in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), pp. 582 f., s.v.

Southwell, St Robert (*c.*1561–95), poet and RC martyr. He was a native of Norfolk, educated by the *Jesuits at *Douai and *Paris, and entered the Society in 1580 after a two-year novitiate. In 1584 he was ordained priest and made prefect of studies at the English College in Rome. In 1586 he was sent on the English mission. He first stayed with Lord Vaux of Harrowden and, though closely watched, gained many conversions through his piety and winning manner. In 1589 he became chaplain to Anne, Countess of Arundel, and established relations with her husband, imprisoned in the Tower. He spent much of his time in hiding in London or in RC country houses, where he stayed in disguise and under assumed names. In 1592 he was betrayed by Anne Bellamy, the daughter of Richard Bellamy, a Catholic whom he had visited at Harrow. He was confined first at the gatehouse at *Westminster and later in the Tower. After three years of imprisonment he was hanged and quartered as a traitor. He was beatified in 1929 and was among the *Forty Martyrs of England and Wales canonized in 1970. Feast day, formerly 21 Feb.

Collections of his verse were published immediately after his death entitled St Peter's Complaint with other Poems and Maeoniae (both 1595). Among his prose treatises are An Epistle of Comfort, The Triumphs over Death, Mary Magdalen's Funerall Teares, and An Humble Supplication to Her Majestie, all written in 1591 and at first circulated in manuscript. They were designed esp. to encourage Catholics under persecution. His poems, most of which were probably written in prison, soon became popular with both Catholics and Protestants. They give utterance to deep religious feeling, though his vivid imagination led him to use extensively the fanciful conceits favoured by the poets of his time.

Southwell's Prose Works ed. W. J. Walter (London, 1828); Poems ed. A. B. Grosart ('The Fuller Worthies Library', ibid., 1872) and by J. H. McDonald and N. P. Brown (Oxford, 1967). His Spiritual Exercises and Devotions (Lat. text) first ed. J. M. de Buck, SJ, with Eng. tr. by P. E. Hallett (London, 1931). Modern edn. of An Humble Supplication to her Maiestie by R. C. Bald (Cambridge, 1953). Modern Life by C. Devlin (London, 1956). P. Janelle, Robert Southwell the Writer: A Study in Religious Interpretation (Paris thesis, Clermont-Ferrand; also London, 1935); J. D. Scallon, SJ, The Poetry of Robert Southwell, S.J. (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 11; 1975). A. D. Cousins, The Catholic Religious Poets from Southwell to Crashaw (1991), pp. 38–71. N. P. Brown, 'Robert Southwell: The Mission of the Written Word', in T. M. McCoog, SJ (ed.), The Reckoned Expense (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1996), pp. 193–213. J. H. McDonald, The Poems and Prose Writings of Robert Southwell, S.J.: A Bibliographical Study (Roxburghe Club, 1937). S. Lee in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 294–9, with refs. to orig. sources. Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 239–44.

Sozomen (early 5th cent.), Salmaninius Hermias Sozomenus, Church historian. Little is known of his life beyond the facts that he was a native of Bethelia, nr. Gaza in Palestine, that he was educated by monks, and that, after travelling extensively, he settled at *Constantinople as a lawyer. Here he conceived the idea of continuing *Eusebius of Caesarea's 'Church History' down to his own day. His work, in nine Books, covers the period 323 to 425. He drew extensively upon his elder contemporary, *Socrates; his historical grasp was weaker, but he reports certain subjects, e.g. the spread of Christianity among the *Armenians, Saracens, and Goths, much more fully. Also, he had more sense of style than Socrates. Though orthodox in intention, he reveals little understanding of the issues at stake in the dogmatic controversies.

Text ed. R. *Stephanus, H. *Valesius, and W. Reading, as for Socrates (q.v.). W. Reading's edn. repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 67. 843–1630. Revision by R. Hussey (3 vols., Oxford, 1860). Modern crit. edn. of Sozomen by J. Bidez and G. C. Hansen (GCS 50; 1960; repr., with Fr. tr. by A.-J. Festugière, OP, and introd. by B. Grillet and G. Sabbah, SC 306, etc., 1983 ff.). G. Schoo, Die Quellen des Kirchenhistorikers Sozomenos (1911). P. *Batiffol, 'Sozomène et Sabinos', BZ 7 (1898), pp. 265–84. CPG 3 (1979), p. 167 (no. 6030). W. Eltester in PW, 2te Reihe, 2 (pt. 1; 1927), cols. 1240–8; G. Bardy in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2469–71; A. Labate in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3261–3; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 790, all s.v.

Spain, Christianity in. Tradition ascribes the evangelization of Spain to St *Paul and St *James, but the earliest record of Spanish ecclesiastical organization is a letter of St *Cyprian of 254. The spread of Christianity in the peninsula by the end of the 3rd cent. is attested by Spanish martyrdoms in the *persecution under *Diocletian (many of them commemorated in verse by *Prudentius) and by the set of disciplinary measures enacted by the Council of *Elvira (*c.*306). In the 4th cent. the Spanish bishops *Hosius of Córdoba and *Gregory of Elvira won distinction as opponents of *Arianism, while *Priscillian (d. 386) and his followers became notorious as adepts of an asceticism bordering on heterodoxy.

In the course of the 5th cent. most of Spain fell under the rule of Arian Visigoths. The conversion of that people to Catholicism, officially proclaimed by King *Recared at the Third Council of *Toledo (589), inaugurated an era of exceptional brilliance in the religious and cultural life of the region; it is illustrated in the writings of such men as *Leander and *Isidore of Seville, *Ildefonsus and Julian of Toledo. The movement towards reform and order in the Spanish Church is reflected in an important series of national Visigothic councils held at Toledo, in the progressive elaboration of the collection of canon law known as the Hispana, and in the emergence of the so-called *Mozarabic rite. Monasticism also flourished and several Spanish Rules date from the Visigothic period.

Early in the 8th cent. the Visigothic kingdom was conquered by the forces of *Islam from N. Africa. In accordance with the precepts of the *Koran, the new Muslim rulers tolerated Christianity, though there were occasional episodes of persecution, e.g. at Córdoba in the mid-9th cent. Christian principalities emerged in N. Spain in the 8th and 9th cents. as nuclei of opposition to Islamic rule. Their slow expansion to the south was seen by later generations as a sustained war of reconquest, but perhaps owed more to opportunism and social factors such as demographic pressure. From the 12th cent. this southward drift was influenced by the spirit of the *Crusades. Most of the Iberian peninsula had come under Christian rule by *c.*1250, though a small Islamic enclave survived in the vassal-state of Granada until its incorporation into Castile in 1492. Franco-Papal influences upon the medieval Spanish Church were pronounced from *c.*1050; they may be seen in the foundation of *Cluniac and *Cistercian monasteries and in the disappearance of some distinctively Spanish uses such as the Mozarabic rite proscribed at the Council of Burgos in 1080. Military orders modelled on the *Templars, incl. those of Calatrava and *Santiago, were founded in the 12th cent. In the 13th cent. three Spaniards made outstanding contributions to the Christian life of Europe: St *Dominic, St *Raymond of Peñafort, and Ramon *Llull (qq.v.).

In the *Great Schism Castile and Aragon played a leading part on the side of the antipopes until shortly before the Council of *Constance (1415). Yet the Middle Ages were also marked by the expansion of the eremitical orders, such as the *Carthusians and esp. the Jeronimites (founded in 1373). The *mendicants also, notably the *Dominicans and *Franciscans, experienced a growing popularity. Both these orders saw a movement towards reform which brought about the birth of branches of '*Observants'; though this led to rivalry it also meant that the Franciscans, with the Observant Abp. of Toledo, Card. F. *Ximénez de Cisneros at their head, were in a good position to take advantage of the opportunties offered in the mission field with the discovery of America. The Spanish *Inquisition, which, in answer to popular hostility towards Jews and converted Muslims, was established by *Ferdinand and *Isabella in 1480 in Andalusia (with some reluctance on the Papal side), was gradually to spread to the rest of Castile, though not to Aragon until the 16th cent.

In 1492, after the union of the Crowns of Aragon and Castile and the expulsion of all professed Jews, the title of '*Catholic Majesty' was conferred by Pope *Alexander VI upon the King of Spain. Considerable reforms of the religious orders took place during the reigns of Ferdinand and Isabella. Under the Emp. *Charles V, who was King of Spain from 1516 to 1556, the power of the country reached its height. Not only was its influence in Europe unparalleled, but it had won an Empire in the New World equalled only by *Portugal (over which the Spanish King ruled from 1580 to 1640). The adhesion of Spain to the Papacy in the conflicts of the 16th cent. thus became a political factor of the first importance. Charles V, as *Holy Roman Emperor, was involved in the conflicts produced by the *Reformation in Germany, while his son *Philip II (1556–98) was faced with the revolt of the Spanish *Netherlands. Groups of *Alumbrados and *Protestants within Spain were suppressed, but undercurrents of heterodoxy remained, and the Inquisition was very active. This was a period of greater vigour and variety in Spanish religious life than has commonly been supposed. Sharp differences existed between the theological traditions of some religious orders. The influence of Spanish bishops at the Council of *Trent did much to shape the *Counter-Reformation. It was also an age of unparalleled mystics and spiritual writers (St *Teresa of Ávila, St *John of the Cross, Luis de *León, and *Luis of Granada), who nevertheless faced ecclesiastical suspicion and hostility in their own day.

Philip V, the Bourbon king named as the successor of the childless Charles II in 1700, strove to enforce the authority of the Crown over the Church. The position of the Church in Spain, as the one serious threat to royal absolutism, was uneasy, and relations between the Spanish Court and the Papacy, broken off during the War of Spanish Succession (1701–15), were not healed until the 1753 Concordat between the Holy See and Ferdinand VI. The *Jesuits, who were one focus of resistance to the extension of royal authority, were expelled in 1767; a second, the Inquisition, was to survive until 1808. Political and religious liberalism appeared again under French influence; hostility between liberalism and the Church continued through the 19th cent., a period of unrest, conflict and alternating extremes in which the Church was firmly allied to the conservative side. Thus the ecclesiastical censorship of the reactionary Ferdinand VII in the 1820s was followed by the expropriation of Church assets during the regime of the radical Juan Alvarez Mendizabal in the 1830s. *Anticlericalism, expressed in the 'monk murders' of 1835, together with the dissolution of many convents and monasteries and the widespread destruction of churches, helped polarize attitudes. Meanwhile, the early 19th-cent. 'Neo-Catholic Revival', partly inspired by F. R. de *Chateaubriand, produced the RC apologists Juan Donoso Cortes (1809–53) and Jaime Luciano Balmès (1810–48), and was influential in Spanish intellectual life well into the middle of the 19th cent.

The overthrow of Ferdinand VII's daughter, Isabel II, in 1868 was followed in 1869 by the proclamation of freedom of conscience by a secularizing parliament. The position of the Church was under threat until the monarchy was restored in the person of Isabel's son, Alfonso, in 1874. The moderate constitution agreed in 1876 was to remain the framework of Spanish politics for nearly 50 years. This again recognized Catholicism as the State religion, subsidized clergy stipends and the upkeep of RC churches, and strictly limited the activities of other religious bodies. Under this settlement there was a noteworthy Catholic revival, including the spectacular growth of the religious *congregations of men and esp. women, and their network of schools, clinics, hospitals, and orphanages. The revival, however, was more a bourgeois than a popular phenomenon, and it had little effect in the poor rural south or in the new industrial areas of the cities. Nor did it prevent many Spanish intellectuals from embracing *deism or *agnosticism, and resenting Church tutelage.

When the monarchy fell in 1931, the Second Republic committed itself to the laicizing agenda of the anticlerical intellectuals as well as to the radical social measures expected of it by the working masses. It separated Church and State, ended State subsidies, dissolved the Jesuits, and attempted to close the schools run by the religious orders. It also introduced civil marriage and *divorce and secularized cemeteries. Defence of the Church became identified with hostility both to the laicizing initiatives of the Republic and to its social reforms. Consequently, when a group of generals took up arms against the Republic in July 1936, most bishops and conservative Catholic politicians greeted the attempted coup with relief. This was intensified when in many Republican areas anticlerical violence on a scale unprecedented in modern W. Europe resulted in the killing of almost 7,000 priests and religious and the destruction of hundreds of churches and other ecclesiastical buildings. In Republican Spain, except in the Basque country, RCism was driven underground, while the insurgent generals assumed the role and rhetoric of a crusade to save the Church.

General Franco's victory in 1939 gave the Church a powerful position. The Republic's laicizing changes were swept away and the old closeness of Church and State re-established. Moreover the Church's main opponents—socialists, anarchists, communists, and free-thinking intellectuals—had been killed, imprisoned, or driven into exile. Until the 1960s the alliance of Church and State was unchallenged. In that decade, however, criticism of the dictatorship began to mount within the ranks of the clergy and was encouraged by the adoption of the language of civil rights and social justice by Pope *John XXIII and the Second *Vatican Council. By the time of Franco's death in 1975, the Church had distanced itself far enough from the dictatorship, and established good enough democratic credentials, to find a secure place relatively easily in the new democratic order which gradually emerged and which was finally enshrined in the 1978 Constitution. Spain now has no State religion, respects freedom of conscience, and has reintroduced civil marriage and divorce. Protestantism in any form, numerically of little importance in Spain, no longer involves any legal disabilities.

H. Florez, cont. by M. Risco, A. Merino, J. de la Canal, S. de Barnanda, V. de la Fuente, and C. R. Fort, España sagrada: Theatro geográphico-histórico de la Iglesia de España (56 vols., 1747–1961; index by A. González Palencia, 1918; 2nd edn., 1946). P. B. *Gams, Die Kirchengeschichte von Spanien (3 vols., 1862– 79); R. García-Villoslada (ed.), Historia de la Iglesia en España (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, Maior, 16–22; 1979–82). S. G. Payne, Spanish Catholicism: An Historical Overview (Madison, Wis., 1984). Z. García Villada, SJ, Historia eclesiástica de España [to 1085] (3 vols. bound in 5, 1920–36). R. [J. H.] Collins, Early Medieval Spain: Unity in Diversity, 400–1000 (1983). E. A. Thompson, 'The Conversion of the Spanish Suevi to Catholicism', in E. James (ed.), Visigothic Spain: New Approaches (Oxford, 1980), pp. 77–92. J. Orlandis and D. Ramos-Lissón, Die Synoden auf der Iberischen Halbinsel bis zum Einbruch des Islam (711) (Paderborn, 1981). K. B. Wolf, Christian Martyrs in Muslim Spain (Cambridge, 1988). M. Defourneaux, Les Français en Espagne aux XIe et XIIe siècles (1949). P. Linehan, The Spanish Church and the Papacy in the Thirteenth Century (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 4; 1971). J. Vincke, Staat und Kirche in Katalonien und Aragon während des Mittelalters, 1 (1931). Id., 'Kirche und Staat in Spanien während des Spätmittelalters', RQ 43 (1935), pp. 35–53. J. García Oró, OFM, Cisneros y la Reforma del Clero Español en tiempo de los Reyes Catolicos (1971). J. M. Revuelta Somalo, 'Renovación de la vida espiritual', in Historia General de España y America, 5 (1981), pp. 189–270. M. Bataillon, Érasme et l'Espagne: Recherches sur l'histoire spirituelle du XVIe siècle (Bibliothèque de l'École des hautes études hispaniques, 21; 1937; 2nd edn. by D. Devoto and C. Amiel, Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 250; 3 vols., Geneva, 1991). M. Andrés, La teología española en el siglo XVI (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, Maior, 13–14; 1976–7). W. A. Christian, Jun., Local Religion in Sixteenth-Century Spain (Princeton, NJ, 1981). R. Herr, The Eighteenth-century Revolution in Spain (ibid., 1958), esp. pp. 11–36 and 400–33. W. J. Callahan, Church, Politics, and Society in Spain, 1750–1874 (Harvard Historical Monograph, 73; 1984); F. Lannon, Privilege, Persecution, and Prophecy: The Catholic Church in Spain 1875–1975 (Oxford, 1987). J. Iribarren (ed.), Documentos colectivos del Episcopado español 1870–1974 (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1974). J. C. Ullman, The Tragic Week: A Study of Anticlericalism in Spain, 1875–1912 (Cambridge, Mass., 1968). C. A. Garcia and K. G. Grubb, Religion in the Republic of Spain (1933; evangelical survey). J. Delpech, The Oppression of Protestants in Spain (Eng. tr. by T. and D. Johnson, Boston, 1955; London, 1956). C. J. Bartlett, 'The Question of Religious Toleration in Spain in the Nineteenth Century', JEH 8 (1957), pp. 205–16. A. Ferreiro, The Visigoths in Gaul and Spain A.D. 418–711: A Bibliography (Leiden, 1988), esp. pp. 171–413. A. G. Kinder, Spanish Protestants and Reformers in the Sixteenth Century: A Bibliography (1983). Q. Aldea Vaquero and others (eds.), Diccionario de historia eclesiástica de España (4 vols. + suppl., 1972–87). C. Baraut, OSB, and others in Dict. Sp., 4 (1960), cols. 1089–192, s.v. 'Espagne'; J. Fernández Alonso in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 892–944, s.v. 'Espagne'.

Spalatin, Georg (1484–1545), German humanist and reformer. Georg Burkhardt was born at Spalt (hence his name) near Nürnberg, studied at Erfurt and *Wittenberg, and from 1505 to 1507 taught at the monastery of Georgenthal. In 1508 he was ordained priest and in 1509 was appointed tutor to the sons of the Prince Elector, *Frederick the Wise of Saxony. He soon won the Elector's confidence and became his secretary and librarian. In 1511 he was sent back to Wittenberg, where he became acquainted with M. *Luther, under whose guidance he began to study the Bible. His scholarship came to be much valued at the Saxon court, and it was mainly through Spalatin's influence that the hesitating Elector was gained to the ideas of the Reformer. In 1518 he accompanied Frederick to the Diet of *Augsburg, and in 1521 to *Worms. In 1525 he married and went to Altenburg, where he carried through the change from Catholicism to Lutheranism. Under Frederick's successor, John (1525–32), he continued to foster the Reformation, being chiefly engaged in the visitation of schools and churches. His later years were darkened by melancholy. Besides translations of writings of Luther, P. *Melanchthon, and *Erasmus, he compiled Annales Reformationis (ed. 1718) and Chronicon et Annales [1463–1525]. He also conducted an extensive correspondence with Luther, whose confidant he was, but only Luther's replies survive.

An edn. of his Historischer Nachlass und Briefe was undertaken by C. Neudecker and L. Preller (vol. 1 only, the Life of Frederick the Wise, pub. Jena, 1851). I. Höss, Georg Spalatin, 1484–1545 (Weimar, 1956; repr., with new introd. and other revisions, 1989). H. Volz, 'Bibliographie der im 16. Jahrhundert erschienenen Schriften Georg Spalatins', Zeitschrift für Bibliothekswesen und Bibliographie, 5 (1958), pp. 83–119. F. Müller in Allgemeine deutsche Biographie, 35 (1893), pp. 1–29; I. Höss in Contemporaries of Erasmus, ed. P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher, 3 (1987), pp. 266–8, both s.v. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 2 (1935), pp. 284–6 (nos. 20266–96), and 7 (1966), p. 217 (nos. 58271–82).

Spalatrensis. See DE DOMINIS, MARCO ANTONIO.

Spanish Armada. See ARMADA, SPANISH.

Sparrow, Anthony (1612–85), Bp. of *Norwich. He was a Fellow of Queens' College, Cambridge, from 1633 till his expulsion by the *Puritans in 1644. For a sermon preached on confession and absolution in 1637, he was brought into the Vice-Chancellor's court, but successfully defended by W. *Juxon, Bp. of London. At the Restoration he became Archdeacon of Sudbury. In 1662 he was appointed President of his college, in 1667 was made Bp. of *Exeter, and in 1676 translated to Norwich. He was a keen High Churchman throughout his life, best known through his Rationale upon the Book of Common Prayer (1655; many times reprinted), the object of which was to show that the C of E service was neither 'old superstitious Roman dotage' nor 'schismatically new'.

Rationale, with some of his minor works, ed. by S. Downes (London, 1722), and repr. by J. H. *N[ewman] (Oxford, 1839), with preface, pp. i–iv; extracts in P. E. More and F. L. Cross (eds.), Anglicanism (1935), nos. 220 and 234, pp. 501 f. and 521 f. W. P. Courtney in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 313 f., s.v.

SPCK. The 'Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge'. It was founded by T. *Bray and four laymen in 1698 'to promote and encourage the erection of charity schools in all parts of England and Wales; to disperse, both at home and abroad, Bibles and tracts of religion; and in general to advance the honour of God and the good of mankind, by promoting Christian knowledge both at home and in the other parts of the world by the best methods that should offer'. Much of its original educational and missionary work was in due course taken over by the *National Society and the *SPG. The Society now operates in three divisions: SPCK Worldwide, which by funding helps to make books available in countries overseas; publishing (the SPCK is the third oldest publisher in Great Britain), and bookselling, with its own bookshops in Britain. History, ethos, and constitution link the SPCK closely with the C of E, but it is a voluntary society serving a wide Christian constituency.

W. O. B. Allen and E. McClure, Two Hundred Years: The History of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1698–1898

(1898); W. K. Lowther Clarke, A History of the S.P.C.K. (1959). E. McClure (ed.), A Chapter in English Church History: Being the Minutes of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge for the Years 1698–1704, together with Abstracts of Correspondents' Letters during Part of the same Period (1888). M. Clement, The S.P.C.K. and Wales, 1699–1740: The History of the S.P.C.K. in Wales from its Foundation to the Early Years of the Welsh Methodist Movement (CHS, 1954), with bibl. C. Rose, 'The origins and ideals of the SPCK 1699–1716', in J. Walsh and others (eds.), The Church of England c.1689–c.1833 (Cambridge, 1993), pp. 172–90.

Speaker's Commentary, the. A Commentary on the whole Bible, edited by F. C. Cook (1810–89), at the instance of J. E. Denison (1800–73), who was Speaker of the House of Commons from 1857 to 1872. It was published in 10 vols. between 1871 and 1881. Its object was the defence of a conservative attitude to Scripture, to combat the liberalism of Essays and Reviews* (1860) and similar writings. Cook was assisted by many eminent scholars and theologians, but his work suffered from the somewhat narrow purpose for which it was conceived.

species. A Latin word meaning 'form' or 'kind', employed in scholastic theology to designate the material elements used in the sacraments, esp. the bread and wine in the *Eucharist, and in that sense taken over into theological English.

Speier, Diets of. See SPEYER, DIETS OF.

Spencer, Herbert (1820–1903), philosophical and scientific thinker. The son of a schoolmaster, he was practically self-taught. From 1837 to 1846 he was a civil engineer on the railway. Two years later he became connected with the Economist and afterwards with the Westminster Review. His two earliest writings were Social Statics (1851) and Principles of Psychology (1855). In 1860 he announced a systematic series of philosophical treatises; they included First Principles (1862), Principles of Biology (1867), Principles of Psychology (1872), and Principles of Sociology (1877). From 1886 to 1891 Spencer's health prevented his writing, but in 1893 he completed Principles of Ethics.

Spencer was the chief exponent of *agnosticism in 19th-cent. England. He divided all reality into the knowable (the province of science) and the unknowable (that of religion). He asserted that man could not only be conscious of the unknowable, but that knowledge itself was finally dependent upon the unknowable, and that the Absolute is the fundamental reality behind all things. Nevertheless the Absolute could not be known in the strict sense of the word. Spencer also affirmed his belief in progress as a supreme law of the universe. All his writings were characterized by an extreme individualism.

Autobiography (2 vols., 1904; posthumous). D. Duncan, The Life and Letters of Herbert Spencer (1908, with full bibl.). F. H. Collins, An Epitome of The Synthetic Philosophy (1889; suppl., 1894; Pref. by H. Spencer). Other studies incl. those by H. Macpherson (London, 1900) and J. Royce (New York and London, 1904). W. H. Hudson, An Introduction to the Philosophy of Herbert Spencer (New York, 1894; London, 1895; rev. edn., 1904); H. *Sidgwick, Lectures on the Ethics of T. H. Green, Mr. Herbert Spencer, and J. Martineau (1902), pp. 135–312. J. Rumney, Herbert Spencer's Sociology (1934); J. D. Y. Peel, Herbert Spencer: The Evolution of a Sociologist (1971); D. Wiltshire, The Social and Political Thought of Herbert Spencer (Oxford, 1978). M. W. Taylor, Men versus the State: Herbert Spencer and Late Victorian Individualism (ibid., 1992). M. Thiel, Methode VII, pt. 3: H. Spencer (Heidelberg, 1983). H. S. R. Elliot in DNB, 1901–1911, 3, pp. 360–9.

Spencer, John (1630–93), English Hebraist. He was a native of Bocton, Kent. In 1645 he became a scholar of Corpus Christi, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow *c.*1655 and Master in 1667. In 1677 he became Dean of *Ely. After publishing a treatise on the *Urim and Thummim (1669), which he believed to be of Egyptian origin, he devoted himself chiefly to Hebrew studies. The result was his principal work, De Legibus Hebraeorum Ritualibus et earum Rationibus, libri tres (1685). Though, owing to the state of contemporary oriental studies, he had to rely almost entirely on second-hand information furnished mainly by the Bible, the classical authors, and the Fathers, he can claim to be the founder of the study of *comparative religion. He endeavoured to trace the connections between the religious rites of the Hebrews and those of other Semitic peoples, and his work remains a permanent contribution to the subject. His new departure in OT scholarship caused his orthodoxy to be suspected, and his opinions, being too far in advance of his time, were severely criticized and exercised no immediate influence. His work, however, was taken up in the 19th cent. by such scholars as J. *Wellhausen and W. Robertson *Smith.

His Works were reissued at Cambridge (rev. by L. Chappelow), 2 vols., 1727. H. Reventlow, Bibelautorität und Geist der Moderne (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 30; 1980), pp. 475–7; Eng. tr., The Authority of the Bible and the Rise of the Modern World (1984), pp. 291 f. T. Cooper in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 359 f.

Spener, Philipp Jakob (1635–1705), early leader of German *Pietism. Born of devout Protestant parents at Rappoltsweiler in Alsace, he studied history and philosophy at Strasbourg (1651–3). Influenced by J. *Arndt's Vier Bücher von wahren Christentum, by the works of English *Puritan authors, and, on a visit to Geneva, by J. de Labadie (see LABADISTS), he became increasingly aware of a call to revivify the Lutheran Church with evangelical fervour. At Frankfurt, where he was appointed minister in 1666, he introduced 'Collegia Pietatis', devotional meetings which gathered twice weekly in his house, and also issued his Pia Desideria (1675, q.v.). While he remained essentially loyal to the Lutheran tradition, the personal and interior turn of his religion made him critical of a sterile and polemical form of orthodoxy. At the same time he tried to give the laity an active part in Church life. In 1686 he accepted an invitation to Dresden as court preacher. Here in Saxony he gained the warm support of A. H. *Francke (q.v.) and P. Anton, who instituted their 'Collegia Philobiblica'; but he came into conflict with the theological faculty at Leipzig. In 1691 he migrated to Berlin, where he was appointed Rector of the Nikolaikirche, finding an influential ally in the Elector of Brandenburg (King Frederick I of Prussia from 1701). His movement, by this time known as 'Pietism', made rapid progress, and in 1694 the University of Halle was founded, largely under his influence. Though he met with ever increasing opposition from Lutheran orthodoxy, the movement won many ardent supporters. In 1695 J. Deutschmann's Christus- lutherische Vorstellung, composed for the theological faculty at *Wittenberg, charged Spener with 283 heads of heretical teaching. In 1698 Spener withdrew from the struggle and devoted his last years mainly to pastoral work. He was a prolific writer, whose theology was marked by a biblical, anti-*scholastic orientation, by a strong emphasis on the notion of new birth, and by a moderate *millenarianism ('Hoffnung besserer Zeiten'). His enthusiasm for the reform of the Lutheran Church, from which he never wanted to dissociate himself, and his insistence on the inner religious life of the individual had a deep and mainly beneficent influence on German Protestantism.

Briefe aus der Frankfurter Zeit 1666–1686, ed. J. Wallmann and others (Tübingen, 1992 ff.). Facsimile repr. of Schriften, ed. E. Beyreuther (Hildesheim and New York, 1979 ff.). Life by P. Grünberg (3 vols., Göttingen, 1893–1906). J. Wallmann, Philipp Jakob Spener und die Anfänge des Pietismus (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 42; 1970). Other studies by K. Aland (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 28; 1943), D. Blaufuss (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 23, Bd. 46; 1975), and K. J. Stein (Chicago [1986]). K. Aland, Kirchengeschichtliche Entwürfe (Gütersloh, 1960), pp. 523–42, 'Philipp Jakob Spener. Sein Lebensweg von Frankfurt nach Berlin (1666–1705) dargestellt an Hand seiner Briefe nach Frankfurt'. J. Wallmann in M. Greschat (ed.), Orthodoxie und Pietismus (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 7; Stuttgart, 1982), pp. 205–23, with bibl. P. Grünberg in PRE (3rd edn.), 18 (1906), pp. 609–22; R. Pietsch in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1121–4, s.v.

Speyer (Spires), Diets of (1526 and 1529). (1) The Diet of June 1526 marked a new stage in the consolidation of reforming influences in Germany. Instructions sent by *Charles V from Spain in the previous March forbidding all innovations and requiring the enforcement of the Edict of *Worms (1521) were set aside on the ground of his war with the Papacy which had broken out in the interval. The Diet determined that each Prince should order ecclesiastical affairs in his state in acc. with his own conscience.

(2) By the end of 1528 a Catholic reaction had set in, provoked by *Philip of Hesse's repressive measures and his invocation of foreign (French and Hungarian) aid. In response to an appeal from the Pope, Charles V issued a mandate on 30 Nov. 1528 summoning the Diet to Speyer on 21 Feb. 1529. The proceedings were controlled by a strong and well-organized Catholic majority who passed legislation to end all toleration of *Lutherans in Catholic districts. On 19 April five Princes and 14 cities made a formal 'protest' addressed to the Archduke Ferdinand, defending freedom of conscience and the right of minorities. Henceforward the Reformers were known as 'Protestants'.

(1) W. Friedensburg, Der Reichstag zu Speier 1526 im Zusammenhang der politischen und kirchlichen Entwicklung Deutschlands im Reformationszeitalter (Historische Untersuchungen herausgegeben J. Jastrow, 5; 1887; repr., Nieuwkoop, 1970). J. Ney, Der Reichstag zu Speier 1526 (Sammlung gemeinverständlicher wissenschaftlicher Vorträge, 75; 1889). R. Wohlfeil, 'Der Speyrer Reichstag von 1526', Blätter für pfälzische Kirchengeschichte, 43 (1976), pp. 5–20. T. J. Ney in PRE (3rd edn.), 18 (1906), pp. 589–94, s.v. 'Speier, Reichstage in, 1'. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 3 (1936), pp. 15 f. (nos. 27960b–74).

(2) J. Ney, 'Geschichte des Reichstages zu Speier im Jahre 1529', Mittheilungen des historischen Vereins der Pfalz, 8 (1879), pp. 1–368; also issued separately, Halle, 1880, with primary docs., pp. 291–362. Some of these docs. tr. into Eng. in Kidd, pp. 239–45 (no. 32). The formal 'protest' ed. J. Ney (Quellenschriften zur Geschichte Protestantismus, 5; 1906; repr., Darmstadt, 1967). J. Kühn, Die Geschichte des Speyrer Reichstags 1529 (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 47, Heft 1; 1929). E. Mayer, Der Speierer Reichstag 1529 (Speyer, 1929). M. Brecht, 'Die gemeinsame Politik der Reichsstädte und die Reformation', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 63 (1977), pp. 180–263, esp. pp. 233–50. T. J. Ney in PRE, loc. cit., pp. 594–603, s.v. 'Speier, Reichstage in, 2'. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 3 (1936), pp. 16–18 (nos. 27975–8010).

SPG The 'Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts'. This Anglican society was formed in 1701 by Thomas *Bray and his associates to assist in the missionary work initiated by the *SPCK. Authorized by Convocation, and incorporated by Royal Charter, it had two main objects: (1) to provide the ministrations of the Church for British people overseas; and (2) to evangelize the non-Christian races subject to the Crown. In the 18th cent. its work was carried out mostly in the American colonies, *Canada, and the *West Indies. Its sphere of activity increased in the 19th cent., esp. in *India, *South and *West Africa, *Australia, and the Far East. In most of the areas where the SPG worked the Churches are now independent provinces and their bishops and clergy are largely nationals, but some financial assistance and some of the staffing, especially in Africa, still comes from Britain.

In 1965 the SPG joined with the *UMCA to form the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (*USPG).

C. F. Pascoe, Two Hundred Years of the S.P.G. . . . 1701–1900: Based on a Digest of the Society's Records (1901). H. P. Thompson, Into All Lands: A History of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 1701–1950 (1951). M. Dewey, The Messengers: A Concise History of the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (1975).

Spinckes, Nathaniel (1653–1727), *Nonjuror. The son of a Northamptonshire rector, he was educated locally and at Trinity and Jesus Colleges, Cambridge. Ordained priest in 1678, he became chaplain to the first Duke of Lauderdale (d. 1682), curate and lecturer at St Stephen's, Walbrook (1682–5), rector of Peakirk-cum-Glinton (now Cambs) and in 1687 a prebendary and rector of St Martin's, *Salisbury. On his refusal to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary he was deprived in 1690. In 1713 he was consecrated Bishop by G. *Hickes, assisted by two Scottish bishops, but he took no title. In the dispute about the *Usages, he advocated the retention of the BCP as it then was rather than a return to the First Book of *Edward VI. A man of considerable learning, proficient in Greek, Latin, Anglo-Saxon, and French, with some knowledge of oriental languages, he was much revered for his personal sanctity. He wrote five treatises on the Roman controversy, one against the French prophets, one against B. *Hoadly, and several against the Usagers, but he is esp. remembered for his sermons and devotional works, which include A Sick Man Visited (1712) and a collection of prayers and meditations from L. *Andrewes, W. *Laud, T. *Ken, and others entitled 'The True Church of England Man's Companion to the Closet with a preface by N. Spinckes' (1721), commonly known as 'Spinckes's Devotions'. He was a close friend of G. Hickes, R. *Nelson, and J. *Kettlewell.

J. Blackbourne, The Life of the R. Reverend Mr. Nathanael Spinckes (1731). J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors (1902), pp. 129–33 and 384 f.; id. in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 405 f.

Spinoza, Benedictus de (also Baruch) (1632–77), Dutch Jewish philosopher. He was born in Amsterdam of Portuguese parents. From an early age he was probably familiar with the works of G. *Bruno, *Maimonides, R. *Descartes, T. *Hobbes, and others who fostered in him religious unorthodoxy, and in 1656 he was expelled by the Synagogue and compelled to leave Amsterdam. He went to Rijnsburg and several other places, and last to The Hague (1670), earning his living by grinding lenses. During his lifetime only a treatise on Descartes (1663) and the Tractatus Theologico-politicus (1670) were published. His principal work, the Ethica ordine geometrico demonstrata, appeared posthumously (Amsterdam, 1677). It is in five parts: on 'God'; 'the nature and origin of the mind'; 'the origin and nature of the emotions'; 'human bondage, or the powers of the emotions'; and 'the power of the intellect, or human freedom'. Spinoza also wrote a Tractatus Politicus and a Tractatus de Intellectus Emendatione (both first pub. with the Ethica, 1677). Several of his letters have also survived.

Spinoza is commonly described as a *pantheist, since there is a sense in which he regards all things as part of God. The foundation of his system is his idea of God as a single all-embracing substance which is causa sui (contains within itself the reason for its existence) and which may be thought of either as creator (natura naturans) or as creation (natura naturata). This substance is infinite, with an infinite number of attributes of which, however, only two, thought (cogitatio) and extension (extensio), are known to man. All individual things are modes of these two attributes, being either bodies or ideas, between which there is a perfect parallelism. The human mind is part of the Divine impersonal intellect which works acc. to necessity. Thus Spinoza denies 'absolute' or contra-causal free will, the permanence of personality, and immortality. The highest human activity is the loving contemplation of God (amor Dei intellectualis) which becomes possible in so far as one can master the passions and live in accordance with reason. In his political writings, Spinoza champions tolerance, rationality, and a purely scientific or 'naturalistic' approach to political theory. His studies on the Bible, carried on from the same point of view, have made him one of the fathers of the modern historical criticism of the Bible. Spinoza's influence on European philosophy was at its height in the 19th cent., esp. in Germany, where F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, F. W. J. *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel, and others owed much to his teaching.

Modern edn. of his works by C. Gebhardt (4 vols., Heidelberg [1924–6]). The best Eng. tr. of his works is that of E. Curley (Princeton, NJ, 1985 ff.). Separate Eng. trs. of the Ethics and other works by R. H. M. Elwes (Bohn's Philological Library, 1883); of Ethics also by S. Shirley (Indianapolis, 1982); of his Political Works (Tractatus Theologico-politicus in part and Tractatus Politicus in full) by A. G. Wernham (Oxford, 1958). Correspondence tr. and ed. A. Wolf (London, 1928). Earliest Life, usually attributed to J. M. Lucas, and prob. written between 1677 and 1678 (orig. pr. at Amsterdam, 1719), also ed., with Eng. tr., by A. Wolf (London, 1927). Studies in Eng. by F. Pollock (London, 1880), J. *Caird (Blackwood's Philosophical Classics, 1888), R. MacKeon (New York, 1928), L. Roth (Leaders of Philosophy, London, 1929), H. A. Wolfson (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1934), S. Hampshire (Pelican Books, 1951), R. J. Delahunty (London, 1985), and others. L. Brunschvicg, Spinoza (Paris, 1894; 4th edn., extended, with title Spinoza et ses contemporains, 1951). H. H. Joachim, A Study of the Ethics of Spinoza (1901); id., Spinoza's Tractatus de Intellectus Emendatione: A Commentary (1940; posthumous). H. F. Hallett, Aeternitas: A Spinozistic Study (1930); id., Benedict de Spinoza: The Elements of his Philosophy (1957); id., Creation, Emanation and Salvation: A Spinozistic Study (The Hague, 1962). L. Strauss, Die Religionskritik Spinozas als Grundlage seiner Bibelwissenschaft: Untersuchungen zu Spinozas Theologisch-Politischem Traktat (1930; rev. Eng. tr., New York [1965]). P. Siwek, SJ, Spinoza et le panthéisme religieux (1937; 2nd edn., 1950). G. H. R. Parkinson, Spinoza's Theory of Knowledge (Oxford, 1954). E. M. Curley, Spinoza's Metaphysics (Cambridge, Mass., 1969). N. Altwicker (ed.), Texte zur Geschichte des Spinozismus (1971), with bibl. S. P. Kashap (ed.), Studies in Spinoza (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1972). J. [F.] Bennett, A Study of Spinoza's Ethics (Cambridge, 1984). Y. Yovel, Spinoza and Other Heretics (2 vols., Princeton, NJ [1989]). E. Giancotti (ed.), Spinoza nel 350° Anniversario della Nascita: Atti del Congresso (Urbino 4–8 ottobre, 1982) (Saggi Bibliopolis, 19; Naples [1985]; E. Curley and P.-F. Moreau (eds.), Spinoza Issues and Directions: The Proceedings of the Chicago Spinoza Conference (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 14; Leiden, etc., 1990). W. I. Boucher, Spinoza in English: A Bibliography from the Seventeenth Century to the Present (ibid. 28; 1991). G. Rabeau in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2489–506, s.v., with extensive bibl. There is a 'Societas Spinozana' at The Hague which issues a Chronicon Spinozanum (The Hague, 1921 ff.).

Spires, Diets of. See SPEYER, DIETS OF.

Spiridion, St. See SPYRIDON, ST.

Spirit. In Christian theology the word denotes: (1) The intelligent and immaterial part of man or the human *soul in general, whether united with the body in life or separated from it in death, and esp. that aspect of it which is concerned with religious truth and action and is directly susceptible to Divine influence. (2) An order of being which is superhuman in the sense that it is not subject to the limits of time, space, and a bodily frame. In this sense God Himself is said in Scripture to be spirit (in contrast with 'flesh', i.e. humanity). (3) One of the creatures belonging to this order, whether good or evil, i.e. angels or demons. In accord with popular beliefs of the time, certain forms of disease, esp. lunacy and epilepsy, were attributed in the early Christian centuries to the presence of evil or 'unclean' spirits in the human body (see EXORCISM). (4) The Third Person of the *Trinity (see HOLY SPIRIT).

Spirit, Brethren of the Free. See BRETHREN OF THE FREE SPIRIT.

Spiritism. See SPIRITUALISM.

Spiritual Exercises, The. The famous treatise of St *Ignatius Loyola, originating from his spiritual experiences at Manresa in 1522–3, and substantially completed by 1541. The book is a manual for those giving *retreats. It provides for a structured, individually guided programme of mainly imaginative prayer lasting, in its full form, for about a month. The first week is devoted to reflection on sin and its consequences. The second focuses on the life of Christ, beginning with consideration of the kingdom and centring on the 'Two Standards' (Christ's and Satan's—standard being understood in a military sense). The third week concentrates on the Passion, and the fourth on the Resurrection. Reflection on what is experienced—normally with the help of the director of the retreat—is crucial to the process, and may lead to decisions regarding one's way of life. Ignatius requires the director always to be sensitive, adapting the instructions to the circumstances of individuals. Themes from the Exercises have often been taken up in retreats of shorter duration, both within and outside the RC Church. The Exercises may also be followed in daily life by devoting to them about an hour a day over a lengthy period.

Crit. edn., with introd., notes, and bibl., by J. Calveras, SJ, and C. de Dalmases, SJ (Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, 100; Rome, 1969). Eng. trs. by E. Mullan, SJ (New York, 1914), W. H. Longridge, SSJE (London, 1919), and a modernized adaptation by D. L. Fleming, SJ, A Contemporary Reading of the Spiritual Exercises (St Louis, 1976; rev. text pr. in parallel with the more literal tr. of E. Mullan, ibid., 1978). Other edns. and trs. listed in Sommervogel, 5 (1894), cols. 59–75; L. Polgár, SJ, Bibliographie sur l'histoire de la Compagnie de Jésus 1901–1980, 1 (Rome, 1981), pp. 269–77; and M. Ruiz Jurado, SJ, Orientaciones bibliográficas sobre San Ignacio de Loyola, 3 (Subsidia ad Historiam S.I., 10; Rome, 1990), pp. 30–33. Comm. by S. Arzubialde (Bilbao and Santander, 1991). I. Iparraguirre, SJ, Historia de la práctica de los ejercicios espirituales de san Ignacio de Loyola (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 3, 7, and 36; Rome, 1946–73). D. L. Fleming, SJ (ed.), Notes on the Spiritual Exercises of St Ignatius of Loyola (St Louis, 1981); P. Sheldrake, SJ (ed.), The Way of Ignatius Loyola: Contemporary Approaches to The Spiritual Exercises (1991). M. Schneider [SJ], 'Unterscheidung der Geister': Die ignatianischen Exerzitien in der Deutung von E. Pryzwara, K. Rahner und G. Fessard (Innsbrucker theologische Studien, 11; 1983). Further bibl. in L. Polgár, op. cit., pp. 265–8 and 277–373, and M. Ruiz Jurado, op. cit., pp. 33–100. See also bibl. to IGNATIUS LOYOLA, ST.

Spiritual Franciscans. Before St *Francis's death two groups of Franciscans could be distinguished: (1) those led by *Elias of Cortona who wished to mitigate the rule of poverty and remodel the order, and (2) those later to be known as 'Zealots' or 'Spirituals' who wished to maintain the original manner of life. The latter group became more apparent as the original simplicity of the Franciscan rule was modified, with the decretal 'Quo elongati' (1230), e.g., allowing anyone to give alms to the order provided it was given to a nuncius, chosen by the donor or the order, who would buy the goods required, whilst any surplus money was given into the administration of a so-called 'spiritual friend'. While an apocalyptic sense of mission was widespread in the whole order, for the Spirituals this was reinforced by the prophetic doctrines of *Joachim of Fiore, partly through the extracts of his works published in 1254 as the Eternal Gospel by a Franciscan, Gerard of San Donnino, and partly through the dissemination of pseudo-Joachimist prophecies. Rigid adherence to the Rule and Testament of St Francis became, esp. during the generalship of *John of Parma (1247–57), the hallmark of the Joachimist programme for the last age.

By the end of the 13th cent. a compromise, implicit in the teaching of St *Bonaventure, who held that all property left to the friars was the property of the Church and that they were permitted to use things necessary for their life and work (usus pauper), had been arrived at and was embodied in Nicholas III's decretal 'Exiit qui Seminat' (1279). The solution proved unacceptable, however, to the Spirituals, esp. as the Constitutions of the Chapter-Generals of the time indicate that the abuses denounced by the Spirituals were spreading. The conflict was renewed under *Clement V (1310–12; see UBERTINO OF CASALE), as a result of which Nicholas's decretal was reaffirmed and further specified in 'Exivi de Paradiso' (1312). Meanwhile the Spirituals, now led by Angelo Clareno in the March of Ancona and by disciples of P. J. *Olivi in Provence, maintained an intransigent position. Pope *John XXII, in consequence, resorted to rigorous measures, enjoining them to obey authority under penalty of excommunication and burning four of their number as heretics (1318). He also issued the bulls 'Sancta Romana' (1317), in which the Spirituals were first called '*Fraticelli', and 'Gloriosam Ecclesiam' (1318) condemning their theology. Shortly afterwards the order was threatened with schism over what was originally a separate issue, the theoretical question of the poverty of Christ, on which the Minister General, Michael of Cesena, clashed with the Pope. Though Michael had opposed the Spirituals, the doctrine of Christ's poverty had a connection with the poverty to which the Spirituals aspired, and both were condemned by John XXII. The decretals 'Ad Conditorem Canonum' (1322) affirmed that complete renunciation of possessions did not constitute the perfect life, and 'Cum Inter Nonnullos' (1323) declared the doctrine of the absolute poverty of Christ and the Apostles, both individually and corporately, heretical. The conflict continued. The Fraticelli and the Beguins of Provence continued to hold the Spirituals' views, while the whole question of usus facti and dominium gave rise to R. *FitzRalph's 'De Pauperie Salvatoris', perhaps the best-argued attack on their position. In face of persecution the numbers dwindled, but the movement gave an impetus to the rise of more rigorous groups in the Franciscan Order, first to the Friars of the Strict Observance (*Observantines) and later to the *Capuchins.

F. *Ehrle, SJ, 'Die Spiritualen, ihr Verhältniss zum Franciscanerorden und zu den Fraticellen', Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, 1 (1885), pp. 509–69; 2 (1886), pp. 106–64; 3 (1887), pp. 553–623; and 4 (1888), pp. 1–190, with full refs. K. Balthasar, Geschichte des Armutsstreites im Franziskanerorden bis zum Konzil von Vienne (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, 6; 1911). D. L. Douie, The Nature and the Effect of the Heresy of the Fraticelli (Publications of the University of Manchester, 220; Historical Series, 61; 1932). M. D. Lambert, Franciscan Poverty: The Doctrine of the Absolute Poverty of Christ and the Apostles in the Franciscan Order 1210–1323 (CHS, 1961). E. R. Daniel, The Franciscan Concept of Mission in the High Middle Ages (Lexington, Ky. [1975]), esp. pp. 1–36 and 76–100. L. Oliger, OFM, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2522–49, s.v. 'Spirituels', with detailed bibl.; C. Schmitt, OFM, in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 1063–108, s.v. 'Fraticelles'. See also bibl. to FRANCISCAN ORDER.

spiritual healing. The expression, occasionally used as a synonym of psychotherapy, is properly confined to the attempt to heal the whole personality by prayer and sacramental means, sometimes combined with religious suggestion. Among the methods in general use are *Unction and the laying on of hands. Most of those who practise such methods believe that the patient should at the same time make full use of medical skill, but a minority holds that spiritual means should alone be sufficient. It is a common practice among Anglicans to give Absolution and Communion immediately before the anointing. Although bodily healing is not normally expected as a result of Unction in the Roman Communion, many miraculous cures are claimed at *Lourdes and other places of pilgrimage. The laying on of hands as a '*sacramental' should be distinguished from the use of a natural gift of healing which does not depend on its possessor being a Christian; but it may be added that such a gift may most profitably be used when combined with Christian suggestion. The possession of the gift of healing was regarded in the early Church as a recommendation in candidates for Holy Orders. Spiritual healing (often called 'faith healing' or 'divine healing') plays a prominent part in modern *Pentecostalism and in the *Charismatic Renewal Movement.

The *Lambeth Conference of 1920 (Resolution 63) asked the Abp. of *Canterbury to appoint a committee to consider and report upon 'the use with prayer of the Laying on of Hands, of the Unction of the Sick, and other spiritual means of Healing'; the report of the committee was pub. under the title The Ministry of Healing (1924), with 'Forms of Service suggested for use at the Anointing of the Sick', pp. 38–43. A further commission was appointed by the Abps. of Canterbury and York at the request of the Convocations in 1953 to 'consider the theological, medical, psychological and pastoral aspects of "Divine Healing"'; the report of this commission was issued under the title The Church's Ministry of Healing (1958). The Alternative Services Ministry to the Sick (1983) makes provision for the Laying on of Hands and Anointing, as do most modern liturgies. The subject is treated historically in G. G. Dawson, Healing, Pagan and Christian (1935), pp. 112–308 on the Christian period. E. Frost, Christian Healing: A Consideration of the Place of Spiritual Healing in the Church of Today in the Light of the Doctrine and Practice of the Ante-Nicene Church (1940); id. (now Dame Raphael Frost, OSB), Christ and Wholeness: An Approach to Christian Healing (Cambridge, 1985). L. D. Weatherhead, Psychology, Religion and Healing (1951). M. T. Kelsey, Healing and Christianity (1973). C. W. Gusmer, The Ministry of Healing in the Church of England: An Ecumenical-Liturgical Study (Alcuin Club Collections, 56; 1974), with bibl. M. Maddocks, The Christian Healing Ministry (1981; 2nd edn., 1990). J. [T. A.] Gunstone, The Lord is our Healer: Spiritual Renewal and the Ministry of Healing (1986). See also bibl. to UNCTION and VISITATION OF THE SICK.

spiritual works of mercy. There are traditionally seven: (1) converting the sinner; (2) instructing the ignorant; (3) counselling the doubtful; (4) comforting the sorrowful; (5) bearing wrongs patiently; (6) forgiving injuries; (7) praying for the living and the dead. See also CORPORAL WORKS OF MERCY.

Spiritualism, also 'Spiritism'. A system of (often superstitious) beliefs and practices the purpose of which is to establish communication with the spirits of the dead. Necromancy is an element common to most primitive and many higher religions, an early example occurring in 1 Sam. 28: 8. In its modern form Spiritualism dates from the occult experiences of the American Fox family in 1848, and soon spread to England and the Continent as a reaction against the prevalent materialism. It professes to make contact with the souls of the departed chiefly by means of mediums, accompanied by table-turning, automatic writing, and other devices. It has found adherents, also, among recognized scholars such as O. Lodge, F. W. H. Myers, and W. F. Prince. The scientific study of these phenomena has been extensively pursued in Great Britain by the Society for Psychical Research (founded 1882). After ruling out conscious or unconscious fraud, of which almost all famous mediums have been convicted, and phenomena susceptible of a natural explanation, e.g. by the abnormal qualities of the medium, there remains a certain number of striking cases such as the foreseeing of free actions and otherwise incalculable events. The theory that such phenomena are due to preternatural, i.e. demonic, agencies has been advanced by certain Christian theologians who point to the fact that the alleged messages from the beyond are generally hostile to Christian doctrine and of no moral or spiritual value. The practice of Spiritualism is denounced by Scripture (Deut. 18: 11) and by all parts of the Christian Church. In England, and esp. in USA, the cult is highly organized, and has been much exploited for commercial ends.

The Christian Spiritualist Churches profess acceptance of the leadership of Jesus Christ, but their understanding of Him is very different from that of the orthodox Churches.

There is an immense lit. on the subject. More serious studies in Eng. incl. E. Gurney, F. W. H. Myers, and F. Podmore, Phantasms of the Living (2 vols., 1886); F. Podmore, Modern Spiritualism: A History and Criticism (2 vols., 1902); F. W. H. Myers, Human Personality and its Survival after Bodily Death (2 vols., 1903); O. J. Lodge, Raymond, or Life and Death, with examples of the evidence for survival of memory and affection after Death (1916); A. C. Doyle, The History of Spiritualism (2 vols., 1926); A. Gauld, The Founders of Psychical Research (1968); id., Mediumship and Survival: A Century of Investigations (1982); G. K. Nelson, Spiritualism and Society (International Library of Sociology and Social Investigations, 1969). H. Thurston, SJ, The Church and Spiritualism (Milwaukee, Wis., 1933); G. W. Butterworth, Spiritualism and Religion (1944). F. C. S. Schiller in HERE 11 (1920), pp. 805–8, s.v. 'Spiritism'; L. Roure, SJ, in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1941), cols. 2507–22, s.v. 'Spiritisme', both with further bibl.; L. Price in A Dictionary of Christian Spirituality, ed. G. S. Wakefield (1983), pp. 360 f., s.v. See also the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (London, 1882 ff.) and the Journal of the same body (ibid., 1884 ff.).

spirituality. The term has come into very widespread use in many languages during the 20th cent., though its meaning has not been satisfactorily defined. It is used to refer to people's subjective practice and experience of their religion, or to the spiritual exercises and beliefs which individuals or groups have with regard to their personal relationship with God. It is usual to regard *prayer, *meditation, *contemplation, and *mysticism as major factors in spirituality. Where certain groups have a characteristic set of spiritual practices and beliefs, they may be regarded as constituting a 'school of spirituality' (e.g. '*Cistercian spirituality', '*Carmelite spirituality', '*Jesuit spirituality'), and this usage has come to be generalized, so that there is an increasing interest in 'lay spirituality', 'married spirituality', etc.

The word spiritualitas is first attested in the 5th cent., referring to the quality of life which should result from the spiritual gifts imparted to all who believe in Christ. During the Middle Ages it occurs in a variety of senses, but a narrowing of its application and of related expressions such as 'spiritual life' and 'spiritual exercises' is dis-cernible from the 12th cent. onwards, so that a 'spiritual life' came to be regarded as more or less identical with interior religion and the explicitly devotional practices used to foster it. As such, it was sometimes considered unsuitable for lay Christians. As a result of this development, a distinction became possible between the moral life, incumbent on all believers, and the spiritual life, reserved to those specially called or specially fervent. Thus in the 17th cent. 'ascetical theology' (the science of the spiritual life) was differentiated from '*moral theology'. A distinction was also made between 'ascetical theology' (the science of human spiritual endeavour to attain to perfection) and 'mystical theology' (now regarded as the science of those special experiences accorded purely by God's grace), though some writers have treated the two terms as interchangeable; both are now generally treated as parts of 'spiritual theology' or 'spirituality'. In modern times the term 'spirituality' is often extended to apply to believers in religions other than Christianity.

On the history, P. Pourrat, PSS, La Spiritualité chrétienne (4 vols., 1918–28; Eng. tr. of vols. 1–3, 1922–7); A. Saudreau, La Piété à travers les âges (1927); Histoire de la Spiritualité chrétienne: 1: L. [C.] Bouyer, Cong. Orat., La Spiritualité du Nouveau Testament et des Pères (1960; Eng. tr., 1963); 2: J. Leclercq, OSB, and others, La Spiritualité du moyen âge (1961; Eng. tr., 1968); 3. 1: L. [C.] Bouyer, La Spiritualité Orthodoxe et la Spiritualité Protestante et Anglicane (1965; Eng. tr., 1969); 3. 2: L. Cognet, La Spiritualité moderne, 1: 1500–1650 (1966). M. García Cordero, OP, and others, Historia de la Espiritualidad (4 vols., Barcelona, 1969). B. McGinn and J. Meyendorff (eds.), Christian Spirituality: Origins to the Twelfth Century (World Spirituality, 16; New York, 1985; London, 1986); J. Raitt (ed.), Christian Spirituality: High Middle Ages and Reformation (ibid. 17; New York, 1987; London, 1989); L. [K.] Dupré and D. E. Saliers (eds.), Christian Spirituality: Post-Reformation and Modern (ibid. 18; New York, 1989; London, 1990). C. [P. M.] Jones, G. Wainwright, and E. [J.] Yarnold, SJ (eds.), The Study of Spirituality (1986). R. [D.] Williams, The Wound of Knowledge: Christian Spirituality from the New Testament to St John of the Cross (1979; 2nd edn., 1990); S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Ways of Imperfection: An Exploration of Christian Spirituality (1984).

The many more or less systematic treatises on spirituality include G. B. *Scaramelli, SJ, Direttorio ascetico (Naples, 1752; Eng. tr., 4 vols., 1870–71); A. Saudreau, Les Degrés de la vie spirituelle (2 vols., Angers, 1896; Eng. tr., 1926); A. *Tanquerey, Précis de théologie ascétique et mystique (2 parts, 1923–4; Eng. tr., Tournai, 1930); K. E. *Kirk, The Vision of God (1931); F. P. Harton, The Elements of the Spiritual Life (1932); R. Garrigou-Lagrange, OP, Les Trois Âges de la vie intérieure (2 vols. [1938]; Eng. tr., 2 vols., St Louis, 1947–8); L. [C.] Bouyer, Cong. Orat., Introduction à la vie spirituelle (1960; Eng. tr., 1961); M. [S. F.] Thornton, OGS, English Spirituality: An Outline of Ascetical Theology according to the English Pastoral Tradition (1963); J. Aumann, OP, Spiritual Theology (Huntingdon, Ind., and London [1980]). On the word, J. Leclercq, OSB, '"Spiritualitas"', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 3 (1962), pp. 279–96; W. Principe [CSB], 'Toward Defining Spirituality', Studies in Religion, 12 (1983), pp. 127–41.

Periodicals specially devoted to the subject include Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique (Toulouse, 1920–71, continued as Revue d'Histoire de la Spiritualité, 1972–7); Zeitschrift für Aszese und Mystik (Innsbruck, 1926–44, continued as Geist und Leben, Wurzburg, 1947 ff.), and Life of the Spirit (1946–64, supplement to Blackfriars; incorporated in New Blackfriars, 1964 ff.). Dictionnaire de spiritualité ascétique et mystique (ed. M. Viller, SJ, F. Cavallera, and others, 16 vols. + index, 1937–95); A Dictionary of Christian Spirituality, ed. G. S. Wakefield (1983).

spirituals. American religious folk songs. They originated (as 'spiritual songs') in the White *revivalist Churches of the 18th cent., and their large-scale *camp meetings in the 19th cent. The Black form ('Negro spiritual'), although it appears to have derived from the early White style, acquired its own character, with texts identifying the sufferings of Christ with the Blacks' own conditions of slavery, and a typical emphasis on the desire for release from the troubles of the world. 'Michael, row the boat ashore', 'Steal away', and 'Deep river' are examples of songs which became internationally known after being popularized by Black singing groups on concert tours from the 1870s onwards. Other forms of *Gospel Music developed out of both styles of spiritual from the later part of the 19th cent.

W. F. Allen, C. P. Ware, and L. McK. Garrison (eds.), Slave Songs of the United States (New York, 1867). G. P. Jackson, White and Negro Spirituals (ibid., 1943), incl. text of 116 songs. J. Lovell, Black Song: The Forge and the Flame; the Story of how the Afro-American Spiritual was Hammered out (ibid. [1972]). E. J. Lorenz, Glory Hallelujah! The story of the Camp-meeting Spiritual (Nashville [1980]). J. C. Downey and P. Oliver in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 18 (1980), pp. 1–7, s.v.; rev. in H. W. Hitchcock and S. Sadie (eds.), The New Grove Dictionary of American Music, 4 (1986), pp. 284–90, s.v.

Spitta, Friedrich (1852–1924), German Protestant theologian. Born at Wittingen in Hanover, he became lecturer at Bonn in 1880, professor of NT and pastoral theology at Strasbourg in 1887, and professor at Göttingen in 1919. He was keenly interested in Church music and the renewal of liturgical life in German Protestantism, and from 1895 was joint editor with J. Smend (1857–1930) of the Monatsschrift für Gottesdienst und kirchliche Kunst. Most of his books were on the Gospels and the early Church. The best-known is Zur Geschichte und Litteratur des Urchristentums (3 vols., in 4 parts, 1893–1907).

A. Meyer in RGG (2nd edn.), 5 (1931), col. 704, s.v.

sponsor. Another name for a *godparent at a *Baptism.

spoon, liturgical. In the E. rites, a spoon is used for giving communion, a portion of the consecrated Host being dipped in the chalice and the two species then conveyed on the spoon to the communicant. In the RC Church the use of a spoon for administering the consecrated Wine was sanctioned in 1965. In the W. spoons are also sometimes used to measure the water at the mixing of the chalice. Mention of them, however, in inventories of Church property is not proof that they have any liturgical significance. See also FISTULA.

Rohault, 4 [*c.*1887], pp. 185–8. Braun, CA, pp. 265–79, and plate 142, fig. 565. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3172–83, s.v. 'Cuiller', with bibl.

Sports, Book of. A declaration defining the recreations permissible on Sunday first issued in 1617 by *James I for the use of the magistrates in Lancs, and extended in the following year to the whole country with instructions to ministers to read it from the pulpit. It was reissued in 1633 by *Charles I, who deprived all clergy who refused to publish it. It permitted archery and dancing, and was designed to counteract the extreme and growing *Sabbatarianism fostered by the *Puritans. It derived such legal force as it possessed from the ecclesiastical supremacy conferred on the Crown in 1559; its publication aroused considerable opposition, culminating in its being publicly burnt by order of Parliament in 1643.

Modernized version of text in E. *Cardwell, Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England, 2 (1839), pp. 188–93; repr. in P. E. More and F. L. Cross (eds.), Anglicanism (1935), no. 261, pp. 565–8. R. W. Henderson, The King's Book of Sports in England and America (repr. from the Bulletin of the New York Public Library of November 1948). J. Davies, The Caroline Captivity of the Church (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1992), pp. 172–204. See also bibl. to SABBATARIANISM and Lives of James I cited s.v.

Spottiswoode, John (1565–1639), Abp. of St Andrews and historian. He was educated at Glasgow University and was originally a staunch supporter of strict Presbyterianism. When, however, at the end of the century the relations between King and Kirk deteriorated he became an adherent of the royal policy. In 1603 he accompanied James I to London and was appointed Abp. of Glasgow. He did not receive episcopal consecration, however, until 1610, when, with two other Scottish bishops, he was consecrated (per saltum, on High Anglican principles) at London House. He became the chief agent of the King for suppressing the political influence of the Kirk, being a convinced advocate of *Erastian principles. In 1610 he was Moderator of the Assembly which limited the presbyteries, and in 1615 was translated to St Andrews. At the General Assembly of the Kirk in 1618 he made himself Moderator without election, and succeeded in imposing the so-called Five Articles of *Perth (q.v.), heavy penalties being inflicted on ministers who refused to conform. In 1635 *Charles I appointed him Chancellor, and as such he gave loyal, if reluctant, support to the introduction of the Liturgy which he regarded as inexpedient. After the riots in 1637 he petitioned the King to desist from his policy, and when, in 1638, the *National Covenant had been signed, he fled to Newcastle. He was deposed by the Assembly some months later on a series of unjustified charges, including adultery, incest, and sacrilege. His chief works are Refutatio Libelli de Regimine Ecclesiae Scoticanae (1620) and The History of the Church of Scotland [to 1625] (1655; rev. edn. by G. *Burnet, 1677; new edn., 3 vols., 1847–51), an amply documented official history reflecting the writer's position in the struggle.

Life prefixed to the 1st edn. of his History (1655), ascribed in the 4th edn. (1677) to B. *Duppa, and another by M. Russell prefixed to the latter's edn. of the History pub. for the Spottiswoode Society (3 vols., 1847–51), 1, pp. xxix–cxxxvi. The 4th edn. of his History (1677) contains an appendix by G. Burnet, with additional information to date. Study by I. Dunlop in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 48–61. J. Kirk, Archbishop Spottiswoode and the See of Glasgow (Glasgow Cathedral Lecture Series, 3 [1988]), repr. in id., Patterns of Reform (Edinburgh, 1989), pp. 426–48. T. F. Henderson in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 412–15.

Spurgeon, Charles Haddon (1834–92), *Baptist preacher. The descendant of two generations of *Independent ministers, he was born at Kelvedon, Essex, and became a Baptist in 1850. In the same year he preached his first sermon, and in 1852 he was appointed pastor of the Baptist congregation at Waterbeach. In 1854 he went to Southwark, where his sermons drew such crowds that a new church, the Metropolitan Tabernacle in Newington Causeway, had to be built for him. Apart from his preaching activities, he founded a pastors' college, an orphanage, and a colportage association for the propagation of uplifting literature. Spurgeon was a strong *Calvinist. He had a controversy in 1864 with the *Evangelical party of the C of E for remaining in a Church that taught Baptismal Regeneration, and also estranged considerable sections of his own community by rigid opposition to the more liberal methods of biblical exegesis. These differences led to a rupture with the Baptist Union in 1887. He owed his fame as a preacher to his great oratorical gifts, humour, and shrewd common sense, which showed itself esp. in his treatment of contemporary problems. Among his works are The Saint and his Saviour (1857), Commenting and Commentaries (1876) and numerous volumes of sermons (translated into many languages).

Spurgeon's Autobiography, compiled from his Diary, Letters, and Records, by his wife [S. Spurgeon] and private secretary [Revd W. J. Harrald] (4 vols., London, 1897–1900). Letters ed. C. Spurgeon, son (ibid. [1923]). Full Life by G. H. Pike (3 vols., ibid. [1892–3]). The many other studies incl. those of W. Williams (ibid., 1895), W. Y. Fullerton (ibid., 1920), J. C. Carlile (ibid., 1933), P. S. Kruppa (New York and London, 1982), A. Dallimore (Chicago [1984]; Edinburgh, etc., 1985), and M. Nicholls (Didcot, Oxon., 1992). A. R. Buckland in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 433–5.

Spy Wednesday. The Wednesday before *Good Friday, so named as the day on which *Judas Iscariot arranged to betray Christ (Mt. 26: 14–16).

Spyridon (also Spiridion), St (d. *c.*348), Bp. of Tremithus in *Cyprus. He was a simple peasant who acc. to tradition had suffered in the *Diocletianic Persecution, and after becoming bishop had attended the Council of *Nicaea (though his name is not found in the episcopal lists of signatures). He was certainly present at the Council of *Sardica (*c.*343). His life gathered to it many legends. Acc. to one, some thieves trying one night to rob him of his sheep discovered their hands tied miraculously behind their backs and were set free by Spyridon the next morning; acc. to another, he recovered a valuable ornament by the prayers of his deceased daughter, Irene (*Socrates, HE 1. 12; *Sozomen, HE 1. 11). Later writers attribute to him the recitation of the Creed at Nicaea that converted the heathen philosopher who had mocked at the Christian faith. Feast day, in the E., 12 Dec.; in the W., 14 Dec.

P. van den Ven, La Légende de S. Spyridon, évêque de Trimithonte (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 33; 1953), incl. crit. edn. of basic texts; review art. by G. Garitte in RHE 50 (1955), pp. 125–40. BGH (3rd edn., 1957), pp. 246 f. (nos. 1647 f.); Novum Auctarium (1984), pp. 192 f.

Sri Lanka, Christianity in. Sri Lanka (formerly known as Ceylon) is inhabited by two main ethnic groups, Sinhalese and Tamil, the latter having migrated from S. India. Acc. to *Cosmas Indicopleustes, there were *Nestorian Christians in Sri Lanka in the 6th cent., but their Churches appear to have died out.

From 1505 Sri Lanka was brought within the Portuguese seaborne trading empire; within this empire the Portuguese propagated Christianity, and the first RC priests arrived in Colombo in 1518. In 1543 missionary work was begun by *Franciscan friars, who in the early 17th cent. were joined by *Jesuits, *Augustinian friars, and *Dominicans. As a result of mass Baptisms, the Christian community grew rapidly. In 1658 the Portuguese were finally driven out by the Dutch, who attempted to suppress the RC Church and expelled the Portuguese priests. Protestantism was introduced by the Dutch East India Company, which supported and controlled the Dutch Reformed Church and brought ministers from the Netherlands. The RC Church, nevertheless, survived, and from 1687 RC ministry was provided by *Oratorian priests from Goa in India. In 1796 the Dutch were in turn displaced by the British and in 1802 Ceylon became a Crown colony. In 1806 the laws against RC activity were abolished and the fortunes of that Church revived. The apostolic *vicariate of Ceylon was created in 1834 and a hierarchy in 1886. The first indigenous RC bishop was appointed in 1940.

Under British rule missionary work was begun by English societies: *Baptist (1812), Wesleyan *Methodist (1814), *CMS (1818), and *SPG (1840). The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions founded a mission at Jaffna in the north of Sri Lanka in 1816. The Anglican diocese of Colombo was created in 1845. A Sinhalese bishop, H. L. J. De Mel (1902–76) was appointed to the new see of Kurunagala in 1950. D. T. Niles (1908–70), a Tamil Methodist, achieved international prominence in the *Ecumenical Movement as first general secretary of the East Asia Christian Conference (1957–68) and a member of the presidium of the *World Council of Churches (1968–70). Meanwhile, since the achievement of political independence in 1948, all the Churches have had to face the challenge of a revived and militant Buddhism. In 1961 Christian schools receiving state aid were nationalized and in 1972 Buddhism was recognized as the state religion. Some Christians have been involved in inter-faith dialogue with Buddhists. A long proposed union, in which Anglicans, Baptists, Methodists, *Presbyterians, and the Church of *South India would have formed a united Church of Sri Lanka, was abandoned in the 1980s. Christians comprise about 8 per cent of the population; nine-tenths of them are RCs.

J. E. Tennent, Christianity in Ceylon: Its Introduction and Progress under the Portuguese, the Dutch, the British, and the American Missions (London, 1850). W. L. A. D. Peter, Studies in Ceylon Church History (Colombo, 1963). V. Perniola, SJ, The Catholic Church in Sri Lanka: Original Documents translated into English (Dehiwala, 1989 ff.). S. G. Prakasar, OMI, A History of the Catholic Church in Ceylon, 1 . . . 1505–1602 (Colombo, 1924). R. Boudens, OMI, The Catholic Church in Ceylon under Dutch Rule (Bibliotheca Missionalis, 10; Rome, 1957); id., Catholic Missionaries in a British Colony: Successes and Failures in Ceylon 1796 1893 (Immensee, Switzerland, 1979). J. W. Balding, One Hundred Years in Ceylon; or, the Centenary Volume of the Church Missionary Society in Ceylon, 1818–1918 (Madras, 1922). F. L. Beven (ed.), A History of the Diocese of Colombo (Colombo [*c.*1946]; on the Anglican diocese). H. J. Charter, Ceylon Advancing (London, 1955; on the Baptist Mission). S. D. Franciscus, Faith of our Fathers: History of the Dutch Reformed Church in Sri Lanka (Ceylon) (Colombo, 1983). F. Houtart, Religion and Ideology in Sri Lanka (ibid., 1974), esp. pp. 155–72, 212–24, 265–300, and 365–90.

SSJE. See SOCIETY OF ST JOHN THE EVANGELIST.

Stabat Mater dolorosa. A hymn of unknown date descriptive of the Sorrows of the BVM at the Cross. Suggested authors are *Innocent III (d. 1216), St *Bonaventure (d. 1274), and *Jacopone da Todi (d. 1306). It gradually came into liturgical use in the later Middle Ages, and in 1727 the Roman Missal prescribed it as a *sequence for the two feasts of the *Seven Sorrows of the BVM and in the corresponding Breviary offices. It survives as a sequence for optional use at Mass on 15 September, and may be used at the devotions of the *Stations of the Cross. Its popularity is reflected in the many English translations (among them 'At the Cross her station keeping') and the variety of musical settings (e.g. of G. P. da *Palestrina, F. J. Haydn, A. Dvořák, etc.). Another hymn, 'Stabat Mater speciosa', apparently modelled on the 'dolorosa', which describes the sorrows of the BVM at the manger in *Bethlehem, was also widely popular, though this hymn was never used liturgically.

Crit. edn. of text in C. Blume, SJ, and H. M. Bannister (eds.), Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (AHMA 54; 1915), pp. 312–18. C. Carbone, L'inno del dolore mariano 'Stabat Mater': Studi critico-dogmatico-litterari (1911). C. Blume, SJ, 'Der Sänger der Sequenz auf die "Schmerzensreiche Mutter"', Stimmen der Zeit, 89 (1915), pp. 592–8. G. Hasehohr, 'Les traductions françaises du "Stabat mater dolorosa". Textes et contextes (XIV^{e}–XVI^{e} siècles)', Recherches Augustiniennes, 24 (1989), pp. 243–355. Raby, pp. 437–40, with bibl. pp. 484 f.; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 2 (1965), pp. 287–90.

stability (Lat. stabilitas). Part of the commitment made by monks and nuns following the Rule of St *Benedict. The 4th- and 5th-cent. Egyptian monks insisted on the importance of not leaving one's cell; St Benedict required the monk making profession to promise stability, but he did not define the word. Later writers interpreted it variously as staying in one place, staying with one community, or perseverance in the monastic life. Modern writers tend not to ascribe a specific legal obligation to this promise, but all agree that it has exercised a strong influence in moulding the character of W. monasticism.

Rule of St Benedict, cap. 58. See also comm. cited under BENEDICT, RULE OF ST.

staff, pastoral. See CROSIER.

Stafford, Anthony (1587–1645?), devotional writer. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford. He is known as the author of The Female Glory; or the Life and Death of Our Blessed Lady, the Holy Virgin Mary, God's Own Immaculate Mother (1635), of which the language of exalted adulation addressed to the BVM and an engraving depicting the *Assumption gave great offence to the *Puritans, esp. when the work was licensed and defended by W. *Laud.

The book was ed. and repr. in 1860 by O. Shipley (4th edn., 1869). G. C. M. Smith, 'Anthony Stafford', Notes and Queries, 152 (1927), pp. 219–21, 239–43, 431. G. Le G. Norgate in DNB 53 (1898), pp. 444 f.

Stainer, Sir John (1840–1901), organist and composer. Born in *Southwark, he was a chorister of *St Paul's, and obtained his first post as an organist in 1854. In 1872 he was appointed organist of St Paul's Cathedral, where he carried out reforms in its service music, which became famous for its beauty and reverence under his direction. He was knighted in 1888 when he resigned because of failing eyesight. From 1889 to 1899 he was Professor of Music in the University of Oxford. His principal works were oratorios and cantatas, among them St Mary Magdalen, performed at the *Gloucester Festival of 1887, The Crucifixion (1887), and The Story of the Cross (1893). His anthems include 'Lead, kindly Light', 'O clap your hands', and 'I saw the Lord'. He also composed hymn tunes, many of which are reproduced in Hymns, Ancient and Modern*. His compositions are typical and often good examples of their period, showing influences from various schools, notably F. Mendelssohn and C. F. Gounod, but his distinction lies more in his work as an organist and choirmaster, and as an all-round musician and scholar.

P. Charlton, John Stainer and the Musical Life of Victorian Britain [1984]. W. G. McNaught in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 377–9, s.v.; N. Temperley in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 18 (1980), pp. 57 f., s.v.

stalls. The fixed seats for the clergy and others on both sides of the choirs of cathedral and certain other churches. They are usually separated by high projecting arms, often richly carved, and sometimes surmounted by canopies. The seats can frequently be turned back, disclosing a bracket called a '*misericord' (sometimes carved with a grotesque design). Knightly orders have stalls for their members, the Knights of the Garter, e.g., having stalls assigned to them in St George's Chapel, Windsor. See also INSTALLATION.

F. Bond, Wood Carvings in English Churches, 2 (1910), pp. 1–100. C. Tracy, English Gothic Choir-Stalls 1200–1400 (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1987).

stake. A post upon which persons were bound for execution, esp. by burning, and hence the punishment of death by burning. See BURNING.

Stanford, Sir Charles Villiers (1852–1924), composer and teacher. Born in Ireland, and showing early musical gifts, Stanford was a choral scholar at Queens' College, Cambridge, and studied in Leipzig and Berlin. From 1873 to 1882 he was organist at Trinity College, Cambridge, and from 1883 Professor of Composition at the Royal College of Music in London, to which he added the duties of conductor of the London Bach Choir in 1885 and the Cambridge Professorship of Music in 1887. He was knighted in 1902. An all-round composer, he was immensely influential as a teacher of the generation of R. *Vaughan Williams (1872–1958) and his contemporaries. His numerous settings of the Morning, Evening, and Holy Communion services, with their striking melodic ideas and rhythmic drive, gave Victorian church music much-needed freshness, so that they have retained a firm place in the English cathedral repertoire. Also well known are the anthems 'The Lord is my shepherd' and 'Ye choirs of new Jerusalem', and the *motets, op. 38 (including 'Justorum animae'). In addition, he wrote much organ music.

Studies by J. F. Porte (London, 1921) and H. P. Greene (ibid., 1935). G. Norris, Stanford, the Cambridge Jubilee and Tchaikovsky [1980], pp. 7–60 and 538–76. F. Hudson in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 18 (1980), pp. 70–4, s.v.

Stanislaus, St (1030–79), in Polish 'Stanisław', Patron of *Poland. The son of a noble family, he was educated at Gniezno, and perhaps at *Paris, and became Bp. of Cracow in 1072. In imposing strict discipline in his diocese, he soon came into conflict with King Boleslaw II, whom he repeatedly reproved for his scandalous conduct. Eventually he excommunicated the King, and Boleslaw, acc. to tradition, slew him with his own hand while he was offering Mass. He was canonized by *Innocent IV in 1253, and his first biography, which is full of purely legendary material, dates from that time. There are evident parallels with the subsequent martyrdoms of St Thomas *Becket and of St *John of Nepomuk in neighbouring Bohemia. In 1904 the Polish historian, T. Wojciechowski, provoked much discussion by alleging that Stanislaus had rightly been put to death for treason. Feast day, 11 April (formerly 7 May; at Cracow, 8 May).

Two early Lives, with miracles cited in procedure for canonization, ed. W. Ketrzyński in Monumenta Poloniae Historica, 4 (Lvóv, 1884), pp. 238–438; excerpts ed. M. Perlbach in MGH, Scriptores, 29 (1892), pp. 501–17. 15th-cent. Life by J. Dlugossius pr. in AASS, Mai 2 (1680), pp. 200–80. BHL (pt. 2; 1901), pp. 1134 f. (nos. 7832–43). T. Wojciechowski, Szkice Historyczne Jedenastego Wieku (3rd edn., 1950), pp. 221–340, passim, and introd. by A. Gieysztor, pp. 17–19. K. W. Schenk, Kult liturgiczny Św. Stanisława Biskupa na Śląsku (Lublin, 1959), with summary in Ger. and extensive bibl.

Stanley, Arthur Penrhyn (1815–81), Broad Church Anglican divine. He was educated at Rugby under T. *Arnold and felt his master's influence all his life. In 1834 he went up to Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1838 was elected a Fellow of University College. In the ecclesiastical struggles of the period he consistently advocated toleration for both *Tractarian and liberal extremes. He was Canon of *Canterbury from 1851 to 1858, professor of ecclesiastical history at Oxford from 1856 to 1864, and Dean of *Westminster from 1864 till his death. He made it his aim at Westminster to make the Abbey a national shrine for all, irrespective of dogmatic creed, and gave much offence to conservative Churchmen by his invitation to all the scholars who had produced the RV, among them a Unitarian, to receive Holy Communion in the Abbey. Though he did not share J. W. *Colenso's opinions in all particulars, he was strongly opposed to disciplinary action against him. Despite the atmosphere of unorthodoxy that hung about Stanley during his life, he was an extremely influential figure, and was more widely read than were most divines. His publications include Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold (1844), Memorials of Canterbury (1854), Sinai and Palestine (1856), Lectures on the History of the Eastern Church (1861), Lectures on the History of the Jewish Church (3 parts, 1863–76), and volumes of sermons.

Letters and Verses of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., between the Years 1829 and 1881, ed. R. E. Prothero (London, 1895). R. E. Prothero and G. G. Bradley, The Life and Correspondence of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley (2 vols., 1893). Modern memoir, with further letters, ed. A. V. Baillie and H. Bolitho, A Victorian Dean (1930). P. Hammond, Dean Stanley of Westminster (Worthing, 1987). R. E. Prothero in DNB 54 (1898), pp. 44–8.

Stanley, Henry Morton (1841–1904), explorer, administrator, author, and journalist. His original name was John Rowlands, but in 1859 he took the name of Henry Morton Stanley, after his adoptive father. Appointed in 1868 foreign correspondent to the New York Herald, he left Zanzibar on 21 Mar. 1871 to seek D. *Livingstone, and they met on the following 10 Nov. This expedition led to various other journeys of exploration between 1873 and 1889, in the course of which he discovered and reported on the nature of over two million sq. miles of the interior of Africa. His communications with the *CMS during his crossing of Africa from east to west in 1874–7 led to the beginning of mission work in *Uganda, and, whatever his character, his discoveries made possible Christian missionary work in much of Central Africa.

Autobiography ed. by D. Stanley, widow (London, 1909), with Life cont. from his Journal and Notes, pp. 219–539, and list of his works, which contain much autobiog. material, p. 540. Authorized Life by F. Hird (London [1935]). Other Lives by H. W. Little (ibid., 1890), J. Wassermann (Berlin, 1932; Eng. tr., 1932), and R. Hall (London, 1974). F. McLynn, Stanley: The Making of an African Explorer (1989); id., Stanley: Sorcerer's Apprentice (1991). J. A. Casada, Dr. David Livingstone and Sir Henry Morton Stanley: An Annotated Bibliography (1976), pp. 103–94. C. L. Skinner in Dict. Amer. Biog. 17 (1935), pp. 509–13.

Stanton, Arthur Henry (1839–1913), *Anglo-Catholic priest. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, and in 1862 ordained to the title of St Alban's, Holborn, where he remained as a curate for 50 years. The depth and sincerity of his religious faith, combined with his personal attractiveness, won him the confidence of thousands of men in one of the roughest parts of London, while his eloquent and powerful preaching made a great appeal to people of all classes. Like many other Anglo-Catholic priests of that time, he met with much opposition at the hands of the more official elements in the Church.

Faithful Stewardship and other Sermons, ed. E. F. Russell (London, 1916), and Last Sermons in S. Alban's, Holborn, ed. id. (ibid. [1916]), both ed. from reports of a shorthand writer. Further collection of Sermon Outlines from his own MSS, ed. id. (2 vols., ibid., 1917–19). Life by G. W. E. Russell (ibid., 1917). E. F. Russell in DNB, 1912 1921, pp. 506 f.

Stapeldon, Walter de (*c.*1261–1326), Bp. of *Exeter. Coming from a prosperous family in NW Devon, he became professor of canon law at Oxford and chaplain to *Clement V. In 1308 he was consecrated to the see of Exeter. As Lord Treasurer (from 1320) he reformed the royal exchequer; he helped to rebuild Exeter Cathedral, and founded Stapeldon Hall, which became Exeter College, Oxford. He was murdered by the London mob for his association with the misgovernment of Edward II.

Register ed. F. C. Hingeston-Randolph (1892). M. Buck, Politics, Finance and the Church in the Reign of Edward II: Walter Stapeldon, Treasurer of England (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 19; 1983). F. C. Hingeston-Randolph in DNB 54 (1898), pp. 92 f., s.v.; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1764–5.

Stapleton, Thomas (1535–98), RC controversialist. He was born at Henfield in W. Sussex and educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, of which he was a Fellow. He became a prebendary of *Chichester under *Mary in 1558, but on *Elizabeth's accession fled to Louvain, where he studied theology. Returning to England, he declined to renounce the authority of the Pope, was deprived of his prebend in 1563, and went back to Louvain. In 1569 he moved to *Douai and began to teach there in the university faculty of theology, and from 1585 also in the Jesuit college. In 1590 he was given by *Philip II the professorship of Scripture at Louvain as the successor of M. *Baius. Shortly afterwards he became Dean of Hilverenbeek, and in 1597 *Clement VIII made him *protonotary apostolic. Stapleton was an able, skilful, and erudite controversialist. The circumstances of his time led him to treat esp. of the relation of the Pope to the temporal power, a matter in which he ascribed more limited rights to the Pope than many RC writers. He was a prolific author. Among his more important works are the Principiorum Fidei Doctrinalium Demonstratio (1578); Tres Thomae (1588; namely, the Apostle, St Thomas *Becket, and St Thomas *More); and Auctoritatis Ecclesiasticae Defensio (1592), directed against W. *Whitaker.

Lat. tr. of his Eng. works pub. 4 vols., Paris, 1620, with brief Life by T. Holland in vol. 1 (no pagination). Mod. edn. of his Eng. tr. of *Bede's Historia Ecclesiastica (orig. pub. Antwerp, 1565; Oxford, 1930; also ed. P. Hereford, London, 1935); Eng. tr. of his Lat. Life of Sir Thomas More from Tres Thomae (orig. pub. Douai, 1588) by P. E. Hallett (London, 1928). M. R. O'Connell, Thomas Stapleton and the Counter Reformation (Yale Publications in Religion, 9; 1964). H. Schützeichel, Wesen und Gegenstand der kirchlichen Lehrautorität nach Thomas Stapleton (Trierer theologische Studien, 20; 1966); M. Seybold, Glaube und Rechtfertigung bei Thomas Stapleton (Konfessionskundliche und kontroverstheologische Studien, 21; 1967). M. Richards, 'Thomas Stapleton', JEH 18 (1967), pp. 187–99. A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation between 1558 and 1640, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 154–64 (nos. 1129–243). T. Cooper in DNB 54 (1898), pp. 101–4, s.v.

Star of Bethlehem. The star seen by the wise men 'in the east' at the birth of Christ and which 'went before them till it came and stood over where the young child was' [i.e. at *Bethlehem] (Mt. 2: 1–11). Several attempts have been made to connect the star with unusual astronomical phenomena at the time, e.g. J. *Kepler calculated that there was a conjunction of the planets, Jupiter and Saturn, in 7 BC.

A modern suggestion, with refs. to other recent lit., was made by C. J. Humphreys, 'The Star of Bethlehem—a Comet in 5 BC—and the Date of the Birth of Christ', Quarterly Journal of the Royal Astronomical Society, 32 (1991), pp. 389–407.

staretz. In the Russian Church a person who is sought out as a spiritual counsellor because of his exceptional personal holiness. He has no formal position in the ecclesiastical hierarchy, but owes his authority to his spiritual gifts. A staretz is usually a monk, but may on occasion be a lay person. The Russian word means an 'elder' and is a translation of the Greek word γέρων, used since the 4th cent. for a spiritual father.

Starovery. Another name for the Russian sect of the *Old Believers (q.v.).

State Prayers. In the BCP, the prayers for the Sovereign and the Royal Family towards the end of *Mattins and *Evensong.

F. Streatfeild, The State Prayers and other Variations in the Book of Common Prayer (1950), pp. 9–30. C. L. Berry, '"... and all the Royal Family"', History Today, 16 (1966), pp. 276 f.

State Services. In the C of E, the services appointed to commemorate days of national rejoicing or deliverance. Since the Reformation the rubrics have required the anniversary of the reigning sovereign's accession to be so observed. In the 17th cent., services to mark the *Gunpowder Plot (5 Nov.), the beheading of *Charles I (30 Jan.), and the birth and return of *Charles II (both 29 May) were drawn up. Though these services have never been an integral part of the BCP, and thus did not fall under the provisions of the Acts of *Uniformity, they were formerly printed at the end of the Book. In 1859 all except the 'Accession Service' were withdrawn.

States of the Church. Those parts of Italy and the territory of *Avignon and Venaissin in France which at one time acknowledged the temporal sovereignty of the Papacy. Some of these lands, which were a special gift to the Basilica of *St Peter at Rome, were also known as the '*Patrimony of St Peter' (q.v.). Their beginnings date from the edict of *Constantine in 321, which declared the Church capable of holding and transmitting property, but their possession constantly involved the Popes in temporal disputes, which added nothing to their spiritual authority. See also STEPHEN II and DONATION OF CONSTANTINE.

In 1791 the Papal territories situated in France were lost to the new republic, and by 1861 the Papacy was left with Rome alone, all the rest having been absorbed in the kingdom of Italy. In 1870 Rome itself was lost and the Pope withdrew into the *Vatican. By the Law of *Guarantees the new secular state allotted to the Pope a pension and declared the basilicas and palaces of the *Lateran and the Vatican and the country seat of *Castel Gandolfo to be extraterritorial. The Popes refused to accept this settlement, but in 1929 the *Lateran Treaty between *Pius XI and Fascist Italy contained an agreement on much the same lines and constituted the 'Vatican City' a separate state.

For the early history of the Papal States see bibl. to PATRIMONY OF ST PETER. C. Morris, The Papal Monarchy: The Western Church from 1050–1250 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1989), pp. 82–108, 191 f., 420–6, 450 f., 563–6, with bibl. pp. 585 f. D. [P.] Waley, The Papal State in the Thirteenth Century (1961). P. Toubert, Les Structures du Latium médiéval: Le Latium méridional et la Sabine du IX^e siècle à la fin du XII^e siècle (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 221; 2 vols., Rome, 1973). L. Dal Pane, Lo Stato pontificio e il movimento riformatore del Settecento (Milan, 1959). P. Partner, The Papal State under Martin V: The Administration and Government of the Temporal Power in the Early Fifteenth Century (1958); id., The Lands of St Peter: The Papal State in the Middle Ages and Early Renaissance (1972). M. Brosch, Geschichte des Kirchenstaats [1500–1800] (Geschichte der europäischen Staaten, 41 and 43; 1880–2). D. Demarco, Il Tramonto dello Stato pontificio: Il papato di Gregorio XVI ([Turin] 1949); id., Pio IX e la Rivoluzione Romana del 1848: Saggio di Storia economico-sociale (Modena, 1947); id., Una Rivoluzione Sociale: La Reppublica Romana del 1849 (Naples [1944]; all repr., Naples, 1992). A. C. Jemolo, Chiesa e Stato in Italia negli ultimi cento anni (1948; 2nd edn., Turin [1963]; Eng. tr. of abridged edn., Church and State in Italy 1850–1950, Oxford, 1960). N. Miko, Das Ende des Kirchenstaates (Veröffentlichungen des Österreichischen Kulturinstitutes in Rom. Abteilung für historische Studien, 1–4; 1962–70). G. Schnürer in CE 14 (1912), pp. 257–68, s.v.; P. Partner and others in NCE 13 (1969), pp. 655–62, s.v. See also bibl. to LATERAN TREATY and under individual Popes.

Station Days. Certain days, until 1970 marked in the Roman Missal, on which the Pope formerly celebrated Mass in the so-called 'station churches' in Rome. There is early evidence (for Rome: *Hermas; for N. Africa: *Tertullian and *Victorinus of Pettau) for the observance of stationes, but apart from the fact that such observance involved fasting, it is unclear of what it consisted. At Rome, from the 4th cent., the solemnity was enhanced by processions of clergy and people from one church, called 'collecta', to the station church, where the Pope was to offer Mass, while litanies and other prayers were recited on the way. Acc. to tradition it was St Gregory the Great who assigned its special church to each of the station days. In the Würzburg comes (probably 8th cent., but reflecting practices going back to the time of Gregory), the station days comprised the Marian feasts, the *Ember Days, Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, *Septuagesima and *Sexagesima Sundays, most of the Sundays and ferias in Lent (except the Thursdays), Easter Sunday and the following weekdays, and Whitsunday and the following weekdays. Certain other days came to be added later, including the missing Thursdays in Lent, and various other feasts and vigils, eventually making 87 days in all. The Papal station Masses fell into disuse esp. during the exile of the Popes at *Avignon, but traces of the ancient custom survive in the indulgences attached to visits to the station churches under certain conditions. Among the most famous of the station churches are *Santa Maria Maggiore for the First Sunday in Advent, the First and Third Mass on Christmas Day, and Easter Day, the church of St John *Lateran for Holy Saturday, and Santa Sabina, established by *Urban VIII for Ash Wednesday, where the Popes distributed the ashes to the people. The station Masses were also imitated by some churches outside Rome, e.g. at Milan. See also ROME, CHURCHES OF.

H. Grisar, SJ, 'Die Stationsfeier und der erste römische Ordo', ZKT 9 (1885), pp. 385–422. Id., Das Missale im Lichte römischer Stadtgeschichte: Stationen, Perikopen, Gebräuche (1925). J. P. Kirsch, 'Origine e carattere primitivo delle stazioni liturgiche di Roma', Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, ser. 3, Rendiconti, 3 (1925), pp. 123–41. Id., Die Stationskirchen des Missale Romanum (Ecclesia Orans, 19; 1926). R. Hierzegger, 'Collecta und Statio. Die römischen Stationsprozessionen im frühen Mittelalter', ZKT 60 (1936), pp. 511–54. C. Mohrmann, 'Statio', VC 7 (1953), pp. 221–45. R. Zerfass, 'Die Idee der römischen Stationsfeier und ihr Fortleben', Liturgisches Jahrbuch, 8 (1958), pp. 218–29. G. G. Willis, Further Essays in Early Roman Liturgy (Alcuin Club Collections, 50; 1968), pp. 1–87 ('Roman Stational Liturgy'). A. A. Häussling, Mönchskonvent und Eucharistiefeier (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 58; 1973), esp. pp. 186–201 and 316–19. J. F. Baldovin, SJ, The Urban Character of Christian Worship: The Origins, Development, and Meaning of Stational Liturgy (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 228; 1987), esp. pp. 105–66.

Stations of the Cross. A series of 14 pictures or carvings, designed for devotional purposes, which depict incidents in the last journey of Christ from *Pilate's house to His entombment. They are commonly arranged round the walls of a church, and it is a popular devotion, esp. during *Lent and *Passiontide, to visit the Stations in order, reciting prayers and meditating on each incident. The devotion probably arose out of the practice, attested from an early date, of pilgrims at *Jerusalem following the traditional route from Pilate's house to *Calvary and wishing to reproduce an analogous devotion at home. Its currency dates from the later Middle Ages, when it was popularized esp. by the *Franciscans, but the final selection of incidents was not settled until the 18th–19th cents. In the RC Church an *indulgence is attached to the devotion. The 14 incidents of which the Stations usually consist are: (1) Christ is condemned to death; (2) Christ receives the cross; (3) His first fall; (4) He meets His Mother; (5) *Simon of Cyrene is made to bear the cross; (6) Christ's face is wiped by *Veronica; (7) His second fall; (8) He meets the women of Jerusalem; (9) His third fall; (10) He is stripped of His garments; (11) He is nailed to the cross; (12) Christ dies on the cross; (13) His body is taken down from the cross; (14) His body is laid in the tomb.

H. Thurston, SJ, The Stations of the Cross: An Account of their History and Devotional Purpose (1906), with refs. B. [A.] Brown, OFM, in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 832–5, s.v. 'Way of the Cross'. M.-J. Picard in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 2576–606, s.v. 'Croix (Chemin de)'.

Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua (Lat., 'The Ancient Statutes of the Church'). A document comprising a profession of faith, disciplinary canons, and a ritual for *Ordination. It is preserved in very many ancient MSS, which can be divided into Gallican, Italian, and Spanish families. Acc. to the *Hispana collection of canons, the Statuta were the decrees of the Fourth Council of Carthage of 398; it was from this source that they were first known and were long cited. It was not until 1757 that the *Ballerini brothers showed that the Statuta originated from S. Gaul and were composed in the second half of the 5th cent. Some scholars tried to connect them with *Caesarius of Arles, but this attribution has now been rejected. More recently C. Munier has suggested that they were compiled by *Gennadius of Marseilles.

The canons are found in all the principal edns. of the Councils under 'Council of Carthage of 398'. The Hispana form is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 84. 199–208; the Ballerini edn., ibid. 56. 879–89. Crit. edn., with full discussion, by C. Munier (Bibliothèque de l'Institut de Droit Canonique de l'Université de Strasbourg, 5; 1960); text repr. in his Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (CCSL 148; 1963), pp. 162–88. M. Coquin, OSB, 'Le sort des "Statuta Ecclesiae antiqua" dans les Collections canoniques jusqu'à la "Concordia" de Gratien', RTAM 28 (1961), pp. 193–224. J. Gaudemet, Les Sources du Droit de l'Église en Occident du II^e au VII^e Siècle (1985), pp. 84–6. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 102–20. A. Malnory, Saint Césaire, évêque d'Arles (Paris thesis, 1894; also pub. in the Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 103; 1894), pp. 50–62. B. Botte, OSB, 'Le Rituel d'ordination des Statuta Ecclesiae antiqua', RTAM 11 (1939), pp. 223–41.

Statutes of Provisors. See PROVISORS, STATUTES OF.

Steen, Cornelis Cornelissen van den. See CORNELIUS A LAPIDE.

Stein, Bl Edith (1891–1942), in religion Teresa Benedicta of the Cross, *Carmelite nun. A native of Breslau, of Jewish family, she studied at Göttingen and Freiburg i.B. under E. Husserl and became a leading figure of the *Phenomenological School. Having abandoned Jewish practice in childhood, she was received into the RC Church in 1922, and from then on sought to interpret Phenomenology from a Thomist standpoint. She took the Carmelite habit at Cologne in 1934; in 1938 to escape arrest by the Nazis she was transferred to the Netherlands, but when that country was occupied she was taken to Auschwitz and put to death in a gas chamber. Her philosophical publications include 'Beiträge zur philosophischen Begründung der Psychologie und der Geisteswissenschaften' in Jahrbuch für Philosophie und phänomenologische Forschung, 5 (1922), pp. 1–283, and 'Eine Untersuchung über den Staat', ibid. 7 (1925), pp. 1–123. Most of her later works remained unpublished at her death. She was beatified in 1987. Feast day, 9 Aug.

Collected works ed. L. Gelber and R. Leuven, OCD (10 vols., Louvain, 1950–83, incl., as vol. 10, a Life by R. Leuven; Eng. tr., Washington, DC, 1986 ff.). Earlier Eng. tr. of Selected Writings by H. [C.] Graef (1956) and of Kreuzeswissenschaft (vol. 1 of Collected Works) as The Science of the Cross by id. (1960). Biog. by Sr. Teresa Renata de Spiritu Sancto, Prioress of Carmelite Convent, Cologne (Nuremberg, 1948; Eng. tr., 1952). H. C. Graef, The Scholar and the Cross: The Life and Work of Edith Stein (1955). W. Herbstrith, Das Wahre Gesicht Edith Steins (Munich [1971]; 5th edn., 1983; Eng. tr., San Francisco [1985]).

Steiner, Rudolf (1861–1925), founder of *anthroposophy (q.v.). The son of a station-master and apparently given a Catholic upbringing, he studied natural science at Vienna University and from 1890 to 1897 he was engaged on the Weimar edn. of the works of J. W. Goethe. In the next years he sought to elaborate a scientific method of studying the world of spirit and lectured widely on his conclusions. He was co-editor for a time of a literary magazine, and in 1902 he became the leader of a German section of the *Theosophical Society, but rejected the predominantly eastern associations of the main body. In 1913 Steiner founded the Anthroposophical Society as an independent association, building the Goetheanum at Dornach near Basle as its headquarters. His aim was to develop the faculty of spirit cognition inherent in ordinary people and to put them into touch with the spiritual world from which materialism had long estranged them. He taught the original nobility of the human spirit and a doctrine of immortality, supporting his teaching by a claimed clairvoyance. His extensive writings, which were mostly founded on his lectures, include Die Philosophie der Freiheit (1894; Eng. tr., 1916), Theosophie: Einführung in übersinnliche Welterkenntnis und Menschenbestimmung (1904; Eng. tr., 1910), and Die Geheimwissenschaft im Umriss (1910; Eng. tr., 1914).

The principal authority for his life is Steiner's autobiog., written when he was about 60; it was pub. Dornach, Switzerland, 1925; Eng. tr., London, 1928. Details of his lectures by A. Arenson, Ein Führer durch die Vortragszyklen Rudolf Steiners (1–50) (3 vols., 1930). A. P. Shepherd, A Scientist of the Invisible: An Introduction to the Life and Work of Rudolf Steiner (1954). A. W. Harwood (ed.), The Faithful Thinker: Centenary Essays on the Work and Thought of Rudolf Steiner (1961). F. Hiebel, Rudolf Steiner im Geistesgang des Abendlandes (Bern and Munich [1965]). C. Wilson, Rudolf Steiner: The Man and his Vision (Wellingborough, Northants, 1985). P. M. Allen, The Writings and Lectures of Rudolf Steiner: A Chronological Bibliography of his Books, Lectures, Addresses, Courses, Cycles, Essays and Reports as published in English translation (New York, 1956); Rudolf Steiner: Das literarische und künstlerische Werk. Eine bibliographische Übersicht, herausgegeben von der Rudolf Steiner-Nachlassverwaltung (Dornach, Switzerland, 1961).

'Stephanus' (Estienne). A family of scholar-printers who worked at *Paris and *Geneva in the 16th and 17th cents.

HENRI [I] ESTIENNE (d. 1520), principal printer and publisher to Jacobus *Faber and his circle.

ROBERT [I] ESTIENNE (1503–59), Printer to Francis I. He is famous chiefly for his editions of the Scriptures and for his Thesaurus Linguae Latinae, first published in 1532, and for long a standard work. In his Latin Bibles, of which those of 1528, 1532, and 1540 are of special importance, he tried to follow as closely as possible the original text of St *Jerome. Of his editions of the Hebrew OT the chief are those of 1539 and 1544–6. In 1544 he began to print Greek, first using the famous Garamond type in his editio princeps of *Eusebius' Historia Ecclesiastica. Among his later editions of the Fathers is that of *Justin Martyr (1551). His most important edition of the Greek NT is that of 1550. It was the earliest to contain a critical apparatus, and its text is almost identical with the '*textus receptus' (q.v.). His annotations to his Bibles provoked severe attacks from the *Sorbonne, which led him to move to Geneva in 1551 where he became a *Calvinist. In his NT, published at Geneva in the same year, he introduced the division into verses arranged by himself, which is still used today. He subsequently published many of J. Calvin's works.

HENRI [II] ESTIENNE (1528–98), Robert's eldest son, who took over his father's establishment at Geneva. He published several editiones principes, including works by *Athenagoras, *Athanasius (spurious), and *Synesius. His fame rests chiefly on his Thesaurus Linguae Graecae (5 vols., 1572), a work of outstanding erudition which remained indispensable to generations of Greek scholars and was twice republished in the 19th cent. (London, 1815–25; Paris, 1831–63).

Two of Robert's other sons were of some importance: Robert [II] Estienne (1530–71), who returned to France and the RC Church, and in 1561 succeeded his father as Printer to the King; and François Estienne (b. *c.*1539), who supplemented the work of Henri at Geneva. Both printed Bibles.

A. A. Renouard, Annales de l'imprimerie des Estienne, ou histoire de la famille des Estienne et de ses éditions (2 vols., 1837–8; 2nd edn., 1843). M. *Pattison in Quarterly Review, 117 (1856), pp. 323–64, repr. as 'The Stephenses', in Essays, ed. H. Nettleship (Oxford, 1889), 1, pp. 67–123. H. Stein (ed.), 'Nouveaux Documents sur les Estienne, imprimeurs parisiens (1517–1665)', Mémoires de la Société de l'Histoire de Paris et de l'Île-de-France, 22 (1895), pp. 249–95. L. Clément, Henri Estienne et son œuvre française (Paris thesis, 1898). J. Bompaire and others, Henri Estienne (Collection de l'École Normale Supérieure de Jeunes Filles, 43; Cahiers V. L. Saulnier, 5; 1988). [A.] E. Armstrong, Robert Estienne, Royal Printer (Cambridge, 1954; rev. edn., Courtenay Studies in Reformation Theology, 6; 1986). DeW. T. Starnes, Robert Estienne's Influence on Lexicography (Austin, Tex. [1963]). A. E. Tyler, 'Jacques Lefèvre d'Étaples and Henry Estienne the Elder 1502–20', in W. [G.] Moore and others (eds.), The French Mind: Studies in honour of Gustave Rudler (Oxford, 1952), pp. 17–33; R. M. Kingdon, 'The Business Activities of Printers Henri et François Estienne', in G. Berthoud and others, Aspects de la propagande religieuse (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 28; Geneva, 1957), pp. 258–75; [A.] E. Armstrong, 'Robert (II) Estienne à Paris (1556–1570)', Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance. Travaux et documents, 20 (1958), pp. 349–69.

Stephen, St (d. *c.*35), protomartyr and, acc. to tradition, the first *deacon. Most probably a Hellenistic Jew, he was one of 'the seven' who, acc. to Acts 6: 5, were appointed by the Apostles to 'serve tables' in *Jerusalem. It is reported that he also took part in the preaching and performed miracles (Acts 6: 8 ff.), thus incurring the hostility of the Jews, who accused him to the *Sanhedrin; there he delivered a great discourse, setting out by a recapitulation of Israel's history that God does not depend on the Temple, which he had been accused of blaspheming, and that Christ was the prophet announced by *Moses, whom the Jews had killed (Acts 7: 2–53). Incensed at his denunciations, his accusers, apparently without formal trial, had him stoned acc. to the Mosaic Law, the witnesses laying their clothes at the feet of Saul, the future St *Paul. He died confessing Christ and asking forgiveness for his persecutors, and was buried by 'devout men' (Acts 8: 2). His tomb was not known until its alleged discovery by the priest Lucian in 415. His feast has been celebrated on 26 Dec. from the end of the 4th cent., while at one time a second feast, 'Inventio S. Stephani', commemorating the finding of his relics, was also kept on 3 Aug. A church containing his relics and dedicated to him was built outside the Damascus Gate by the Empress Eudoxia; it was dedicated in 439 and completed by 460. Its ruins were discovered by the *Dominicans in 1882 and a new church erected on the site. St Stephen was one of the most popular saints of the Middle Ages, esp. on the Continent. He is also commemorated in the *Canon of the Roman Mass. In the E. Church his feast is kept on 27 Dec.

For St Stephen himself the main material is to be found in comm. on Acts, cited s.v., e.g. that of E. Haenchen (Eng. tr., 1971), pp. 270–93. M. Simon, St Stephen and the Hellenists in the Primitive Church (1958). J. Bihler, Die Stephanusgeschichte im Zusammenhang der Apostelgeschichte (Münchener Theologische Studien. I. Historische Abteilung, 16; 1963). M. H. Scharlemann, Stephen: A singular saint (Analecta Biblica, 34; Rome, 1968). On the church at Jerusalem, M. J. *Lagrange, OP, Saint Étienne et son sanctuaire à Jérusalem (1894); C. Mommert, Saint Étienne et ses sanctuaires à Jérusalem (Jerusalem, etc., 1912); [L.] H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem, 2 (1914), pp. 743–804; P. Devos, SJ, 'L'année de la dédicace de Saint-Étienne à Jérusalem: 439', Anal. Boll. 105 (1987), pp. 265–79. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (1922), cols. 624–71, s.v. 'Étienne (Martyre et sépulture de saint)'; F. M. Abel, OP, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 2 (1934), cols. 1132–46, s.v. 'Étienne (Saint)'; M.-É. Boismard [OP] in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 207–10, s.v. with further bibl.

Stephen I, St (d. 257), Pope from 12 May 254. He was a Roman by birth of the gens Julia and successor to Pope Lucius I. On his accession he (with St *Cyprian) was at once pressed by Faustinus, Bp. of Lyons, to intervene in the affairs of S. Gaul where Marcian, Bp. of Arles, had embraced *Novatianist doctrines. About the same time he also intervened in *Spain in another dispute arising out of the Decian Persecution. Later he became involved in a long and bitter dispute with Cyprian over the validity of Baptism by heretics, which Cyprian, with the support of three African councils and Firmilian, Bp. of Caesarea in Cappadocia, held to be null and void; and Stephen even refused to see a delegation from Carthage in 256. Acc. to the (unreliable) Liber Pontificalis, he introduced the rule that clerics should wear special clothes at their ministrations. He is traditionally reckoned a martyr, but on insufficient evidence. Feast day, formerly 2 Aug.

Two letters ascribed to Pope Stephen I are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 3. 1033–44. Jaffé, 1, pp. 20 f. The principal sources are Cyprian, Epp. 67–75; *Eusebius, HE 7. 2–5; and LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 68 and 154. AASS, Aug. 1 (1733), pp. 112–46, incl. Lat. text of 'Acta', pp. 139–46; 'Acta' tr. into Lat. from Armenian text by P. Martin in Anal. Boll. 1 (1882), pp. 470–84. J. Ernst, Stephan I und der Ketzertaufstreit (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, 5, Heft 4; 1905); id., 'Die Stellung der römischen Kirche zur Ketzertauffrage vor und unmittelbar nach Papst Stephan I', ZKT 29 (1905), pp. 258–98. H. Koch, 'Zwei Erlasse Papst Stephans I in sprachgeschichtlicher Beleuchtung', Philologus, 86 (1930), pp. 128–32. S. G. Hall, 'Stephen I of Rome and the Baptismal Controversy of 256', in B. Vogler (ed.), Miscellanea Historiae Ecclesiasticae, 8 (Bibliothèque de la Revue Ecclésiastique, 72; 1987), pp. 78–82. A. Clerval in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 970–3, s.v. 'Étienne (1) I^er^ (Saint)'; J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 20 f.

Stephen II (III) (d. 757), Pope from 752. (He is sometimes counted the third of his name, 'Stephen II' having died four days after his election.) Under him the Papacy became allied with the Carolingian dynasty, a fact which was to influence the relations between the Church and the kingdoms of W. Europe for several centuries. When the Lombard king, Aistulf, in defiance of a treaty concluded with Stephen shortly before, besieged Rome, the Pope, after turning in vain to the Byzantine Emperor for help, crossed the Alps to ask the assistance of the Frankish king, *Pepin. After obtaining from him the much discussed 'Donation' of Quiercy (now often called the 'Donation of Pepin', 754), Stephen returned to Rome, which was finally delivered from the Lombard threat by Pepin's second campaign in 756. It was possibly in Stephen's curia that the '*Donation of Constantine' was produced. See also PATRIMONY OF ST PETER.

Letters preserved in the Codex Carolingus (ed. W. Gundlach in MGH, Epistolae, 3 (1892), pp. 487–507). Jaffé, 1, pp. 271–7. LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 440–62 (Eng. tr. by R. Davis, Liverpool, 1992, pp. 51–76). E. Caspar, Pippin und die römische Kirche (1914; repr., Darmstadt, 1973). C. Rodenburg, Pippin, Karlmann und Papst Stephan II (Historische Studien, 152; 1923). L. Levillain, 'L'Avènement de la dynastie carolingienne et les origines de l'état pontifical (749–757)', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 94 (1933), pp. 225–95. M. Buchner, Das Vizepapsttum des Abtes von St-Denis: Studien zur 'Offenbarung des Papstes Stephan II.' ('Revelatio') und ihrem Anhang ('Gesta') (1928); O. Bertolini, 'Il problema delle origini del potere temporale dei papi nei suoi presupposti teoretici iniziali: il concetto di "Restitutio" nelle prime cessioni territoriali (756–757) alla Chiesa di Roma', Miscellanea Pio Paschini, 1 (Lateranum, NS 14; 1948), pp. 103–71. L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (2nd edn., 1904), pp. 52–78. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia [1984]), esp. pp. 71–88 and 90–8. A. Dumas in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1184–90, s.v. 'Étienne II'; J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 91 f.

Stephen III (IV) (d. 772), Pope from 768. Elected after the expulsion of the usurper Constantine II, he held a synod at the *Lateran (769) to regularize the situation created by Constantine's irregular election and ordinations, which were declared null. The same synod excluded laymen from the Papal elections, confirmed the veneration of images, and anathematized the *iconoclastic Synod of 754. In the following years the Pope tried in vain to prevent a marriage between *Charlemagne and the daughter of the Lombard king, Desiderius, but finally abandoned the Franks and allied himself with the Lombards, a policy revoked by his successor *Hadrian I.

Letters preserved in the Codex Carolingus (ed. W. Gundlach in MGH, Epistolae, 3 (1892), pp. 558–67). Jaffé, 1, pp. 284–8. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 468–85 (Eng. tr. by R. Davis, Liverpool, 1992, pp. 85–106). O. Bertolini, 'La caduta del primicerio Cristoforo (771) nelle versioni dei contemporanei, e le correnti antilongobarde e filolongobarde in Roma alla fine del pontificato di Stefano III (771–772)', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 1 (1947), pp. 227–62 and 349–78. J. T. Hallenbeck, 'Pope Stephen III: why was he elected?', Archivium Historiae Pontificia, 12 (1974), pp. 287–99. L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (2nd edn., 1904), pp. 123–33. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia [1984]), esp. pp. 120–7. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 952–73. A. Dumas in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1190–3, s.v. 'Étienne III'; J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 95 f.

Stephen, St (975–1038), first king of *Hungary. He became a Christian, with his father, in 985, and on his accession to the Hungarian throne in 997 set out to Christianize his country, a work which was partly undone by his pagan successors. A strong supporter of the Papacy, he obtained in 1001 a royal crown from the Pope, though it appears later to have been returned to Rome, and is no longer believed to form part of the Hungarian crown preserved at Budapest. At about the same date he established episcopal sees throughout Hungary. He was canonized in 1083 together with his son, St Emeric. His feast (now an optional memorial) is kept on 16 Aug. (formerly 2 Sept.); but in Hungary 20 Aug., the day of the translation of his relics, is his principal festival.

Two early Lives (prob. 11th cent.), known as the Vita Major and the Vita Minor, ed. W. Wattenbach in MGH, Scriptores, 11 (1854), pp. 224–42. A 12th-cent. Life by Hartwick, perh. Bp. of Veszprém, pr. in AASS, Sept. 1 (1746), pp. 562–75, with other material, pp. 456–562. Vita Major and Vita Minor, and Life by Hartwick, also ed. E. Bartoniek in Scriptores Rerum Hungaricarum, ed. E. Szentpétery, 2 (Budapest, 1938), pp. 363–440, with material on his son, Emeric, pp. 441–60. T. von Bogyay, Stephanus Rex: Versuch einer Biographie (Vienna and Munich [1975]). G. Györffy, István király és műve (Budapest, 1977). Z. J. Kosztolnyik, Five Eleventh Century Hungarian Kings: Their Politics and their Relations with Rome (East European Monographs, 79; New York, etc., 1981), pp. 14–55 and 110–16. G. Klaniczay, The Uses of Supernatural Power: The Transformation of Popular Religion in Medieval and Early-Modern Europe, tr. by S. Singerman (Cambridge, 1990), esp. pp. 87–90. P. J. Kelleher, The Holy Crown of Hungary (Papers and Monographs of the American Academy in Rome, 13; 1951), with bibl. On his son Emeric, AASS, Nov. 2 (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 477–91, incl. discussion of sources for the history of the father. J. Szalay in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1235–7, s.v. 'Étienne (51)'.

Stephen Harding, St (d. 1134), third abbot of *Cîteaux. He was educated at the abbey of *Sherborne in N. Dorset. After travelling in Scotland and France, he underwent a conversion and went to Rome. Upon returning to Burgundy, he became a monk at Molesme; in 1098, he went with part of the community to Cîteaux. There, after being in turn sub-prior and prior, he was elected abbot in 1109. Owing to poverty and the severity of the rule, the monastery was faced with the danger of dying out when, in 1112, St *Bernard with 30 followers joined the monks, whose sudden increase of numbers soon necessitated other foundations. In order to maintain the original austerity and uniform government, Stephen drew up the nucleus of the '*Carta Caritatis', which established the system of regular visitations and General Chapters. The oldest history of the Order, the 'Exordium Cisterciensis Coenobii', has in part been ascribed to him, but the attribution is questionable. Besides being a great organizer, he is credited with responsibility for the text of the Latin Bible used at Cîteaux, correcting the OT with the help of Jews. The Cistercian General Chapter of 1623 prescribed his feast; that of 1683 transferred it from 17 Apr. to 16 July, though 17 Apr. stands in the *Roman Martyrology.

Works ascribed to him, with Life from AASS, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 166. 1361–510. Life [by J. B. *Dalgairns] (The Lives of English Saints written at the suggestion of J. H. *Newman, 1844; 2nd edn. by A. W. Hutton, 1, 1900, pp. 3–214; also pub. separately, with notes by H. Thurston, SJ, London, 1898). There is no modern biog.: the best study is that of M.-A. Dimier in DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 1226–34, s.v. 'Étienne Harding', with extensive bibl. to date. Y. Załuska, L'Enluminure et le Scriptorium de Cîteaux au XII^e^ siècle (Cîteaux, Studia et Documenta, 4; Cîteaux, 1989), passim. See also bibl. to CARTA CARITATIS and CISTERCIAN ORDER.

Stercoranists. Persons who asserted that the Blessed Sacrament is digested and evacuated by the recipient. Although they are written of as a sect, there appears to be no evidence that such a sect ever existed. The name, prob. of 12th-cent. origin (from Lat. stercus, 'dung'), is found in connection with the *Berengarian controversies.

C. M. *Pfaff, Dissertatio Theologica de Stercoranistis Medii Aevi, tam Latinis, quam Graecis (Tübingen, 1750). O. Zöckler and A. Hauck in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 9 f., s.v. 'Sterkoranisten', with further bibl.; also OED, s.v.

Stern, Henry Aaron (1820–85), missionary to the Jews. Born of Jewish parents at Unterreichenbach in Hesse-Cassel, he was educated at Frankfurt and Hamburg. Having entered on a commercial career he went to London, where he received Christian Baptism in 1840, and in 1842 began to prepare for service as a missionary. In 1844 he was ordained deacon by M. S. *Alexander, Bp. in *Jerusalem, on his way to Baghdad, and for some ten years he conducted itinerant missionary work among the Jews of Mesopotamia, Persia, and Kurdistan. He was ordained priest in 1849 on a visit to London. From 1853 to 1856 and again from 1857 to 1859 he was at *Constantinople. In 1859 and 1862 he made journeys to Ethiopia, where he did notable work among the Falashas, the so-called 'black Jews'. Anti-European feeling led to the imprisonment of Stern and his fellow-Europeans by King Theodore of Ethiopia in 1864, and only the approach of a British army secured his release in 1868. Somewhat broken in health, he spent the rest of his life in missionary activity in London, where many conversions and Baptisms took place. His publications include Dawning of Light in the East (1854), Wanderings among the Falashas in Abyssinia (1862) and The Captive Missionary (1868).

His Wanderings among the Falashas was repr., with introd. by R. L. Hess (1968). Life by A. A. Isaacs (London, 1886). Popular sketch by E. C. Dawson ('Splendid Lives Series', ibid. [1904]). W. G. D. Fletcher in DNB 54 (1898), pp. 195–7.

Sternhold, Thomas (d. 1549), versifier of the Psalms. Supposedly educated at Oxford, he entered the King's service and became a court favourite as one of the grooms of the robes. In 1545 he was elected MP for Plymouth. His claim to fame rests on his metrical version of the Psalms. A first (undated) edition, containing 19 Pss., appeared probably in 1549; it was dedicated to *Edward VI. A third edition, with 37 Pss., was issued posthumously in 1549; it contained seven further Pss. by 'J. H.' (John Hopkins, probably a Suffolk clergyman who died in 1570), and the collection, in the complete edition printed by John *Day in 1562, became generally known as 'Sternhold and Hopkins'. For the most part Sternhold used the familiar ballad metre of 'Chevy Chase', a fact which partly accounts for the popularity of psalm-singing in Elizabethan times.

J. Holland, The Psalmists of Great Britain, 1 (1843), pp. 91–105. R. Virgoe in S. T. Bindoff (ed.), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1509–1558, 3 (1982), p. 383, s.v. BRUO, 1501–1540, p. 539, s.v. See also bibl. to METRICAL PSALTERS.

Sterry, Peter (?1613–72), *Puritan divine. He was a native of Surrey and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1636. In 1643 he was one of the 14 divines proposed by the House of Lords for the *Westminster Assembly, and from 1645 preached frequently before the Houses of Parliament. In 1649 he was appointed one of O. *Cromwell's chaplains. After the Protector's death he retired to Hackney, where he took pupils and devoted himself to literary work. Sterry's theology was a mixture of *Calvinism and *Neoplatonism. The former is to be seen in his emphasis on the will of God to the virtual exclusion of secondary causes and human free will, the latter in his conception of the world as emanating from God and, through the Fall and Redemption by Christ, returning to God and to its own original beauty. He was influenced by *J. Boehme, and in an age of sectarian strife was an ardent advocate of mutual tolerance founded on Christian love. Among his more important works, all written in a fine prose, are A Discourse of the Freedom of the Will (1675) and The Rise, Race and Royalty of the Kingdom of God in the Soul of Man (1683).

V. de Sola Pinto, Peter Sterry, Platonist and Puritan, 1613–1672: A Biographical and Critical Study with Passages selected from his Writings (1934). F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists: A Study (1926), ch. 5, pp. 174–92. C. Fell-Smith in DNB 54 (1898), pp. 224 f.

Stevens, William (1732–1807), Anglican religious writer. He was born at Southwark, and educated at Maidstone together with his cousin, G. *Horne. He later became partner of a hosier and studied theology in his leisure time. He belonged to the circle of '*Hutchinsonians' and acquired an extensive knowledge of the Scriptures, the early Fathers, and such Anglican divines as L. *Andrewes and Jeremy *Taylor. His works were chiefly pamphlets, collected as Οὐδενὸς Ἔργα ('Nobody's Works') in 1805. One of his best-known studies is An Essay on the Nature and Constitution of the Church (1773), in which he defended episcopacy and the legislative power of the Church. He also edited the works of W. *Jones of Nayland (12 vols., 1801) to which he prefixed a Life written by himself in the style of I. *Walton.

J. A. Park, Memoirs of William Stevens, Esq. (anon., 1812; enlarged edn. with name of author, 1859). G. Le G. Norgate in DNB 54 (1898), p. 233.

stewardship. The management of property by a servant on behalf of its owner, and more particularly in modern times, the organized pledging of a specific amount of money to be given regularly to the Church, often designated 'Christian stewardship'. In its general sense the term (οἰκονομία and its cognates) occurs frequently in the NT. In the early Church, though the word itself was rarely used, it was widely taught that the Christian ought to regard the holding of property as a trust to be administered on behalf of the needy. In subsequent ages exhortations to give alms to the poor were less closely connected with the concept of stewardship, though this continued to have an important role in the distribution of charity by monastic and other ecclesiastical institutions. The concept of stewardship again came to the fore with the 'success' preachers in N. America in the late 17th cent.; disbursement of one's income to pious causes 'as a steward of the Lord' was extolled both as a Christian virtue and a key ingredient in business success. It was, however, the need to fund missionaries which brought about what is called the 'Stewardship Awakening' in the second quarter of the 19th cent. in the USA.

Essential to the emerging doctrine of stewardship was the idea that all people, and not just the affluent, could be benefactors of religion. As methods of church funding (such as pew rents) which drew class distinctions between members were increasingly disliked, 'systematic finance' was hailed as an acceptable alternative. Drawing on developments in fund-raising pioneered by the *YMCA in the United States, American Protestant Churches developed the 'Every Member Canvass' (RC interest came later) and many established denominational stewardship agencies which would assist parishes' annual stewardship programmes. The system was refined by commercial fund-raising agencies, including the Chicago-based Wells Organizations, founded in 1946 by Herbert Wells. This introduced triennial stewardship programmes, first to *Australia (1954) and then to other Commonwealth countries, including England, where the decline in the value of endowments necessitated contributions from the laity as never before. Wells canvassers stressed both the Church's need for money to finance its work and the need of individuals to promise regular financial support as part of their personal Christian stewardship. The canvassers relied on the presence of a full-time director to train and motivate local leaders. The programmes featured elaborate brochures and parish dinners, sermons on generosity and individual solicitation by Church members who had already made a significant financial pledge. The results of the stewardship campaigns were astonishingly successful, often with huge increases in parish income, but after the initial success, many Churches wanted to reduce the cost of such programmes and to eliminate the peer-pressure which was inherent in the Wells method. They then set up their own departments of stewardship.

In Europe the *Lutheran Churches have shown practical interest in stewardship (usually Haushalterschaft), interpreting the concept as pastoral support and evangelism through home visitation.

From 1920, perhaps in response to a perceived over-emphasis on financial stewardship, stewardship theology was applied to all aspects of life, often defined as time, talents, and treasure. More recently, 'stewardship of creation' has been a theme of theological response to environmental issues.

See also TITHES.

H. Brattgård, God's Stewards: A Theological Study of the Principles and Practices of Stewardship, tr. by G. J. Lund (Minneapolis [1963]); D. J. Hall, The Steward: A Biblical Symbol Come of Age (Library of Christian Stewardship; New York, 1982; rev. edn. [1990]). P. De Vos and others, Earthkeeping: Christian Stewardship of Natural Resources (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1980]). A Stewardship Bibliography, pub. by the Commission on Stewardship of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA (3rd edn., New York, 1985).

sticharion (Gk. στιχάριον). The liturgical tunic, usually of coloured stuff, worn in the E. Church and comparable with the *alb in the W.

Braun, LG, pp. 92–101.

sticheron (Gk. στιχηρόν). In the E. Church a brief liturgical hymn which is attached to a verse (στίχος) of a Psalm or other scriptural passage.

stichometry. The practice, dating from at least 300 BC, of computing the length of a MS from the number of lines. In the MSS of the Greek classics the standard line (στίχος) contained 16 syllables; but when stichometric reckoning came to be applied to biblical MSS, it seems that a 15-syllable line was sometimes used for the Gospels. Among the oldest extant biblical stichometric tables is the list of the Pauline Epistles in the *Codex Sinaiticus.

Stigand (d. ?1072), Abp. of *Canterbury. A king's priest under Cnut, he was made Bishop of Elmham in his native E. Anglia in 1043, translated to *Winchester in 1047, and appointed Abp. of Canterbury in 1052 in succession to the Norman Robert of Jumièges, who had been expelled and outlawed. He nevertheless retained the see of Winchester, thus combining the two richest bishoprics in England. He did not secure Papal recognition until 1058, and then from Benedict X, who next year was himself deposed as a schismatic Pope. Stigand, a patron of the arts but greedy for lands and monasteries, exemplified some of the weaknesses of the English Church before 1066. His uninspiring leadership and dubious status at Canterbury cast a shadow over his province. Although his position provided a pretext for *William I's invasion in 1066, he was honoured by the Conqueror until the throne was secure. In 1070 William had him deposed on various charges by Papal legates; he was succeeded by *Lanfranc and died in custody at Winchester.

*William of Malmesbury, De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum, ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton (Rolls Series, 1870), pp. 35–7, gives the critical view of the next generation. F. Barlow, The English Church 1000–1066 (1963), esp. pp. 76–81, 302–7. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (3rd edn., Oxford, 1971), esp. pp. 465 f., 623 f., 659–61. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury stigmatization. The reproduction of the wounds of the Passion of Christ in the human body. It is a phenomenon usually accompanied by other manifestations of the same category, such as levitation, *bilocation, and telepathic faculties, as well as by abnormal physical states such as lameness or blindness not due to organic causes, and almost complete abstinence from food and sleep. Stigmata may either be invisible, i.e. the stigmatized person experiences only the pain without any exterior signs, or visible, in which case they normally consist of wounds or blood blisters on hands, feet, and near the heart, also on the head (Crown of Thorns) or shoulders and back (carrying of the Cross and Scourging). They do not become septic and resist ordinary treatment, but are liable to periodical bleedings, mostly on Fridays and during Lent and Passiontide. Various natural explanations have been advanced; and though it is widely held that supernatural influences have to be admitted in many cases, a certain abnormal physical predisposition, acted upon by a deeply religious mind imbued with an extraordinary devotion to the Passion of the Lord, would seem to account for much in these phenomena. The official attitude of the RC Church has always been guarded, and stigmatization has never been made a reason for *canonization; among the known stigmatized, who are estimated to number over 300, there are only some 60 saints and beati. None of them appear before the 13th cent., when the growing devotion to the suffering Christ seems to have occasioned their appearance. The first saint known to have received the stigmata is St *Francis of Assisi; but since then cases have been numerous, predominantly among women. Some of the best known are St *Catherine of Siena (invisible), St *Catherine of Genoa, Anna Katharina *Emmerick, St Gemma *Galgani, and Therese *Neumann. The Stigmata of St Francis are commemorated in the Franciscan Order on 17 Sept.

(Leicester, 1984), pp. 305–13. W. Hunt in DNB 54 (1898), pp. 369 f., with refs.

A. Imbert-Gourbeyre, La Stigmatisation, l'extase divine et les miracles de Lourdes (2 vols., 1894), esp. vol. 1, and vol. 2, pp. 1–231. A series of arts. in Études Carmélitaines, 21, vol. 2 (Oct. 1936) ('Douleur et Stigmatisation'). H. Thurston, SJ, The Physical Phenomena of Mysticism (posthumously ed. J. H. Crehan, SJ, 1952), pp. 32–129 (various essays repr. from scattered sources, with corrections). R. Biot, L'Énigme des stigmatisés (1955; Eng. tr., 1962). G. Wunderle, Zur Psychologie der Stigmatisation (1938). Octavianus a Rieden [O. Schmucki], OFM Cap., 'De Sancti Francisci Assisiensis Stigmatum Susceptione. Disquisitio historico-critica luce testimoniorum saeculi XIII', Collectanea Franciscana, 33 (1963), pp. 210–66, 392–422; 34 (1964), pp. 5–62 and 241–338; Eng. tr., with additional bibl. and notes, The Stigmata of St Francis of Assisi (Franciscan Institute Publications, History Series, 6; St Bonaventure, NY [1991]). J. Danemarie [pseudonym for M. Ponet-Bordeaux], Le Mystère des stigmatisés de Catherine Emmerich à Thérèse Neumann (1933; Eng. tr., 1934). É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2616–24, s.v. 'Stigmatisation'; P. Adnès, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1211–43, s.v. 'Stigmates'.

Stillingfleet, Edward (1635–99), Bp. of *Worcester. He was born at Cranborne in Dorset and educated at St John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1653. In 1657 he was appointed rector of Sutton, Bedfordshire, and in 1665 rector of St Andrew's, Holborn, where he soon made a name as a preacher. Having won the favour of *Charles II he was given several preferments, becoming Archdeacon of London in 1677 and Dean of *St Paul's in 1678. He was less esteemed under *James II, but after the Revolution of 1689 he was immediately appointed Bp. of Worcester.

Stillingfleet was a man of *Latitudinarian views. His first book, the Irenicum (1659), advocated a union between *Episcopalians and *Presbyterians. While opposing Nonconformity, it treated forms of Church government as inessential and led to his being accused of following T. *Hobbes. The work was re-edited in 1662 with an appendix, in which Stillingfleet propounded the view that the Church was a society distinct from the State with its own rights and privileges. In the same year he published Origines Sacrae, an apologetic work dealing with the Divine authority of Scripture. In 1664 he replied to the *Jesuit account of the controversy between W. *Laud and J. *Fisher in his Rational Account of the Grounds of the Protestant Religion. The book had a great success and was followed by other controversial writings against RCs, *Socinians, and J. *Locke. Stillingfleet held Locke's Essay Concerning Human Understanding (1690) to be detrimental to the Trinitarian faith and published three pamphlets in reply (1696–7). His famous Origines Britannicae (1685) deals with the sources of the British Church. His Sermons, of which several volumes were published, enjoyed a long popularity.

Works (6 vols., London, 1709–10), with Life [by R. Bentley] in vol. 1, pp. 1–46. J. [W. H.] Nankivell, 'Edward Stillingfleet, Bishop of Worcester 1689–99', Transactions of the Worcestershire Archaeological Society, 22 for 1945 (1946), pp. 16–34; sep. pub. with list of his ordinations appended (1946). R. T. Carroll, The Common-Sense Philosophy of Religion of Bishop Edward Stillingfleet, 1635–1699 (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 77; The Hague, 1975). G. Reedy, SJ, The Bible and Reason: Anglicans and Scripture in Late Seventeenth-Century England (Philadelphia [1985]), passim. J. Marshall, 'The Ecclesiology of the Latitude-men 1660–1689: Stillingfleet, Tillotson and "Hobbism"', JEH 36 (1985), pp. 407–27. W. H. *Hutton in DNB 54 (1898), pp. 375–8; id. in DECH (1912), pp. 574 f.

Stock, St Simon. See SIMON STOCK, ST.

Stockholm Conference (1925). It grew out of an appeal for peace and fellowship sent out by Christian leaders in several neutral countries at the outset of the First World War (1914), followed by a further appeal by N. *Söderblom, Abp. of Uppsala, in June 1917 for an immediate conference. After the end of the war plans were made, and the Universal Christian Conference on *Life and Work eventually met at Stockholm, 19–30 Aug. 1925, to promote Christian influences on political, social, and economic life in the modern world. Over 500 representatives, drawn from most of the larger Christian bodies except the RC Church, took part. The subjects of the discussions were: The Purpose of God for Humanity and the Duty of the Church; The Church and Economic and Industrial Problems; The Church and International Relations; The Church and Christian Education; and Methods of Co-operative and Federative Efforts by the Christian Communions. The conference issued a 'Message', but no official findings. Its work was carried further in the conferences of *Oxford (1937) and *Amsterdam (1948).

G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), The Stockholm Conference 1925: The Official Report of the Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work held in Stockholm, 19–30 August, 1925 (1926).

Stoicism. A Graeco-Roman school of philosophy, founded at *Athens by Zeno of Citium (335–263 BC). His chief pupil was Cleanthes of Assos (331–232), whose work was carried on by Chrysippus of Soli (*c.*280–207). The system may be described as a form of materialistic pantheism or monism in contrast to *Platonic idealism on the one hand and *Epicurean hedonism on the other. The Stoics believed in law—the law of nature and the law of conscience or duty. To them God is the immanent all-pervading energy by which the natural world is created and sustained. He is also the world reason or '*Logos' which manifests itself in the order and beauty of the world. To the Stoics the good man is the wise man, and his wisdom consists in conformity to nature, i.e. in living according to the law of the universe embodied in the Divine reason. This 'life according to nature' was open to all men, even to slaves. Stoic ethics had a wide and tonic influence in the Graeco-Roman world, and its religious spirit is well illustrated in the famous 'Hymn to Zeus' of Cleanthes. The Stoic *Seneca was reputed to have engaged in correspondence with St *Paul.

Frags. of earlier Stoics collected in H. von Arnim, Stoicorum Veterum Fragmenta (4 vols. [vol. 4, index], Teub., 1903–24). For the edns. of Seneca, Epictetus, and Marcus Aurelius, see s.vv. Studies in Eng. incl. J. M. Rist, Stoic Philosophy (Cambridge, 1969); F. H. Sandbach, The Stoics (1975); J. M. Rist (ed.), The Stoics (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., and London [1978]); G. Verbeke, The Presence of Stoicism in Medieval Thought (Washington, DC, 1983); M. L. Colish, The Stoic Tradition from Antiquity to the Early Middle Ages (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 34–5; Leiden, 1985); B. Inwood, Ethics and Human Action in Early Stoicism (Oxford, 1985). M. Pohlenz, Die Stoa: Geschichte einer geistigen Bewegung (2 vols., Göttingen, 1948–9; vol. 1, repr. 1970; vol. 2, with bibl. suppl. by H.-T. Johann, 1972); M. Spanneut, Le Stoïcisme des pères de l'Église de Clément de Rome à Clément d'Alexandrie (Patristica Sorbonensia, 1; 1957; 2nd edn., 1969); id., Permanence du Stoïcisme de Zénon à Malraux (Gembloux, 1973); M. Forschner, Die stoische Ethik: Über den Zusammenhang von Natur-, Sprach- und Moralphilosophie im altstoischen System (Stuttgart, 1981). For works on the reputed correspondence of Seneca and St Paul, see bibl. to SENECA.

Stolberg, Friedrich Leopold, Graf zu (1750–1819), poet. A member of the German poets' circle, Goettinger Hain, he was an admirer and imitator of F. G. *Klopstock and a friend of J. W. Goethe, and became a translator of Homer, Aeschylus, and other classical authors. After filling the posts of envoy of the Protestant Prince Bp. of Lübeck to the Danish court (1777), of Danish envoy to Berlin (1789), and other offices, he was received into the RC Church in 1800. His most important work after his conversion is the Geschichte der Religion Jesu Christi in 15 vols. (1806–18), an influential though not always scholarly history of Christianity from OT times to the death of St *Augustine. Among his numerous poetical and prose works a Life of *Alfred the Great (1817) and the devotional Büchlein von der Liebe (1819) became popular among his contemporaries.

Gesammelte Werke der Brüder Christian und Friedrich Leopold Grafen zu Stolberg (20 vols., Hamburg, 1820–5; 2nd edn., 1827). Briefe [a selection], ed. J. Behrens (Kieler Studien zur deutschen Literaturgeschichte, 5; Neumünster, 1966). Facsimile repr. of Streitschriften über Stolbergs Konversion, ed. id. (Berne and Frankfurt am Main, 1973). J. Janssen, Friedrich Leopold Graf zu Stolberg: Sein Entwicklungsgang und sein Wirken im Geiste der Kirche (1882; 4th edn. by L. von *Pastor, 1910). L. Scheffczyk, Friedrich Leopold zu Stolbergs 'Geschichte der Religion Jesu Christi' (Münchener theologische Studien, I. Historische Abteilung, 3; 1952). E. Schmidt in Allgemeine Deutsche Biographie, 36 (1893), pp. 350–67, s.v. 'Stolberg-Stolberg: Friedrich Leopold', with lit. to date; P. Wittmann in CE 14 (1912), pp. 299 f., s.v.

stole. A liturgical vestment consisting of a long strip of coloured material. Its origin is doubtful. It was possibly first used in the manner of a scarf or a handkerchief in the E., where the deacon's stole is first mentioned in the 4th cent. In the W. it is first attested for Spain in the 6th cent. When it came to Rome in the 8th cent. it was worn under the *dalmatic, whereas in the *Ambrosian rite it has always been worn outside it. In the E., where it is called an *orarion, it is worn on top of the *sticharion. The priest's stole is not mentioned in the E. (where it is called an *epitrachelion) until the 8th cent., but was in general use in the W. from the 9th, when the priests of the Frankish Empire were bidden always to wear it as a sign of their calling, e.g. by the Synod of Mainz in 813. At Rome the stole was originally called 'orarium', the word stola being Gallican and introduced into Italy c. 11th cent.

In the W. Church the stole has become the distinctive vestment of the deacon, who wears it like a sash over the left shoulder, its ends being fastened together under the right arm. It is, however, also a regular vestment of the priest, who in the RC Church now always wears it round the neck, with its ends falling straight down in front, as does the bishop. Besides its use at Mass, it is also worn when touching the Blessed Sacrament, when administering the Sacraments, and very generally when preaching. Its colour depends on that of the other vestments and on the occasion, e.g. when hearing confessions the priest wears a purple stole. In the C of E the use of the stole was revived in the middle of the 19th cent. The 1969 Canons (B 8) make provision for either a stole or a scarf to be worn by the minister at the Occasional Offices and by the celebrant, gospeller, and epistoler at the Eucharist. See also BROAD STOLE.

Braun, LG, pp. 562–620. J. Braun, SJ, Handbuch der Paramentik (1912), pp. 154–64. Id. in CE 14 (1913), pp. 301 f., s.v.

Stone, Darwell (1859–1941), *Anglo-Catholic theologian. Educated at Merton College, Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1883, and after a short period of parish work at Ashbourne (1883–4) was priested and became vice-principal (1885) and later principal (1888) of Dorchester (Oxon) Missionary College. From 1909 to 1934 he was principal of Pusey House, Oxford. Throughout his adult life he was a strenuous upholder of High Church principles, defending the more traditional theology of R. W. *Church and H. P. Liddon against the teaching of the Lux Mundi School. In later life he became increasingly the leader of the Anglo-Catholic Movement in the C of E. Stone's writings were characterized by wide and accurate learning and fairness towards his opponents. Among the chief were Holy Baptism (1899), Outlines of Christian Dogma (1900), The Christian Church (1905), A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (1909), and The Reserved Sacrament (1917). From 1915 till his death he was editor of the projected *Lexicon of Patristic Greek.

F. L. Cross, Darwell Stone, Churchman and Counsellor (1943). Id. in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 842–3.

Stonyhurst College. One of the largest RC schools in England. Conducted by the *Jesuit Fathers, it traces its origin back to Elizabethan days, when a college for English boys was founded at *St-Omer (1592) and subsequently transferred to Bruges (1762) and Liège (1773). In 1794 it moved to Stonyhurst Hall in Lancashire. The standard of education is that of the great public schools. Stonyhurst Observatory has been made famous by many astronomers of European reputation. Though closed as a professional observatory in 1947, it was reopened for amateur use by the school and local community in 1980.

A. Hewitson, Stonyhurst College, Past and Present (Preston, 1870). J. Gerard, SJ, Stonyhurst College: Its Life Beyond the Seas, 1592–1794, and on English Soil, 1794–1894 (Centenary Record; Belfast, 1894). G. Gruggen, SJ, and J. Keating, SJ, Stonyhurst: Its Past History and Life in the Present (1901). H. Chadwick, SJ, St Omers to Stonyhurst (1962). A. Henderson, The Stone Phoenix: Stonyhurst College 1794–1894 (Worthing, 1986). T. E. Muir, Stonyhurst College 1593–1993 (1992). F. Irwin, SJ, in CE 14 (1912), pp. 309 f., s.v.

Storch, Nicolas (d. after 1536), *Anabaptist. A Saxon wool-weaver, he became leader of the *Zwickau Prophets (q.v.) during T. *Müntzer's sojourn in the city (1520–51). Later, he and his associates, having been compelled to leave Zwickau, arrived late in 1521 at *Wittenberg, where their biblical learning impressed both P. *Melanchthon and N. von *Amsdorf. Thereafter his movements are obscure, until his stay in W. Thuringia in 1523. After the defeat of the rebels in the *Peasants' War in central Germany, Storch emerged as the leader of an Anabaptist sect in N. Franconia. In 1536 he was once more rumoured to be in Zwickau. The date of his death is unknown. His teaching was essentially spiritualist, with a chiliastic expectation of the imminent purification of the Church. The influence upon Storch of *Hussite ideas from Bohemia has been refuted, but he may have embraced the libertine doctrines of the *Brethren of the Free Spirit.

S. Hoyer, 'Die Zwickauer Storchianer—Vorläufer der Täufer?', Jahrbuch für Regionalgeschichte, 13 (1986), pp. 60–78 (repr. in J.-G. Rott and S. L. Verheus (eds.), Anabaptistes et dissidents au XVIe siècle (Bibliotheca Dissidentium, scripta et studia, 3; Baden-Baden and Bouxwiller, 1987), pp. 65–83). S. C. Karant-Nunn, Zwickau in Transition, 1500–1547: The Reformation as an Agent of Change (Columbus, Oh., 1987), passim. A. Friesen, Thomas Muentzer, a Destroyer of the Godless (Berkeley, Calif., etc, 1990), pp. 73–99. See also bibl. to ZWICKAU PROPHETS.

stoup (OE stéap). A basin near the entrance of a church containing *holy water with which the faithful may sprinkle themselves. Holy-water fonts were perhaps originally derived from the fountains in the *atriums of the old basilicas, in which those who entered washed their hands and faces. They began to come into more general use with the custom of sprinkling the people with holy water at the Sunday Mass, which was introduced in the middle of the 9th cent. The stoups are of various forms, either let into the wall or standing on a socle, and often richly ornamented. In England they were usually of stone and built into a small niche, and many specimens are preserved in pre-Reformation churches. Their use is universal in RC churches and has been revived in the C of E in modern times.

F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), Appendix, 'The Holy Water Stoup', pp. 255–8. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 1; 1910), pp. 758–71, s.v. 'Bénitier'.

Stowe Missal. An early Mass-book of the Irish Church, formerly preserved at Stowe House in Bucks, and now in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy at Dublin (D. II. 3). In its present state it contains, besides extracts from St John's Gospel, an *Ordinary and *Canon of the Mass, propers for three special Masses, an office of Baptism and of the Visitation of the Sick, a treatise in Irish on the ceremonies of the Mass, and three Irish spells. The main interest lies in the Ordinary and Canon, in which various peculiarities in the text suggest that the book was originally made for a specific occasion, perhaps the dedication of a church in a largely pagan district of N. Ireland. The last name in the series of bishops enumerated in the *diptychs is 'Maileruen', who is usually identified with St Maelruain of Tallaght, who died in 792; the earliest part of the MS cannot have been written before this date. This nucleus was considerably revised and extended at a later date by a scribe called Moelcaich. In the 11th cent. the MS was encased in a cumdach, or case of precious metal.

The most convenient edn. of the text is still that of B. MacCarthy in Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, 27 (1886), pp. 135–268. It is also ed., with facsimiles, by G. F. Warner (HBS 31–2; 1906–15).

Strabo, Walafrid. See WALAFRID STRABO.

Stratford, John (*c.*1275/80–1348), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was a native of Stratford-upon-Avon. After being Archdeacon of *Lincoln and Dean of the Court of *Arches, he became Bp. of *Winchester in 1323, an appointment which temporarily lost him the favour of Edward II. In 1327 he drew up the six articles against Edward II and counselled him to abdicate. From 1330, the year in which he was first appointed Chancellor by Edward III, he was the chief adviser of the young King, and in 1333 became Abp. of Canterbury. The following years were mainly spent in political affairs, including repeated negotiations with France. When, in 1340, Edward returned from an unsuccessful expedition to Flanders, Stratford's enemies attributed to him the failure and the King brought a series of charges against him. Stratford, however, inspired by the example of St Thomas *Becket, stood firm and finally obtained recognition of the principle that peers should be tried only by their equals in full Parliament. Though soon reconciled to the King, he retired from political life and devoted himself to his ecclesiastical duties. He was a benefactor of Stratford-upon-Avon, where his devotion to Becket led him to establish a chantry in his honour in the parish church and to endow a college of priests.

W. D. Macray, 'Sermons for the Festivals of St. Thomas Becket, etc. probably by Archbishop Stratford', English Historical Review, 8 (1893), pp. 85–91, incl. extracts. G. Lapsley, 'Archbishop Stratford and the Parliamentary Crisis of 1341', ibid. 30

(1915), pp. 6–18, 193–215; N. M. Fryde, 'John Stratford, Bishop of Winchester, and the Crown, 1323–30', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 44 (1971), pp. 153–61. R. M. Haines, Archbishop John Stratford (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 76; Toronto [1986]). D. Hughes, A Study of Social and Constitutional Tendencies in the Early Years of Edward III (1915), passim. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1796–8.

Strauss, David Friedrich (1808–74), German theologian. A native of Ludwigsburg in Württemberg, in 1821 he entered the seminary at Blaubeuren, where he was a pupil of F. C. *Baur, and in 1825 went to the *Tübingen Stift. Here he came under the influence of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher (with whose doctrines he later lost sympathy) and of G. W. F. *Hegel's philosophy. After studying in Berlin, he was appointed in 1832 'Repetent' at the Stift and lecturer on Hegelian philosophy at Tübingen University. His famous Leben Jesu, in which he applied the 'myth theory' to the life of Christ, appeared in 1835. The book denied the historical foundation of all supernatural elements in the Gospels, which were assigned to an unintentionally creative legend (the 'myth'), developed between the death of Christ and the writing of the Gospels in the 2nd cent. The growth of primitive Christianity was to be understood in terms of the Hegelian dialectic. The work, which exercised a deep influence on subsequent Gospel criticism, roused a storm of indignation and led to Strauss's dismissal from his post at Tübingen. In 1839 an attempt to obtain for him a Professorship of Theology at Zurich came to nothing. His next work, Die christliche Glaubenslehre (2 vols., 1840–1), is a polemical history of Christian doctrine from the NT and the Fathers to its dissolution in Hegelian philosophy. Strauss now turned his attention to politics and, in the literary sphere, to biography. His writings of this period include Ulrich von Hutten (3 vols., 1858–60) and Hermann Samuel Reimarus (1862). In 1864 he published a slightly more positive version of his first work, Leben Jesu für das deutsche Volk, and in 1865 Der Christus des Glaubens und der Jesus der Geschichte (1865), an attack on Schleiermacher's attempt to combine the 'historical Jesus' with the 'Christ' of dogma. His last work, Der alte und der neue Glaube (1872; Eng. tr., The Old Faith and the New, 1873), is essentially a negation of Christianity in favour of scientific materialism and rejects human immortality.

Gesammelte Schriften (incomplete), ed. E. Zeller (12 vols., Bonn, 1876–8); Ausgewählte Briefe, ed. id. (ibid., 1895); Briefwechsel zwischen Strauss und Vischer, ed. A. Rapp (Veröffentlichungen der deutschen Schillergesellschaft, 18 and 19; 1952–3). The 1892 edn. of George Eliot's tr. of Strauss's Life of Jesus (orig. pub. 1846) was repr., with introd. by P. C. Hodgson (Philadelphia [1972]; London, 1973). Modern Eng. trs. of The Christ of Faith and the Jesus of History, with introd. by L. E. Keck (Philadelphia [1977]) and of the work which Strauss wrote In Defence of My Life of Jesus against the Hegelians, with introd. by M. C. Massey (Hamden, Conn., 1983; the orig. Ger. was pub. in 1837). E. Zeller, David Friedrich Strauss in seinem Leben und seinen Schriften (1874; Eng. tr., 1874); A. Hausrath, David Friedrich Strauss und die Theologie seiner Zeit (2 vols., 1876–8); T. Ziegler, David Friedrich Strauss (2 vols., Strasbourg, 1908). G. Müller, Identität und Immanenz: Zur Genese der Theologie von David Friedrich Strauss (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, 10; 1968); J. F. Sandberger, David Friedrich Strauss als theologischer Hegelianer (Studien zur Theologie und Geistesgeschichte des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, 5; 1972); H. Harris, David Friedrich Strauss and his Theology (Cambridge, 1973); F. W. Graf, Kritik und Pseudo-Spekulation: David Friedrich Strauss als Dogmatiker im Kontext der positionellen Theologie seiner Zeit (Münchener Monographien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, 7; 1982); M. C. Massey, Christ Unmasked: The Meaning of The Life of Jesus in German Politics (Chapel Hill, NC, and London [1983]). A. *Schweitzer, Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906), pp. 67–119 (Eng. tr., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910, pp. 68–120). T. Ziegler in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 76–92, s.v.

Street, George Edmund (1824–81), architect. Born at Woodford, now part of N. London, he was educated at Mitcham and Camberwell. He soon developed an enthusiastic interest in ecclesiastical architecture and obtained an appointment under G. G. *Scott. In 1849 he set up an office of his own and, after making the acquaintance of B. *Webb, became a member of the Ecclesiological Society (see CAMBRIDGE CAMDEN SOCIETY). His first successes were several churches in the West Country, esp. Cornwall. After some good work for W. J. *Butler at Wantage, where he resided from 1850 to 1852, he was appointed diocesan architect by S. *Wilberforce, Bp. of Oxford. He was also diocesan architect to *York, *Ripon, and *Winchester. He travelled extensively to study French, German, N. Italian, and Spanish churches, and in 1855 his design for the new cathedral at Lille only just missed acceptance. He was the architect of the Crimea Memorial Church at *Constantinople (1864–9). At home he became a leader in the Gothic revival, designing a number of churches and institutional buildings, among them Cuddesdon Theological College; St Peter's, Bournemouth; St James the Less, Westminster; St Philip and St James's, Oxford; St Margaret's Convent, East Grinstead; the nave of Bristol cathedral; St Mary Magdalene, Paddington; and Kingston, Dorset. In Some Account of Gothic Architecture in Spain (1865) he made students of architecture aware of the glories of the church of Santiago de *Compostela. The height of his career was the invitation to design the new Law Courts in the Strand, which he did not live to see completed.

A. E. Street (son), Memoir of George Edmund Street, RA, 1824 1881 (1888; with complete list of Street's works). Victorian Church Art. Exhibition Catalogue, Victoria and Albert Museum (1971), pp. 46–54. P. Waterhouse in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 42–5.

Streeter, Burnett Hillman (1874–1937), theologian and NT scholar. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, and was a Fellow from 1905 to 1933 and Provost from 1933 to 1937. From 1915 to 1934 he was also a canon of *Hereford Cathedral. His researches into the *Synoptic Problem, notably in Oxford Studies in the Synoptic Problem (ed. W. *Sanday, 1911), helped to establish among English Churchmen belief in the priority of St Mark's Gospel and the existence of '*Q'. In The Four Gospels (1924) he set out his conclusions on the Gospels as a whole and expounded his theses on the '*Caesarean text' and '*Proto-Luke'. In Reality (1926) he sought to correlate science with theology. His other publications included The Primitive Church (1929) and essays in Foundations* (1912), Concerning Prayer (1916), Immortality (1917), The Spirit (1919), and Adventure (1926), all of which he edited. In 1932 he delivered a course of *Bampton Lectures on The Buddha and the Christ. He was an active supporter of the *Student Christian Movement and of the *Modern Churchmen's Union, and also (at the end of his life) of the *Oxford Group movement.

P. [B.] Hinchliff, God and History: Aspects of British Theology 1875–1914 (Oxford, 1992), pp. 223–47. L. W. Grensted in DNB, 1931–40, pp. 836–8, s.v.

Strigel, Victorinus (1524–69), Reformation theologian. A native of Kaufbeuren in Swabia, in 1538 he went to school in Freiburg im Breisgau and from 1542 studied at *Wittenberg, where he was much influenced by P. *Melanchthon. After teaching for a time at Erfurt, in 1548 he became first professor and rector of the new school at Jena, founded by the followers of J. A. *Ernesti. Here he expounded, in opposition to the strict Lutheranism of M. *Flacius, more moderate and conciliatory doctrines and defended a form of *synergism. At Weimar in Aug. 1560 he found himself involved in a disputation in the presence of the court on the relation of the human will to divine grace in the work of conversion. The five heads of discussion—de libero arbitrio, de definitione legis et evangelii, *de Majorismo, *de Adiaphorismo, and de academica ἐποχή—indicate the points at which Strigel's teaching departed from the stricter Lutheranism, it being opposition to Strigel at Weimar that led Flacius to the formula that original sin is the substance of the natural man. In 1563 he was appointed professor at Leipzig, but four years later opposition to the *Calvinistic tendencies of his Eucharistic doctrine led to his withdrawal, and he became a professor at Heidelberg. He wrote extensively on philological and historical as well as on theological subjects, though many of his works were not published till after his death. They include a commentary on almost the whole Bible.

Collection of his Opuscula Quaedam Theologica, pub. Hanover, 1598. V. A. Nordman, Victorinus Strigelius als Geschichtslehrer (Helsingfors thesis, Åbo, 1930), with refs. to earlier lit. G. Kawerau in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 97–102, s.v.

Strossmayer Joseph Georg (1815–1905), Bp. of Djakovo in Croatia. Born in Osijek to a family of Austrian descent, he was ordained priest in 1838 and in 1847 became chaplain at the imperial court in Vienna. He was consecrated Bp. of Djakovo in 1850. Here he promoted the cause of pan-Slavism, worked for reunion with the Orthodox Church of *Serbia and *Russia (negotiating with V. *Solovyov), and spent large sums on education, regardless of the denominational allegiance of the recipients of his bounty. At the First *Vatican Council in 1869–70 he was one of the most outstanding opponents of the definition of Papal infallibility, and on 22 Mar. 1870 occasioned a 'scene' at the Council by his ill-timed defence of Protestantism. Until Oct. 1871 he continued to maintain relations with J. J. I. v. *Döllinger and J. H. *Reinkens, but on 26 Dec. 1872 finally published the Vatican decrees in his official diocesan journal.

F. Šišić (ed.), Korespondencija Rački-Strossmayer (Zagreb, 4 vols., 1928–31); id., Josi Juraj Strossmayer: Dokumenti i Korespondencija, 1 (all pub., ibid., 1933). I. Sivrić, OFM, Bishop J. G. Strossmayer: New Light on Vatican I (Chicago and Rome, 1975), with useful discussion of earlier works. K. Milutinović, Štrosmajer i Jugoslovensko Pitanje (Institut za Izučavanje Istorije Vojvodine, Monografije, 15; Novi Sad, 1976). [E.] C. Butler, OSB, The Vatican Council, 1 (1930), pp. 134 f., 189 f., 270–5, and 2 (1930), p. 175, and passim. R. Schutz in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2630–5, s.v.

Strype, John (1643–1737), English Church historian. He was a native of London, educated at St Paul's School and at Jesus College and Catharine Hall, Cambridge, and in 1669 was appointed curate and lecturer at Leyton, London. From 1689 to 1724 he was also lecturer at Hackney, and in 1711 he was given the sinecure of West Tarring, W. Sussex. He formed a very fine collection of Tudor documents, now in the Harleian and Lansdowne MSS of the British Library. His historical works deal chiefly with the Reformation period, the principal one being the Memorials of Thomas Cranmer (1694, ed. for the Eccl. Hist. Soc. in 3 vols., 1848–54). Among the others are Annals of the Reformation in England (4 vols., 1709–31), Life and Acts of Matthew Parker (1711), and Ecclesiastical Memorials (3 vols., 1721). The wealth of documentary material on which his works are based renders them invaluable to the student of the period, despite their bad arrangement, cumbersome style, and frequent errors. He also edited J. Stow's Survey of London (1720).

Modern repr. of historical and biog. works, 19 vols. bound in 25, Oxford, 1812–24; index to this edn. [by R. F. Laurence] (2 vols., ibid., 1828). W. D. J. Cargill Thompson, 'John Strype as a Source for the Study of Sixteenth-Century Church History', in D. Baker (ed.), The Materials, Sources and Methods of Ecclesiastical History (Studies in Church History, 11; 1975), pp. 237–47, repr. in Cargill Thompson, Studies in the Reformation: Luther to Hooker, ed. C. W. Dugmore (1980), pp. 192–201. R. O'Day, The Debate on the English Reformation (1986), pp. 42–53. G. Goodwin in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 67–9.

Stubbs, John (*c.*1543–90), also 'Stubbe', *Puritan writer. A native of Norfolk, he was drawn into Puritan circles while studying at Trinity College, Cambridge, and at Lincoln's Inn; his sister married T. *Cartwright in 1577. In 1574 Stubbs probably had some part in the publication of a parodic English version of Abp. M. *Parker's biographical study of the Archbishops of Canterbury, De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae (1572). In Aug. 1579 he published The Discovery of a Gaping Gulf whereinto England is like to be swallowed by another French marriage, an attack on *Elizabeth I's proposed marriage to the Catholic Francis, Duke of Anjou. Stubbs, his publisher, and his printer were all sentenced and the first two had their right hands cut off (3 Nov. 1579), though they both continued to protest their loyalty to the Queen. After 18 months' imprisonment in the Tower he was set free, and subsequently commissioned by Lord Burghley to write a reply (1587, now apparently lost) to W. *Allen's Defence of the English Catholics (1584). In 1589 he became MP for Great Yarmouth, but died during his patron Lord Willoughby's military expedition to France. His other writings include an English version of some of T. *Beza's Meditations on the Psalms (pub. 1582).

L. E. Berry (ed.), John Stubbs's Gaping Gulf with Letters and Other Relevant Documents (Folger Documents of Tudor and Stuart Civilization; Charlottesville, Va., 1968), with biog. introd. A. F. Scott Pearson, Thomas Cartwright and Elizabethan Puritanism (Cambridge, 1925), pp. 183 f. and 305 f.; A. G. R. Smith, Servant of the Cecils: The Life of Sir Michael Hickes, 1543 1612 (1977), pp. 92–8. Id. in P. W. Hasler (ed.), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1558–1603, 3 (1981), pp. 460 f., s.v. 'Stubbe, John'.

Stubbs, William (1825–1901), ecclesiastical historian and Bp. of *Oxford. He was born at Knaresborough, N.

Yorks, educated at Ripon Grammar School and through C. T. *Longley's influence nominated a servitor at *Christ Church, Oxford. In 1848 he was elected a Fellow of Trinity College. While rector of Navestock (1850–66) he laid the basis of his immense historical learning. From 1866 to 1884 he was Regius professor of modern history at Oxford, and from 1879 to 1884 also a Canon of *St Paul's. Later he became Bp. of *Chester (1884–9) and of Oxford (1889–1901).

Stubbs was the greatest British historian of his time. He contributed 19 volumes to the Rolls Series of Chronicles and Memorials, among them the Gesta Regum of *William of Malmesbury (1867), the Gesta Regis Henrici II (1867), Roger Hoveden's Chronica (4 vols., 1868–71), the Memorials of St Dunstan (1874), and the Historical Works of Gervase of Canterbury (1879–80). His Constitutional History of England (3 vols., 1873–8), which takes its subject down to 1485, and the companion vol. of Select Charters (1870) became classics. His other works included Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum (1858, 2nd edn., 1897; chronological lists of the English Bishops) and Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents relating to Great Britain and Ireland (3 vols., 1869–73, with A. W. Haddan). A collection of his ordination addresses was published posthumously in 1901.

W. H. *Hutton (ed.), Letters of William Stubbs, Bishop of Oxford (1904). J. G. Edwards, William Stubbs (Historical Association Pamphlet G. 22; 1952), with further refs. H. G. Richardson and G. O. Sayles, The Governance of Mediaeval England from the Conquest to Magna Carta (Edinburgh, 1963), pp. 1–21 ('William Stubbs: The Man and the Historian'). T. F. Tout in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 444–51.

Studd, Charles Thomas (1862–1931), missionary. He was the son of a retired planter, Edward Studd, who was converted in 1877 at a mission of D. L. *Moody and I. D. Sankey. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was famed for his cricketing prowess. Edward Studd's conversion influenced his three sons and 'C. T.' (as he came to be called) volunteered for missionary work in China. As one of the 'Cambridge Seven' his intentions aroused much interest and enthusiasm, and laid the seeds of the Student Volunteer Movement. Sailing for China under the *China Inland Mission in 1885, he followed the early practice of that Mission by living in Chinese fashion. Ill-health compelled him to return in 1894. In 1900 he sailed for India, where he was the pastor of an undenominational Church at Ootacamund until he was again forced to return through sickness. Stirred by the need of missionary pioneer work in Central Africa, he sailed, contrary to medical advice, for the heart of Africa in 1910, and continued to work there till his death. On being joined by recruits in 1912, he founded the 'Heart of Africa Mission'. As this work developed, 'C. T.' conceived the idea of a 'World Evangelization Crusade' for the occupation by missionaries of the unevangelized areas of the world; the Crusade later extended its activities to S. America and elsewhere.

Lives by T. B. Walters (London, 1930), N. P. Grubb (ibid., 1933), and E. Buxton [daughter] (ibid., 1968). E. Vincent, C. T. Studd and Priscilla (Bromley, Kent, 1988). N. [P.] Grubb, After C. T. Studd (1939).

Studdert Kennedy, Geoffrey Anketell (1883–1929), Anglican priest. Of Irish descent, he was educated at Leeds Grammar School, Trinity College, Dublin, and Ripon Clergy College, and in 1908 was ordained deacon. After holding curacies at Rugby and Leeds, he became vicar of St Paul's, *Worcester (1914–21), and Chaplain to the Forces (1916–19). His vivid faith, the fruit of a deep sacramentalism, was reflected in a warmth of character which endeared him to the men in the trenches (where he won the affectionate title of 'Woodbine Willie', from a brand of cigarettes he distributed) and made him the best-known padre in the First World War (1914–18). The unconventionality of his views (e.g. his belief in God's passibility and his dissatisfaction with certain elements in the traditional Christian moral code), which helped to gain him a wide hearing, were the expression of a solid theology. In 1922 he was appointed rector of St Edmund, King and Martyr, Lombard Street. He continued his mission preaching, constantly travelling about and working in association with the *Industrial Christian Fellowship. His books, popular in form, include Rough Rhymes (1918), The Hardest Part (1918), The Wicket Gate (1923), and The Word and the Work (1925).

J. K. Mozley (ed.), G. A. Studdert Kennedy. By his friends (1929); W. Purcell, Woodbine Willie: An Anglican Incident. Being some account of the life and times of Geoffrey Anketell Studdert Kennedy, poet, prophet, seeker after truth, 1883–1929 (1962).

Student Christian Movement (SCM). The British section of a world-wide fellowship of students desiring 'to understand the Christian faith and live the Christian life'. It developed out of several independent movements at Cambridge and elsewhere in the later years of the 19th cent. By study-circles, conferences, and camps, it sought to bring Christian students of all denominations together, to instruct them in the Christian faith and to enable them to witness to the outside world. From the first an integral part of its work was the 'Student Volunteer Missionary Union', which aimed at fostering missionary work abroad, and it took its full share in the international association known as the World Student Christian Federation. From its activity in promoting the issue of literature addressed to students, originally publications of small cost and of practical purpose, there developed a religious publishing house (SCM Press, Ltd., London). As a body drawing membership from all Christian communions (since the Second *Vatican Council incl. the RC) the Movement cultivated an outlook closely akin to that of the *Ecumenical Movement, many of whose leaders had earlier been associated with the SCM. Its slow decline began after the Second World War, when it failed to find a real role in the new universities and allied itself with ephemeral radical movements. The SCM Press, on the other hand, developed into a major international publisher and in 1989 became independent of the SCM. By the 1990s the SCM had virtually disappeared.

T. Tatlow, The Story of the Student Christian Movement of Great Britain and Ireland (1933). E. Fenn, Learning Wisdom: Fifty Years of the Student Christian Movement (1939). R. Rouse, The World's Student Christian Federation: A History of the First Thirty Years [i.e. 1895–1924] (1948). D. L. Edwards, Movements into Tomorrow: A Sketch of the British SCM (1960).

Studios. The famous monastery of *Constantinople, dedicated to St *John the Baptist. It stood in the west of the city, not far from the Golden Horn. Acc. to tradition founded in 463 by the former Roman consul, Studios, its monks followed the rule of the '*Acoemetae', who organized their psalmody so as to ensure its perpetual recitation by part of the community. They became famous as zealous upholders of orthodoxy, and defended the decrees of *Chalcedon against the Monophysite patriarch, *Acacius (484–519). Driven from their monastery by the persecution of Constantine Copronymus (Emp. 741–75), only a few of them returned after his death.

A new period began for Studios under St *Theodore, who became its abbot in 799. He introduced a new rule, based on that of St *Basil, in which manual work played a far greater part than hitherto, and a strict discipline, esp. in regard to enclosure, poverty, and the exclusion of women from the monastery, was introduced. From his time Studios became the centre and model of E. monasticism and the monks of Mount *Athos, e.g., formed their life on its basis. It became esp. famous for its school of copyists and artists, and very many of its ancient hymns are still in use in the Greek Church. During the *Iconoclastic Controversy it supplied the most ardent defenders of images. Destroyed by the *Crusaders in 1204, the monastery was rebuilt in 1290, but again severely damaged by the Turks in 1453. The church, once a mosque, is now in ruins. The religious life of Studios, however, was revived by A. Szeptyckij, metropolitan of Lvov (in the Ukraine), who founded an organization of *Uniat monks acc. to the Rule of St Theodore of Studios in 1906.

Extracts from the Rule ('Constitutiones Studianae') from Vat. gr. 2029 in J. P. Migne, PG 99. 1703–20. E. Marin, De Studio Constantinopolitano (Paris, 1897). On the form of the name, H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Studion-Studios', Anal. Boll. 52 (1934), pp. 64 f. J. Leroy, OSB, 'La vie quotidienne du moine studite', Irénikon, 27 (1954), pp. 21–50. Oriente Cattolico: Cenni storici e statistiche, issued by the Sacra Congregazione per le Chiese Orientali (4th edn., Vatican City, 1974), pp. 523–7. E. Candal, SJ, in EC 11 (1953), cols. 1441 f., s.v. 'Studiti'.

studium generale. A name widely current from the middle of the 13th cent. for higher educational establishments of more than purely local significance, notably (1) universities attracting students from different regions and, usually, different countries and (2) international colleges run by religious orders, such as the *Dominicans, along university lines and often in association with universities. With reference to (1) the term acquired ever greater legal precision from the late 13th cent. onwards and studia generalia were thenceforth normally characterised by their right to confer the licentia ubique docendi ('licence to teach anywhere') on the authority of the pope or the emperor.

O. Weijers, Terminologie des Universités au XIIIe siècle (Rome, 1987), pp. 34–45, with full refs.

Stundists (Russ. štundisty; cf. Ger. Stunde, 'devotional hour'). Certain Russian evangelical sects which emerged in the Ukraine *c.*1858–62, under the direct influence of *Lutheran and *Reformed pastors and *Mennonite preachers. In the last quarter of the 19th cent. the Stundists became increasingly Baptist in orientation, and their present-day descendants form part of the 'All Union Council of Evangelical Christians and Baptists', established in Russia in 1944.

W. Gutsche, Westliche Quellen des russischen Stundismus (Cassel, 1956).

Sturm, Johannes (1507–89), Protestant Reformer and educationalist. Educated at Liège at the School of the *Brethren of the Common Life and at Louvain University, he joined himself to the French humanists and lectured on the classics at *Paris from 1530 to 1536. Having become a Protestant under M. *Bucer's influence, he went to Strasbourg in 1537, where he took an active part in furthering the Reformation. His interest in education did much to make the city one of the foremost educational centres of Europe, and in 1538 a gymnasium on a humanistic model devised by Sturm was established with himself as rector. In 1566 an academy followed. In 1581 Sturm was expelled from Strasbourg for his liberalism and inter-confessional sympathies by the strict *Lutherans, but eventually allowed to return. His writings included a Life of the German humanist, B. *Rhenanus.

W. Sohm, Die Schule Johannes Sturms und die Kirche Strassburgs in ihren gegenseitigen Verhältnis (Historische Bibliothek, 27; 1912). J. Rott, 'Le recteur strasbourgeois Jean Sturm et les Protestants français', Actes du Colloque L'Amiral de Coligny et son temps (Paris, 24–28 octobre 1972) (1974), pp. 407–425; id., 'Bibliographie des œuvres imprimées du recteur strasbourgeois Jean Sturm (1507–1589)', Actes du 95e Congrès National des Sociétés Savantes (Reims, 1970). Section de philologie et d'histoire jusqu'à 1610, 1 (1975), pp. 318–404; both repr. in id., Investigationes Historicae, ed. M. de Kroon and M. Lienhard, 2 (Strasbourg, 1986), pp. 43–61 and 471–559. A. Schindling, Humanistische Hochschule und freie Reichsstadt (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 77; Wiesbaden, 1977), passim. C. Schmidt and J. Ficker in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 109–13. Schottenloher, 2 (1935), pp. 315 f. (nos. 20926–52).

Stylite (Gk. στῦλος, 'pillar'). In the early Church a solitary who lived on the top of a pillar. Their pillars would vary in height, and the platforms, sometimes made more habitable by a small hut, were generally provided with a parapet against which the Stylite would lean for his scanty sleep. Food was usually supplied by disciples or admirers. Apart from prayer Stylites gave much time to spiritual instruction, to reconciling enemies, and often to theological controversies. They considered St *Simeon Stylites (q.v.) their founder. There are many instances of such ascetics from the 5th to the 10th cents., and isolated examples down to modern times. They flourished esp. in Syria, Mesopotamia, Egypt, and Greece.

H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Saints stylites (Subsidia Hagiographica, 14; 1923), with general bibl. in note to pp. cxvii f. B. Kötting, Peregrinatio Religiosa (Münster, 1950), pp. 113–31. I. Peña, OFM, and others, Les Stylites Syriens (Publications du 'Studium Biblicum Franciscanum', Collectio Minor, 16; Milan [1975]). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 1697–718, s.v.; T. Špidlík, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1267–75, s.v.

Suárez, Francisco (1548–1617), Spanish *Jesuit theologian. From 1564 to 1570 he studied philosophy and theology at Salamanca, and then taught at several Spanish colleges of his order. From 1580 to 1585 he lectured on the 'Summa Theologiae' of St *Thomas Aquinas at the Roman College, and from 1585 to 1593 on the Incarnation and the Sacraments at the Jesuit College at Alcalá. Here he wrote his first work, De Verbo Incarnato (1590), a commentary on the first 26 questions of the third part of the

'Summa', noted esp. for its attempt to reconcile the Thomist view of the Redemption as the final cause of the Incarnation with that of *Duns Scotus, who held the manifestation of the perfection of the Divine work of creation to be its final cause, so that even without the Fall the Incarnation would have taken place. De Mysteriis Vitae Christi followed in 1592, and in 1597 appeared his Disputationes Metaphysicae, one of the principal textbooks on the subject, in which he combined the teaching of *Aristotle with that of St Thomas. The work, which exercised a considerable influence also on Protestant contemporary philosophers, is important esp. for its new method, as it no longer closely follows Aristotle in the sequence of thought but gives an independent systematic treatment adapted to the needs of the modern Christian thinker. In 1597 *Philip II called Suárez to the University of Coimbra, where he lectured until 1616. In 1599 he published his Varia Opuscula Theologica, occasioned by the controversy on grace (de Auxiliis*) between the Jesuits and *Dominicans. In it, as in his De vera intelligentia auxilii efficacis of 1605 (pub. 1655), he proposed in the system called *Congruism a solution of the problem of the relation between human freedom and Divine grace on *Molinist lines. Acc. to Suárez, God does not, as the Thomists teach, cause man's free acts, but, foreseeing them by His special knowledge called '*scientia media', brings about the salvation of the elect by giving them those graces ('gratia congrua') of which he foresees that they will make good use in certain given circumstances. The teaching provoked much opposition but became the prevalent doctrine among non-Thomist RC theologians. In 1608–9 he published De Virtute et Statu Religionis, a fundamental work on the religious state with special reference to the Society of Jesus, and in 1612 De Legibus (which became of paramount importance for jurists and legislators in Continental Europe and in America) in the form of a Commentary on the 19 relevant questions of the 'Summa', in which he expounded the principles of natural and international law. It was followed, in 1613, by the Defensio Fidei, directed against the C of E, which was burned in London and banned by the Parlement of Paris for teaching doctrines prejudicial to the power of the state. His last great works on grace, published posthumously in three parts as De necessitate gratiae (1619), De gratia habituali (1619), and De gratia actuali (1651), elaborated and systematized the teaching given in his earlier writings.

The salient points in which Suárez departs from Thomism are regarded by some scholars as forming a system of his own, called 'Suárezianism'. Among its chief features are the conception of the individual as the object of direct Divine and human intellectual cognition, the pure potentiality of matter, and the conceptual, not real, distinction in created beings of essence and existence. Suárez is usually considered the greatest theologian of the Society of Jesus and was called by *Paul V 'Doctor eximius et pius'.

Collected edn. of his Opera, 23 vols., Venice, 1740–51; new edn. by D. M. André, 28 vols., Paris, 1856–78. Photographic reprods. from orig. edns. of Selections from Three Works: De Legibus ac Deo Legislatore, 1612; Defensio Fidei Catholicae et Apostolicae adversus Anglicanae Sectae Errores, 1613; De Triplici Virtute Theologica, Fide, Spe, et Charitate, 1621, with list of errata and Eng. tr. by G. L. Williams, A. Brown, J. Waldron, and H. Davis, SJ, and introd. by J. B. Scott (2 vols., Classics of International Law, 20; 1944). Modern edns., with Sp. tr., of his Disputaciones metafísicas, by S. Rabade Romeo and others (7 vols., Madrid, 1960–6), of Defensio Fidei by E. Elorduy and L. Pereña (ibid., 1965), and of De Legibus by L. Pereña and others (Corpus Hispanorum de Pace, 11–17, 21–2, etc.; 1971 ff.). Good general modern study by R. de Scorraille, SJ, François Suarez de la Compagnie de Jésus d'après ses lettres, ses autres écrits inédits et un grand nombre de documents nouveaux (2 vols. [1912–13]). J. H. Fichter, Man of Spain: Francis Suarez (New York, 1940). C. Larrainzar, Una introducción a Francisco Suárez (Pamplona, 1980). The vast number of more specialized studies, of which there is an extensive list in Polgár, cited below, incl. L. Mahieu, François Suarez: Sa philosophie et les rapports qu'elle a avec sa théologie (1921); P. Dumont, SJ, Liberté humaine et concours divin d'après Suarez (1936), and J. J. O'Brien, Reparation for Sin: A Study of the Doctrine of Francis Suarez (Mundelein, Ill., 1960). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain: A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963). Sommervogel, 7 (1896), cols. 1661–87, s.v.; P. Múgica, SJ, Bibliografía Suareciana, con una introducción sobre el estado actual de los estudios suarecianos by E. Elorduy, SJ (Granada, 1948); Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 268–329. P. Monnot, SJ, P. Dumont, SJ, and R. Brouillard, SJ, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2638–728, s.v.

subcintorium. An ecclesiastical vestment resembling the *maniple. In the Middle Ages it was worn by bishops (a usage which persisted at Milan until the 16th cent.) and occasionally by priests, but its use came to be restricted to the Pope and has now been dropped entirely. It was worn on the left side, attached to the *girdle, when celebrating a solemn pontifical Mass; its purpose was to secure the *stole to the girdle.

Braun, LG, pp. 117–24.

subdeacon. In the RC Church, formerly a person in the lowest of the three *Major Orders. The subdiaconate was not thought to be instituted by Christ but by the Church, and the conferring of the order was thus regarded as a *sacramental rather than a true *Sacrament. The earliest mention of a 'subdeacon' is in a letter of Pope *Cornelius to Fabius of Antioch (251), while the correspondence of St *Cyprian attests the existence of subdeacons in Africa at the same time. Until the 13th cent. the subdiaconate was regarded as a *minor, not a major, order.

A subdeacon was one of the three sacred ministers at *High Mass, when his functions were to prepare the bread and wine and the vessels, to chant the Epistle, to present the chalice and paten at the offertory and to remove the vessels from the altar after the communion. In recent times, however, the part of the subdeacon at High Mass was generally taken by a person in deacon's or priest's orders. In the RC Church, until the office was suppressed in 1972, candidates had to be over 21 years of age and were bound to *celibacy and the recitation of the Divine *Office. In the E. Church the subdiaconate still exists as a minor order. It was given up in the C of E with the other minor orders in the 16th cent., though in recent times proposals have occasionally been made to restore it. It has been restored in certain Anglican missionary dioceses.

H. Reuter, Das Subdiakonat: Dessen historische Entwicklung und liturgisch-kanonistische Bedeutung (1890). F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (RQ, Supplementheft, 7; 1897), pp. 18–48. A. Michel in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2459–66, s.v. 'Sous-diacre'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (1953), cols. 1619–26, s.v.

'Sous-diacre', with refs. See also works cited under ORDERS AND ORDINATION.

Subiaco. (Lat. Sublacum). A town some 40 miles E. of Rome, famous as the site of the grotto where St *Benedict settled on his retirement from the world. Before his death St Benedict founded 12 separate monasteries in the vicinity, two of which exist today. See also SUBIACO CONGREGATION.

P. Egidi, G. Giovannoni, F. Hermanin, and V. Federici, I monasteri di Subiaco (2 vols., 1904). B. Cignitti and L. Caronti, L'Abbazia nullius Sublacense: Le origini. La commenda [1956]. P. Carosi, Il primo monastero benedettino (Studia Anselmiana, 39; 1956). C. Mirzio, OSB, Cronaca Sublacense (ed. L. Allodi, OSB, Rome, 1885). 'Chronicon Sublacense, sive Catalogus Abbatum Monasterii Sublacensis ab Anno circiter DXCV usque ad MCCCXC', by an anonymous monk, ed. L. A. *Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, 24 (Milan, 1738), pp. 927–66; new edn. by R. Morghen in G. Carducci, V. Fiorini, and P. Fedele's edn. of Muratori, 24, pt. 6; Bologna, 1927. L. Allodi and G. Levi (eds.), Il Regesto Sublacense del secolo XI (Biblioteca della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, 1885). J. F. Angerer, O. Praem. (ed.), Caeremoniae Sublacences (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 11; 2 pts., Siegburg, 1985–7). B. Trifone, OSB (ed.), 'Documenti Sublacensi', Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, 31 (1908), pp. 101–20. L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 3099 f., s.v. S. Andreotta, OSB, in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 756 f., s.v.

Subiaco Congregation. A monastic *Congregation of *Benedictine monks formerly known as the Cassinese Congregation of the Primitive Observance. It originated in 1851 within the *Cassinese Congregation, led by Abbot Peter Casaretto, and became a separate Congregation in 1872. It was officially renamed the Subiaco Congregation in 1967. It is international in character, with the majority of its monasteries situated in W. Europe (esp. France, Italy, Spain, Belgium); its English province has abbeys in Ramsgate in Kent, Prinknash in Glos., and Pluscarden in Scotland.

I Monasteri Italiani della Congregazione Sublacence (1843–1972) (Parma, 1972). A series of arts. in Studia Monastica, 14 (Montserrat, 1972), pp. 347–525, a special number to mark the centenary of the congregation. In Eng., P. Ievers, OSB, 'The Cassinese Congregation of the Primitive Observance', Pax, 28 (1939), pp. 225–9. G. Lunardi, OSB, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1503–7, s.v. 'Congregazione Benedettina Sublacense'.

subintroductae (Gk. συνείσακται). In the early Church, women who lived associated with men in spiritual marriage; in the 4th cent. they were also called agapetae (ἀγαπηταί, 'beloved'). *Hermas seems to be familiar with the practice, and later subintroductae existed at *Antioch under *Paul of Samosata and at *Constantinople under St *Chrysostom. The practice, with its obvious dangers, was opposed by St *Cyprian, St Chrysostom, and others, and forbidden by the canons of the Councils of *Elvira (can. 27), *Ancyra (can. 19), and *Nicaea (can. 3; AD 325). There is a certain analogy with the practice centuries later in the *double monasteries of monks and nuns. *Philo attests the existence of a similar institution among the *Therapeutae (q.v.).

H. Achelis, Virgines Subintroductae: Ein Beitrag zu 1 Kor. 7 (1902). H. Koch, Virgines Christi (TU 31, Heft 2; 1907, pp. 59–112). P. de Labriolle, 'Le "Mariage spirituel" dans l'antiquité chrétienne', Revue historique, 137 (1921), pp. 204–25. A. Guillaumont, 'Le Nom des "Agapètes"', VC 23 (1969), pp. 30–7. H. Achelis in HERE 1 (1908), pp. 177–80, s.v. 'Agapetæ'; E. Magnin in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 311–15, s.v. 'Agapètes'.

Sublapsarianism. Also known as 'Infra-' or 'Postlapsarianism'. In contrast to *Supralapsarianism (q.v.), the form of the *Calvinistic doctrine of *predestination which holds that it was only after the *Fall that God decreed the election or non-election of individual men to salvation. This less rigid teaching on predestination has been commonly current among Calvinists, esp. since the Synod of *Dort (1618).

submersion (also 'total immersion' or, loosely, 'immersion'). The form of *Baptism in which the water completely covers the candidate's body. Though *immersion is now also common, submersion is practised in the Orthodox and several of the other E. Churches, as well as in the *Ambrosian rite. It is one of the methods provided in the 1969 RC rite for the Baptism of Infants. On the basis of Rom. 6: 3–11 it has been generally supposed to have been the custom of the early Church, but this view has been challenged by C. F. Rogers from the evidence of primitive pictorial representations and measurements of surviving early baptismal fonts.

C. F. Rogers, 'Baptism and Christian Archaeology', Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica: Essays chiefly in Biblical and Patristic Criticism by Members of the University of Oxford, 5 (1903), pp. 239–361; id., 'Baptism by Affusion in the Early Church', JTS 6 (1905), pp. 107–10, with refs. See also bibl. to BAPTISM.

Submission of the Clergy. The act whereby the English *Convocations surrendered, on 15 May 1532, to the demands made by *Henry VIII. The clergy promised to make no new *canon without royal licence, and to submit the existing canons to a committee of 32, half lay and half clerical and all to be chosen by the King, for revision. Its effect was to make the King supreme in all ecclesiastical causes. Less than two years later (Jan. 1534), the submission of the clergy was incorporated into the Submission of the Clergy Act 1533, which coupled it with the restraint of appeals to Rome. See also REFORMATIO LEGUM ECCLESIASTICARUM and JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Text in Gee and Hardy, pp. 176–8 (no. 48); also repr. in Bettenson, pp. 305 f.

subordinationism. Teaching about the Godhead which regards either the Son as subordinate to the Father or the Holy Spirit as subordinate to both. It is a characteristic tendency in much Christian teaching of the first three centuries, and is a marked feature of such otherwise orthodox Fathers as St *Justin and St *Irenaeus. Various reasons may be given for this tendency: the stress on the absolute unity and transcendence of God the Father, which is common to all forms of theology using the existing categories of Greek thought; the fear of compromising monotheism; and the implications of one strand of biblical teaching, represented by such texts as Jn. 14: 28. By the standards of orthodoxy established in the 4th cent., such a position came to be regarded as clearly heretical in its denial of the co-equality of the Three Persons of the Trinity. The issue was most explicitly dealt with in the conflict with *Arius and his followers, who held that the Son was God not by nature but by grace and was created by the Father, though in a creation outside time. In relation to the Holy Spirit the issue came to the fore later in the 4th cent., with the teaching of the *Pneumatomachi (q.v.). Subordinationism was condemned by the Council of *Constantinople in 381.

W. Marcus, Der Subordinatianismus (Munich, 1963), with bibl.

substance (Lat. substantia). (1) The word has played a continuous and important part in philosophy since *Aristotle, who in the Categories distinguished between first and second substances (πρώτη οὐσία, δευτέρα οὐσία). The former was the individual, which can neither exist in another nor be predicated of another; the latter was the universal, which does not as such exist in another, though it may be predicated of another. These distinctions were taken over by the *Scholastic philosophers. In general substantia was the permanent, underlying reality as contrasted with its changing and perceptible accidents. In modern times R. *Descartes defined substance as that which needed nothing else for its existence; there were two kinds of substances—absolute substance, i.e. God, and created substances (unextended mind and extended matter). For B. *Spinoza substance was whatever needed nothing else for its conception. The sole substance was the eternal and infinite substance, God, whose essence implied His existence. For G. W. *Leibniz the monads were substances. In England J. *Locke conceived of substance as an unknowable underlying stuff in which qualities inhere: a view ridiculed by G. *Berkeley in the case of matter (though he retained the notion of spiritual substance). D. *Hume held the Scholastic notion of substance to be wholly dispensable, a view largely shared by later empiricists. In modern German *Existentialist philosophy, e.g. by M. *Heidegger, substance (or 'being') is conceived from the viewpoint of an existing individual and thus understood as a form of presence, bounded by death and threatened by finitude, which threat is experienced as anxiety (Angst).

(2) In the Christian doctrine of the Godhead, the word is used to express the underlying Being, by which all Three Persons are One. The earliest theologian to make extensive use of the word substantia in this connection was *Tertullian; but the common view that he was largely influenced by its legal meaning ('a piece of property') is exaggerated. At first, besides οὐσία, the Greek-speaking Church widely used ὑπόστασις in a closely similar sense, a usage favoured by the apparent etymological equivalence of ὑπο-στασις and sub-stantia; and this identity was accepted at *Nicaea (325) and is common in *Athanasius. But under the influence of the *Arian controversy, and esp. the *Cappadocian Fathers, οὐσία and ὑπόστασις became generally distinguished, οὐσία being confined to the meaning 'substance', whereas ὑπόστασις became the accepted equivalent of the Latin persona. See also HOMOOUSION.

(3) In the Middle Ages the word filled an important place in the theology of the *Eucharist, where the substance of the Eucharistic species was contrasted with their '*accidents' (q.v.). For the history of the doctrine see TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

Subunists. The party in Bohemia in the 15th cent. which defended against the *Utraquists the practice of communion in one kind (sub una specie).

Suburbicarian Dioceses (Lat. suburbium, 'suburb'). The seven dioceses in the immediate vicinity of Rome, namely Albano, Frascati, Ostia, Palestrina, Porto and Santa Rufina (united in 1120), Sabina and Poggio Mirteto (divided in 1841, reunited in 1925), and Velletri. The six '*Cardinal Bishops' take their episcopal titles from these sees, but, since 1962, they no longer have pastoral charge of them. The Dean and Sub-Dean of the College of Cardinals are elected by them from their own number. The Suburbicarian Dioceses are very small, but very ancient. Their bishops had the right of taking part in the election of the Pope probably as early as the 11th century.

P. F. Kehr, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum: Italia Pontificia sive Repertorium Privilegiorum et Litterarum a Romanis Pontificibus ante Annum MCLXXXXVIII Italiae Ecclesiis, Monasteriis, Civitatibus Singulisque Personis Concessorum, 2 (Berlin, 1907), pp. 14–74. G. Phillips, Kirchenrecht, 4 (1864), pp. 145–220. U. Benigni in CE 14 (1912), pp. 324 f., s.v.; F. C. Bouuaert in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 1267–71, s.v. 'Diocèses suburbicaires'. See also works cited under CARDINAL.

succentor. In *cathedral churches of the 'Old Foundation', the title usually given to the deputy of the *precentor. He is generally a *minor canon. At *York there are two succentors, the one subject to the canons and the other the principal member of the corporation of vicars-choral. At *Lichfield the holder of the office is called the 'subchanter'.

succession, apostolic. See APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

Sudan, Christianity in. The ancient Church of *Nubia, in Northern Sudan, died out in the 16th cent. Christianity returned to the Upper Nile in the 19th. From 1846, when a *Vicariate Apostolic of Central Africa was created by the *Propaganda Fide, until the Mahdist rising in 1881, RC missionaries struggled to establish the Church in Khartoum and up the Nile, succeeding in reaching as far south as Gondokoro. Two outstanding missionaries were the Austrian Ignaz Knoblecher (1819–58), who held the mission together for its first ten years in highly adverse circumstances, and D. *Comboni, who first reached the Sudan in 1857. The author of a remarkable work, Piano per la rigenerazione dell'Africa (1864), in 1867 he established a training institute in Verona out of which the *Verona Fathers Mission developed. In 1881, when Muhammad Ahmad ibn Abdullah declared himself to be the Mahdi, the Restorer of Justice promised by the Prophet Muhammad, work came to an abrupt end. Missions were overrun and missionaries killed or imprisoned.

Evangelism began again when an Anglo-Egyptian condominium over Sudan was established in 1899. No direct evangelism was permitted in the mainly Muslim North, though Christian schools and hospitals were established in Khartoum, but the Verona Fathers returned to their mission in the South and were joined by the *CMS and American *Presbyterian Mission. In 1920 the interdenominational Sudan Interior Mission started educational work in the Nuba Mountains, and the Sudan United Mission and the Africa Inland Mission (both interdenominational) each opened small missions. Under the Condominium Government's policy of developing the South separately from the North, English, not Arabic, was the language of education, and education remained entirely in the hands of missionaries. The first ordination of Sudanese in the (Anglican) Episcopal Church took place only in 1941 when Daniel Deng Atong and Andereya Apaya were made deacons. In 1955 the former became Sudan's first indigenous bishop. By 1941 there were some 18,600 members of the Episcopal Church; by 1950 the RCs numbered 100,000. The other Churches were numerically smaller.

In 1946 government policy changed: the South was to be more closely integrated with the Muslim North in preparation for independence, which came ten years later. The South was severely disadvantaged by lack of development and trust quickly broke down, with the Sudan gradually drifting into civil war. In 1957 all Church schools were nationalized. In 1962 an attempt was made to abolish Sunday as the day of rest in the South. Missionaries were increasingly harassed and restricted, and in 1964 all those still remaining were expelled. By this time the southern population was thought to be about 10 per cent Christian. Most of the southern politicians and leaders had been educated in mission schools, and the Christian presence was therefore disproportionately important. Although the churches were deprived of clergy outside the main government controlled towns, Church membership grew apace as southerners began to find a Christian identity over against the Muslim North.

The *World Council of Churches and the All Africa Conferences of Churches played a crucial role in the peace process which resulted in the 1972 Addis Ababa Agreement. In the subsequent years of reconstruction Church membership continued to grow and its leadership was almost entirely indigenized, both the RC and the Episcopal Church appointing archbishops. The Addis Ababa Agreement, however, was steadily abandoned by the central government, and in 1985 hostilities were resumed. By the end of the 1980s southern fear of Sharia Law and Muslim fundamentalist plans for Sudan to be united as a Muslim state had become central factors in the conflict. In the 1990s civil war and famine have rendered the position of the Christians desperate.

W. B. Anderson, Ambassadors by the Nile: The Church in North-East Africa (1963; brief). E. Pezzi, La Missione Cattolica nel Sudan dall'Inizio fino alla Ripresa dopo la Rivoluzione Mahdista (Verona, 1972). F. Morlang, Missione in Africa Centrale: Diario 1855–1856, tr. with notes by O. Huber and V. Dellagiacomo (Museum Combonianum, 28; Bologna, 1973). R. O. Collins, Land Beyond the Rivers: The Southern Sudan 1898–1918 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1971), pp. 281–323. R. Hill, 'Government and Christian Missions in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, 1899–1914', Middle Eastern Studies, 1 (1964–5), pp. 113–34; V. M. Battle, 'The American Mission and Educational Development in Southern Sudan, 1900–1929', in id. and C. H. Lyons (eds.), Essays in the History of African Education (New York, 1970), pp. 63–83; L. P. and N. Sanderson, Education, Religion & Politics in Southern Sudan 1899–1964 (1981). E. Stock, The History of the Church Missionary Society, 3 (1899), pp. 746–50; 4 (1916), pp. 105–14; G. Hewitt, The Problems of Success: A History of the Church Missionary Society 1910–1942, 1 (1971), pp. 319–49. On the Episcopal Church, also O. C. Allison, A Pilgrim Church's Progress (1966); id., Through Fire and Water (1976). The 'Memorandum' on the expulsion of missionaries from Southern Sudan in 1964 and an answer to its allegations was issued by the Verona Fathers, The Black Book of the Sudan [Milan, 1964]. D. McEwan, A Catholic Sudan: Dream, Mission, and Reality. A Study of the Roman Catholic Mission to Central Africa and its Protection by the Hapsburg Empire from 1846 to 1900 (1914) as revealed in the Correspondence of the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Consulate Khartoum (Rome, 1987). Denying 'the Honor of Living': Sudan a Human Rights Disaster (An Africa Watch Report, New York and London, 1990).

Sudbury, Simon. See SIMON OF SUDBURY.

Suetonius, Roman writer, until 121/2 secretary to the Emp. Hadrian. He was apparently one of the first pagan writers to mention Christianity. His 'Lives of the Caesars' refers to the expulsion by Claudius (d. 54) of the Jews from Rome on the ground that they had made disturbances 'at the instigation of Chrestus' (Claudius, 25. 4); this is prob. a garbled account of trouble between Jews and Christians. He seems to have approved of *Nero's persecution of the Christians, 'a class of men given to a new and mischievous superstition' (Nero, 16).

'Lives of the Caesars' ed. M. Ihm (Teub., 1908), repr., with Eng. tr. by J. C. Rolfe (Loeb, 2 vols., 1914); other works ed. A. Reifferscheid (Leipzig, 1860). Convenient Eng. tr. of 'Lives of the Caesars' by R. Graves (Penguin Classics, 1957; rev. by M. Grant, 1979). A. Wallace-Hadrill, Suetonius: The Scholar and his Caesars (1983); J. Gascou, Suétone historien (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 255; 1984). K. R. Bradley in OCD (3rd edn., 1996), pp. 1451 f. s.v. 'Suetonius (Gaius Suetonius Tranquillus)'.

sufficient grace. In the RC theology of grace, grace which, in contrast to *efficacious grace (q.v.), does not meet with adequate co-operation on the part of the recipient, and hence fails to achieve the result for which it was bestowed. In the *Dominican view (D. *Bañez), it required a further Divine motion ('efficacious grace') to produce a salutary act. The *Jesuit view (L. *Molina), on the other hand, was that 'sufficient grace' was really adequate to produce such a result, needing only the consent of human free will to become efficacious. Both sufficient and efficacious grace are different forms of 'actual grace'.

suffragan bishop. The title is used in two senses:

(1) Any bishop in relation to his *archbishop or *metropolitan, by whom he may be summoned to assist at synods and give his 'suffrage'.

(2) An assistant bishop appointed to help the bishop of the diocese. The first instance of this office in England is from 1240. From the end of the 14th cent. to the Reformation appointments of such assistant bishops were frequent and made by the Pope. The Suffragan Bishops Act 1534 named 26 specific places (Thetford, Ipswich, Colchester, Dover, Guildford, and so on) as sees from which bishops suffragan should take their titles. When a diocesan bishop was desirous of a suffragan, he was to recommend two candidates to the Sovereign, who was to have power to nominate one of them to any see in the list specified within the same province and to present him to the archbishop, in letters patent under the great seal, for consecration within three months. The suffragan depended for his authority and fees on the commission of the diocesan, which was presumed to lapse on the death or translation of the latter and was renewable only at the pleasure of his successor. The Act was repealed under *Mary by the See of Rome Act 1554, but restored under *Elizabeth I in 1559 by the Act of Supremacy 1558. After the consecration of 17 suffragan bishops in the 16th cent. the office lapsed in 1592, though the existence of bishops suffragan is assumed in the 1604 *Canons. In 1870, in the face of strong demands, suffragan bishops were consecrated under the same Act for Nottingham (for the diocese of *Lincoln) and Dover (for that of *Canterbury). The Suffragans Nomination Act 1888 empowered the Crown, by Order in Council, to make additions to the list of places from which suffragan bishops might take their titles. By the Dioceses Measure 1978, if a new suffragan see is to be created or an existing one has been vacant for five years or more, a diocesan bishop may petition the Crown for a suffragan only with the approval of the Diocesan and the General Synods. See also AREA BISHOP.

The Suffragan Bishops Act 1534 is repr. in Gee and Hardy, pp. 253–6. (no. 59). W. *Stubbs, Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum: An Attempt to Exhibit the Course of Episcopal Succession in England from the Records of the Church (1858), esp. pp. 142–9 (Appendix 5: 'Suffragans and Bishops in Partibus'). R. Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 1 (2nd edn. by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), pp. 75–86 ('Bishops without Sees').

Suger (*c.*1081–1151), Abbot of *St-Denis, near Paris. Of humble origin, *c.*1091 he entered the abbey of St-Denis, where he was a fellow-student of King Louis VI. From 1106 onwards, he was active in the affairs of the abbey. In 1107 he was nominated Provost of Berneval in Normandy and in 1109 of Toury. He was sent by the King on embassies to the Papal Curia, and he was returning from a visit to *Callistus II in 1122 when he was elected Abbot of St-Denis. In the next year he went to Rome again to attend the (Ninth) General Council at the *Lateran. Throughout much of his life he was an influential adviser of the French Crown, an active administrator of the lands of his monastery, and a friend of monastic reformers. During Louis VII's absence on the Second *Crusade he was one of the regents, discharging his duties with such success that Louis on his return rewarded him with the title of 'Father of the Country'.

Suger's 'Vita Ludovici Grossi' is a primary historical source for his age. His new church at St-Denis (choir consecrated 1144), of which he has left an account in his 'Libellus de Consecratione Ecclesiae S. Dionysii', was a crucial step in the development of Gothic architecture. His methods of monastic government are set out in his 'Liber de Rebus in Administratione sua gestis'.

Œuvres complètes, ed. A. Lecoy de La Marche (Société de l'Histoire de France; 1867), with 12th-cent. Life by Père Guillaume, OSB, pp. 377–411. Modern edn., with Fr. tr., of his Life of Louis VI by H. Waquet (Paris, 1929). Eng. tr. of his 'Sancti Dionysii Liber' (comprising the 'Liber de Rebus' and the 'Libellus de Consecratione') by E. Panofsky, Abbot Suger on the Abbey Church of St-Denis and its Art Treasures (Princeton, NJ, 1946). F. A. Gervaise, OSB, Histoire de Suger (3 vols., 1721). M. Aubert, Suger ('Figures monastiques'; 1950), with refs. P. L. Gerson (ed.), Abbot Suger and Saint-Denis: A Symposium (New York [1986]). O. von Simson, The Gothic Cathedral: The Origins of Gothic Architecture & the Medieval Concept of Order (1956), esp. pp. 64–141. P. Kidson, 'Panofsky, Suger and St Denis', Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, 50 (1987), pp. 1–17; C. Rudolph, Artistic Change at St-Denis: Abbot Suger's Program and the Early Twelfth-Century Controversy over Art (Princeton, NJ [1990]).

Suicer, Johann Kaspar (1620–84), author of the Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus. He was a Reformed theologian, a native of Frauenfeld in Switzerland. Educated at the French academies of Montauban and Saumur (1640–3), he taught Latin, Greek, and Hebrew at Zurich from 1644 and was professor of Greek at the Collegium Carolinum from 1660 to 1683. After publishing several works on Greek linguistics, he brought out his famous Thesaurus Ecclesiasticus e Patribus Graecis Ordine Alphabetico in 1682 (2 vols., Amsterdam), of which a second enlarged edition appeared in 1728. The work, which shows immense erudition and extensive reading of patristic literature, is still indispensable to students of the vocabulary of the Greek Fathers and of Greek ecclesiastical institutions. He is generally considered to have exercised a liberal influence in the compilation of the Consensus Helveticus, a confession of faith drawn up by all the Swiss Protestant Churches in 1675.

A. Schweizer, 'Die Entstehung der helvetischen Consensus-Formel', Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie, 30 (1860), pp. 122–48. Id. and P. Schweizer in PRE (3nd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 149 f.

suicide. The intentional taking of one's own life is condemned in the Bible by no text more specific than the Sixth *Commandment ('Thou shalt not kill') unless, with rabbinic tradition, we read Gen. 9: 5 in this sense ('Your life-blood will I require'). However, with the exception of Maccabees, where a heroic suicide in 2 Macc. 14: 16 echoes contemporary Roman ideals, the six clear biblical suicides are associated with God's disfavour: namely those of Abimelech (Jgs. 9: 53–5), Achitophel (2 Sam. 17: 23), Zimri (1 Kgs. 16: 15–20), Saul (1 Chron. 10: 3–13), and *Judas Iscariot (acc. to Mt. 27: 5). The case of *Samson (Jgs. 16: 30) is complicated by the fact that his own death was not the main motive for his action. In Tob. 3: 10 a person in trouble rejects suicide as an option because of its effect on other people. The Bible similarly makes no mention of posthumous sanctions against suicide, even though, acc. to *Josephus, normal Jewish practice of his time included the shameful burial of suicides after dusk (Bel. Jud. 3. 8. 5[377]). Evidence of similar measures survives from elsewhere in the ancient world, notably among the Greeks (cf. *Plato, Laws, 9. 873) and in Sanskrit law.

Roman law, like much articulate Roman tradition, opposed any moral condemnation of suicide and hence provided no sanctions. Christian authority took the opposite position, but gradually. While *Origen criticized the suicide of Judas in his commentary on Mt., it was left to *Lactantius (Inst. Div. 3. 18) and later 4th-cent. Fathers to condemn suicide forcibly and at length. The treatment which for centuries remained the fullest was that by St *Augustine, City of God, book 1, chapters 16–27, which exposed alleged contradictions in the current Roman position, with the aim of dissuading Christian women, threatened by barbarians, from preferring suicide to rape. At about the same date, though with no traceable connection, posthumous sanctions make their first Christian appearance in the context of Egyptian monasticism. Possibly under influence from Egypt the sanctions entered canon law in the acts of Visigothic and Gallican Councils of the 6th cent., in particular, the first Council of Braga (561), can. 16, which refers to an older, apparently unwritten, rule that suicides are to be denied normal burial and prayers. This text became the basis for a widespread exercise of the same sanctions in medieval Europe. Most medieval secular law, both written and customary, augmented the canonical penalties with its own, by (for instance) putting suicide among crimes entailing forfeiture of goods, and in some places by ritual maltreatment of the corpse.

These sanctions were applied with a degree of rigour which varied according to period and local circumstances. Despite such variations the status of suicide as a secular crime persisted in most countries of Europe at least until the French Revolution, and in England until 1961 (although long before this date jurors had tended to acquit many suicides as being 'of unsound mind'). The erosion of the sanctions can be traced to two sources. One was the simple view that suicide is intrinsically innocent: a view held wherever Roman law and tradition have been strong, as in medieval urban Italy, during the Renaissance and *Enlightenment, and in modern currents of thought acknowledging their influence. The second source of erosion is the more complex view that while suicide is wrong, it is proper to feel pity for the suicide and hope for God's mercy on his behalf. While explicit Christian doctrine has since the 4th cent. normally shunned this view, signs survive from the Anglo-Saxon period onwards—as in the Braga canon itself—that a minority of priests, singly or in religious orders, did give suicides normal burial and prayers, apparently from motives of pious sympathy. In the late 20th cent. this covert tradition has come to the surface in canon law. RC canons no longer expressly exclude suicides from Christian burial (CIC (1983), can. 1184), while those of the C of E allow burial with a special form of service (can. B 38 § 2). The Catechism of the Catholic Church* (1992), while condemning suicide, now states positively that 'The Church prays for those who have taken their own lives' (no. 2283). Unless dispensed, attempted suicide nevertheless remains a bar to RC ordination (CIC (1983), can. 1041) and is an impediment to the exercise of orders already conferred (ibid., can. 1044).

Debates about suicide include the empirical one as to whether suicide-rates are lower among Christians than others. A marked under-average incidence among Church members was first brought to public attention by Émile Durkheim in 1897 and can still, after reformulation in response to modern conditions, find statistical backing. Another such debate is on the nature and effect of the work of the Samaritans, a voluntary organization founded in 1953 by the Revd Eric Chad Varah (then Vicar of St Stephen's Walbrook in the City of London) to give help anonymously to persons tempted to suicide. Moral debate, for Christians, centres exclusively on the question how far God may, or the Church should, make allowance for human frailty or confusion, not on the wrongness of the act itself. Of the many grounds adduced to establish this wrongness, the most specifically Christian is the antithesis that suicide presents to the Passion of Christ, who suffered the extremes of pain and loss (including the loss of a conscious sense of God's presence) in loving acceptance of the Father's will, and precisely by doing so did His work of redeeming mankind. See also DYING, CARE OF THE.

[D.] E. Durkheim, Le Suicide: Étude de sociologie (1897; Eng. tr., Glencoe, Ill. [1951]; London, 1952); A. Bayet, Le Suicide et la morale (1922); M. Halbwachs, Les causes du suicide (1930; Eng. tr., 1978). A. J. L. van Hooff, From Autothanasia to Suicide: Self-killing in Classical Antiquity (1990); O. Anderson, Suicide in Victorian and Edwardian England (Oxford, 1987); M. MacDonald and T. R. Murphy, Sleepless Souls: Suicide in Early Modern England (ibid., 1990); A. Murray, Suicide in the Middle Ages (Oxford, expected 1997). [E.] C. Varah (ed.), The Samaritans: To help those tempted to suicide or despair (1965).

Suidas (c. AD 1000), 'Greek lexicographer'. The traditional supposition that the Greek Lexicon which passes under this name was the work of a certain 'Suidas' is, however, prob. mistaken, the name (properly ἡ Σοῦδα) being apparently derived from a Lat. word meaning 'fortress', i.e. an armoury of information. The Lexicon, both a dictionary and an encyclopaedia, was compiled *c.*1000 from many ancient texts, abridgements, and scholia (Homer, Aristophanes, the Palatine Anthology, an epitome of Hesychius of Miletus), including several sources now lost, and also drew, for its lexical entries, on glossaries and word-lists. Much of its historical material came from the Chronicle of *George Hamartolos (9th cent.) and the Excerpts of Constantine Porphyrogenitus (912–59). Its contents are largely of indifferent merit, but certain items stand apart as of great historical value. The whole work is an important witness to the interests and learning of late Byzantine culture.

Editio princeps of the Lexicon [by D. Chalcondyles], Milan, 1499; modern crit. edn. by A. Adler (5 vols., Lexicographi Graeci, Leipzig, 1928–38). F. Dölger, Die Titel des sog. Suidaslexikons (Sb. (Bayr.), 1936, Heft 6); P. Lemerle, Le Premier Humanisme Byzantin (Bibliothèque Byzantine, Études 6; 1971), pp. 297–300; Eng. tr. (Byzantina Australiensia, 3; Canberra, 1986), pp. 343–6. N. G. Wilson, Scholars of Byzantium (1983), pp. 145–7. A. Adler in PW, Zweite Reihe, 4 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 675–717, s.v.

Sulpice, St. See SAINT-SULPICE, SOCIETY OF.

Sulpicius Severus (b. *c.*360, d. perhaps *c.*430), historian and hagiographer. Sulpicius was a rising advocate in Aquitaine until his wife's death, his friend *Paulinus of Nola's example, and *Martin of Tours's exhortations led to his conversion to asceticism (*c.*394). He established a community on his estate of Primuliacum in SW Gaul, where he lived a gentlemanly version of the religious life. His Life of Martin (396), a literary tour de force, was highly influential on later hagiography. Although composed within Martin's lifetime, it portrays him as a man of God, attested by miracles. Later Sulpicius added 3 letters, and then the Dialogues (*c.*405), where Martin's thaumaturgical powers are compared favourably with those of the Egyptian ascetics. Sulpicius also wrote a Chronicle, which summarizes OT and then early Church history from the Creation to AD 400 in classical style, utilizing both Christian and pagan sources. It evinces a critical regard for chronology, and is an important source for the *Priscillianist movement. Acc. to *Gennadius, Sulpicius was a priest, and in his old age he was temporarily inclined towards *Pelagianism. This statement suggests that he was still alive during the *Semipelagian controversy of the 420s, though we have no contemporary information about him after *c.*404.

Editio princeps of his collected works by V. Giselinus (Antwerp, 1574); also ed. Hieronymus de Prato (2 vols., Verona, 1741–54), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 95–222. Crit. edn. by C. Halm (CSEL 1; 1866). Eng. tr. by A. Roberts (NPNCF, 2nd ser., vol. 11, 1894, pp. 3–122), and of Life of St Martin, Letters, and Dialogues by B. M. Peebles (Fathers of the Church, 7, New York, 1949, pp. 101–251). Life of St Martin ed., with Fr. tr., introd. and comm., by J. Fontaine (SC 133–5; 1967–9), and, with Ital. tr., by J. W. Smit and L. Canali (Vite dei Santi, 4, 1975, pp. 1–67). Dialogues ed., with Ital. tr., by G. Augello (Palermo, 1969); note also E. C. Babut, 'Sur trois lignes inédites de Sulpice Sévère', Le Moyen Âge, 19 (1906), pp. 205–13. The chief source for Sulpicius' life is Paulinus of Nola's letters; also Gennadius, De vir. ill. 19. C. [E.] Stancliffe, St Martin and his Hagiographer: History and Miracle in Sulpicius Severus (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1983). F. Ghizzoni, Sulpicio Severo (Università degli Studi di Parma. Istituto di Lingua e Letteratura Latina, 8 [1983]). A. Rous[s]elle-Estève, 'Deux exemples d'évangélisation en Gaule à la fin du IVᵉ siècle: Paulin de Nole et Sulpice Sévère', Fédération historique du Languedoc méditerranéen et du Roussillon, XLIIIᵉ Congrès (Béziers, 30–31 Mai 1970) (Montpellier, 1971), pp. 91–8. G. K. van Andel, 'Sulpicius Severus and Origenism', VC 34 (1980), pp. 278–87. J. Bernays, Ueber die Chronik des Sulpicius Severus (1861); S. Prete, I Chronica di Sulpicio Severo (Collezione 'Amici delle catacombe', 24; 1955); G. K. van Andel, The Christian Concept of History in the Chronicle of Sulpicius Severus (Amsterdam, 1976); F. Murru, 'La concezione della storia nei Chronica di Sulpicio Severo: alcune linee di studio', Latomus, 38 (1979), pp. 961–81. J. Fontaine in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1301–8, s.v. See also bibl. to MARTIN, ST.

Summa. Originally a title of reference books on various subjects, the term, as used by medieval writers, came to denote a compendium of theology, philosophy, or canon law. These compendia were normally used as handbooks in the Schools, much like the earlier *Sentences. The 'Summae' divide their subjects into a great number of questions, usually following a more or less generally accepted order, and use the dialectical method of evolving a theme by affirmation and contradiction. The most famous 'Summae' are the 'Summa Theologiae' and the 'Summa contra Gentiles' of St *Thomas Aquinas; but well-known Summae were also produced by *William of Auxerre, St *Albertus Magnus, and many others.

Summa Theologiae. The chief dogmatic work of St *Thomas Aquinas (q.v.), until recently generally known as the 'Summa Theologica'. It is a vast structure of treatises, questions, and articles, which falls into three parts. The First Part ('Prima') treats of God considered in Himself and as the principle of creation, the first half of the Second Part ('Prima Secundae') of God as the end of man, its second half ('Secunda Secundae') of man's return to God, and the Third Part ('Tertia') of Christ as the way of man to God. The concluding sections of the Tertia, which deal with the Sacraments and the Last Things, were left unfinished, the missing parts being supplied on the basis of Thomas's 'Commentary on the Sentences', presumably under the editorship of *Reginald of Piperno.

For bibl. see THOMAS AQUINAS, ST.

Summi Pontificatus. The *encyclical issued by *Pius XII on 20 Oct. 1939 expounding the bearing of Catholic principles on such matters as the growth of secularism, the brotherhood of man, the state and the family, state-worship and international confidence, and *Catholic Action, and summoning Christians to a renewed devotion to the *Sacred Heart.

Lat. text in AAS 31 (1939), pp. 413–53, with Eng. tr., pp. 538–64. Further Eng. tr. in C. Carlen, IHM, The Papal Encyclicals 1939–1958 (Salem, NH [1981]), pp. 5–22, with bibl.

Sumner, Charles Richard (1790–1874), Bp. of *Winchester. A younger brother of J. B. *Sumner (q.v.), he was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and ordained deacon in 1814. In 1820 he was introduced to George IV through the good offices of Lady Conyngham (the King's mistress), to whose son he had been tutor; he owed his subsequent rapid preferment to her influence. Having been appointed Chaplain to the King, he was made Canon of *Worcester in 1822 and of *Canterbury in 1825. In 1826 he was consecrated to the see of *Llandaff, which he held in plurality with the deanery of *St Paul's, and in 1827 he was translated to Winchester by order of the King. He lost the royal favour by voting for the *Catholic Emancipation Bill in 1829, an action he regretted in later life. He was an *Evangelical in his sympathies and as such opposed R. D. *Hampden's appointment to the see of *Hereford, though he patronized some High Churchmen, esp. S. *Wilberforce. In 1850 he strongly protested against the restoration of the RC hierarchy. A very capable and successful administrator, he furthered in his diocese the establishment of Poor Schools, better conditions for the agricultural labourers, and the building of churches and parsonages. His literary works include The Ministerial Character of Christ Practically Considered (1824) and an annotated translation of J. *Milton's De Doctrina Christiana (2 vols., 1825). In 1869 he resigned his see through ill-health, to be succeeded by S. Wilberforce.

Life by his son, G. H. Sumner (London, 1876). W. P. Courtney in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 165–8.

Sumner, John Bird (1780–1862), Abp. of *Canterbury. Elder brother of C. R. *Sumner, he was born at Kenilworth and educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1801. In 1802 he became assistant master at Eton, and was ordained in 1803. After holding several benefices he was nominated Bp. of *Chester in 1828. Though a convinced *Evangelical, he voted for the *Catholic Emancipation Bill in 1829. Later he opposed the *Oxford Movement. He was an able administrator of his diocese, which he enriched by causing many churches and schools to be built. In 1848 he was appointed Abp. of Canterbury. Though unsympathetic towards the theology of R. D. *Hampden's Bampton Lectures, he did not oppose his consecration as Bp. of *Hereford, in which he himself took part. In the controversy concerning the *Gorham Case he denied that Baptismal Regeneration was a fundamental doctrine of the C of E. In 1852 it fell to him to preside over the Upper House of *Convocation when, for the first time for 135 years, it met again for business. His numerous writings, which were highly esteemed in Evangelical circles, include Apostolical Preaching (1815), based on the Pauline Epp.; A Treatise on the Records of the Creation (2 vols., 1816), founded on the Mosaic account in Genesis; and The Evidence of Christianity (1824), in which he argued from the vitality of Christianity to its Divine origin; as well as several volumes of sermons.

N. Scotland, John Bird Sumner: Evangelical Archbishop (Leominster, 1995). W. P. Courtney in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 168–70, s.v.

Sun, The Canticle of the. See CANTICLE OF THE SUN, THE.

Sundar Singh, Sadhu (1889–*c.*1929), an Indian Christian and mystic. Born of wealthy Sikh parents, he was converted to Christianity by a vision on 18 Dec. 1904, baptized in the C of E at Simla in 1905, and donned the robe of a Sadhu (i.e. 'holy man') in an endeavour to present Christianity in a Hindu form. In his early travels he covered the Punjab, Kashmir, Baluchistan, and Afghanistan, and in 1908 made his first visit to evangelize Tibet. A visit to Madras in 1908 introduced him to the world at large, and his fame was enhanced by travels in the W. in 1920 and 1922. He expected death at 33, the age at which Christ died, and was disappointed that he lived on. Despite ill-health, he persisted in his strenuous work in Tibet. He was last heard of in April 1929.

A collection of his writings, ed. T. Dayanandan Francis, The Christian Witness of Sadhu Sundar Singh (Madras, 1989), with full introd. B. H. *Streeter and A. J. Appasamy, The Sadhu (1921); C. F. Andrews, Sadhu Sundar Singh (1934); A. J. Appasamy, Sundar Singh (1958); P. Thompson, Sadhu Sundar Singh (Bromley, 1992).

Sunday. Its English name derives from the old pagan 'dies solis' (Gk. ἡλίου ἡμέρα), the day consecrated to the sun, which was given a Christian interpretation and referred to Christ, the Sun of Righteousness (Mal. 4: 2). In Rev. it is called the Day of the Lord, κυριακὴ ἡμέρα (1: 10), the Latin translation of which, 'Dominica', is the name used in the calendars of the W. Church. Already in NT times Sunday began to replace the Jewish *Sabbath. St *Paul and the Christians of Troas assembled on the first day of the week 'to break bread' (Acts 20: 7) and the Apostle bids his converts put by their alms on this day (1 Cor. 16: 2). The chief reason for the substitution of Sunday for the Sabbath was the commemoration of the Resurrection, mentioned already by St *Ignatius, which gives the day its joyful character; thus there is to be no fasting or kneeling on this day. *Justin Martyr connects it also with the first day of Creation, and St. *Isidore of Seville, much later, with the Coming of the Holy Spirit. Sunday also came to be associated with the Three Divine Persons and esp. dedicated to the Trinity, so that, e.g., the *Preface of the Trinity came to be used on all Sundays without a Preface of their own—a custom now abandoned in the RC Church.

The observance of Sunday as a day of rest consecrated esp. to the service of God began to be regulated by both ecclesiastical and civil legislation from the 4th cent. It was enjoined by the Council of *Elvira (*c.*306; can. 21), and by *Constantine in a law promulgated in 321, commanding abstention from work, including legal business, for townspeople, though permitting farm labour; *Oxyrhynchus papyrus 3759 affords evidence of the operation of this law in 325. The Council of *Laodicea (*c.*380; can. 29) enjoined abstention from work as far as possible. From the 6th to the 13th cents. the ecclesiastical legislation became more and more strict, enforcing also assistance at Mass, and was helped by the infliction of severe penalties by the civil authorities, e.g. by the Anglo-Saxon king Ine and by *Alfred the Great. From the 13th cent. onwards the custom of allowing dispensations became widespread. Acc. to current RC canon law, the faithful are normally obliged to hear Mass on Sunday, or on the previous evening, and to abstain from 'work or business that would inhibit the worship to be given to God, the joy proper to the Lord's Day, or the due relaxation of mind and body'. If it is impossible to attend Mass, the faithful are to attend other forms of worship or 'spend an appropriate time in prayer' (CIC (1983), cans. 1247–8).

The Protestant Churches did not at first introduce special Sunday legislation; but the abuse of Sunday soon led to a reaction. In England the new attitude to Sunday was much influenced by Nicholas Bound's True Doctrine of the Sabbath (1595), which identified the Christian Sunday with the Jewish Sabbath. Despite King *James's defence of the traditional Sunday pleasures in his *Book of Sports (1618), rigorist views gained ground and found classic expression in the legislation of the Long Parliament and the *Westminster standards. While the Restoration brought much relaxation, the Act of 1677, by reducing Sunday labour, furthered its rigorist observance. The early 18th cent. was marked by greater liberty, but through the influence of the *Evangelical Revival stricter observance was once more enforced by the Act of 1781. In the 19th cent. Sunday was still a day mainly devoted to duties of piety, but the secularization of life in the 20th cent. has considerably reduced its religious observance. For some time considerations of social well-being led the civil authorities to encourage the cessation of work on Sundays, but increased leisure in the Western world has been accompanied by pressure to abolish restrictions on both recreational and commercial activities on Sundays. See also SABBATARIANISM.

J. A. Hessey, Sunday: Its Origin, History and Present Obligation (Bampton Lectures for 1860; 1860). T. *Zahn, Geschichte des Sonntags vornehmlich in der alten Kirche (1878). W. Rordorf, Der Sonntag: Geschichte des Ruhe- und Gottesdiensttages im ältesten Christentum (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 43; 1962; Eng. tr., 1968). B. Botte, OSB, and others, Le Dimanche (Lex Orandi, 39; 1965). S. Bacchiocchi, From Sabbath to Sunday: A Historical Investigation of the Rise of Sunday Observance in early Christianity (Rome, 1977). D. A. Carson (ed.), From Sabbath to Lord's Day: A Biblical, Historical and Theological Investigation (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1982). E. Haag, Vom Sabbat zum Sonntag: Eine bibeltheologische Studie (Trierer theologische Studien, 52; 1991). A. Barry in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 1042–53, s.v. 'Lord's Day'; J. Gaillard, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 3 (1957), cols. 948–82, s.v. 'Dimanche'.

Sunday letter. In ecclesiastical calendars that one of the seven letters A to G, allotted to the days of the year in rotation (1 Jan. = A, etc.), which coincides with the Sundays in a given year. Knowledge of it enables the user to discover at a glance on what day of the week any calendarial date in that year will fall. It is ascertained by a simple arithmetical calculation, as described, e.g., in the 'Table to Find Easter Day' prefixed to the BCP. A leap year necessarily has two Sunday letters, the change in the BCP calendar falling on 29 Feb., but in older forms of the calendar on 25 Feb. (vi. Kal. Mar.; hence 'bissextile years').

Sunday Schools. Schools, mainly for children, in which instruction, now primarily religious instruction, is given on Sunday; they are usually held in conjunction with a parish or congregation. Although there are isolated earlier examples of schools for poor children on Sundays, the movement owed its success to Robert *Raikes (q.v.), who, along with the local incumbent (T. Stock), engaged four women in 1780 to instruct the children of *Gloucester in reading and the Church Catechism on Sundays. Partly owing to the publicity which Raikes gave to the enterprise in his Journal, his example was soon followed elsewhere, both in Europe and America. Most schools at first used paid teachers. In England two national societies were founded on an interdenominational basis: the Sunday School Society (1783) to give financial support to individual schools and the Sunday School Union (1803) to help to provide books and materials. Most schools, however, were locally supported and after the early 1800s interdenominational co-operation tended to be replaced by denominational rivalry. There were also disputes about clerical and ministerial control and over the teaching of writing and other 'secular' subjects on Sunday. Some schools, independently of the Churches, developed into important centres for working-class culture and self-improvement, though frequently under middle-class supervision.

With the increase of general education in the 19th cent. the Sunday Schools devoted themselves more exclusively to religious education. Partly as a result of the *Oxford Movement, there grew up a desire among Anglicans to introduce more specifically C of E teaching, and in 1843 a new society, the Sunday School Institute, was formed. It was incorporated into the *National Society in 1936.

As standards of education advanced after the 1870 Act, more education was needed for the Sunday School teachers, who, from *c.*1840, were mainly voluntary workers. Under the auspices of the Sunday School Union a training college for teachers was founded in 1907 at Selly Oak, Birmingham (Westhill); the Sunday School Institute opened St Christopher's College, Blackheath, in 1909 for similar purposes. This latter has become the St Christopher's College Education Trust, which exists to promote religious education. In 1966 the (National from 1921) Sunday School Union became the National Christian Education Council.

The Sunday Schools of the C of E are partly organized on a diocesan basis; those sponsored by the National Christian Education Council are on a national basis. The Church of England Board of Education and the National Society offer advice and material assistance.

B. C. Cliff, The Rise and Development of the Sunday School Movement in England 1780–1980 (Redhill, Surrey [1986]). T. W. Laqueur, Religion and Respectability: Sunday Schools and Working Class Culture 1780–1850 (1976). J. Ferguson (ed.), Christianity, Society and Education: Robert Raikes, Past, Present and Future (1981). A. M. Boylan, Sunday School: The Formation of an American Institution 1790–1880 (New Haven, Conn., and London [1988]).

supererogation, works of. In RC *moral theology, acts which are not enjoined as of strict obligation, and therefore are not simply good as opposed to bad, but better as opposed to good ('opera meliora'). Thus the '*Counsels of Evangelical Perfection' are held to be not of duty but of supererogation. The term, which goes back to the Latin translation of Lk. 10: 35 ('quodcumque supererogaveris'), was probably not used in its present technical sense until the Middle Ages, when 'opera supererogationis' were treated in the Summa attributed to *Alexander of Hales and in the works of St *Thomas Aquinas, and others. The doctrine, for which the story of the rich young ruler (Mt. 19: 16–22) and St Paul's teaching on virginity (1 Cor. 7) are usually adduced in evidence, was repudiated by the Reformers and in the Anglican *Thirty-Nine Articles (Art. XIV), which asserts that 'Works of Supererogation cannot be taught without arrogancy and impiety'.

D. Heyd, Supererogation: Its Status in Ethical Theory (Cambridge Studies in Philosophy, 1982). Comm. on the Thirty-Nine Articles, cited s.v., Art. XIV, esp. E. C. S. Gibson, The Thirty-Nine Articles, 2 (1897), pp. 424–38.

superintendents. In the reformed Church of Scotland, the officials appointed under the *First Book of Discipline (1560) to oversee the districts roughly corresponding to the old dioceses. It has been much disputed whether their appointment implies that the Church of Scotland was originally Episcopalian, and in particular whether their appointment was originally regarded as a temporary measure. While they enjoyed a measure of superiority over other ministers, they differed from diocesan bishops in being admitted to office by fellow-presbyters, in not possessing exclusive power of ordination, and in being subject to the control and censure of the other ministers regularly associated with them.

In the *Lutheran Churches, which in this matter supplied a model for the Scottish superintendents, Church officials of this name were created from an early date for similar reasons and with similar functions. In the Scandinavian countries the title of 'Bishop' was retained. In accordance with the principles of Lutheran polity they were to be appointed by, and responsible to, the civil powers. See also GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

In English *Methodism, in J. *Wesley's lifetime, senior travelling preachers with the title of 'Assistant', supervised a 'Circuit' (localized group of societies). Since the 1790s these ministers have been called 'Superintendents'. In American Methodism, the title of Superintendent or General Superintendent was originally applied to the two supervising ministers of the whole Church, but was soon replaced by that of 'Bishop'. Since 1908 District Superintendents have supervised Districts within the American regional Conferences.

On the Scottish superintendents, G. Donaldson, The Scottish Reformation (Cambridge, 1960), pp. 108–29; D. G. Mullan, Episcopacy in Scotland: The History of an Idea, 1560–1638 (Edinburgh [1986]), pp. 17–32; J. Kirk, Patterns of Reform: Continuity and Change in the Reformation Kirk (ibid., 1989), esp. pp. 154–231.

superior. One who has authority over others by virtue of his ecclesiastical rank. The term is commonly used of the heads of the religious orders and congregations, though it is not in general use in those (esp. older) orders of monks and canons which consisted originally of independent houses. In some of the more recent bodies of religious, esp. of women, it has become a title.

Supper, Last. See LAST SUPPER.

Suppression of the Monasteries. See DISSOLUTION OF THE MONASTERIES.

Supralapsarianism (or 'Antelapsarianism'). The form of the *Calvinistic doctrine of *predestination which maintains that God decreed the election and non-election of individual men before the *Fall of *Adam. *Calvin himself regarded Divine predestination as an inscrutable mystery; for though he held that the elect, being sinners, were favoured beyond their merit, and that the non-elect, being also sinners, received just treatment acc. to their merit, he did not presume to elaborate the whole subject. It was his followers who boldly asserted such doctrines as supralapsarianism. Though logical consistency may appear to favour the supralapsarian position, the milder *sublapsarian doctrine (q.v.) has been generally dominant among Calvinists, esp. since the Synod of *Dort (1618).

Supremacy, Acts of. The Supremacy of the Crown Act 1534 confirmed to *Henry VIII and his successors the title of 'the only supreme head in earth of the Church of England, called Anglicana Ecclesia'. It was repealed under *Mary by the See of Rome Act 1554, and the repeal was confirmed by Elizabeth I. But Elizabeth's Act of Supremacy 1558, the first Act of her reign (1559), restored the Henrician legislation in a revised form. The monarch's title just quoted was dropped, however, and the Queen declared to be 'the only supreme governor of this realm, and of all her highness's dominions and countries, as well in all spiritual and ecclesiastical things or causes as temporal'. The election of bishops by congé d'élire was restored, and an oath of obedience to the Crown in things ecclesiastical as well as temporal imposed on all clergymen and public officials. The Act was an assertion of the monarch's responsibility before God for the welfare of the Church, and annexed 'for ever' the power of reforming abuses to the Crown.

The text of the Supremacy of the Crown Act 1534 is repr. in Gee and Hardy, pp. 243 f. (no. 55); the repeal by Mary of this and other ecclesiastical legislation of the previous reigns is repr. ibid., pp. 385–415 (no. 76), esp. p. 390; and the Act of Supremacy 1558 is repr. ibid., pp. 442–58 (no. 79).

Surin, Jean Joseph (1600–65), *Jesuit mystic and spiritual writer. The eldest son of a Bordeaux magistrate, in 1616 he entered the Society of Jesus, where he came under the influence of the teaching on mysticism of Louis Lallemant (1587–1635). Of frail health, but endowed with great intellectual and spiritual gifts, he was sent to Loudun in 1634 to exorcise some *Ursulines believed to be possessed by the devil. He acted as spiritual director to the superior, Jeanne des Anges, and she recovered. Surin experienced some 20 years of mental trials, alternating between believing himself to be damned (with an attempt at *suicide) and to be receiving Divine graces; modern scholars suspect manic depressive illness. At the same time, Surin seems to have had genuine mystical experiences and eventually regained his mental powers and some stability. In his autobiographical writings, he describes his trials and how he overcame them. He also composed a number of spiritual writings; Catéchisme spirituel (1657; published without his knowledge), Les Fondements de la vie spirituelle (1667; based on the Imitation of Christ*), Dialogues spirituels (1700–9), and other works. He advocated the practice of the presence of God and the prayer of contemplation in which the soul, abandoned to the Holy Spirit, loses itself in the love of God. He was sought after as a spiritual director, a task to which he gave much thought, as his letters of direction show. An Italian translation of his Catéchisme was placed on the *Index in 1695 during the controversy between F. *Fénelon and J.-B. *Bossuet, but his Fondements was published by E. B. *Pusey in a version 'adapted' for C of E readers in 1844.

List of his works with notices of edns. and trs. to date in Sommervogel, 7 (1896), cols. 1704–16; 9 (1900), col. 868; and 12 (1911–30, repr. 1960), cols. 826–30; Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 331–5. His autobiog. is incl. in the edn. of his Lettres spirituelles, ed. L. Michel and F. Cavallera (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 2 vols., 1926–8), 2, pp. 1–151. Modern edns. of his Poésies spirituelles and Contrats spirituels by É. Catta (Études de théologie et d'histoire de la spiritualité, 15; 1957), of his Guide spirituel pour la perfection (unfinished at Surin's death and first pub. 1801) by M. de Certeau, SJ (Paris [1963]), and of his Correspondance, by id. (ibid. [1966]). E. de Greeff, 'Succédanés et Concomitances psychopathologiques de la "Nuit obscure" (le cas du père Surin)', Études Carmélitaines, 23. 2 (1938), pp. 152–76, esp. 160–76, with other arts. on Surin by M. Olphe-Galliard, SJ, J. de Guibert, SJ, and F. Achille-Delmais, pp. 177–89 and 235–9; F. de Dainville, SJ, 'Une étape de la "Déroute des Mystiques". La révision romaine du "Catéchisme Spirituel" (1661)', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 33 (1957), pp. 62–87; M. de Certeau, 'Jean-Joseph Surin', The Month, 210 (1960), pp. 340–53; id., 'Les Œuvres de Jean-Joseph Surin', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 40 (1964), pp. 443–76; 41 (1965), pp. 55–78 [discusses edns.; no more pub.]; id. (ed.), La Possession de Loudun (Collection Archives [1970]), pp. 289–306; F. P. Bowman, 'Suffering, Madness, and Literary Creation in Seventeenth-Century Spiritual Autobiography', French Forum, 1 (1976), pp. 24–48. A. Louth, The Wilderness of God (1991), pp. 104–22. Bremond, 5 (1920), pp. 148–310. M. Olphe-Gailliard, SJ, in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2834–42, s.v.; M. Dupuy, PSS, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1311–25, s.v.

surplice (Lat. superpelliceum, 'over a fur garment'). A liturgical vestment of white linen, with wide sleeves. It was originally a loose choir vestment substituted for the narrow-sleeved alb because it was better suited for wear over the fur coats customary in northern countries, hence its name. From the 12th cent. it came to be the distinctive dress of the lower clergy and to be used by priests outside Mass. At first a tunic reaching to the feet, it became steadily shorter until, in the 18th cent. on the Continent, it just covered the hips, the sleeves also being reduced in size. This form, usually called the *cotta, was until recently widely used in the RC Church beside the older, wide-sleeved form, reaching to the knees. The surplice is worn by all clerics and is also used by laymen, e.g. in choir, when serving Mass, acting as acolytes, etc. In the C of E the BCP of 1552 made it the only prescribed vestment of the clergy, but the '*Ornaments Rubric' ordering it was removed in later editions. Its use caused much controversy in the reign of *Elizabeth I, but was insisted upon by Abp. M. Parker in his Advertisements. Can. 58 of 1604 ordered the wearing of the surplice by ministers during Divine service and when administering the sacraments, and can. 17 enjoined it also on students in colleges other than clerics on certain days. Can. B 8 of 1969 prescribes its use by ministers at Morning and Evening Prayer and for the Occasional Offices and gives it as one of the alternative vestments of the celebrant at the Eucharist. The question whether a surplice should be worn by a cleric when preaching in the pulpit was widely agitated in the 19th cent. in connection with the Ritualist Movement. Its use in the C of E is now almost, if not quite, universal. See also VESTIARIAN CONTROVERSY.

Braun, LG, pp. 135–48. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 14 (1912), pp. 343 f., s.v. V. Staley in PBD (1912), pp. 774 f., s.v. See also bibl. to ORNAMENTS RUBRIC.

surplice fees. The fees which are payable to the incumbent of a parish for marriages and burials. They are his by right, whoever performs the service, and he pays income tax on them as part of the income of the benefice, unless he has assigned his fees to the Diocesan Board of Finance by deed.

surrogate. In ecclesiastical usage, the word is applied esp. to a clergyman or other person appointed by the bishop as his deputy to grant licences for marriages without banns.

Sursum Corda (Lat., 'Lift up your hearts'). In the Eucharistic liturgy the words addressed by the celebrant to the congregation immediately before the *Preface. The reply is: 'Habemus ad Dominum', traditionally translated, 'We lift them up unto the Lord'. Its use, which is universal, is attested as early as St *Hippolytus of Rome (*c.*215) and St *Cyprian (252) in the W. and as St *Cyril of Jerusalem (*c.*350) in the E.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 138–44; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 110–15. C. A. Bouman, 'Variants in the introduction to the Eucharistic Prayer', VC 4 (1950), pp. 94–115. E. Ferguson, 'The Liturgical Function of the "Sursum Corda"', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 13 (TU 116; 1975), pp. 360–3.

Susanna, Book of. In the English Bible one of the smaller Books of the *Apocrypha. In the LXX it follows the Book of Daniel (of which the *Vulgate reckons it the thirteenth chapter); in the *Old Latin it comes immediately before Daniel. There is no agreement among scholars as to whether it was originally written in Greek, Hebrew, or Aramaic. The Book tells in 64 verses of the false accusation of adultery brought against Susanna by two elders, her condemnation, and her final deliverance by the sagacity of Daniel. In the Christian era the incident became the symbol of the saved soul, and as such is to be met with already in the paintings of the *catacombs and on early *sarcophagi. It became again a favourite subject of art in the Renaissance, esp. the bathing scene, which has also been painted by P. P. Rubens, *Rembrandt, and others, as well as by many modern artists.

Gk. texts in H. B. *Swete (ed.), The Old Testament in Greek, 3 (1912 edn.), pp. 576–85, and A. Rahlfs (ed.), Septuaginta, 2 (Stuttgart, 1935), pp. 864–70. Eng. tr., with comm. and refs. to other edns. of texts, by D. M. Kay in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (1913), pp. 638–51; J. C. Dancy, The Shorter Books of the Apocrypha (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1972), pp. 224–34; and C. A. Moore, Daniel, Esther, and Jeremiah: The Additions (Anchor Bible, 1977), pp. 77–116. Ger. tr. and comm. by H. Engel, Die Susannah-Erzählung (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis, 61; Freiburg, Switz., and Göttingen, 1985). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2, Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 722–30, with bibl. On early representations in art, H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 1742–52, s.v. 'Suzanne', with refs. See also Catholic comm. to Daniel and bibl. to APOCRYPHA.

Susanna, St (3rd cent.), Roman martyr. Acc. to legend, she was a woman of noble birth and great beauty, a niece of Pope Caius (283–96), and was put to death for refusing to marry a pagan relative of *Diocletian. Her 'Acta' seem to be a working-over of what was orig. an edifying tale. Since the 5th cent. her name has been attached to one of the tituli (see TITLE) at Rome. Feast day, 11 Aug.

AASS, Aug. 2 (1734), pp. 624–32, with pt. 2 of the Acta and other material; pt. 1, ibid., Feb. 3 (1658), pp. 61–4. L. *Duchesne, 'Les Légendes de l'Alta Semita', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 36 (1916–17), pp. 27–56, esp. pp. 33–42; J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 9, Hefte 1 and 2; 1918), pp. 70–4; P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, 7 (ST 49; 1928), pp. 185–202. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome ... (311 440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), 1, pp. 498–501.

suspension. In the RC Church, one of the censures or 'medicinal' *penalties. Suspension, which only affects clerics, prohibits the exercise of some or all of the functions of *Orders, the powers of governance, and the rights and functions attaching to an office. A suspension prohibiting the receipt of benefits (stipends, pensions, etc.) carries with it the obligation to restore whatever has been unlawfully received, even in good faith (CIC (1983), can. 1333 § 1 and § 4).

In the C of E, suspension is one of the five censures which the Diocesan *Chancellor may impose on a cleric following a conviction in the *Consistory Court for an offence against ecclesiastical law other than one in respect of doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963. The other four are deprivation, inhibition, monition, and rebuke.

Suso, Bl Henry. See HENRY SUSO, BL.

Sutton, Christopher (*c.*1565–1629), devotional writer. Educated at Hart Hall and Lincoln College, *Oxford, he held several livings in the E. counties. In 1605 he became a Canon of *Westminster and in 1618 of *Lincoln. His devotional books, written with much fervour, enjoyed great popularity. The most used was Godly Meditations upon the Most Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper (1601), in which, deprecating controversy, he sought to defend a doctrine of Christ's presence in the Eucharist midway between *transubstantiation and the teaching of H. *Zwingli, maintaining that while consecration effected no change in the substance of the elements it radically altered their use. The book was reissued by J. H. *Newman with a fresh preface in 1838 and became popular for some years with the *Tractarians. Sutton's Disce Mori (1600) and Disce Vivere (1602) were also reissued in the 19th cent.

His Disce Vivere was repr. from the 1602 ed. with a Memoir of his life by J. E. Tyler (1847), pp. iii–xxii. B. Hall in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1352–4, s.v. [dating of Sutton's works is inaccurate].

Suvermerian. A word applied by the Saxon Reformers to certain Swiss Protestant extremists. It arose from an attempted Latinization (Swermeros) of the Ger. Schwärmer ('fanatical enthusiasts'). In modern times it was brought to general notice through its use (mistakenly, as he later acknowledged) by C. H. Smyth to describe the Eucharistic doctrine of T. *Cranmer in Cranmer and the Reformation under Edward VI (1926).

On the term see C. Hopf, Martin Bucer and the English Reformation (Oxford, 1946), pp. 35–40, and review of Hopf by Smyth, Cambridge Review, 69 (1947), p. 54.

Swainson, Charles Anthony (1820–87), English theologian. A native of Liverpool, he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and became a Fellow of Christ's College in 1841. He was ordained priest in 1844 and was appointed principal of the theological college at *Chichester in 1854. In 1864 he became Norrisian professor of divinity at Cambridge, was elected master of Christ's College in 1881, and vice-chancellor of the university in 1885. In 1858 he published his *Hulsean Lectures on The Creeds of the Church. It was followed in 1875 by his important work, The Nicene and Apostles' Creeds, which was the fruit of many years' work on MSS in Continental libraries. It included an account of the *Athanasian Creed, which Swainson dated between 860 and 870 and believed to consist of two separate documents. He also produced a standard collection of texts, The Greek Liturgies (1884).

S. Cheetham in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 191 f., s.v.

swastika (Skt. svastika, 'well-being', 'fortune'; Lat. crux gammata; Fr. croix gammée; Ger. Hakenkreuz). A symbol of great antiquity, in the form of a cross of equal arms each of which is bent at right angles. It was probably in origin a charm for attracting good luck and averting misfortune and has also been explained as a symbol of fertility or as representing the wheel of the sun, though the latter interpretation has been commonly rejected in recent times. It appears already on the vases of Mussiân Tepe (nr. Susa, in Elamite country) *c.*4000–3000 BC, among the German tribes *c.*1000 BC, and is found as a widespread ornament in China, Japan—esp. in Buddhist art—and America in the Christian era. From the middle of the 3rd cent. AD it appears in the Roman catacombs, but apparently without any symbolic or Christian reference. It is also to be found on medieval embroidery and brasses, e.g. at Lewknor, Oxfordshire. In modern times, owing to the mistaken idea that it is an old Teutonic sign confined to the Aryan peoples, it was adopted as the official symbol of the National Socialist Party in Germany, with special emphasis on its anti-Semitic significance.

T. Wilson, 'The Swastika. The earliest known Symbol and its Migrations', Annual Report of . . . the . . . Smithsonian Institution for the Year ending June 30, 1894 (Washington, DC, 1896), pp. 757–1011, with bibl. J. Lechler, Vom Hakenkreuz: Die Geschichte eines Symbols (Leipzig, 1921; 2nd edn., 1934). O. Hupp, Runen und Hakenkreuz: Eine archäologische Studie mit heraldischen Schlussfolgerungen (Munich, 1921).

Sweden, Christianity in. The effective evangelization of Sweden dates from the 11th cent. About 830 St *Anskar established a Church at Birka, near Stockholm, but this did not survive. A more lasting mission was initiated by St Sigfrid, a monk from England, who baptized King Olov Skötkonung *c.*1000. Despite heathen resistance, the conversion of the country was virtually completed in the early 12th cent. In 1104 Asker, Bp. of *Lund, became Abp. of the newly constituted Nordic province, and in 1164 *Uppsala was made an archbishopric, independent of Lund (then in *Denmark). The first monasteries were founded by the *Cistercians at Alvastra and Nydala in 1143. The outstanding figure in later medieval Swedish Church history was St *Bridget (*c.*1303–73), who founded the *Bridgettine Order with its mother house at Vadstena.

The Reformation in Sweden was gradual and closely connected with political events. Gustav Vasa, leader of the movement for independence from Denmark and King of Sweden 1523–60, was badly in need of funds and anxious to curb the power of the bishops. Under his protection, Olaus *Petri, a pupil of M. *Luther, was appointed city clerk at Stockholm in 1524, while his friend Laurentius Andreae became the King's chancellor. At the Diet of *Västerås in 1527 the 'superfluous' revenue of the bishops, cathedrals, and monastic houses was vested in the King, who was entreated that 'God's Word might be purely preached'. At this stage there was no overt attack on the Papacy. In 1531, however, Olaus Petri's brother Laurentius was consecrated Abp. of Uppsala without Papal sanction and without the *pallium, though the *Apostolic Succession was maintained through the participation of Petrus Magni, Bp. of Västerås. The majority of the population remained Catholic in sympathy. Services in the vernacular were provided by the Swedish Handbook of 1529 and the Swedish Mass of 1531, but their use remained optional until 1536. The NT had been translated into Swedish in 1526 (almost certainly by Olaus Petri); it was followed by the whole Bible in 1541. By then most of the monasteries had disappeared and the bishops had become state officials. It was not, however, until 1593 that the Swedes adopted the *Augsburg Confession and thus committed themselves to *Lutheran dogma, after the attempts of King John III (reigned 1569–92) to reunite the Swedish Church with Rome had failed. With the participation of *Gustavus Adolphus in the *Thirty Years' War (1618–48), Sweden became one of the leading Protestant powers. The abdication of his daughter *Christina (1654) and her subsequent conversion to RCism was followed by a wave of anti-Catholic feeling.

In the last decades of the 17th cent. *Pietism became an influence in Sweden; its appeal was strengthened by military defeats followed by the imprisonment of Swedish soldiers in Siberia in the early 18th cent. To combat it the Conventicle Proclamation of 1726 restricted meetings for religious purposes. From the 1730s the *Moravians gained ground. Under the influence of the *Enlightenment, E. *Swedenborg sought to combine rationalism and mysticism to form a new moral religion. The 1781 Act of Toleration gave freedom of religion to foreigners. This more liberal attitude was extended in the 1809 Constitution and various later measures, notably the 1860 Dissenter Act which provided freedom of worship and allowed the formation of Christian denominations. Within the Church of Sweden the *revivalism which accompanied the social dislocation of the industrial revolution, was fostered not only by the repeal of the Conventicle Proclamation in 1858, but also by the establishment two years earlier of the Evangeliska Fosterlands-Stiftelsen (Evangelical Fosterland Society). Divisions appeared in this body, and in 1878 P. P. *Waldenström broke with the Church of Sweden and founded a free Lutheran Church, the Svenska Missionsförbundet (Swedish Mission Society), which now has its own ministers and sacraments. Meanwhile the first *Methodist congregations were founded in 1868, and the *Salvation Army began work in Sweden in 1882. The *temperance movement was strong. In the early years of the 20th cent. there was a revival of theological scholarship in Sweden. It was led by Abp. N. *Söderblom, who also played a leading part in the early history of the *Ecumenical Movement, culminating in the *Stockholm Conference of 1925. A High Church Movement, perhaps influenced by contacts with England, spread throughout the country in the 1930s. Since 1951 it has been possible to renounce membership of any Church. The majority of the population still belongs to the Church of Sweden. Thanks to modern immigration the RC Church is the next largest denomination, followed by the Swedish Mission Society and the *Pentecostalists. The state, while tolerating all religions, gives special, if decreasing, protection to the Established Church, which has its own Kyrkomöte, or Convocation, without the consent of which no laws on Church matters may be passed by Parliament.

Survey in Eng. by J. *Wordsworth, The National Church of Sweden (Hale Lectures, 1910; 1911); shorter accounts by H. M. Waddams, The Swedish Church (1946) and R. Murray, A Brief History of the Church of Sweden (Stockholm, 1961). I. Andersson, A History of Sweden, tr. by C. Hannay (1955), passim. H. Holmquist and H. Pleijel (eds.), Svenska Kyrkans Historia, 2 [1274–1521] (1941); 3 [1521–1611] (1933); 4 (1) [1611–32] (1938); 5 [1680–1772] (1935); 6 (2) [1809–23] (1946). P. G. Lindhardt, Skandinavische Kirchengeschichte seit dem 16. Jahrhundert (Die Kirche in ihrer Geschichte: Ein Handbuch, . . . ed. B. Moeller, Band 3, Lieferung M3; Göttingen [1982]), pp. 276–302. Eng. tr. of the Handbok för Svenska Kyrkan (the service book containing the orders for administering the Sacraments, the forms for Morning and Evening Prayer and the Occasional Offices) by E. E. Yelverton, The Swedish Rite (Translations of Christian Literature, Series 3, Liturgical Texts, 1921). Id., The Mass in Sweden: Its Development from the Latin Rite from 1531 to 1917 (HBS 57; 1920). M. Roberts, The Early Vasas: A History of Sweden, 1523–1611 (Cambridge, 1968), esp. pp. 59–91, 107–24, 273–96, 412–26. H. Holmquist, Die schwedische Reformation 1523–1531 (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 139; Leipzig, 1925); J. G. H. Hoffmann, La Réforme en Suède 1523–1527 et la succession apostolique (1945); I. Montgomery, 'La Réforme en Suède, une libération nationale de politique', Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie Religieuses, 63 (1983), pp. 113–24. H. Pleijel, Der schwedische Pietismus in seinen Beziehungen zu Deutschland (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, NF, Avd. 1, Bd. 34, Nr. 4; 1935); id., Das Kirchenproblem der Brüdergemeine in Schweden (ibid. 1. 33. 6; 1938). C. H. Lyttkens, The Growth of Swedish Anglican Intercommunion between 1833 and 1922 (Bibliotheca Theologiae Practicae, 24; Lund [1970]). L. Österlin, Svenska Kyrkan i Profil: Ur engelskt och nordiskt perspektiv (1994; Eng. tr., Churches of Northern Europe in Profile, Norwich, 1995). A. Palmquist, Die römisch-katholische Kirche in Schweden nach 1781, 1 [1783–1820] (Publications of the Swedish Society of Church History, NS 8; Uppsala, 1954), 2 [1870–73] (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1958, pt. 8).

Swedenborg, Emanuel (1688–1772), orig. 'Swedberg', Swedish scientist and mystical thinker. He was the son of Jesper Swedberg, who later became professor of theology at *Uppsala and Bp. of Skara. After studying at Uppsala and extensive travels in England (where he was influenced by Henry *More, J. *Locke, and I. *Newton) and elsewhere, he was appointed by Charles XII to a post on the Swedish Board of Mines (1716). Endowed with considerable inventiveness and mathematical ability, he anticipated many subsequent hypotheses and discoveries (nebular theory, magnetic theory, machine-gun, aeroplane). As time went on he became increasingly concerned to show by purely scientific (esp. physical) analysis that the Universe had a fundamentally spiritual structure, notably in Prodromus Philosophiae Ratiocinantis de Infinito et Causa Finali Creationis (1734).

In 1743–5 Swedenborg's outlook underwent a sudden development. He became conscious of direct contact with the angels and the spiritual world, partly in dreams and supernatural visions, but also in his normal waking life. He felt that the Lord was commissioning him to make known his doctrines to mankind at large. The agency was to be the New Church, organized not as a body separate from the existing Churches, but as a spiritual fraternity of all those of whatever ecclesiastical allegiance who accepted his doctrines. In 1747 he resigned his position on the Board of Mines and embarked on intensive study of the Scriptures. He spent the rest of his life in Sweden, the Netherlands, and London, writing assiduously in defence of his teachings, but also maintaining his purely scientific interests to the end. He died in London and was buried in the Swedish Church in Princes Square. In 1908 his remains were removed to Stockholm by arrangement with the Swedish Government.

Among the earliest disseminators of his teaching were two C of E clergymen, Thomas Hartley (d. 1784), rector of Winwick, Northants (though apparently non-resident in later years), and John Clowes (1743–1831), vicar of St John's, Manchester. Lancashire has remained a centre of Swedenborgian influence in England. The formal creation of a separate body, known as the New Jerusalem Church, was, however, the work of five ex-Wesleyan preachers in London (7 May 1787). Since 1815 conferences have been held annually. In USA, the first congregation was formed in Baltimore in 1792, and a General Convention of the New Jerusalem met in 1817 at Philadelphia. In 1890 a smaller, separate body of Swedenborgians, which in 1897 took the name of General Church of the New Jerusalem, was established, with headquarters at Bryn Athyn, Pa. There are also bodies of Swedenborgians on the Continent of Europe, in Africa, *Australia, *Canada, *Japan, and in South America. They claim world membership of about 65,000.

The basis of Swedenborg's system was a 'doctrine of correspondence' between the physical and spiritual worlds. He envisaged the spiritual world as containing various groupings of deceased human beings which made up a single great human being. He accepted Christ as the greatest manifestation of humanity, but rejected the doctrine of the *Atonement. Of his voluminous expositions the most comprehensive was Arcana Coelestia (8 vols., 1756). Among others were The Earths in the Universe (1758), The New Jerusalem and its Heavenly Doctrine (1758), Heaven and Hell (1758), Divine Love and Wisdom (1763; perhaps the best epitome of his system), The Apocalypse Revealed (1766), and The True Christian Religion (1771). W. *Blake was much influenced by him. His earliest critics included I. *Kant, whose Träume eines Geistersehers (1766) was directed against him.

Photolithographed edn. of his works by R. L. Tafel (10 vols., Stockholm, 1869–70); also ed. in 18 vols., ibid., 1901–16. Posthumous Tracts tr. from Lat. into Eng. by J. J. G. Wilkinson (London, 1847). A facsimile edn. of his Memorabilia seu Diarium Spirituale ab Anno 1747 ad Annum 1765 was pub. at Stockholm (3 vols., 1901–5); Eng. tr. of the Diary by G. Bush and J. H. Smithson (5 vols., London, 1883–1902). 3rd edn. of Arcana Coelestia, by P. H. Johnson and others (8 vols., ibid., 1949–73); Eng. tr. by J. H. Elliott (1983 ff.). W. R. Woofenden, Swedenborg Researcher's Manual (Bryn Athyn, Pa., 1988). Concordance to his theological works compiled and translated into Eng. by J. F. Potts (6 vols., London, 1888–1902). R. L. Tafel (ed. and tr.), Documents Concerning the Life and Character of Emanuel Swedenborg (2 vols., bound in 3, 1875–7). G. Trobridge, A Life of Emanuel Swedenborg: With a Popular Exposition of his Philosophical and Theological Teachings (1912). E. Benz, Swedenborg in Deutschland: F. C. Oetinger und Immanuel Kants Auseinandersetzung mit der Person und Lehre Emanuel Swedenborgs (Auflage 2000; 1947); id., Emanuel Swedenborg: Naturforscher und Seher (1948). C. O. Sigstedt, The Swedenborg Epic: The Life and Works of Emanuel Swedenborg (New York, 1952). I. Jonsson, Swedenborgs Korrespondenslära (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis. Stockholm Studies in Literature, 10; 1969), with summary in English. Id., Emanuel Swedenborg (Twayne's World Authors, 127; New York [1971]). W. van Dusen, The Presence of Other Worlds: The Psychological/Spiritual Findings of Emanuel Swedenborg (1975). E. J. Brock and others (eds.), Swedenborg and his Influence (Bryn Athyn, Pa., and London, 1988). L. B. de Beaumont in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 129–32. s.v.; S. Lindroth in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 13 (1976), pp. 178–81, s.v.

Swete, Henry Barclay (1835–1917), biblical and patristic scholar. He was educated at King's College, London, and Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. From 1882 to 1890 he was professor at King's College, London, and from 1890 until 1915 Regius professor of divinity at Cambridge. He achieved great success in fostering theological study, esp. at Cambridge; and among the many co-operative projects with which he was directly concerned were the Journal of Theological Studies (1899 ff.), the series of Cambridge Patristic Texts and the Cambridge Handbooks of Liturgical Study, the Central Society of Sacred Study (CSSS, for the encouragement of theological study among Anglican clergy), and *A Patristic Greek Lexicon (eventually pub. 1961–8). His own writings include 2 vols. on the history of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit (1909, 1912), editions of *Theodore of Mopsuestia's commentary on the Minor Epistles of St Paul (1880–2) and of the text of the *Septuagint (3 vols., 1887–94), and commentaries on St Mark (1898) and the Apocalypse (1906). He also edited Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (posthumous, 1918).

'M. B. K.', 'H. G.', and 'J. F. B.-B.', Henry Barclay Swete. . . .: A Remembrance (1918); this repr., with additions, on pp. 163–92, a bibl. of Swete's pub. works by C. H. *Turner and A. Rogers, orig. pub. in JTS 19 (1918), pp. 1–19. J. H. Srawley in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 520–2.

Swift, Jonathan (1667–1745), Dean of St Patrick's, *Dublin (from 1713), and English satirist. Only the more definitely religious aspects of his career can be noted here. Ordained priest in Ireland in 1695, he remained faithful to the C of E and opposed alike to the N. Irish and Scottish *Presbyterians and to English Dissenters. In politics he was a Whig, but was persuaded to write against the *Occasional Conformity Act (1708) and frequently found difficulty in supporting his party in its leanings towards Nonconformists. His great powers of satire were used to religious ends in his Argument to Prove the Inconvenience of Abolishing Christianity (1708). He hated injustice and condemned the English misgovernment of Ireland, attacking even the Irish Bishops, but retaining the confidence of the common people. He wrote pamphlets against G. *Burnet, Bp. of *Salisbury, and A. *Collins, the *Deist. He is most popularly remembered as the author of Gulliver's Travels (1726). His works (nearly 100) were, with one exception, published anonymously.

Early edns. of his works by J. Hawkesworth (14 vols., London, 1755–79), with Life in vol. 1, pp. 9–40; and by T. Sheridan (17 vols., ibid., 1784), with Life as vol. 1, also issued separately. Crit. edns. of his prose works by H. Davis (14 vols., Oxford, 1939–68); of his poems by H. Wilson (3 vols., ibid., 1937; 2nd edn., 1958), with bibl.; and of his correspondence by H. Williams (5 vols., ibid., 1963–5). Lives and studies by L. Stephen ('English Men of Letters'; 1882), W. D. Taylor (London, 1933), R. Quintana (ibid., 1936; rev. 1956), J. M. Murray (ibid., 1954), I. Ehrenpreis (3 vols., ibid., 1962–83), D. Donoghue (Cambridge, 1969), P. Steele (Oxford, 1978), D. Nokes (ibid., 1985), and K. Craven (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 30; Leiden, etc., 1992). C. Rawson (ed.), The Character of Swift's Satire (Newark, Del., etc. [1983]). R. W. Jackson, Jonathan Swift, Dean and Pastor (1939); L. A. Landa, Swift and the Church of Ireland (Oxford, 1954). H. Teerink, A Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of Jonathan Swift (The Hague, 1937; rev. by A. H. Scouten, Philadelphia, 1963). J. J. Stathis, A Bibliography of Swift Studies, 1945–1965 (Nashville, 1967); R. H. Rodino, Swift Studies, 1965–1980: An Annotated Bibliography (New York and London, 1984). O. W. Ferguson in NCBEL 2 (1971), cols. 1054–91. L. Stephen in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 204–27.

Swiss Brethren. A group of *Anabaptists who reintroduced believers' Baptism as the basis of Church fellowship at Zollikon (near Zurich) in Jan. 1525. The name originally designated congregations in the German-speaking areas of Switzerland, but it came to be applied also to similar groups in the Austrian Tyrol, S. Germany, and Alsace. In contrast to T. *Müntzer, the Brethren believed in non-resistance and rejected participation in the magistracy. They established visible and ordered Churches but disagreed with the *Hutterites about community of possessions. Their religious tenets were formulated in the 7 articles of the Schleitheim Confession or 'Brotherly Union of a Number of the Children of God' (Brüderliche Vereinigung etlicher Kinder Gottes', 1527); this document, perhaps drafted by Michael Sattler (*c.*1490–1527), was controverted by U. *Zwingli as well as J. *Calvin. Other early leaders included Conrad Grebel (*c.*1498–1526) and George Blaurock (*c.*1492–1529). In spite of persecution lasting into the 18th cent. they survived, esp. in the mountain fastness of the Canton of Berne, but the majority migrated to Germany, the *Netherlands, and the *United States of America, where they form a major part of the *Mennonites. Their modern descendants in Switzerland number *c.*3,000 baptized members and are organized as the 'Conference of Mennonites in Switzerland', which is a member of the Mennonite World Conference.

Quellen zur Geschichte der Täufer in der Schweiz, ed. L. von Muralt and others (Zurich, 1952 ff.). Eng. tr. of some of the works of M. Sattler by J. H. Yoder, The Legacy of Michael Sattler (Classics of the Radical Reformation Series, 1; Scottdale, Pa., 1973), incl. the Schleitheim Confession, pp. 34–43. Eng. tr. of 'The Grebel Letters and Related Documents' by L. Harden, The Sources of Swiss Anabaptism (ibid. 4; 1985). H. S. Bender, Conrad Grebel c.1498–1526: The Founder of the Swiss Brethren Sometimes Called Anabaptists (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, 6; Goshen, Ind., 1950). F. Blanke, Brüder in Christo: Die Geschichte der ältesten Täufergemeinde (Zollikon 1525) (Zurich, 1955; Eng. tr., Scottdale, Pa., 1961). H. Fast, Heinrich Bullinger und die Täufer (Schriftenreihe des Mennonitischen Geschichtsvereins, 7; Weierhof, 1959). See also works cited under ANABAPTISTS.

Swiss Guard (Guardia Svizzera Pontificia). The military guardians of the Papal Palace. The corps was instituted by Pope *Julius II (1503–13), with whom the cantons of Zurich and Lucerne entered into an agreement to supply 250 guardsmen. It now consists of about 100 men, recruited from all the Swiss cantons. The parade uniform of the Guard, which was designed by *Michelangelo, is composed of tunic, breeches, and stockings of wide and gaily coloured red, yellow, and dark blue stripes. See also NOBLE GUARD, PALATINE GUARD.

P. Krieg, Die päpstliche Schweizergarde (Zurich, 1948). J. Repond, Le Costume de la garde suisse pontificale et la renaissance italienne (Rome, 1917). E. Hampoole, OP, 'The Papal Swiss Guards', The American Catholic Quarterly Review, 37 (1912), pp. 286–309 and 369–87. Information about the Swiss Guard is incl. in the section 'Note Storiche' of the Annuario Pontificio. E. D. McShane in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 840 f., s.v., with illustr.

Swithun, St (d. 862), also 'Swithin', Bp. of *Winchester. Little is certainly known of his life, contemporary evidence attesting only his existence as Bp. of Winchester from 852. Originally buried 'humbly' outside the walls of the minster, in 971 his body was translated to a shrine in the cathedral which had been rebuilt by *Ethelwold, and his cult seems to date from this period. In 1093 his relics were again translated, but they disappeared when his shrine was destroyed at the Reformation (1538). The popular belief that the weather on St Swithun's day (15 July) will be that of the next 40 days may have arisen from a similar attribution to the feast of SS. Processus and Martinian, which coincides with the anniversary of Swithun's death (2 July).

The principal sources for the legends are the works emanating from the milieu of the Winchester community after its reform by Ethelwold, notably the Lives by Lantfred, Wulfstan, and *Aelfric, and a Life of uncertain date formerly attributed to *Goscelin. Part of Lantfred's Life is pr. in AASS, Jul. 1 (1719), pp. 328–30; the remainder is ed. E. P. Sauvage in Anal. Boll. 4 (1885), pp. 367–410; Wulfstan's Life ed. A. Campbell, Frithegodi Monachi breviloquium vitae beati Wilfredi et Wulfstani Cantoris narratio metrica de Sancto Swithuno (Zurich, 1950), pp. 63–177. Aelfric's Old English Life ed. and tr. W. W. Skeat, Aelfric's Lives of Saints (EETS 76 and 82; 1881–5), pp. 440–73. The Life attributed to Goscelin ed. E. P. Sauvage in Anal. Boll. 7 (1888), pp. 373–80. Crit. edn. of early Lives, with Eng. tr. and full introd. by M. Lapidge, The Cult of St Swithun (Winchester Studies, 4. 2; in preparation). On the 971 translation see also R. N. Quirk, 'Winchester Cathedral in the tenth century', Archaeological Journal, 114 (for 1957; 1959), pp. 28–68; M. Biddle, 'Felix Urbs Winthonia: Winchester in the Age of Monastic Reform', in D. Parsons (ed.), Tenth-Century Studies (1975), pp. 123–40, esp. pp. 136–8; D. J. Sheerin, 'The Dedication of the Old Minster, Winchester, in 980', R. Bén. 88 (1978), pp. 261–73.

Sword of the Spirit. A RC social movement inaugurated by Card. A. *Hinsley in 1940. It was designed as an organization for unifying international Catholic social efforts by 'prayer, study, and action' with a view to promoting justice in war and in the peace which would follow, on the basis of *Pius XII's 'Five Peace Points' and the requirements of the *Natural Law. These aims were shared by Christians of other denominations and were stated in a letter to The Times (21 Dec. 1940) signed by the Abps. of Canterbury (C. G. *Lang) and York (W. *Temple), Card. Hinsley, and the Moderator of the Free Churches (W. H. Armstrong). The collaboration between RCs and other groups was, however, restricted in 1941, when full membership of the 'Sword' was confined to RCs and the non-RC communions set up a separate organization under the title 'Religion and Life', the two movements being connected by a Joint Committee. In 1965 the 'Sword of the Spirit' became the Catholic Institute for International Relations.

S. Mews, 'The Sword of the Spirit: a Catholic cultural crusade of 1940', in W. J. Sheils (ed.), The Church and War (Studies in Church History, 20; Oxford, 1983), pp. 409–30.

Syllabus Errorum. A set of 80 theses, already condemned in earlier pronouncements (encyclicals, allocutions, etc.) of *Pius IX and promulgated as erroneous with '*Quanta Cura' (q.v.) on 8 Dec. 1864. The suggestion of a comprehensive attack on modern errors seems to have originated with V. G. Pecci, Bp. of Perugia (later *Leo XIII), at the Council of Spoleto in 1849. The basis of the Syllabus was a list of 85 errors in a Pastoral Instruction (1860) of O. P. Gerbet, Bp. of Perpignan (1853–64), which, modified in turn into a catalogue of 61 theses with corresponding censures, was approved by an assembly of Bishops at Rome in 1862.

The Syllabus was disposed under ten heads dealing with: (1) Pantheism, Naturalism, and Absolute Rationalism (1–7); (2) Moderate Rationalism (8–14); (3) Indifferentism and Latitudinarianism (15–18); (4) Socialism, Communism, secret societies, Bible societies, and Liberal-clerical societies (various earlier documents); (5) The Church and its Rights (19–38); (6) Civil Society and its relation to the Church (39–55); (7) Natural and Christian Ethics (56–64); (8) Christian Marriage (65–74); (9) The Temporal Power of the Pope (75–6); and (10) Modern Liberalism (77–80). The last (the 80th) of the rejected propositions is the (often misunderstood) thesis that the 'Roman Pontiff can and ought to reconcile and adjust himself with progress, liberalism and modern civilization' (80). The covering letter issued with the Syllabus and 'Quanta Cura' seemed to make it dogmatically binding.

Its issue was greeted with a storm of protest, e.g. from W. E. *Gladstone. In France publication of the Syllabus and Encyclical was forbidden on 1 Jan. 1865, though the prohibition was withdrawn shortly afterwards. F. A. P. *Dupanloup's La Convention du 15 septembre et l'encyclique du 8 décembre (1865), which purported to interpret each condemnation in the light of its original context, did much to mitigate consternation. Many of its fundamental doctrines were embodied in the Dogmatic Constitution, 'De Fide Catholica' at the First *Vatican Council in 1870. In the later years of the 19th cent. the Syllabus was the bulwark of the *Ultramontane party in the RC Church.

Text in ASS 3 (1867), pp. 168–76, and in Pii IX Pontificis Acta, Pars Prima, 3 (no date), pp. 701–17; repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 798–809 (nos. 2901–80). D. McElrath, OFM, The Syllabus of Pius IX: Some Reactions in England (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, 39; 1964). J. B. Bury, History of the Papacy in the Nineteenth Century (ed. R. H. Murray, 1930), esp. Lectures 1 and 2, pp. 1–46. L. Brigué in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2877–923, s.v.

Sylvester I, St, Bp. of Rome from 314 to 335. He filled the see of Rome at a very important era in the history of the Church, but very little is known of him. He occupies, however, an important place in later legend, which asserts that he baptized the Emp. *Constantine (cleansing him from physical leprosy) at the Baptistery of the *Lateran and established the Lateran church as the cathedral of Rome on territory given him by the Emperor. He is also the reputed recipient of the *Donation of Constantine, which provided him with wide temporal rights over the Church. Though he did not himself attend the Council of *Nicaea (325), he was represented by two legates, Vitus and Vincentius. Feast day in the W., 31 Dec.; in the E., 2 Jan.

Jaffé, 1, pp. 28–30. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 170–201; see also pp. cix–cxx. W. Levison, 'Konstantinische Schenkung und Silvester-Legende', in Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, 2 (ST 38; 1924), pp. 159–247, with full refs.; H. Fuhrmann, 'Konstantinische Schenkung und Silvesterlegende in neuer Sicht', Deutsches Archiv, 15 (1959), pp. 523–40. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976), esp. 1, pp. 168–87; see also index, p. 1699, s.v. 'Silvestre'. A. Amore, OFM, and C. M. Carpano in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 11 (Rome, 1968), cols. 1077–82, s.v. 'Silvestro I'. See also bibl. to DONATION OF CONSTANTINE.

Sylvester II (*c.*940–1003), Pope from 999. Gerbert is important both as a Churchman and as a scholar. Educated at the *Benedictine monastery of Aurillac (in the département of Cantal), Gerbert enjoyed the patronage of the Bp. of Vich (Catalonia), with whom he went to Rome in 970 or 971. His encounter there with the Emp. Otto I (962–73) was decisive for his future life, which was to be spent within the orbit of the German Empire. In 972 Gerbert went to *Reims, first as a student and then as a master in the cathedral school. He was made abbot of *Bobbio (*c.*982), but in the face of local opposition he soon returned to Reims. On the deposition of his predecessor, he became Abp. of Reims from 991 to 997; in 998 he became Abp. of Ravenna and a year later Pope. He owed these promotions to the Emps. Otto II (973–83) and Otto III (983–1002), who both regarded him as a loyal servant of the Empire in the troubled country outside Germany, while his difficulties at Reims reflected the decline of the imperial influence in Eastern France after the last of the Carolingian kings had been replaced by Hugh Capet in 987.

His choice of the name Sylvester on his election as Pope was a conscious imitation of *Sylvester I, who had long been regarded as the pattern of Papal co-operation with the Emperor. Otto III, as the new Constantine, would restore the universal Roman Empire, while the Church under Sylvester would recover its original purity. The reality of his rule was not wholly divorced from this ideal. He opposed *simony and upheld clerical *celibacy and did much to strengthen the Church in E. Europe. Archbishoprics were established in Gniezno (Poland) and Esztergom (Hungary), and *Stephen of Hungary was given Papal recognition as King.

Gerbert's scholarly interests covered both the *trivium and the *quadrivium. The chronicler Richer asserts that he taught the complete logica vetus in the school of Reims; if this is so, Gerbert was the first master in Europe to use a substantial part of the logical works of *Aristotle and *Boethius as a practical system of education. Richer also describes his victory over a master from Magdeburg in a court debate before Otto II at Ravenna. Gerbert's surviving work consists of a short logical tractate, De rationali et ratione uti, and a considerable body of mathematical material, some of which may well be derived from his stay in Vich, which was close to the resources of Arabic Spain. The Eucharistic treatise attributed to him is almost certainly the work of Heriger of Lobbes. Gerbert's pupils at Reims included *Abbo of Fleury and *Fulbert of Chartres, who gave his teaching further currency in the 11th cent.

Opera Omnia in J. P. Migne, PL 139. 57–338; Opera Mathematica ed. N. Bubnov (Berlin, 1899). Die Briefsammlung Gerberts von Reims ed. F. Weigle (MGH, Die Briefe der Deutschen Kaiserzeit, 2; 1966), with introd. Eng. tr. of Letters by H. P. Lattin (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 60; New York, 1961). Jaffé, 1, pp. 496–501. Richer, Historia, esp. 3. 43–65, and 4. 99–108 (ed. R. Latouche, vol. 2: Les Classiques de l'histoire de France au Moyen Âge, 17, 1964, pp. 50–80 and 312–32). P. Riche, Gerbert d'Aurillac: Le Pape de l'an mil (1987). P. E. Schramm, Kaiser, Rom und Renovatio (Studien der Bibliothek Warburg, 17; 1929; repr. with additional notes, Darmstadt, 1957), 1, pp. 96–101, 161–76; 2, pp. 64–7. On his scholastic achievement, besides the Opera Mathematica, cited above, see A. van de Vyver, 'Les Œuvres inédites d'Abbon de Fleury', R. Bén. 47 (1935), pp. 125–69, esp. pp. 158–69, and R. W. Southern, The Making of the Middle Ages (1953), esp. pp. 65 f., 175–8, 208. U. Lindgren, Gerbert von Aurillac und das Quadrivium: Untersuchungen zur Bildung im Zeitalter der Ottonen (Sudhoffs Archiv, Beiheft 18; 1976). M. Oldoni, 'Gerberto e la sua storia', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 18 (1977), pp. 1195–270; 21 (1980), pp. 493–622; and 24 (1983), pp. 167–245. Gerberto, scienza, storia e mito: Atti del Gerberti Symposium (Bobbio 25–27 luglio 1983) (Archivum Bobiense, Studia, 2; Bobbio, 1985). Mann, 5 (1910), pp. 1–120. É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2075–83, s.v. 'Silvestre II'; H. P. Lattin in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 858–69, s.v., both with bibl.

Sylvestrines. A monastic *Congregation which follows the Rule of St *Benedict, but with special emphasis on the vow of poverty. It was founded in 1231 by St Sylvester Gozzolini (d. 1267, feast day, 26 Nov.). It joined the Benedictine Confederation in 1973. It has houses in Italy, the USA, Asia, and Australia.

[P. Helyot], Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux et militaires, 6 (1718), pp. 170–8. M. Papi in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 302 f., s.v. 'Benedictines, Sylvestrine'; I. Di Nicola, Silvestrine, and others, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1507–19, s.v. 'Silvestrini', with bibl.

Symeon. See SIMEON.

Symmachus (prob. later 2nd cent.), translator of the Gk. version of the OT reproduced in the 4th column of *Origen's *Hexapla. Hardly anything is known of his life. According to *Eusebius (HE 6. 17) and *Jerome (De Vir. Ill. 16) he was an *Ebionite, but *Epiphanius (De Mensuris et Ponderibus, 16) speaks of him as a Samaritan who became a Jewish proselyte. From *Irenaeus' silence it has been argued that Symmachus was later than his time, and it is a matter of dispute whether Symmachus' translation or that of *Theodotion was the earlier. Unlike *Aquila, Symmachus preferred a readable style and palatable rendering to verbal accuracy, and he modified the anthropomorphic expressions of the Hebrew text. The extant fragments of his work are therefore of limited value for critical purposes.

G. *Mercati, L'età di Simmaco l'interprete e S. Epifanio (Modena, 1892). H. B. *Swete, Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 49–53. H. J. Schoeps, 'Symmachusstudien. [1.] Der Bibelübersetzer Symmachus als Ebionitischer Theologe', Coniectanea Neotestamentica, 6 (Uppsala, 1942), pp. 65–93; 2. 'Mythologisches bei Symmachus', Biblica, 26 (1945), pp. 100–11; 3. 'Symmachus und der Midrasch', ibid. 29 (1948), pp. 31–51; all repr. in Aus frühchristlicher Zeit (Tübingen, 1950), pp. 82–119. D. Barthélemy, OP, Les Devanciers d'Aquila (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 10; Leiden, 1963), esp. pp. 261–5; id., 'Qui est Symmaque?', Catholic Biblical Quarterly, 36 (1974), pp. 451–65, repr. in his Études d'histoire du texte de l'Ancien Testament (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis, 21; 1978), pp. 307–21. S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 94–9. J. R. Busto Saiz, La Traducción de Símaco en el libro de los Salmos (Textos y estudios 'Cardinal Cisneros', 22; 1978), incl. text. A. Salvesen, Symmachus in the Pentateuch (Journal of Semitic Studies, Monograph 15; Manchester, 1991). J. Gwynn in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 748 f., s.v. 'Symmachus (2)'.

Symmachus, St (d. 514), Pope from 498. A native of Sardinia, Symmachus was appointed Pope by the majority to oppose the concessions to the Emp. and Patr. of *Constantinople advocated by the party of his predecessor, Anastasius II, which elected against him the archpriest Laurentius. As the validity of the election of Symmachus was confirmed by the Gothic King, *Theodoric, the partisans of Laurentius cast suspicion upon the Pope's personal character, accused him of simony and of celebrating Easter at the wrong date, and occupied most of the Roman churches. In 501 the King summoned a council of bishops (the 'Palmary Synod') to Rome to deal with these charges, but Symmachus, who had been attacked on the way, refused to appear. The synod, on the other hand, declared itself incompetent to pronounce him guilty and asserted him to be the rightful Pope. Theodoric, however, allowed Laurentius to return to Rome, and Symmachus was restricted to St Peter's, though he had the support of the majority of the people and, among others, the Abps. of Milan and *Ravenna. The troubles, which led to much bloodshed in the city, lasted till 506. In 507, owing to the good offices of the Alexandrian deacon Dioscurus, Theodoric withdrew his opposition. During the latter part of his reign Symmachus devoted himself to the defence of the Catholic faith against the *Henoticon of *Zeno, upheld by Emp. Anastasius, and against the *Manichaeans, whom he expelled from Rome. He confirmed the primatial rights of *Arles over the Gallican and Spanish Churches and sent the pallium to *Caesarius, its archbishop, who was thus the first bishop outside Italy to receive the privilege. He also liberally assisted the poor and the African Catholics who were persecuted by the Arians, and embellished many Roman churches, esp. St Peter's. Among his liturgical innovations were the singing of Gloria in excelsis on Sundays and the feasts of martyrs (but only by bishops). During his reign *Dionysius Exiguus compiled his collection of Latin canons, and the so-called 'Symmachian Forgeries', a collection of writings intended to prove from spurious precedents that the Pope cannot be judged by any man, were also issued. Feast day, 19 July.

Epistolae et Decreta in A. Thiel (ed.), Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum Genuinae, 1 (Brunswick, 1867), pp. 641–738; Acts of the synods held in Rome in 499, 501, and 502 also ed. T. *Mommsen in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 12 (1894), pp. 395–455. Jaffé, 1, pp. 96–100. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 546 f. (nos. 1678–82). LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 260–8; see also pp. cxxxiii–cxl. A. Alessandrini, 'Teodorico e Papa Simmaco durante lo scisma laurenziano', Archivio della R. Deputazione Romana di Storia Patria, 67 (1944), pp. 152–207; G. B. Picotti, 'I sinodi romani nello scisma laurenziano', Studi storici in onore di Gioacchino Volpe, 2 (Florence, 1958), pp. 741–86; C. Pietri, 'Le sénat, le peuple chrétien, et les partis du cirque sous le pape Symmaque (498–514)', Mélanges d'archéologie et d'histoire de l'École française de Rome, 78 (1966), pp. 123–39; P. A. B. Llewellyn, 'The Roman Church during the Laurentian Schism: Priests and Senators', Church History, 45 (1976), pp. 417–27. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, 2 (1933), pp. 87–129. É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 2984–90, s.v. 'Symmaque (Saint)'; J. N. D. Kelly, Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 50–2.

synagogue (Gk. συναγωγή). The origins of the Jewish institution of the synagogue are debated. It is possible that Jews introduced synagogues as regular meeting-places for worship during the Babylonian exile (6th cent. BC), when they could no longer take part in the *Temple worship at Jerusalem, but the first clear evidence for synagogue buildings comes from Egypt in the Hellenistic period. At any rate, in NT times synagogues were well established, and they have remained a characteristic feature of Jewry down to the present day.

The worship of the synagogue, unlike that of the Temple, has always been non-sacrificial. It consists chiefly of readings from Scripture, accompanied by prayers, canticles, and sometimes a sermon. The most important piece of furniture is the 'Ark', a kind of cupboard in which the sacred rolls of the Law are kept. At least ten adult males are required for public worship, and certain officials are responsible for the various duties.

There is ample evidence in the Gospels that the Lord took part in synagogue worship and frequently taught or preached in the synagogue (e.g. Lk. 4: 16: 'as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day'; also Mt. 13: 54 and Jn. 6: 59). In the early Church, St *Paul is reported as going into the synagogue (e.g. Acts 17: 1–2), and according to the account of his mission presented in Acts, it was his normal practice to preach the Gospel in the synagogue first in the places he visited on his missionary journeys, and to turn to the Gentiles only after the Jews had failed to respond to his teaching (Acts 13: 46). In James 2: 2 the Greek word συναγωγή is still applied to the assembly in which Christians gathered for worship, but in post-biblical times it came to be used of Jewry in general, as contrasted with the Christian Church. The ruins of many synagogues have been excavated in Palestine. Most date from the 3rd cent. AD or later (e.g. that at Tell Hûm, the site of *Capernaum), but the buildings identified at Masada and Herodium date to the 1st cent. AD and that at Gamala goes back to the 1st cent. BC. Important synagogues have been excavated outside Palestine at *Dura Europos and *Sardis (qq.v.).

I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1913), pp. 444–510 ('Organisation des jüdischen Gottesdienstes'); S. Krauss, Synagogale Altertümer (1922). H. Kohl and C. Watzinger, Antike Synagogen in Galiläa (1916); E. L. Sukenik, Ancient Synagogues in Palestine and Greece (Schweich Lectures for 1930; 1934). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 423–54. L. I. Levine (ed.), Ancient Synagogues Revealed (Jerusalem, 1981); id. (ed.), The Synagogue in Late Antiquity (Philadelphia [1987]). L. L. Grabbe, 'Synagogues in Pre-70 Palestine: a Re-Assessment', JTS NS 39 (1988), pp. 401–10. J. Gutmann (ed.), Ancient Synagogues: The State of Research (Brown Judaic Studies, 22; Chico, Calif. [1981]). R. Krautheimer, Mittelalterliche Synagogen (1927). W. Schrage in TWNT 7 (1964), pp. 798–850 (Eng. tr., 1971, pp. 798–852), s.v. συναγωγή, with extensive bibl.; L. I. Rabinowitz and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 15 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 579–629, s.v.

Synagogue, Great. Acc. to Jewish tradition, a legislative body of 120 members which was established in *Jerusalem in the time of *Ezra and *Nehemiah (5th cent. BC). Its activities were held to have included the fixing of the canon and text of the Hebrew Scriptures. The grounds for supposing that such a permanently constituted body ever existed, however, are dubious, the oldest reference to it being in the Jewish treatise Pirqe Aboth (3rd cent. AD).

S. Krauss, 'The Great Synod', JQR 10 (1898), pp. 347–77. L. Finkelstein in W. D. Davies and L. Finkelstein (eds.), The Cambridge History of Judaism 2 (1989), pp. 229–44. J. A. Selbie in HDB, 4 (1902), pp. 643 f., s.v.; W. Bacher in JE 11 (1905), pp. 640–3, s.v.; D. Sperber in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 15 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 629–31, s.v.

Synapte (Gk. συναπτή, 'joined together'). In the E. Church, a prayer constructed in the form of a litany (i.e. a series of suffrages 'linked together'), used in the Liturgy and other services. It consists of short petitions said by the deacon, to which choir or congregation respond with Kyrie eleison, while at the end there is a closing prayer by the priest.

Synaxarion (Gk. συναξάριον). (1) In the E. Church, a short account of a saint or feast appointed to be read at the early morning service of *Orthros. (2) The book which contains, inter alia, these passages, arranged acc. to the calendar ('The Greater Synaxarion'). (3) Another book which merely enumerates the feasts to be observed every day, with a reference to the appropriate biblical lessons ('The Lesser Synaxarion'). Confusion arises through these various uses, and H. *Delehaye recommends that the word be confined to senses (1) and (2). See also MENOLOGION.

synaxis (Gk. σύναξις, 'an assembly' or 'congregation', a word cognate with and equivalent to συναγωγή, 'synagogue', the use of which was avoided by Christian writers, doubtless on account of its Jewish associations). The term is applicable to any assembly for public worship and prayer, inclusive of the Eucharist or 'liturgical synaxis', and is so used in the E. Church. In the W. it was used in early times esp. of the 'aliturgical synaxis', or non-Eucharistic service, consisting of Psalms, lessons from Scripture, and prayers. Some scholars hold that the opening part of the Eucharist (the pre-anaphoral rite) developed out of this 'aliturgical synaxis'; others that it was an alternative service used when the Eucharist was not celebrated. It was also at one time regarded as the precursor of the Divine *Office, but this view has generally been abandoned.

syncellus (a hybrid word: Gk. σύν + Lat. cella; i.e., literally, a person who shares a cell with someone else). In the Byzantine Church, an ecclesiastic who lived continually with a bishop, esp. in the capacity of a domestic chaplain and in order to bear witness to the purity of the bishop's moral life. In the W. St *Augustine of Canterbury is said by *Leo III to have been the syncellus of St *Gregory the Great. In later times the word was used of a dignitary associated as counsellor with a prelate who subsequently succeeded to his office.

Syncellus, George (*fl. c.*800). See GEORGE SYNCELLUS. He is often referred to simply as 'Syncellus'.

syncretism. The attempt to combine different or opposite doctrines and practices, esp. in reference to philosophical and religious systems. The term came into prominence in the 17th cent., when it was applied to the teaching of G. *Calixtus, who undertook to unite the Reformation Churches in Germany with each other and with the Catholic Church on the basis of the Apostles' Creed and the doctrine of the first five centuries. It is also frequently applied to the unifying cultural forces in the Mediterranean civilization of the Hellenistic and Roman periods, and in the history of religion to any fusion of various beliefs and practices, e.g. to some tendencies in pre-Christian Judaism. In the RC theology of grace the term is used of attempts to combine *Thomist and *Molinist teaching.

synderesis. See SYNTERESIS.

synergism. The teaching of P. *Melanchthon that in the act of conversion the human will can co-operate with the Holy Spirit and God's grace. By insisting that the primary cause of such conversion is the Holy Spirit and not the will Melanchthon rebutted the charge of *Pelagianism which his opponents raised against him. His teaching had many points of contact with the *Semipelagianism (*Cassian, etc.) of the 5th cent. The long controversy provoked by Melanchthon ended only with the publication of the 'Formula of *Concord' in 1577.

Synesius (*c.*370–*c.*413), Bp. of Ptolemais. A native of Cyrene and descended from an ancient family, perhaps now Christian, he studied at *Alexandria under the celebrated *Neoplatonist philosopher *Hypatia. In 403/4 he married a Christian wife, with the blessing of *Theophilus, Patr. of Alexandria. Having won the confidence and affection of his fellow-countrymen by a successful embassy to the Imperial court at *Constantinople, *c.*410 he was chosen Bp. of Ptolemais. At first he hesitated, wishing to continue living with his wife and to retain certain of his philosophical beliefs, e.g. in the pre-existence of the soul and the eternity of the world; but eventually, without engaging himself to give up either his wife or his doctrines, he was consecrated by Theophilus. A series of domestic and other tragedies marked his episcopate, though he did not survive to witness the murder of Hypatia in 415. He was succeeded in the see by his younger brother Euoptius.

Before he became a bishop, Synesius wrote a number of short treatises; they are typical of cultivated, but non-professional, philosophy, and none of them betray anything distinctively Christian. His collection of hymns in the Doric dialect (nine in all; the tenth, the well-known 'Lord Jesus, think on me' (EH 77) is the work of a copyist who called himself George the Sinner) expresses a complex doctrine of the Trinity and Incarnation, deeply influenced by a form of *Neoplatonism which has marked parallels with that of Marius *Victorinus. His 156 surviving letters are an entertaining and important source for the study of provincial Church life.

Works ed. D. *Petavius (Paris, 1612), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 66. 1021–756; crit. edn. of Hymns and Opuscula by N. Terzaghi (2 vols., Rome, 1939–44) and of his Letters by A. Garzya (ibid., 1979). Hymns also ed., with Ital. tr., by A. dell'Era (Classici Greci, 3; Rome, 1968), and, with Fr. tr., by C. Lacombrade (Collection des Universités de France, Paris, 1978). A. dell'Era, Appunti sulla tradizione manoscritta degli inni di Sinesio (Temi et Testi, 16; 1969). Eng. tr. of Letters by A. FitzGerald (London, 1926); of Essays and Hymns by id. (2 vols., ibid., 1930). On Synesius' life and works, studies by G. Grützmacher (Leipzig, 1913), J. C. Pando (Catholic University of America, Patristic Studies, 63; 1940), C. Lacombrade (Paris, 1951), J. Bregman (Berkeley, etc., and London, 1982), S. Vollenweider (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 35; 1985), D. Roques (Études d'Antiquités Africaines, 1987), and A. Cameron and J. Long, Barbarians and Politics at the Court of Arcadius (Berkeley, etc., and Oxford [1993]). K. Treu, Synesios von Kyrene: Ein Kommentar zu seinem 'Dion' (TU 71; 1958). D. Roques, Études sur la Correspondance de Synésios de Cyrène (Collection Latomos, 205; Brussels, 1989). J. H. W. G. Liebeschuetz, 'Why did Synesius become bishop of Ptolemais?', Byzantion, 56 (1986), pp. 180–95; id., Barbarians and Bishops (Oxford, 1990), esp. pp. 228–35 and 253–72. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 98–101 (nos. 5630–40). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 282 f. and 605. T. R. Halcomb in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 756–80, s.v. 'Synesius (2)'; E. Cavalcanti in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3217–19, s.v. 'Sinesio di Cirene'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 806.

Synod. See COUNCIL.

Synod, General, of the C of E. See the following entry.

Synodical Government. The system of government of the C of E introduced by the Synodical Government Measure 1969, which took effect the following year. This was designed to achieve a more effective and coherent system, to give a greater part to the laity, and to avoid the delays caused by the dual control of the *Convocations and the *Church Assembly.

Under the Measure a General Synod took over the powers of the Church Assembly, which ceased to exist, and also some of those of the Convocations, though these remained in being. It is comprised of the members of the Upper Houses of the Convocations of Canterbury and York, a House of Clergy consisting of the two Lower Houses of the Convocations, somewhat reduced in size, and a House of Laity of not more than 250 elected members. The House of Laity of the General Synod is elected by members of the Houses of Laity of the deanery synods. The General Synod is required to meet at least twice a year. Matters concerning doctrinal formulae, the services of the Church and the administration of the Sacraments can be approved only in terms proposed by the House of Bishops.

Diocesan conferences were replaced by diocesan synods, each consisting of the Bishop, the House of Clergy, and the House of Laity. Members of the two latter are elected by the respective Houses of deanery synods. In 1980 a House of Bishops was constituted; it consists of the diocesan Bishop, every *suffragan Bishop, and such other Bishops working in the diocese as the diocesan Bishop may nominate. The functions of the diocesan synods remain the same as those of the previous diocesan conferences, but the number of members is considerably smaller, so that not all parishes are directly represented. The former ruridecanal conferences were replaced by deanery synods, which became the connecting link between the diocese and the parish. The lowest of the deliberative bodies remain the parochial church councils, the functions of which are fundamentally unchanged, though the relationships with the diocese and diocesan and deanery synods are emphasized. The base of the whole system continues to be the electoral roll maintained by every parish, from which elections are made, to the deanery synod triennially and to the parochial church council annually, at the annual parochial church meeting held on or before 30 Apr. each year.

Synodicon. The term is applied:

(1) In a general sense to a synodal act or a collection of such acts (e.g. W. *Beveridge's Synodicon, 1672).

(2) To a liturgical text for use in the E. Church on the 'Feast of *Orthodoxy'. Composed by Patr. Methodius I *c.*843 for the new feast, it was worked over by Sergius II *c.*1000 and since then has been frequently modified by excising old names and inserting new ones. Its form is akin to a litany, and it contains a series of praises for the heroes of orthodoxy and for Emperors and bishops, followed by anathemas against numerous heresies. In modern times it is not customary to recite it publicly in extenso.

(2) Crit. edn. and comm. by J. Gouillard, Le Synodikon de l'Orthodoxie (Centre de Recherche d'Histoire et Civilisation Byzantines, Travaux et Mémoires, 2; 1967). Earlier edns. in Mansi, 13 (Florence, 1767), cols. 812–20 (under the year 1027); and in J. P. Migne, PG 120. 728–36. In its current official form it is contained in edns. of the *Triodion for the First Sunday in Lent.

Synoptic Problem. The problem of the literary relationship between the three 'Synoptic Gospels' (Mt., Mk., Lk.), posed by the amount of subject-matter which they share and the many similarities in wording and order. Common dependence on oral traditions (including *Aramaic ones) may account for some of the phenomena, but there are such close parallels in the Greek that a direct literary connection is generally accepted.

In modern times most scholars have held (1) that Mk. was the earliest of the three Synoptic Gospels and that it was used as a source by Mt. and Lk., and (2) that for the considerable non-Marcan material common to Mt. and Lk. their authors drew independently on a lost common source (or sources) known to critics as '*Q' (q.v.). The priority of Mk., which fits well with his comparative brevity and vivid narrative, his unpolished language, and the fact that the Marcan material appears in substantially the same order in Mt. and Lk., is generally accepted; a detailed comparison of parallel passages offers strong support to this judgement. The 'Q'-hypothesis is widely thought to account more easily than the alternative theories (that the author of Lk. utilized Mt. or vice versa) for the variations in order of the relevant material and also for the cases where it is Lk. (and not, as is usual, Mt.) that appears to preserve the older version of a particular saying. This 'two-document' hypothesis (that Mt. and Lk. are based on Mk. and 'Q'), which was worked out mainly in Germany in the 19th cent., was given classic expression and amplified by B. H. *Streeter; it came to be almost universally accepted and is still widely held.

In the second half of the 20th cent. a few scholars have challenged the priority of Mk., and several the existence of 'Q'. The view that Mt. was the oldest Gospel and Mk.'s chief source, which is found in St *Augustine and was officially upheld by the RC *Biblical Commission in 1912, has in modern times been defended by B. C. Butler, OSB, and others. An Aramaic Matthew has also been postulated as the earliest Gospel. More recently W. R. Farmer and others have revived the theory of J. J. *Griesbach that Mk. was the latest of the three Gospels and utilized both Mt. and Lk.; in that case it is hard to see why Mk. should ever have been written.

J. C. Hawkins, Horae Synopticae (Oxford, 1899); [Oxford] Studies in the Synoptic Problem, ed. W. *Sanday (ibid., 1911); B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924); B. C. Butler, OSB, The Originality of St Matthew (Cambridge, 1951); W. R. Farmer, The Synoptic Problem: A Critical Analysis (New York, 1964); E. P. Sanders, The Tendencies of the Synoptic Tradition (Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series, 9; Cambridge, 1969); D. G. Miller (ed.), Jesus and Man's Hope, 1 (Pittsburgh [1970]); F. Neirynck, The Minor Agreements of Matthew and Luke against Mark, with a Cumulative List (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 37; 1974); H.-H. Stoldt, Geschichte und Kritik der Markushypothese (Göttingen, 1977; Eng. tr., 1980); R. M. Rist, On the Independence of Matthew and Mark (Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series, 32; 1978); G. M. Styler, 'The Priority of Mark', in C. F. D. Moule, The Birth of the New Testament (Black's NT Comm., 3rd edn., 1981), pp. 285–316; W. R. Farmer (ed.), New Synoptic Studies: The Cambridge Gospel Conference and Beyond (Macon, Ga. [1983]); E. P. Sanders and M. Davies, Studying the Synoptic Gospels (1989), pp. 51–119; D. L. Dungan (ed.), The Interrelations of the Gospels: A Symposium led by M.-É. Boismard and others, ... Jerusalem, 1984 (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 95; 1990). C. M. Tuckett in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 263–70, s.v.

For parallel texts of the three Gospels in English see H. F. D. Sparks, A Synopsis of the Gospels: The Synoptic Gospels with Johannine Parallels (1964); for the Greek text, A. *Huck, Synopse der drei ersten Evangelien (1892 and later; 13th edn., with introd. in Ger. and Eng., by H. Greeven, Tübingen, 1981). K. Aland, Synopsis Quattuor Evangeliorum locis parallelis evangeliorum apocryphorum et patrum adhibitis (Stuttgart, 1964).

synteresis, also 'synderesis'. A technical term used by St *Thomas Aquinas (e.g. 'De Veritate', q. 17. a. 2) and other Scholastic theologians for our knowledge of the first principles of moral action. It appears to derive from a scribal error in St *Jerome's 'Commentary on Ezekiel' (on Ezek. 1: 7), where συντήρησις (not attested elsewhere in this sense) occurs as a corruption of συνείδησις, the normal Greek word for 'conscience'. The medieval mystics, e.g. Meister *Eckhart, sometimes identify it with the mysterious ground of the soul where the mystic union takes place.

O. Renz, Die Synteresis nach dem heiligen Thomas von Aquin (1911); O. Lottin, OSB, Psychologie et morale aux xii^e et xiii^e siècles, 2 (1948), pp. 103–349. A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 1407–12, s.v. 'Synderesis'.

Syriac. The Syriac language is a branch of Aramaic which was spoken in *Edessa and its neighbourhood from shortly before the beginning of the Christian era. It was extensively used in the early Church owing to the active Christian communities in those parts. From an early date it was employed in translations of the Bible (see DIATESSARON; OLD SYRIAC VERSION; PESHITTA; SYRO-HEXAPLA), translations of other works from the Greek, and for original Syriac compositions. After the religious divisions in the 5th cent. it continued in general use in both the *Church of the East and the *Syrian Orthodox Church. Like *Hebrew, its alphabet is derived from the so-called Phoenician alphabet and is fundamentally consonantal. There are three forms of script: Estrangelo, East Syrian (or 'Nestorian'), and Serto (or 'Jacobite').

The surviving literature, which dates mainly from the 2nd to the 13th cents. AD, is almost wholly Christian. The Syriac Versions of the Bible are of exceptional value to the textual critic of the Scriptures on account of their early date and the natural accuracy of Syriac scholars. A large number of Gk. patristic works survive only in Syriac. These (generally very literal) versions sometimes make it possible to recover the Greek with an approach to certainty. Among the most important Syriac authors were *Aphrahat, St *Ephraem Syrus, *Philoxenus, *Jacob of Edessa, *Isaac of Nineveh, *Moses bar Kepha, and *Bar Hebraeus. One of the outstanding literary genres was that of liturgical poetry: besides Ephraem, *Jacob of Sarug and *Narsai are pre-eminent in this field. When Arabic became the current vernacular, Syriac increasingly became an artificial language, though it continues in restricted use to the present day. Various modern Syriac (neo-Aramaic) dialects also survive.

The most important collections of Syriac MSS are now preserved in the *Vatican and the British Library. Notable editors of Syriac texts include the *Assemani, W. *Cureton, W. Wright, G. *Bickell, R. Duval, P. Bedjan, Cong. Orat., I. E. Rahmani, E. W. Brooks, R. Graffin, F. Nau, J. B. Chabot, A. *Baumstark, E. Beck, A. de Halleux, OFM, F. Graffin, SJ, and A. Vööbus.

The chief modern collections of pr. texts incl. many items in the series Horae Semiticae (London, 1903 ff.); others issued by the Text and Translation Society (ibid., 1902 ff.); others in PO; Patrologia Syriaca (3 vols., Paris, 1894–1926); CSCO, Scriptores Syri (Paris, etc., 1907–19; Louvain, 1919 ff.); also texts and trs. in Woodbrooke Studies: Christian Documents in Syriac, Arabic, and Garshūni, ed. and tr. by A. Mingana (7 vols., Cambridge, 1927–34). C. Moss, Catalogue of Syriac Printed Books and Related Literature in the British Museum (posthumously pub., London, 1962). S. P. Brock, 'Syriac Studies 1960–1970', Parole de l'Orient, 4 (1973), pp. 393–465; id., 'Syriac Studies 1971–1980', ibid. 10 (1981–2), pp. 291–412; id., 'Syriac Studies 1981–1985', ibid. 14 (1987), pp. 289–360. Thesaurus Syriacus by R. P. Smith (2 vols., Oxford, 1879; suppl. by J. P. Margoliouth, 1927); Lexicon Syriacum by C. Brockelmann (Edinburgh and Berlin, 1895; 2nd edn., Halle, 1928). Compendious Syriac Dictionary by J. P. Margoliouth (Oxford, 1903). Dictionary of the Dialects of Vernacular Syriac by

A. J. Maclean (ibid., 1901). Lexicon to Syriac NT by W. Jennings and U. Gantillon (ibid., 1926). Kurzgefasste syrische Grammatik by T. Nöldeke (Leipzig, 1880; Eng. tr. as Compendious Syriac Grammar by J. A. Crichton, 1904); shorter Syrische Grammatik by C. Brockelmann (Berlin, etc., 1899; many subsequent edns.); Grammatik der neusyrischen Sprache by T. Nöldeke (Leipzig, 1868); Grammar of the Dialects of Vernacular Syriac by A. J. Maclean (Cambridge, 1895). R. Duval, Traité de grammaire syriaque (1881; repr. Amsterdam, 1969). J. S. Assemani, Bibliotheca Orientalis (3 vols. in 4 parts, Rome, 1719–28; repr., Hildesheim, 1975). W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (1894); R. Duval, La Littérature syriaque (1899); A. Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur mit Ausschluss der christlich-palästinensischen Texte (1922); J. B. Chabot, Littérature syriaque (1935). J. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (Rome, 1958; 2nd edn., 1965); R. Macuch, Geschichte der spät- und neusyrischen Literatur (1976). W. S. McCullough, A Short History of Syriac Christianity to the Rise of Islam (Chico, Calif. [1982]). S. [P.] Brock, 'An Introduction to Syriac Studies', in J. H. Eaton (ed.), Horizons in Semitic Studies (Birmingham, 1980), pp. 1–33. P. Bettiolo, 'Lineamenti di Patrologia Siriaca', in A. Quacquarelli (ed.), Complementi interdisciplinari di Patrologia (1989), pp. 503–603. M. Albert, 'Langue et littérature syriaques', in id. and others (eds.), Christianisme orientaux (1993), pp. 297–372. W. Heinrichs (ed.), Studies in Neo-Aramaic (Atlanta, Ga., 1990), with bibl. by G. Kroikoff, pp. 3–26. L'Orient syrien (12 vols., Paris, 1956–67). A. Vööbus in EB (1968 edn.), 21, pp. 586–90, s.v. 'Syriac Literature'.

Syriac Versions of the Bible.

(1) Old Testament. The principal are: (a) The *Peshitta version, perhaps in part made by Jews, probably in the early 2nd cent., for the Jewish community at *Edessa. Apart from Proverbs (where the Jewish *Targum derives from the Peshitta), this version was used solely by Syriac-speaking Christian communities. (b) The *Syro-Hexapla, a close rendering of *Origen's text of the Septuagint made at Alexandria *c.*616–17 by the *Syrian Orthodox bishop, Paul of Tella.

(2) New Testament. In early times the Gospels were known in two forms: (a) The Evangeliôn da-Měhallětē, or 'Gospel of the Mixed', a Syriac version of *Tatian's *Diatessaron; and (b) the Evangeliôn da-Měpharrěshē, or 'Gospel of the Separated' (i.e. the four Gospels), known as the '*Old Syriac'. It is probable that the 'Gospel of the Separated' was made not earlier than 200, and that the 'Syriac Diatessaron' is prior to and independent of it. The Old Syriac NT was the basis of the NT Peshitta revision.

Subsequent to the Peshitta, two further versions of the NT were made: (c) the *Philoxenian, in 508, which included the Books omitted from the Peshitta canon, and (d) the *Harklean, in 616, a revision of the Philoxenian and more literal than its predecessor in rendering the Greek. With the exception of the Books omitted from the Peshitta, the Philoxenian version has perished.

The Peshitta remains the authorized version of the Syriac-speaking Churches. See also PESHITTA.

Introductory account in B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 3–98, incl. contribution by S. P. Brock. A. Vööbus, Studies in the History of the Gospel Text in Syriac (CSCO 128 and 496, Subsidia, 3 and 79; 1951–78). M. Black, 'The Syriac Versional Tradition', in K. Aland (ed.), Die alten Übersetzungen des Neuen Testaments, die Kirchenväterzitate und Lektionare (Arbeiten zur Neutestamentlichen Textforschung, 5; 1972), pp. 120–59, with full refs. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 834–84, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', 6: 'Versions syriaques'; A. Vööbus in The Interpreter's Dictionary of The Bible, Suppl. Vol. (Nashville, 1976), pp. 848–54, s.v.; S. P. Brock and B. Aland in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 181–96, s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen', I. 4: 'Die Übersetzungen ins Syrische'; S. P. Brock in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 794–9, s.v. 'Versions, Ancient (Syriac)'. For further bibl. see arts. on separate items cited above.

Syrian Catholics. A body of *Uniat Christians descended from the Syrian Orthodox. In the latter part of the 16th cent. relations were established between the Syrian Orthodox Church and the Papacy, which led to some conversions in the 17th cent., and the election of a Catholic, Andrew Akhijan, to the see of Aleppo in 1656. The Catholics had, however, a precarious existence and seem to have virtually disappeared soon after 1700. The present Church traces its existence to the accession of Mar Michael Garweh, who had become a RC, to the archbishopric of Aleppo in 1783, since when a Catholic minority has coexisted with the Syrian Orthodox in Syria. In 1830 their existence as a separate body was formally recognized by the Turks. The Patr., Ignatius Ephrem II Rahmani (1898–1929), became known in the W. as a scholar of distinction through his edition of the Testamentum Domini (1899). The seat of the patriarchate is Beirut. Their membership in the Middle East is about 90,000, with a further 7,000 in Europe and N. and S. America.

D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wis., rev. edn., 1935), pp. 163–79; further rev. as The Christian Churches of the East, 1 (1961), pp. 147–57. W. de Vries, SJ, 'Dreihundert Jahre syrisch-katholische Hierarchie', Ostkirchliche Studien, 5 (1956), pp. 137–57. C. Sélis, Les Syriens orthodoxes et catholiques (Turnhout [1988]). S. Vailhé, AA, in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 1430–3, s.v. 'Antioche, V. Patriarcat syrien catholique'; I. Ziade, ibid., 14 (pt. 2; 1946), cols. 3017–88, s.v. 'Syrienne (Église)', esp. cols. 3023 f. (Droit Canonique), 3025–8 (Liturgie, with refs. to edns. of texts), and 3078–80 (Hiérarchie); G. Khouri-Sarkis in NCE 13 (1969), pp. 901–5, s.v. 'Syrian Rite'. For edns. of liturgical texts see also A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (3rd edn., 1953), pp. 244 f.; Eng. tr. (1958), pp. 221 f.

Syrian Orthodox Church. One of the *Oriental Orthodox Churches; its adherents are often called *Jacobites (after *Jacob Baradaeus) or *Monophysites (because of their rejection of *dyophysite Christology). The Syrian Orthodox Church emerged as a separate Church in the aftermath of the Council of *Chalcedon (451), which it does not recognize; an independent hierarchy under a Patriarch of *Antioch was built up in the 6th cent. In the 7th–9th cents. Syrian Orthodox scholars, such as *Jacob of Edessa, *George, 'Bp. of the Arabians', and *Moses bar Kepha, played an important role in transmitting Greek learning to the Arab world. *Bar Hebraeus was an outstanding scholar and ecclesiastic of the Middle Ages.

During the 14th cent. the numbers of Syrian Orthodox were greatly reduced by the Mongol invasions; at the end of the 18th cent. they were further diminished by the establishment of a separate *Uniat patriarchate of Antioch (see SYRIAN CATHOLICS); at the turn of the 20th cent. they suffered from massacres at the hands of the Turks. They may number *c.*200,000 in the Middle East, 100,000 in Europe and N. and S. America, and perhaps something over a million in S. *India (*Malabar Christians), where the local head of the Church has, since 1964, had the title

'Catholicos of the East'. The seat of the patriarchate, after many peregrinations over the centuries, is now in Damascus. There are 23 archdioceses, including one in America and one in Europe. In the Middle East *Tur 'Abdin has been one of the main centres of Syrian Orthodox culture; since the 1960s, however, large numbers of Syrian Orthodox have emigrated to W. Europe, and the monastery of St Ephrem in the Netherlands (consecrated in 1984) is active in publishing Syriac liturgical and other texts. Since 1960 the Syrian Orthodox Church has been a member of the *World Council of Churches.

The liturgical language is Syriac, the normal anaphora being that of St *James, and the Church has a rich literary heritage (see SYRIAC). Ignatius Ephrem Barsaum (Patriarch, 1933–57) was the author of a valuable history of Syrian Orthodox literature in Arabic (Aleppo, 2nd edn., 1956; Syriac translation, Qamishlieh, 1967).

E. Honigmann, Évêques et évêchés monophysites d'Asie antérieure au VI' siècle (CSCO, Subsidia 2; 1951); id., Le couvent de Barsaumā et Patriarcat Jacobite d'Antioche et de Syrie (ibid. 7; 1954). W. Hage, Die syrisch-jakobitische Kirche in frühislamischer Zeit nach orientalischen Quellen (Wiesbaden, 1966). P. Kawerau, Die jakobitische Kirche im Zeitalter der syrischen Renaissance (Berliner Byzantinische Arbeiten, 3; 1955). B. Spuler, Handbuch der Orientalistik, Abteilung 1, Band 8, Abschnitt 2 (Leiden, 1961), pp. 170–216. D. Attwater, The Christian Churches of the East, 2 (London, 1961), pp. 204–18; A. K. Arvanites, Ἐπίτομος ἱστορία Συρο-Ιακωβιτικῆς Ἀρμενικῆς καὶ Αἰθιοπικῆς Ἐκκλησίας (Athens, 1967), pp. 5–51; A. S. Atiya, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 167–235. C. Sélis, Les Syriens orthodoxes et catholiques (Turnhout [1988]). J. Joseph, Muslim–Christian Relations and Inter-Christian Rivalries in the Middle East: The case of the Jacobites in an age of transition (Albany, NY, 1983). W. de Vries, SJ, Sakramententheologie bei den syrischen Monophysiten (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 125; 1940). J. M. Fiey, Pour un Oriens Christianus Novus: Répertoire des diocèses syriaques orientaux et occidentaux (Beiruter Texte und Studien, 49; 1993). Current information in the annual 'Chronique' in Proche-Orient Chrétien (Jerusalem, 1951 ff.). See also bibl. to MONOPHYSITISM, SYRIAC, and TUR 'ABDIN.

Syrian text of the NT. The name applied by B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort to an edition of the Greek text of the NT which was made, as they held, in or near *Antioch in Syria c. AD 300, and of which *Lucian of Antioch was the probable author. See also LUCIANIC TEXT.

Syro-Chaldaeans. An alternative name for the *Chaldean Christians, i.e. the descendants of the ancient *Church of the East now in communion with the see of Rome.

Syro-Hexapla. The translation into *Syriac of the Greek text of the *Septuagint contained in *Origen's *Hexapla, which was made in 616–17 by Paul, the *Syrian Orthodox Bp. of Tella in Mesopotamia. It was produced with great care and accuracy, preserving Origen's critical symbols, which have disappeared from nearly all the Greek MSS copied from the original Hexapla. It is thus an important witness to the text of the OT.

The complete text, in 2 vols., was still known to A. Masius in the 16th cent., but of these only vol. 2 (Job–Mal.) survives, in the *Ambrosiana; it was ed. by A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta Sacra et Profana, 7 (Milan, 1874; photolithographic text). Most of the surviving remnants of other Books are ed. by P. de *Lagarde, Bibliothecae Syriacae (Göttingen, 1892), pp. 1–256. Further texts in W. Baars, New Syro-Hexaplaric Texts, edited, commented on and compared with the Septuagint (Leiden, 1968); A. Vööbus, The Pentateuch in the Version of the Syro-Hexapla: A fac-simile Edition of a Midyat MS. Discovered 1964 (CSCO 369, Subsidia 45; 1975), with useful introd. R. J. V. Hiebert, The 'Syrohexaplaric' Psalter (Septuagint and Cognate Studies, 27; Atlanta, Ga. [1989]). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 175–7 (no. 1501). On the liturgical use of the Syro-Hexapla, cf. A. *Baumstark, Nichtevangelische syrische Perikopenordnungen des ersten Jahrtausends (Liturgiegeschichtliche Forschungen, 3; 1921), pp. 88–100. C. Van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 879–80, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', VI. v. 5.

Syro-Malabar Church. See MALABAR CHRISTIANS.

syzygy (Gk. συζυγία, 'pair'). A word current among the *Gnostics, notably *Valentinus, for a pair of cosmological opposites, e.g. male and female. It was held that the universe had come into being through the interaction of such opposites (somewhat after the fashion of the *Hegelian doctrine of thesis and antithesis).

T

Tabernacle (Jewish), sometimes also called the 'tent of meeting'. The portable shrine said to have been constructed under *Moses' direction during the wilderness wanderings.

The fullest account of its structure is contained in Exod. 25–31 and 35–40, where it is described as consisting of an inner shrine (the 'Holy of Holies') which housed the *Ark and an outer chamber (the 'Holy Place') which contained the seven-branched lampstand, the table for the *shewbread, and the altar of incense. These were surrounded by an enclosure in which stood the altar of sacrifice and the whole was set up in the midst of the camp. Acc. to modern biblical critics this description is the work of the Priestly school of scribes (*P). Many hold that it is of far later date than Moses and reflects the structure of the Temple of *Solomon, though some argue that it is based on memories of a real pre-monarchic shrine, perhaps at the sanctuary of Shiloh (cf. 1 Sam. 3).

There is an independent and briefer account in Exod. 33: 7–10, which critics attribute to one of the earlier, pre-Exilic sources (*E). Acc. to this account it was set up outside the camp and was the centre towards which the people directed their worship; at its door was to be seen the pillar of cloud, the symbol of the Divine presence. There is no reason why such a simple tent-sanctuary should not have existed before the Israelites settled in Palestine.

Theologically the Tabernacle was held to embody the presence of God in the midst of His people, the symmetry and harmony of its parts to express the Divine perfection, and the careful gradation of the courts and of the service to reflect the Divine holiness. In the NT the imagery of the Tabernacle was used by the writer of the Ep. to the Hebrews to explain the meaning of the atoning work of Christ (cf. Heb. 9: 1–10: 25).

The principal material is to be found in comm. on Exodus, cited s.v., ad locc., and in discussions on the *Pentateuch, q.v. Studies devoted to the Tabernacle incl. J. Morgenstern, 'The Tent of Meeting', Journal of the American Oriental Society, 38 (1918), pp. 125–39; id., 'The Ark, the Ephod and the Tent', Hebrew Union College Annual, 17 (1942–3), pp. 153–265, and 18 (1943–4), pp. 1–52, esp. pp. 17–47 of the latter vol. [G.] von *Rad, 'Zelt und Lade', Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift, 42 (1931), pp. 476–98. F. M. Cross, 'The Tabernacle. A Study from an Archaeological and Historical Aspect', Biblical Archaeologist, 10 (1947), pp. 45–68. K. Koch, Die Priesterschrift von Exodus 25 bis Leviticus 16 (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testament, NF 53; 1959), pp. 7–45; M. Haran, 'The Priestly Image of the Tabernacle', Hebrew Union College Annual, 36 (1965), pp. 191–226; id., Temples and Temple-Service in Ancient Israel (Oxford, 1978), esp. pp. 149–204; R. E. Friedman, 'The Tabernacle in the Temple', Biblical Archaeologist, 43 (1980), pp. 241–8. C. R. Koester, The Dwelling of God: The Tabernacle in the Old Testament, Intertestamental Jewish Literature, and the New Testament (Catholic Biblical Quarterly Monograph Series, 22; Washington, DC, 1989). There is also a popular reconstruction in Eng. by R. E. Friedman, Who Wrote the Bible? (1988), pp. 174–87. A. Rothkoff in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 15 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 679–88, s.v.; R. E. Friedman in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 292–300, s.v.

Tabernacle (Christian). The ornamental receptacle for the vessels containing the Blessed Sacrament in RC churches. Derived from the Lat. tabernaculum (= 'tent') and used of a variety of canopied structures in the church building, the word came to be applied esp. to the box set in the middle of the altar which, from the 16th cent. onwards, gradually superseded earlier types of receptacles used for this purpose, e.g. hanging *pyxes and *sacrament houses. Acc. to current RC legislation, the Tabernacle may stand on the High Altar, but an altar in a side chapel is preferred. A lamp is kept burning before it. It is normally covered with a veil, but this requirement is no longer universally enforced.

F. Raible, Der Tabernakel einst und jetzt: Eine historische und liturgische Darstellung der Andacht zur aufbewahrten Eucharistie (1908). Braun, CA 2 (1924), pp. 632–47. E. Maffei, La Réservation eucharistique jusqu'à la Renaissance (1942). J. Braun, SJ, in CE 14 (1914), p. 424. See also other works cited under RESERVATION.

Tabernacles, Feast of. With the *Passover and *Pentecost, one of the great feasts of the Jewish year. By some critics it is supposed to have been originally a New Year festival, but in the earliest biblical accounts it is described as 'the feast of ingathering, at the end of the year' (Exod. 23: 16), i.e. the harvest-home. It lasted for seven days (Deut. 16: 13–15) and was followed by a solemn eighth day of 'holy convocation' (Lev. 23: 33–6). During the feast the people dwelt in booths (i.e. 'tabernacles') in commemoration of the sojourn in the wilderness (Lev. 23: 42–3; cf. Neh. 8: 14–15). The last and greatest feast of the year in pre-exilic times, it was sometimes referred to simply as 'the feast' (cf. 1 Kgs. 8: 2). By the NT period it had lost its primacy to the Feast of *Passover; in modern Judaism it is less important among the autumnal 'High Holidays' than the New Year and Day of *Atonement.

G. F. Moore, Judaism in the First Centuries of the Christian Era, the Age of the Tannaim, 2 (Cambridge, Mass., 1927), pp. 43–51. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 397–407, with bibl. p. 458 (Eng. tr., 2nd edn., 1965, pp. 495–502, with bibl. p. 551). S. *Mowinckel, Psalmenstudien, esp. vols. 2 and 3 (Skrifter utgiv av Videnskapsselskapet i Kristiania, II. Hist.-Filos. Klasse, 1921, no. 6 (1922), and 1922, no. 1 (1923)); id., Offersang og Sangoffer (1951), esp. pp. 143–71 (Eng. tr., The Psalms in Israel's Worship (Oxford, 1962), esp. 1, pp. 118–30). N. H. Snaith, The Jewish New Year Festival: Its Origins and Development (1947), passim; A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel (Cardiff, 1955). H.-J. Kraus, Gottesdienst in Israel (2nd edn., Munich, 1962), pp. 79–86; Eng. tr., Worship in Israel (Oxford, 1966), pp. 61–8. W. H. Schmidt, Alttestamentlicher Glaube in seiner Geschichte (6th edn., Neukirchen, 1987), pp. 149–51; Eng. tr. (of 4th edn.), The Faith of the Old Testament (Oxford, 1983), pp. 124–6. E. Kutsch and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 15 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 495–502, s.v. 'Sukkot'.

table, Communion. See COMMUNION TABLE.

Table Prayers. A term apparently first found in the 19th cent. for the prayers from the Communion service said at the altar (or 'Holy Table') when there was no administration of the Communion. In all the forms of the English BCP provision is made (in slightly varying form) for such prayers. The term seems to be no longer in use.

Tablet. RC weekly, founded in 1840 in London by Frederick Lucas, a barrister and recent convert. It was later edited by the Revd H. (later Cardinal) Vaughan. Apart from the Dublin Review (founded in 1836) it is the oldest RC periodical in England.

M. Walsh, The Tablet 1840–1990: A Commemorative History [1990].

Taborites. The extreme party of *Hussites, so called from their fortified stronghold south of Prague to which they gave the OT name of Mount Tabor (Jgs. 4: 6–14). They gained ascendancy after the death of King Wenceslaus (1419) and, under their leader Žižka, began to spread the 'Kingdom of God' by force of arms. Through Žižka's military genius and the fanatical devotion of his followers the far superior armies sent against them were repeatedly defeated. After Žižka's death (1424) they split into two main parties, the more moderate of which joined the Catholics after the Compactata of Prague (1433; see UTRAQUISM); the radicals, under Procopius the Bald, suffered a crushing defeat at Lipany in 1434.

The Taborites scorned all reasoned theology. They had no churches and kept no feast days; they rejected *transubstantiation; their priests wore lay clothes and blessed bread and wine at an ordinary table while the people said the Lord's Prayer. They professed extreme social doctrines, demanding the abolition of oaths, courts of justice, and all worldly dignities. Though the militant Taborites lost influence steadily after 1434, and Tabor itself was conquered by their enemies in 1452, the pacific and sectarian elements in their tradition were inherited by the *Bohemian Brethren.

F. C. Heymann, John Žižka and the Hussite Revolution (Princeton, NJ, 1955). J. Macek, Tábor v husitském revolučním hnutí (2 vols., 1955–6); id., The Hussite Movement in Bohemia (Eng. tr., 1965). H. Kaminský, A History of the Hussite Revolution (Berkeley, Calif., and Los Angeles, 1967), esp. pp. 278–494. P. de Vooght, 'L'Hérésie des taborites sur l'eucharistie (1418–1421)', Irénikon, 35 (1962), pp. 340–9. M. Lambert, Medieval Heresy (2nd edn., 1992), pp. 327–48. See also bibl. to HUSS, J.

Tacitus, Cornelius (born c. AD 55), Roman historian. A senator and the chief orator of his day, he was last heard of as governor of Asia, *c.*113. His surviving writings are: (1) a life of his father-in-law, Agricola, who was governor of Britain, 78–85; (2) the Germania, an ethnographic work; (3) a dialogue De Oratoribus; (4) large parts of the Histories and (5) of the Annals (written later than the Histories), which recounted events year by year from 69 to 96 and from 14 to 68 respectively.

In his Annals, 15. 44, the earliest non-Christian reference to the Crucifixion, Tacitus describes *Nero's persecution of the Christians at Rome as scapegoats for the fire in the city (AD 64); they were thrown to the dogs, crucified, or burnt alive. Though Tacitus holds them innocent of the charge of arson, he regarded Christianity as a 'pernicious superstition' (exitiabilis superstitio) and seems to have shared the popular belief that its adherents were guilty of atrocious crimes, of which his friend *Pliny and the Emp. Trajan exonerated them.

Modern edns. of his works by E. Koestermann (2 vols., Teub., 1936; 3rd edn., 3 vols., 1965–70), H. Heubner and others (2 vols. in 5 parts, ibid., 1978–83) and by K. Wellesley and others (ibid., 1986 ff.); also of Annals and Histories by C. D. Fisher (Oxford, 1906 and 1911 respectively) and of Opera Minora by M. Winterbottom and R. M. Ogilvie (ibid., 1975). Eng. tr. by A. J. Church and W. J. Brodribb (3 vols., 1864–9; frequently repr.). Comm. on the Annals by H. Furneaux (2 vols., Oxford, 1884–91; 2nd edn., 1896–1907) and E. Koestermann (4 vols., Heidelberg, 1963–8). R. Syme, Tacitus (2 vols., Oxford, 1958).

Tait, Archibald Campbell (1811–82), Abp. of *Canterbury. Of *Presbyterian upbringing, he was educated at Glasgow University and Balliol College, Oxford, where he was confirmed in 1830. He became a Fellow of the college in 1834. In 1841 he was one of the four Oxford tutors who publicly protested against Tract 90 (see TRACTARIANISM), and henceforth, despite personal friendship with many of its leaders, he was strongly opposed to the *Anglo-Catholic movement. In 1842 he succeeded T. *Arnold as headmaster of Rugby and in 1849, suffering from ill-health, became Dean of *Carlisle. In 1856, at the personal request of the Queen, he was appointed Bp. of London, where his Broad Church sympathies became more prominent. In 1858 he withdrew the licence of Alfred Poole, curate of St Barnabas, Pimlico, for his practice of hearing confessions, and in 1860 by personal intervention he resolved the conflict that had led to riots over Anglo-Catholic practices at St George's-in-the-East (see LOWDER, C. F.). He joined with other bishops in publicly deprecating Essays and Reviews (1860), but in 1864 he sided with the majority of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (against the Abps. of Canterbury and *York) in favour of two of the essayists. In 1868 he became Abp. of Canterbury. A staunch upholder of *Establishment, when he came to view W. E. *Gladstone's policy in *Ireland as inevitable, he used his considerable gifts of statesmanship to secure the best terms possible for the disestablished Church of Ireland. He was a member of the *Ritual Commission and the *Public Worship Regulation Act 1874 was mainly his creation, though he objected to its final form and was convinced that its practical working was a failure. He tried, unsuccessfully, to end the recitation of the *Athanasian Creed in Divine Service (1871–2). In 1877 he brought R. T. *Davidson to Lambeth as his chaplain. He championed the Burial Laws Amendment Act 1880, which granted to Nonconformists the right to be buried in their parish churchyards, and he presided ably over the second *Lambeth Conference in 1878.

Life by R. T. Davidson (son-in-law) and W. Benham (2 vols., London, 1891). P. T. Marsh, The Victorian Church in Decline: Archbishop Tait and the Church of England 1868–1882 (1969). W. H. Fremantle in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 292–9.

Taizé Community, an international and ecumenical monastic community founded in 1940 by Roger Schutz-Marsauche (b. 1915). His aim was to open up ways of healing the divisions between Christians and through the reconciliation of Christians to overcome conflicts within humanity. Acquiring a house in Taizé, near *Cluny, in SE France, he began by sheltering Jews and other refugees in his home. After the end of the Second World War, he obtained permission to welcome German prisoners of war from a nearby camp. The first brothers took life-vows in 1949. They were all Protestants, of various backgrounds, but since 1969 they have been joined by RCs. There are now c.90 brothers, from some 20 countries and every continent. In addition to those at Taizé, there are small groups living in poor areas of Africa, Asia, and N. and S. America.

Since 1958 the community has welcomed to Taizé young adults in increasing numbers. Weekly intercontinental meetings bring together youths from numerous countries, those in the summer drawing up to 6,000 participants at a time. The meetings are centred on the three set times of prayer each day in the Church of Reconciliation; the themes for reflection are based on 'inner life and human solidarity'. Songs from Taizé are used in groups and parishes around the world. At the end of each year the Taizé brothers lead a 'European Meeting', where many thousands of young people from E. and W. Europe are welcomed for several days by parishes of a major city. Similar meetings have been held in N. America and Asia.

Brother Roger [Schutz] has published a number of books, including vols. of journals under various titles; there is a collection of extracts, Son Amour est un Feu (1988; Eng. tr., His Love is a Fire, 1990). J. L. González Balado, El Desafío de Taizé (1976; rev. Eng. tr., The Story of Taizé, 1980; 3rd edn., 1988). K. Spink, A Universal Heart: The Life and Vision of Brother Roger of Taizé (1986). Songs and Prayers from Taizé (1991). É. Marchant in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 9–12, s.v., with detailed bibl.

Talbot, Edward Stuart (1844–1934), Bp. of *Winchester. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where in 1866 he was elected a Student. In 1870 he became first Warden of Keble College, Oxford. Nearly 20 years later he exchanged academic for parish work; and from 1888 to 1895 he had a very successful incumbency as vicar of Leeds. In 1895 he became Bp. of *Rochester, where his main work was the division of the diocese and the creation of the see of *Southwark, of which he was enthroned bishop in 1905. From 1911 to 1923 he was Bp. of *Winchester. Closely associated in his earlier years with C. Gore, he was theologically a member of the school of Lux Mundi (1889), to which he had contributed the essay on 'The Preparation in History for Christ', and throughout his life exercised great influence in furthering moderate High Church principles. Like other members of the Lux Mundi school, he was a keen advocate of social reform.

His three sons were:

(1) Edward Keble Talbot (1877–1949), who joined the *Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield in 1910 (Superior, 1922–40).

(2) Neville Stuart Talbot (1879–1943), who, after army service in the Boer War, became Chaplain of Balliol College, Oxford (1909), Bp. of Pretoria (1920), and Vicar of St Mary's, Nottingham (1933). He contributed an essay on 'The Present Situation' to Foundations*.

(3) Gilbert Talbot (1891–1915), who was killed in action (30 July 1915) on the Ypres salient. 'Talbot House' (popularly '*Toc H', q.v.) was founded in his memory.

There is much autobiog. material in E. S. Talbot's Memories of Early Life (1924). Life by G. Stephenson (London, 1936). A. Mansbridge, Edward Stuart Talbot and Charles Gore (1935), pp. 1–27 and 71–90. J. Sankey in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 844 f.

Edward Keble Talbot's Retreat Addresses, ed. L. Menzies (London, 1954), with introd., pp. 7–16; miscellaneous writings in G. P. H. Pawson, CR (ed.), Edward Keble Talbot: His Community and his Friends (ibid., 1954), with memoir, pp. 11–33. Memoir of Neville Stuart Talbot by F. H. Brabant (ibid., 1949).

Tall Brothers (Gk. ἀδελφοὶ μακροί). The four monks, Dioscorus (Bp. of Hermopolis Minor), Ammonius, Eusebius, and Euthymius, who led the *Origenist Movement in Egypt at the end of the 4th cent. In 399 they made their way from the *Nitrian Desert to Alexandria to defend Origenist views against their new opponent, Theophilus, Patr. of Alexandria. Failing to get satisfaction, they proceeded to *Constantinople, where they continued their propaganda and even gained the support of St *Chrysostom.

The chief source is *Sozomen, Hist. Eccl. 8. 12.

Talleyrand-Périgord, Charles Maurice de (1754–1838), Prince of Benevento, Bp. of Autun, and statesman. Ordained priest in 1779, he was made Bp. of Autun in 1789. After a short hesitation, he joined the cause of the Revolution and became a member of the Constitutional Assembly, taking the oath to the *Civil Constitution and consecrating persons prepared to do likewise to fill the vacated bishoprics. In 1791 he was constrained to resign his see, and in 1792 was excommunicated. The same year he undertook an embassy to London to win support for the Revolution, but shortly afterwards lost the favour of the Government and had to flee to the USA. Regaining favour, in 1796 he became Foreign Minister. After the *Concordat of 1801 *Pius VII readmitted him to lay communion. Henceforward he was Napoleon's principal agent in making treaties, except between 1809 and 1814, when he was in disgrace. In 1814 he took charge of the provisional Government, and in that year and the next he was instrumental in preserving the territorial integrity of France in the peace treaties. He retired from active political life in 1815, but later lent his support to Louis Philippe (1830–48) in his bid for the throne, and was by him made Ambassador to England, a post which he held from 1830 to 1834. On his deathbed he signed, in the presence of the Abbé F. A. P. *Dupanloup, a solemn repudiation of his errors and misdeeds against the Church.

[C. J. V. A.] de Broglie (ed.), Mémoires du Prince de Talleyrand (5 vols., 1891–2; Eng. tr., 5 vols., 1891–2). Mémoires also ed. P. Léon (7 vols., 1953–5) and P.-L. Couchoud (1957; rev. by J.-P. Couchoud, 1982). G. Pallain (ed.), Correspondance inédite du Prince de Talleyrand et du Roi Louis XVIII pendant le congrès de Vienne (1881; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1881); id. (ed.), Correspondance diplomatique de Talleyrand: La mission de Talleyrand à Londres en 1792 (1889); id. (ed.), Correspondance diplomatique de Talleyrand: Le ministère de Talleyrand sous le Directoire (1891); id. (ed.), Correspondance diplomatique de Talleyrand: Ambassade de Talleyrand à Londres, 1830–1834 (pt. 1; 1891). P. Bertrand (ed.), Lettres inédites de Talleyrand à Napoléon, 1800–1809 (1889). Full Life by G. Lacour-Gayet (3 vols., Paris, 1928–32; repr. 1991). Other modern studies incl. those of A. Duff Cooper (London, 1932; repr, 1987), A. F. Saint-Aulaire (Paris, 1936; Eng. tr., 1937), L. Madelin (Paris, 1944; Eng. tr., 1948), and J. F. Bernard (London, 1973). G.-A. Morlot and J. Happart, Talleyrand, une mystification historique [1991]. C. Brinton, The Lives of Talleyrand (1937), with bibliographie raisonnée.

Tallis, Thomas (*c.*1505–85), organist and composer. He was organist of Waltham Abbey before its dissolution in 1540, and soon afterwards was appointed a Gentleman of the *Chapel Royal. By this time his unprinted compositions were already in use, but his first works to be printed were five anthems which appeared in 1560. He lived in his later years largely on the income of leases granted to him by Queens *Mary (1557) and *Elizabeth I (1577). In 1575 Elizabeth also granted to Tallis and W. *Byrd a monopoly of music printing for 21 years, but this apparently brought little financial benefit. His vocal works are his principal compositions. They are mostly set to Latin words, but also include a number of settings of the Anglican service, responses, and anthems which, in their simplicity of form, are a clear reflection of T. *Cranmer's desire for intelligible word-setting. His most outstanding work is the 40-part *motet Spem in alium, a unique achievement, apparently composed for the Duke of Norfolk in 1571. He also composed 9 Psalm tunes for M. *Parker's Psalter (1567), which include the tunes now known (in adapted form) as 'Tallis's Canon' and 'Tallis's Ordinal'.

P. Doe, Tallis (Oxford Studies of Composers, 4; London, 1968). P. [G.] Le Huray, Music and the Reformation in England, 1549–1660 (1967), esp. pp. 193–9. P. Doe in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 18 (1980), pp. 541–8, s.v.

Talmud. The Jewish compilations which embody the *Mishnah, or oral teaching of the Jews, and the *Gemara, or collection of discussions on the Mishnah. The two main forms of Talmud, the Babylonian and the Palestinian, are similar in method and construction, but by no means identical in content. Neither contains Gemara (commentary) on all Tractates of the Mishnah. The material in the Gemara is extremely varied, and comprises both *Halachah and *Haggadah (whereas the Mishnah on which it comments is primarily Halachic). The so-called Minor Tractates and Additional Tractates are a kind of appendix to the Babylonian Talmud, and they contain material of great importance. The Palestinian and Babylonian Talmuds were formed during the 5th cent. (the Palestinian earlier than the Babylonian), but work continued on the Babylonian Talmud after that time, and both include material that went back much earlier.

Best standard edns. of texts, Talmud Babli in 20 vols., Vilnius, 1880–6; Eng. tr. ed. I. Epstein (35 vols., London, 1935–52), with Eng. tr. of Minor Tractates ed. A. Cohen (2 vols., 1965); Ger. tr. of the Talmud, with variae lectiones, by L. Goldschmidt (9 vols., Berlin, 1897–1935); Talmud Yerushalmi in 8 vols., Vilnius, 1922; Eng. tr. by J. Neusner and others (Chicago Studies in the History of Judaism, 1982 ff.). H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midrasch (1887; 7th edn. by G. Stemberger, 1982; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1991). A. Goldberg and M. B. Lerner in S. Safrai (ed.), The Literature of the Sages, 1 (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, Section 2, vol. 3, pt. 1; Assen and Philadelphia, 1987), pp. 303–409. D. Goodblatt, 'The Babylonian Talmud' in Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt, Reihe II, Bd. 19, ed. W. Haase (2. Halbband, 1979), pp. 257–336. B. M. Bokser, 'An Annotated Bibliographical Guide to the Study of the Palestinian Talmud', ibid., pp. 139–256. M. Berlin and S. J. Zevin, Ensiklopedia Talmudith (Heb., 21 vols., Jerusalem, 1948–93; Eng. tr., Jerusalem, 1969 ff.). G. G. Porton in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 310–15, s.v.

Tambaram Conference. The Missionary Conference, convened by the International Missionary Council, which met at Tambaram, nr. Madras, from 12 to 29 Dec. 1938. Its membership of 471, drawn from 69 different countries and all the more important non-RC communions, was esp. remarkable for its strong representation from the younger Churches, the white delegates being actually in a slight minority. The chairman of the Conference was John R. *Mott, with Dr William Paton as Secretary.

The Tambaram Series: 1. The Authority of the Faith; 2. The Growing Church; 3. Evangelism; 4. The Life of the Church; 5. The Economic Basis of the Church; 6. The Church and the State; 7. Addresses and other Records [with list of members]. 7 vols. (all 1939).

Tametsi. The Tridentine decree (Sess. 24, cap. 1; 1563) prescribing the formal mode of celebrating matrimony, it aimed at suppressing clandestinity and was passed after long debates by a majority of 133 to 59. It laid down that in places where the decree was promulgated, a marriage between baptized persons (whether Catholics or not) was valid only when it took place in the presence of the parish priest or of the local Ordinary, or a priest appointed by one of these, and at least two witnesses. As its effect in Protestant countries would have been to reduce all unions between men and women to illicit cohabitations, it was prescribed that before coming into operation in any parish the decree had to be formally published in that parish. Hence it was normally not published in Protestant countries, e.g. it was never brought into operation anywhere in England, Scotland, or Wales. None the less it led to many complications and in 1908 it was finally superseded by other provisions of Ne Temere (q.v.).

The text is pr. in the edns. of the decrees of the Council of Trent, e.g. in Concilium Tridentinum: Diariorum, Actorum, Epistularum, Tractatuum Nova Collectio. Edidit Societas Goerresiana, 9, ed. S. Eshes (Freiburg i.B., 1924), pp. 968 f.; also, with Fr. tr., in Hefele and Leclercq, 10 (pt. 1; 1938), pp. 554–8, and, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees, 2 (1990), pp. 755–9. See also works on MATRIMONY by RC authors and bibl. to TRENT, COUNCIL OF.

Tammuz. The Akkadian (Babylonian) name for the ancient Sumerian deity, Dumuzi, who is commonly regarded as the equivalent of the Greek Adonis. Originally associated with Sun-worship, the deity became the Divine personification of the annual decay and revival of vegetation in autumn and spring. The chief feature of the cultus was ceremonial lamentation, a reference to which occurs at Ezek. 8: 14.

S. [H.] Langdon, Tammuz and Ishtar (1914). M. Witzel, OFM, Tammuz-Liturgien und Verwandtes (Analecta Orientalia, 10; 1935). A. Moortgat, Tammuz: Der Unsterblichkeitsglaube in der altorientalischen Bildkunst (1949). S. H. Hooke, Babylonian and Assyrian Religion (1953), esp. pp. 36–46. K. Preisendanz in PW, Reihe 2, 4 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2139–48, s.v.; T. Jacobsen in Encyclopedia of Religion, ed. M. Eliade, 4 (1987), pp. 512 f., s.v. 'Dumuzi'.

Tanner, Thomas (1674–1735), English antiquary and divine. Born at Market Lavington, Wilts, he was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he formed a lifelong friendship with E. *Gibson; he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1696. In 1695 he published his Notitia Monastica, an erudite account of the medieval religious houses in England and Wales (enlarged edition pub. by his brother, John Tanner, in 1744). In 1698 he became private chaplain to John Moore, then Bp. of *Norwich, who appointed him chancellor of his diocese in 1701. Having become Canon of *Ely in 1713, he returned to Oxford as Canon of *Christ Church in 1724. In 1732 he became Bp. of *St Asaph. His second great work, the Bibliotheca Britannico-Hibernica, an enlargement of J. Leland's De Scriptoribus, was published posthumously by D. *Wilkins in 1748. Based on extensive research into medieval bibliography, it aims at giving a comprehensive account of all British writers down to the beginning of the 17th cent., and long remained the standard work on the subject. He bequeathed to the *Bodleian Library a choice of his printed books and the whole of his valuable collection of MSS, a large number of which had formerly belonged to Abp. W. *Sancroft. His MSS include a number of important papers relating to the time of the civil wars.

A. Hackman (ed.), Catalogi Codicum Manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Bodleianae Pars Quarta: Codices Viri Admodum Reverendi Thomae Tanneri (1860). C. McNeill, The Tanner Letters: Original Documents and Notices of Irish Affairs in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries Extracted from the Collection in the Bodleian Library, Oxford (Dublin, 1943). Microfilm of the Tanner MSS in the Bodleian Library, ed. M. Hawkins (Hassocks, W. Sussex, 1977). D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), pp. 199–207 (2nd edn., 1951, pp. 156–64), and passim. W. P. Courtney in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 359–62.

Tanquerey, Adolf Alfred (1854–1932), dogmatic theologian. Born at Blainville, Normandy, he was educated at Saint-Lô, Coutances, *Saint-Sulpice de Paris, and Rome. In 1878 he was ordained priest and entered the Society of Saint-Sulpice. He taught at Rodez from 1879 to 1887, at Baltimore, USA, from 1887 to 1902, and at Saint-Sulpice de Paris from 1902 to 1905. From 1915 to 1926 he was superior of the Solitude (a training centre for novices) at Issy, retiring to Aix in 1927.

His Synopsis Theologiae Dogmaticae (3 vols., 1894–6) and his Synopsis Theologiae Moralis et Pastoralis (3 vols., 1902–5), condensed in his Brevior Synopsis Theologiae Dogmaticae (1911) and his Brevior Synopsis Theologiae Moralis et Pastoralis (1913), had a wide circulation. They provided a large body of useful and generally reliable information within a manageable compass. His other published works include Précis de théologie ascétique et mystique (1923–4) and contributions to various Catholic periodicals.

I. Noye, PSS, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 25–7, s.v.

Tantum ergo. The last two verses of St *Thomas Aquinas's Eucharistic hymn '*Pange lingua gloriosi', and the principal hymn often used at *Benediction in the RC Church. The practice of inclining the head at the words 'veneremur cernui' is general, but not laid down in any rubrics. There are several English translations, the best-known beginning 'Therefore we, before Him bending'.

Tarasius, St (d. 806), Patr. of *Constantinople from 784. He was an uncle or great-uncle of *Photius and chief secretary of the Empress Irene II, at whose instigation, though only a layman, he was uncanonically elected patriarch. He at once embarked on a policy of restoring good relations between the Byzantine Church and the W. and persuaded the Empress to convoke, in concert with the Pope, *Hadrian I, a General Council which sat at *Nicaea in 787 under his own presidency. After its successful conclusion he became involved in a series of difficulties, consequent on his supposed tolerance of simony and his lack of energy in the divorce affair of Irene's son, Constantine VI. On being violently attacked for laxity by *Theodore of Studios and his rigorous monks, he excommunicated the priest who had performed the ceremony of Constantine's second marriage. In 802 he crowned as Emperor Nicephorus, who had dethroned Irene. After his death he was venerated as a saint. Feast day, 25 Feb.

A few of his letters and a sermon which have survived are repr. from J. D. *Mansi in J. P. Migne, PG 98. 1423–500. V. Grumel, AA, Les Regestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, vol. 1, fascs. 2–3 (2nd edn. by J. Darrouzès, 1989), pp. 21–34 (nos. 350–73e). Lat. tr. of Life by his disciple Ignatius, pr. in AASS, Feb. 3 (1658), pp. 576–90, repr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit., 1385–424; Gk. text first ed. by I. A. Heikel in Acta Societatis Scientiarum Fennicae, 17 (Helsingfors, 1891), pp. 389–439. Theophanes, Chronographia (ed. C. de Boor, 1, Leipzig, 1885, pp. 457–63, 470 f., 480 f., 500). J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 45–52. R. Janin, AA, in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 54–7, s.v. 'Taraise'; D. Stiernon in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (Rome, 1969), cols. 127–31, s.v. 'Tarasio', with further bibl. See also works cited under NICAEA, SECOND COUNCIL OF.

Targum. The name, meaning 'translation', given to the Aramaic interpretative translations of the OT made when Hebrew had ceased to be the normal medium of speech among the Jews. They were the outcome of the explanatory oral matter which for a long time had been added to the Scripture lections in the worship of the *synagogue. The Targum of Onkelos (on the *Pentateuch) and the Targum of Jonathan (on the Prophets), which were to become the official Targums, emerged in Babylonia in about the 3rd cent. AD. Unofficial and more expansive Targums were also current in Palestine, perhaps from about 1st cent. AD; the MSS of these, however, are all late and mainly confined to the Pentateuch, on which only one (Neofiti I in the *Vatican), dated AD 1504, is complete; other witnesses are: fragments from the Cairo *Geniza, the 'Fragment Targum', and the Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan (which has many elements in common with that of Onkelos). The nature of the relationship between the Babylonian and the Palestinian Targums is disputed. The Targums to the *Hagiographa are all late, apart from fragments of a (different) Targum to Job found at *Qumran. There is no Targum to Ezra, Nehemiah, or Daniel, the first and third of which already contained sections in Aramaic.

The Targum of Onkelos was first pr. in Italy, prob. in 1480. Both that of Onkelos and of Jonathan are pr. in the London *Polyglot. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan and the Targums to the Hagiographa apart from Pss., Prov., and Job, ed. A. Sperber, The Bible in Aramaic (4 vols. in 5, Leiden, 1959–73). A. Díez Macho, MSC (ed.), Neophyti I (Textos y Estudios, 7–12; Madrid, 1968–79; incl. Eng. tr.). M. L. Klein, The Fragment-Targums of the Pentateuch (2 vols., Analecta Biblica, 76; Rome, 1980; incl. Eng. tr.). Fr. tr. of Neofiti I and the Targums of Pseudo-Jonathan by R. Le Déaut, Targum du Pentateuque (SC 245, 256, 261, 271, 282; 1978–81). Modern edns. of the Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan by D. Rieder (Jerusalem, 1974) and E. G. Clarke (Hoboken, NJ, 1984); A. Diez Macho and others, Biblia Polyglotta Matritensia, 4th ser.: Targum Palestinense in Pentateuchum. Additur Targum Pseudojonatan (Madrid, 1977 ff.). J. F. Stenning (ed.), The Targum of Isaiah (1949; incl. Eng. tr.). M. Sokoloff, The Targum to Job from Qumran Cave XI (Ramat-Gan [1974]; incl. Eng. tr.). M. L. Klein, Genizah Manuscripts of Palestinian Targum to the Pentateuch (2 vols., Cincinnati, 1986). P. E. Kahle, The Cairo Geniza (Schweich Lectures, 1941; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1959), pp. 191–208. M. McNamara, MSC, The New Testament and the Palestinian Targum to the Pentateuch (Analecta Biblica, 27; Rome, 1966). R. Le Déaut, Introduction à la littérature targumique, 1 [all pub.] (Rome, 1966). J. [W.] Bowker, The Targums and Rabbinic Literature: An Introduction to Jewish Interpretations of Scripture (Cambridge, 1969). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (1973), pp. 99–114, with bibl. M. Jastrow, A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi and the Midrashic Literature (2 vols., 1886–1903; repr., New York, 1971). B. Grossfeld, A Bibliography of Targum Literature (Bibliographica Judaica, 3 and 8; Cincinnati and New York, 1972–7). Id. in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 4 (Jerusalem, 1971), cols. 841–51, s.v. 'Bible, Translations, Ancient Versions, Aramaic: the Targumim'; P. S. Alexander in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 320–31, s.v.

Tarsicius, St (3rd–4th cent.), martyr. Tradition states that he was killed in *Rome by the mob while bearing the Blessed Sacrament rather than surrender it to profanation. He is first mentioned in one of *Damasus' Epigrammata, where a comparison with St *Stephen (Acts 6) suggests that he may have been a deacon. Acc. to a 6th-cent. tradition, he took the Sacrament as an acolyte to certain Christian prisoners. His relics were originally located in the catacombs of S. Callisto, though they were later claimed by San Silvestro in Capite. Feast day, 15 Aug. A fraternity dedicated to him, fostering the cult of the Blessed Sacrament, received Papal approval in 1920. The incident of his death figures in N. *Wiseman's Fabiola.

AASS, Aug. 3 (1737), p. 201. A. Ferrua, SJ (ed.), Epigrammata Damasiana (Rome, 1942), Elogium 15, pp. 117–19, with refs. J. M. Lambert, Étude historique et critique sur saint Tharsicius, acolyte (Rome, 1890). J. Wilpert, Die Papstgräber und die Cäciliengruft in der Katakombe des hl. Kallistus (1909), pp. 92–4 and 96–8; O. *Marucchi, 'La questione del sepolcro del papa Zeffirino e del martire Tarsicio in seguito ad una ultima scoperta', Nuovo Bullettino di Archaeologia cristiana, 16 (1910), pp. 205–25.

Tarsus. Pompey made this ancient city of Asia Minor the capital of the Roman province of Cilicia in 67 BC. It became the seat of a famous *Stoic philosophical school and was the birthplace of St *Paul (Acts 9: 11; 21: 39; 22: 3). In Christian times it was an episcopal see, and included among its bishops Helenus (*fl. c.*250), the opponent of *Paul of Samosata, and *Diodore (Bp. 378–*c.*390), the Antiochene exegete and theologian.

H. Goldman (ed.), Excavations at Gözlü Kule, Tarsus (3 vols. of text + 3 vols. of plates, Princeton, NJ, 1950–63). W. M. *Ramsay, The Cities of St Paul (1907), pp. 85–244. W. C. van Unnik, 'Tarsus of Jeruzalem. De Stad van Paulus' Jeugd', Mededelingen der koninklijke Nederlandse Akademie van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, 15 (1952), pp. 141–89; Eng. tr. as Tarsus or Jerusalem: The City of Paul's Youth (1962). C. Bradford Welles, 'Hellenistic Tarsus', Mélanges de l'Université Saint Joseph, 38 (1962), pp. 43–75. W. Ruge in PW, Zweite Reihe, 4 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2413–39, s.v. 'Tarsos (3)'.

Tasso, Torquato (1544–95), Italian poet. Educated at *Venice and Padua, he published his first poem Rinaldo in 1562, and in 1565 entered the service of Cardinal Luigi d'Este at Ferrara. Here most of his time was given to his great epic Gerusalemme liberata, a poem on the First *Crusade, written in the grave style characteristic of the *Counter-Reformation and completed in 1574. From that time he suffered much from religious scruples as well as from the criticisms directed against his work. As he became increasingly tormented by a kind of persecution mania and subject to violent outbursts, the Duke of Ferrara had him confined in an asylum in 1579. During this imprisonment he composed numerous prose dialogues on philosophical subjects. On his liberation in 1586, he went to Mantua and from there to various other Italian cities, spending his last years in writing Gerusalemme conquistata (1592), an attempt to satisfy the critics of the earlier work, to which it is much inferior, and the Sette giornate, a blank-verse epic of the Creation. He died shortly before receiving the crown of the Poet Laureate intended for him by *Clement VIII.

The best collected edn. of his works is that of G. Rosini, 33 vols., Pisa, 1821–32. Crit. edns. by A. Solerti of Le rime (4 vols., Bologna, 1898–1902); by L. Bonfigli of Gerusalemme conquistata (Scritti d'Italia, 2 vols., Bari, 1934) and of Rinaldo (ibid., 1936); and by G. C. Baiardi of Aminta (Urbino [1976]) and of Gerusalemme liberata (Ferrara [1991]). A number of his works have been tr. into Eng. A. Solerti, Vita di Torquato Tasso (3 vols., Turin, 1895); E. Donadoni, Torquato Tasso: Saggio critico (2 vols., Florence, 1920); A. Banfi and others, Torquato Tasso: Comitato per le celebrazioni di Torquato Tasso Ferrara 1954 (Milan, 1957); L. Caretti, Ariosto e Tasso (Turin, 1961; 2nd edn. [1967]), pp. 47–121; rev. repr. [1970], pp. 55–149 and 165–82; C. P. Brand, Torquato Tasso: A Study of the Poet and his Contribution to English Literature (Cambridge, 1965). C. Previtera, La poesia e l'arte di Torquato Tasso (Messina and Milan, 1936); G. Getto, Interpretazione del Tasso (Naples, 1951); B. Basile, Poëta Melancholicus: Tradizione classica e follia nell'ultimo Tasso (Pisa [1984]). On his religion and spirituality, see L. Firpo's introd. in his edn. of Tasso's Tre scritti politici (Turin, 1980), pp. 7–82, esp. pp. 42–59. G. Getto in EC 11 (1953), cols. 1784–94; G. Crupi in A. Asor Rosa (ed.), Letteratura Italiana. Gli Autori. Dizionario bio-bibliografico, 2 (Turin, 1991), pp. 1698–703, both s.v.

Tate, Nahum (1652–1715), and Brady, Nicholas (1659–1726), authors of the New Version of the Psalms (1696). Both were Irish Protestants, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, Brady also at Christ Church, Oxford. Tate, who had written the second part of Absalom and Achitophel (1682) under J. *Dryden's direction, besides a large number of works of indifferent merit, including alterations of some of Shakespeare's plays, became Poet Laureate in 1692. Brady who was ordained by 1688, was chaplain to William III, Mary, and Queen *Anne, and held a number of benefices; among his works was a translation of *Virgil's Aeneid in blank verse (1726). Their joint work, the New Version, is a versification of the Psalter acc. to the artificial taste of the period, sacrificing the literal method of previous versions to the principle of contemporary literary refinement. There are, however, a number of simpler and more poetical pieces, such as 'Through all the changing scenes of life' (Ps. 34) and 'As pants the hart' (Ps. 42), which have made their way into modern hymn-books. Two slightly differing editions of the version, which were both printed in 1698, were the standard texts of later reissues. This New Version, though at first not favourably received, gradually supplanted the older rendering of T. *Sternhold and J. Hopkins. It was constantly reprinted during the next 100 years and down to the early 19th cent. was in almost universal use.

W. Hunt in DNB 6 (1886), pp. 192 f., s.v. 'Brady'; H. L. Bennett, ibid. 55 (1898), pp. 379 f., s.v. 'Tate'. W. J. Austin and J. Ralf, The Lives of the Poets-Laureate (1853), pp. 196–222, esp. pp. 214–19; on the other works of Tate, E. K. Broadus, The Laureateship: A Study of the Office of Poet Laureate in England with some account of the Poets (1921), pp. 88–101, and NCBEL 2 (1971), cols. 774–6. Nicholas Brady's sermon Church-Musick Vindicated, preached on St Cecilia's day, 1697, is repr., with introd. by J. E. Phillips, Jun., Two St Cecilia's Day Sermons (Augustan Reprint Society, 49; Los Angeles, 1955). On the New Version, see N. Temperley, The Music of the English Parish Church, 1 (Cambridge Studies in Music, 1979), pp. 120–4. See also bibl. to METRICAL PSALTERS.

Tatian (*c.*160), Christian *Apologist and rigorist. A native of Assyria, he was educated in Greek rhetoric and philosophy. He became a Christian in Rome between 150 and 165 and was a pupil of St *Justin Martyr, but soon showed leanings to independent opinions. About 172 he went into the E., where he is said to have founded the ascetic sect of the *Encratites. He is the author of an apology, usually called 'Oratio ad Graecos'. It is a passionate defence of the venerable age and Divine purity of Christianity combined with a violent attack on Greek civilization, which is represented as a mass of evil, incompatible with the Christian Faith. His chief claim to fame is the '*Diatessaron' (q.v.), a history of the life of Christ compiled from the four gospels which was used in the Syriac Church until the 5th cent., when it was replaced by the *Peshitta version because its author was considered a heretic. Among his literary opponents were St *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, *Clement of Alexandria, St *Hippolytus, and *Origen.

The best edns. of Tatian's 'Oratio ad Graecos' are those by J. C. T. Otto (Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum, 6; Jena, 1851), E. *Schwartz (TU 4, Heft 1; 1888), E. J. Goodspeed (Die ältesten Apologeten (1914), pp. 266–305) and, with Eng. tr., by M. Whittaker (Oxford, 1982; incl. other frags.). M. Elze, Tatian und seine Theologie (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 9; 1960), with full bibl. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 44–53 (nos. 1104–6). J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 220–8; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 71–4 and 555 f. E. Fascher in PW, Zweite Reihe, 4 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2468–71, s.v. 'Tatianus (9)'; G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 59–66, s.v. 'Tatien'; F. Bolgiani in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3354–7, s.v. 'Taziano'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 815. See also bibl. to DIATESSARON.

Tattam, Henry (1789–1868), Coptic scholar. He held a succession of Anglican benefices, and in 1845 was appointed Archdeacon of Bedford. On travels in Egypt he recovered from the *Nitrian Desert several important Coptic and Syriac MSS, now in the British Library, among them the 5th-cent. codex of the *Old Syriac text of the Gospels which W. *Cureton identified in 1847 and published in 1858.

Miss Platt (stepdaughter), Journal of a Tour through Egypt, the Peninsula of Sinai, and the Holy Land in 1838, 1839 (2 vols., privately pr., 1841–2). W. Wright, Catalogue of the Syriac Manuscripts in the British Museum, acquired since the Year 1838, 3 (1872), esp. pp. xi–xiii and xvi–xxv. T. Cooper in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 386 f., s.v., for full list of his works.

Tauler, John (d. 1361), German *Dominican spiritual teacher. Little is known of his life. Born prob. near the end of the 13th cent., he entered the Order of Preachers in Strasbourg and possibly studied in Cologne. He may have known *Eckhart and *Henry Suso personally; he was certainly influenced by Eckhart and the *Neoplatonism current among the German Dominican disciples of St *Albertus Magnus. When Strasbourg was placed under an interdict he moved to Basle (1339–42); he also visited Medingen (1339 and 1347), Cologne (1339 and 1346), and prob. Paris (1350). He died in Strasbourg. He was famous as a preacher and director of nuns, and his popularity caused many spurious works to be ascribed to him; apart from the sermons and one letter, the authenticity of all the other works is now rejected. The canon of his sermons is still not entirely established. His spirituality is notable for its balance between inwardness (detachment, the birth of God in the soul, and living in the 'ground' of the soul) and the external practice of the virtues and of pious exercises. His notion of 'suffering' (leiden) holds together the imitation of Christ Crucified by patient endurance and a more radical stance of receptiveness towards God's acting upon the soul. He had a lasting influence on later German piety, both Catholic and Protestant, and, esp. after the Latin translation by L. Surius (1548), he was frequently cited also by Spanish spiritual writers, though the reference is sometimes to spurious works.

Editio princeps of his sermons, Leipzig, 1498. First crit. edn. by F. Vetter (Deutsche Texte des Mittelalters, 11; 1910); also ed. from two important Vienna MSS (2744 and 2739) by A. L. Corin (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, 33 and 42; 1924–9). Modern Ger. version by G. Hofmann (Freiburg i.B., 1961). Eng. tr. by W. Elliott (Washington, DC, 1910); of selected passages by E. Strakosch (London, 1958), and by E. Colledge and M. Jane [Ciantar], OP (St Louis and London, 1961). Fr. tr. by E. Hugueny, C. Théry, and A. L. Corin (1930; ed. J.-P. Jossua, with note on 'Jean Tauler et Maître Eckhart' by E. H. Weber, OP, 1991). C. Schmidt, Johannes Tauler von Strassburg: Beitrag zur Geschichte der Mystik und des religiösen Lebens im vierzehnten Jahrhundert (Hamburg, 1841). H. S. *Denifle, OP, Taulers Bekehrung kritisch untersucht (Quellen und Forschungen zur Sprach- und Culturgeschichte der germanischen Völker, 36; 1879). K. Grunewald, Studien zu Johannes Taulers Frömmigkeit (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters und Renaissance, 44; 1930). E. Filthaut, OP (ed.), Johannes Tauler: Ein deutscher Mystiker. Gedenkschrift zum 600. Todestag (with substantial bibl.; Essen, 1961). I. Weilner, Johannes Taulers Bekehrungsweg: Die Erfahrungsgrundlagen seiner Mystik (Regensburg, 1961). C. Pleuser, Die Benennungen und der Begriff des Leides J. Tauler (Philologische Studien und Quellen, 38; 1967); J. A. Hernández, Studien zum religiös-ethischen Wortschatz der deutschen Mystik: Die Bezeichnung und der Begriff des Eigentums bei Meister Eckhart und Johannes Tauler (ibid. 105; 1984). J. M. Clark, The Great German Mystics (Oxford, 1949), pp. 36–54, with bibl. pp. 114–17. R. Kieckhefer, 'The role of Christ in Tauler's spirituality', Downside Review, 96 (1978), pp. 176–91; id., 'John Tauler', in P. Szarmach (ed.), Introduction to the Medieval Mystics of Europe (Albany, NY, 1984), pp. 259–72. Kaeppeli, 3 (1980), pp. 20 f. L. Gnädinger in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 57–79, s.v.

taurobolium. A rite which seems to have originated in the sacrifice of a bull to the Great Mother goddess, which was later associated with the cult of Cybele; by the 4th cent. it involved a ceremony (described by *Prudentius, Peristephanon, 10. 1011–50), in which a 'high priest' (summus sacerdos) descended into a ditch and was bathed in the blood of a bull slain above him. Despite many references to the rite in inscriptions, it is hard to be clear about the nature and stages of its development, but the view that it influenced the Christian theology of *Baptism is unfounded.

R. Duthoy, The Taurobolium: Its Evolution and Terminology (Études préliminaires aux religions orientales dans l'Empire romain, 10; Leiden, 1969).

Tausen, Hans (1494–1561), Reformer, the 'Danish Luther'. A peasant's son, he became a *Hospitaller at Antvorskov. He then studied at Rostock, Copenhagen, Louvain, and (from 1523) at *Wittenberg, where he came under the influence of M. *Luther. The result was that on his return to *Denmark he was imprisoned for teaching novel doctrines. After his release he preached reform at Viborg, discarded his religious habit, and, on becoming chaplain to King Frederick I (1526), he married and proceeded to employ Danish in the Church services. In 1529, following his appointment by the King to preach at Copenhagen, he secured the support of the Danish National Assembly (Herredag) against J. Rönne, Bp. of Roskilde. A Confession of Faith in 43 articles was then drawn up by Tausen and his supporters. Three years later, when Rönne had turned the Herredag against him, Tausen was convicted of heresy, but as he saved the bishop from the enraged mob, his only punishment was a warning to modify his opinions. In the following years Tausen's Confession was replaced by the more moderate *Augsburg Confession, which became the basis of the Danish Reformation. In 1535 Tausen published a Danish translation of the Pentateuch and in 1537 he became Hebrew lecturer at Copenhagen University. He became cathedral preacher at Roskilde in 1538 and in 1542 was made Bp. of Ribe.

Selections of his Writings ed. H. F. Rördam (Copenhagen, 1870). L. Schmitt, SJ, Johannes Tausen oder der dänische Luther (Cologne, 1894). N. K. Andersen, Confessio hafniensis: Den københavnske Bekendelse af 1530 (thesis; Copenhagen, 1954). K. E. Bugge (ed.), Tro og tale: Studier over Hans Tausens Postil (ibid., 1963). F. Nielsen in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 459–62; M. S. Lausten in Dansk Biografisk Leksikon, 14 (1983), pp. 378–85, s.v., with bibl. [in Danish].

Taverner's Bible. The English translation of the Bible issued in 1539 by Richard Taverner (1505?–75). It was a revision of *Matthew's Bible of 1537. As Taverner was a good Greek scholar, but not a Hebraist, his work was far better in the NT than in the OT. The edition never became popular, as M. *Coverdale's officially sponsored '*Great Bible' (1539) appeared in the same year.

H. H. Hutson and H. R. Willoughby, 'The Ignored Taverner Bible of 1539', The Crozer Quarterly, 16 (1939), pp. 161–76. B. F. *Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (1868), pp. 110–13, 269–71, with Taverner's variants collated with other edns. of the Bible, pp. 408–13. Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968), p. 24. On Taverner himself, S. M. Thorpe in S. T. Bindoff (ed.), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1509–1558, 3 (1982), pp. 424 f.; BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 557 f.

tax-collector, tax-gatherer. Terms used in the modern versions of the Bible to replace *publican (q.v.).

Taylor, Alfred Edward (1869–1945), Anglican philosopher. Educated at New College, Oxford, he was successively Fellow of Merton College (1891–8), Lecturer in Greek and philosophy at Owens College, Manchester (1896–1903), professor of logic and metaphysics at McGill University, Montreal (1903–8), and professor of moral philosophy at St Andrews (1908–24) and at Edinburgh (1924–41). Though a commentator and philosophical man of letters rather than an original systematic thinker he became a considerable intellectual and religious power. His writings, most of which are packed with information and suggestive judgements, include Plato: The Man and his Work (1926), The Faith of a Moralist (2 vols., 1930; *Gifford Lectures at St Andrews for 1926–8), Philosophical Studies (1934; with studies of Aeschines, *Proclus, St *Thomas Aquinas, Francis *Bacon, and others); The Christian Hope of Immortality (1938), and Does God Exist? (1945). He also contributed the art. 'Theism' to J. *Hastings's Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics (vol. 12, 1921) and that on 'The Vindication of Religion' to Essays Catholic and Critical* (1926).

W. D. Ross, 'Alfred Edward Taylor, 1869–1945', Proceedings of the British Academy, 31 (1945), pp. 407–22, with bibl of his works, pp. 422–4. G. Galea, Il pensiero morale di Alfredo Edoardo Taylor (Sguardi su la filosofia contemporanea, 70; Turin, 1965). D. M. MacKinnon in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 864 f., s.v.

Taylor, James Hudson (1832–1905), founder of the *China Inland Mission. He was a medical man who felt the call to be a missionary (1849) and sailed for China in 1853 under the auspices of the Chinese Evangelization Society. Despite many obstacles, among them ill-health which forced him to return in 1860, he carried on his work for China, and in 1865 founded the interdenominational China Inland Mission (q.v.). In 1866, accompanied by his family and a small staff, he went back to China, where he travelled extensively, heroically facing many difficulties, and conforming as much as possible to Chinese habits of life. A man of indomitable faith and great personal devotion, he carried the missionary work into the heart of the country and ensured its continuance by recruiting a large number of helpers. His books include China: Its Spiritual Need and Claims (1865), A Retrospect (1894), and Union and Communion (1894).

H. and G. Taylor (son and daughter-in-law), Hudson Taylor in Early Years: The Growth of a Soul (1911); idd., Hudson Taylor and the China Inland Mission: The Growth of a Work of God (1918); abridged edn., Biography of James Hudson Taylor (1965). Idd., Hudson Taylor's Spiritual Secret (1932). Exhaustive study, based on previously unpub. material, by A. J. Broomhall, Hudson Taylor & China's Open Century (7 vols., 1981–89). Popular account by R. Steer, J. Hudson Taylor (Singapore and Sevenoaks, Kent, 1990).

Taylor, Jeremy (1613–67), Anglican bishop and writer. He was a native of Cambridge and educated at Gonville and Caius College, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1633. Having been ordained in the same year he went to London to preach in the place of a friend; there he attracted the notice of Abp. W. *Laud, who nominated him to a fellowship at All Souls, Oxford, in 1635. Shortly afterwards he was appointed chaplain to *Charles I. Owing to his friendship with the Franciscan, Christopher *Davenport, he was suspected of Roman tendencies, of which he cleared himself in a 'Gunpowder Sermon' at Oxford in 1638. In the same year he was made rector of Uppingham, which he left in 1642 to become a chaplain in the Royalist army. After imprisonment for a short time he retired in 1645 to Wales, where he lived as chaplain to Lord Carbery at Golden Grove. Many of Taylor's best works were written here, among them The Liberty of Prophesying (1647), a plea for *toleration; the two devotional treatises, The Rule and Exercise of Holy Living (1650) and The Rule and Exercise of Holy Dying (1651); The Golden Grove (1655); and the Unum Necessarium (1655), a treatise on sin and repentance. In 1658 he went to Lisburn in NE Ireland as a lecturer, and in 1660 was appointed Bp. of Down and Connor and vice-chancellor of Dublin University, which he restored to order. In the same year he published his Ductor Dubitantium, a comprehensive manual of *moral theology. In 1661 he received the further see of Dromore. His episcopate was much troubled by the *Presbyterians, who refused submission and whom he treated with considerable harshness, as also the RCs, against whom he wrote his Dissuasive from Popery (1664), a violent invective against Roman Catholicism.

Taylor's fame today rests mainly on his devotional writings, esp. Holy Living and Holy Dying. They are characteristic expressions of Anglican spirituality in their balanced sobriety and their insistence on a well-ordered piety which stresses temperance and moderation in all things. They have become classics esp. for their beautiful prose, combining transparent lucidity with rhetorical vigour and powerful imagery, qualities which also made him one of the most celebrated preachers of his day. He was less felicitous as a theologian. The Unum Necessarium roused a violent controversy by reason of its alleged *Pelagianism and minimizing treatment of Original Sin. In his controversial writings he defended Episcopalianism against the Presbyterians (Of the Sacred Order and Offices of Episcopacy, 1642) and attacked the RC doctrine of *transubstantiation (The Real Presence ... proved against ... Transubstantiation, 1654), himself holding a view of the *Real Presence which comes near to the *Receptionist or *Virtualist doctrines. The work he accounted of most value was his Ductor Dubitantium, a compendium of casuistry based on both RC and Continental Protestant authors, and intended to guide the Anglican clergy in the practice of confession. Feast day in some Anglican Churches, 13 Aug.

Whole Works, ed. R. *Heber (15 vols., London, 1822), with Life by id., vol. 1, pp. ix–ccciii; rev. by C. P. Eden (10 vols., ibid., 1847–54), with Life by R. Heber, vol. 1, pp. ix–ccl. Crit. edn. of Holy Living and Holy Dying by P. G. Stanwood (2 vols., Oxford, 1989). Modern Lives by E. Gosse ('English Men of Letters', 1904), W. J. Brown ('English Theologians', 1925), and C. J. Stranks (London, 1952). T. Wood, English Casuistical Divinity During the Seventeenth Century with Special Reference to Jeremy Taylor (1952). F. R. Bolton, The Caroline Tradition of the Church of Ireland with special reference to Bishop Jeremy Taylor (1958). H. T. Hughes, The Piety of Jeremy Taylor (1960). F. L. Huntley, Jeremy Taylor and the Great Rebellion: A Study of his Mind and Temper in Controversy (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1970]). H. B. Porter, Jeremy Taylor Liturgist (1613–1667) (Alcuin Club Collections, 61; 1979). H. R. McAdoo, The Eucharistic Theology of Jeremy Taylor Today (Norwich, 1988). The liturgy which Taylor composed for Anglican congregations under the Commonwealth is repr. by W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Alcuin Club Collections, 40; 1958), pp. 183–200, with comm., pp. 19–36.

Taylor, John (1694–1761), Dissenting divine and Hebrew scholar. After studying at the academy at Whitehaven for the training of Presbyterian and Congregational ministers, he was ordained by dissenting ministers and worked at *Norwich, where he founded the Octagon Chapel (1754). In 1757 he was appointed divinity tutor at Warrington Academy. His greatest work of scholarship was his Hebrew Concordance, pub. by subscription in 1754–7. Based on that of J. Buxtorf, it was designed to serve also the purpose of a lexicon, and marked an important advance in the study of Hebrew roots. In matters of theology, Taylor tended increasingly towards an *Arian view of the Person of Christ and to a denial of the fact of Original Sin. His influential Scripture Doctrine of Original Sin (1740), which had a wide circulation in England, Scotland, and America, did much by undermining the foundations of the *Calvinistic system to prepare the way for the *Unitarian Movement in American Congregationalism.

A. Gordon in DNB 55 (1898), pp. 439 f., with refs.

Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, The. See DIDACHE.

team ministry. In the C of E since 1968, where a pastoral scheme has been made, the cure of souls in the area of a benefice or plurality may be shared by a team consisting of the incumbent of the benefice, known as the team rector, and one or more other ministers, with the title of vicar and the status of an incumbent of a benefice. Other lay or ordained ministers may share in the parochial care. The team rector may, depending on the scheme, be appointed to a freehold or for a term of years, while team vicars are always appointed for a term of years. The provisions are now consolidated in the Pastoral Measure 1983.

Te Deum. A Latin hymn to the Father and Son, in rhythmical prose. Since the 9th cent. tradition has assigned its composition to Sts *Ambrose and *Augustine at the latter's baptism, but this account of its authorship is almost universally rejected by modern scholars.

On the basis of an attribution to Bishop 'Nicet' in some MSS, Dom G. *Morin and A. E. Burn ascribed it to *Niceta of Remesiana; more recently E. Kähler has followed P. Cagin in emphasizing its liturgical character and has argued that it derives from the text of a *Paschal Vigil Service. Verses 22 ff. are suffrages, appended at an early date to the original. Its use in the offices is already referred to in the Rules of St *Caesarius of Arles and of St *Benedict, and in the RC Church it has remained an integral part of *Mattins (now of the *Office of Readings), at least on greater festivals. The BCP prescribed its use daily at Mattins, with the *Benedicite as an alternative. In the ASB and other modern Anglican liturgies its use at Morning Prayer is retained, at least on some occasions, in some cases without the concluding verses. The central section is included in some modern Anglican *burial services. It has often been set to music for use on occasions of thanksgiving, e.g. G. F. *Handel's 'Dettingen Te Deum'.

J. *Wordsworth, The 'Te Deum' (1902). A. E. Burn, The Hymn Te Deum and its Author (1926). E. Kähler, Studien zum Te Deum und zur Geschichte des 24. Psalms in der alten Kirche (Göttingen, 1958). P. Cagin, OSB, L'Euchologie latine, 1: Te Deum ou Illatio? Contribution à l'histoire de l'euchologie latine à propos des origines du Te Deum (Solesmes, 1906). G. Morin, OSB, 'Nouvelles recherches sur l'auteur du Te Deum', R. Bén. 11 (1894), pp. 49–77; id., 'Notes additionnelles à l'étude sur l'auteur du Te Deum', ibid. 337–45; id.; 'Le Te Deum, type anonyme d'anaphore latine préhistorique?', ibid. 24 (1907), pp. 180–223. M. Huglo in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 954 f., s.v.

Te Igitur (Lat., 'Thee, therefore'), the first words of the prayer which was long regarded as the opening section of the *Canon of the Roman Mass, and hence also the name for the first section of the canon. It asks God to accept and bless the Eucharistic offerings, and offers intercession for the whole Church, including the Pope, the Diocesan Bishop (these two mentioned by name), and all the faithful. The representation of the Crucifixion immediately preceding it in *Missals was apparently in origin a pictorial elaboration of the initial T of Te igitur.

A. Ebner, Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte und Kunstgeschichte des Missale Romanum im Mittelalter (1896), pp. 443–9; V. Leroquais, Les Sacramentaires et les missels manuscrits des bibliothèques publiques de France (4 vols., 1924), esp. vol. 1, pp. xxxiii–xxxvii, with refs. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 185–90; Eng. tr., 2 (1955), pp. 147–52.

Teilhard de Chardin, Pierre (1881–1955), French theologian and scientist. Born near Clermont in central France, he entered the *Jesuit novitiate at Aix-en-Provence in 1899, and was ordained priest in 1911. During this long training he studied theology but was also strongly attracted to the natural sciences, especially geology and palaeontology. After service in the First World War, he was able to devote himself to his scientific studies. For many years he worked in China and gained a notable reputation as a palaeontologist. His last years were spent in the USA. At the time of his death he had published only scientific papers, for he had not been able to obtain permission for the publication of his religious and theological works. These appeared from 1955 onward and at once made a powerful impression as a new synthesis of science and religion. Le Phénomène humain (1955; Eng. tr., The Phenomenon of Man, 1959) is probably his best-known work and contains the essence of his ideas. The universe is seen as an evolutionary process in which the movement is always towards systems of greater complexity. Correlated with this movement towards complexity is the movement towards higher levels of consciousness. The whole process has included several critical moments or thresholds at which leaps to new levels have been made. Such thresholds were the emergence of life on earth and then the emergence of rational self-consciousness in man. This latter emergence has special significance, since it means that evolution no longer takes place in accordance with the laws of nature only, but that man now takes part in directing it. The whole process moves towards a fulfilment in which all things will be gathered up in God. Teilhard's philosophical theology is reflected in his devotional writings, notably Le Milieu divin (1957; Eng. tr., 1960). For him, matter has a sacramental character, and the whole universe is in process of 'Christification' as a consequence of the Incarnation. Though he has been criticized for the philosophical weaknesses of his work and for an uncritical optimism, Teilhard's thought is a remarkable effort to relate the Christian tradition to the contemporary scientific understanding of nature.

Collected edn. of his works, 13 vols., Paris, 1955–76. Eng. tr. of other individual works incl. Letters from a Traveller (1962); The Future of Man (1964), and Hymn of the Universe (1965). The standard biog. is C. Cuénot, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin: Les grands étapes de son évolution (1958; Eng. tr., 1965). Other studies incl. H. de *Lubac, SJ, La Pensée religieuse du Père Pierre Teilhard de Chardin (1962; Eng. tr., 1967); id., La Prière du Père Teilhard de Chardin (1964; Eng. tr., 1965); R. W. Kropf, Teilhard, Scripture, and Revelation: A Study of Teilhard de Chardin's Reinterpretation of Pauline Themes [1980]; T. M. King, Teilhard's Mysticism of Knowing (New York, 1981); J. A. Lyons, The Cosmic Christ in Origen and Teilhard de Chardin (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1982); A. Hunt Overzee, The Body Divine: The Symbol of the Body in the Works of Teilhard de Chardin and Rāmānuga (Cambridge, 1992). J. E. Jarque, Bibliographie générale des œuvres et articles sur Pierre Teilhard de Chardin parus jusqu'à fin décembre 1969 (Fribourg, 1970). Works on Teilhard de Chardin have also been listed annually since 1956 in the Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu. Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 359–553. P. Noir, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 115–26, s.v.

Teilo, St (6th cent.), patron saint and Bp. of *Llandaff. It is difficult to deduce from the mass of mutually conflicting later traditions anything certain about his life. He is credited with having been consecrated bishop at *Jerusalem while on a pilgrimage to Palestine and (a less unlikely tradition) with having visited St *Samson at Dol. He is also said to have succeeded St *Dubricius in the see of Llandaff when the latter retired to Bardsey in 495. His reputation for piety and pastoral devotion was such that three churches laid claim to possess his bones. The dispute was settled (it is said) when two additional identical corpses were provided supernaturally. Feast day, 9 Feb.

An account of his life is incl. in the Liber Landavensis (first pub. by W. J. Rees for the Welsh MSS Society, 1840, pp. 92–111; re-ed. by J. G. Evans from the Gwysaney MS, 1893, pp. 97–117). Lat. text also pub. with crit. notes by J. Loth, 'La Vie de saint Teliau d'après le livre de Llandaf', Annales de Bretagne, 9 (1893), pp. 81–5, 277–86, 438–46, and 10 (1894), pp. 66–77. G. H. Doble, Saint Teilo ('Welsh Saints', 3; Lampeter, 1942), repr. in his Lives of the Welsh Saints, ed. D. S. Evans (Cardiff, 1971), pp. 162–206. C. [N. L.] Brooke in N. K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), esp. pp. 214 f., 219 f., 224–6, and 236–8.

teinds. The Scottish equivalent of *tithes. Historically, teinds were that proportion of the produce of lands in the parish available for the support of the clergy. The stipend payable to the parish minister formed a burden on the teinds and generally fluctuated from year to year, depending on the price of victual. That system of payment of stipend came to an end with the enactment of the Church of Scotland (Property and Endowments) Act 1925 in terms of which stipend was standardized, i.e. the amounts due became fixed annual payments known as standard charges and were secured as real burdens on the lands involved. The landowner has the option (and on a sale of the relevant property the obligation) to redeem such charges; most have in fact been redeemed.

Telemachus, St. Acc. to *Theodoret (HE 5. 26), Telemachus was an E. monk who, seeking to put an end to the gladiatorial shows at Rome, entered the arena in person on 1 Jan. 391 to separate the combatants, and was killed by the spectators. The act is said to have led the Emp. Honorius to abolish the games. In the *Hieronymian Martyrology he is called 'Almachius'. Feast day, 1 Jan.

The sole sources are Theodoret, HE 5. 26, and a note in the Hieronymianum. H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Saint Almachius ou Télémaque', Anal. Boll. 33 (1914), pp. 421–8. G. *Morin, 'Le Dragon du Forum romain, sa légende et son histoire', R. Bén. 31 (1919), pp. 321–6. J. P. Kirsch in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 630 f., s.v. 'Almachius', with further bibl. St Telemachus is also the subject of a poem by C. G. *Rossetti.

teleology (Gk. τέλος, 'end'). The word, probably coined by C. *Wolff in 1728, denotes the science of ends or final causes. It is esp. applied to the doctrine, inherent in every organic and non-mechanistic interpretation of the universe, that it embodies design and purpose. This doctrine, implicit in much classical philosophy, was taken over by Christian theology and forms the basis of the modern argument from design (also known in the 18th cent. as the 'physico-theological argument' and by recent philosophers as the 'teleological argument') for the existence of God. In its classic form (e.g., in W. *Paley's Evidences), it sets out from the observation that every biological species is apparently designed to serve its own needs, and argues therefrom to an intelligent Creator. Under the influence of C. *Darwin, E. *Haeckel, and the general trend of 19th-cent. science, the traditional form of the argument has been abandoned. While teleological arguments for the existence of God are no longer fashionable among philosophers, there has in recent times been a renewal of interest in teleological explanations in science, after a long period when only mechanistic explanations were tolerated.

For modern presentations of the teleological argument see F. R. Tennant, Philosophical Theology (2 vols., Cambridge, 1928–30); A. R. Peacocke, Creation and the World of Science (Bampton Lectures, 1978; Oxford, 1979); T. F. Torrance, Divine and Contingent Order (Oxford, 1981). A. Woodfield, Teleology (Cambridge, 1976).

Telesio, Bernardino (1509–88), Italian humanist. A native of Cosenza, nr. Naples, he studied philosophy, mathematics, and natural science at Padua and Rome, becoming a strong critic of the *Aristotelian philosophy. At Rome he enjoyed for a while the patronage of *Paul IV, who offered him the archbishopric of Cosenza. In 1566 he returned to Naples and founded a scientific society ('Academia Telesiana'). His doctrines, much influenced by the early Greek nature philosophers (esp. Parmenides), were based on an extreme empiricism; but he gradually built up a speculative system in which the Aristotelian doctrine of matter and form was replaced by one of matter and force. His principal treatise was De Rerum Natura iuxta Propria Principia (pt. 1, Rome, 1565; pt. 2, Naples, 1586); others were De Somno, De Cometis et Lacteo Circulo, and De Iride (ed. together, A. Persius, Venice, 1590). Among his disciples were T. *Campanella and G. *Bruno (qq.v.). In 1600 most of his writings were placed on the *Index.

Modern edn. of De Rerum Natura by V. Spampanato (vol. 1, Modena, 1910; vol. 2, Genoa, 1913; vol. 3, Rome, 1923); also ed. L. de Franco (vols. 1 and 2, Cosenza, 1965–74; vol. 3, Florence, 1976); Varii de naturalibus rebus libelli, ed. id. (Florence, 1981). Studies by F. Fiorentino (2 vols., Florence, 1872–4), E. Troilo (Modena, 1910; 2nd edn., Rome, 1924), G. *Gentile (Bari, 1911; 2nd edn., 1923), N. C. Van Deusen (New York, 1932), and G. Soleri (Brescia, 1944). N. Abbagnano, Bernardino Telesio e la filosofia del rinascimento (1941). E. Zavattari, La visione della vita nel rinascimento e Bernardino Telesio (1923). N. Van Deusen, 'The Place of Telesio in the History of Philosophy', Philosophical Review, 44 (1935), pp. 417–34. B. M. Bonansea, OFM, in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 8 (1967), pp. 92 f., s.v.

Telesphorus (d. *c.*137), Bp. of Rome from *c.*127. St *Irenaeus (ap. Eusebius, HE 5. 24. 14) mentions that he always observed Easter on Sundays, as against the *Quartodeciman practice, and that he suffered death by martyrdom (Haer. 3. 3. 3). He is thus the only 2nd-cent. Pope whose martyrdom is well attested. Feast day, in the E., 22 Feb.; in the W., 2 or 5 Jan., suppressed in 1969.

Jaffé, 1, p. 6. The principal authority is LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 129 f. J. N. D. Kelly, Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), p. 9.

Tell el-Amarna Tablets. A collection of ancient inscribed clay tablets, discovered in 1887 at Tell el-Amarna, the site of the former royal city of Akhenaton, Egyptian ruler of the 14th cent. BC. They are written in *cuneiform script, mostly in Akkadian, and consist chiefly of letters, many of them from Canaanite kings to their Egyptian suzerain, complaining of the attacks on Palestine of invading forces from the north and the east. Among the letters are some from an early ruler of Urusalim (i.e. *Jerusalem) named Abdi-Ḫiba.

The standard edn. of the Tablets, in transliteration, is that of J. A. Knudtzon, Die El-Amarna Tafeln (Vorderasiatische Bibliothek, 2; 1908–15), incl. Ger. tr.; suppl. by A. F. Rainey, El Amarna Tablets 359 379 (Alter Orient und Altes Testament, 8; 1970), with Eng. tr. Eng. tr., with introd., by W. L. Moran, The Amarna Letters (Baltimore and London [1992]). Convenient Eng. tr. of selections in J. B. Pritchard (ed.), Ancient Near Eastern Texts relating to the Old Testament (2nd edn., 1955), pp. 483–90. E. F. Campbell, The Chronology of the Amarna Letters (Baltimore, 1964). On the site, T. E. Peet and C. J. Woolley, The City of Akhenaten, 1 (Egyptian Exploration Society, 1923), 2 (ibid., 1933) and 3 (in 2 parts, ibid., 1951). W. F. Albright in C. Anc. H. (3rd edn.), 2, ch. 20 [no. 51 in fascicle edn. (1966), pp. 3–23], with full bibl.

temperance (Lat. temperantia, used by Cicero to render *Plato's σωφροσύνη), restraint of the appetites and passions in accordance with reason. One of the four *cardinal virtues, and indeed, acc. to the moralists, the most fundamental of them as that on which the other three depend, it was inculcated by the Gk. philosophers, esp. Plato and the *Stoics. In the NT, the Gk. noun σωφροσύνη, translated in the AV by 'soberness' or 'sobriety', occurs three times (Acts 26: 25, 1 Tim. 2: 9 and 15), in each case as an adjunct to godliness. The adjective σώφρων, translated indiscriminately as 'sober', 'temperate', or 'discreet', is listed among the attributes proper to a bishop (1 Tim. 3: 2 and Tit. 1: 8), to old men (Tit. 2: 2) and aged women (Tit. 2: 5). (Elsewhere in the NT, the AV 'temperance' is a rendering of ἐγκράτεια, 'self-control'.)

For the Christian, temperance in its physical aspects is linked with the need for self-control of the body, regarded as a 'temple of the Holy Spirit'. The Gk. teaching influenced *Origen and the *Cappadocian Fathers, while the conception was developed, under the influence of Cicero, esp. by St *Ambrose and St *Augustine; it was further elaborated by St *Thomas Aquinas. Moral theologians commonly subdivide it into several other virtues, e.g. abstinence, chastity, and modesty.

The 'temperance societies', founded to foster abstinence from alcohol, date from the 19th cent. Though the first American temperance society, that of Moreau and Northumberland, was founded at Saratoga, NY, in 1808, the formation of a nationwide movement was largely due to the work of L. *Beecher. The American Society for the Promotion of Temperance was established at Boston in 1829. In an attempt to co-ordinate the numerous local societies that had grown up, in 1833 it held a convention which created the United States Temperance Union, in 1836 renamed the American Temperance Union (to accommodate the Canadian societies). There were divisions as to whether the aim should be temperance or total abstinence, but the latter view was accepted. In the middle of the 19th cent. several states followed Maine in prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor. This legislation was soon either declared unconstitutional or repealed, but pressure continued, and in 1919 the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution, forbidding the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquor throughout the USA was accepted by Congress. Intensely unpopular, it was repealed in 1933. The failure of the national experiment in prohibition tended to discredit the (mainly Protestant) leaders of the temperance societies. More recently the temperance societies (including the International Temperance Society founded in 1947) have concerned themselves broadly with problems associated with alcohol, tobacco, and drugs.

Similar temperance societies were established in Britain, but their influence was never as great as those in America. The first British society, the Ulster Temperance Society, was formed in 1829 and soon had branches in Lancashire and Yorkshire. The nucleus of the Church of England Temperance Society dates from 1862, though it adopted this title only when it amalgamated with a regional diocesan society in 1873. It not only encouraged its supporters to take the pledge of total abstinence (sometimes for a limited period) or to a general agreement to be abstemious with regard to alcohol, but it also sought to provide alternatives to the public houses by establishing coffee taverns and engaged in other preventative work. In 1967 it joined with the National Police Court Mission (concerned esp. with the effects of alcohol on prisoners), and the Church of England Council for Social Aid was formed; it now deals with a wide range of problems. Elsewhere in Europe there have been similar manifestations of the temperance movement.

On the virtue of temperance, A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 94–9, s.v. On the temperance movements, D. Burns, Temperance History: A Consecutive Narrative of the Rise, Development, and Extension, of the Temperance Reform. 1826–1880 (2 vols. in 4 parts [1889–91]); E. H. Cherrington, The Evolution of Prohibition in the United States of America (Westerville, Oh. [1920]); P. E. Prestwich, Drink and the Politics of Social Reform: Antialcoholism in France since 1870 (Palo Alto, Calif., 1988). H. D. Langley in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 987–92, s.v. 'Temperance Movements'.

Templars (or Knights Templar). The 'Poor Knights of Christ and of the Temple of Solomon', one of the two chief Military Orders of medieval Christendom, with headquarters successively in *Jerusalem, Acre, and *Cyprus. The original nucleus consisted of Hugh de Payens, a knight of Champagne, and eight companions, who in *c.*1119 bound themselves by a solemn vow to protect pilgrims from bandits on the public roads of the Holy Land. They were given quarters at the site of Solomon's *Temple. At first they lived on alms, but in 1127 Hugh journeyed to the W. to obtain ecclesiastical approbation and recruits, and their fortunes (then perhaps at a low ebb) quickly improved. At the Council of Troyes (1129) approval was given to the Rule of the Order, said to have been drawn up by St *Bernard, who dedicated to Hugh his treatise 'De laude novae militiae'. The Order contained four ranks of 'knights', 'serjeants', 'squires' and 'chaplains'.

The Templars soon rose in influence and wealth, acquiring property and setting up their organization in most parts of Christendom. The new Order gained the support of the Papacy which, in a series of bulls, granted it extensive privileges, the most important being contained in 'Omne Datum Optimum' (1139). In the 12th-cent. *Crusader states, the professional forces of the Templars and *Hospitallers played an increasingly important part in campaigns, and from the late 1130s onwards various castles came into the Templars' hands. The Grand Master of the Temple was partly responsible for the disaster which overtook the Crusaders in 1187, but then and later the knights of the Order fought bravely. The Order became still more important in the 13th cent., providing an even higher proportion of troops and acquiring even more castles; in 1217–18 they built Castle Pilgrim, and in 1240–3 they rebuilt Safed, the largest Christian fortress in the East, bought by the Templars in 1168. However, the Military Orders increasingly acted independently of the rulers, and they were sometimes at odds with each other. At the fall of Acre (1291) the Templars fought fiercely and their Grand Master was killed.

Meanwhile great wealth had been accumulated by the Templars; this was deposited in their 'temples' in Paris and London, and the integrity and credit of the Order led it to be much trusted as a banking house. The same wealth led to its early ruin after the loss of Acre. Already the Council of *Lyons (1274) had witnessed an attempt to end the rivalry of the Templars and Hospitallers by incorporating them into a single Order; but even in 1306 the last Grand Master, James de Molay, opposed such a scheme. In 1303, Hugh de Pairaud, the Visitor of the Templars in France, was among those who supported Philip the Fair, the King of France, against Pope *Boniface VIII, but the King soon found the temptation of the Order's great wealth too strong. Aided by a renegade Templar, he brought charges of sodomy, blasphemy, and heresy against the Order, and enlisted the reluctant aid of Pope *Clement V. Both the King and the *Inquisition used torture freely to obtain confessions; many knights died under torture or at the stake. Philip IV, in his later years increasingly preoccupied by a rather morbid piety, may have become convinced of the Templars' guilt, as well as seeking to gain material profit from the downfall. Clement V finally suppressed the Order at the Council of *Vienne in 1312;

James de Molay was burnt in Paris in 1314, and the Order's possessions (except those in Spain and Portugal) were given to the Hospitallers. The innocence of the Templars, vigorously championed by *Dante, has been a matter of prolonged controversy, but is now generally admitted.

The headquarters of the English branch of the Order was for a long time in London, S. of the Strand (now the Inner and Middle Temple). The Temple Church, dating from 1185, was, in common with some other churches of the Templars, a round structure on the model of the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem. A nave (or choir) was added in 1240.

The standard edn. of the Rule is that of H. de Curzon (Société de l'Histoire de France, 1886), to be used in conjunction with G. Schnürer, Die ursprüngliche Templerregel (Studien und Darstellungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte. Im Auftrage der Görres-Gesellschaft und in Verbindung mit der Redaktion des Historischen Jahrbuches, 3, Hefte 1–2; 1903). Eng. tr. of the Rule, with introd., by J. M. Upton-Ward (Woodbridge, Suffolk [1992]). St Bernard's 'De laude novae militiae' is pr. in his Opera, 3, ed. J. Leclercq, OSB, and H. M. Rochais, OSB (Rome, 1963), pp. 207–39; Eng. tr. by C. Greenia, OCSO, in St Bernard's Works, 7 (Cistercian Fathers Series, 19; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1977), pp. 125–67, with introd. by R. J. Z. Werblowsky, pp. 115–23. The Marquis d'Albon began to make a general collection of Templar docs., part of which he pub. as Cartulaire général de l'Ordre du Temple, 1119?–1150 (1913; fasc. complémentaire, 1922), but the bulk of the material is in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris; E. G. Léonard, Introduction au cartulaire manuscrit du Temple (1150–1317) constitué par le marquis d'Albon (1930) is a detailed guide. R. Röhricht (ed.), Regesta Regni Hierosolymitani (2 vols., Innsbruck, 1893–1904) contains summaries of docs. and their sources in the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem, incl. those concerning the Templars. Privileges and bulls ed. R. Hiestand, Papsturkunden für Templer und Johanniter (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 77 and 135; 1972–84). The most important chronicler of the Templars' activities in the East is *William of Tyre (q.v.), while the rebuilding of Safed is described in a text ed. by R. B. C. Huygens in Studi medievali, 3rd ser. 6 (1965), pp. 355–87. There is a wide range of material for the Templars' western lands, of which good examples are the inquest of 1185 in England, ed. B. A. Lees, Records of the Templars in England in the Twelfth Century (1935), and P. Gérard and É. Magnou (eds.), Cartulaires des Templiers de Douzens (Collection de documents inédits sur l'histoire de France, sér. in 8°, 3; 1965). A good selection of docs. on the trial can be found, with Fr. tr., in G. Lizerand (ed.), Le Dossier de l'Affaire des Templiers (Les classiques de l'histoire de France au moyen âge, 1923), but the most substantial collections are contained in [J.] Michelet (ed.), Procès des Templiers (Collection de documents inédits sur l'histoire de France, 1st ser., Histoire politique, 2 vols., 1841–51), H. Finke, Papsttum und Untergang des Templerordens (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, 4–5; 1907), and K. Schottmüller, Der Untergang des Templer-Ordens, 2 (1887). The use of these docs. is facilitated by the tables in J. Gmelin, Schuld oder Unschuld des Templerordens (Stuttgart, 1893). These materials are concerned largely, though not exclusively, with the trial in France. Sources for other countries incl. A. Gilmour-Bryson, The Trial of the Templars in the Papal State and the Abruzzi (ST 303; 1982).

Secondary lit. is extensive, but of variable quality and often tendentious. General histories incl. H. Prutz, Die Geistlichen Ritterorder: Ihre Stellung zur kirchlichen, politischen, gesellschaftlichen und wirtschaftlichen Entwicklung des Mittelalters (1908); G. A. Campbell, The Knights Templars (1937); M. Melville, La Vie des Templiers (1951); A. Demurger, Vie et mort de l'Ordre du Temple, 1118–1314 [1985]; and M. [C.] Barber, The New Knighthood: A History of the Order of the Temple (Cambridge, 1994). Various arts. in J. Fleckenstein and M. Hellmann (eds.), Die Geistlichen Ritterorden Europas (Vorträge und Forschungen, 26; Sigmaringen, 1980). Particular aspects are covered by L. Delisle, Mémoire sur les opérations financières des Templiers (Mémoires de l'Institut National de France, Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, 33, pt. 2; 1889); J. Piquet, Des Banquiers au moyen âge: Les Templiers (1939); É. Lambert, L'Architecture des Templiers (1955); and M. L. Bulst-Thiele, Sacrae Domus Militiae Templi Hierosolymitani Magistri: Untersuchungen zur Geschichte des Templerordens 1118/9–1314 (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 86; 1974). Regional studies incl. V. Carrière, Histoire et cartulaire des Templiers de Provins (1919); T. W. Parker, The Knights Templars in England (Tucson, Ariz., 1963); and A. J. Forey, The Templars in the Corona de Aragón (University of Durham Publications; London, 1973). For the trial, H. Prutz, Entwicklung und Untergang des Tempelherrenordens (1888), incl. docs.; H. C. Lea, A History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages, 3 (New York, 1887; London, 1888), pp. 238–334; H. Finke, op. cit., 1; G. Lizerand, Clément V et Philippe IV le Bel (1910), also with docs.; and M. [C.] Barber, The Trial of the Templars (Cambridge, 1978). For the controversies over the Order, see P. [D.] Partner, The Murdered Magicians: The Templars and their Myth (Oxford, 1982). Works up to 1965 are listed in M. Dessubré, Bibliographie de l'Ordre des Templiers (Bibliothèque des Initiations Modernes, 5; 1928) and H. Neu, Bibliographie des Templer-Ordens 1927–1965 (Bonn [1965]).

Temple, the. Although tradition ascribes the idea of a national Israelite shrine at *Jerusalem to *David (2 Sam. 7), the first Temple dates from the reign of *Solomon (*c.*970–*c.*930). The building of this 'house of God' is described in 1 Kgs. 5–8. It became the central sanctuary of the nation, and here alone, acc. to the legislation of Deuteronomy, could sacrificial worship be offered. It was destroyed by the Babylonians *c.*586 BC; its rebuilding was envisaged in Ezekiel (chs. 40–8) and effectively undertaken at the instigation of *Haggai and *Zechariah *c.*520. This structure (the 'Second Temple') suffered desecration at the hands of *Antiochus Epiphanes in 167 BC, but in 164 BC it was rededicated under *Judas Maccabaeus. The Temple buildings were reconstructed and richly adorned by *Herod the Great, his chief motive being a bid for popular approval. This was the Temple standing in Christ's time, the scene of the Cleansing, and of His teaching during the days before the Betrayal. In Roman times the custody of the Temple was left in the hands of the *High Priest, assisted by priests officiating by rota. With the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in AD 70 the Temple worship ceased. The site, one of the most sacred in *Islam, is now occupied by two mosques. See also JERUSALEM; DOME OF THE ROCK.

All attempted reconstructions of the Temple are necessarily highly conjectural. The more important reliable modern discussions incl. K. Möhlenbrink, Der Tempel Salomos: Eine Untersuchung seiner Stellung in der Sakralarchitektur des alten Orients (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Folge 4, 7; 1932); J. Parrot, Le Temple de Jérusalem (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, 5; 1954; Eng. tr., 1957); and T. A. Busink, Der Tempel von Jerusalem von Salomo bis Herodes: Eine archäologisch-historische Studie unter Berücksichtigung des Westsemitischen Tempelbaus (2 vols., Leiden, 1970–80). M. Barker, The Gate of Heaven: The History and Symbolism of the Temple in Jerusalem (1991 [popular in style]). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others (3 vols. in 4, Edinburgh, 1973–87), esp. 1, pp. 162 f., 237–313; see also index, 3, pt. 2, pp. 999 f. R. E. Clements, God and Temple (Oxford, 1965). Y. Yadin and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 15 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 942–88; C. Meyers in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 350–69, s.v. 'Temple, Jerusalem'.

Temple, Frederick (1821–1902), Abp. of *Canterbury. Born at Santa Maura in the Ionian Islands, he was educated at Blundell's School, Tiverton, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where B. *Jowett, A. C. *Tait, and W. G. *Ward were among his tutors. He was much interested in the *Tractarian Movement, but never attached himself to it; and, gradually welcoming liberal principles, he condemned the attempted censure of both W. G. Ward and R. D. *Hampden. In 1846 he was ordained deacon and in 1847 priest, both by S. *Wilberforce. He continued to teach for a time at Balliol, where he became an advocate of educational reform. From 1848 to 1857 he worked for the Committee of the Council of Education before he succeeded A. C. Tait as Headmaster of Rugby (1857–69). He did much to enhance the prestige of the school, as well as becoming increasingly prominent in the education movement. In 1860 he wrote on 'The Education of the World' for Essays and Reviews (q.v.). This paper, though wholly inoffensive from the standpoint of orthodoxy, brought him much obloquy through the extremism of some of his fellow-contributors. Hence, when in 1869 he was offered the bishopric of *Exeter, the nomination was received with fierce opposition, but he was consecrated on 21 Dec. 1869 and, characteristically, only consented to withdraw his essay from future editions of Essays and Reviews after the event. In his diocese he did much to foster Church Schools and was a leading figure in the *temperance movement. He was also influential in the establishment of the diocese of *Truro. In 1885 he was translated to London; here he played an important part in the *Lincoln Judgement (1890). In his later years he became increasingly involved in conflict with the High Church party. In 1897 he was translated to *Canterbury. His primacy was marked by the issue in 1897 of the 'Responsio' of the Abps. of Canterbury and York to '*Apostolicae Curae', the *Lambeth Conference of 1897, and the issue of the *Lambeth Opinions (q.v.) of 1899–1900. He was responsible for the restoration of the Old Palace at Canterbury as a residence for the Archbishop. His writings include an impressive set of *Bampton Lectures on The Relations between Religion and Science (1884) and several vols. of sermons.

M. Barber, Index to the Letters and Papers of Frederick Temple . . . in Lambeth Palace Library (1975). E. G. Sandford (ed.), Memoirs of Archbishop Temple by Seven Friends (2 vols., 1906); last section (Editor's Supplement), with extracts from other parts, repr. as E. G. Sandford, Frederick Temple: An Appreciation (1907). P. B. Hinchliff, Frederick Temple: A Life (Oxford, 1997). H. M. Spooner in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 488–93.

Temple, William (1881–1944), Abp. of *Canterbury. The second son of F. *Temple, he was successively Exhibitioner of Balliol College (1900), Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford (1904), Headmaster of Repton (1910), Rector of St James's, Piccadilly (1914), Canon of Westminster (1919), Bp. of Manchester (1921), Abp. of *York (1929), and Abp. of Canterbury (1942). While still a layman, he formed lasting interests in educational and social work, esp. through the Workers' Educational Association and the Student Christian Movement. He contributed to Foundations (1912; q.v.) and was among the leaders of the 'Life and Liberty Movement', calling for a degree of autonomy for the C of E which was substantially granted by the Enabling Act (1919). In 1923 he became a member (from 1925, Chairman) of the Archbishops' Commission which in 1938 produced the report on Doctrine in the Church of England. As Abp. of York (1929–42) he became increasingly prominent in national life, esp. through his lively concern with social, economic, and international questions, though remaining independent of organized parties, both political and religious. In 1924 he was the main inspiration behind the Conference on Politics, Economics, and Citizenship (COPEC), a seminal discussion of contemporary social needs which was resumed at the *Malvern Conference, over which he presided in 1941. He also gave whole-hearted support to the *Faith and Order and *Life and Work Movements and to the *Ecumenical Movement generally. His short period as Abp. of Canterbury (23 Apr. 1942–26 Oct. 1944) was overshadowed by the War of 1939–45 and by ill-health, but it was remarkable, inter alia, for his participation, with Card. A. *Hinsley and the Moderator of the Free Church Council, in the issue of a statement of principles which should guide a post-war settlement, and for his public speeches and broadcasts.

Temple was trained as a philosopher under E. *Caird, and the Neo-*Hegelian position from which he set out coloured all his later thinking, though he gradually developed into an independent thinker and philosopher of some significance. His principal works include Mens Creatrix (1917), Christus Veritas (1924), and Nature, Man and God (*Gifford Lectures for 1932–3 and 1933–4; 1934), Readings in St John's Gospel (1939; 2nd ser., 1940; devotional studies), and Christianity and Social Order (Penguin Special; 1942). Of his other published works, many originated as lectures or addresses.

Life by F. A. Iremonger (London, 1948). Some Lambeth Letters, 1942–1944 (selected from W. Temple's correspondence), ed. F. S. Temple (1963). O. C. Thomas, William Temple's Philosophy of Religion (1961); R. Craig, Social Concern in the Thought of William Temple (1963); J. D. Carmichael and H. S. Goodwin, William Temple's Political Legacy (1963); A. M. Suggate, William Temple and Christian Social Ethics Today (Edinburgh, 1987). J. Kent, William Temple (Cambridge, 1993). F. A. Iremonger in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 869–73.

Temporale. The section of a *Missal, *Lectionary, or *Breviary which supplies the variable parts of the *Masses, *Offices, and a few other closely connected services, for the whole of the ecclesiastical year, except in so far as they are provided for in the *Sanctorale.

temptation. The etymology of the Lat. word (temptatio), of which the Heb. (מַסָּה) and Greek (πειρασμός) equivalents are neutral in flavour, suggests 'trying' or 'proving'. This primary sense is retained in the ideas of the children of Israel's tempting God (Exod. 17: 2) and of God's tempting *Abraham (Gen. 22: 1), and in Jas. 1: 2 f.: 'Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trial of your faith worketh patience'. Perhaps it was by an extension of this usage that the word was applied to the persecutions of the early Christians. It is also possible that this is the meaning of the word in the *Lord's Prayer.

Elsewhere in the NT, as in present-day usage, the word has the implication of incitement to sin. St *Augustine distinguished temptation which tended to issue in sin (tentatio deceptionis or seductionis) from temptation which merely put to the proof (tentatio probationis). Both he and St *Gregory the Great divided the former into the three stages of suggestion, delight, and consent (suggestio, delectatio, consensus). In this, the classical sense, temptation seems to be part of universal experience which already attacked our first parents before the *Fall. But, although St *Paul warns his readers against committing acts which though innocent in themselves might be a temptation to others, he nowhere implies that inclination to wrongful action is sinful before consent. Acc. to the author of the Epistle of St *James, temptation is inherent in free will, but God does not permit it beyond what the soul can bear. He warns his readers against regarding God as its author (1: 13). The three traditional sources of temptation are the world, the flesh, and the devil. Although in the OT the tempter is regularly regarded as personal, the Lord also points to the weakness of the flesh as the cause of temptation (Mt. 26: 41), while James holds that lust is its main source (1: 14 f.).

Modern psychologists, who frequently interpret sin mainly as psychological disorder, often teach that the forms of temptation rooted in the appetites are primarily natural instincts, which as such ought, at least to some extent, to be satisfied. They are apt to regard many forms of mental temptation, notably those which may lead to scruples and illusions, as of a much more serious nature. Since temptation is heightened by resistance, they frequently advocate circumvention rather than direct defence as the best means of avoiding repression. For the Christian moralist, the fundamental ethical facts remain unaffected by these psychological analyses. Rightly appreciated, these analyses can be of positive service to him in assisting him to a better estimation of the roots of moral action and enabling him to see where moral responsibility really lies.

See also the following entry.

The subject is regularly treated in works on Moral Theology. J. H. Horn, Πειρασμός: Die Versuchung des Gläubigen in der griechischen Bibel (Beiträge zum Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Vierte Folge, 20; 1937). R. Brouillard in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 116–27, s.v. 'Tentation', with bibl.; H. Seesemann in TWNT 6 (1959), pp. 23–37 (Eng. tr., 1968, pp. 23–36), s.v. πεῖρα κτλ., with further bibl.; S. Légasse, OFM, and others in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 193–251, s.v. 'Tentation', with bibl.

Temptation of Christ. The Temptation of Christ in the wilderness after His baptism is recorded in Mk. 1: 13, Mt. 4: 1–11, Lk. 4: 1–13. Three particular temptations are described in Mt. and Lk.: (1) to use His power as Son of God to turn stones into bread to satisfy His hunger; (2) to cast Himself down from a pinnacle of the Temple, i.e. to put God to an arbitrary test and to stage a spectacular miracle; and (3) to obtain from the devil power over all the kingdoms of the world by falling down and worshipping him, i.e. to desert His true mission for the sake of power unworthily obtained. In Lk. the last two temptations are related in the reverse order. It is a matter of Christian faith that though Christ was 'tempted in all points like as we are', He was 'yet without sin' (Heb. 4: 15). The Fathers understood the narrative of the Temptation of Christ both retrospectively as a typological recapitulation of Adam's temptation and prospectively as linked to the coming Passion. They also saw it as foreshadowing the continuing conflict between the Lord and Satan in the mission of the Church. The theme has long been a subject of special meditation in Lent, and in the W. Church an account of the Temptation has provided the Gospel for the First Sunday in Lent from the 5th cent. onwards.

F. *Spitta, Zur Geschichte und Literatur des Urchristentums, 3 (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 1–108 ('Die Versuchung Jesu'); P. Ketter, Die Versuchung Jesu nach dem Berichte der Synoptiker (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 6, Heft 3; 1918); E. Fascher, Jesus und der Satan: Eine Studie zur Auslegung der Versuchungsgeschichte (Hallische Monographien herausgegeben O. Eissfeldt, 10; 1949); K.-P. Köppen, Die Auslegung der Versuchungsgeschichte unter besonderer Berüksichtigung der Alten Kirche (Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese, 4; Tübingen, 1961); E. Best, The Temptation and the Passion: The Markan Soteriology (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 2; Cambridge, 1965), pp. 3–60; M. Steiner, OFM, La Tentation de Jésus dans l'interprétation patristique de saint Justin à Origène (Études bibliques, 1962). H. Seesemann in TWNT 6 (1959), pp. 33–7 (Eng. tr. (1968), pp. 33–6) s.v. 'πεῖρα κτλ. C. III. Die Versuchungen Jesu', with further bibl. in 10/2 (1979), cols. 1226–8. See also comm. to the Gospels.

tempus clausum (Lat., 'closed time'). The seasons in the Christian year in which, owing to their penitential or solemn character, marriages might not normally be celebrated with solemnity or at all. In the 4th cent. the 52nd canon of the Council of *Laodicea prohibited the celebration of marriage in *Lent. Later, at the Council of Beneventum in 1091, celebration was also forbidden in the periods between the beginning of *Advent and the end of the *Octave of the *Epiphany and from *Septuagesima Sunday to the Sunday after *Pentecost (*Easter in some MSS). Until the Council of *Trent, however, there was in practice no agreement as to whether the marriage ceremony itself or only the solemnities were forbidden; that Council defined the closed season for solemnities as extending from the first Sunday of Advent to the Epiphany and from *Ash Wednesday to Low Sunday (Sess. 24, cap. 10), implying that marriages could take place at any time. In the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici (can. 1108) the closed season for solemnities extended only from the first Sunday in Advent to *Christmas Day and from Ash Wednesday to Easter Day; there is no similar restriction in the 1983 Code. In the E. Church, however, comparable restrictions remain.

A. Bride in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 110–15, s.v. 'Temps prohibé'.

Ten Articles (1536). The first Articles of faith issued by the C of E during the Reformation period. They were adopted by *Convocation in 1536 at the desire of *Henry VIII. The three Sacraments of Baptism, Penance, and the Eucharist are upheld. The Eucharistic presence is called both corporal and substantial, but *transubstantiation is not mentioned. Justification is said to be attained by contrition and faith joined with charity. Images are to be retained as representative of virtue, but are not to be worshipped. The intercession of the saints may be sought. Prayers and Masses for the dead are enjoined. The Articles were superseded in 1537 by The *'Bishops' Book' (q.v.).

Text in C. Hardwick, A History of the Articles of Religion (1851), pp. 231–48, with discussion, pp. 39–59.

Ten Commandments, the. See COMMANDMENTS, THE TEN.

Ten Thousand Martyrs. Two groups of 'Ten Thousand Martyrs' are named in the '*Roman Martyrology': (1) On 22 June, In monte Ararath, passio sanctorum martyrum decem millia crucifixorum. The reference here is a purely legendary record of 10,000 soldiers, crucified with their leader, Acacius, on Mount Ararat. Some of their reputed relics were brought to the W. at the time of the *Crusades. (2) On 18 Mar., Nicomediae sanctorum decem millium martyrum qui pro Christi confessione gladio percussi sunt. This entry would seem to relate to those who suffered at the beginning of the *Diocletianic Persecution (303). Though the number has doubtless been rounded to a conventional figure and is almost certainly exaggerated, both *Eusebius (HE 8. 6) and *Lactantius (De Mortibus Persecut. 15) indicate that it was very large.

The legends will be found with commentary in AASS, Jun. 4 (1707), pp. 175–88, and Mar. 2 (1668), p. 617.

Ten Tribes, the. Ten of the twelve Hebrew tribes at the death of *Solomon (*c.*930 BC) separated from the tribes of Judah and Benjamin to form the kingdom of Israel, while the two latter formed the kingdom of Judah. When Israel was conquered by the Assyrians *c.*721, though the bulk of the population remained in Palestine, many were deported to Assyria (2 Kgs. 17: 1–6). The descendants of those who were deported doubtless became merged in the Gentile population of the Assyrian Empire, though some of them at a later date may have accounted themselves part of the Jewish *Diaspora. The theory upheld by '*British Israelites' that the lost Ten Tribes were the ancestors of the British nation has no sound basis.

Ten Years' Conflict (1834–43). The struggle in the Church of *Scotland (and beyond it) which culminated in the *Disruption of 1834. Lay patronage (reintroduced by the United Kingdom Parliament in 1712) had long been a grievance in Scotland, but after the extension of the franchise in 1832, and the gradual eclipse of the *Moderate party in the Church by their Evangelical opponents, opinion strengthened in favour of giving congregations a greater say in ministerial settlements. In the General Assembly of 1834, therefore, the Evangelical (or 'Popular') party carried the Veto Act, which obliged presbyteries to reject a patron's presentee if he was vetoed by a majority of the 'male heads of families'. The application of this 'non-intrusion' policy, e.g. at Auchterarder and Marnoch, led to conflict with the civil courts. Disappointed patrons and presentees, supported by the Moderates, appealed to the Court of Session in Edinburgh and ultimately to the House of Lords, both of which condemned the Veto Act and its companion the Chapels Act as ultra vires. While the Moderates advised the Church to retract, their Evangelical brethren stood firm—deposing ministers in Strathbogie presbytery who had acted in accordance with the law of the land, and affirming the Church's spiritual independence in the Claim of Rights (1842). With Government and Parliament refusing all the Assembly's appeals for help, the 'Non-intrusionists', led by T. *Chalmers, concluded that the State connection was no longer in the interests of true religion, and in May 1843 more than one third of the ministers of the Church withdrew from the Establishment to form the *Free Church of Scotland (q.v.).

R. Buchanan, The Ten Years' Conflict (2 vols., 1849). G. I. T. Machin, Politics and the Churches in Great Britain 1832 to 1868 (Oxford, 1977), pp. 112–47. See also works cited under CHALMERS, T.

Tenebrae. The popular name for the special form of *Mattins and *Lauds provided for the last three days of *Holy Week. Until 1955 it was sung by anticipation on the three preceding evenings. The name (lit. darkness) prob. derived from the ceremony of extinguishing the lights in church one by one during the service. The only light was provided by a set of 15 (since the later Middle Ages) candles fitted on a '*hearse' placed before the altar; one candle was extinguished at the end of each Psalm until only that at the apex remained; this was hidden behind the altar at the end of the *Benedictus (signifying Christ's death). After 1955 Tenebrae was no longer anticipated, and certain modifications were introduced, notably the omission of the *Miserere (Ps. 51), with which the service had previously closed. Several of the Tenebrae texts have survived in the offices provided for the mornings of *Good Friday and *Holy Saturday in the 1971 Breviary.

H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 238–73. M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du haut moyen âge, 3 (SSL 24; 1951), pp. 313–20. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 14 (1912), p. 506, s.v.

Tenison, Thomas (1636–1715), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at *Norwich and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, he was ordained privately in 1659 by B. *Duppa, and after other parochial work was appointed in 1680 to St Martin-in-the-Fields, where he gained a considerable reputation as a preacher. In 1687 he engaged in a public controversy with Fr. Andrew Pulton, SJ. At the same time he made zealous efforts to reunite the more moderate Protestant Nonconformists with the C of E, though he supported the protest of the *Seven Bishops against the *Declaration of Indulgence. In 1692 he became Bp. of *Lincoln, and in 1695 Abp. of Canterbury, where he at once revived the Archbishop's Court. In 1701 he took a prominent part in the foundation of the *SPG. He fell into disfavour under *Anne, because of his pronounced Whig and *Low Church views, and for the same reasons was a zealous supporter of the Hanoverian succession. J. *Evelyn wrote in praise of his generosity, modesty, prudence, and piety, while J. *Swift spoke of him as 'a very dull man who had a horror of anything like levity in his clergy, especially of whist'. Besides sermons and pamphlets, he wrote The Creed of Mr. Hobbes examined (1670) and Baconia, or Certain Genuine Remains of Lord Bacon (1679).

Memoirs of the Life and Times of the Most Reverend Father in God, Dr. Thomas Tennison [1715]. E. [F.] Carpenter, Thomas Tenison, Archbishop of Canterbury: His Life and Times (CHS, 1948). W. H. *Hutton in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 57–60.

tephillin (תְּפִלִּין). The Jewish name for *phylacteries. It is the plural of tĕphillah, a 'prayer'.

teraphim. Religious images, mentioned in Gen. 31: 19 and 31: 30–5, which were popularly venerated by the Israelites in pre-exilic times. The narrative of 1 Sam. 19: 13 would imply that at least their upper part had human shape. They are now generally held to have been household gods of some kind, used also for purposes of divination (Ezek. 21: 21, Zech. 10: 2). In Jgs. 17: 5 and Hos. 3: 4 they are associated with the *ephod, and are perhaps regarded as legitimate implements of religion, but in 2 Kgs. 23: 24 their use is condemned by Josiah. There is no mention of them in later times.

See comm. to biblical passages cited and works cited s.v. EPHOD. P. R. Ackroyd, 'The Teraphim', Expository Times, 62 (1950–1), pp. 378–80.

Terce, Sext, None. Together with *Prime, the 'Little Hours' of the Divine *Office, appointed to be recited at the third, sixth, and ninth hours respectively. The old Jewish times for prayer played some part in the devotion of the early Christians (cf. Acts 3: 1, 10: 9), but it is difficult to establish any link between those times and the hours of private prayer attested by *Clement of Alexandria, *Cyprian, and others. It was not until the 5th cent. that, under the influence of monasticism, the public recitation of prayers at these three times became general. Acc. to the *Breviary of *Pius V (1568), Terce, Sext, and None, which were all of like structure, consisted of three Psalms, preceded by Pater, Ave, versicle, and (almost) unchanging hymn, and followed by a chapter with responsory, prayer, and the usual concluding versicles. Since 1971, however, only one midday office has been obligatory, and the time of day at which it is said dictates which of the three offices (Terce, Sext, or None) should be chosen. Supplementary Psalms are provided for any who wish to say all three offices.

The principal work is contained in histories of the Office, q.v. C. Callewaert, 'De Parvis Horis Romanis ante Regulam S. Benedicti', Collationes Brugenses, 29 (1929), pp. 481–92, repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), pp. 119–26. J. Pinell, 'El numero sagrado de las horas de Oficio', in Miscellanea Liturgica in onore di . . . Cardinale Giacomo Lercaro, 2 [1967], pp. 887–934. L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 2 (1933), pp. 527–37 ('Die kleinen Horen'); M. Righetti, Manuale di storia liturgica, 2 (2nd edn., Milan, 1955), pp. 655–8. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in CE 11 (1911), pp. 97 f., s.v. 'None'; id., ibid. 13 (1912), pp. 747 f., s.v. 'Sext'; id., ibid. 14 (1912), pp. 514 f., s.v. 'Terce'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 1554–7, s.v. 'None'; id., ibid. 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 1396–9, s.v. 'Sexte et Tierce'.

Teresa, Mother (1910–), nun and founder of the Missionaries of Charity. Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu was born in Skopje, Macedonia, of Albanian parents. Early attracted to work in *India, in 1928 she joined the Sisters of Loretto at Rathfarnham in Ireland and was sent to Darjeeling to begin her novitiate; she took the name of *Teresa (of Lisieux). In 1929 she went to Calcutta to teach in St Mary's, a school of her Order which catered for the well-to-do. She felt herself drawn towards the very poor, and in 1948 she was given permission to leave her Order. Dressed in a blue-edged sari, she went to live in the slums of Calcutta, teaching the children of the poor and caring for the destitute and hopeless. Others joined her and in 1950 her new Order, the Missionaries of Charity (Sisters), was approved. Its foundation was followed in 1963 by that of the Missionary Brothers of Charity and in 1969 by that of the International Co-Workers of Mother Teresa. Their activities, which are now world-wide, embrace the care of all manner of deprived and diseased people and victims of hatred and neglect. Mother Teresa's selfless love and devotion (esp. to the dying) have caught the imagination of the world and she has received many honours, among them the Nobel Peace Prize for 1979.

E. Egan, Such a Vision of the Street: Mother Teresa—The Spirit and the Work (1985).

Teresa of Ávila, St (1515–82), the commonly used name of St Teresa of Jesus, Spanish *Carmelite nun and mystic. Teresa was descended from an old Spanish family. She was educated by *Augustinian nuns and in 1535 entered the Carmelite monastery of the Incarnation ('mitigated observance') at Ávila. A mysterious illness obliged her to return to her family, but on her recovery she re-entered her convent, where she began to lead a rather lax life. On the advice of her confessor she resumed mental prayer, but it was not until 1555 that she was finally converted to a life of perfection, while praying before a statue of Christ scourged at the pillar. Her mystic life began soon afterwards with Divine locutions, her first ecstasy, and an intellectual vision of Christ. In 1560 she received much valued spiritual counsel from St *Peter of Alcántara. In order to lead a more mortified life she wanted to found a house where the primitive rule would be strictly observed. This plan she carried out in the face of strong opposition and in 1562 the convent of St Joseph was founded at Ávila. Here she began The Way of Perfection (for her nuns), having recently completed her Life, a spiritual autobiography written under obedience. The subsequent years from 1567 to her death were filled with labours for the establishment of houses of the primitive rule ('Discalced Carmelites') both for nuns and for friars, an undertaking in which she received much assistance from St *John of the Cross (q.v.). Despite violent opposition from the Calced Carmelites and several of the ecclesiastical authorities, her work proceeded, and at the same time her religious life deepened until it reached the state of 'spiritual marriage' (1572). In the intervals between her foundations she wrote, under obedience to her confessors, Foundations, The Interior Castle, several smaller works, and some poetry. Her style, personal, colloquial, and vivid, has been widely admired. After her last foundation at Burgos (1582) under the greatest difficulties and privations, she fell ill and died at Alba de Tormes on 4 Oct. She was canonized in 1622 and her feast is kept on 15 Oct. In 1970 she was declared a *Doctor of the Church.

St Teresa's importance is twofold. Her work in reforming the Carmelite Order has survived in the great number of Discalced houses which venerate her as their foundress. She was a woman of strong character, shrewdness, and great practical ability. As a spiritual writer her influence was epoch-making, because she was the first to point to the existence of states of prayer intermediate between discursive meditation and ecstasy ('quiet' and 'union') and to give a scientific description of the entire life of prayer from meditation to the so-called mystic marriage. Her combination of mystic experience with ceaseless activity as a reformer and organizer makes her life the classic instance for those who contend that the highest contemplation is not incompatible with great practical achievements.

Editio princeps of her works by L. de *León (Salamanca, 1588; incomplete); crit. edns. by Silverio de Santa Teresa, OCD (6 vols., Burgos, 1915–19; Letters, 3 vols., 1922–4, in 'Biblioteca Mística Carmelitana', 1–9; Eng. tr. by E. A. Peers of the Works, 3 vols., 1946, and of the Letters, 2 vols., 1951) and by Efrén de la Madre de Dios, OCD, Otilio del Niño Jesús, OCD, and O. Steggink, O. Carm. (Biblioteca de autores cristianos, 74, 120, and 189; 1951–9; with editio minor, ibid. 212, 1962; 2nd edn., 1967). Eng. tr. of her main works also by K. Kavanaugh, OCD, and O. Rodriguez, OCD (2 vols., Washington, DC, 1976–80; based on edn. by Tomás de la Cruz [Alvarez], Burgos, 1971). Autobiog. also tr. into Eng. by J. M. Cohen (Penguin Classics, 1957). Early Lives by Diego de Yepes (Madrid, 1587) and F. de Ribera, SJ (Salamanca, 1590; Lat. tr., Cologne, 1620). AASS, Oct. 7 (1845), pp. 109–790, with Lat. tr. of Life by F. de Ribera, pp. 539–725. Crisógono de Jesús, OCD, Santa Teresa de Jesús: Su vida y su doctrina (1936; 2nd edn., 1942); E. A. Peers, Mother of Carmel: A Portrait of St Teresa of Jesus (1945); id., Saint Teresa of Jesus and other Essays and Addresses (1953), pp. 15–135; id., Handbook to the Life and Times of St Teresa and St John of the Cross (1954); O. Leroy, Sainte Thérèse d'Ávila: Biographie spirituelle (Études Carmélitaines, 1962); E. W. T. Dicken, The Crucible of Love: A Study of the Mysticism of St Teresa of Jesus and St John of the Cross (1963). Fr. Thomas, ODC, and Fr. Gabriel, ODC (eds.), St Teresa of Avila: Studies in her Life, Doctrine and Times (1963); Efrén de la Madre de Dios, OCD, and O. Steggink, O. Carm., Tiempo y vida de Santa Teresa (Biblioteca de autores cristianos, 283; 1968); Sancta Teresia a Iesu, Doctor Ecclesiae: Historia, Doctrina, Documenta (Ephemerides Carmeliticae, 21, nos. 1–2; 1970), with introd. by G. M. Garrone. G. Etchegoyen, L'Amour divin: Essai sur les sources de sainte Thérèse (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études Hispaniques, 4; 1923). A. Vermeylen, Sainte Thérèse en France au XVII^e siècle 1600–1660 (Louvain, 1958). E. Llamas Martínez, OCD, Santa Teresa de Jesus y la Inquisición Española (1972). V. G. de la Concha, El Arte literario de Santa Teresa (Barcelona, 1978). Popular account in V. Sackville-West, The Eagle and the Dove (1943), pp. 7–100. Brief account of her thought by R. [D.] Williams, Teresa of Ávila (1991). M. Jiménez Salas, Santa Teresa de Jesús: Bibliografía fundamental (Cuadernos bibliográficos, 6; 1962). Pourrat, 3, pp. 187–268. O. Steggink, O. Carm., in NCE 13 (1967), pp. 1013–16, s.v.; T. Alvarez, O. Carm., in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 611–58, s.v. 'Thérèse (5) de Jésus'.

Teresa of Lisieux, St (1873–97), *Carmelite nun. The youngest daughter of Louis Martin, a devout watchmaker of Alençon, she was drawn towards religious perfection at an early age. In spite of opposition, she obtained permission to enter the Carmelite convent at Lisieux at the age of 15. She was professed in 1890, and was assistant novice-mistress from 1893. In 1896 she was prevented from joining the Carmelites in *China by the first of a series of haemorrhages. She died of tuberculosis on 30 Sept. 1897.

At the command of her superiors she wrote her autobiography, L'Histoire d'une âme. The spread of her fame was largely due to the decision of the prioress to circulate a revised version of this, together with details of her death, to all Carmelite houses. Miracles of healing and prophecy were soon reported in sufficient number to realize her promise, 'Je vais faire tomber un torrent de roses.' By 1907 an account of them was appended to her biography. Proceedings for her beatification were initiated in the court of Bayeux in 1910 and moved to Rome in 1918, her cause being exempted from the 50 years' delay imposed by Canon Law. On 25 Apr. 1923 her beatification was proclaimed by *Pius XI and her bones solemnly translated to the convent. On 17 May 1925 she was canonized under the name of 'St Teresa of the Child Jesus and the Holy Face' (her name in religion). Feast day, 1 (formerly 3) Oct.

Owing to the continued increase in the number of pilgrims of all nations, it was decided in 1926 to erect a large basilica at Lisieux. The popularity of her cult was largely due to the appeal to the ordinary people of her age, to whom her life showed that the attainment of sanctity was practicable, not only through extreme mortification, but through continual renunciation in small matters. She is popularly known in England as 'The Little Flower' from the subtitle of her autobiography. In 1927 Pius XI named her patroness of foreign missions (along with St *Francis Xavier). In 1947 she was joined with *Joan of Arc as patroness of France.

Crit. edn. of her works (Édition du Centenaire) by D. Delalande, OCD, and others, pub. Paris from 1971; all the texts had been pub. by 1989, but the later vols. appeared as separate items. Eng. tr., Washington, DC, 1975 ff. The first reliable text of her autobiog. was the facsimile of it and other related documents, + 3 vols. of Introd., Notes et Tables, Table des Citations, pub. Lisieux, 1956. Eng. tr. of autobiog., based on the facsimile, by R. [A.] *Knox, London, 1958. Letters ed. A. Combes, Lisieux, 1948; Eng. tr., New York, 1948. Pluies des roses (6 vols., Lisieux, 1913–25). Collection of photographs, with comm. by François de Sainte-Marie, OCD, Le Visage de Thérèse de Lisieux (2 vols., 1961; Eng. tr. as The Photo Album of St Thérèse of Lisieux, 1962). Procès de Béatification et Canonisation: 1: Procès Informatif Ordinaire [1910–11]; 2: Procès Apostolique [1915–17] (Bibliotheca Carmelitica, Series 1, Textus, 2–3; Rome, 1973–6); partial Eng. tr. of the former by C. O'Mahony, OCD (Dublin, 1975). A. P. Laveille, Sainte Thérèse de l'Enfant Jésus (1873–1897), d'après les documents officiels du Carmel de Lisieux (1925; Eng. tr., 1928). The large number of other Lives incl. studies by H. Petitot, OP (1922; Eng. tr., 1927), H. U. von *Balthasar (Olten, 1950; Eng. tr., 1953), V. Johnson (London, 1953), I. F. Görres (Freiburg, 1958; Eng tr., 1959), P. Descouvement (Paris, 1962), J. Norbury (London, 1966), and G. Gaucher [OCD] (Paris, 1982). A. Combes, Introduction à la spiritualité de sainte Thérèse de l'Enfant Jésus (1946; enlarged edn., 1948; Eng. tr. of 1946 edn., 1950); id., Sainte Thérèse de Lisieux et sa mission (1954; Eng. tr., 1956), and other works by this author; J.-F. Six, La Véritable Enfance de Thérèse de Lisieux (1972); id., Thérèse de Lisieux au Carmel (1973); B. Bro, OP, La Gloire et le Mendiant (1974; Eng. tr., 1979). P. Descouvement in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 576–611, s.v. 'Thérèse de l'Enfant Jésus'.

Teresian reform. The reform of the *Carmelite Order begun by St *Teresa of Ávila.

Terminism. (1) The doctrine that God has ordained a definite period or 'term' in the life of every individual at the end of which he loses his opportunity of achieving salvation. The belief was defended by J. G. Böse (c.1662–1700) in his De Termino Salutis (1698) and much cherished in *Pietist circles, and also upheld by Adam Rechenberg (1642–1721); but it met with fierce opposition from orthodox *Lutherans. (2) By philosophers, the word is occasionally used as another name for *Nominalism (q.v.).

Territorialism. A theory of Church government formerly held by certain Protestant theologians, acc. to which the civil authority had the right to determine the religious doctrines of its subjects. It is summarized in the formula cuius regio eius religio. The opposite view was often known as *Collegialism.

Tersanctus. An alternative name for the *Sanctus ('Holy, Holy, Holy'), sung or recited in the *Eucharistic Liturgy. The word is sometimes used also for the *Trisagion in the *Reproaches on *Good Friday.

Tersteegen, Gerhard (1697–1769), German Protestant devotional writer. Born at Moers, near Düsseldorf, he underwent a conversion in a circle of *Pietists at the age of 20. Under the influence of ascetic and *Quietist ideas, he retired into solitude and earned his living as a ribbon weaver. Having established in 1727 his Pilgrims' Hut at Otterbeck, near Mülheim, in order to realize his spiritual ideals in a kind of religious community, he abandoned his profession in 1728 and devoted himself entirely to the career of a director of souls and devotional meetings. Besides many translations, chiefly from French Quietist writers, he published poems and hymns under the title Geistliches Blumen-Gärtlein inniger Seelen (1729) and, from 1733 to 1753, Auserlesene Lebensbeschreibungen heiliger Seelen, a set of selected biographies of Catholic mystics, in which, however, he explicitly denounced their 'sensual religion'. His influence spread throughout Germany, the Netherlands, and Scandinavia, though his activities were temporarily hampered by the Prussian anti-conventicle laws of 1740. His piety was highly individualistic, e.g. he refused to partake of Holy Communion together with worldly or godless people. Today he is chiefly known for his hymns, remarkable for their poetical charm and a deep spirituality which expresses itself esp. in adoration of the Divine Majesty and a tender love for the Saviour. Many of them, e.g. 'Brunn alles Heils' ('Thee fount of blessing') and 'Gott ist gegenwärtig' ('Lo, God is here'), have been translated into English.

Gesammelte Schriften, 8 vols., Stuttgart, 1844–6; modern edn. of his Werke by W. Zeller (Texte zur Geschichte des Pietismus, Abt. 5; Göttingen, 1979 ff.). Anthology ed. T. Klein (Munich, 1925). Various of his hymns tr. into Eng. by F. Bevan, Hymns of Ter Steegen, Suso and Others (1895); id., Hymns of Ter Steegen and Others (1897). The basic study is that of G. Kerlen (Mülheim a.d. Ruhr, 1851). W. Blankenagel, Tersteegen als religiöser Erzieher (Emsdetten, 1934). C. P. van Andel, Gerhard Tersteegen: Leben und Werk. Sein Platz in der Kirchengeschichte (Schriftenreihe des Vereins für Rheinische Kirchengeschichte, 46; Dusseldorf, 1973). H. Ludewig, Gebet und Gotteserfahrung bei Gerhard Tersteegen (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Pietismus, 24; 1986). In Eng. there is a Life by H. E. Govan (London, 1898, with selections of his writings) and a popular sketch by W. E. Oliphant (pub. by the *Salvation Army, London, 1905). B. Jaspert in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 260–71, s.v.

tertianship. In the *Jesuit Order a 'third year' of probation (the novitiate constitutes the first two) before admission to final vows; it is usually undergone a few years after ordination. It is intended to rekindle and deepen the candidate's spirituality after long years of study, and includes the full 30 days' Spiritual Exercises. Study of the Jesuit Constitutions and a variety of pastoral experiences form part of the course. It has sometimes been described as the 'Schola Perfectionis'.

Tertiary. See THIRD ORDERS.

Tertullian, Quintus Septimius Florens (*c.*160–*c.*225), African Church Father. Brought up in Carthage as a pagan, Tertullian received a good education in literature and rhetoric; he may have practised as a lawyer, though identification with the jurist Tertullian is improbable. He was converted to Christianity before 197. Acc. to St *Jerome he became a priest, but there are other indications that he remained a layman. Eventually he joined the *Montanist sect. The detailed chronology of his life and works has recently been much disputed.

Tertullian was the author of a long list of apologetic, theological, controversial, and ascetic works in Latin, as well as of a few writings in Greek. In the 'Apologeticum' (*c.*197) and other early apologetic writings he appeals for the toleration of Christianity, attacking pagan superstition, rebutting charges against Christian morality, and, to him the chief point, claiming that Christians were no danger to the state but good and useful citizens. In these works he is less concerned with theology than with the Greek Apologists whom he had read, though 'De testimonio animae' affirms the witness of natural instinct to the existence of God. In moral and disciplinary works addressed to Christians (e.g. 'De spectaculis', 'De corona militis', 'De idololatria', 'De paenitentia'), he emphasizes rather the separation from pagan society, which was necessary in order to escape contamination from its immorality and idolatry. Many occupations (including military service) and social institutions are barred, and in the last resort martyrdom must be accepted; the blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church. Tertullian may well be the editor of the 'Passio SS Perpetuae et Felicitatis'.

His theological writings are mostly polemical in origin and form. In the early 'De praescriptione haereticorum' he disposes of all heresy in principle: the one true Church, visible in history through the episcopal succession (here he follows *Irenaeus), alone possesses the authentic tradition from Christ and the apostles, and alone has authority to interpret Scripture. It need not argue. Yet he himself frequently argued against Gnostic dualism and spiritualism: against Hermogenes, the *Valentinians, *Marcion, and in 'De carne Christi', 'De resurrectione mortuorum', and 'Scorpiace'. Against Marcion he defended the identity of the one God of the Old and New Testaments and His activity throughout history, both just and loving, and the identity of Jesus Christ, truly the incarnate Word of God, with the Messiah of prophecy. Against the unidentified '*Praxeas' he tried to expose the unscriptural and unhistorical implications of *modalism and to formulate a positive doctrine of the Trinity without falling into the opposite error of *subordinationism. In these respects his thought and language powerfully influenced Christianity. 'De baptismo', which is liturgically valuable, also raises the problem of *Infant Baptism, which Tertullian disliked. But his later 'De anima', a pioneer work in Christian psychology, which advocated *Traducianism, prepared the way for that pessimistic doctrine of the Fall and *Original Sin which came, through *Augustine, to dominate Latin theology.

The rigorist strain in Tertullian, and the opposition which it evoked in Carthage, took him into Montanism, with its heightened eschatological expectations, its emphasis upon the immediacy of the Spirit (Paraclete) and ecstatic prophecy, its asceticism, and, at least by implication, a perfectionist and potentially sectarian doctrine of the Church which challenged the more institutional one that he had earlier helped to establish against *Gnosticism. All this, but especially the rigorism, is evident in the extant Montanist works, e.g. 'De monogamia', 'De exhortatione castitatis', 'De jejunio' and 'De pudicitia'. This last was written in the 220s against the disciplinary leniency with sexual sin of a Bp. of Carthage. His understanding of the other aspects of Montanism might have been clearer if 'De ecstasi', 'De paradiso', and 'De spe fidelium' had survived.

Tertullian's style is brilliant, masterful, and difficult. In argument he employs every rhetorical and sophistical device (his ambience is the elaborate Second Sophistic); he devastates opponents with ridicule and cleverly undermines their reasoning. Yet, though often unfair and superficial in controversy, he grapples thoughtfully with the moral and religious problems of his time. Legal knowledge may have helped him to formulate, but did little to determine, his theology, except perhaps in his legalistic conception of reward and punishment. Though influenced by *Stoicism and willing to use philosophy as a tool, he distrusted it as a source of truth. Christianity is revelation, act and gift of God. So his theology is fundamentally scriptural, and, while his exegesis can be perverse in attack, for theological construction he generally prefers a literal and historical interpretation to an allegorical one. If, as seems probable, a Latin Bible was available to him, the creation of a Latin theological terminology must not be too readily attributed to him. But his influence upon language and thought was sufficient to justify the title of Father of Latin theology.

Except for the Apologeticum, MSS are scarce. The damaged 'Codex Agobardinus' (Par. lat. 1622; 9th cent.) contains 13 of the 31 extant works; 'Codex Trecensis' (Troyes, Bibliothèque Municipale, 523; 12th cent.) is important for 5 works. The 16th-cent. eds. used several MSS now lost. Collected writings containing 22 works, by Beatus *Rhenanus (Basle, 1521); edn. by J. Gagnaeus (Paris, 1545) added 9. Good notes in edn. of N. Rigaud (ibid., 1634). Modern edns. by F. Oehler (3 vols., Leipzig, 1853–4, with comm.), A. Reifferscheid and others (CSEL 20, 47, 69, 70, 76, etc.; 1890 ff.) and E. Dekkers, OSB, and others (CCSL 1–2; 1954). Eng. tr. of works by P. Holmes and others (ANCL 7, 11, 15, and 18; 1868–70). Comm. on individual works, with edns. of text, incl. De anima, ed. J. H. Waszink (Amsterdam, 1947; valuable for Tertullian generally); and the edns. by E. Evans (all with Eng. trs.) of Adversus Praxean (London, 1948), De oratione (ibid., 1953), De carne Christi (ibid., 1956), De resurrectione mortuorum (ibid., 1960), De baptismo (ibid., 1964), Adversus Marcionem (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 2 vols., 1972). There are also comm. in the Eng. trs. of Adversus Hermogenem by J. H. Waszink (ACW 24; 1956), of Ad Uxorem, De exhortatione castitatis, and De monogamia by W. P. Le Saint, SJ (ibid. 13; 1951), of De paenitentia and De pudicitia by id. (ibid. 28; 1959), and of De praescriptione and De idololatria by S. L. Greenslade, Early Latin Theology (Library of Christian Classics, 5; 1956), pp. 21–110. Several works are also ed. with comm. and Fr. tr., in SC.

A. d'Alès, SJ, La Théologie de Tertullien (1905); J. Lortz, Tertullian als Apologet (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 9–10; 1927–8); E. Dekkers, OSB, Tertullianus en de Geschiednis der Liturgie (1947); C. Becker, Tertullians Apologeticum: Werden und Leistung (Munich, 1954); G. Säflund, De Pallio und stilistische Entwicklung Tertullians (Skrifter utgivna av Svenska Institutet i Rom, 8°, 8; Lund, 1955); S. Otto, 'Natura' und 'dispositio': Untersuchung zum Naturbegriff und Denkform Tertullians (Münchener Theologische Studien, Abt. 2, Bd. 19; 1960); R. Cantalamessa, OFM Cap., La Cristologia di Tertulliano (Paradosis, 18; Fribourg, 1962); R. Braun, 'Deus Christianorum': Recherches sur le vocabulaire doctrinale de Tertullien (Paris thesis; 1962; 2nd edn., with much suppl. material, Études Augustiniennes, 1977); J. Moingt, SJ, Théologie trinitaire de Tertullien (Théologie, 68–70; 1966); T. P. O'Malley, SJ, Tertullian and the Bible (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, 21; 1967); D. Michaélidès, Sacramentum chez Tertullien (Études Augustiniennes, 1970); T. D. Barnes, Tertullian: A Historical and Literary Study (Oxford, 1971; repr., with corrections and postscript, 1985); R. D. Sider, Ancient Rhetoric and the Art of Tertullian (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971); J.-C. Fredouille, Tertullien et la conversion de la culture antique (Études Augustiniennes, 1972); C. Aziza, Tertullien et le judaïsme (Nice, 1977); C. Rambaux, Tertullien face aux morales des trois premiers siècles (1979); D. Rankin, Tertullian and the Church (Cambridge, 1995). G. Claesson, Index Tertullianeus (3 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1974–5). Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 377–442; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 148–63 and 577–80; J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 246–340; CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 1–10 (nos. 1–36), all with further bibl. P. Siniscalco in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3413–24, s.v. 'Tertulliano'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 818–20; C. Munier in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 271–95, s.v. 'Tertullien'.

Test Act. The Popish Recusants Act 1672, passed in 1673, requiring all holders of office under the Crown (inter alia) to receive the sacrament of the Eucharist acc. to the usage of the C of E, to take the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance to the King, and to make the *Declaration against Transubstantiation. Among its first effects was the resignation by *James (II), Duke of York, of his post of Lord High Admiral. The Act was in force until the Roman *Catholic Relief Act 1829 was passed, and it was not finally repealed until 1863.

Text in Gee and Hardy, pp. 632–40 (no. 120); part also in Bettenson, pp. 405–7 (2nd edn., pp. 418–20).

Testament, Old and New. See OLD TESTAMENT and NEW TESTAMENT.

Testament of Our Lord in Galilee, also known as the Epistle of the Apostles (Epistula Apostolorum). This *apocryphal document, dating from *c.*150 and written in the form of an encyclical sent out by the eleven Apostles after the Resurrection, purports to record conversations between the Apostles and the Risen Christ. It was written in Greek, but survives, as far as is known, only in Ethiopic, *Coptic (in an incomplete form), and, in the case of a single leaf, in Latin. It was apparently directed against the *Gnostics and probably emanated from Egypt or Asia Minor. It is to be distinguished from the Testamentum Domini (q.v.).

C. Schmidt, Gespräche Jesu mit seinen Jüngern nach der Auferstehung (TU 43; 1919); review by G. Bardy in R. Bibl. 30 (1921), pp. 110–34. Eth. text, ed., with introd. and Fr. tr., by L. Guerrier and S. Grébaut in PO 9 (1913), pp. 141–236 (fasc. 3). Eng. tr. with short introd. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 555–88. Ger. tr., with introd. by C. D. G. Müller in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1987), 1, pp. 205–33; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 249–84. A. A. T. Ehrhardt, 'Judaeo-Christians in Egypt, the Epistula Apostolorum and the Gospel to the Hebrews', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Evangelica, 3 (TU 68; 1964), pp. 360–82. M. Hornschuh, Studien zur Epistula Apostolorum (Patristische Texte und Studien, 5; 1965). J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 150–3.

Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. A pseudepigraphical writing modelled on the 'Testament of *Jacob' in Gen. 49. It professes to relate in its 12 books the message that each of the 12 sons of Jacob gave to his descendants on his deathbed. Its purpose is chiefly to give moral encouragement and spiritual consolation to its readers, whose confidence is claimed by revelations ex post facto prophetic of the later history of the different Israelite tribes. The work survives in Greek, and also in Armenian and Slavonic versions. It is a matter of dispute whether the Greek was the original or was itself a translation from Hebrew or Aramaic. Also disputed is the question whether the work was Christian in origin or Jewish (in which case the obviously Christian passages are explained as interpolations). The most prominent exponent of the latter point of view in modern times is R. H. *Charles, who argued that the work was originally written in Hebrew and that the bulk of it dates from the latter part of the 2nd cent. BC. Of the view that the Testaments were Christian in origin, adapting and incorporating traditional Jewish material, the outstanding modern representative is M. de Jonge, who dates them c. AD 200. The question of the date of the work is of importance, since it can be maintained that if it is pre-Christian, 'the book . . . has achieved a real immortality by influencing the thought and diction of the writers of the New Testament, and even those of our Lord' (Charles). On the other hand, if the Testaments are Christian, 'what they illustrate is not the preparation of Christianity, but the social and religious life of the early Christian Church' (de Jonge).

Editio princeps of Gk. text by J. E. *Grabe (ed.), Spicilegium SS. Patrum, 1 (Oxford, 1698), pp. 145–253; the edn. of A. *Gallandi is repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 2. 1037–150. Crit. edns. by R. Sinker (Cambridge, 1869, with appendix, ibid., 1879), R. H. Charles (Oxford, 1908), and M. de Jonge and others (Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece, 1, pt. 2; Leiden, 1978). Eng. trs. by R. H. Charles (London, 1908), also, with notes and other material, in id., The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (1913), pp. 282–367; by H. C. Kee in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 775–828; and by M. de Jonge in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 505–15. Comm. [in Eng.] by H. W. Hollander and M. de Jonge (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 8; Leiden, 1985). M. de Jonge, The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (Theologische Bibliotheek, 25; Assen, Holland, 1953; also pub. by Manchester University Press), with detailed bibl. pp. 170 f. C. Burchard, J. Jervell, and J. Thomas, Studien zu den Testamenten der Zwölf Patriarchen: Drei Aufsätze, ed. W. Eltester (Beiheft zur ZNTW 36; 1969). J. Becker, Untersuchungen zur Entstehungsgeschichte der Testamente der zwölf Patriarchen (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentums und des Urchristentums, 8; 1970). M. de Jonge (ed.), Studies on the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 3; Leiden, 1975). E. *Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2; Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 767–81. M. de Jonge in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 181–6, s.v. 'Patriarchs, Testaments of the Twelve'.

Testamentum Domini. A short early Christian treatise professing to be in the words of Christ Himself. It contains detailed regulations on matters of ecclesiastical order and church building, and a complete liturgy. It was originally written in Greek, probably in the 4th–5th cents., but survives only in a Syriac translation made in the 7th cent. apparently by *Jacob of Edessa. It was probably a private compilation and hence does not represent the official practice of any Church. Later it became incorporated in a collection known as the 'Clementine Octateuch' which circulated among the *Syrian Orthodox; extracts were also included in their *Synodicon.

The work has close literary connections with Hippolytus' Apostolic Tradition*, the *Apostolic Constitutions, and other early Church Orders. Editio princeps of complete Syr. text in the Clementine Octateuch by Mgr. Ignatius Ephraem II Rahmani (Mainz, 1899; with Lat. tr.). J. Cooper and A. J. Maclean, The Testament of the Lord (1902; Eng. tr. with useful notes). Extracts in the Synodicon ed., with Eng. tr., by A. Vööbus, The Synodicon in the West Syrian Tradition, 1 (CSCO 367–8, Scriptores Syri, 161–2; 1975), pp. 1–49; Eng. tr., pp. 27–64. F. X. Funk, Das Testament unseres Herrn und die verwandten Schriften (1901). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 234 f. (no. 1743). É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 194–200.

Tetragrammaton. The technical term for the four-lettered Hebrew name of God יהוה (i.e. YHWH or JHVH). Owing to its sacred character, from *c.*300 BC the Jews tended to avoid uttering it when reading the Scriptures, and substituted 'Adonai' (i.e. the Hebrew word for 'Lord'), whence the rendering Κύριος of the *Septuagint, Dominus of the *Vulgate, and 'the LORD' in most English Bibles. When vowel points were put into Hebrew MSS those of 'Adonai' were inserted into the letters of the Tetragrammaton, and since the 16th cent. the bastard word 'Jehovah', obtained by fusing the vowels of the one word with the consonants of the other, has become established. The original pronunciation is now commonly thought to have been 'Yahweh' or 'Jahveh' and both these forms (but nowadays esp. the former) are frequently found in scholarly works. The name is undoubtedly very ancient and was certainly in use by *c.*850 BC, as it occurs on the *Moabite Stone. Some scholars have held that its original form was 'Yah' (cf. Exod. 15: 2 [RV margin] and Ps. 68: 4). The traditional explanation of the meaning of the name as connected with the verb 'to be' is given in Exod. 3: 14 f. (cf. 6: 2 f.).

S. R. *Driver, 'Recent Theories on the Origin and Nature of the Tetragrammaton', in Studia Biblica: Essays in Biblical Archaeology and Criticism, 1 (1885), pp. 1–20. G. R. *Driver, 'The Evidence for the Name "Yahweh" outside the Old Testament', in D. C. Simpson (ed.), Old Testament Essays: Papers read before the Society for Old Testament Studies . . . (1927), pp. 18–24. W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity (Baltimore, 1940), esp. pp. 197–9. O. Eissfeldt, 'El and Yawheh', Journal of Semitic Studies, 1 (1956), pp. 27–37; F. M. Cross, Jun., 'Yahweh and the God of the Patriarchs', HTR 55 (1962), pp. 225–59; E. C. B. Maclaurin, 'YHWH. The Origin of the Tetragrammaton', Vetus Testamentum, 12 (1962), pp. 439–63, with refs.; R. de Vaux, OP, 'The Revelation of the Divine Name YHWH', in J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter (eds.), Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies (1970), pp. 48–75; G. H. Parke-Taylor, Yahweh: The Divine Name in the Bible (Waterloo, Ont. [1975]).

Tetrapolitan Confession. A Protestant Confession of Faith drawn up by M. *Bucer and W. *Capito conjointly at the Diet of Augsburg (1530) and presented to the Emperor on 9 July 1530, in the name of the four S. German cities of Strasbourg, Memmingen, Lindau, and Constance. Its purpose was to prevent a rupture in German Protestantism. Its doctrinal formulae, though they had some *Zwinglian affinities, were based on those of the *Augsburg Confession, a copy of which had been secretly transmitted to its compilers.

Crit. edn. by M. Moeller in Bucer's Deutsche Schriften, ed. R. Stupperich, 3 (Gütersloh and Paris, 1969), pp. 13–185, with introd. and bibl. Eng. tr., with brief introd., in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 51–88.

Tetrateuch (Gk. τετρα- 'four' + τεῦχος 'book'). The name often given to the first four books of the *Pentateuch (Gen.–Num.), all of which appear to have been compiled from the same three sources and on the same editorial principle, i.e. '*P' has been taken as the framework and material from '*J' and '*E' fitted into it. In Deut. this is plainly not so. Thus, on this view, the major dividing line in the earlier part of the OT is to be placed at the end of Num. and Deut. is to be regarded as the first volume of a '*Deuteronomistic History' which extends as far as II Kings.

M. Noth, Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien, 1 (Halle/Saale, 1943), pp. 180–216. The name 'Tetrateuch' appears to have been coined by I. Engnell, Gamla Testamentet: En traditionshistorisk inledning, 1 (Stockholm, 1945), p. 209. See also S. *Mowinckel, Tetrateuch Pentateuch Hexateuch (Beihefte zur ZATW, 90; 1964).

Tetzel, Johann (*c.*1464–1519), German *Dominican preacher of *indulgences. He graduated at the University of Leipzig in 1487 and entered the Dominican Order soon afterwards. He seems to have enjoyed a reputation both as a teacher and a preacher, and for much of his life served as an *inquisitor; in 1515 he was appointed a professor at the Dominican studium in Leipzig. In 1505 he was deputed to preach the indulgence for the campaign of the *Teutonic Order in Livonia; he continued with this task until at least 1510. In 1516 he was appointed to preach the indulgence for the rebuilding of *St Peter's, Rome, joining the team of the Abp. of Mainz for this purpose early in 1517. Following the instructions issued to this team, Tetzel maintained the controversial thesis that indulgences could be obtained for the benefit of souls in *purgatory even by people not themselves in a state of grace, simply on the strength of their financial contribution. The enthusiasm with which he raised money on this basis provoked considerable criticism, and it was his preaching that prompted M. *Luther to issue his 95 theses on 31 Oct. 1517. Tetzel conducted a disputation against these theses in the University of Frankfurt an der Oder in 1518 and returned to the attack twice more in the same year; he saw that Luther had raised important ecclesiological issues transcending the particular question of indulgences. Wild stories about alleged financial irregularities circulated, with the support of C. von *Miltitz, whose conciliatory attitude to Luther was very different from that of Tetzel. From the end of 1518 Tetzel feared that his life was in danger and did not appear in public.

Primary docs. relating to his dispute with Luther in P. Fabisch and E. Iserloh (eds.), Dokumente zur Causa Lutheri (1517 1521), 1 (Corpus Catholicorum, 41; 1988), pp. 310–75. The best modern study is that of N. Paulus (Mainz, 1899), with other works of this author cited in Schottenloher, see below. P. Mandonnet, OP, 'Jean Tetzel et sa prédication des indulgences', Revue thomiste, 7 (1899), pp. 481–496, and 8 (1900), pp. 178–93. H. G. Ganss in CE 14 (1912), pp. 539–41, s.v. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 2 (1935), pp. 324–6 (nos. 21132–74). See also works cited s.v. INDULGENCES.

Teutonic Order. The order of German knights (ordo fratrum domus hospitalis Sanctae Mariae Theutonicorum Ierosolymitani) grew out of a hospital community founded outside Acre in 1190. In 1198 it was converted into a military order with the rule of the *Templars and confirmed as such by the Papacy. In 1245 it received a rule of its own. The order, made up of knights, priests, and lay brothers, was active and richly endowed in Palestine and Syria, but soon it also sought to advance the frontiers of Christendom elsewhere. After a brief and abortive interlude in Hungary (1211–25) the fourth Grand Master, Hermann of Salza, planned a new sphere of action for his knights in Prussia, having received an invitation from Duke Conrad of Masovia to fight and subdue the heathen Prussians. In the Golden Bull of Rimini (1226) the Emp. *Frederick II conferred princely powers on the Grand Master and gave almost limitless rights over future conquests to the order. In 1231 the knights crossed the Vistula and set about building their first castles. From the very beginning their missionary enterprise was compromised by their aristocratic interest in lordship and government. From 1236 onwards the order also expanded in Livonia, but the heathen Lithuanians remained an unconquered threat to its land-communications. The seat of the Grand Masters, at first at Montfort in Palestine, was moved from Acre to Venice in 1291 and to Marienburg on the Nogat in 1309. From the later 13th cent. onwards the order gave itself more and more to the administration of its territories, their colonization by German immigrants—not always at the expense of the subject Prussians—and the development of prosperous towns. When Lithuania accepted Latin Christianity and entered into a personal union with the Polish kingdom in 1386 the knights' crusading task finally lost its meaning. They succumbed to a Polish-Lithuanian army at the battle of Tannenberg (1410) and henceforth had to face increasing disaffection from their noble vassals and towns. In 1525 the Grand Master, *Albert of Prussia, resigned his office and became the first ecclesiastical prince to secularize his territory for dynastic ends when he embraced *Lutheranism. Soon afterwards the order also lost its possessions in Livonia and the Grand Masters now resided at Mergentheim in Swabia supervising their S. German bailiwicks. The order still met needs, if only to provide a suitable abode for the younger sons of RC nobles. Suppressed by Napoleon, it survived under the protection of the Habsburgs in Austria and until 1918 the Grand Master was usually one of the Archdukes. From about 1840 it found its vocation once more in hospital work, especially military hospitals, but also in schools. The institution of serving sisters, who had held a humble place in the order's medieval statutes, was revived. Clerical rather than knightly, the community resumed its charitable work after 1945. It has, however, remained conscious of its long martial past.

E. Joachim and W. Hubatsch (eds.), Regesta Historico-Diplomatica Ordinis S. Mariae Theutonicorum: 1198 1525 (4 vols., Göttingen, 1948–50; Register zu Pars I und zu Pars II, 1965). For details of other pr. sources see Mayer and Lampe, cited below. E. Caspar, Hermann von Salza und die Gründung des Deutschor- densstaats in Preussen (Tübingen, 1924). M. Tumler, Der Deutsche Orden im Werden, Wachsen und Wirken bis 1400 (Vienna [1955]). K. Wieser, OT (ed.), Acht Jahrhunderte Deutscher Orden in Einzeldarstellungen (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens, 1; Bad Godesberg [1967]; also other vols. in this series, mostly specialized, but some more general, such as vol. 36: U. Arnold (ed.), Beiträge zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens, 1; 1986). M.-L. Favreau, Studien zur Frühgeschichte des Deutschen Ordens (Kieler Historische Studien, 21; 1977). H. Boockmann, Der Deutsche Orden: Zwölf Kapitel aus seiner Geschichte (Munich, 1981). B. Schumacher, 'Die Idee der geistlichen Ritterorden im Mittelalter', Altpreussische Forschungen, 1 (1924), pp. 5–24, repr. in H. Beumann (ed.), Heidenmission und Kreuzzugsgedanke in der deutschen Ostpolitik des Mittelalters (Wege der Forschung, 7; Darmstadt, 1963), pp. 364–85; other arts. repr. ibid., pp. 389–485. K. Górski, 'The Teutonic Order in Prussia', Medievalia et Humanistica, 17 (1966), pp. 20–37. W. Urban, The Baltic Crusade DeKalb, Ill., 1975), pp. 157–259 passim. E. Christiansen, The Northern Crusades: The Baltic and the Catholic Frontier 1100–1525 (New Studies in Medieval History, 1980), passim. M. Biskup, 'Polish Research Work on the History of the Teutonic Order State Organization in Prussia (1945–1959)', Acta Poloniae Historica, 3 (Warsaw, 1960), pp. 89–113. H. E. Mayer, Bibliographie zur Geschichte der Kreuzzüge (Hanover, 1960), p. 4 (no. 57), p. 6 (nos. 118–20), p. 87 (no. 1624), and pp. 169 f. (nos. 3622–47), with addenda in HZ, Sonderheft, 3 (1969), p. 708; K. H. Lampe, Bibliographie zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens bis 1959, 1, Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte des Deutschen Ordens, 3 (Bad Godesberg, 1970). K. Wieser in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 796–806, s.v. 'Ordine Teutonico'.

Tewkesbury Abbey. Notwithstanding the tradition of an 8th-cent. foundation by Theoc, a hermit, modern scholars give the derivation of the name as 'Twixtbury', the fortified place between the rivers. A cell of Cranborne since 980, Tewkesbury was refounded as a *Benedictine abbey in 1087 by Robert Fitzhamon with Giraldus, Abbot of Cranborne, who moved his community there. The magnificent abbey church was consecrated in 1121 and extensively remodelled in the early 14th cent. In 1540, at the *Dissolution, it became the parish church of Tewkesbury. It was restored by Sir G. G. *Scott in 1875–9.

Annales Monasterii de Theokesberia, 1066–1263, ed. H. R. Luard, Annales Monastici, 1 (Rolls Series, 1864), pp. 43–180, with introd. pp. xv–xxvii. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 2 (1819 edn.), pp. 53–87. A Cursory Disquisition on the Conventual Church of Tewkesbury and its Antiquities (1818). J. H. Blunt, Tewkesbury Abbey and its Associations (1875); H. J. L. J. Massé, The Abbey Church of Tewkesbury with some Account of the Priory Church of Deerhurst, Gloucester (1900), pp. 3–102. R. Graham in W. Page (ed.), VCH, Gloucester, 2 (1907), pp. 61–6, with refs.

Texte und Untersuchungen. The abbreviated title of Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur, a famous series of texts and studies of early Christian literature, published since 1882, originally under the editorship of O. von Gebhardt and A. *Harnack. From 1897 to 1961 it was the organ for publishing studies subsidiary to the edition of the Greek Fathers issued by the Prussian (later Berlin) Academy (Die Griechischen Christlichen Schriftsteller).

Textual Criticism. The critical study of the text of an ancient writer whose work has come down in MS from the period before the invention of printing. Few scribes are able to copy a text exactly; it follows that the more often a text is copied and the greater the number of resulting MSS, the greater variation there is likely to be between them. The work of the textual critic is therefore to compare and evaluate the differences in the MSS (usually known as different 'readings') in order to reconstruct the history of the text through its various stages and ultimately to establish the original text as it left the hands of the author.

The great majority of the extant Hebrew MSS of the OT, representing the so-called *Massoretic text, have relatively few variations, and these are for the most part only minor. But there is good reason to suspect that this situation is due to an authoritative text having been decided on at the beginning of the Christian era and having subsequently been copied with the very greatest care. The *Septuagint Greek MSS, however, display not only considerable differences among themselves, but also a large number of instances in which they agree in differing from the Hebrew; from this observation critics have deduced that the LXX translation was made from a different (and prob. earlier) text than that which has survived in the Massoretic text. This deduction has been confirmed by the discoveries at Qumran (see DEAD SEA SCROLLS). Among the Hebrew MSS there discovered are several representing a type of text which lies behind the LXX, as well as others of pre-Massoretic type.

In the NT the problems are of another kind. The variations between the MSS are both very numerous and in some instances very considerable, occasionally involving whole passages, e.g. the end of Mark, q.v. Study of the MSS has revealed that in general (but only very generally) three main types of text are to be distinguished; and by using the evidence of the ancient versions (Latin, *Syriac, *Coptic, etc.) and quotations in the early Fathers it has been possible to a great extent to localize and date these types. They are: (1) a type associated with *Alexandria, which goes back to an archetype which must be put early in the 2nd cent.; (2) a *Western type (so called by F. J. A. *Hort because the chief witnesses to it are the Latin versions and Fathers), which can be traced back to c. AD 150; and (3) a type associated with *Antioch and *Constantinople (the so-called 'Koine' or *Byzantine or *Syrian text) which appears to be a systematic revision undertaken towards the end of the 3rd cent. This last type of text became standard in the Greek-speaking Church of the medieval period. It is found in the majority of the extant Greek MSS of the NT and was the text of the first printed edition (see TEXTUS RECEPTUS).

Some of the works of ancient and medieval Christian writers have survived in many MSS; others only in a few or even a single MS; but in these cases the problems confronting the textual critic and the methods used in dealing with them resemble those encountered in the NT.

Modern editors of texts, whether biblical or otherwise, are accustomed to print as the text of their edition either the text of a single MS or a text which they themselves have constructed from the total material available; in either case it is usual to accompany the text with a statement of variant readings found in other MSS and elsewhere (e.g. versions and quotations). This is normally printed at the foot of the page and is known as a '*critical apparatus'.

In the broadest sense, the history of textual criticism may be said to have started in the pre-Christian period with the labours of the Alexandrian critics on the texts of the classical authors. Of the early Christian critics the most outstanding was *Origen, whose *Hexapla was a landmark in OT text-critical history. At the Renaissance, Robert *Stephanus I edited and printed a number of editions of the Bible in Latin, in Greek, and in Hebrew, and also of some of the Fathers. In the 17th and 18th centuries the *Maurists were justly famous for their editions of many patristic texts. J. J. *Griesbach (1745–1812) is often regarded as the founder of NT textual criticism as the term is understood today; and he was followed by C. *Tischendorf (1815–74), whose edition of the NT, although published in its final form in 1894 and so pre-dating the major *papyrus finds, is still a standard work of reference. In the development of the textual criticism of the OT important stages were marked by the publication of B. *Kennicott's Vetus Testamentum Hebraicum cum variis lectionibus (1776–80) and R. Kittel's Biblia Hebraica (Leipzig, 1905–6; 3rd edn. by P. Kahle, Stuttgart, 1929–37); Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia, ed. K. Elliger and W. Rudolph (1977; rev., 1983), the standard scholarly text, is the 4th edn. of Kittel. The later years of the 19th cent. witnessed the inauguration of two large-scale undertakings in editing the Fathers on the most modern critical principles, namely the Berlin corpus of Greek Fathers ('GCS') and the Vienna corpus of Latin Fathers ('CSEL'), to be followed in the earlier years of the 20th cent. by the first volumes in the two oriental series, CSCO and PO, and in the second half of the cent. by the various series of the Corpus Christianorum (CCLS, CCSG, CCCM, etc.) and Sources Chrétiennes.

The belief that textual criticism has radically altered the text lying behind the traditional translations of the Bible has been one of the factors prompting the production of modern versions in recent times. An example of the results of textual criticism in the NT is afforded by Mk. 9. 29. The AV, based on the textus receptus, reads: 'And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting'. It now seems clear that the words 'and fasting' were not part of the original Gk. text, and they are therefore omitted from the English text of scholarly versions from the RV onwards. But the resulting changes in the text, at least so far as the NT is concerned, are by no means so fundamental as is often supposed.

Useful introd. to biblical textual criticism by F. C. *Burkitt in E.Bi. 4 (1903), cols. 4977–5031, s.v. 'Text and Versions'. On the OT, B. J. Roberts, The Old Testament Text and Versions: The Hebrew Text in Transmission and the History of the Ancient Versions (Cardiff, 1951); E. Würthwein, Der Text des Alten Testaments: Eine Einführung in die Biblia Hebraica von Rudolf Kittel (1952, Eng. tr., Oxford, 1957; 4th edn., 1973, Eng. tr., Grand Rapids, Mich., 1979, London, 1980); J. Weingreen, Introduction to the Critical Study of the Hebrew Bible (Oxford, 1982); E. Tov, Textual Criticism of the Hebrew Bible (Minneapolis and Assen [1992]: expanded Eng. tr. of work publ. in Heb., Jerusalem, 1989). S. Talmon, 'The Old Testament Text', in P. R. Ackroyd and C. F. Evans (eds.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 1 (1970), pp. 159–99. Eissfeldt, pp. 669–719. On the NT, F. H. *Scrivener, A Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament (1861; 4th edn., by E. Miller, 2 vols., 1894); C. R. Gregory, Textkritik des neuen Testamentes (3 parts, Leipzig, 1900–9); id., Canon and Text of the New Testament (1907), pp. 297–528; F. G. Kenyon, Handbook to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament (1901; 2nd edn., 1912); id., The Text of the Greek Bible (1937; 3rd edn. by A. W. Adams, 1975); B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament: Its Transmission, Corruption, and Restoration (Oxford, 1964; 3rd edn., 1992); J. Finegan, Encountering New Testament Manuscripts (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1974; London, 1975). J. N. Birdsall, 'The New Testament Text', in P. R. Ackroyd and C. F. Evans (eds.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 1 (1970), pp. 308–77. E. Tov and E. J. Epp in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 393–435, s.v., on OT and NT respectively. See also bibl. to GREEK (BIBLICAL AND PATRISTIC).

Textus Receptus (Lat., 'the Received Text'). The Greek text of the NT ordinarily contained in printed editions down to the later decades of the 19th cent. It takes its name from a casual phrase in the preface of the 2nd (1633) *Elzevir edition ('Textum ergo habes, nunc ab omnibus receptum, in quo nihil immutatum aut corruptum damus'). This text, which closely followed that of T. *Beza (1565), was substantially that of *Erasmus (1516), the *Complutensian Polyglot (NT printed 1514, pub. 1522) and esp. R. *Stephanus I (1550). It is in substance the *Byzantine text contained in the great majority of the MSS and underlies the AV of the English Bible. See TEXTUAL CRITICISM.

Thaddaeus, St. Mentioned in Mt. 10: 3 and Mk. 3: 8 (some MSS read *Lebbaeus), he is usually identified with the Apostle *Jude (q.v.). He is, however, sometimes identified with *Addai, one of the Seventy, who plays an important part in the *Abgar legend. Feast day of the latter, in the E. Church, 21 August.

Passio, which purports to be the work of Abdias, a disciple of St Thaddaeus and first Bp. of Babylon, pr. in R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet, Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, 1 (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 273–8, with introd. pp. cvi–cx.

Thaddaeus, Doctrine of. See ADDAI, DOCTRINE OF.

Thanksgiving, General. See GENERAL THANKSGIVING.

theandric activity (Gk. θεανδρικὴ ἐνέργεια). The term was popularized by *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite (Ep. 4) to denote the characteristic activity of the God-man. Although used by *Monophysites (esp. *Severus of Antioch) and *Monothelites in support of their theories of the one nature and one will in Christ, it was defended by St *Maximus the Confessor as presupposing the two natures, whose union and interaction it was meant to emphasize.

Theatines, religious order. Founded in Rome in 1524, as 'Clerks Regular of the Divine Providence', by two members of the Roman Oratory of Divine Love, St *Cajetan and Gian Pietro Carafa (Bp. of Chieti, or 'Theate'; afterwards Pope *Paul IV), the order aimed at the reform of the Church from the grave abuses and scandals then corrupting it. The Theatines were not allowed to have any property, or to beg; they observed the strictest austerity of life; and their habit was distinguished from that of the secular clergy only by their white socks. Within ten years other houses of Theatines had been established in Italy, and the order soon spread into Spain and Central Europe. By their zeal and piety they played an important part in the *Counter-Reformation. In 1583 a congregation of Theatine nuns was founded in Italy under the direction of the Theatine fathers; but the order never obtained wide extension.

G. B. del Tufo, Historia della religione de' padri chierici regolari (2 vols., 1609–16); G. Silos, CR, Historia Clericorum Regularium a Congregatione Condita (3 parts, Rome and Parma, 1650–66). B. Ferro, CR, Istoria delle missioni de' chierici regolari teatini (2 vols., Rome, 1704–5). Heimbucher, 2, pp. 97–106. F. Andreu, CR, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 978–99, s.v. 'Chierici Regolari Teatini', with bibl. See also Lives of St Cajetan and Pope Paul IV, cited s.vv.

Thebaic Version. See SAHIDIC.

Thebaid, the. The upper part of the Nile valley (named after its capital, Thebes) which from the 3rd cent. onwards was the cradle of Christian monasticism. Acc. to St *Jerome the first ascetic in the region was St *Paul of Thebes (c.230–341). The monks, who at first practised the most extreme asceticism and lived as solitaries, became increasingly organized into communities, mainly through the efforts of St *Antony and St *Pachomius.

Theban Legion, the. The Christian legion from the *Thebaid which acc. to tradition was massacred under the Emp. Maximian at St-Maurice-en-Valais. See MAURICE, ST.

Thecla, St. An early Christian virgin. The tradition concerning her derives from the 'Acts of Sts *Paul and Thecla' (q.v. for details), acc. to which she was converted by St Paul at Iconium. W. M. *Ramsay and others have contended that these 'Acts' contain a nucleus of genuine history, though it is difficult to separate fact from legend. A large church was built over Thecla's supposed tomb at Meriamlik, near Seleucia, and she was greatly venerated in both E. and W. Feast day in the W., 23 Sept. (suppressed in the RC Church in 1969); in the E., 24 Sept.

'De Vita et Miraculis S. Theclae', attributed in the MSS to *Basil of Seleucia, but now held to be the work of an unknown 5th-cent. author, ed., with Fr. tr. and full introd., by G. Dagron (Subsidia Hagiographia, 62; 1978). C. Holzhey, Die Thekla-Akten: Ihre Verbreitung und Beurtheilung in der Kirche (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchen-historischen Seminar München, Reihe 2, 7; 1905). L. Radermacher, Hippolytus und Thekla: Studien zur Geschichte von Legende und Kultus (Sb. (Wien), 182; 1916), pp. 51–69 and 121–6. R. Albrecht, Das Leben der heiligen Makrina auf dem Hintergrund der Thekla-Traditionen (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 38; 1986), pp. 239–326. U. M. Fasola, 'Il Complesso catacombale di S. Tecla', Riv. A.C. 40 (for 1964; 1966), pp. 19–50; id., 'La Basilica sotterranea di S. Tecla e le regioni cimiteriali vicine', ibid. 46 (1970) pp. 193–288. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2225–36, s.v. 'Thècle (Sainte)', with refs. See also works cited under PAUL AND THECLA, ACTS OF STS.

Theism (from Gk. θεός, 'God'). The term, prob. first employed by R. *Cudworth in the preface to his Intellectual System (1678), was originally used as an opposite to 'atheism', and only later acquired its present definite meaning to denote a creed distinct also from *pantheism and esp. from *Deism (q.v.). Theism, as the word is currently employed, may be said to denote a philosophical system which accepts a transcendent and personal God who not only created but also preserves and governs the world, the contingency of which does not exclude miracles and the exercise of human freedom. Theism, therefore, leaves room for the Christian revelation and is in various forms the view of the world common to all orthodox Christian philosophers; it is also required by *Judaism and *Islam. Apart from certain aberrations, usually of a pantheistic character, Theism was the basis of Christian philosophy down to modern times. Relegated to the background by the Deistic philosophy of the 18th cent. and the *Hegelianism and materialism of the 19th, it has again found many competent and convinced exponents in the modern world. See also PANENTHEISM.

Modern works defending Theism incl. F. *von Hügel, Eternal Life (1912), passim; C. C. J. *Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915), and other works; W. R. Sorley, Moral Values and the Idea of God (Gifford Lectures, 1914–15; 1918); E. L. Mascall, He Who Is: A Study in Traditional Theism (1943; with new introd. and appendix, 1966); A. M. Farrer, Finite and Infinite (1943); D. J. B. Hawkins, The Essentials of Theism (1949); H. D. Lewis, Our Experience of God (1959); E. L. Mascall, The Openness of Being: Natural Theology Today (Gifford Lectures, 1970–1; 1971); A. C. Ewing, Value and Reality: The Philosophical Case for Theism (1973); R. [G.] Swinburne, The Coherence of Theism (Oxford, 1977); B. [L.] Hebblethwaite, The Ocean of Truth: A Defence of Objective Theism (Cambridge, 1988). A. E. *Taylor in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 261–87, s.v. See also bibl. to GOD and PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION.

Themistians. See AGNOETAE.

Theobald (d. 1161), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of a knight of Thierville (Eure) in Normandy, he became a monk at *Bec, prior in 1127, and abbot in 1137. In 1138, as King Stephen's choice, he became Abp. of Canterbury. The disappointed *Henry of Blois, Bp. of *Winchester, whom Innocent II made a Papal legate, became a rival and, for a time, dominant power in the English Church. Theobald tried to prevent the election as Abp. of *York of the future St *William, a kinsman of Stephen and Henry, and he struggled against the rebellious monks of Christ Church and St Augustine's, Canterbury. He assembled a distinguished household of clerks, many of whom became bishops and archbishops. They included his brother Walter (later Bp. of *Rochester), John of Canterbury (Bp. of Poitiers, Abp. of Narbonne and Lyons), Roger of Pont-l'Évêque (Abp. of York), *John of Salisbury, and Thomas *Becket. The great civilian and canonist Master Vacarius was also in his household. During the civil war, although sympathetic to the Angevin cause, he loyally supported Stephen. When in 1148 he defied the King and attended the Council of *Reims, his property was seized and he was exiled. In consequence *Eugenius III laid England under an *interdict, but the King and the country were reconciled in the same year. At the end of 1149 he was made a Papal legate and in 1151 held an important legatine Council in London. In 1152 he refused to crown Stephen's son Eustace and had to flee to Flanders. Soon recalled, he reconciled Stephen and Henry of Anjou in 1153. On Stephen's death (1154), he crowned Henry King and recommended to him Thomas Becket as chancellor. His own secretary, John of Salisbury, was his chief adviser during his last years. With his defeat of the schemes of Henry of Blois, his championship of episcopal authority over monasteries, his encouragement of greater administrative and judicial efficiency, and his attempts to withstand royal 'tyranny', he did much to give the English Church a new identity and purpose.

Some of his letters are pr. among the correspondence of John of Salisbury (q.v.). Brief 'Compendium Vitae', written at Bec, pr. among the works of *Lanfranc (q.v.); ed. J. A. Giles, 1 (Oxford, 1844, pp. 337–9, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 150. 733 f.). A. Saltman, Theobald of Canterbury (University of London Historical Studies, 2; 1956), with text of charters, etc. W. Hunt in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 113–18, with refs.

theocracy (Gk. θεοκρατία, 'government by God'). The term was coined by Flavius *Josephus (Contra Apionem, 2. 16) to denote the political organization of the Jewish people, as the purest example of a theocracy. Before the institution of the kingship in Israel, Yahweh was regarded as the supreme ruler of the Hebrews, whose laws constituted at the same time religious and civil obligations, and even after the election of a king, the kings were vicegerents of Yahweh, though (in Judah at least) they claimed a status which some prophets saw as derogating from the authority of Yahweh (cf. Hos. 8: 4). A more complete theocracy was created after the Exile, when the monarchy disappeared. A theocratic form of government was also known to many ancient peoples, e.g. in Egypt and Tibet, where kings appeared as representatives or even incarnations of the Deity, and it is intrinsic in *Islam. In the history of Christianity attempts at the realization of the theocratic ideal were made by the medieval Popes, esp. *Gregory VII, and again by J. *Calvin at *Geneva. The influence of the OT model of government on Calvinist political doctrines is the source of the theocratic features in O. *Cromwell's Commonwealth and in Scottish Presbyterianism.

Theodicy (Gk. Θεός, 'God', and δίκη, 'justice'), etymologically the justification of God. The word was coined by G. W. *Leibniz, who used it as the title of his Essais de théodicée sur la bonté de Dieu (1710), and since then it has been applied to that part of natural theology which is concerned to defend the goodness and omnipotence of God against objections arising from the existence of evil in the world. The question itself, i.e. the origin and meaning of evil, has occupied philosophers and theologians from early times. Attempts at solving it have been made in many religions, e.g. in Hinduism, Buddhism, and *Manichaeism, both on dualistic and on pantheistic lines, and in the philosophic systems of *Plato and the *Stoics. *Origen explained it by the abuse of the freedom of the creatures, an interpretation since then developed in many forms, notably by St *Thomas Aquinas. The problem, less prominent in very religious eras, was much discussed in the period of the *Enlightenment, and Leibniz's work was an answer to P. *Bayle's brilliantly developed thesis that the existence of evil is incompatible with the goodness and omnipotence of God. Leibniz, who, in contrast to St Thomas, regarded this world as the best of all possible worlds, held that evil is a necessary element like the shade in a picture, throwing into relief the beauty and harmony of the whole. This optimistic view was shared by most 18th-cent. thinkers, e.g. by Lord Shaftesbury and Alexander Pope. In the 19th cent. Theodicy came to be more and more regarded in connection with the entire complex of *Natural Theology, of which it is now sometimes used as a synonym.

Theodora I (*c.*500–47), wife of *Justinian I, who married her in 523. Solemnly crowned co-regnant Empress in 527, she exercised a very great influence upon the complicated theological controversies of the time. Her sympathies were on the side of the *Monophysite party, and it was probably mainly through her influence that Justinian adopted his reactionary religious policy, which, esp. in the dispute over the *Three Chapters, sought to conciliate the Monophysites even at the expense of the *Chalcedonian decrees. Although, acc. to the (unreliable) evidence of the 'Anecdota' of *Procopius, she had lived a very dissolute life in her earlier years, she was undoubtedly a woman of outstanding intellect and learning, and as Empress she is said to have been a moral reformer. Her firm character was shown in her vigorous support of her husband in the Nika insurrection (532). Her portrait in mosaic is to be seen in the church of San Vitale at *Ravenna.

C. Diehl, Théodora: Impératrice de Byzance (Paris, 3rd edn., *c.*1904); H. Stadelmann, Theodora von Byzanz (2 vols., Dresden, 1927). W. G. Holmes, The Age of Justinian and Theodora, esp. 1 (1905), pp. 321–49, and 2 (1907), passim; R. Browning, Justinian and Theodora (1971; rev. edn., 1987), passim. A. Cameron, Procopius and the Sixth Century (1985), pp. 67–83, with further refs. L. *Duchesne, 'Les Protégés de Théodora', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 32 (1915), pp. 57–79.

Theodore the Lector (early 6th cent.), Church historian who lived at *Constantinople. He wrote two historical treatises: (1) a 'Tripartite History', composed of extracts from the Histories of *Socrates, *Sozomen, and *Theodoret; and (2) a work composed by himself carrying the history down to the time of Justin I (d. 527). The former work has survived in part, but of the latter only fragments have been preserved.

Of the 'Tripartite History' (4 Books), Bks. 1 and 2 survive in Cod. Marc. 344 and excerpts in Cod. Bodl. Barocc. 142. In the 7th–8th cent. an Epitome of the Church History (2, above) was compiled; frags. of this are embodied in the Byzantine Chronographers. Frags. of Theodore, first pub. by H. *Valesius (1673), repr. from 1720 edn. (Valesius and Reading) in J. P. Migne, PG 86 (1), 165–228. Complete crit. text, incl. further frags., ed. G. C. Hansen (GCS, 1971; 2nd edn., 1995). J. Bidez, La Tradition manuscrite de Sozomène et la Tripartite de Théodore le Lecteur (TU 32. 2b; 1908), pp. 35–72 and 76–80. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 398 f. (nos. 7502 f.). H. G. Opitz in PW, Zweite Reihe, 5 (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 1869–81, s.v. 'Theodorus (48)'.

Theodore of Mopsuestia (*c.*350–428), Antiochene theologian and biblical exegete. He studied rhetoric at *Antioch under Libanius; but in 369, with his friend St John *Chrysostom, he entered the school of *Diodore in a monastery at Antioch, where he remained for nearly ten years. In 392 he became Bp. of Mopsuestia. The rest of his life he spent in his see, gaining a wide reputation for learning and orthodoxy. In his biblical commentaries he used scientific, critical, philological, and historical methods, following Diodore in rejecting the Alexandrian use of allegorical interpretations. His account of the Fall of man includes positions superficially like those of *Pelagianism. His doctrine concerning the Incarnation was condemned at the Councils of *Ephesus (431) and *Constantinople (553). But the recovery in modern times of certain of his works, which have been preserved in Syriac, has shown that he has sometimes been judged unjustly. His terminology, as is only to be expected in one who wrote before the Council of *Chalcedon, is not always precise on questions of Christology. His psychological analysis of human personality, influenced by a hostile reaction against *Apollinarianism, seems to have dictated certain

*Nestorian formulae; however, he tried sincerely to explain them in a Catholic sense. See also THREE CHAPTERS, THE.

The texts of Theodore's works are scattered. Collection of his comm. on NT ed. O. F. Fritzsche (Zurich, 1847), repr., together with comm. on the Minor Prophets and others, from A. *Mai (ed.), Nova Patrum Bibliotheca, 7, pt. 1 (Rome, 1854), and other material, in J. P. Migne, PG 66. 9–1020. Crit. edns. of his Commentaries on Minor Epp. of St Paul (fragmentary) by H. B. *Swete (2 vols., Cambridge, 1880–2); frags. on St Paul collected in K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche aus Katenenhandschriften gesammelt (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 15; 1933), pp. 113–212; frags. of comm. on Pss. 1–80 [81], ed. R. Devreesse (ST 93; 1939); of comm. on Jn., ed. id., Essai sur Théodore de Mopsueste (ST 141; 1948 [a major work]), appendix, pp. 287–419; and crit. edn. of comm. on the Minor Prophets by H. N. Sprenger (Göttinger Orientsforschungen, 5. Reihe, Bd. 1; Wiesbaden, 1977). Syr. text of comm. on Jn., ed., with Lat. tr., by J. M. Vosté, OP (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 4th ser. 3; 1940); of frags. of comm. on Pss. 118 [119] and 138 [139]–48, ed., with Lat. tr., by L. van Rompay (CSCO 435–6, Scriptores Syri, 189–90; 1982) (for edn. of tr. by *Julian of Eclanum, see s.v.); and of frag. of comm. on Eccles. by W. Strothmann (Göttinger Orientsforschungen, 1. Reihe, Bd. 28; Wiesbaden, 1988). Catecheses (Syr. text and Eng. tr.) ed. A. Mingana (Woodbrooke Studies, 5 (on Nicene Creed), 1932; and 6 (on the *Lord's Prayer and the Sacraments of Baptism and the Eucharist), 1933); also photographically repr. from MS Mingana Syr. 561 (Selly Oak Colleges' Library, Birmingham) with Fr. tr. and introd. by R. Tonneau, OP, and R. Devreesse (ST 145; 1949). R. P. Vaggione, 'Some Neglected Fragments of Theodore of Mopsuestia's Contra Eunomium', JTS NS 31 (1980), pp. 403–70. U. Wickert, Studien zu den Pauluskommentaren Theodors von Mopsuestia als Beitrag zum Verständnis der Antiochenischen Theologie (Beiheft zur ZNTW 27; 1962). More general studies by F. A. Sullivan, SJ (Analecta Gregoriana, 82; 1956), R. A. Greer (London, 1961), R. A. Norris (Oxford, 1963), G. Koch (Münchener Theologische Studien, 2. Systematische Abteilung, 31; 1965), J. McW. Dewart (Catholic University of America, Studies in Christian Antiquity, 16; 1971), and D. Z. Zaharopoulos (New York etc. [1989]). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 344–61 (nos. 3827–73). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 319–22 and 615. H. B. Swete in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 934–48, s.v. 'Theodorus (26)'; É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 235–79, s.v.; J. M. Lera, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 385–400, s.v. 'Théodore (3) de Mopsueste'.

Theodore of Pharan. See THEODORE OF RAÏTHU.

Theodore of Raïthu (fl. after 550, perhaps 7th cent.), monk at the monastery of Raïthu on the Gulf of Suez. It has been argued that he later became Bp. of nearby Pharan, and as such was involved in the early stages of the *Monothelite controversy as a proponent of monenergism. He was the author of a Προπαρασκευή (Praeparatio), defending the Christological formulae of St *Cyril of Alexandria (d. 444) and of the *Chalcedonian Council (451) alike and attacking the doctrines of *Severus of Antioch and *Julian of Halicarnassus. The treatise outlines the chief Christological heresies from *Mani to Severus, while in its later sections it deals with specifically philosophical problems. J. P. Junglas and others have argued that Theodore was also the author of the 'De Sectis' traditionally ascribed to *Leontius of Byzantium.

The only complete pr. text of the 'Praeparatio' is the crit. edn. in F. Diekamp, Analecta Patristica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, no. 117; 1938), pp. 185–222, with introd. pp. 173–84. Portions of the text in J. P. Migne, PG 91. 1484–504. J. P. Junglas, Leontius von Byzanz (Paderborn, 1908), pp. 15–20. W. Elert, 'Theodore von Pharan und Theodor von Raithu', TLZ 76 (1951), cols. 67–76; id., Der Ausgang der altchristlichen Christologie: Eine Untersuchung über Theodor von Pharan und seine Zeit als Einführung in die alte Dogmengeschichte (1957). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 417 f. (nos. 7600–2). Beck (1959), pp. 382 f. and 430 f. M. Richard in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 282–4, s.v.; É. Amann, ibid., cols. 279–82, s.v. 'Théodore de Pharan'.

Theodore of Studios, St (759–826), monastic reformer. The son of pious parents of *Constantinople, he early came under the influence of his uncle, St Plato, abbot of Saccudium, under whose direction he embraced the religious life *c.*780. He was ordained priest by the patriarch *Tarasius in 787, and in 794 was made abbot of Saccudium in the place of Plato, who resigned in his favour. In 796 he was one of the most influential opponents of the adulterous marriage of Constantine VI and separated from the communion of Tarasius who had tolerated it. The result was that his monks were scattered and he himself was banished to Thessalonica; but in the next year he was recalled after the Emperor's mother, Irene, had deposed her son. In 799 he and the greater part of his community went from Saccudium, where they had been exposed to the raids of the Saracens, to the old monastery of *Studios at Constantinople which had become almost extinct. The energy and organizing genius of Theodore soon made it the centre of the monastic life of the E. The sermons in which he expounded to his monks the principles of the religious life embody his austere and noble ideals. In the controversy under the next Emp., Nicephorus I (802–11), about the reinstitution of the priest Joseph, who had blessed Constantine's second marriage, by the new patriarch, Theodore was again banished (809). From his exile he appealed to Pope *Leo III, but without success. After the Emperor's death in 811 Theodore returned.

In 813 Leo V ascended the throne and, reviving the *Iconoclastic policy of Constantine V, exiled Theodore, its most vigorous opponent. In 815 Theodore was taken to Metopa in N. Phrygia, and subsequently to Boneta in Anatolia and to Smyrna, where he was closely confined and frequently ill-treated, though he succeeded in writing numerous letters (many of them still extant) to encourage his followers. He also sent appeals to the Pope, Paschal I, who wrote to the Emperor on the question of image-worship. After Leo's assassination in 820, Theodore was recalled by his successor, Michael, who pursued a policy of toleration, but prohibited image-worship in the capital. Theodore therefore could not permanently return to his monastery and spent his last years outside Constantinople, largely on the peninsula of Tryphon. A man of austere sanctity and iron will, a vigorous defender of the independence of the Church, and a genius in religious legislation, Theodore of Studios was one of the finest representatives of Byzantine monasticism. His writings include a 'Short' and a 'Long Catechesis', an Exposition of the Liturgy of the *Presanctified, a number of spiritual orations, a list of canonical penances, several polemical works directed against the Iconoclasts, and poetry and correspondence. He is widely venerated esp. in the E. Feast day, 11 Nov.

There is no complete edn. of his works, that projected by the *Maurists not having been carried through. His letters and various dogmatic works ed. J. *Sirmond, Opera Varia, 5 (Venice, 1696); further texts ed. A. *Mai, NPB 5 (Rome, 1849), with notice by L. *Allatius in vol. 6 (ibid., 1853), pt. 2, pp. 158–68; these items are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 99 (repr., with introd. by G. D. Dragas, Athens, 1988). Further letters and frags. ed. J. P. Cozza Luzi, NPB 8 (Rome, 1871), pt. 1, pp. 1–244, and sermons, ibid. 9 (1888), pt. 1, pp. 1–318 ('Short Catechesis'), and pt. 2, pp. 1–217 ('Long Catechesis'); a second bk. of this 'Long Catechesis' was ed. by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus (St Petersburg, 1904); hymns ed. J. B. *Pitra, Analecta Sacra Spicilegio Solesmensi, 1 (Paris, 1876), pp. 336–80. Crit. edn. of some of his poetry, with Ger. tr. and comm., by P. Speck (Supplementa Byzantina, 1; 1968), and of his letters by G. Fatouros (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, 31; 2 vols., 1992). Eng. tr. of his writings against the Iconoclasts: On the Holy Icons, tr. by C. P. Roth (Crestwood, NY, 1981). Modern studies by A. Gardner (London, 1905), [B.] E. Marin ('Les Saints'; 1906), and A. P. Dobroklonskij (in Russian; 2 vols., Odessa, 1913–14). I. Hausherr, SJ, 'Saint Théodore Studite, l'homme et l'ascète', Orientalia Christiana, 6 (1926), pp. 1–87. C. von Schönborn, OP, L'Icône du Christ: Fondements théologiques (Paradosis, 24; Fribourg, 1976), pp. 217–34 (on his theology of icons). Beck (1959), pp. 491–5, with bibl. M.-H. Congourdeau in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 401–14, s.v. 'Théodore (6) Stoudite'.

Theodore of Tarsus, St (*c.*602–90), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was an Asiatic Greek, living as a monk in one of the Greek-speaking monasteries in Rome when he was recommended to Pope *Vitalian for the Archbishopric of Canterbury by *Hadrian, an African monk to whom the see had been offered. Vitalian consecrated him in 668; but the Pope, fearing that his orthodoxy might be corrupted by his Greek upbringing, arranged for *Benedict Biscop and Hadrian to accompany him to Britain. After a visitation of the whole of England, he set about reforming the government of the Church by dividing dioceses and extending the episcopate. In 672 or 673 he summoned, and presided over, the first important synod of the whole English Church at *Hertford, and in 679 he held another great synod at *Hatfield, where a declaration of orthodoxy was drawn up and forwarded to Rome at the request of Pope *Agatho. By such methods he unified the English Church and established the metropolitical authority of the see of Canterbury. He also did much to prepare the way for the parochial system. His active interference in the diocese of York created serious difficulties with St *Wilfrid (q.v. for details). His few writings, some only recently identified, comprise the Iudicia (which preserves his opinions on matters of ecclesiastical discipline and penance), the Laterculus Malalianus, a brief treatise which is partly chronological and partly exegetical, and a Latin translation of the Greek Passio S. Anastasii, as well as a corpus of commentaries on the Pentateuch and Gospels. The 'Penitential' attributed to him also reflects his views. Feast day, 19 Sept.

The principal sources are *Bede, HE, esp. 4. 1–5. 8; cf. notes in edn. by B. Colgrave and R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1969), ad locc. and comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (ibid., 1988), pp. 38, 40, 51, 101, 136–40, 142–5, 148, 150, 161, 178–80, 190, and 194; and Eddius' life of St Wilfrid, ed., with Eng. tr., by B. Colgrave (Cambridge, 1927; repr. 1985). The 'Penitential' was first pr. in full by F. W. H. Wasserschleben, Die Bussordnungen der abendländischen Kirche (Halle, 1851), pp. 182–219, with other decrees, pp. 145–81; the best edn. is that of P. W. Finsterwalder, Die Canones Theodori Cantuariensis: Über ihre Überlieferungsformen (Untersuchungen zu den Bussbüchern des 7., 8., und 9. Jahrhunderts, 1; 1929). Text of the 'Penitential' (though incomplete) is also conveniently pr. in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 3 (1871), pp. 173–213; other decrees of his archiepiscopate, pp. 114–72. B. Bischoff and M. Lapidge (eds.), Biblical Commentaries from the Canterbury School of Theodore and Hadrian (Cambridge Studies in Anglo-Saxon England, 10; 1994), with Eng. tr., and full account of Theodore, pp. 5–81 and 133–89. J. Stevenson, The 'Laterculus Malalianus' and the School of Archbishop Theodore (ibid., 14; 1995), incl. text and Eng. tr. M. Lapidge (ed.), Archbishop Theodore: Commemorative Studies on his Life and Influence (ibid., 11; 1995). A. J. Frantzen, The Literature of Penance in Anglo-Saxon England (New Brunswick, NJ, 1983), pp. 62–78. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 71–6 and 94–9. M. Lapidge, 'The School of Theodore and Hadrian', Anglo-Saxon England, 15 (1986), pp. 45–72; id., 'The Study of Greek at the School of Canterbury in the Seventh Century', in M. W. Herren (ed.), The Sacred Nectar of the Greeks: The Study of Greek in the West in the Early Middle Ages (King's College, London, Medieval Studies, 2; 1988), pp. 169–94. W. Stubbs in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 926–32, s.v. 'Theodorus (7)'.

Theodoret (*c.*393–*c.*460), Bp. of Cyrrhus. A native of *Antioch, he was educated in its monastery schools. After distributing his property among the poor, he entered the monastery of Nicerte *c.*416. Consecrated Bp. of Cyrrhus in Syria against his will in 423, he governed his diocese with great wisdom and munificence, at the same time indefatigably fighting paganism and heresy. He soon became involved in the Christological controversy between *Nestorius and *Cyril of Alexandria, in the latter of whose anathematisms he believed he detected a new version of *Apollinarianism. As a personal friend and admirer of Nestorius, he became one of the foremost defenders of the Antiochene Christology, and in a polemical work against Cyril maintained a duality in Christ and accepted the title '*Theotokos' only in a figurative sense. After the Council of *Ephesus (431) he continued to oppose Cyril and the decision of the Council, though Cyril accepted (433) a declaration of faith which had prob. been composed (432) by Theodoret himself. In 448, when accused by Cyril's successor, *Dioscorus, of dividing Christ 'into two Sons', he drew up another confession of faith in which he plainly asserted the unity of Christ and anathematized anyone who did not recognize the BVM as θεοτόκος. In spite of this, Dioscorus anathematized him and obtained Imperial edicts forbidding him to leave his diocese (448) and to come to the Council held at Ephesus in 449 unless summoned. This council, the so-called '*Latrocinium', deposed Theodoret, who was forced into exile. The new Emp., Marcian, summoned him to the Council of *Chalcedon (451), where he reluctantly anathematized Nestorius. It seems that he spent his last years in the peaceful administration of his diocese. A century later his writings against Cyril became the subject of the '*Three Chapters Controversy' and were condemned by the Council of *Constantinople in 553.

Only a comparatively small number of Theodoret's works has come down to us. In his 'Graecarum Affectionum Curatio', one of the finest Christian apologies, he places side by side the Christian and the pagan answers to the fundamental religious questions such as the nature of God and of man, sacrifice, the end of the world, etc. The 'Eranistes' is a treatise against the *Monophysites which asserts the immutability and impassibility of the Divine nature in Christ and the unconfused co-existence of the Divine and human natures in Him. His exegetical works, which deal with a large number of OT Books, e.g. the *Octateuch, Kings and Chronicles, Psalms, Song of Solomon, and the Major and Minor Prophets, are among the finest specimens of the Antiochene School and remarkable for their lucidity and erudition. His historical works include a 'Religious History', i.e. a collection of biographies of monks, a 'Church History', which continues the work of *Eusebius down to 428, and is esp. valuable for the numerous authentic documents used in it, and a 'Compendium of Heretical Fables', which gives information on *Arianism, Nestorianism, and *Eutychianism.

Theodoret's Christological opinions have been a matter of controversy, but it seems to be conceded by most scholars that he held Nestorian views at least till 434–5 and possibly until Chalcedon, but abandoned them at the latest after 451.

Collected works ed. J. *Sirmond, SJ (4 vols., Paris, 1642); suppl. vol. ed. J. *Garnier, SJ (ibid., 1684), repr. with additions by J. L. Schulze and J. A. Noesselt in J. P. Migne, PG 80–4. There are separate edns. of the Graecarum Affectionum Curatio by J. Raeder (Teub., 1904), and, with Fr. tr., by P. Canivet, SJ (SC 57; 2 vols., 1958); Eccl. Hist. by T. *Gaisford (Oxford, 1854) and L. Parmentier (GCS, 1911; 2nd edn. by F. Scheidweiler, 1954); Comm. on Is. by A. Möhle (Mitteilungen des Septuaginta-Unternehmens der Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, 5; 1932; repr., with Fr. tr. by J.-N. Guinot, SC, 276, 295, and 315; 1980–4); Correspondence, with Fr. tr., by Y. Azéma (SC 40, 98, and 111; 1955–65); Eranistes by G. H. Ettlinger (Oxford, 1975); Historia religiosa, with Fr. tr. by P. Canivet and A. Leroy-Molinghen (SC 234, 257; 1977–9); Quaestiones in Octateuchum by N. Fernández Marcos and A. Sáenz-Badillos (Madrid, 1979); and Quaestiones in Regis et Paralipomena by N. Fernández Marcos and J. R. Busto Saiz (ibid., 1984). There is an Eng. tr. of De Providentia Orationes by T. [P.] Halton (ACW 49 [1988]) and of Historia religiosa by R. M. Price (Cistercian Studies Series, 88; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1985). M. Richard, 'L'Activité littéraire de Théodoret avant le Concile d'Éphèse', RSPT 24 (1935), pp. 83–106; id., 'Notes sur l'évolution doctrinale de Théodoret', ibid. 25 (1936), pp. 459–81; id., 'Théodoret, Jean d'Antioche et les moines d'Orient', Mélanges de Science Religieuse, 3 (1946), pp. 147–56, and other works of this author. G. W. Ashby, Theodoret of Cyrrhus as Exegete of the Old Testament (Grahamstown, 1972). G. Koch, Strukturen und Geschichte des Heils in der Theologie des Theodoret von Kyros (Frankfurter Theologische Studien, 17; 1974). P. Canivet, Le Monachisme Syrien selon Théodoret de Cyr (Théologie Historique, 42; 1977). M. Ninci, Aporia ed entusiasmo: Il mondo materiale e i filosofi secondo Teodoreto e la tradizione patristica greca (Temi i Testi, 24; 1977). J.-N. Guinot, L'Exégèse de Théodoret de Cyr (Théologie Historique, 100; 1995). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 201–19 (nos. 6200–88). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 339–41 and 620. Y. Azéma in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 418–35, s.v.

Theodoric (c.455–526), King of the Ostrogoths from 475, and ruler of Italy from 493. He spent his early years as a hostage at *Constantinople, and subsequently, as leader of his people in the Balkans, was at times allied with the E. Empire and at times at war with it. In 487 he was commissioned by the Emp. *Zeno to overthrow the usurper Odoacer who was then ruling in Italy. Theodoric defeated and killed Odoacer, and ruled Italy until his death, paying only lip-service to his imperial overlords in Constantinople. His rule gave Italy a period of prolonged peace. Although he and his people were *Arians in a country that was solidly Catholic, he pursued a policy of toleration of the religious and cultural traditions of his Roman subjects, allowing the Catholic Church to retain all its churches, property, and privileges. In his capital, *Ravenna, and in other towns with Gothic settlers, two rival hierarchies, Arian and Catholic, coexisted. Such a policy was in marked contrast to the intolerance of religious dissent in contemporary Byzantium or in some other Arian kingdoms.

The chief source for his life is Jordanes, Getica (ed. T. *Mommsen, MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 5 (pars 1; 1882), pp. 53–138) and for his rule in Italy, *Cassiodorus, Variae (ed. id., ibid. 12 (1884) and by Å. J. Fridh, CCSL 96 (1973), pp. 1–499; Eng. tr. by S. J. B. Barnish (Translated Texts for Historians, 12; Liverpool, 1992)). Studies by M. Brion (Paris, 1935) and W. Ensslin (Munich [1947]). Good modern account of his life and rule by H. Wolfram, Geschichte der Goten (Munich, 1979; 2nd edn., 1980), esp. pp. 326–411; rev. Eng. tr. (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1988]), pp. 261–332. J. Moorhead, Theodoric in Italy (Oxford, 1992). For his churches in Ravenna, see F. W. Deichmann, Ravenna: Hauptstadt des spätantiken Abendlandes (2 vols. in 3 parts + plans, Wiesbaden, 1969–76); for his mausoleum, with its extraordinary monolithic dome, also R. Heidenreich and H. Johannes, Das Grabmal Theodorichs zu Ravenna (ibid., 1971).

Theodoric of Chartres. See THIERRY OF CHARTRES.

Theodosian Code. A collection of Roman imperial constitutions of general application from the time of *Constantine I to that of *Theodosius II, assembled and edited according to instructions given by Theodosius himself in 429 and 435. Compiled in Latin, the Code was promulgated to the E. on 15 Feb. 438, with effect from 1 Jan. 439; it was accepted as authoritative in both E. and W. and was still used in the W. after its supersession in the E. by *Justinian. The laws are arranged chronologically under topical tituli in 16 books. Book 16, which deals with religious affairs, contains the laws that banned paganism and penalized heresy, as well as those regulating the position of the clergy and determining the relation between Church and State.

The standard edn. is that of T. *Mommsen and P. M. Meyer (2 vols., Berlin, 1905); Books 1–8 also ed. P. Krüger (ibid., 1923–6). Eng. tr., with comm., by C. Pharr (Princeton, NJ, 1952). W. K. Boyd, The Ecclesiastical Edicts of the Theodosian Code (New York, 1905). G. G. Archi, Teodosio II e la sua codificazione (Naples [1976]), esp. pp. 151–90. L. de Giovanni, Chiesa e Stato nel Codice Teodosiano (ibid., 1980). Tony [i.e. A. M.] Honoré, 'The Making of the Theodosian Code', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Romanische Abteilung, 103 (1986), pp. 133–222. J. Gaudemet in DDC 7 (1965), cols. 1215–46, with bibl.

Theodosian Collection. The compilation of esp. canonical documents in the *Verona Chapter MS LX (58), subscribed with the name of Theodosius the Deacon. It contains inter alia an epistle from a Roman synod under *Damasus in 372 to the Catholic bishops in the E., 10 canons of the Council of *Carthage of 421, a Paschal cycle, some letters sent from the Council of *Sardica to Egypt, the 'Historia Acephala' relating to St *Athanasius, and some important documents concerning the *Melitian Schism at Alexandria. As none of these items is found elsewhere, the collection is one of unique interest. Among other items (27 in all, acc. to the usual reckoning) are the canons of *Nicaea and other Councils in various Latin versions. Some of its contents were published by S. *Maffei, its discoverer, and later instalments have been issued by the *Ballerini, F. *Maassen, C. H. *Turner, and E. *Schwartz. The thesis, first propounded by Turner, that the Collection goes back to the mission sent by Carthage to the E. in 419 in connection with the Apiarius affair has received a wide measure of acceptance.

[F.] S. Maffei, 'Monumenti ecclesiastici del quarto secolo Cristiano non più venuti in luce: conservati in Codice antichissimo del Capitolo Veronese', Osservazioni letterarie, 3 (Verona, 1738), pp. 7–92; text repr. in Maffei's Istoria teologica (Trent, 1742), pt. 2, pp. 254–72, with description, pp. 75–7. P. and G. Ballerini (eds.), Leonis Magni Opera, 3 (Venice, 1757), pp. cxxiv–cxxix, 105–27, 434–46, 581–622, 649–53. F. Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, 1 (1870), pp. 546–51. C. H. Turner, 'The Verona Manuscripts of Canons: The Theodosian MS. and its Connection with St. Cyril', The Guardian, 50 (pt. 2; 1895), pp. 1921 f.; cf. also EOMIA 1 (fasc. 2, pt. 3; 1930), pp. 623 f. E. Schwartz, 'Zur Geschichte des Athanasius', pt. 2, Nachr. (Gött.), 1904, pp. 357–91; id., 'Ueber die Sammlung des Cod. Veronensis LX', ZNTW 35 (1936), pp. 1–23. W. Telfer, 'The Codex Verona LX (58)', HTR 36 (1943), pp. 169–246. Crit. edn. of 'Historia Acephala', with Fr. tr., by A. Martin (SC 317, 1985, pp. 11–213, incl. introd. and bibl.). See also works cited s.v. VERONA.

Theodosius I (the 'Great'), Roman Emperor from 379 to 395. After repelling barbarian attacks on Britain and suppressing revolt in Africa, his father, the Spanish general, Count Theodosius, was executed, for reasons now unknown, in 376. In 379, however, his son was created co-Augustus by Gratian. In secular affairs he defeated and pacified the Goths after their victory at Hadrianople (378). Ecclesiastically he continued Gratian's policy and founded the orthodox Christian state. *Arianism and other heresies became legal offences, sacrifice was forbidden, and paganism almost outlawed. The Emperor's penitent submission to St *Ambrose after the massacre at Thessalonica (390) foreshadows *Canossa. The senatorial attempt to restore at Rome the 'Altar of Victory' (384) failed, and Theodosius sealed his work by defeating Arbogast's puppet-king, Eugenius, who would have tolerated paganism.

The principal sources incl. Aurelius Victor, Epitome, 48; Pacatus, Panegyricus Theodosio Aug. dictus; and St Ambrose, De Obitu Theodosii Oratio and Ep. 51. 4; and the 5th-cent. Church historians. Eng. tr. of Pacatus' Panegyric, with introd., by C. E. V. Nixon (Translated Texts for Historians, Latin Series, 2; Liverpool, 1987). G. Rauschen, Jahrbücher der christlichen Kirche unter dem Kaiser Theodosius dem Grossen (1897). A. Güldenpenning and J. Ifland, Der Kaiser Theodosius der Grosse (1878). E. Stein and J. R. Palanque, Histoire du Bas-Empire, 2 (1949), pp. 107–56. W. Ensslin, Die Religionspolitik des Kaisers Theodosius d. Gr. (Sb. (Bayr.), 1953, Heft 2). N. Q. King, The Emperor Theodosius and the Establishment of Christianity (1961). J. H. W. G. Liebeschuetz, Barbarians and Bishops (Oxford, 1990), esp. pp. 157–65. G. T. Stokes in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 959–64, s.v. 'Theodosius (2) I'; A. Lippold in PW, Suppl. 13 (1973), cols. 837–961, with suppl. bibl. cols. 1043 f.

Theodosius II (401–50), grandson of *Theodosius I, E. Roman Emperor from 408. He is significant in religious history by his foundation of the University of Constantinople (425), his summoning of the Council of *Ephesus (431), and his enactment of the *Theodosian Code (q.v.). Though pious by nature, he was politically incompetent, being dominated at one stage by *Simeon Stylites, and later in his reign by his minister, Chrysaphius, who secured his support for the *Monophysites. He died on 28 July 450 after a fall from his horse.

The primary sources are listed by J. R. Martindale, The Prosopography of the Later Roman Empire, 2 (Cambridge, 1980), p. 1100, s.v. 'Theodosius (6)'. A. Güldenpenning, Geschichte des oströmischen Reiches unter den Kaisern Arcadius und Theodosius II (1885). G. T. Stokes in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 964–7, s.v. 'Theodosius (3) II'; A. Lippold in PW, Suppl. 13 (1973), cols. 961–1044. See also bibl. to THEODOSIAN CODE.

Theodotion (prob. 2nd cent.), translator or reviser of the Gk. version of the OT placed in *Origen's *Hexapla next after the LXX. Hardly anything is known of his life. St *Irenaeus (Haer. 3. 21. 1) refers to him as a Jewish proselyte; St *Jerome (De Vir. Ill. 54) as an *Ebionite Christian; and *Epiphanius (De Mensuris et Ponderibus, 17) as a follower of *Marcion. Excerpts attributed to Theodotion in the Hexapla may include the work of earlier revisers; this is particularly likely in the text of Dan., which was used by the Church from the 4th cent. onwards in preference to the LXX. Acc. to D. Barthélemy, Theodotion worked in the middle of the 1st. cent. and was the author of a Hebraizing revision of the LXX of which fragments of the Minor Prophets have been found in the Judaean desert and further elements identified in the textual tradition of other Books (the kai ge recension, so named after a distinctive feature). The text of Theodotion in the Hexapla has special value for Jer. and Job, as it was used by Origen to make good the many gaps in the LXX text.

H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 42–9. D. Barthélemy, OP, Les Devanciers d'Aquila (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 10; Leiden, 1963), esp. pp. 144–67. S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 83–94. A. Schmitt, 'Stammt der sogenannte "θ"-Text bei Daniel wirklich von Theodotion?', Nachr. (Gött.), 1966, pp. 279–392; K. G. O'Connell, SJ, The Theodotionic Revision of the Book of Exodus (Harvard Semitic Monographs, 3; Cambridge, Mass., 1972). J. Gwynn in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 970–9, s.v.; K. G. O'Connell in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, suppl. vol. (Nashville, 1976), pp. 377–81, s.v. 'Greek Versions (minor)'.

Theodotus (2nd cent.), *Gnostic. A follower of *Valentinus, he is known from the fragments preserved by *Clement of Alexandria in the Excerpta ex Theodoto found among Clement's writings.

The Excerpta are pr. in all the edns. of Clement. Separate edns. by R. P. Casey ('Studies and Documents', 1934) and F. M. M. Sagnard, OP (SC 23; 1948; excellent notes). CPG 1 (1983), p. 64 (no. 1139).

Theodotus, the Cobbler or Leather-seller (2nd cent.), Adoptionist *Monarchian. He came from Byzantium to Rome under Pope *Victor (*c.*189–198), proclaiming that Jesus was a man who was anointed with the Holy Spirit at His baptism and thus became Christ. He was excommunicated by Victor. His disciples, who were known as 'Theodotians', included his namesake, 'Theodotus the Money-changer' (early 3rd cent.).

The primary sources are *Hippolytus, Haer. 7. 35 f. and 10. 23 f., and *Eusebius, HE 5. 28. See also *Epiphanius, Haer. 54 f., where the sect is described under the name of 'Melchisedekians'. A. *Harnack in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 311–18, s.v. 'Monarchianismus'; G. Bardy in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 513–16, s.v. 'Melchisédéciens'.

Theodotus (d. c.445), Bp. of Ancyra. At first a supporter of *Nestorius, he became one of his most determined adversaries, taking a prominent part on the Cyrilline side at the Council of *Ephesus (431). At the (Nestorian) Council of Tarsus (432) he was anathematized. Among his writings were: (1) Six books against Nestorius (lost); (2) an 'Explanation of the Creed of Nicaea', maintaining that Nestorian teaching was already condemned by the Creed of 325; and (3) various 'Sermons' (partly lost), incl. two for *Christmas (which were read at the Council of Ephesus) and another for the *Purification (εἰς τὰ φῶτα). These last are important early witnesses to the existence of these two Feasts. Recently another sermon on Christmas has been discovered. A long panegyric ascribed to him on 'The Martyrdom and Miracles of St *George' is certainly spurious.

He is not to be confused with St Theodotus of Ancyra, a martyr in the *Diocletianic Persecution, commemorated in the *Roman Martyrology on 18 May.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG 77. 1309–1432 (from A. *Gallandi). M. Aubineau, SJ, 'Une Homélie de Théodote d'Ancyre sur la Nativité du Seigneur', OCP 26 (1960), pp. 221–50, incl. text. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 192–6 (nos. 6124–41). Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 197–200. G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 328–30.

Theodulf (c.750–821), Bp. of Orléans, poet, and textual critic. A Visigothic refugee from the Islamic invasion of Spain, Theodulf was welcomed at the court of *Charlemagne. By 798 he was Bp. of Orléans and Abbot of nearby *Fleury. As an ecclesiastical magnate, he joined Abp. Leidrad of Lyons (also a good scholar) when they went as royal legates on a visitation in the south of France (798–9), and he was present at Charlemagne's coronation in Rome (800). After 20 years as a powerful aristocrat at court, he was deposed from all his offices for alleged conspiracy against *Louis I, the Pious (816–40) and exiled to Angers (818) where he died.

Theodulf is a witness to the life and intellectual concerns of the imperial court at Aachen. His 79 poems, epigrams, and hymns include verses referring to *Alcuin, *Einhard, and Charlemagne himself. The 'Versus contra Judices' record his impressions of the visitation of 798–9 and sharply criticize the harshness of Frankish law. His treatise 'De Spiritu Sancto' is a collection of patristic excerpts on the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit; the 'De ordine baptismi' (812) is one of a number of responses to Charlemagne's letter to his bishops asking how they understood the practice of Baptism. The '*Caroline Books' (c.790–2, now attributed mainly to Theodulf) concern the use of visual images in private devotion and in the liturgy; they were a reaction to recent Byzantine legislation at the Second Council of *Nicaea (787; see ICONOCLASTIC CONTROVERSY). Theodulf's own taste may be seen in his chapel at Germigny-des-Prés, a hunting-lodge between Fleury and Orleans. There the apse mosaic (c.806)—angels guarding the Ark of the Covenant—reflects older models seen presumably in Italy; it is the only such mosaic work surviving north of the Alps.

Theodulf's two series of episcopal statutes, regulating Christian practice and the life of the clergy, had an influence far beyond his own diocese. His hymn 'All glory, laud and honour' became the *Palm Sunday processional of the W. Church. But his most distinctive achievement is his scholarly revision of the *Vulgate, drawing on MSS from Spain, Italy, and Gaul, and even referring back to the original Hebrew. Six contemporary MSS of Theodulf's edition of the Bible survive, two (in Paris and Le Puy) with sumptuous decoration.

His works, ed. J. *Sirmond, SJ (Paris, 1646), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 105. 191–380. Crit. edns. of his poems by E. Duemmler, MGH, Poetae, 1 (1881), pp. 437–581; some of them repr., with Eng. tr., by P. Godman, Poetry of the Carolingian Renaissance (1985), pp. 150–75. Crit. edn. of his statutes by P. Brommer, MGH, Capitula Episcoporum, 1 (1984), pp. 73–184. C. Cuissard, 'Théodulfe, évêque d'Orléans, sa vie et ses œuvres', Mémoires de la Société Archéologique et Historique de l'Orléanais, 24 (1892), pp. 1–351; H. Liebeschütz, 'Theodulf of Orleans and the Problem of the Carolingian Renaissance', in D. J. Gordon (ed.), Fritz Saxl 1890–1948 (1957), pp. 77–92; E. Dahlhaus-Berg, Nova Antiquitas et Antiqua Novitas: Typologische Exegese und isidorianisches Geschichtsbild bei Theodulf von Orléans (Kölner historische Abhandlungen, 23; 1975) [discusses his biblical text, 'De ordine baptismi', and the 'Caroline Books']; R. McKitterick, The Frankish Church and the Carolingian Reforms, 789–895 (1977), pp. 52–7; J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 217–25. For 'Theodulf Bibles', see B. Fischer [OSB], 'Bibeltext und Bibelreform unter Karl dem Grossen', in W. Braunfels (ed.), Karl der Grosse: Lebenswerk und Nachleben, 2 (Düsseldorf, 1965), pp. 156–216, esp. pp. 175–83, repr. in B. Fischer, Lateinische Bibelhandschriften im frühen Mittelalter (Vetus Latina, 11; Freiburg, 1985), pp. 101–202, esp. pp. 135–47, the Hebrew variants, n. 37, and further refs. Raby, pp. 171–7; Manitius, 1 (1911), pp. 537–43; F. Brunhölzl, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelaters, 1 (1975), pp. 288–99.

Theognostus (2nd half of 3rd cent.), *Alexandrian ecclesiastical writer. *Philip Sidetes states that he was head of the *Catechetical School in succession to Pierius (c.300), but no other ancient authority gives him such a position. He elaborated a system of theology on *Origenist lines in seven books of Hypotyposes, (Ὑποτυπώσεις), of which an account is preserved by *Photius (Cod. 106). Quotations also survive in St *Athanasius (Ep. 4 ad Serapionem, 11; De Decretis, 25) and St *Gregory of Nyssa (Contra Eunom. 3. 3). Despite his subordinationist language on the Son (derived from Origen), Athanasius could appeal to his support against the *Arians.

Frags. pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 10. 235–42. A. *Harnack, 'Die Hypotyposen des Theognost' (TU 24. 3; Leipzig, 1903). L. B. Radford, Three Teachers of Alexandria: Theognostus, Pierius, Peter (1908), pp. 1–43. G. Anesi, 'La notizia di Fozio sulle Hypotyposeis di Teognosto', Augustinianum, 21 (1981), pp. 491–516. CPG 1 (1983), p. 200 (nos. 1626 f.).

theologia crucis (Lat., 'theology of the cross'). The name given by Martin *Luther to the theological principle that our knowledge of the Being of God must be derived from the study of Christ in His humiliation and the sufferings He underwent on the cross. He opposed it to a theologia gloriae ('theology of glory') which would maintain with the *Scholastic theologians that a true knowledge of God can be obtained from the study of nature.

Theologia Deutsch. See THEOLOGIA GERMANICA.

Theologia Germanica. An anonymous medieval spiritual treatise, written in German by a priest of the *Teutonic Order at Sachsenhausen, near Frankfurt am Main. Martin *Luther published an incomplete text in 1516 and the full text in 1518, giving it the title Deutsch Theologia. In 1851 F. Pfeiffer published a longer version on the basis of a newly discovered manuscript, in which the work is entitled Der Franckforter. The discovery of several new manuscripts and the publication of a critical edition in 1982 seem to show that the text published by Luther is closer to the original than the longer version and to have confirmed the view that the work comes from the milieu of the *Friends of God associated with *Eckhart and J. *Tauler, whose doctrines it reflects; it must therefore be dated in the late 14th cent.

The treatise counsels radical poverty of spirit and renunciation of self as the way of union in and with God. Luther was much impressed by the work in his early period and found in it support for his own opposition to good works and for his views on individual religion. Later it was admired by the *Pietists, and it has been translated into many languages. In 1612 it was placed on the *Index; J. *Calvin too had been suspicious of it, but it is now generally recognized as perfectly orthodox.

Crit. edn. by W. von Hinten, 'Der Franckforter' ('Theologia Deutsch') (Münchener Texte und Untersuchungen zur Deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 78; 1982), with bibl. Eng. trs. by S. Winkworth, with preface by C. *Kingsley (London, 1854) and by B. Hoffman (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1980). G. Baring, 'Neues von der "Theologia Deutsch" und ihrer weltweiten Bedeutung', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 48 (1957), pp. 1–11, with summary in Eng.; A. M. Haas, 'Die "Theologia Deutsch". Konstitution eines mystologischen Texts', Freiburger Zeitschrift für Philosophie und Theologie, 25 (1978), pp. 304–50. S. E. Ozment, Mysticism and Dissent: Religious Ideology and Social Protest in the Sixteenth Century (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1973), pp. 14–60. G. Baring, Bibliographie der Ausgaben der 'Theologia Deutsch' (1516–1961) (Baden-Baden, 1963). U. Mennecke-Haustein in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 459–63, s.v. 'Theologia Deutsch'.

Theological Colleges (Anglican). In these Colleges candidates receive their final preparation for ordination. Before the 19th cent. various attempts were made to establish theological colleges in England, notably by Matthew Sutcliffe, Dean of Exeter, in 1609, by G. *Burnet, Bp. of Salisbury (d. 1715), and by T. *Wilson, Bp. of Sodor and Man, in 1700; but nothing in the way of a permanent foundation was accomplished. Edinburgh Theological College was founded in 1810 and is thus the oldest surviving theological college in the Anglican Communion. In England, G. H. Law, Bp. of *Chester, founded St Bees' College for non-university men in 1816, and in 1825 the *CMS started a college at Islington for those of its candidates who were not graduates. Neither of these colleges has survived. The oldest existing seminary in England is the Queen's College, Birmingham, which was founded in 1828 for medical and theological students, and in 1934 was reconstituted for theology alone. Chichester Theological College was established in 1839, and after that date others followed rapidly. In recent years, however, owing to the decline in the number of ordination candidates and a desire to conserve resources, some theological colleges have closed (e.g. *Ely in 1964, and St Aidan's, Birkenhead, and Bishop's College, Cheshunt, in 1969) and some have amalgamated (e.g. Ripon Hall and Cuddesdon College to form Ripon College, Cuddesdon, in 1975). There have also been amalgamations with theological colleges of other denominations, notably the amalgamation in Birmingham between the Queen's College and Handsworth College (Methodist).

F. W. B. Bullock, A History of Training for the Ministry of the Church of England in England and Wales from 1800 to 1874 (St Leonards-on-Sea, 1955). Id., The History of Ridley Hall, Cambridge (2 vols., 1941–53), with much general information, esp. Introduction on 'Theological Colleges of the Church of England before 1875' in vol. 1, pp. 1–17. Theological Colleges for Tomorrow: Being the Report of a Working Party appointed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, to consider the problems of the Theological Colleges of the Church of England (1968). A notable history of a particular foundation is [W.] O. Chadwick, The Founding of Cuddesdon (1954). S. L. Ollard in DECH, pp. 587–91, s.v.

theological virtues. A title given to the three virtues of *faith, *hope, and *charity, which are grouped together by St *Paul (1 Cor. 13: 13; cf. 1 Thess. 1: 3, Gal. 5: 5–6, Col. 1: 4–5) as the bases of the Christian life. They are so named in contradistinction to the 'natural' or 'cardinal virtues' (q.v.). Their place in the life of grace and their relations to each other were much studied by the Schoolmen, esp. St *Thomas Aquinas.

A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2739–99, s.v. 'Vertu', esp. cols. 2782–4 ('vii, Vertus theólogales').

Theologische Literaturzeitung. A German theological periodical, founded in 1876 by E. *Schürer and A. *Harnack largely in the interests of *Ritschlian theology and devoted entirely to reviews of current theological literature. It was published fortnightly till the end of 1938, and from 1939 monthly.

theology (Gk. θεολογία), lit. the 'science of God'. Among the Greek Fathers it comes to have two specific references: it can denote either the doctrine of the *Trinity (i.e., of God's being, as opposed to his dealings with the created order), or it can mean prayer (as it is only in prayer that God is truly known). Later, in the W. it came to mean the science of the Divinely revealed religious truths. Its theme is the Being and Nature of God and His creatures and the whole complex of the Divine dispensation from the Fall of Adam to the Redemption through Christ and its mediation to men by His Church, including the so-called natural truths of God, the soul, the moral law, etc., which are accessible to mere reason. Its purpose is the investigation of the contents of belief by means of reason enlightened by faith (fides quaerens intellectum) and the promotion of its deeper understanding. In the course of time theology has developed into several branches, among them dogmatic, historical, and practical theology. The methods of classification of the sub-disciplines, however, fluctuate in different theological systems.

See also NATURAL THEOLOGY; REVELATION; TRADITION; and CATHOLIC (5).

theology of religions. The interpretation of how God (or ultimate Divine reality) may be operative for salvation through religions other than Christianity. Early belief in Jesus Christ as God's final agent of salvation (later embodied in the doctrine of the *Incarnation) encouraged the view that He either fulfilled or was destined to replace the religious aspirations within other traditions. This attitude of superiority was qualified by unresolved puzzlement about the availability of salvation in the time before the coming of Christ and in places where the Christian message had not penetrated.

The *Apologists of the 2nd and 3rd cents. held a positive view of other religions based on the doctrine of the universal presence of the divine *Logos, which was manifest not only in Greek religions and ancient Judaism but also in Buddhists and Brahmins (so, e.g. *Clement of Alexandria). After *Constantine, the maxim 'no salvation outside the Church', which had hitherto been applied to Christian heretics and schismatics, was extended to pagans and Jews, because it was assumed that in the Empire everyone would have had a chance to hear the Christian message. The encounter in the 7th cent. with *Islam, an alternative universal missionary religion, confirmed Christianity in its exclusivist tendency. The Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) and the Council of *Florence (1442) both endorsed the belief that salvation was confined to the Church.

After the European expansion of the late 15th and 16th cents., the encounter with peoples beyond the known world deepened the unresolved puzzlement about salvation beyond the Church. Protests against the ill-treatment of native peoples in the colonized territories rekindled earlier debates about the culpability of such people in respect of salvation. Taking up hints in the writings of St *Thomas Aquinas, some *Dominicans at Salamanca (e.g. F. de *Vitoria and M. *Cano) and some Jesuits (e.g. R. *Bellarmine and F. *Suárez) in the 16th cent. argued that salvation outside the Church was possible by virtue of a 'baptism of desire' or 'implicit faith' in Christ. In the 18th and 19th cent., though their actions were motivated by belief in the supremacy of Christianity, some missionaries (both Protestant and RC) came to doubt exclusivist views as an adequate response to the perceived ethical aspirations and depth of spirituality in other religions. A number of inter-faith organizations which came into being in the 20th cent., trace the beginnings of the inter-faith movement to the first conference of the World's Parliament of Religions held in Chicago in 1893.

In the second half of the 20th cent. a new global consciousness brought about by decolonization, increased travel, and the enormously enhanced ease of communication, form the background for the further promotion of an encounter between Christianity and other religions based on mutual respect and dialogue. While there is little agreement about its motivations and expectations, this dialogue none the less implies a more open theological approach. The Second *Vatican Council (notably in Nostra Aetate, 1960) encouraged RCs to value what is holy, good, and true in other religions, and in 1979 the *World Council of Churches established the Sub-Unit on Dialogue with People of Living Faiths and Ideologies. The Orthodox Church, through its membership of the World Council of Churches, is now beginning to value the dialogue with other religions. In general, these movements have been motivated by an inclusivist understanding of salvation, utilizing such notions as the 'cosmic Christ' (Orthodox), 'anonymous Christ' (K. *Rahner, SJ), and 'normative Christ' (Anglican and Protestant) which is thought to be somehow effective for other believers within their own traditions.

Conservative theologians, anxious to counter any ambiguity over belief in the absolute uniqueness of the Person of Christ, stress the discontinuity between Christianity and other religions, while at the same time respecting cultural differences. In this respect the influence of the Dutch missionary theologian Hendrik Kraemer, through his contribution to the third International Missionary Council at *Tambaram in 1938, has been considerable among Protestants. Greater emphasis on historical-cultural relativism, the symbolic nature of theological concepts, and philosophical perspectivism, have motivated other Catholic and Protestant theologians (notably John Hick, Wilfred Cantwell Smith, Stanley Samartha, and Paul Knitter) to argue that each religion provides its own effective context for salvation/liberation/enlightenment (formulated as a generic concept), and that each tradition has its own validity before the one ultimate Divine reality. In a different vein, *Liberation theologians stress the concept of the '*Kingdom of God' as a focus for sharing insights on justice. *Feminist theologians have pointed to structural similarities between the oppression of women in Christianity and the treatment of other religions by the Church. Global problems of war, poverty, and ecological survival are leading some to formulate a shared global ethic. This aspect is reflected in the 'Declaration Towards a Global Ethic' commended by leaders from the world religions which met at Chicago in 1993 to commemorate the centenary of the World's Parliament of Religions.

Convenient collection of key passages from various writers ed. J. Hick and B. Hebblethwaite, Christianity and other Religions (1980). A. *Schweitzer, Christianity and the Religions of the World (1923). H. Kraemer, The Christian Message in a Non-Christian World (1938). [R.] N. Smart, A Dialogue of Religions (1960). S. J. Samartha, Courage for Dialogue: Ecumenical Issues in Inter-Religious Relationships (Geneva [1981]). A. Race, Christians and Religious Pluralism: Patterns in the Christian Theology of Religions (1983), with bibl. H. *Küng and others, Christentum und Weltreligion (Munich, [1984]; Eng. tr., 1987); id., Projekt Weltethos (ibid., 1990; Eng. tr., Global Responsibility, 1991). P. F. Knitter, No other Name? A Critical Survey of Christian Attitudes Toward the World Religions (1985). J. Hick and P. F. Knitter (eds.), The Myth of Christian Uniqueness (1987); G. D'Costa (ed.), Christian Uniqueness Reconsidered: The Myth of a Pluralist Theology of Religions (Maryknoll, NY [1990]). S. W. Ariarajah, Hindus and Christians: A Century of Protestant Ecumenical Thought (Amsterdam and Grand Rapids, Mich., 1991). M. Braybrooke, Pilgrimage of Hope: One Hundred Years of Global Interfaith Dialogue (1992). F. A. Sullivan, SJ, Salvation Outside the Church? Tracing the History of the Catholic Response (New York and London, 1992). M. [F.] Wiles, Christian Theology and Inter-Religious Dialogue (1992).

Theopaschites (Gk. θεοπασχῖται, i.e. 'those who hold that God suffered'), a name applied to those in the 5th and 6th cents. who held that, in virtue of the unity of the Incarnate Christ, it could be said that God had suffered. Controversy over theopaschism had two focal points. The first arose when *Peter the Fuller added the phrase 'who was crucified for us' to the '*Trisagion'. This addition had the support of his fellow *Monophysites (who agreed with him in regarding the 'Trisagion' as a Christological hymn), but was condemned by the Catholics (who regarded it as addressed to the Trinity). The second centred on the formula 'One of the Trinity suffered in the flesh', first defended in *Constantinople in 519 by a group of Scythian monks, including John Maxentius. The formula was rejected by the Patr. of Constantinople and (with some hesitation) by Pope *Hormisdas, but gained the support of the Emp. *Justinian who eventually (in 534) secured the agreement of Pope John II. The Second Council of *Constantinople in 553 anathematized those who denied that Christ, who was crucified in the flesh, was one of the Trinity (Session 8, anathema 10). Theopaschism is to be distinguished from *Patripassianism, which confounds the Persons of the Father and the Son.

See works cited s.v. TRISAGION.

Theophany. An appearance of God in visible form, temporary and not necessarily material (cf. e.g. Exod. 33: 20 ff.). Such an appearance is to be contrasted with the *Incarnation, in which there was a permanent union between God and complete manhood (body, soul, and spirit). In early Christian times the word was in regular use in an orthodox sense, e.g. for the Feast of the *Epiphany in the *Gelasian Sacramentary.

Theophan (in Russian, Feofan) the Recluse, St (1815–94), bishop and spiritual writer. George Vasilievich Govorov, the son of a Russian priest, was ordained and became a monk in 1841, taking the name of Theophan. He spent the first part of his ministry teaching in various theological seminaries, with a break of seven years (1847–54) working with the 'Russian Spiritual Mission' in *Jerusalem, and a further period in *Constantinople (1856–7). In 1859 he was consecrated Bp. of Tambov and was translated to Vladimir in 1863. In 1866 he retired and spent the rest of his life as a monk, later as a hermit, in the small monastery of Vyshi. He played an important part in making the fruits of the 18th-cent. *Hesychast revival known in Russia and, in particular, popularized the use of the Jesus Prayer among Russian Orthodox Christians. He translated into Russian various Greek spiritual writings, incl. the Philocalia (1876–90) and *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain's 'Unseen Warfare'; he also wrote numerous letters to those who turned to him for spiritual counsel. He was canonized by the 1988 Synod of the Russian Orthodox Church; feast day, 10 Jan.

There is a partial Eng. tr. of his version of the Philocalia by E. Kadloubovsky and G. E. H. Palmer, Writings from the Philokalia on Prayer of the Heart (1951) and idd., Early Fathers from the Philokalia (1954). Eng. trs. by idd. of his version of Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain's 'Unseen Warfare' (1952) and of an anthology containing much of his correspondence compiled by Igumen Chariton of Valamo (pub. Valamo in Finland, 1936), as The Art of Prayer (1966), with introd. by T. Ware, pp. 9–38, and by F. Williams of selected works and a contemporary Life as The Heart of Salvation (Newbury, Mass., and Robertsbridge, E. Sussex [1992]). T. Špidlík, SJ, La Doctrine spirituelle de Théophane le Reclus (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 172; 1965). Id. in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 517–22, s.v. 'Théophane (3) le Reclus'.

Theophilanthropists. A *Deistic sect founded in France during the reign of the Directory under the patronage esp. of the Director L. M. La Réveillère-Lépeaux (1753–1824). Its tenets were set forth in a pamphlet by J. B. Chemin-Dupontès (Paris, Sept. 1796) under the title of Manuel des théophilanthropes, the three articles of its creed being belief in God, virtue, and immortality. At first the movement seemed likely to spread and was given the use of ten churches in Paris by the Directory; but after the re-establishment of Catholicism by the *Concordat of 1801 it soon lost ground, and in 1802 Napoleon restored its churches to Catholic worship. Some attempts were made to revive it later in the 19th cent., but without success.

J. Brugerette in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 518–23, s.v.

Theophilus (later 2nd cent.), Bp. of *Antioch and one of the 'Christian *Apologists'. Of his writings, only his 'Apology', in three books addressed to Autolycus, has survived. Its purpose was to set before the pagan world the Christian idea of God and the superiority of the doctrine of *Creation over the immoral myths of the Olympian religion. Theophilus developed the doctrine of the *Logos a stage further than any of his Christian predecessors, distinguishing between the λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, the intelligence of the Father, and the λόγος προφορικός, the Word brought forth externally in order to create. He is also the first theologian to use the word '*Triad' (τριάς) of the Godhead. Among his (lost) treatises were writings against *Marcion and Hermogenes. F. *Loofs endeavoured to show that considerable portions of his work against Marcion were incorporated in *Irenaeus' 'Treatise Against Heresies', but his contention has won little support.

The sole MS authority for the 'Ad Autolycum' is Cod. Marcianus 496 (11th cent.), all other known MSS being direct descendants. Editio princeps by J. Frisius and C. Gesner (Zurich, 1546). Crit. edns. by J. C. T. Otto, Corpus Apologetarum, 8 (3rd edn., Jena, 1861) and R. M. Grant, with Eng. tr. (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1970). J. P. Migne, PG 6. 1023–168. F. Loofs, Theophilus von Antioch und die anderen theologischen Quellen bei Irenäus (TU 46 (2); 1930). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 53 f. (nos. 1107–9). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 75–7 and 556. G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 530–6; P. Nautin in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3405 f.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 831 f., all s.v.

Theophilus (d. 412), Patr. of Alexandria from 385. He was the uncle of St *Cyril, who succeeded him. In his first years as patriarch he took an active part in suppressing the remnants of paganism in his city, in 391 destroying the temple of Serapis; but later his main ambition seems to have been the furtherance of the prestige of his see. Originally a supporter of *Origenism, he became a fierce opponent of the Origenist monks. When the *Tall Brothers fled to *Constantinople and were sheltered by St John *Chrysostom, Theophilus seized the opportunity to bring about his deposition at the Synod of the *Oak. The Copts and Syrians, who consider him a saint, celebrate his feast on 15 and 17 Oct. respectively.

Works ed. A. *Gallandi in Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 7 (1770), pp. 601–53, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 65. 29–68 and 401–4. Further letters, id., PL 22. 758–69, 773–90, 792–812, and 813–28. M. Richard, 'Une Homélie de Théophile d'Alexandrie sur l'institution de l'Eucharistie', RHE 33 (1937), pp. 46–56; id., 'Nouveaux fragments de Théophile d'Alexandrie', Nachr. (Gött.) (1975), pp. 55–65; both repr. in id., Opera Minora, 2 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1977), nos. 37 and 39. A. Favale, SDB, Teofilo d'Alessandria (345 c.–412): Scritti, vita e dottrina (Biblioteca del 'Salesianum', 41; 1958). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 112–34 (nos. 2580–2684). H. G. Opitz in PW, 2. Reihe, 5 (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 2149–65. R. Delobel and M. Richard in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 523–30, s.v., with further refs.

Theophylact (b. *c.*1050/60; d. after 1125), Byzantine exegete. A native of Euboea, he was a pupil of Michael *Psellus, and for a time tutor to Constantine Doukas, son of the former Emp. Michael VII. About 1090 he was made Abp. of Ohrid in the country of the Bulgarians; his letters suggest that their lack of civilization was a source of constant suffering to him. His principal work is a series of commentaries on several OT Books and on the whole of the NT except Rev. They are marked by lucidity of thought and expression and closely follow the scriptural text. At the same time they insist on practical morality in the manner of St John *Chrysostom, whom Theophylact took as a model. In matters of exegesis Theophylact was largely influenced by earlier writers such as the so-called '*Oecumenius', esp. in Acts and the Catholic Epistles, as well as by his contemporary, *Euthymius Zigabenus. In his turn he influenced *Erasmus. He adopted a conciliatory position in the matter of the Schism, defending in his Περὶ ὧν ἐγκαλοῦνται Λατῖνοι the Orthodox rejection of the Filioque*, the veneration of images, and also the use of unleavened *bread in the Eucharist. Among his other works are a formal address to Constantine when he was co-emperor (formerly, through a misunderstanding, known as the παιδεία βασιλική), a panegyric addressed to the Emp. Alexis Commenus, 15 poems, and almost certainly a biography of St Clement of Ohrid (one of the principal disciples of Sts *Cyril and Methodius; his authorship of this last work has, in the past, been disputed).

Works [ed. F. Foscari], 4 vols., Venice, 1754–63, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 123–6; prefaced by useful 'Dissertatio' by J. F. Bernard Maria de Rubeis, OP, repr. in PG 123. 9–130. Crit. edn., with Fr. tr. and introd., by P. Gautier, of his Orations, Treatises, and Poems (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, Series Thessalonicensis, 16/1; Thessalonica, 1980), and of his Letters (ibid. 16/2; 1986). D. Obolensky, Six Byzantine Portraits (Oxford, 1988), pp. 34–82. Beck (1959), pp. 649–51. R. Janin, AA, in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 536–8, s.v.; G. Podskalsky, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 542–6, s.v.

theosophy. The Greek term θεοσοφία, denoting knowledge of divine things (from θεός, 'God' or 'Divine being', + σοφία, 'wisdom') is found in magical papyri and was taken up by the *Neoplatonists. *Porphyry (De Abstinentia, 4. 17) associates it with Indian philosophy; this connection suggests that it could be understood to be the Greek equivalent of the Sanskrit brahmavidya (Divine knowledge). It is found in Christian Neoplatonists such as *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and John Scottus *Erigena, who introduced the term into Latin. It was revived in the 17th cent. in both Latin and vernacular forms to denote the kind of speculation, based on intuitive knowledge, which is found in the Jewish *Kabbala. It is often applied to the system of J. *Boehme (the 'Teutonic Theosopher').

In modern times the term has been used to denote the supposed hidden essence of all religions, and in this sense has been regarded as identical with Esoteric Buddhism. It is believed to be an empirical philosophy handed down by wise men of all cultures and religious traditions. It is held that knowledge of the truth, obtained by direct perception, results from the development of powers latent in all men, but fully realized only in the few who choose to fulfil strict conditions of discipline. Truth is one and indivisible; the patent similarities in different traditions and practices stem from their common origin in the Divine Wisdom. The primary tenet of theosophy is that all existence is a unity; the essence of everything, physical and spiritual, is one life. Manifestation, or the emanation of universes, is a periodic process, without beginning or end, involving an alternation of periods of activity and rest. Theosophists thus admit no ultimate distinction between man and the source of all being. They see the cosmic process as evolutionary, latent possibilities finding increasing expression through the kingdoms of nature. In man the process becomes self-conscious and is consummated in the Divine union of mysticism or the self-realization of yoga. Theosophical philosophy does not admit the existence of a personal God, personal immortality, or the validity of the Christian revelation.

The Theosophical Society (which exists to promote the principles of theosophy in the modern sense) was founded in New York in 1875 by Mme H. P. Blavatsky and Col. H. S. Olcott. They left the United States of America in 1878, arriving in Bombay in 1879; a few years later the headquarters of the Society were established at Adyar, near Madras. After the death of Col. Olcott in 1907, Mrs Annie Besant was elected President of the Society. It spread to Europe, Australia, and New Zealand before the end of the 19th cent. and now has adherents in many countries of the non-communist world. It is not a religion and has no creed; it is based on the recognition of the universal brotherhood of all mankind and advocates toleration of all differences.

Primary material on the modern Theosophical Movement includes H. P. Blavatsky, Isis Unveiled (New York, 1877); id., The Secret Doctrine (1888); id., The Key to Theosophy (1889); id., Collected Writings [excluding the major works] (Los Angeles, Wheaton, Ill., and more recently, Adyar, Madras, 1950 ff.); A. P. Sinnett, The Occult World (1881); id., Esoteric Buddhism (1883); The Mahatma Letters to A. P. Sinnett, ed. A. T. Baker (1923); G. A. Barborka, The Divine Plan written in the form of a commentary on H. P. Blavatsky's Secret Doctrine (Adyar, 1961); K. Prem [R. H. Nixon] and M. Ashish, Man, The Measure of All Things (1969); idd., Foundations of Esoteric Philosophy from the Writings of H. P. Blavatsky, arranged by I. H. Hoskins [1980]. Expositions by Theosophists include W. Q. Judge, The Ocean of Theosophy (New York, 1893); A. Besant, The Ancient Wisdom: An Outline of Theosophical Teachings (1897); W. Kingsland, The Real H. P. Blavatsky: A Study in Theosophy, and a Memoir of a Great Soul (1928); and J. O. Fuller, Blavatsky and her Teachers [1988]. Critical studies incl. R. Guénon, Le Théosophisme: Histoire d'une pseudo-religion (Bibliothèque Française de Philosophie; 1921); T. Mainage, OP, Les Principes de la théosophie: Étude critique (1922; Eng. tr., 1927); L. de Grandmaison, La Théosophie et l'anthroposophie (1939). A. Taylor, Annie Besant: A Biography (Oxford, 1992), pp. 222–332. P. Oltramare, L'Histoire des idées théosophiques dans l'Inde (Annales du Musée Guimet. Bibliothèque d'Études, 23 and 31; 1906–23). A. Besant in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 300–4, s.v. 'Theosophical Society'; P. Oltramare, ibid., pp. 304–15, s.v.; R. K. MacMaster in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 74 f.

theotokion (Gk. θεοτοκίον). In the E. Church, a stanza of liturgical hymnography referring to the BVM (*Theotokos). The concluding verse in a series of *troparia usually takes the form of a theotokion.

Theotokos (Gk. Θεοτόκος, Lat. Deipara), the 'one who gave birth to God', title of the BVM. The word was used of the Virgin by the Greek Fathers (perhaps by *Origen and possibly even by *Hippolytus) and increasingly became a popular term of devotion. In 429 it was attacked by *Nestorius and his supporters as incompatible with the full humanity of Christ, and the word 'Christotokos' proposed in its place. It found, however, a zealous champion in St *Cyril of Alexandria and was formally upheld at the Councils of *Ephesus (431) and *Chalcedon (451). Henceforward its orthodoxy was generally undisputed in the Church. In the W. the usual equivalent in practice was not Deipara, which corresponded to it etymologically, but Dei Genitrix ('Mother of God'), with its somewhat different emphasis.

J. H. *Newman, Select Treatises of St Athanasius (2nd edn., 1881), 2, pp. 204–15. F. J. Dölger in Antike und Christentum, 1 (1929), pp. 118–23 ['Zum Theotokos-Namen']; H. Rahner, SJ, 'Hippolyt von Rom als Zeuge für den Ausdruck Θεοτόκος', ZKT 59 (1935), pp. 73–81; cf. id., ibid., 60 (1936), pp. 577–90. M. Starowieyski, 'Le titre θεοτόκος avant le concile d'Ephèse', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 19 (Louvain, 1989), pp. 236–42. G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1961), pp. 639–41, s.v.

Therapeutae (Gk. θεραπευταί, 'physicians', 'devotees', hence 'those who worship God'), a pre-Christian monastic community of Egyptian Jewish ascetics. The only real authority for their practice and beliefs is *Philo's De Vita Contemplativa, where they are contrasted with the *Essenes, who lived a more active life. They were severe in their discipline, abjured money, and lived in seclusion near Alexandria and above Lake Mareotis. They prayed at sunrise and at sunset; devoted themselves assiduously to the allegorical study of the OT; and met together only for Sabbath-worship and during the great festival corresponding to Pentecost, when bands of men and women danced and sang throughout the night. Virtually nothing is known of their history. Their interest lies largely in their being an example of a pre-Christian monastic system. *Eusebius (HE 2. 17) mistakenly regarded them as a Christian sect.

F. C. *Conybeare (ed.), Philo: About the Contemplative Life, or the Fourth Book of the Treatise concerning Virtues (1895; text, with defence of its genuineness). The De Vita Contemplativa is also ed., with important introd. on the Therapeutae, by F. Daumas (Les Œuvres de Philon d'Alexandre, ed. R. Arnaldez and others, 29; 1963). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 591–7, with refs.

Theresa of Ávila, St. See TERESA OF ÁVILA, ST.

Thérèse of Lisieux, St. See TERESA OF LISIEUX, ST.

thermarion (Gk. θερμάριον). In the E. Church, a vessel for the warm water used in the Eucharistic rite for mixing with the species of wine after its consecration and in the washing of altars at their dedication.

Thessalonians, Epistles to the. The First Epistle was most probably written by St *Paul from Corinth on his first visit to the city (*c.*51) and is the earliest of his letters, unless it be argued that Gal. was written before it. A notable feature of this First Epistle, remarkable for the affectionate solicitude of the Apostle for his converts, is his desire to set their minds at rest on the fate of the dead members of the community. He assures them that, at the Second Coming of Christ, those who have died in the Lord will rise first and then, together with the living, be united to Christ; he declines, however, to make pronouncements on the time and circumstances of these events, except that the day of the Lord will come 'like a thief in the night' (5: 2), and he bids his readers watch and be sober.

The Second Epistle, apparently following shortly afterwards, was also occasioned by the eschatological preoccupations of the Thessalonians, many of whom had become over-excited by their belief in the immediately impending *Parousia and neglected their ordinary duties. Paul reminds them of his former teaching, according to which the apostasy and the 'Son of Perdition' (see ANTICHRIST) must come first, but teaches that there is still something or someone 'that restraineth' (2: 6, τὸ κατέχον; 2: 7, ὁ κατέχων). This has been very differently interpreted; the most widely accepted critical explanation regards the term as referring to the Roman Empire under Claudius, whereas in the more traditional view it applies to a supernatural power, such as e.g. St *Michael.

The authenticity of the First Epistle, once questioned by F. C. *Baur, is now generally accepted. That of the Second Epistle is still rejected by many scholars, despite its early attestation as one of Paul's letters by the time of St *Irenaeus and its place in the *Muratorian Canon as well as in *Marcion's collection. The chief objections are the differences in the eschatological teaching of the two Epp., at some points hard, if not impossible, to reconcile, and their different tone, particularly in view of the fact that, if both are genuine, they must have been written the one shortly after the other.

The more valuable patristic comm. incl. those of St John *Chrysostom (PG 62. 391–500); *Theodore of Mopsuestia (frags., ibid. 66. 931–6); *Theodoret (ibid. 82. 628–73) and *John of Damascus (ibid. 95. 905–29); further list in DTC, cited below. Modern comm. incl. those of J. *Calvin (Strasbourg, 1540; modern Eng. tr., 1961) and J. *Jewel (London, 1583); also those of M. *Dibelius (Hb. NT 3, pt. 2, 1911, with Philippians, pp. 1–43), J. E. Frame (ICC, 1912), A. Plummer (2 vols., London, 1918), B. Rigaux, OFM (Études Bibliques, 1956), C. Masson (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, 11a; Neuchâtel, 1957), L. Morris (New London Commentaries, 1959), A. L. Moore (New Cent. Bib., 1969), E. Best (Black's NT Comm., 1972), F. F. Bruce (Word Biblical Comm. 45; Waco, Tex., 1982), and on 1 Thess., T. Holtz (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar, 13; Zurich, 1986). F. C. Baur, Paulus, der Apostel Jesu Christi: Sein Leben und Wirken, seine Briefe und seine Lehre (1845), pp. 480–99 (Eng. tr., vol. 2, 1875, pp. 85–97). W. *Wrede, Die Echtheit des zweiten Thessalonicherbriefs (TU 24, Heft 2; 1903). C. H. Giblin, SJ, The Threat to Faith: An Exegetical and Theological Re-examination of 2 Thessalonians 2 (Analecta Biblica, 31; 1967). R. F. Collins, Studies on the First Letter to the Thessalonians (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 66; 1984). R. Jewett, The Thessalonian Correspondence: Pauline Rhetoric and Millenarian Piety (Philadelphia [1986]); A. J. Malherbe, Paul and the Thessalonians: The Philosophic Tradition of Pastoral Care (ibid. [1987]). D. Buzy and A. Burnot in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 573–610, s.v. 'Thessaloniciens (Épîtres aux)'.

Thessalonica. The city in Macedonia, now called Thessaloniki, but long known as Salonica, was founded *c.*315 BC by Cassander, perhaps on the site of the ancient Thermae, and called after his wife, Thessalonica (step-sister of Alexander the Great). Under the Romans it became the virtual capital of the province and an important centre of trade. In the first Civil War it was the headquarters of Pompey and the Senate. Its rulers were known as 'politarchs' (cf. Acts 17: 6). In AD 50 or 51 St *Paul visited the city, preached on three 'Sabbaths' in the synagogue, and founded the second Christian community in Europe, chiefly from the Greeks and proselytes (Acts 17), which was renowned for its orthodoxy and steadfastness in the succeeding period. (For his two letters to the *Thessalonians, see previous entry.) Their early martyrs included St Agape, with her sisters Chionia and Irene, St Agathopus, and St Demetrius (later the patron of the city). Acc. to *Origen (on Rom. 16: 23), the first Bp. of Thessalonica was Gaius (cf. 1 Cor. 1: 14, Acts 19: 29). In the late 4th or early 5th cent. the creation of a Papal Vicariate of Thessalonica enabled Rome to retain ecclesiastical control of Illyria, which had been transferred politically to the E. Empire. In 732 *Leo III, the Isaurian, made Thessalonica and all Illyrian sees dependent on the Patriarchate of *Constantinople.

Notable archbishops of later date included St Joseph, brother of St *Theodore of Studios, Basil of Achrida (1145–*c.*1169), Eustathius of Thessalonica (d. *c.*1193), St *Gregory Palamas, and St *Simeon of Thessalonica. From 1430 to 1912 Thessalonica was governed by the Turks, and many of its beautiful churches, which still preserve much of their old mosaic work, were turned into mosques. Since 1912 the city has again been Greek. It is the seat of a Greek Orthodox metropolitan. A Latin Vicariate Apostolic was established in 1926.

C. Diehl, M. Le Tournai, and H. Saladin, Les Monuments chrétiens de Salonique (Monuments de l'art byzantin, 4; text + vol. of plates, 1918); J.-M. Spieser, Thessalonique et ses Monuments du IVᵉ au VIᵉ Siècle (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 254; 1984). P. Lemerle, Les plus anciens recueils des miracles de Saint Démétrius et la pénétrations des Slavs dans les Balkans (2 vols., 1979–81; text and comm.). S. L. Greenslade, 'The Illyrian Churches and the Vicariate of Thessalonica, 378–95', JTS 46 (1945), pp. 17–30. R. Janin, AA, Les Églises et les Monastères des Grands Centres Byzantins (1975), pp. 341–419. A. E. Vacalopoulos, A History of Thessaloniki, tr. into Eng. by T. F. Carney (Thessalonica, 1963). E. Oberhummer in PW, 2te Reihe, 6 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 143–63; H. L. Hendrix in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 523–7, s.v.

Theudas. The leader of an unsuccessful insurrection, mentioned in a speech attributed to *Gamaliel in Acts 5: 36. The reference raises two difficulties: (1) Josephus (Ant. 25. 5. 1), the only other ancient writer to mention Theudas, describes an insurrection by a leader of this name in AD 45 or 46; this is considerably later than the time at which Gamaliel is represented as speaking. (2) The passage in Acts clearly states that Theudas raised his rebellion before the rebellion of Judas of Galilee, which was 'in the days of the taxing', i.e. AD 6 or 7. Biblical critics have sometimes explained this mistake as due to an inaccurate use by St Luke of the passage in Josephus which describes the execution of the sons of Judas of Galilee after the rebellion of Theudas. This hypothesis involves supposing that Acts was written after the publication of Josephus' Antiquities, c. AD 94, unless St Luke was following a source later used by Josephus.

M. Krenkel, Josephus und Lukas (1894), pp. 162–74. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 456 f., with refs. C. N. Jefford in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 527 f. See also comm. on Acts, cited s.v.

Thierry of Chartres (*c.*1100–*c.*1155), philosopher and teacher. A Breton by birth and a younger brother of *Bernard of Chartres, he was present at the Council of *Soissons (1121) which condemned one of Peter *Abelard's works. He made his name as a teacher in Paris *c.*1125–41, becoming Archdeacon of Dreux (in the diocese of *Chartres) *c.*1137 and Chancellor of Chartres prob. in 1141. He took part in the Papal examination of *Gilbert de la Porrée at *Reims in 1148. He is thought to have retired in his last years to a *Cistercian monastery.

Thierry is characterized by *John of Salisbury as 'a most devoted student of the liberal arts'. Of his logical and rhetorical teaching all that survives is commentaries on Cicero, De Inventione, and the anonymous Rhetorica ad Herennium; he also expounded (with some distaste) the newly recovered Topics of *Aristotle. Thierry's most original work was in the application of the liberal arts to Christian doctrine. His analysis of the Opuscula Sacra of *Boethius circulated in several versions as a more conservative, and perhaps less difficult, interpretation of the *Trinity than that proposed by Gilbert de la Porrée (q.v.). For Thierry the doctrine of the Trinity might be deduced from a consideration of the unity, the Father, which leads to equality, the Son, and thence to the bond between the two, the Holy Spirit. The treatise De Sex Dierum Operibus (On the Six Days of Creation) is a bold interpretation of Gen. 1 in the light of his study of *Plato and Aristotle. He assigned the four Aristotelian causes to the Persons of the Trinity, the Father being the efficient cause, the Son the formal, and the Holy Spirit the final cause, whereas divinely created matter was the material cause. The range of Thierry's learning is illustrated in his prologue to the 'Heptateuchon', a compendium of major texts of the seven liberal arts. Bernard Sylvestris' Cosmographia and a Latin translation from Arabic of Ptolemy's Planisphere (1143) were both dedicated to Thierry.

His comm. on Cicero's De Inventione and on Ad Herennium, ed. K. M. Fredborg, The Latin Rherotical Commentaries by Thierry of Chartres (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 84; Toronto, 1988); his exposition of the Opuscula Sacra, ed. N. H. Häring, Commentaries on Boethius by Thierry of Chartres and his School (ibid. 20; Toronto, 1971), with his treatise De sex dierum operibus in the same vol., pp. 553–75. His prologue to the 'Heptateuchon' ed. E. Jeauneau in Mediaeval Studies, 16 (1954), pp. 171–5, repr. in his 'Lectio Philosophorum': Recherches sur l'École de Chartres (Amsterdam, 1973), pp. 87–91, with other material on Thierry, pp. 75–86 and 93–9. For Thierry's career see N. [M.] Häring, 'Chartres and Paris revisited', in J. R. O'Donnell (ed.), Essays in honour of Anton Charles Pegis (Toronto, 1974), pp. 268–329, esp. pp. 279–94. For the Councils of Soissons and Reims respectively, see Abelard, Historia Calamitatum (J. P. Migne, PL 178. 150 B) and J. Leclercq, OSB, 'Textes sur Saint Bernard et Gilbert de la Porrée', Mediaeval Studies, 14 (1952), pp. 107–11. John of Salisbury, Metalogicon, 1. 5; 2. 10; and 4. 24. A. Vernet, 'Une Épitaphe inédite de Thierry de Chartres', in Recueil de travaux offert à M. Clovis Brunel, 2 (Mémoires et Documents publiés par la Société de l'École des Chartes, 12; 1955), pp. 660–70. R. W. Southern and S. Gersh in R. L. Benson and G. Constable (eds.), Renaissance and Renewal in the Twelfth Century (Oxford, 1982), pp. 129–33 and 512–34; see also index; [E.] P. [M.] Dronke in id. (ed.), A History of Twelfth-Century Western Philosophy (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 358–85, with biographical bibl., p. 455. Manitius, 3, pp. 198–202.

Third Orders. Religious organizations affiliated usually to one of the *Mendicant Orders. They are so called to distinguish them from the First and Second Orders, now normally of professed men and women respectively. Their origins lie in the practice, which developed in the 12th cent., of voluntarily adopting the status of *penitent. In 1175 *Alexander III made it possible for married men and women to be associated with the religious life by declaring that obedience, not continence, was essential. In the 13th cent. various attempts were made to clarify the canonical position of these penitents and gather them into regular institutions, with proper statutes governing their way of life. Though they lived in their own homes, the penitents wore distinctive dress and benefited from some of the same privileges as religious. The seculars associated with the *Humiliati were formed into a 'Third Order' (in this case to distinguish them from the First Order of Clerics and the Second Order of enclosed men and enclosed women). Later many penitents attached themselves to the *Franciscans and *Dominicans. St *Francis of Assisi, who began his religious life as a penitent, contributed greatly to the penance movement, and was later regarded as having 'founded' the Order of Penance, which in fact existed before his time. In 1284 the Master of the Dominican Order, Munio of Zamora, established a Dominican Order of Penance subject to his own jurisdiction; shortly afterwards the Franciscans were given official responsibility for the groups of penitents under their care, and these penitents began to be known as the Third Order of St Francis. In the late 13th cent. informal communities of men and women, including some of the Beghards and *Beguines, established houses and began to attach themselves to the Mendicants. In the 15th cent. some of these communities began to take religious vows. From these developed the Third Orders Regular, which proliferated in the 19th cent. Their members are sometimes known as Regular Tertiaries. Some of the women's houses are strictly enclosed. They are all formally regarded as *religious and, despite some differences, their life is broadly similar to that of the First or Second Orders of their respective societies.

Members of Third Orders who do not take religious vows are now known as Secular Tertiaries. Modern RC canon law describes these Secular Third Orders as 'associations whose members lead an apostolic life and strive for Christian perfection while living in the world and who share in the spirit of some religious institute under the higher direction of that same institute' (CIC (1983), can. 303). The most important are the Franciscan, Dominican (technically known as Lay Fraternities and Fraternities of Priests), and the *Carmelite ones. Each Secular Third Order has its own rules, and its aims vary according to the spirit of the Order to which it is attached. Members usually have to make a novitiate, observe a rule and say certain prescribed prayers. Though they do not take religious vows, they usually make a promise, and they normally enjoy some of the spiritual privileges of the professed religious.

G. G. Meersseman, OP, Dossier de l'Ordre de la Pénitence au XIII^e siècle (Spicilegium Friburgense, 7; 1961; 2nd edn., 1982).

Third Rome. A title given esp. by Russian Christians to Moscow in the belief that the privileges which formerly belonged to *Rome and *Constantinople (the 'New Rome') had been committed to the city. The first instance of its use appears to be in a letter of the monk Philotheus to the Grand Duke Basil III (1505–33).

Thirlby, Thomas (1506?–70), successively Bp. of *Westminster (1540), *Norwich (1550), and *Ely (1554). A Cambridge man who was favoured by T. *Cranmer, he became a chaplain to *Henry VIII, and first and only bishop of the new see of Westminster (suppressed 1550). In 1549 he spoke against the First Prayer Book of *Edward VI and the Act of *Uniformity, but accepted them when passed, despite his strong Catholic sympathies. He was naturally in high favour under *Mary, but under *Elizabeth I refused the Oath of Supremacy and was deposed and afterwards imprisoned.

T. F. Shirley, Thomas Thirlby, Tudor Bishop (CHS, 1964). T. Cooper in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 135–8, s.v., with refs.

Thirlwall, Connop (1797–1875), historian and Bp. of *St Davids. After a very precocious childhood he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1818. After studying law in Lincoln's Inn he entered on an ecclesiastical career, and in 1828 was ordained priest. In 1832 he was appointed assistant tutor at Trinity College, but in 1834 he was compelled to resign owing to his denunciation of compulsory attendance at chapel in the course of the controversy over the admission of Dissenters to the universities. In the same year he was offered the living of Kirby Underdale, Humberside, where he began his chief work, the History of Greece (8 vols., 1835–44). In 1840 Lord Melbourne appointed him Bp. of St Davids. He learned Welsh, restored Church life in his diocese, and took part in all the ecclesiastical questions of the day in a liberal and unbiased spirit. He supported the grant to *Maynooth (1845) and the removal of the civil disabilities of the Jews (1848), and urged the disestablishment of the Irish Church (1869). He and A. C. *Tait were the only bishops in the C of E who refused to issue an interdict against Bp. J. W. *Colenso preaching in their dioceses when such a ban was organized in 1868. His important 'Charges', delivered between 1842 and 1872 (pub. in Remains Literary and Theological, 3 vols., 1877–8), deal with these and other subjects such as the question of Essays and Reviews*, the *Ritualist controversy, and the First *Vatican Council.

Thirlwall's Letters, Literary and Theological, ed. J. J. S. Perowne and L. Stokes (London, 1881); his Letters to a Friend [now identified as Miss Betha Johnes], ed. A. P. *Stanley (ibid., 1881). Excellent obituary notice [by E. H. Plumptre] in Edinburgh Review, 143 (1876), pp. 281–316. Life by J. C. Thirlwall (great-great-great-nephew) (London, 1936). G. Rees, 'Connop Thirlwall: Liberal Anglican', Journal of the Historical Society of the Church in Wales, 14 (1964), pp. 66–76. J. W. Clark in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 138–41.

Thirteen Articles (1538). A MS in Latin entitled A Book containing Divers Articles de Unitate Dei et Trinitate Personarum, de Peccato Originali, etc. which was discovered among some papers that belonged to Abp. T. *Cranmer. It appears to have been drawn up as a basis for negotiations, or was perhaps a record of doctrines actually agreed upon, between a small body of conservative *Lutheran divines, invited to England by *Henry VIII in 1538, and an English committee of three bishops and four doctors. The articles were closely modelled upon the *Augsburg Confession.

Text in C. Hardwick, A History of the Articles of Religion (1851), pp. 251–63, with discussion, pp. 60–73. Eng. tr. of text in N. S. Tjernagel, Henry VIII and the Lutherans: A Study in Anglo-Lutheran Relations from 1521 to 1547 (St Louis, 1965), pp. 287–306, with discussion, pp. 184–9. See also bibl. to CRANMER, T.

Thirty-Nine Articles. The set of doctrinal formulae finally accepted by the C of E in its attempt to define its dogmatic position in relation to the controversies of the 16th cent. The earlier stages were the *Ten Articles (1536), the *Bishops' Book (1537), the *Six Articles (1539), the *King's Book (1543), and the *Forty-Two Articles (1553). In 1563 *Convocation, by slightly revising the last named, issued the first text of the Thirty-Nine Articles. But, before they were printed, no. 29 ('Of the Wicked which eat not the Body of Christ') was excised, probably in a move to facilitate diplomatic negotiations with the *Lutheran princes of Germany, and a preamble to no. 20, asserting the authority of the Church to decree rites and ceremonies, was added. Both alterations may have been due to personal intervention by *Elizabeth I. In 1571 no. 29 was restored. In their final form the Articles gained synodical approval through Convocation.

The Thirty-Nine Articles are not a statement of Christian doctrine in the form of a creed, nor the exposition of a creed already accepted. They are, rather, short summaries of dogmatic tenets, each article dealing with some point raised in current controversies and laying down in general terms the Anglican view. Though not ostensibly vague, they avoid unduly narrow definition. Much variety of interpretation has been put upon many of them without improperly straining the text, and probably this licence was deliberately intended by their framers. They seek esp. to define the Anglican position with regard to medieval corruptions of Catholic teaching, to orthodox RC doctrine, to *Calvinism, and to *Anabaptist teachings. Among typical points it may be noticed that Art. 28 excludes both *transubstantiation (in the sense in which it is there defined) and *Zwinglian Eucharistic doctrine, but can be interpreted in terms either of a doctrine of the *Real Presence or of *receptionism. Art. 6 declares that 'Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation'; the Creeds are to be accepted because they may be proved by Scripture (Art. 8); and General Councils are declared to be not of themselves infallible (Art. 21). Predestination is discussed in Art. 17, the masterly ambiguity of which is seen when it is compared with other professions of faith such as the Presbyterian *Westminster Confession (1647). The position of the Sovereign and civil power in relation to the Church is set out in the concluding Articles.

Subscription to the Articles has never been required of any but the clergy and, until the 19th cent., members of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. From 1865 the clergy were required only to affirm that the doctrine of the C of E as set forth in the BCP and the Articles was agreeable to the Word of God, and to undertake not to teach in contradiction of them, instead of giving a more particular subscription as before. Since 1975 they have been required simply to acknowledge the Thirty-Nine Articles as one of the historic formularies of the C of E which bear witness to the faith revealed in Scripture and set forth in the catholic creeds (Can. C 15). See also CLERICAL SUBSCRIPTION ACT.

E. C. S. Gibson, The Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1896–7); B. J. Kidd, The Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1899). E. J. Bicknell, A Theological Introduction to the Thirty-Nine Articles (1919; 3rd edn. by H. J. Carpenter, 1955; chiefly of doctrinal interest). W. P. Haugaard, Elizabeth and the English Reformation (Cambridge, 1968), pp. 62–7 and 233–90, passim. H. Horie, 'The Lutheran Influence on the Elizabethan Settlement, 1558–1653', Historical Journal, 34 (1991), pp. 519–37. For *Tractarian views on the Articles, J. H. *Newman, Tract 90 (1841), and A. P. *Forbes, The Thirty-Nine Articles (1867).

Thirty Years War (1618–48). The series of religious and political wars fought out in Central Europe in the 17th cent. Foremost among its manifold causes were the decay of the *Holy Roman Empire and the continued religious unrest after the Peace of *Augsburg in 1555. The war began with the revolt of the Bohemians against the Emperor, and the '*Defenestration of Prague'. The first part of the war (1618–23) was carried on chiefly in Bohemia and the Palatinate. The Bohemians, who had set up Frederick V of the Palatinate, the so-called 'Winter King', in opposition to Emp. *Ferdinand II, were defeated in the Battle at the White Hill (1620) by the armies of the Catholic League under the Imperial general, Tilly, and Maximilian of Bavaria. Frederick was put to the ban of the Empire, Maximilian conquered the Upper Palatinate, and this stage of the war ended with the capture of the Calvinistic stronghold of Heidelberg by Tilly (1622) and the restoration of Catholicism in the conquered territories.

War broke out anew in 1623. Shifting to Lower Saxony, it was conducted with Dutch and English support, with Wallenstein as the chief leader on the Imperial side. After his victory, in 1626, over Ernest of Mansfeld, and Christian IV of Denmark's defeat at the hands of Tilly (1626), the Peace of Lübeck was concluded in 1629. In the same year the Emperor issued the Edict of Restitution which ordered the restoration of all ecclesiastical property unlawfully appropriated by the Protestants since 1552. Its strict execution roused much opposition among the Protestants, while many Catholics were alienated from the Emperor by the extravagances of Wallenstein's army. In 1630 Wallenstein himself was dismissed.

The third stage of the war, which now became a European conflict, began with the landing of *Gustavus Adolphus in Pomerania in 1630. Encouraged by Cardinal A. J. du P. *Richelieu, whose anti-Habsburg policy led him to support all opponents of the Imperial power at Vienna, the Swedish invasion was a mainly political adventure, though it incidentally saved German Protestantism. In 1631 Tilly conquered Magdeburg, but he was defeated in the same year at Breitenfeld and killed in 1632. Wallenstein, who had been recalled by the Emperor, was defeated in the battle at Lützen, but Gustavus Adolphus himself was killed (1632). The next two years were taken up with negotiations, while the Protestant leader, Bernard of Weimar, took Ratisbon and laid waste Bavaria without opposition from Wallenstein, who was murdered in 1634. In the same year Imperial and Bavarian troops gained a decisive victory at Nördlingen, which led to the treaty of Prague (1635) between the Emperor and the majority of the Protestant estates.

The Swedes, however, continuing to resist, were now openly joined by France and the war entered on its final and most violent stage (1635–48). After years of fighting with varying success in E. and W. Germany, the French position became increasingly advantageous, esp. owing to the weakening of Spain by internal discord. The demand for peace in Germany grew increasingly insistent and in 1644 negotiations were opened with the French at Münster and with Sweden at Osnabrück, and the Peace of *Westphalia (q.v.) was at last concluded in 1648. As a result the ecclesiastical state of the Empire as it was in 1624 was restored, except for the secularization—a term then used for the first time—of a considerable part of ecclesiastical property, which was distributed among the several powers as compensation for their participation in the war. The decrees of the Religious Peace of Augsburg were reinforced and extended to the *Calvinists, and Catholics and Protestants given equal political rights.

Among the chief effects of the Thirty Years War was an enormous strengthening of the power of France. The corresponding weakening of Germany and Spain hastened the final breaking-up of the Empire and decided the future of Europe in succeeding centuries. The religious, moral, and economic anarchy which it produced in Central Europe had the same far-reaching consequences, and accounts for much in the subsequent religious and social developments on the Continent.

Important docs. pr. in the collections of Briefe und Acten zur Geschichte des Dreissigjährigen Krieges . . . herausgegeben durch die histor. Commission bei der Königl. (later Bayerischen) Academie der Wissenschaften (11 vols., Munich, 1870–1909; NF, 1966 ff.), and Documenta Bohemica Bellum Tricennale Illustrantia, ed. J. [V.] Polišenský and others (7 vols., Prague, 1971–81; Eng. tr. of vol. 1 as War and Society in Europe, 1618–1648, Cambridge, 1978). Classic studies incl. A. Gindely, Geschichte des Dreissigjährigen Krieges (4 vols., 1869–80); also a shorter study by the same author with the same title (Das Wissen der Gegenwart, 1, 3, 5; 1882; Eng. tr., 2 vols., New York, 1884; London, 1885); S. R. Gardiner, The Thirty Years War (Epochs of Modern History, 1874); A. W. Ward in CMH 4 (1906), pp. 1–255 and 364–433, with bibl. to date, pp. 801–72, incl. good discussion of sources; M. Ritter, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Gegenreformation und des Dreissigjährigen Krieges (1555–1648), 3 (1908); C. V. Wedgwood, The Thirty Years War (1938); G. Pagès, La Guerre de Trente Ans (1939; Eng. tr., 1970); G. Franz, Der Dreissigjährige Krieg und das deutsche Volk (1940; 3rd edn., 1961). Recent accounts incl. J. V. Polišenský, The Thirty Years War (Eng. tr., 1971, of orig. Czech pub. at Prague in 1970); H. Langer, Hortus Bellicus (Leipzig, 1978; Eng. tr., The Thirty Years' War, Poole, Dorset, 1980 [mainly cultural]); R. Bireley, SJ, Religion and Politics in the Age of the Counterreformation: Emperor Ferdinand II, William Lamormaini, S.J., and the Formation of Imperial Policy (Chapel Hill, NC [1981]); G. Parker [and others], The Thirty Years' War (1984), with excellent bibl.; K. Repgen (ed.), Krieg und Politik 1618–1648: Europäische Probleme und Perspektiven (Schriften des Historischen Kollegs, Kolloquien 8; Munich, 1988). See also bibl. to WESTPHALIA, PEACE OF.

Tholuck, Friedrich August Gottreu (1799–1877), German Protestant theologian. He was educated at Breslau and Berlin, where he studied esp. oriental languages, but under the influence of *Pietist friends and J. A. W. *Neander he turned to theology. From 1820 to 1826 he lectured at Berlin and in 1826 became professor at Halle University, where he remained to his death, except for a short appointment as embassy chaplain at Rome from 1827 to 1829. In 1823 appeared his influential work Die Lehre von der Sünde und dem Versöhner, oder die wahre Weihe des Zweiflers, which was widely translated and did much to check the spread of Rationalism in Germany. It was followed by a commentary on Romans (1824), a collection of the writings of oriental mystics (Blütensammlung aus der morgenländischen Mystik, 1825), and further commentaries on St John (1827), the Sermon on the Mount (1833), and Hebrews (1836), which are written from a moralist and apologetic rather than an exegetical point of view. His other works include the devotional Stunden christlicher Andacht (1839), Die Propheten und ihre Weissagungen (1861), and a history of Rationalism (1865). Tholuck, who through his pastoral work among the students exercised a profound influence on his contemporaries, was a representative of the '*Vermittlungstheologie' (q.v.), combining personal piety with far-reaching disregard of dogma. Despite their theological divergences, he was a lifelong friend of E. B. *Pusey, who had become acquainted with Tholuck in 1825, and whose first work, The Theology of Germany (1828), is largely based on Tholuck's ideas.

Gesammelte Werke (11 vols., Gotha, 1862–73). Life by L. Witte (2 vols., Bielefeld and Leipzig, 1884–6). M. Schellbach, Tholucks Predigt: Ihre Grundlage und ihre Bedeutung für die heutige Praxis (Theologische Arbeiten, 3; 1956). K. Toiviainen, August Tholuckin Teologinen Antropologia (Suomalaisen Teologisen Kirjallisuusseuran Julkaisuja, 80; Helsinki, 1968), with summary in Ger. J. [W.] Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in the Nineteenth Century: England and Germany (1984), pp. 83–5. M. Kähler in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 695–702.

Thomas, St, Apostle. He is mentioned as one of the Twelve in all four Gospels. In St John, where his name is translated as Δίδυμος (Gk., 'twin'), he appears in three episodes, namely offering to die with Jesus on His way to Bethany (Jn. 11: 16), interrupting the last discourse with his question 'We know not whither thou goest, how know we the way?' (14: 5), and, lastly, doubting the Resurrection unless he were to touch the wounds of the Risen Lord (20: 25–8). After Christ's appearance he confesses his faith in the words 'My Lord and my God' and is thus the first to confess explicitly His Divinity. Acc. to an early tradition mentioned by *Eusebius (HE 3. 1) and others, he evangelized the Parthians, whereas another tradition, derived from the Gnostic 'Acts of *Thomas' (where he is called 'Judas Thomas', as generally by the Syrians), asserts that he brought the Gospel to *India, where he was martyred. The Syrian Christians of *Malabar, who call themselves 'Christians of St Thomas', have a tradition which they strongly defend that they were evangelized by the Apostle, who later was martyred and buried at Mylapore, nr. Madras. The 'Thomas Cross', an ancient stone cross (6th–8th cent.) with a problematical inscription, is preserved in the church which marks the place where his body is held to have rested before its translation to *Edessa in the 4th cent. His relics are now supposed to be at Ortona in the Abruzzi, where they are still venerated. In the *Roman Martyrology the place where he died is given as Calamina. As yet it has not been identified, but it has sometimes been connected with Mylapore. Feast day: 3 July in the RC Church, the ASB, and the Syrian Church; 21 Dec. in the BCP and some modern Anglican rites (and formerly in the RC Church); 6 Oct. in the Greek Church.

For the several apocryphal writings that have circulated under his name, see the following entries.

For discussions of the evidence in the NT, see comm. on the Gospels. For later traditions, see bibl. to THOMAS, ACTS OF.

Thomas, Acts of (Περίοδοι Θωμᾶ). An apocryphal book of great length which recounts in 13 'Acts' the missionary activities of the Apostle Thomas ('Judas Thomas'). It tells how Gundaphorus, one of the kings of India, wishing for a magnificent palace, sent his merchant Abbanes to Syria to obtain a skilled architect. At *Jerusalem Abbanes met Jesus, the carpenter's son, who recommended to him His 'slave', Thomas, and Thomas agreed to go back with him to Syria. Thomas gave away to the poor the large sums of money with which Gundaphorus provided him, and soon convinced him that his money was being used to build a far nobler palace in heaven than the earthly building for which it had been intended. Gundaphorus and many others were thereupon converted. After further missionary work, accompanied by healing miracles, in the neighbouring lands of King Misdaeus, Thomas was persecuted for his success in persuading Mygdonia to cease marriage relationships with her husband, Charisius, and finally was pierced with spears. The Apostle's bones were taken back shortly afterwards to Mesopotamia. Contained in the 'Acts' are two hymns, the 'Hymn on the Daughter of Light' (6–7; sometimes called an 'Ode to Sophia') and the famous Hymn to the Redeemer (108–13; now usually known as the 'Hymn of the Pearl' but formerly sometimes called the 'Hymn of the Soul'), and two hymnic invocations relating to Baptism (27) and the Eucharist (50).

The work, which was in origin a *Gnostic composition and apparently written before the middle of the 3rd cent., survives in several Syriac and Greek MSS. The complicated relation of the Syriac and Greek texts is held by most scholars to point to a Syriac original. Parts of the Acts survive also in Latin and Ethiopic; and there exists also an Armenian version. It would appear that from the surviving texts most of the Gnostic elements have been removed to make the work acceptable to Catholic readers, though its origin is betrayed, e.g., by its continual depreciation of marriage.

Syriac text ed. W. Wright, Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles (1871), 1, pp. 171–333; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 146–298; Eng. tr. of older frags. by Mrs A. S. Lewis, The Mythological Acts of the Apostles (Horae Semiticae, 4; 1904), pp. 223–41. Further Eng. tr., based on that of Wright, with introd. and comm., by A. F. J. Klijn (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 5; 1962). Best edn. of the Gk. text in R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet, Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, 2 (pt. 2; Leipzig, 1903), pp. 99–291. Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 439–511. Ger. tr., with introd., by H. J. W. Drijvers in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1989), 2, pp. 289–367; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 322–411. Lat. text ed. K. Zelzer, Die alten lateinischen Thomasakten (TU 122; 1977). P.-H. Poirier, L'Hymne de la Perle des Actes de Thomas: Introduction, texte, traduction, commentaire (Louvain, 1981). F. C. *Burkitt, 'The Original Language of the Acts of Judas Thomas', JTS 1 (1900), pp. 280–90; id., 'Another Indication of the Syriac Origin of the Acts of Thomas', ibid. 3 (1902), pp. 94–6. G. E. Medlycott, India and the Apostle Thomas: An Inquiry, with a Critical Analysis of the Acta Thomae (1905), pp. 213–97. F. Wilhelm, Deutsche Legenden und Legendare: Texte und Untersuchungen zu ihrer Geschichte im Mittelalter (1907). J. Dahlmann, SJ, Die Thomas-Legende und die ältesten historischen Beziehungen des Christentums zum fernen Osten im Lichte der indischen Altertumskunde (Stimmen aus Maria Laach, Ergänzungsheft, 107; 1912). J. N. Farquhar, 'The Apostle Thomas in North India', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 10 (1926), pp. 80–111; id., 'The Apostle Thomas in South India', ibid. 11 (1927), pp. 20–50. G. Bornkamm, Mythos und Legende in den apokryphen Thomas-Akten (1933). R. H. *Connolly, 'A Negative Golden Rule in the Syriac Acts of Thomas', JTS 36 (1935), pp. 353–7. A. Dihle, 'Neues zur Thomas-Tradition', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 6 (1963), pp. 54–70. Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 579–84; J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 139 f., with bibl.; I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 37–41. H. W. Attridge in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 531–4.

Thomas, Apocalypse of. An apocryphal eschatological treatise, probably written by a *Manichaean at the end of the 4th cent. and referred to in the *Gelasian Decree. It had long been lost, but two recensions, both in Latin, were rediscovered in a number of MSS early in the 20th cent. The shorter, edited by P. Bihlmeyer in 1911 on the basis of MS Monacensis Clm 4563, is probably the original. There are signs of its influence in Anglo-Saxon and Irish texts.

P. Bihlmeyer, OSB, 'Un Texte non interpolé de l'Apocalypse de Thomas', R. Bén. 28 (1911), pp. 270–82, incl. text. It was also ed. by M. Förster from two Anglo-Saxon revisions of the text in 'Der Vercelli-Codex CXVII nebst Abdruck einiger altenglischer Homilien der Handschrift', in Festgabe für Lorenz Morsbach (Studien zur englischen Philologie, 50; 1913), pp. 20–179; this text being pr. pp. 116–37. A reconstructed text is the basis of the trs. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 645–51. Ger. tr. of the shorter text, with introd. by A. de Santos Otero in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1989), 2, pp. 675–9; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 748–52. M. McNamara, MSC, The Apocrypha in the Irish Church (Dublin, 1975), pp. 119–21.

Thomas, Book of. One of the Coptic documents discovered at *Nag Hammadi in 1945–6, sometimes known from its subscript title as the 'Book of Thomas the Contender' (a designation not apparently given elsewhere to St *Thomas). It professes to contain the 'secret words' spoken by Jesus to Judas Thomas and written down by St *Matthias (or perhaps St *Matthew). Its main themes are ethics and eschatology, and it is strongly ascetic in character. It was probably written in Syria, the homeland of the traditions about Thomas, and its original language was probably Greek.

Text ed., with Ger. tr., M. Krause and P. Labib, Gnostische und hermetische Schriften aus Codex II und Codex VI (Abhandlungen des Deutschen Archäologischen Instituts Kairo, Koptische Reihe, 2; Glückstadt, 1971), pp. 88–106; also, with Eng. tr., by J. D. Turner, The Book of Thomas the Contender (Society of Biblical Literature, Dissertation Series, 23; Missoula, Mont. [1975]), and by B. Layton, Nag Hammadi Codex II, 2 7 (Nag Hammadi Studies, 21; 1989), pp. 173–205, incl. Eng. tr. by J. D. Turner. Turner's tr. also in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 199–207. Further edn. of text, with Ger. tr. and comm. by H.-M. Schenke (TU 138; 1989). Id., in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1987), 1, pp. 192–204; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 232–47.

Thomas, Gospel of. An apocryphal Gospel, originally written in Greek, of which a *Coptic version was discovered among the papyri found at *Nag Hammadi in 1945–6; it is now in the Coptic Museum at Cairo. The Greek original perhaps dates from *c.*150, the Coptic, which contains some additions, from *c.*350. In its heading, the Gospel professes to have been written down by 'Didymus Judas Thomas'. It is not, like the canonical Gospels, historical in form, but consists of a series of pithy sayings and parabolic discourses of Jesus. Some of its 114 items have points of contact with sayings in Mt. and Lk.; where parallels exist the sayings in Thomas often appear to be secondary, but it has been thought possible that it may preserve a few words of Christ not found in the canonical Gospels which ultimately go back to genuine tradition. The Greek *Oxyrhynchus papyri, nos. 1, 654, and 655, preserve fragments of a Greek text which agrees closely, though not exactly, with the Coptic version of the Gospel of Thomas found at Nag Hammadi. The work is apparently of *Gnostic provenance.

Coptic text ed., with Eng. tr., by A. Guillaumont and others (London, 1959); also by B. Layton, Nag Hammadi Codex II, 2–7 (Nag Hammadi Studies, 20; Leiden, 1989), pp. 38–93, incl. introd. by H. Koester and Eng. tr. by T. O. Lambdin; Oxyrhynchus frags. ed. H. W. Attridge, pp. 96–128, incl. introd. and patristic testimonia. Eng. tr., with brief introd., also in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 124–38; and in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 123–47. G. Quispel, 'The Gospel of Thomas and the New Testament', VC 11 (1957), pp. 189–207, repr., with other relevant arts., id., Gnostic Studies, 2 (Istanbul, 1975), pp. 3–112. R. McL. Wilson, Studies in the Gospel of Thomas (1960); B. Gärtner, The Theology of the Gospel of Thomas (1961); G. Quispel, Makarius, das Thomasevangelium und das Lied von der Perle (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 15; 1967). B. Blatz in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1987), 1, pp. 93–113; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 110–33. Useful introd. and extensive bibl. in the Sp. tr. of the text by A. de Santos Otero, Los Evangelios Apócrifos (6th edn., 1988), pp. 678–705. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 76 f. (no. 1181). R. Cameron in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 535–40, s.v.

Thomas, Infancy Gospel of. An apocryphal writing extant in two Greek recensions as well as in Armenian, Ethiopic, Georgian, Latin, Syriac, and Slavonic versions (the last being esp. important). It is prob. not the work mentioned by St *Hippolytus (Ref. 5. 7) and *Origen (Hom. 1 in Luc.). It professes to record miracles performed by Christ in His childhood (in Greek text A between the ages of 5 and 12; other versions vary considerably). The alleged miracles are primarily displays of power, often without theological point or moral justification, so that the Lord appears callous and irresponsible. They are probably drawn from folk-tales; one incident was reproduced by *Marcosian Gnostics (*Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1. 20. 1) but appears also in the Testament of Our Lord in Galilee* (4) and so gives no certain clue to the date of the work.

The two Gk. texts and the Lat. version ed. C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1853), pp. 134–70; 2nd edn. (1876), pp. 140–80; Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 68–83. See also Schneemelcher, cited below. Ger. tr. of Gk. text A, with some other matter, and introd. by O. *Cullmann, in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1987), 1, pp. 349–60; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 439–53. Syriac text ed., with Eng. tr., by W. Wright, Contributions to the Apocryphal Literature of the New Testament (1865), pp. 1–16 of the Syriac; Eng. tr., pp. 6–11. Gk. text also ed., with Fr. tr., by C. Michel and P. Peeters, SJ (eds.), Évangiles apocryphes, 1 (Textes et Documents pour l'Étude du Christianisme; 1911), pp. 162–189, with introd., pp. xxiii–xxxii; Fr. tr. of Lat. and Syriac texts ibid. 2 (1914), pp. 290–311. A. de Santos Otero, Das Kirchenslavischen Evangelium des Thomas (Patristische Texte und Studien, 6; 1967). P. A. Mirecki in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 540–4, s.v.

Thomas Aquinas, St (*c.*1225–74), also 'Doctor Communis' and 'Doctor Angelicus', *Dominican philosopher and theologian. Born at Roccasecca, near Aquino, in the kingdom of Naples, Thomas was the youngest son of Landolfo d'Aquino, the head of a large and aristocratic family. At the age of 5 he was given to the *Benedictine abbey of *Monte Cassino, in the expectation that he would eventually become abbot. When the troops of *Frederick II occupied the abbey in 1239, Thomas was sent to the University of Naples; here he was attracted to the newly founded Dominican Order. After his reception into the Order, he was sent to *Paris, so that he might be out of reach of his powerful family's opposition; on his way there he was seized by an armed party north of Rome (Mar./Apr. 1244) and confined in the family castle for nearly two years. On his release he began his theological studies in the Dominican priory of St-Jacques in the University of Paris. Here he came under the influence of St *Albertus Magnus, with whom he continued his studies at *Cologne (1248–51). After his return to Paris, he lectured, as cursor biblicus, on Isaiah and Jeremiah, and then as bachelor, on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard. His De Ente et Essentia (against *Avicebron) dates from this period. In 1256 he wrote the Contra Impugnantes Dei Cultus defending the *mendicant orders against the attacks of the secular doctors, notably against William of St-Amour's De Periculis Novissorum Temporum. In July 1256 Thomas became a Master of Theology and for the next three years served as a Regent Master of St-Jacques. His Quaestiones Disputatae de Veritate derive from this teaching activity. Just before he left Paris, Thomas began composing the Summa contra Gentiles, a treatise apparently designed for the use of Dominican missionaries in their dealings with non-Christians.

Thomas returned to Italy in 1259 and served as lector in various Dominican houses, but his exact movements are not clear. Prob. by 1261 he was in Orvieto, where he produced several works at the request of Pope Urban IV. He examined a collection of Greek patristic writings (some of them forged) which purported to support W. doctrinal teaching, and replied cautiously in Contra Errores Graecorum. In the Catena Aurea, a continuous gloss on the Gospels compiled from patristic sources, he included various previously unknown Greek texts which were to influence his own theology profoundly. He composed a liturgy for the feast of *Corpus Christi which Urban intended to institute throughout Latin Christendom (his authorship of these texts has been disputed but is now increasingly accepted). While at Orvieto he also wrote a literal exposition of Job. In 1265 he was sent to Rome to direct a Dominican studium at Santa Sabina. Here he began the Summa Theologiae*, originally designed as a handbook for friars not bound for university study. Throughout his time in Italy he held regular disputations, incl. those on power, on evil, and on spiritual creatures.

In 1268 Thomas returned to Paris; he held one of the Dominican chairs of theology in the university until 1272. He was involved in controversy not only with Gerard d'Abbeville and other secular masters over the rights of the mendicants, but also with *Siger of Brabant and radical Aristotelians in the Arts Faculty as well as conservative theologians opposed altogether to the use of *Aristotle in theology. During this period, which was his most productive, Thomas lectured on Mt., Jn., and part at least of the Pauline corpus, and he held disputations on the soul, on the virtues, on whether the union in Christ was one of nature or of person, as well as the *quodlibetal disputations 1–6 and 12. He again defended the mendicants in Contra Doctrinam Retrahentium a Religione, and he expounded his views on perfection, against both *Franciscan and secular critics, in De Perfectione Vitae Spiritualis. He also continued work on the Summa Theologiae, completing the Second Part, and he prepared for publication literal expositions of some of the major works of Aristotle used in the schools, incl. the 'Ethics', 'Posterior Analytics', and 'Metaphysics'. He also finished a commentary on *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite's 'Divine Names'. At Easter 1272 he returned to Italy. Commissioned by his Provincial Chapter to establish a studium somewhere within the Roman Province of the Dominican Order, he chose his own priory at Naples. There he continued the Third Part of the Summa Theologiae and his expositions on other philosophical works of Aristotle and on the Platonist Liber de Causis*, lectured on the Pauline Epistles, and preached to the people of Naples during Lent 1273; these sermons were recast in the form of commentaries on the Creed, the *Lord's Prayer, and '*Hail Mary'. On 6 Dec. 1273, while saying Mass, he underwent some mysterious traumatic experience, which abruptly ended his teaching and writing. 'Everything I have written seems like straw by comparison with what I have seen and what has been revealed to me', he reported. In Feb. 1274, on his way to the Second Council of *Lyons, he suffered a head injury; he died on 7 Mar. 1274 at the *Cistercian abbey of Fossanuova, where he was buried.

Although Thomas accorded primacy to revelation, he recognized an autonomy proper to human reason and clearly delineated the spheres of faith and reason, maintaining the importance of philosophy and the sciences even for theology. Despite a profound influence from *Neoplatonism, his philosophical thought, contained in commentaries on Aristotle and independent treatises, is basically Aristotelian, empirical, and realist, or what G. K. *Chesterton called 'organized common sense'. Following Aristotle's maxim that knowledge presupposes an essential likeness between the knower and thing known, and because human nature is both corporeal and intellectual, he held that knowledge necessarily begins with sense perception (nihil in intellectu quod non prius fuerit in sensu). This conviction that valid arguments must start with facts of the natural world gave his proofs for the existence of God their characteristic form (for these see QUINQUE VIAE). He emphasized the notion of 'scientific' knowledge based on 'first principles', which are acquired either by experience or education, and deemed Aristotelian logic basic to an understanding of all other disciplines. Also running through his thought is the antithesis of potency and act. He held that the idea of 'primary matter' or pure potency, existing without form, was self-contradictory, while God, on the other hand, was 'pure act' (actus purus), in whom every perfection was fully realized. Intermediate in the scale of being were created things, composed of potency and act. Closely related is his distinction of matter and form. While all individuals in a species have the same form, the matter is proper to each individual. (*Angels, however, as non-material beings, he held to be individuated by their form.) Fundamental, too, is his distinction between essence and existence.

Distinct from philosophy was sacred doctrine or theology. Thomas declared this to be a science, in as much as it is an ordered body of knowledge, even though it depends for its first principles on a higher knowledge that it cannot itself test or prove, namely the knowledge which God has, in which man has some share by means of divine revelation. The fundamental truths revealed by God are the Trinity of Persons in the Godhead and the Incarnation of the Word as a Person of human nature born of the BVM. But Thomas held that revelation was also necessary for truths, such as the existence of God and the divine attributes of creative power and providence, which reason can attain unaided, because without revelation such truths 'would be known only by a few, and that after a long time, and with an admixture of error' (Summa Theol. 1. 1. 1). He treated sacred doctrine as a single discipline, at a time when it was often presented in a fragmented way which obscured its connection with the practice of religion; in Thomas's teaching theology embraces the whole life of the Church, including worship, morals, and spiritual practice. All this is illustrated in his great theological synthesis, the Summa Theologiae, whose three parts treat respectively of God and creation, of the human person as a free moral agent, and of Christ as the way of man to God.

Thomas's most striking insight, acc. to E. *Gilson, is that whereas all creatures are composed of a nature and a borrowed existence, God alone is subsistent being, the necessary being, the necessary being who cannot not be. Seeing God as subsistent being, Thomas resolved the dichotomy between immanence and transcendence, positing God's intimate presence at the centre of every creature as the cause of its being. Perhaps his most controversial proposition was that the rational soul is the only form of the human body, which Thomas insisted on, in spite of the difficulty it caused in explaining the continuity of Christ's dead body with His living body; one consequence is that the human person has to be treated as a composite whole, rather than as a soul using a body. Thomas identified God's *image in human beings with their capacity to know and direct their own activity. His moral theology is theological, dealing first with happiness as the end of human existence and then with the soul's faculties and powers, which can be directed by virtue and guided by law and grace, as a means to this end. The first principles of moral knowledge (the *Natural Law) are part of human nature; the 'law' of the Gospel is the grace of the Holy Spirit which transforms and elevates (but does not negate) human nature.

Thomas emphasized the role of Christ's humanity in the Incarnation, insisting on His human emotions and acquired knowledge. More importantly, he showed that Christ's humanity had a causal relationship to the work of redemption. As the head of redeemed humanity, Christ continues the work of redemption through the sacraments which are an extension of His humanity, mediating His fullness of grace to His members. Thomas held that all seven sacraments were instituted by Christ, that the Eucharist was the highest of them all (sacramentum sacramentorum), and that as the ultimate purpose of the sacrament of *Order was the Eucharist, the Priesthood was the highest of the orders, and the Episcopate therefore not a separate order. He explored in a highly original way the possibility of exploiting the Aristotelian philosophy of *substance and *accidents to develop a systematic understanding of *transubstantiation. The *concomitance of the Body and Blood of Christ in both Eucharistic species afforded a theological justification for *Communion in one kind.

Various of his teachings were attacked before and after his death, and a formal condemnation by Étienne Tempier, Abp. of Paris, was averted only by the intervention of the Roman Curia in 1277. Propositions condemned by the Dominican R. *Kilwardby, Abp. of Canterbury, in 1277, and by his successor, the Franciscan J. *Pecham in 1284, appeared to involve his teaching, while theologians hostile to Thomas tried to implicate him in Tempier's 1277 condemnation of a long list of propositions allegedly being taught in the Arts Faculty at Paris. From 1278 General Chapters of the Dominican Order insisted that his writings be respected and defended within the Order. In 1323 he was canonized by *John XXII, and the Parisian condemnation 'in so far as it touched or seemed to touch him' was lifted in 1325. His body was translated to the Dominican church in Toulouse on 28 Jan. 1369. Feast day, 28 Jan. (formerly, 7 Mar.).

Apart from the 15th-cent. Dominican John *Capreolus, who used Thomas's thought in his critique of *Nominalism, it was not until the 16th cent. that Thomism was revived by Thomas *Cajetan, Sylvester of Ferrara (1474–1528), *John of St Thomas, and others. By the time of the Council of *Trent, the RC Church had accepted the substance of his teaching as an authentic expression of doctrine. In 1567 *Pius V declared him a '*Doctor of the Church' and ordered the first complete printed edition of his works. After another period of eclipse, a new era for Thomism was inaugurated by Leo XIII's bull Aeterni Patris (1879), which enjoined the study of Aquinas on all theological students as a clear, systematic philosophy capable of defending Christian tradition from contemporary attack. In 1880 Thomas was declared patron of all Catholic universities and in 1923 his authority as a teacher was reiterated by *Pius XI in Studium Ducem. In his encyclical Lumen Ecclesiae (1974), *Paul VI proposed Thomas as a model for theologians not only for his doctrinal position, but also for his openness to the world of his day. The period since the Second *Vatican Council (1962–5) has witnessed a critical reappraisal of neo-scholasticism and has opened up new areas of research, notably on the value of Thomas's thought on moral development.

The most important edns. of his works are the 'Piana' in 17 vols., Rome, 1570–1; that issued in 25 vols., Parma, 1852–73; and the 'Vivès' in 34 vols., Paris, 1871–80. All previous edns. are being superseded by the Leonine edn., Rome, 1882 ff. Where this is not yet available, the 'standard' edns. remain those pub. at different times by Marietti, Turin, containing all the works except the Scriptum super Libros Sententiarum. There are many edns. and trs. of individual works. Important edn., with Eng. tr., of the Summa Theologiae (60 vols. + index, London [1964–81]; the 'Blackfriars Summa'). Incomplete edn. of the Scriptum super Libros Sententiarum by P. Mandonnet, OP, and M. F. Moos, OP (4 vols., Paris, 1929–47). Good edns. of Super Librum de Causis Expositio by H. D. Saffrey, OP (Textus Philosophici Friburgenses, 4–5; Fribourg and Louvain, 1954); of Expositio super Librum Boethii de Trinitate by B. Decker (Studien und Texte zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, 4; Leiden, 1955; rev. edn., 1959); and of Quaestiones de Anima by J. H. Robb (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 14; Toronto, 1968). The Leonine text of Summa contra Gentiles is repr., with Fr. tr. by B. Bernier [OP] and others (4 vols., Paris [1951–64]), with introd. by [R.] A. Gauthier [OP] in vol. 1, pp. 7–123. Selections of texts in Eng. tr. incl. his Basic Writings, by A. C. Pegis (2 vols., New York [1945]); Philosophical Texts, by T. Gilby [OP] (London, 1951); Theological Texts, ed. id. (ibid., 1955); V. J. Bourke (ed.), The Pocket Aquinas (New York, 1960); C. Martin (ed.), The Philosophy of Thomas Aquinas: Introductory Readings (London, 1988); and S. [C. F.] Tugwell, OP, Albert & Thomas: Selected Writings (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York, 1988), pp. 353–632.

On the MSS, H. F. Dondaine [OP] and H. V. Shooner [OP], Codices Manuscripti Operum Thomae de Aquino (Rome, 1967–73; Montreal and Paris, 1985 ff.); see also A. Dondaine [OP], Secrétaires de Saint Thomas (Rome, 1956). On the corpus of Thomas's work, P. Mandonnet, OP, 'Des écrits authentiques de Saint Thomas d'Aquin', Revue Thomiste, 17 (1909), pp. 38–55, 155–81, 257–74, 441–55, 562–73, 678–91; 18 (1910), pp. 62–82, 289–307 (also pub. separately, Fribourg, 1910); M. Grabmann, Die echten Schriften des hl. Thomas von Aquin (BGPM 22, Hefte 1–2; 1920; 2nd edn. as Die Werke des hl. Thomas von Aquin, 1931; 3rd edn., 1949); I. T. Eschmann, OP, 'A Catalogue of St. Thomas's Works', in Eng. tr. of E. *Gilson, The Christian Philosophy of St Thomas Aquinas (1957), pp. 381–439; J. A. Weisheipl, OP, Friar Thomas d'Aquino (Garden City, NY, 1974; Oxford, 1975; repr., with corrections and additions, Washington, DC, 1983), pp. 355–405; also L. S. Bataillon, OP, 'Les sermons attribués à Saint Thomas: questions d'authenticité', in A. Zimmermann (ed.), Thomas von Aquin, Werk und Wirkung im Licht neuerer Forschungen (Miscellanea Mediaevalia. Veröffentlichungen des Thomas-Instituts der Universität zu Köln, 19; Berlin, 1988), pp. 325–41. Index and concordance of all the writings, prepared by computer, Index Thomisticus, ed. R. Busa, SJ (50 vols., Stuttgart, 1974–80); simpler Lexicon of St Thomas Aquinas based on the Summa Theologica and selected passages of his other works by R. J. Deferrari and M. I. Barry, CDP (5 fascs., Washington, DC [1948–9]).

The sources for the life of Thomas are ed. D. Prümmer, OP, and M.-H. Laurent, OP, Fontes Vitae S. Thomae Aquinatis (6 fascs., Toulouse and then Saint-Maximin, [1912]–1937). Eng. tr. of main sources in K. Foster, OP, The Life of Saint Thomas Aquinas: Biographical Documents (1959). Important modern biogs. incl. A. M. Walz, OP, San Tommaso d'Aquino (1945; Eng. tr., Westminster, Md., 1951; rev. Fr. tr. by P. Novarina, Philosophes Médiévaux, 5; 1962); J. A. Weisheipl, op. cit.; S. Tugwell, op. cit., pp. 199–351. Useful introds. to the study of his thought incl. E. Gilson, Le Thomisme (Strasbourg, 1919; 5th edn., Études de Philosophie Médiévales, 1; 1944; Eng. tr., The Christian Philosophy of St Thomas Aquinas, 1957); M.-D. Chenu, OP, Introduction à l'Étude de Saint Thomas d'Aquin (Université de Montréal, Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales, 11; 1950; Eng. tr., Toward Understanding Saint Thomas, Chicago [1964]); F. C. Copleston [SJ], Aquinas (Harmondsworth, 1955); J. Pieper, Hinführung zu Thomas von Aquin (Munich [1958]; Eng. tr., New York, 1962; London, 1963); R. McInerny, Ethica Thomistica: The Moral Philosophy of Thomas Aquinas (Washington, DC [1982]); A. Patfoort, OP, Thomas d'Aquin: Les Clés d'une Théologie [1983]; O. H. Pesch, Thomas von Aquin (Mainz, 1988; 2nd edn., 1989); B. Davies [OP], The Thought of Thomas Aquinas (Oxford, 1992); and J. P. Torrell, OP, Initiation à saint Thomas d'Aquin: Sa personne et son œuvre (Vestigia, 13 [1993]). The many collections of papers incl. A. Kenny (ed.), Aquinas: A Collection of Critical Essays (New York, 1969; London, 1970); A. A. Maurer, CSB, and others (eds.), St Thomas Aquinas 1274–1974: Commemorative Studies (2 vols., Toronto, 1974); A. Lobato, OP (ed.), L'Anima nell'Antropologia di S. Tommaso d'Aquinas (Studia Universitatis S. Thomae in Urbe, 28; Milan, 1987); A. Zimmermann, op. cit.; and N. Kretzmann and E. Stump (eds.), The Cambridge Companion to Aquinas (1993). F. Van Steenberghen, La Philosophie au XIII^e siècle (2nd edn., Philosophes Médiévaux, 28; 1991), esp. pp. 277–320. The immense lit. is recorded in P. Mandonnet, OP, and J. Destrez, OP, Bibliographie Thomiste (Bibliothèque thomiste, 1; Kain, 1921; 2nd edn. by M.-D. Chenu [OP], Paris, 1960); V. J. Bourke, Thomistic Bibliography 1920–1940 (St Louis, 1945); T. Miethe and V. J. Bourke, Thomistic Bibliography, 1940–1978 (Westport, Conn., and London, 1980); R. Ingardia, Thomas Aquinas International Bibliography 1977–1990 (Bowling Green, Ohio [1993]). Current bibl. in Bulletin Thomiste (12 vols., 1924–68) and its continuation, Rassegna di Letteratura Tomistica (Naples, 1969 ff.). L. A. Kennedy, CSB, A Catalogue of Thomists, 1270–1900 (Houston, Tex. [1987]). P. A. Walz, OP, and others, in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 618–761, s.v. 'Thomas d'Aquin'; R. Garrigou-Lagrange, OP, ibid., cols. 823–1024, s.v. 'Thomisme'; W. A. Wallace and J. A. Weisheipl in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 102–15, s.v.; all with extensive bibl.

Thomas Becket of Canterbury, St. See BECKET, ST THOMAS.

Thomas Bradwardine. See BRADWARDINE, THOMAS.

Thomas de Cantilupe, St. See CANTILUPE, ST THOMAS DE.

Thomas of Celano (*c.*1190–1260), the earliest of St *Francis's biographers. Having joined St Francis's band of friars *c.*1214, he wrote two Lives of the saint (d. 1226), the first in 1228 at the command of *Gregory IX and the second in 1246–7 at the instance of the General of his order. They were followed in 1250–3 by the 'Tractatus de Miraculis S. Francisci'. Written in the rhythmical prose that delighted his age, these biographies were deservedly admired for their elegance, but their historicity has been challenged in modern times. Thomas was also the author of the 'Legend' of St *Clare and, acc. to an uncertain tradition, of the *Dies Irae (q.v.).

Crit. edn. of Thomas's two Lives and miracles of St Francis by the Franciscans of Quaracchi in Analecta Franciscana, 10 (1926–41), pp. 1–331, with introd. pp. iii–xlii. Eng. tr. of the two Lives of St Francis and selections from the miracles by P. Hermann, OFM (Chicago, 1963; also in St Francis of Assisi, Writings and Early Biographies: English Omnibus of the Sources for the Life of St Francis, ed. M. A. Habig, ibid. [1973], 3rd edn., London, 1979, pp. 177–611). For further edns. see bibl. to FRANCIS, ST, and for edns. of Legend of St Clare, see bibl. to CLARE, ST. J. R. H. Moorman, The Sources for the Life of St Francis of Assisi (Publications of the University of Manchester, no. 274, Historical Series, no. 79; 1940), esp. pp. 61–81 and 110–28. M. Bihl, OFM, 'Disquisitiones Celanenses', AFH 20 (1927), pp. 433–96; 21 (1928), pp. 3–54 and 161–205. A. G. Little, 'Some Recently Discovered Franciscan Documents and their Relation to the Second Life of Celano and the Speculum Perfectionis', Proceedings of the British Academy, 12 (1926), pp. 147–78. T. Desbonnets, OFM, 'Recherches sur la Généalogie des Biographies primitives de Saint François', AFH 60 (1967), pp. 273–316; Lorenzo di Fonzo, OFM Conv., 'L'Anonimo Perugino tra le Fonti Francescane del Secolo XIII. Rapporti, Letterari e Testo Critico', Miscellanea Francescana, 72 (1972), pp. 117–483, esp. pp. 117–48 and 466. G. Mailleux [OFM], Thesaurus Celanensis (Corpus des Sources Franciscaines, 1; 1974). See also bibl. to DIES IRAE.

Thomas Christians. See MALABAR CHRISTIANS.

Thomas Gallus (d. 1246), mystical theologian. A canon of St-Victor in Paris (see VICTORINES), in 1219 he was sent to Vercelli to help establish a new foundation, of which he was prior by 1224 and received the title of abbot in 1224/5. For political reasons he spent the last three years of his life in exile.

He wrote commentaries on Isaiah and the Song of Songs and two treatises on contemplation, but he is chiefly known for his work on *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, whose work he helped to make known in the W. He seems to have been the first to link Dionysius' *apophatic theology with the idea that the deepest part of the human personality is a non-intellectual mystical faculty for apprehending God. He compiled glosses on the 'Celestial Hierarchy' and 'Mystical Theology' and more substantial commentaries on both these works and on the 'Divine Names'; his most influential work was an Extractio or synopsis of the whole Dionysian corpus, which came to be included in the Dionysian corpus used in the University of *Paris. The author of the '*Cloud of Unknowing' and Jean *Gerson were among those influenced by him.

His Explicatio is conveniently repr. in the Carthusian edn. of the Works of *Dionysius the Carthusian, 15–16 (Tournai, 1902) (Commentaria in Libros S. Dionysii Areopagitae) at the end of each ch. of Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite's works. His commentaries on the Song of Songs are ed. J. Barbet (Textes philosophiques du moyen âge, 14; 1967), with introd., pp. 15–61. His other works are largely unpr.; details of those pub. to date are given by J. Barbet in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 800–16, s.v. J. Walsh, SJ, 'The "Expositions" of Thomas Gallus on the Pseudo-Dionysian Letters', AHDLMA 30 (for 1963; 1964), pp. 199–220, incl. text. G. Théry, OP, 'Thomas Gallus: Aperçu biographique', ibid. 12 (1939), pp. 141–208. M. Capellino, Tommaso di S. Vittore, abate Vercellese (Vercelli, 1978).

Thomas of Hereford, St. See CANTILUPE, ST THOMAS DE.

Thomas a Jesu (1564–1627), spiritual author. Influenced by the writings of St *Teresa, Díaz Sánchez de Ávila entered the *Carmelite Order in 1587, and he soon held the offices of professor of theology at Seville, prior at Saragossa, and provincial of Old Castile. After establishing a strictly eremitical life in several Carmelite monasteries, he was called to Rome in 1607 by *Paul V, in order to further the missionary activities in his order; but his efforts were frustrated by the opposition of the Spanish and Italian superiors. The literary results of the enterprise, however, the treatises Stimulus Missionum (1610) and De Procuranda Salute omnium Gentium (1613), in which he outlined his missionary theory, contributed largely to the foundation of the Congregation 'De *Propaganda Fide' (1622). His works on mysticism, De Contemplatione Divina (1620) and Divinae Orationis Methodus (1623), are remarkable for the clarity and sureness of their doctrine, presenting the teaching of St Teresa in the form of Scholastic treatises.

Opera Omnia, pub. in 2 vols. bound in 1, Cologne, 1684. B. M. Zimmerman, CD, Les Saints déserts des Carmes déchaussés (1927), pp. 46–60. E. A. Peers, Studies of the Spanish Mystics, 2 (1930), pp. 279–306, with bibl. pp. 447–452. S. Salaville, AA, 'Un Précurseur de la Propagande et un apôtre des missions, le P. Thomas de Jésus', Études carmélitaines, 5 (1920), pp. 301–23. José de Jesús Crucificado, OCD, 'El Tomás de Jesús, escritor místico', Ephemerides Carmeliticae, 3 (1949), pp. 305–49, and 4 (1950), pp. 149–206; Gabriel de Ste-Marie-Magdaleine, OCD, 'Thomas de Jésus et la contemplation acquise', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 25 (1949), pp. 3–17. M. A. Diez, OCD, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 833–44, s.v. 'Thomas (22) de Jésus'.

Thomas à Kempis (*c.*1380–1471), ascetical writer. Thomas Hemerken, acc. to the usual and most probable tradition the author of the '*Imitation of Christ' (q.v.), was born at Kempen, nr. Krefeld, of poor parents. After education at Deventer at the school of the *Brethren of the Common Life, he entered in 1399 the house of the *Canons Regular at the Agnietenberg, nr. Zwolle (one of the daughter-houses of *Windesheim), of which his elder brother, John, was co-founder and prior, and in 1406 took the habit. Here he lived for almost the whole of the rest of his life, writing, preaching, and copying MSS, and widely sought after as a spiritual adviser. His writings, though of many different kinds—ascetical, homiletic, poetical, biographical, etc.—are all pervaded by the devotional spirit which finds its classic expression in the 'Imitation'. They include Orationes et Meditationes de Vita Christi, Vallis Liliorum, and Soliloquium Animae. Feast day in the American BCP (1979), 24 July.

Opera et Libri Vite Fratris Thome a Kempis by H. Rosweyden [ed. P. Danhausser] (Nuremberg, 1494); rev. edn. by H. Sommalius, SJ, (Antwerp, 1601); crit. edn. by M. J. Pohl (7 vols., Freiburg i.B., 1902–22; vol. 8 wanting). Eng. tr. from edn. by M. J. Pohl of Prayers and Meditations on the Life of Christ by W. Duthoit (London, 1904); of The Founders of the New Devotion by J. P. Arthur (ibid., 1905); of The Chronicle of the Canons Regular of Mount St Agnes by id. (ibid., 1906); of Sermons to the Novices Regular by V. Scully, CRL (ibid., 1907); and of Meditations and Sermons on the Incarnation, Life and Passion of Our Lord by id. (ibid., 1907). S. Kettlewell, Thomas à Kempis and the Brothers of the Common Life (2 vols., 1882). Thomas von Kempen: Beiträge zum 500. Todesjahr 1471 1971 . . . Herausgegeben von der Stadt Kempen (Kempen and Niederrhein, 1971). E. Iserloh, Thomas von Kempen und die Kirchenreform im Spätmittelalter (ibid., 1971). R. T. M. van Dijk in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 817–26, s.v. 'Thomas (16) Hemerken'. See further bibl. to IMITATION OF CHRIST, more esp. works of those authors who accept the attribution to Thomas à Kempis.

Thomas of Marga (9th cent.), historian of the *Church of the East. In 832 he entered the celebrated monastery of Beth-'Abhe, *c.*40 miles NE of Mosul. Later he became secretary to the Patr. Abraham (837–50), by whom he was created Bp. of Marga. Finally he became Metropolitan of Beth-Garmai. He wrote *c.*840 his Book of Governors, a history of his monastery, but embodying also biographies of monks from various places in Mesopotamia; it is one of the chief authorities for the monastic history of the Church of the East.

Thomas's 'Book of Governors' (Liber Superiorum), ed. E. A. W. Budge (2 vols., London, 1893; Syr. text with Eng. tr. in vol. 2) and P. Bedjan, Cong. Miss. (Paris, 1901). W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (1894), pp. 219 f.; A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 233 f. A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 847–9, s.v. 'Thomas (26) de Marga'.

Thomas More, St. See MORE, ST THOMAS.

Thomism. The systematized expression of the (esp. philosophical) doctrines of St *Thomas Aquinas (q.v.), particularly as developed in the RC Church in the *Dominican Order.

Thompson, Francis (1859–1907), RC poet. A native of Preston, he was originally intended for the priesthood and educated at Ushaw, but later unsuccessfully studied medicine at Manchester. In 1885 he went to London, where he lived for three years in almost complete destitution, occasionally selling newspapers and matches. In 1888 his poetic gifts were discovered by Wilfrid Meynell, then editor of the Catholic magazine Merry England, who remained his friend and benefactor throughout his life. His first volume of Poems, published in 1893, contained the fine cycle 'Love in Dian's Lap', dedicated to Alice *Meynell, and his best-known poem, 'The Hound of Heaven', with its arresting description of the pursuit of the soul by God. It was followed by Sister Songs (1895) and New Poems (1897). His poetry, though sometimes marred by an excessive use of neologisms, archaic words, and difficult allusions, has affinities with that of the '*Metaphysical School' of the 17th cent. Its occasional obscurity rarely prevents it from conveying the central thought, and in its profound spirituality and love of children and the simple things of life it has a genuine Franciscan ring, fostered by the poet's long stay (1893–7) near the Franciscan monastery at Pantasaph. After 1897 he wrote almost no more poetry. Among his prose works are Health and Holiness; A Study of the Relations between Brother Ass the Body and his Rider the Soul (1905; with Preface by G. *Tyrrell), a *Life of St Ignatius Loyola and an Essay on Shelley (the last two both posthumous, 1909).

Works (3 vols., London, 1913). Further material by Thompson was identified and ed. by T. L. Connolly, SJ: Literary Criticisms (New York, 1948); The Real Robert Louis Stevenson and Other Critical Essays (ibid., 1959), incl. full bibl. of Thompson's works, pp. 353–98; and The Man has Wings: New Poems and Plays (Garden City, NY, 1957); Letters ed. J. E. Walsh (New York, 1969). E. Meynell, The Life of Francis Thompson (1913); R. L. Mégroz, Francis Thompson (1927); V. Meynell, Francis Thompson and Wilfrid Meynell (1952); J. C. Reid, Francis Thompson: Man and Poet (1959); P. Danchin, Francis Thompson: La vie et l'œuvre d'un poète (1959); P. van K. Thompson, Francis Thompson: A Critical Biography (1961); J. [E.] Walsh, Strange Harp, Strange Symphony: The Life of Francis Thompson (New York, 1967; London, 1968); B. M. Boardman, Between Heaven and Charing Cross: The Life of Francis Thompson (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1988). E. Meynell in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 502 f.

Thoresby, John (d. 1373), Abp. of *York. After executing several missions for W. Melton, Abp. of York (1317–40), and holding a number of ecclesiastical positions, he became Master of the Rolls in 1341 and Keeper of the Privy Seal in 1345, and was employed by Edward III to treat with France in 1346 and with Scotland in 1357, and to be guardian of the kingdom in 1355. In 1347 he became Bp. of *St Davids, and in 1349 of *Worcester. From 1349 to 1356 he was Chancellor of England, and from 1352 to 1373 Abp. of York. It was mainly through his instrumentality that the ancient dispute as to the respective privileges of Canterbury and York was settled, the Pope directing, on 22 Feb. 1354, that the Abp. of York should be the 'Primate of England' and the Abp. of Canterbury the 'Primate of All England'.

A few of his Constitutions are pr. in D. *Wilkins (ed.), Concilia Magnae Britanniae et Hiberniae, 3 (1737), pp. 663, 666–79; his will in J. Raine (ed.), The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, 3 (RS, 1894), pp. 281–4. W. H. Dixon and J. Raine (eds.), Fasti Eboracenses: Lives of the Archbishops of York, 1 (1863), pp. 449–94, with eight of his letters, pp. 377–80. Life by T. Stubbs (14th cent.) in J. Raine, op. cit., 2 (RS, 1886), pp. 419–21. J. Hughes, Pastors and Visionaries: Religion and Secular Life in Late Medieval Yorkshire (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1988), esp. pp. 127–73 [to be used with caution]. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 280–2, s.v.; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1863 f.

Thorn, Conference of (1645). A conference (colloquium caritativum), of 26 *Catholic, 28 *Lutheran, and 24 *Calvinist theologians, convened in the Rathaus at Thorn (Toruń) on 28 Aug. 1645 on the proposal of Władysław IV, King of Poland (1632–48), to bring about religious reunion. Among the participants were J. A. *Comenius, A. *Calovius, and G. *Calixtus (who on being rejected by the Lutherans ranked himself a Calvinist). Though discussions continued until 21 Nov., no result was achieved, largely because the Lutherans believed that the Catholics' only interest was to sever them from the Calvinists and the Protestant cause. Hence it was described as in fact colloquium irritativum.

Acta Conventus Thoruniensis Celebrati Anno 1645 (Warsaw, 1646); F. Jacobi, 'Das liebreiche Religionsgespräch zu Thorn 1645', ZKG 15 (1895), pp. 345–63; expanded edn. issued separately, Gotha, 1895. K. E. J. Jørgensen, Ökumenische Bestrebungen unter den polnischen Protestanten bis zum Jahre 1645 (Copenhagen, 1942), pp. 377–87; A. Jobert, De Luther à Mohila: La Pologne dans la crise de la Chrétienté 1517 1648 (Collection historique de l'Institut d'Études Slaves, 21; 1974), pp. 384–94, with bibl. pp. 430 f. B. Tschackert in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 745–51.

Thorndike, Herbert (1598–1672), Anglican theologian. Probably a native of Suffolk, he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1620. Ordained priest *c.*1627, he held various offices in his college. In 1642 he became rector of Barley in Herts, but was ejected in 1643, as also from his fellowship at Trinity in 1646. In 1660 he was reinstated in both offices, and in the following year was appointed Prebendary of *Westminster. His first important theological work was his Discourse of the Government of Churches (1641), in which he defended the Apostolic origin of episcopal government against the Presbyterians. It was followed by the treatise Of Religious Assemblies and the Public Service of God (1642), upholding the worship of the C of E against the Puritans. In A Discourse of the Right of the Church in a Christian State (1649) he endeavoured to elucidate the relations between Church and State, stressing the supranational character of the former but conceding to the latter a certain authority over it. From 1652 to 1657 he helped in editing B. *Walton's Polyglot Bible, working chiefly on the Syriac texts. His principal work is An Epilogue to the Tragedy of the Church of England (1659), which consists of three parts: 1, The Principles of Christian Truth; 2, The Covenant of Grace; 3, The Laws of the Church. In it he looks for a unified Christendom on the basis of the first six General Councils, conceding a certain superiority to the Pope with prescriptive rights over the W. Church. The third part contains his Eucharistic teaching. He rejects what he calls the 'Socinian' (=*Zwinglian), *Calvinistic, and *Lutheran doctrines as well as *transubstantiation, to which, however, he is more sympathetic than most of his contemporaries. Acc. to his own view, the mystical but objective Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ is added to the substance of bread and wine by the consecration, which, however, is not effected by the words of Institution, but by the use of prayer. Thorndike's significance was for long forgotten, until he was rediscovered by the *Tractarians.

Works in LACT (6 vols., bound in 9, 1844–54; with Life in vol. 6 by A. W. Haddan, pp. 153–266). T. A. *Lacey, Herbert Thorndike, 1598 1672 (1929). J. B. Mullinger in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 290–2.

Thorvaldsen, Bertel (1770–1844), Danish sculptor. Educated at the School of Art at Copenhagen, in 1797 he went to Rome, where he lived until 1838. His art is saturated with the classical ideal of beauty, which is prominent also where he deals with Christian subjects. His most famous religious work is the monumental group of Christ and His Apostles (1821–42) in the Frue Kirke at Copenhagen; the beautiful figure of the Transfigured Christ, His hands extended in blessing, has often been imitated. Among his other religious works are the tomb of Pope *Pius VII in St Peter's (1830) and an Entrance of Christ into Jerusalem. All his works, originals or casts or copies, are collected in the Thorvaldsen Museum in Copenhagen.

J. M. Thiele, Den Danske Billedhugger Bertel Thorvaldsen og hans Vaerker (4 vols., Copenhagen, 1831–50); id., Thorvaldsens Biographi (4 vols., ibid., 1851–6; much abridged Eng. adaptation by M. R. Bernard, 1865); T. Oppermann, Thorvaldsen (3 vols., Copenhagen, 1924–1930); E. K. Sass, Thorvaldsens Portrætbuster (3 vols, ibid., 1963–5); J. B. Hartmann, Bertil Thorvaldsen (Quaderni di Storia dell'Arte, 19; Rome, 1971); id., Antike Motive bei Thorvaldsen, ed. K. Parlasca (Tübingen [1979]). Catalogues of the Thorvaldsen Museum, ed. B. Jørnaes (in Danish, Copenhagen, 1975) and by id. and A. S. Urne (in Eng. tr., ibid., 1985).

Thou, Jacques Auguste De. See DE THOU, JACQUES AUGUSTE.

Three Chapters, the (τὰ τρία κεφάλαια). The three subjects condemned by the Emp. *Justinian in an edict of 543–4, namely (1) the person and works of *Theodore of Mopsuestia, (2) the writings of *Theodoret against *Cyril of Alexandria, and (3) the letter of *Ibas of Edessa to Maris. As all three were considered sympathetic to *Nestorius, Justinian issued the edict in the hope of conciliating the *Monophysites by a display of anti-Nestorian zeal. The E. patriarchs assented, but in the W. the Emperor's interference was unpopular, and on the ground that it was opposed to the *Chalcedonian decrees, Pope *Vigilius refused at first to approve the edict. After being summoned to *Constantinople, however, Vigilius eventually issued in 548 his 'Iudicatum' to *Menas, the Patr. of Constantinople; this condemned the Three Chapters, but upheld the Chalcedonian decisions. After a storm of protest in the W., Vigilius deemed it best to withdraw his 'Iudicatum' and await a General Council. At the Fifth General Council, which met at *Constantinople in 553, the Three Chapters, and indirectly Vigilius, were condemned, though the Council also asserted the intention of the E. to remain in communion with Rome. In a 'Constitutum', issued in 554, Vigilius declared his submission to the Council's decision and his successor, Pelagius I, followed his example, though a serious schism in the W. resulted. Justinian's policy, which was in fact an attack on the *Antiochene theology and the decisions of Chalcedon, failed even of its purpose of reconciling the Monophysites.

The main docs. will be found with the Acta of the Fifth General Council, pr. in the Conciliar collections. Latin theologians who wrote expressly in defence of the 'Three Chapters' incl. *Facundus of Hermiane and Fulgentius *Ferrandus [Ep. 6], qq.v., also Pope Pelagius I (556–61). L. *Duchesne, L'Église au sixième siècle (1925), pp. 185–218. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 1–156, passim. R. Devreesse, Essai sur Théodore de Mopsueste (ST 141; Rome, 1948), pp. 194–272. C. Moeller, 'Le Chalcédonisme et le néochalcédonisme en Orient de 451 à la fin du VIᵉ siècle', in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 637–720. H. M. Diepen, OSB, Les Trois Chapitres au Concile de Chalcédoine: Une étude de la christologie de l'Anatolie ancienne (Oosterhout, 1953). Id., Douze Dialogues de christologie ancienne (Rome, 1960), passim. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1868–1924, s.v. 'Trois-Chapitres (Affaire des)'. See also bibl. to CONSTANTINOPLE, SECOND COUNCIL OF.

Three Children, Song of the. See SONG OF THE THREE CHILDREN.

Three Denominations, the. A title applied to the *Presbyterian, *Congregationalist, and *Baptist Churches, the ministers of which in London and Westminster formed an association in 1727 for the purpose of joint political action. See also REGIUM DONUM.

Three Hours' Service. An extra-liturgical service on Good Friday. It is held during the three hours of the Lord's Passion from noon till 3 p.m., and usually consists of seven sermons on the Seven Words from the Cross, with the intervals filled with hymns and prayers. The service was instituted by the *Jesuits on the occasion of an earthquake at Lima in 1687.

It appears to have been introduced in the C of E by A. H. *Mackonochie in the 1860s; there is a record of such a service in *St Paul's Cathedral, London, in 1876. It came to be widely observed esp. in Anglican churches as well as in some RC churches, though since the middle of the 20th cent. its popularity has declined.

A. Mesia, SJ, Devoción á las Tres Horas de Agonia de Nuestro Redentor Jesú Cristo (1687; Eng. tr., London, 1806, repr. with historical introd. by H. Thurston, SJ, as The Devotion of the Three Hours' Agony on Good Friday, 1899). G. M. Bosworth, 'A Note on the History of the Three-Hour Devotion', CQR 154 (1953), pp. 86–91.

Three Witnesses, the. See JOHANNINE COMMA.

Thundering Legion. When in the Danubian campaigns of the Emp. *Marcus Aurelius (172) a sudden rainstorm saved the Roman army from drought and defeat, Christians, such as *Tertullian (Apol. 5. 6) and *Eusebius (HE 5. 5, who also mentions Claudius *Apollinarius), attributed this to the prayers of Christian members of the 'Legio XII Fulminata', claiming that the Emperor had admitted this in a letter to the Senate. The miracle is also referred to by pagan writers, e.g. Dio Cassius, though without reference to the Christian setting. On the column of M. Aurelius, in Rome, Jupiter Pluvius is represented as the benefactor. The mistranslation 'thundering' for 'thunderstruck' led to the elaboration that a thunderbolt had destroyed the enemy. As the name 'Fulminata' for the Legion dates from the time of Augustus (d. AD 14), it had no connection originally with the incident here mentioned. The 'Thundering Legion' again appears in the legend of the Forty Martyrs of *Sebaste (q.v.).

Good discussion of the legend, with text and Eng. tr. of the letter of Marcus Aurelius to the Senate and further refs., in J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, pt. 2. 1 (1885), pp. 469–76. G. T. Stokes in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 1023 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2692–703, s.v. 'Fulminata (Légion XIIᵉ)'.

thurible (Lat. thus or tus, 'incense'). A metal vessel for the ceremonial burning of *incense. In the usual form of thurible the container is suspended on chains from which it can be swung during the incensation. The thurible is also known as a 'censer'.

Rohault, 5 (1887), pp. 149–69. Braun, AG, pp. 598–632, with plates 126–37. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 21–33, s.v. 'Encensoir'; A. Weckwerth in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 1012 f., s.v. 'Rauchfass'.

thurifer. A person appointed to carry the *thurible at religious ceremonies and services. He is sometimes attended by a boy bearing the incense-boat (the 'boat boy'), sometimes he carries this also himself.

Thurneysen, Eduard (1888–1974), Swiss Protestant theologian. A native of Wallenstadt, after working among the Christian youth at Zurich he was pastor successively at Leutwil in Aargau (1913), Bruggen near St Gall (1920), and the Münster at Basle (1927). From 1913 onwards he was intimately associated with K. *Barth, and largely contributed to the elaboration of the *Dialectical Theology, with the pastoral and social applications of which he was esp. concerned. His writings include Dostojewski (1921; Eng. tr., 1964), Komm' Schöpfer Geist (sermons, in collaboration with K. Barth, 1924; Eng. tr., 1934), Christoph Blumhardt (1926), Das Wort Gottes und die Kirche (collected essays, 1927), and Die Lehre von der Seelsorge (1948). He was also one of the editors of the Barthian periodical Zwischen den Zeiten (1923 onwards).

Gottesdienst—Menschendienst: Eduard Thurneysen zum 70. Geburtstag am 10. Juli 1958 (Zollikon, 1958), with bibl. of his works to date, pp. 333–50, and correspondence between Thurneysen and Barth 1921–5 and introd. by Barth, pp. 7–173; Eng. tr. of correspondence and Barth's introd. by J. D. Smart, Revolutionary Theology in the Making (1964), pp. 65–249. Wort und Gemeinde: Probleme und Aufgaben der praktischen Theologie. Eduard Thurneysen zum 80. Geburtstag (Zurich, 1968), with bibl. of his works, 1958–68, pp. 521–6. H. J. Ponsteen, Karl Barth en Eduard Thurneysen (de theologische relevantie van een levenslange vriendschap) (Oosterbeek [1989]), with Eng. summary.

Thursday, Holy or Maundy. See MAUNDY THURSDAY.

Thyatira, city in N. Lydia, now W. Turkey. It is one of the 'Seven Churches' addressed in Rev. (2: 18–29) and the birthplace of St Paul's convert Lydia, 'a seller of purple' (Acts 16: 14), one of the industries for which the town was noted. In Rev. its Christian community is upbraided for tolerating a 'Jezebel' in their midst who teaches them 'to commit fornication and to eat things sacrificed to idols' (2: 20), probably an adherent of the sect of the *Nicolaitans who introduced pagan elements into Christian worship. In the beginning of the 3rd cent. Thyatira was a stronghold of *Montanism. Its bishop, Sozon, took part in the Council of *Nicaea (325), and another bishop, Basil, is mentioned in 879. The modern city, named Akhisar, had a small Christian community until the 1920s.

In 1922 the head of the newly-founded Orthodox Exarchate of W. Europe was given the title 'Metropolitan of Thyatira' by the Patr. of *Constantinople. In 1963 the Exarchate was divided into four and since 1968 the spiritual leader of the Greek Orthodox communities in Britain has been styled 'Abp. of Thyatira and Great Britain'.

W. M. *Ramsay in HDB 4, pp. 757–9, s.v.; id., The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (1904), pp. 316–53; C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1986]), pp. 106–28.

tiara, extra-liturgical Papal headdress. First mentioned in the 'Vita' of Pope Constantine (708–15), it was in its original form a kind of white Phrygian cap, called 'camelaucum', worn as a sign of the Papal prerogative. Not later than the 11th cent. a coronet was placed round its lower rim, to which were added in the 13th cent. two lappets hanging down at the back. Under *Boniface VIII the tiara was adorned with a second coronet, possibly to symbolize the twofold power of the Papacy, and under Benedict XI (1303–4) or *Clement V (1305–14) a third coronet was added. At the same time the tiara increased in bulk, and in the 15th cent. it attained its modern shape resembling a beehive. It was worn by, or carried in front of, the Pope at important non-liturgical functions such as Papal processions and at solemn acts of jurisdiction, e.g. solemn dogmatic definitions, but it has not been used since the death of *Paul VI.

Braun, LG, pp. 498–508. E. Müntz, 'La Tiare pontificale du VIII^e au XVI^e siècle', Mémoires de l'Institut National de France. Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, 36 (1898), pp. 235–324; C. Sachsse, 'Tiara und Mitra der Päpste', ZKG 35 (1914), pp. 481–501; P. E. Schramm, 'Zur Geschichte der päpstlichen Tiara', HZ 152 (1935), pp. 307–12. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 14 (1913), pp. 714 f., s.v.

Ticonius. See TYCONIUS.

Tiele, Cornelis Petrus (1830–1902), Dutch theologian. A *Remonstrant pastor, he became professor of religious history, a chair specially founded for him, at *Leiden University, and here during the years of his professorship (1877–1901) exercised a great influence on the development of the study of comparative religion, esp. in the Netherlands. Among the best known of his many books are Geschiedenis van den Godsdienst tot aan de Heerschappij der Wereldgodsdiensten (1876; Eng. tr. by J. E. *Carpenter as Outlines of the History of Religion, 1877) and his *Gifford Lectures on The Elements of the Science of Religion (1897–9). The fruit of a vast knowledge of ancient languages and history and prodigious industry, they became widely used on account of their lucid and orderly arrangement.

P. D. Chantepie de la Saussaye, 'Cornelis Petrus Tiele, 16 December 1830–11 Januari 1902', Koninklijke Akademie van Wetenschappen, Jaarboek 1902, pp. 125–54. L. Leertouwer, 'C. P. Tiele's Strategy of Conquest', in W. Otterspeer (ed.), Leiden Oriental Connections 1850–1940 (Leiden, 1989), pp. 153–67.

Tierce. See TERCE, SEXT, NONE.

Tigurinus, Consensus. See CONSENSUS TIGURINUS.

Tikhon, St (1866–1925), Basil Ivanovitch Belavin, the first Patriarch of the Russian Church since 1700. The son of a village priest, he studied theology at the ecclesiastical academy of St Petersburg and was successively Bp. of Lublin in 1897, of N. America in 1898, of Yaroslav in 1907, and of Vilna in 1914. In Apr. 1917 he became metropolitan of Moscow, and in Nov. 1917 was elected Patriarch, though with very circumscribed powers, by the Panrussian Council. Though not an eminent scholar or Church politician, his courage and humility gave him the moral authority needed in the subsequent difficult years. In 1919 he anathematized all who persecuted the Church and called upon the people to resist, but in the same year he imposed neutrality on the clergy in the civil war between the Reds and the Whites and refused to give his blessing to the latter. Owing to resistance to the State policy of confiscating Church property during the famine of 1921–2 he was placed under arrest, but, due to English political pressure, he was not brought to trial. During his absence the State-supported schismatic 'Living Church' was set up, which called a council in 1923 to depose him and gained many adherents. In the same year Tikhon signed a declaration professing loyalty to the Soviet Government, which gained him less intolerable conditions, and he was allowed to live in the Don monastery at Moscow and to officiate in the churches of the capital. Owing to his personal influence many schismatics returned to the Patriarchal Church, and his death was the occasion of great popular demonstrations of veneration and affection. He was canonized in 1989. Feast day, 9 Oct.

Prince P. M. Volkonsky, 'La Reconstitution du patriarcat en Russie. Mgr Tykhon, patriarche de Moscou et de toute la Russie', ÉO 20 (1921), pp. 195–219. M. d'Herbigny, SJ, Après la mort du patriarche Tykhon: Les patriarcats de Constantinople et de Moscou. Projects anglo-orthodoxes de Concile Œcuménique. Grecs et Russes en Europe et en Amérique (Orientalia Christiana [Analecta], 15, vol. 4, no. 2; 1925). A. Wuyts, SJ, Le Patriarcat russe au concile de Moscou de 1917–1918 (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 129; 1941). M. Spinka, The Church in Soviet Russia (New York and London, 1956). R. Rössler, Kirche und Revolution in Russland: Patriarch Tichon und der Sowjetstaat (1969).

Tikhon of Zadonsk, St (1724–83), Russian bishop and spiritual writer. The son of a village sexton, his childhood was passed in extreme poverty. He studied at the seminary in Novgorod, where he subsequently became professor, taking monastic vows in 1758. In 1761 he was appointed assistant bishop in the Novgorod diocese, and in 1763 Bp. of Voronezh. He resigned in 1767 and retired into seclusion, settling in 1769 at the Zadonsk monastery, where he remained for the rest of his life. Both as diocesan bishop and in retirement Tikhon displayed a vivid pastoral concern and spent much of his time helping those in distress and destitution. Like many members of the Russian Church in the 18th cent., he was considerably influenced by the W., and among his favourite authors included the Lutheran Johann *Arndt and the Anglican Joseph *Hall; but he possessed at the same time a deep understanding of the ascetic and mystical traditions of E. Orthodoxy. He was canonized in 1861. Feast day, 13 August.

Modern edn. of his Works (in Russ.) pub. in 4 vols., St Petersburg, 1912 (repr., with introd. in Eng. and bibl. by N. Gorodetzky, 2 vols., Farnborough, 1970). Eng. tr. of extracts from his Life and writings in G. P. Fedotov (ed.), A Treasury of Russian Spirituality (1950), pp. 182–241. N. Gorodetzky, Saint Tikhon Zadonsky, Inspirer of Dostoevsky (1951), with full bibl. E. Behr-Sigel, Prière et Sainteté dans l'Église Russe (2nd edn., Spiritualité orientale et vie monastique, 33; Bégrolles-en-Mauges, 1982), pp. 131–57 ('Tikhon de Zadonsk'). T. Špidlík, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 960–4, s.v.

Tillemont, Louis Sébastien Le Nain de (1637–98), French Church historian. He was educated at *Port-Royal under P. *Nicole, showed an early interest in history, and was guided into research. He left Port-Royal in 1656, lived in Paris and continued to study. He entered the seminary of Beauvais in 1661 and stayed until 1669, but was not ordained until 1676. He then returned to Port-Royal, but had to leave in 1679, when he retired to his country house at Tillemont, east of Paris. He had close relationships with the *Jansenists, but did not take part in the controversy. He lived an austere life of Augustinian-inspired spirituality. His fame rests on the Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire ecclésiastique des six premiers siècles (16 vols., 1693–1712), a work of enormous erudition, covering the development of the Church from the beginning of Christianity to the year 513. Its narrative consists almost entirely of patristic material, linked by a minimum of connecting text, with discussion of chronology, authorship, etc., relegated to the critical notes appended to each volume. For comprehensiveness the work has not been surpassed, though it lacks elegance of style. It was much used by E. *Gibbon in his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire and by J. H. *Newman in The Arians of the Fourth Century. Tillemont concurrently wrote a Histoire des Empereurs et des autres princes qui ont régné dans les six premiers siècles de l'Église (6 vols., 1690–1738). His materials for a Life of St *Louis were not pub. until 1847–51 (6 vols.).

B. Neveu, Un Historien à l'École de Port-Royal: Sébastien Le Nain de Tillemont 1637–1698 (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 15; The Hague, 1966). In Eng., M. R. P. McGuire, 'Louis-Sébastien Le Nain de Tillement', Catholic Historical Review, 52 (1966–7), pp. 186–200. Bremond, 4 (1920), pp. 258–80. J.-R. Armogathe in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 590–3, s.v. 'Le Nain de Tillemont'.

Tillich, Paul (1886–1965), Protestant theologian. The son of a *Lutheran pastor, he studied at Berlin, Tübingen and Halle (1904–8). During the First World War he served as an army chaplain. In 1924 he became professor of theology at Marburg, in 1925 at the Technical Hochschule at Dresden, and in 1929 professor of philosophy at Frankfurt. Compelled by his connection with the Religious Socialists to leave Germany in 1933, he settled in the USA, where he was appointed professor of philosophical theology at the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. In 1940 he became an American national. He became professor at Harvard Divinity School in 1955 and in 1962 Nuveen Professor of Theology at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago.

Tillich was a prolific writer and exercised great influence. His aim was to bridge the gap between Christian faith and modern culture. To do this he employed the 'method of correlation', acc. to which the content of the Christian revelation is stated as answering the questions arising out of the cultural situation. This situation was interpreted by Tillich in terms of *existentialism, ontology, and Jungian psychology. His works include Das System der Wissenschaften (1923), Kirche und Kultur (1924), Die religiöse Lage der Gegenwart (1926; Eng. tr., 1932), The Interpretation of History (1936), The Protestant Era (1948), The Shaking of the Foundations (sermons, 1948), The Courage to Be (lectures, 1952), Love, Power, and Justice (lectures, 1954), The New Being (sermons, 1955), The Eternal Now (sermons, 1963), and Morality and Beyond (1963); the most important is prob. his Systematic Theology (3 vols., 1951–64).

Works ed. R. Albrecht (14 vols., Stuttgart, 1959–75). W. Leibrecht (ed.), Religion and Culture: Essays in Honor of Paul Tillich (New York, 1959); K. Hennig (ed.), Der Spannungsbogen: Festgabe für Paul Tillich zum 75. Geburtstag (1961). Studies ed. C. W. Kegley and R. W. Bretall (New York, 1952), by K. Hamilton (London, 1963), G. H. Tavard (ibid. [1963]), J. H. Thomas (ibid., 1963), A. J. McKelway (Richmond, Va., 1964; London, 1966), ed. T. A. O'Meara, OP, and C. D. Weisser, OP (Dubuque, Iowa [1965]), J. L. Adams (New York, 1965), D. H. Kelsey (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1967), C. J. Armbruster, SJ (New York, 1967), A. M. Macleod (London, 1973), W. and M. Pauck (ibid., 1977 ff.), J. P. Clayton (Berlin and New York, 1980 [in Eng.]), and L. Gilkey (New York, 1990). Religion et Culture: Actes du colloque international du centenaire Paul Tillich, Université Laval, Québec, 18 22 août 1986, ed. J. Richard (Laval, 1987). N. Ernst, Die Tiefe des Seins: Eine Untersuchung zum Ort der analogia entis im Denken Paul Tillichs (Fuldaer Studien, 2; St Ottilien, 1988). W. Schüssler, Jenseits von Religion und Nicht-Religion: Der Religionsbegriff im Werk Paul Tillichs (Athenäum Monografien, Theologie, 4; Frankfurt am Main [1989]). R. F. Bulman and F. J. Parrella (eds.), Paul Tillich: A New Catholic Assessment (Collegeville, Minnesota [1994]). R. C. Crossman, Paul Tillich: A Comprehensive Bibliography and Keyword Index to . . . Writings . . . in English (American Theological Library Association Bibliography Series, 9; Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1983). B. Jaspert in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 964–83, s.v.

Tillotson, John (1630–94), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at, and later Fellow of, Clare Hall, Cambridge. In 1661 he was present at the *Savoy Conference, as a watcher on the Nonconformist side. In 1688 he helped the *Seven Bishops to draw up their reasons for refusing to read the *Declaration of Indulgence of *James II. In 1689 he was appointed Dean of *St Paul's, and in the same year became a member of the commission for revising the BCP and the *Canons. He wished to be rid of the *Athanasian Creed and held *Zwinglian doctrines about the *Eucharist. The advocates of the policy of comprehension for Nonconformists proposed him in 1689 as *Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation, but he was heavily defeated. In 1691, with some reluctance through the circumstances of W. *Sancroft's deposition, he accepted the see of Canterbury. His archiepiscopate was undistinguished. His policy was dictated by hatred of the RC

Church and a desire to include all Protestant dissenters other than *Unitarians in the C of E. A famous preacher, he was a pattern on which the 18th-cent. divines modelled their sermons. He was the first married Abp. of Canterbury since M. *Parker.

Sermons, ed. R. Barker (14 vols., 1695–1704), and as Works, ed. with Life by T. Birch (3 vols., 1752). The Golden Book of Tillotson. Selection ed. by J. *Moffatt (1926). L. G. Locke, Tillotson: A Study in Seventeenth-Century Literature (Anglistica, 4; Copenhagen, 1954). G. Reedy, SJ, The Bible and Reason: Anglicans and Scripture in Late Seventeenth-Century England (Philadelphia [1985]), passim. J. Marshall, 'The Ecclesiology of the Latitude-men 1660–1689: Stillingfleet, Tillotson and "Hobbism"', JEH 36 (1985), pp. 407–27. A. C. Clifford, Atonement and Justification: English Evangelical Theology 1640–1790 (Oxford, 1990), pp. 32–49. A. Gordon in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 392–8.

Timothy, St. St *Paul's companion on his Second Missionary Journey and later apparently one of his most intimate friends. Two of the *Pastoral Epistles are addressed to him (see following entry). A native of Lystra, he was the son of a mixed marriage between a Jewess, Eunice, and a heathen, and was, acc. to Acts 16: 3, circumcised by Paul out of respect for the Jews. Among the missions with which the Apostle entrusted him were that to the *Thessalonians to encourage them under persecution (1 Thess. 3: 2) and that to *Corinth to confirm the converts in the faith (1 Cor. 4: 17). His name appears joined with that of Paul in the salutations of seven of the Epistles. 1 Tim. 1: 3 suggests that he became Paul's representative at *Ephesus, and *Eusebius saw him as the first bishop of that city. The 4th-cent. Acta S. Timothei narrate his martyrdom on 22 Jan. 97 at the hands of the pagans when he opposed the 'Katagogia', the licentious festivities of Diana. His supposed relics were translated to *Constantinople in 356. Feast day, 26 (formerly 24) Jan.; in the Greek and Syrian Churches, 22 Jan.

Gk. text of Acta ed. H. Usener (Bonn. diss. [1877]). R. A. *Lipsius, Die apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden, 2 (pt. 2; 1884), pp. 372–400, with further notes in Ergänzungsheft (1890), pp. 86 f. W. Michaelis, Die Gefangenschaft des Paulus in Ephesus und das Itinerar des Timotheus (Neutestamentliche Forschungen, Reihe 1, Heft 3; 1925). H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Les Actes de saint Timothée', in Anatolian Studies Presented to William Hepburn Buckler, ed. W. M. Calder and J. Keil (Manchester, 1939), pp. 77–84, repr. in Mélanges d'hagiographie grecque et latine (Subsidia Hagiographica, 42; 1966), pp. 408–15. F. F. Bruce, The Pauline Circle [1985], pp. 29–34. E. Fascher in PW, Zweite Reihe, 6 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1342–54, s.v. 'Timotheus (20)'; J. Gillman in Anchor Bible Dictionary (1992), pp. 558–60, s.v. See also introds. to comm. cited in following entry, and comm. to Acts, etc.

Timothy and Titus, Epistles to. The term 'Pastoral Epistles', under which these three Epistles attributed to St *Paul are generally known, dates from the 18th cent.; it was used of Titus by D. N. Barbot in 1703 and of all three by Paul Anton in lectures delivered at Halle in 1726–7 and published as his Exegetische Abhandlungen (1753–5). The First to Timothy professes to have been sent from Macedonia, that to Titus while its author was on a journey to Nicopolis, and the Second to Timothy during another imprisonment in Rome, shortly before the author's death. But since F. D. E. *Schleiermacher disputed the authenticity of 1 Tim. in 1807 and F. C. *Baur in 1835 argued that all three stem from a later period, their Pauline authorship has been increasingly denied. The few scholars who still argue for it propose a date beyond the narrative of Acts, suggesting that Paul was released from imprisonment in Rome, travelled East as well as to *Spain, developed strong views on an organized ministry, and used a secretary, thus accounting for the differences in style and vocabulary from the earlier Epistles. P. N. Harrison, following E. *Renan and others, argued that 5 (later 3) genuine fragments from Paul had been incorporated, but this idea has found little support, and despite problems about pseudonymity and the universal witness of tradition since St *Irenaeus and *Tertullian, the critical view has prevailed. The absence of these Epistles from *Marcion's canon may support a second-century dating, but hints about heresies combated are vague and it is impossible to identify even the 'antitheses of the so-called gnosis' (1 Tim. 6: 20). These Epistles contain earlier traditions ('the saying is reliable', e.g. 2 Tim. 2: 11) but themselves reflect a period of consolidation in which orthodoxy was more valued than theological exploration, and error in doctrine and morals was to be denounced rather than discussed.

The chief subject of these Epistles is the organization of a Christian ministry able to combat the false doctrine that Timothy (1 Tim. 1 and 4, 2 Tim. 2: 15–4: 8) and Titus (3: 9–11) are told to confront. It seems that these teachings included some element of Jewish speculation, as well as an asceticism incompatible with belief in God's creation; it is often held that they contained elements later prominent in *Gnosticism. 1 Tim. orders the institution of public prayers (2: 1–8), regulates the position of men and women in the community (2: 9–15), describes the qualities necessary for bishops and deacons (3), gives instructions for the enrolment of widows and the rule of elders (5), and concludes with various moral exhortations. In 2 Tim. the author encourages the disciples not only to stand fast against false teachers but also to endure every difficulty and to preach the word 'in season [and] out of season'. The Ep. to Titus deals with the qualities required in elders (1), the duties of various classes in society (2), and motivates Christian life by reference to Baptism (3). The witness of the Pastorals to the development of Church organisation is important but ambiguous. 'Bishops' (ἐπίσκοποι) appear to be synonymous with 'elders' (πρεσβύτεροι) in Tit. 1: 5–7, but the reference to 'the bishop' (in the singular) in 1: 7 may be an indication of a development in the direction of the monarchical bishop found in St *Ignatius (e.g. Smyrn. 8. 1–9. 1). 'Deacon' (διάκονος) may still be a non-technical term meaning 'helper, assistant', but to many scholars it already seems to denote a grade in the order of ministry (1 Tim. 3: 8–13). In each case, interest centres on the moral qualifications of the officials and not on their function.

The Epp. were the subject of comm. by St John *Chrysostom (PG 62. 501–700), *Ambrosiaster (PL 17. 461–503), and J. *Calvin (Geneva, 1563; modern Eng. tr., 1964). Important modern comm. incl. those of B. *Weiss (KEK, NT 11, 5th edn., 1885), J. H. *Bernard (Camb. Bib., Gk. text, 1899), M. *Dibelius (Hb. NT 3, pt. 2, 1913, pp. 133–222; 4th edn. rev. by H. Conzelmann, ibid., 13; 1966; Eng. tr., Hermeneia [1972]), W. Lock (ICC, 1924), C. Spicq, OP (Études bibliques, 1947; 4th edn., 2 vols., 1969), with detailed bibl., C. K. Barrett (Oxford, 1963), J. N. D. Kelly (Black's NT Comm., 1963), G. Holtz (Theologischer Handkommentar zum Neuen Testament, 13; 1965), A. T. Hanson (Cambridge, 1966), J. Roloff (on 1 Tim., Evangelisch-katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 15; Neukirchen, 1988). F. D. E. Schleiermacher, Ueber den sogenannten ersten Brief des Paulos an den Timotheos (1807); F. C. Baur, Die sogenannten Pastoralbriefe des Apostels Paulus (1835). P. N. Harrison, The Problem of the Pastoral Epistles (1921), with full bibl., pp. 179–84; id., Paulines and Pastorals (1964); W. Michaelis, Pastoralbriefe und Gefangenschaftsbriefe: Zur Echtheitsfrage der Pastoralbriefe (Neutestamentliche Forschungen, Reihe 1, Heft 6; 1930). A. T. Hanson, Studies in the Pastoral Epistles (1968). D. C. Verner, The Household of God: The Social World of the Pastoral Epistles (Society of Biblical Literature, Dissertation Series, 71; Chico, Calif. [1983]). C. F. D. Moule, 'The Problem of the Pastoral Epistles: A Reappraisal', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 47 (1965), pp. 430–52, repr. in his Essays in New Testament Interpretation (1982), pp. 113–32. C. Spicq, OP, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1966), cols. 1–73, s.v. 'Pastorales (Épitres)'; J. D. Quinn in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 560–71, s.v.

Timothy (d. 518), Patr. of *Constantinople. He was in charge of the cathedral ornaments of Constantinople till 511 when, on the deposition of Macedonius II, the Emp. Anastasius I made him patriarch. After some initial hesitation, he became a strong defender of the *Monophysite doctrine and in 512 provoked a riot through adding to the '*Trisagion' the Monophysite formula 'Who was crucified for us'. At a synod in 515 he formally condemned the Chalcedonian teaching and afterwards worked in conjunction with *Severus of Antioch. The regular use of the *Nicene Creed in the Liturgy at Constantinople is ascribed by *Theodore the Lector to Timothy; it had probably been introduced earlier at Antioch by *Peter the Fuller.

V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, 1. Les Actes des patriarches, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 143–8 (nos. 193–205a). Id., in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 10 (1965), col. 200, s.v.

Timothy (6th or 7th cent.), priest of the 'Great Church' (sc. *Sancta Sophia) in Constantinople. He wrote a treatise on the reception of heretics into the Church, dividing them into three categories: those who require Baptism (e.g. *Eunomians and *Pelagians), those who require *Confirmation (Chrismation) only (e.g. *Quartodecimans and *Arians), and those who are required simply to renounce their errors (esp. *Messalians and *Monophysites, on the variety of whom he displays detailed knowledge). He is first cited by the Patr. *Nicephorus (806–15).

The Gk. text of his work Περὶ τῶν προσερχομένων τῇ ἁγίᾳ ἐκκλησίᾳ ('De Receptione Haereticorum') was first pr. by J. Meursius, Varii Divini, 1 (Leiden, 1619), pp. 111–30; also pr., with Lat. tr., by J. B. *Cotelier, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, 3 (Paris, 1686), pp. 377–424, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 86 (1). 11–74. CPG 3 (1979), p. 326 (no. 7016). D. Stiernon, AA, in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3455 f., s.v. 'Timoteo di Constantinopoli'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 841.

Timothy Aelurus (d. 477), Patr. of *Alexandria. His name 'Aelurus' (Gk. αἴλουρος, 'cat') was given him by his opponents because of his small stature. He became patriarch in 457 after his predecessor Proterius had been lynched by the mob, but, being unacceptable to the majority of bishops on account of his *Monophysite views, he was banished by the Emp. Leo I in 460 and replaced by Timothy Salophaciolus. During his exile he wrote much to propagate Monophysitism, but also anathematized *Eutyches because, unlike Eutyches, he held that the human nature of Christ was of the same substance as other human beings. He was recalled to Alexandria by the Emp. Basiliscus in 475, where he died before another decree of banishment by the Emp. *Zeno could be carried out. Of his writings several letters are extant in a Syriac translation. A collection of treatises and letters against the Council of *Chalcedon, also in Syriac, goes under his name, as well as an Armenian version of a similar work. In the *Coptic Church he is venerated as a saint, his feast day being 31 July.

R. Y. Ebied and L. R. Wickham, 'A Collection of Unpublished Syriac Letters of Timothy Aelurus', JTS NS 21 (1970), pp. 321–69; idd., 'Timothy Aelurus: Against the Council of Chalcedon', in C. Laga and others (eds.), After Chalcedon: Studies in Theology and Church History offered to Professor Albert van Roey for his Seventieth Birthday (Orientalia Lovaniensia Analecta, 18; 1985), pp. 115–66, both with text and Eng. tr. Details of other works surviving in versions in CPG 3 (1979), pp. 62–5 (nos. 5475–91). J. Lebon, 'La Christologie de Timothée Aelure, archevêque monophysite d'Alexandrie, d'après les sources syriaques inédites', RHE 9 (1908), pp. 677–702; id. in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 425–580. G. Bardy in Fliche and Martin, 4 (1937), pp. 279–87. W. *Bright in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 1031–3, s.v. 'Timotheus (18)'; H. G. Opitz in PW, Zweite Reihe, 6 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1355–7, s.v. 'Timotheos (24)'.

Tindal, Matthew (1655–1733), one of the leading *Deists. Educated at Lincoln and Exeter colleges, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1678. For a short time in *James II's reign he became a RC, but returned to the C of E at Easter 1688. He called himself a 'Christian Deist', and his book, The Rights of the Christian Church asserted against the Romish and all other Priests who claim an Independent Power over it (1706), written in defence of a rationalistic and *Erastian position, created a considerable stir. Author, publisher, and printer were prosecuted, but four editions were printed. Tindal then issued A Defence of the Rights of the Christian Church (1709), which was burned, together with H. *Sacheverell's sermon, in 1710 by the common hangman, by order of the House of Commons. It was denounced for several years, as it was thought to undermine the Christian religion. He replied at the end of his life by Christianity as old as the Creation, or the Gospel a Republication of the Religion of Nature (1730), which became the 'Bible' of Deism. It sought to show that, common to all rational creatures 'there's a law of nature or reason, absolutely perfect, eternal, and unchangeable; and that the design of the Gospel was not to add to, or take from this law', but to free men from superstition.

E. C[urll], Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Matthew Tindal . . . with a History of the Controversies wherein he was engaged (1733); The Religious, Rational, and Moral Conduct of Matthew Tindal . . . in a letter to a Friend by a Member of All Souls College (1735). J. Leland, A View of the Principal Deistical Writers that have Appeared in England in the Last and Present Century, 1 (1754), pp. 144–76. L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 1 (1876), pp. 134–63. G. C. Joyce in HERE 4 (1911), pp. 535–7, s.v. 'Deism'. L. Stephen in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 403–5.

Tindal, William. See TYNDALE, WILLIAM.

Tintern Abbey, on the River Wye. It was founded by Walter de Clare in 1131 for French *Cistercian monks from the Abbey of L'Aumône. The magnificent abbey church was built in the late 13th cent., but the subsequent history of the monastery was uneventful, and when it was dissolved in 1536 there were only 13 monks left. The ruins of Tintern Abbey, in scenery which inspired W. *Wordsworth to one of his finest poems, are among the most beautiful in England. The roofless church, with its delicately traced windows, shows the transitional Gothic style to perfection. The rest of the abbey has, for the most part, disappeared.

W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 5 (1825 edn.), pp. 265–73. [C. Heath,] Descriptive Accounts of Tintern Abbey: Selected from the Most Esteemed Writers on that Beautiful Ruin: with . . . a correct translation of the charters of the Earls of Pembroke and Norfolk, whose ancestors founded the Monastery in the Year 1131 (1798). O. E. Craster, Tintern Abbey, Monmouthshire (1956). On the daughter house of the same name in Co. Wexford, see P. H. Hore, History of the Town and County of Wexford (1901), pp. 3–151.

Tintoretto (1518–94), Venetian Mannerist painter. Jacopo Robusti was known as Tintoretto on account of his father's occupation as a dyer. He was born in Venice and spent his life there. He is known to have been a Master by 1539, but his first certainly datable work is The Last Supper in S. Marcuola, Venice (1547), a theme which he often repeated and which is already treated in characteristically dramatic fashion. His reputation was established in 1548 with his even more dramatic St Mark liberating a Slave (Venice, Accademia). His most important religious work was undertaken for the Scuola di San Rocco, a charitable and religious body in Venice of which he was a leading member. He began work for their church and meeting hall in 1564, and in 1576, in return for a small annuity, he embarked on a series of 64 canvases to cover the entire walls and ceilings of the Lower Hall and the two rooms of the upper floor of the Hall; they were completed in 1588. The Lower Hall has a series of scenes from the life of the BVM and pictures of St *Mary Magdalene and St *Mary of Egypt, all about 12 ft. high. On the upper floor the paintings are over 17 ft. high and consist of scenes from the life and passion of Christ (including an enormous Crucifixion). All these works, which concentrate on the dramatic moment, have sharp perspectives and contrasts of light and shade, as well as strong colour. Like his younger contemporary *El Greco in Spain, he expresses in the highest degree the artistic ideals adopted by the RC Church in the 16th cent.

The primary source is the Life by C. Ridolfi (Venice, 1642), virtually repr. in id., Le Maraviglie dell'Arte, overo Le Vite de gl'illustri Pittore Veneti e dello Stato, 2 (ibid., 1648), pp. 2–64; Eng. tr. by C. and R. Enggass, The Life of Tintoretto and his children (University Park, Pa., and London [1984]), pp. 11–84. R. Pallucchini and P. Rossi, Tintoretto: L'Opere sacre e profane (2 vols., Milan [1982]). Other works by H. Tietze (London, 1948), C. Bernari and P. de Vecchi (Classici dell'Arte, Milan, 1970), and by F. Valcanover and T. Pignatti (Milan, 1985; Eng. tr., New York, 1985). R. Pallucchini in Encyclopedia of World Art, 14 (1967), cols. 112–33, s.v., with extensive bibl.

tippet (Lat. liripipium). A broad black scarf worn by Anglican clergy in choir over the surplice. It may be of silk if its wearer is a graduate, but in other cases is of stuff. It was evolved, it seems, from the long ends of the hood which hung down from the shoulders in front, and was not originally confined to the clergy. There has been much dispute as to what vesture was denoted by the word in the 16th and 17th cents., some antiquarians holding that it was then used of a garment identical with the ordinary graduate's hood, except in the matter of shape and material. Can. 74 of 1604 ordered all the clergy to wear the tippet as part of their ordinary apparel, and can. 58 allowed non-graduates to wear it as a substitute for the hood. The word is not used in the 1969 canons, which order the minister to wear a scarf at Morning and Evening Prayer, and a scarf or stole for the Occasional Offices and the Eucharist, adding that when a scarf is worn, the minister may also wear the hood of his degree (B 8). The custom of confining the tippet to dignitaries and chaplains has never had any authority.

Tischendorf, Constantin (1815–74), NT textual critic. From 1859 he was professor of theology at Leipzig. Between 1840 and 1860 he visited many libraries in Europe and the Near East in search of MSS, the most famous of his finds being his dramatic discovery of the *Codex Sinaiticus (q.v.). Besides careful editions of several important biblical MSS (e.g. of *Codex Ephraemi, 1843–5; *Codex Amiatinus, 1850; Codex Claromontanus, 1852), he published between 1841 and 1869 eight editions of the Greek text of the NT with a full critical apparatus of the variant readings. The last edition of this work, the 'octava critica maior', remains by reason of the abundance of its data a standard book of reference for the text of the NT.

C. R. Gregory, 'De Tischendorfio', prefixed to the editio octava critica maior of Tischendorf's Gk. NT, 3 (1894), pp. 3–22, with list of his works. L. Schneller (son-in-law), Tischendorf-Erinnerungen: Merkwürdige Geschichte einer verlorenen Handschrift (1927; Eng. tr., 1939 [popular]). I. Ševčenko, 'New Documents on Constantine Tischendorf and the Codex Sinaiticus', Scriptorium, 18 (1964), pp. 55–80. K. Aland, Konstantin von Tischendorff (1815–1874): Neutestamentliche Textforschung damals und heute (Sb. (Bayr.), 133, Heft 2; 1993). Popular account in J. Bentley, Secrets of Mount Sinai: The Story of Codex Sinaiticus (1985). G. Bertheau in PRE (3rd edn.), 19 (1907), pp. 788–97, s.v.

Tissot, James Joseph Jacques (1836–1902), French Bible illustrator. He was a painter of fashionable women in Paris before he fled to England in 1871. Here he became known by his caricatures for Vanity Fair and as a portrait and genre painter. Later he returned to Paris, where his art underwent a complete change owing to an experience of conversion, and henceforth he devoted himself to the illustration of the Life of Christ, for which purpose he made comprehensive studies in Palestine. His Vie de Notre-Seigneur Jésus-Christ (1896) is a series of some 350 watercolours, representing the scenes of the Gospel in a fresh and unconventional style which abandons the traditional types. It was followed by an unfinished sequence of illustrations to the OT which, however, are inferior in quality to the earlier work.

An edn. of the OT (Gen.–Job, with some additions) in Fr., incorporating Tissot's illustrations, was pub., with preface by A. D. Sertillanges, 2 vols., Paris, 1904; with text in Eng., 2 vols., London, 1904. J. Laver, 'Vulgar Society': The Romantic Career of James Tissot, 1836–1902 (1936); M. Wentworth, James Tissot tithes. The tenth part of all fruits and profits due to God and thus to the Church for the maintenance of its ministry. The payment of tithes has been held to be enjoined not merely by ecclesiastical law but by *natural and divine law—by natural law because it is essential to the maintenance of religion, which is enjoined by natural law; by divine law because the payment of tithes is specifically ordered in the OT (Lev. 27: 30–2, Deut. 14: 22–4). It is, however, only implied in the NT (Mt. 5: 17–19, 23: 23) which places much greater emphasis on voluntary giving (e.g. 2 Cor. 9: 6–7).

(Oxford, 1984); K. Matyjaszkiewicz (ed.), James Tissot (1984); C. Wood, The Life and Work of Jacques Joseph Tissot (1986).

The early Church depended on offerings. In the 4th cent. payment of the tenth part of all the produce of lands began to be taught as a Christian duty and in the following cents. this gradually became established. In England the payment of tithes was strongly enjoined by the legatine synod of 786 and legally enforced by King *Athelstan's Ordinance *c.*930. Once received, tithes were subject to canonical division into four parts between the bishop, the clergy, the fabric of the church, and the relief of the poor. However, this was not universally observed and the poor and the bishop were sometimes denied their share. In England a tripartite division excluding the bishop survived until the 11th cent. but eventually tithes were left at the entire disposal of the clergy who received them.

At first, the owner of the land might pay the tithe to what clergy he pleased. Probably they were usually paid to the bishop, who distributed them among his clergy. But, as the parochial system developed, the tithes of each parish were allotted to its own '*parson', often by the action of the lord of the manor, who in this way provided the endowment necessary for securing the right to build a church on his estate. In time, the allocation of tithes became the general law.

Tithes were of three sorts: praedial, mixed, and personal. Praedial tithes came immediately from the ground, such as grain, timber, and fruit. Mixed tithes came from things nourished by the ground, such as calves, lambs, chickens, milk, cheese, and eggs. Personal tithes arose from the net profits of labour and industry. Wild animals were not subject to tithe, nor was barren, uncultivated land. Tithes were further divided into great tithes (chiefly corn, hay, and wood) and small tithes (all others). The amount actually produced was irrelevant to this distinction. Tithe was payable annually even if the fruits had grown without being collected—as in the case of saffron, gathered only once in three years. The BCP provides for payment of tithes, with other ecclesiastical dues, at the time of communion on *Easter Day.

The incumbent, when entitled to the whole tithes of a parish, was termed a *rector. But tithes could be appropriated to a spiritual person or corporation (and, after the *dissolution of the monasteries, to lay people as well) who were then normally compelled to provide and endow a clergyman to reside in the parish and perform the ecclesiastical duties, under the name of *vicar. The vicar's endowment usually took the form of a portion of the *glebe, together with the small tithes, because they were troublesome to collect, while the rector (or appropriator) retained the great tithes for himself. Strictly, *impropriation was the term correctly applied to lay people, and *appropriation to bishops, colleges, religious houses, and the like.

Originally all land in England was theoretically subject to tithe, but there were a number of exceptions, including land held or derived from certain privileged orders (e.g. the *Cistercians, *Templars, and *Hospitallers), Church or glebe land occupied by the incumbent himself, and forest land occupied or leased by the Crown. The right to tithe could also lapse after non-payment over many years. However, the most important means of freeing land from tithe were: (1) the composition real, whereby until 1571 real property was given in exchange for the exemption of other property, and (2) the modus decimandi, or modus, whereby tithe was commuted to some other, more convenient, annual payment. Tithes were also commuted by statute to 'corn rents' or rent-charges on land, particularly when common or waste land was enclosed; the value of these charges fluctuated with the price of corn.

The desire to obtain exemption from tithe was prompted as much by the inconvenience of a levy in kind as by a wish to fix or limit its value. By the 19th cent. the anomalous nature of tithes was widely felt, and the Tithe Act 1836 established a procedure for the commutation of all tithes into tithe rent-charges on land. This was further refined until by the Tithe Act 1936 all tithe rent-charges were extinguished and replaced by an annuity payable for 60 years by the landowner to the Crown, while the Crown compensated the owner of the rent-charge in turn with an appropriate amount of 3 per cent redemption stock charged on the Consolidated Fund. The Finance Act 1977 finally ended payment of the annuity by the landowner, and in 1988 all the remaining stock created under the 1936 Act was redeemed from the beneficiaries by the Treasury. Tithes have therefore ceased to exist in England altogether.

In Scotland, tithes were collected under the name of *teinds until their abolition in 1925. In Ireland, tithes were abolished in 1871. They have never been part of the law of the United States of America, although similar payments were sometimes made.

See also STEWARDSHIP.

Early Christian refs. to tithes are conveniently collected by J. Sharpe in DCA 2 (1893), pp. 1963–6, s.v. The classic study is J. *Selden, The History of Tithes (1618). H. W. Clarke, A History of Tithes (1891). G. Constable Monastic Tithes from their Origins to the Twelfth Century (Cambridge, 1964). E. Le Roy Ladurie, Tithe and Agrarian History from the Fourteenth to the Nineteenth Centuries, tr. by S. Burke (ibid. and Paris, 1982). English law of tithe is described in Halsbury's Laws of England (4th edn.), 14 (1975), pp. 661–72 (paras. 1209–23) and legislation (1548–1977) is pr. in Halsbury's Statutes of England and Wales (4th edn.), 14 (1986), pp. 1166–1285.

Titian (d. 1576), Tiziano Vecellio or Vecelli, Venetian painter. Acc. to tradition, he was 99 years old when he died, but modern scholars think it more likely that he was born *c.*1487/90 than in 1476/7. Titian was a pupil of Gentile and Giovanni Bellini and in his early years much influenced by Giorgione, though he cultivated a more monumental style. To this period belongs the Tribute Money (*c.*1515; Dresden), which is famous for the face of Christ with its impressive blending of sweetness and majesty. After Bellini's death (1516) Titian became the acknowledged head of the Venetian school and was connected with many European monarchs, e.g. *Charles V and Francis I. His most famous painting of this time is the huge Assumption (completed in 1518) for the High Altar of Santa Maria dei Frari in Venice, where it remains; though of high craftsmanship, it is without deeper religious feeling. On the other hand, his stirring St Peter Martyr (1528–30; destroyed in 1867, but known from copies), Crowning with Thorns (*c.*1542; Louvre), and Ecce Homo (1543; Vienna) are all fraught with tragic emotion. In his later years his compositions are remarkable for an increasing emphasis on dramatic effects. His St Sebastian (*c.*1570/75; St Petersburg), the Entombment (1525; Louvre; another, 1559, at the Prado) and the Annunciation (*c.*1564; S. Salvatore, Venice) are all vivid scenes of much beauty in colouring and form, though lacking the interior spirit characteristic of medieval religious painting.

H. Tietze, Tizian: Leben und Werk (2 vols., Vienna, 1936, vol. 2 being plates with reprods., some in colour; this latter vol. also pub., with introd. in Eng., London, 1937; 2nd edn. (abbreviated), 1950). F. Valcanover, Tutta la pittura di Tiziano (2 vols., Milan, 1960; Eng. tr., 4 vols., 1965). R. Pallucchini, Tiziano (2 vols., Florence [1969]). H. E. Wethey, The Paintings of Titian (3 vols., 1969–75). E. Panofsky, Problems in Titian, mostly iconographic (Wrightsman Lectures, 1969).

title (Lat. titulus). At least since the 3rd cent., this term has been used to designate the older churches of *Rome. As several clergy were attached to each titulus, all of whom were provided with revenues for their personal maintenance, allocation to a 'title' at ordination came to mean the provision of maintenance, which otherwise was the personal responsibility of the Pope or ordaining bishop. From this, the term has acquired the general sense of a definite spiritual charge or office with guarantee of maintenance, without appointment to which a bishop may not ordinarily ordain a man (or woman), unless he is prepared to support that person until he can prefer him (or her) to a 'living'. The C of E rules are contained in can. C 5 of the 1969 Canons. In the RC Church there were detailed provisions concerning title, but they do not appear in the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici*. See also BENEFICE.

J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 9, Hefte 1 and 2; 1918); L. *Duchesne, 'Les Titres presbytéraux et les diaconies', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 7 (1887), pp. 217–43.

Titus, St. A Gentile disciple of St *Paul, who first appears on the journey to the Apostles' Council at *Jerusalem (Gal. 2: 1) and was later sent on difficult missions to *Corinth (2 Cor. 8: 6, 16 f., and 23). Acc. to the Pauline traditions of the *Pastoral Epistles he was left behind in Crete to organize the Church there (Tit. 1: 5), summoned to meet Paul at Nicopolis in Epirus (Tit. 3: 12) and afterwards sent by him to Dalmatia (2 Tim. 4: 10). He is assumed to have returned to Crete, of which, acc. to *Eusebius, he was the first bishop. His body was reputed to rest at Gortyna, the ancient capital of the island. After the invasion of the Saracens in 823, the head was brought to *Venice, where it has since been venerated in St Mark's. Feast day in the Greek and Syrian Churches, 25 Aug.; in the Latin Church, 4 Jan. In the RC Church the feast was transferred to 6 Feb. by *Pius IX to avoid coincidence with the Octave of the Holy Innocents, but has now been joined with that of St Timothy on 26 Jan.

The main lit. is to be found in comm. to the Epistle addressed to Titus, cited s.v. TIMOTHY AND TITUS, EPISTLES TO. C. K. Barrett, 'Titus', in E. E. Ellis and M. Wilcox (eds.), Neotestamentica et Semitica: Studies in honour of Matthew Black (1969), pp. 1–14. F. F. Bruce, The Pauline Circle [1985], pp. 58–65. On the apocryphal letter of Titus to Paul, R. A. *Lipsius, Die apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden, 2 (pt. 2; 1884), pp. 401–6; A. von *Harnack, 'Der apokryphe Brief des Paulusschülers Titus "De Dispositione Sanctimonii" ', in Sb. (Berl.), 1925, pp. 180–213; A. de Santos Otero in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1989), 2, pp. 50–70; Eng. tr., 2 (1992), pp. 53–74. E. Fascher in PW, 2. Reihe, 6 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1579–86, s.v. 'Titus (4)'; J. Walker in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 581 f.

Titus, Epistle to. See TIMOTHY AND TITUS, EPISTLES TO.

Titus (4th cent.), Bp. of Bostra. Little is known of his life except that he was involved in a controversy with the Emp. *Julian, who ordered his expulsion, and that he took part in a synod at *Antioch, in 363, which sent a letter to the Emp. *Jovian recognizing the Nicene Creed. His name has survived through his authorship of a voluminous treatise against the *Manichaeans. In its first part he gives the Christian solution of the problem of evil based on the ideas of Divine Providence and human free will; in the second he defends the OT and denounces the Manichaean falsifications of the NT. The first half of the treatise is preserved in the Greek original, but the whole now exists only in a Syriac version. Both were edited in 1859 by P. A. de *Lagarde, who recognized in the Greek text an interpolation which has been identified as a work of *Serapion of Thmuis. Titus is also the author of a work on St Luke in the form of homilies, fragments of which have survived in later catenae.

Gk. text first pub. by J. *Basnage, Thesaurus Monumentorum Ecclesiasticorum et Historicorum, 1 (Antwerp, 1725), pp. 56–162; repr. from A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG 18. 1065–204; crit. edn. by P. A. de Lagarde (Berlin, 1859). Syriac text ed. id. (ibid., 1859). P. Nagel, 'Neues griechisches Material zu Titus von Bostra (Adversus Manichaeos III 7–29)', in J. Irmscher and P. Nagel (eds.), Studia Byzantina, 2: Beiträge aus der byzantinistischen Forschung der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik zum XIV. Internationalen Byzantinistenkongress Bukarest 1971 (Berliner Byzantinische Arbeiten, 44; Berlin, 1973), pp. 285–350. J. Sickenberger, Titus von Bostra: Studien zu dessen Lukashomilien (TU 21, Heft 1; 1901). R. P. Casey, 'The Text of the Anti-Manichaean Writings of Titus of Bostra and Serapion of Thmuis', HTR 21 (1928), pp. 97–111. A. *Baumstark, 'Der Text der Mani-Zitate in der syrischen Übersetzung des Titus von Bostra', Oriens Christianus, 28 (1931), pp. 23–42. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 286–8 (nos. 3575–81). R. P. Casey in PW, 2. Reihe, 6 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1586–91, s.v. 'Titus (5) v. Bostra'; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 999–1006, s.v. 'Titus (1) de Bostra'.

Tobit, Book of. One of the apocryphal books of the OT. It relates the story of Tobit, a pious Jew taken captive to Nineveh after the fall of *Samaria to the Assyrians. In pursuit of his good works, Tobit became poor and blind in his old age. He prayed to God to deliver him, and, remembering a debt due to him from a friend in Media, sent his son Tobias there with a companion who later revealed himself as the angel *Raphael. With the assistance of the angel, Tobias rescued his kinswoman, Sarah, from the power of a demon, and married her. Raphael recovered the debt and then enabled Tobias to heal the aged Tobit of his blindness.

The chief purpose of the story is to inculcate that God is faithful to such Jews as are faithful to Him and to recommend virtue, esp. almsgiving and the burial of the dead. The book exists in Greek, Latin, Syriac, Aramaic, and Hebrew versions. Its original language was Aramaic or Hebrew, and its date probably *c.*200 BC. There is a copy among the *Dead Sea Scrolls. Until modern times it was generally regarded as historical, but many now consider it a piece of folklore and find in it traces of Persian demonology. It also draws on traditions about *Ahikar (who appears in the book as Tobit's nephew), a familiar hero of many ancient Near Eastern tales. Owing to its intrinsic charm Tobit has been one of the most popular books of the Bible. It was frequently quoted by the Fathers from the time of St *Polycarp (Phil. 10), and was a favourite subject of Christian art, its principal scenes being represented in the Catacombs.

The Gk. text is pr. in edns. of the Septuagint (q.v.); for edns. of the Lat. text see bibl. to OLD LATIN VERSIONS, also A. Neubauer, cited below; Heb. text ed. S. *Münster (Basle, 1542); Heb. and Syriac text also in B. *Walton's London Polyglot of 1657; Aramaic text ed. A. Neubauer (Oxford, 1878). R. Hanhart, Text und Textgeschichte des Buches Tobit (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 139; 1984). Modern comm. incl. those of D. C. Simpson in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 174–241, F. Zimmermann (Jewish Apocryphal Literature; New York, 1958), and J. C. Dancy, The Shorter Books of the Apocrypha (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1972), pp. 1–66. D. C. Simpson, 'The Chief Recensions of the Book of Tobit', JTS 14 (1913), pp. 516–30. J. Gamberoni, Die Auslegung des Buches Tobias in der griechisch-lateinischen Kirche der Antike und der Christenheit des Westens bis 1600 (Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 21; 1969). M. Rabenau, Studien zum Buch Tobit (Beihefte zur ZATW, 220; 1994). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York [1949]; London [1954]), pp. 258–84, with bibl. p. 534. G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Jewish Literature Between the Bible and the Mishnah (Philadelphia [1981]), pp. 30–35. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 222–32. C. A. Moore in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 585–94, s.v., with bibl.

Toc H. A Christian fellowship embracing men of all ages over 16, of all classes, denominations, and political opinions. Its Women's Association covers the same ground among women. It originated in Talbot House, a soldiers' club opened in 1915 at Poperinghe in Belgium under the Revd P. T. B. Clayton, MC, a C of E chaplain, and named after Lt. Gilbert Talbot, son of E. S. *Talbot (q.v.). In 1920 Toc H (the army signallers' method of pronouncing T H) was refounded in London and spread rapidly through Britain and English-speaking countries. It was incorporated by Royal Charter, 14 Dec. 1922. It is organized in branches and has a number of residential houses ('Marks'). The close fellowship finds its natural outlet in a great variety of Christian social service.

P. T. B. Clayton, Tales of Talbot House: Everyman's Club in Poperinghe and Ypres, 1915 1918 (1919); P. W. Monie, Toc H under Weigh [1927]; J. Rice and K. Prideaux-Brune, Out of a Hop Loft: Seventy-five years of Toc H (1990). M. Harcourt, Tubby Clayton: A Personal Saga (1953).

tokens, Communion. See COMMUNION TOKENS.

Toland, John (1670–1722), *Deistical writer. He was a RC Irishman who became a Protestant at the age of 16. In 1687 he entered Glasgow University, and after spending some time in English Protestant families, probably as tutor, was sent to *Leiden, where he studied Divinity under F. Spanheim. In 1694 he went to Oxford, where in 1695 he finished his Christianity not Mysterious (pub. 1696). In it he asserted that neither God Himself nor His revelation is above the comprehension of human reason, and attributed the mysteries of Christianity to the intrusion of pagan conceptions and the machinations of priestcraft. The work roused great indignation and was condemned and caused to be burned by the Irish Parliament in 1697, and Toland fled from Ireland, whither he had returned, to England to avoid imprisonment. In 1698 he published a Life of Milton. A passage of this book, which was believed to cast doubt on the authenticity of the NT, caused great scandal, and Toland replied in his Amyntor, or a Defence of Milton's Life (1699), stating that the passage in question referred to the apocryphal writings, of which he gave a remarkable list. In 1701 he defended the Act of Succession in his book Anglia Libera, which won him the favour of the Electress Sophia, and during the next years he several times visited the courts at Hanover and Berlin. He was admitted to the intimate circle of the Prussian Queen Sophie Charlotte, to whom he addressed several letters (Letters to Serena, 1704), one of which became famous through its attempt to prove that motion is essential to matter. From 1707 to 1710 he travelled on the Continent and, after returning to England, wrote many polemical pamphlets, directed esp. against *High Churchmen and Jacobites. In 1718 appeared his Nazarenus, a treatise on the *Ebionites, and in 1720 Tetradymus, a collection of essays dealing, among other things, with the natural explanation of Scripture miracles. In the same year he published his Pantheisticon, a kind of pagan liturgy in imitation of Christian services, in which he expounded a *pantheistic creed, the term 'pantheist' having apparently first been used by him in 1705. Though not an original thinker, Toland was one of the most influential representatives of Deism, and his books largely contributed to later discussions on the relations between reason and revelation and the genuineness of the NT Books.

A Collection of Several Pieces of Mr. John Toland, now first published from his Original Manuscripts (2 vols., 1726), with Memoir of his Life and Writings [by P. Desmaizeaux], vol. 1, pp. iii–xcii. An Historical Account of the Life and Writings of the late Eminently Famous Mr. John Toland by one of his most intimate friends (1722). C. Giuntini, Panteismo e ideologia repubblicana: John Toland (1670–1722) (Bologna [1979]); R. E. Sullivan, John Toland and the Deist Controversy: A Study in Adaptations (1982); S. H. Daniel, John Toland: His Methods, Manners and Mind (Kingston, Ont. [1984]). G. R. Cragg, From Puritanism to the Age of Reason: A Study of Changes in Religious Thought within the Church of England 1660 to 1700 (Cambridge, 1950), pp. 136–55; P. Harrison, 'Religion' and the religions in the English Enlightenment (Cambridge, 1990), esp. pp. 86–91, 156 f., and 164–7. G. Carabelli, Tolandiana: Materiali bibliografici per lo studio dell'opera e della fortuna di John Toland (1670–1722) (2 vols., Florence, 1975–8). L. Stephen in DNB 56 (1898), pp. 438–42.

Toledo, Councils of. Some 30 ecclesiastical Councils took place at Toledo (Concilia Toletana) between the 5th and 16th cents., the canons of the earlier of which are preserved in the *Hispana Collection. They include the 'First' (400), directed against *Priscillianism; the 'Third' (589), when King *Recared formally renounced the *Arian Creed; the 'Fourth' (633), under St *Isidore of Seville, which affirmed the Christian significance of kingship and issued important liturgical regulations; and the 'Twelfth' (681), which established the primacy of the See of Toledo in the Spanish Church. For the liturgy of Toledo, see MOZARABIC RITE.

Crit. edn. of the canons of the earlier Councils (1–17) in J. Vives (ed.), Concilios visigóticos e hispano-romanos (España Cristiana: Textos, 1; 1963), pp. 19–33, 42–52, 107–45, 186–324, 344–69, 380–474, 482–537. An earlier edn. is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 84. 327–562. Eng. tr. of some of the canons, with introd., in E. H. Landon, A Manual of the Councils of the Holy Church (2nd edn. by P. Landon), 2 [1893], pp. 151–69. On the first, third, fourth, and twelfth councils, Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 122–5; 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 222–8, 279–81, and 540–6. J. Orlandis and D. Ramos-Lissón, Die Synoden auf der Iberischen Halbinsel bis zum Einbruch des Islam (1981), pp. 39–51, 61–5, 95–117, 144–223, 233–40, 248–93, and 299–323. J. A. de Aldama, SJ, El Símbolo Toledano I (Analecta Gregoriana, 7; 1943); J. Madoz, SJ, 'Le Symbole du IV^e concile de Tolède', RHE 34 (1938), pp. 5–20. A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1176–208, s.v. 'Tolède (Conciles de)'; I. Escribano Alberca in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 189–91, s.v. See also works cited under SPAIN, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Toledo, rite of. An alternative name for the *Mozarabic rite (q.v.).

tolerati (Lat., 'tolerated persons'). The technical term formerly used in *canon law for those excommunicated persons with whom the faithful were permitted to have some measure of intercourse. They were thus distinguished from the vitandi (q.v.). These categories are no longer used in RC canon law.

Toleration Act. The Toleration Act 1688, passed in 1689, granting freedom of worship to Dissenters on certain prescribed conditions. Its real purpose was to unite all Protestants under William III against the deposed RC *James II. It exempted from the penalties of existing statutes against conventicles persons who took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy (though Dissenters continued to be barred from civil office until 1828; see CORPORATION ACT and TEST ACT) and relieved dissenting ministers from religious disabilities provided that, in addition to the oaths, they signed the *Thirty-Nine Articles (except two requiring Infant Baptism). *Quakers might make an *affirmation instead of taking the oaths. RCs and disbelievers in the Trinity did not benefit under this Act.

Text in Gee and Hardy, pp. 654–64 (no. 123).

Toleration, Edict of (313). See MILAN, EDICT OF.

toleration, religious. Christianity, which claims to be the only true religion, is in principle dogmatically intolerant of other religions, and *heresy within its own ranks has been repeatedly anathematized. In practice, however, Christian Churches and Christian rulers have often suffered or 'tolerated' a non-Christian presence and Christian diversity and dissent, their power being insufficient to coerce infidels or dissenters into conformity. Sometimes they have made a virtue of necessity and claimed to be tolerating an evil because not to do so would provoke a greater evil. Sometimes they have argued that faith should not or could not be compelled and that charitable admonition is more appropriate than force in converting infidels or in persuading heretics back within the fold. To call all these diverse actions 'toleration' and to give them a continuous history would be entirely false.

Christians in the pagan world of late antiquity did not invariably experience intolerance at the hands of non-Christians (see PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN), but they almost always practised it among themselves. This tendency was accelerated after the rise of the Emp. *Constantine by the increasingly close connection between ecclesiastical authority and the civil power. Persistence in superstition or in unorthodoxy became an offence in canon and civil law.

Throughout the Middle Ages mainstream ecclesiastical opinion followed St *Augustine's demand for the punishment of heretics and schismatics, but, as the preaching of St *Bernard illustrates, it never entirely silenced the voice of eirenic reconciliation, whose tradition was of equal antiquity. It was this tradition that furnished *Erasmus with many of the arguments that were to be debated and taken further in the bitter disputes of the 16th cent. about the location and limits of authority in matters of faith.

Although leading Protestant Reformers (M. *Luther, J. *Calvin, T. *Beza, and H. *Bullinger) seem at first sight to be arguing for a novel and subjectivist individual liberty of conscience, they prove on further scrutiny to be resolute defenders of the right and duty of the ecclesiastical and civil powers to co-operate in the extirpation of heresy within the area of their joint jurisdiction. Like Augustine, they regarded persistence in error as an affront to God. They demanded freedom to worship in their own way, but where they enjoyed this freedom, they pursued dissenters with relentless zeal, regarding with abhorrence the mystical conception of Christianity put forward by S. *Castellio, who argued that the way to God lay not through dogma but through the annihilation of self-will. He argued that there is much in Scripture that is enigmatic and obscure; instead of struggling with thorny points we should listen to the voice of reason, which every man experiences as 'an interior and eternal word of truth always speaking'. For Castellio, the disintegration of the earthly Church could be contemplated with equanimity, for its disappearance would leave revealed the inward fellowship of the faithful, recognizable by the fruits of the spirit and of love. For minister and magistrate no persecuting duty would be left.

These arguments had some appeal in *Remonstrant circles in the Netherlands (D. *Coornhert and J. *Arminius). In 17th-cent. England *Baptists, *Congregationalists, and *Quakers insisted on their religious independence of Church and State. Experiments in practical toleration took place in N. America, in Maryland and Rhode Island, whose founders Lord Baltimore (a RC) and Roger *Williams (a *Baptist) saw no responsibility for religious coercion resting on the civil power. Castellio's assertion that belief in a merciful God entailed acceptance of the liberty of the individual Christian was developed further by J. *Milton, while J. *Locke in his Letters on Toleration (1689–92) explored the implication of a restricted definition of the rights and duties of the civil power, arguing that the Church was a voluntary association having the right only to expel dissenters and no right to hound them thereafter, and that civil society had the duty to concern itself only with life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness.

Intellectuals of the *Enlightenment, including *Voltaire and J.-J. *Rousseau, transformed the debate by using the arguments in favour of toleration in attacks not only on ecclesiastical authority, but on the very notion of the Christian religion. They thus struck, as J.-B. Bossuet had predicted, at the heart of Christianity itself. During the 19th cent. the division deepened. On the one hand stood the heterogeneous defenders of religious liberty, including liberals and free-thinkers, who advocated religious toleration by the State, in many countries securing its embodiment in law. On the other stood the resolutely dogmatic and defensive RC Church, whose authoritarianism was exemplified in the Syllabus Errorum of 1864 and the condemnation of *Modernism in 1907.

Between 1900 and 1965 there was profound debate within the RC Church between those who emphasized the responsibility of the Church in defending revealed truth and those who laid stress on the God-given duty of the human individual to govern his behaviour by an interior light. This discussion came to a head at the Second *Vatican Council. The 'Declaration on Religious Freedom' (Dignitatis Humanae) of 7 Dec. 1965 states that 'all men ought to be immune from compulsion . . . so that in the sphere of religion no one is compelled to act against his *conscience and no one is prevented from acting in accordance with his conscience in private or public'. The right to religious freedom is said to be founded upon the dignity of the human person as it is made known both by the revealed will of God and by reason. It should become a civil right. Dignitatis Humanae thus transformed the RC concept of toleration into something more closely aligned with the view that had long prevailed elsewhere in the Christian world.

See also CONSCIENCE and THEOLOGY OF RELIGIONS.

Collection of extracts, in Fr. tr., from writers defending religious toleration from the Reformation onwards, with introd., ed. J. Leclerc, SJ, and M. F. Valkhoff, Les Premiers Défenseurs de la liberté religieuse (2 vols. [1969]). Further collection of primary material ed. H. R. Guggisberg, Religiöse Toleranz: Dokumente zur Geschichte einer Forderung (Neuzeit im Aufbau, 4; Stuttgart, 1984). J. Locke, A Letter Concerning Toleration. Latin and English texts ed., with introd. by M. Montuori (The Hague, 1963); other edns. listed in bibl. to Locke. R. H. Bainton, 'Sebastian Castellio, Champion of Religious Liberty', in id. and others, Castellioniana: Quatre études sur Sebastien Castellion et l'idée de la tolerance (Leiden, 1951), pp. 25–79. Id., The Travail of Religious Liberty (Philadelphia [1951]; London, 1953). J. Leclerc, SJ, Histoire de la tolérance au siècle de la réforme (Théologie, 31; 2 vols., 1955; Eng. tr., 1960). A. Momigliano, 'Empietà ed eresia nel mondo antico', Rivista Storica Italiana, 83 (1971), pp. 771–91. M. Firpo, Il Problema della Tolleranza Religiosa nell'età moderna della riforma protestante a Locke (Documenti della Storia, 13; Turin [1978]). W. J. Sheils (ed.), Persecution and Toleration (Studies in Church History, 21; 1984). M. Turchetti, Concordia o Tolleranza? François Bauduin (1520–1573) e i 'Moyenneurs' (Milan and Geneva, 1984). V. Roeser, Politik und religiöse Toleranz vor dem ersten Hugenottenkrieg in Frankreich (Basler Beiträge zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 153; 1985). S. Mendus (ed.), Justifying Toleration: Conceptual and Historical Perspectives (Cambridge, 1988).

Tolstoy, Leo (1828–1910), Russian novelist and social reformer. From 1844 to 1847 he studied at the University of Kazan, but did not take a degree. Under the influence of J.-J. *Rousseau's writings he became an enthusiast for social reform, anxious to relieve the miseries of the serfs. In 1851 he joined the Russian army. His Tales from Sebastopol (1855) at once attracted literary notice. In this period he also began the serial publication of his autobiographical fragments (1852–6), describing the mental struggles of his youth. He left the army in 1855 and in 1857 and 1860/1 he travelled in Germany, France, Italy, Switzerland, and England, studying educational methods and writing in support of reforms; he also established a school on his estate at Yasnaya Polyana and others in the neighbourhood, all run on enlightened principles. In 1862 he married Sophia Behrs, by whom he had 13 children. In the next years there followed his two most famous novels, War and Peace (1864–9) and Anna Karenina (1873–7). After 1877 he renounced his literary ambitions, believing them to be incompatible with his deepest convictions. All his later works were on moral and religious subjects and his output was considerable. He was deeply influenced by a close study of A. *Schopenhauer's writings and became very critical of the formalism of the Orthodox Church, which eventually excommunicated him in 1901. He sought to live in great simplicity, renouncing his property and the happiness of family life, engaging in manual labour and striving ceaselessly for the relief of social distress during the great famine of 1891–2. In 1895 he actively took up the cause of the persecuted *Doukhobors, writing in their defence his last great novel, Resurrection (1899).

Tolstoy's religious teaching in its latest phase claimed to be a following of the Gospels when the miraculous and other irrelevancies are set aside. The key was to be found in the *Sermon on the Mount, which could be resolved into five wholly new commandments: (1) the suppression of anger, even righteous indignation, and living in peace with all men; (2) the complete exclusion of sexual relationships outside marriage; (3) the wrongfulness of oaths; (4) non-resistance to evil and the consequent refusal to act as judges or police officers; (5) unreserved love of one's enemies. These, and not the doctrines of the Atonement, the Resurrection, the Trinity, and personal immortality, were the central tenets of the Christian message. He did not accept the divinity of Christ and he believed that man's greatest good consisted in the fulfilment of God's will that men should love one another. The increase of love in individuals would do away with the evils of the existing order and lead to the establishment of the *kingdom of God in the world.

Eng. tr. of his works ed. L. Wiener (24 vols., London and Boston, 1904–5, incl. Life by the translator in vol. 24, pp. 205–317, and bibl. to date of works in Eng., Ger., and Fr., pp. 403–35; but incl. some works not by Tolstoy); better Eng. tr., mainly by A. and L. Maude (Tolstoy Centenary Edition, ed. A. Maude, 21 vols., London, 1928–37). Life by A. Maude, 2 vols., London. 1908–10; abridged edn., ibid., 1918; full Life also repr. in Centenary edn., vols. 1–2. Many of his works have also been tr. separately. C. A. Behrs's Recollections of Count Tolstoy tr. into Eng. by C. E. Turner (London, 1893); the Reminiscences of Tolstoy by his son, Count I. Tolstoy, tr. into Eng. by G. Calderon (ibid., 1914);

a number of arts. on Tolstoy by members of his family collected by R. Fülöp-Miller tr. into Eng. under the title Family Views of Tolstoy, ed. A. Maude (1926); Tolstoy Remembered by his son S. Tolstoy, orig. pub. in Moscow, 1949, tr. into Eng., 1961. A Life, written with Tolstoy's co-operation, by P. Birukoff was pub. 4 vols., Moscow, 1906–23; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, 1906; an abridged version tr. into Eng., 1911. There is a wide range of studies on Tolstoy; those available in Eng., incl. the works of R. Rolland (Paris, 1911; Eng. tr., 1911), D. Leon (London, 1944, also with bibl.), E. J. Simmons (Boston, 1946; London, 1949), H. Troyat (orig. 'L. Tarassov'; Paris, 1965; Eng. tr., New York, 1967; London, 1968; Penguin edn., 1970), R. F. Christian (Cambridge, 1969), and A. N. Wilson (London, 1988). I. Berlin, The Hedgehog and the Fox: An Essay on Tolstoy's View of History (1953). G. Steiner, Tolstoy or Dostoevsky: An Essay in Contrast (1960). G. W. Spence, Tolstoy the Ascetic (1967). E. J. Simmons, Introduction to Tolstoy's Writings (1969). R. V. Sampson, Tolstoy: The Discovery of Peace (1973), esp. pp. 108–67. D. Matual, Tolstoy's Translation of the Gospels: A Critical Study (Lewiston, Queenston, and Lampeter [1992]).

Tomasi, St Giuseppe Maria. See TOMMASI, ST GIUSEPPE MARIA

Tome of Damasus. A collection of 24 canons endorsed by a Roman synod (prob. in 377) and subsequently sent by Pope *Damasus to Paulinus, then recognized at Rome as the legitimate Bp. of Antioch. In some MSS the canons are appended to the Creed of *Nicaea. Twenty-three of them are dogmatic, anathematizing the principal Trinitarian and Christological heresies of the 4th cent. (without, however, naming *Apollinarius or *Marcellus of Ancyra). The ninth is disciplinary, condemning the translation of bishops, and was directed against *Melitius of Antioch.

The text is first found in *Arnobius Junior, Conflictus de deo trino et uno, 2. 32 (repr. in PL 53. 319–22), and (in Gk.) in *Theodoret, HE 5. 11. The Latin and Greek texts are critically edited in EOMIA 1. 2 (1), 1913, pp. 281–96. Lat. text also repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 85–8 (nos. 152–77). G. L. Dossetti, Il Simbolo di Nicea e di Costantinopoli (Testi e Ricerche di Scienze Religiose, 2; 1967), pp. 94–111. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 833–44 and 873–80.

Tome of Leo. The letter sent by Pope *Leo I (Ep. 28) to *Flavian, Patr. of *Constantinople, on 13 June 449, also called Epistola Dogmatica. Basing himself on the teaching of the Fathers, esp. *Tertullian and St *Augustine, St Leo expounds with remarkable clarity, precision, and vigour the Christological doctrine of the Latin Church. Acc. to it Jesus Christ is One Person, the Divine Word, in whom are two natures, the Divine and the human, permanently united, though unconfused and unmixed. Each of these exercises its own particular faculties, but within the unity of the Person. Hence follows the '*communicatio idiomatum', so that it can truly be said that the Son of Man descended from heaven, and that the Son of God was crucified. The letter, which was directed esp. against the heresy of *Eutyches, was given formal authority by the Council of *Chalcedon (451) as the classic statement of the Catholic doctrine of the Incarnation: 'Peter has spoken through Leo'. Later it was constantly used in the controversies with the Monophysites.

Text in P. and H. *Ballerini's edn. of Leo, 1 (1753), cols. 793–838, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 54. 755–82. Crit. edn. in ACO 2. 2. 1 (1932), pp. 24–33; also by C. Silva-Tarouca, SJ (Rome, 1932). Eng. tr. in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 77*–82*. Gk. text in ACO 2. 1. 1 (1933), pp. 10–20; on this cf. G. L. Prestige, 'The Greek Translation of the Tome of St Leo', JTS 31 (1929–30), pp. 183 f. P. Mouterde, SJ, 'Les Versions syriaques du tome de saint Léon', Mélanges de l'Université Saint-Joseph, Beyrouth, 16 (1932), pp. 121–65, with Syr. text, pp. 146–65. H. Arens, Die christologische Sprache Leos des Grossen: Analyse des Tomus an den Patriarchen Flavian (Freiburger theologische Studien, 122; 1982).

Tommasi, St Giuseppe Maria (1649–1713), liturgical scholar. The eldest son of the Duke of Palma, he resigned his claims as heir in favour of his younger brother in 1664 and entered the Order of the *Theatines, in which he was professed in 1666. After studying at Messina, Rome, and Palermo, he was ordained priest in 1673 and henceforth devoted himself completely to biblical, patristic, and above all liturgical studies, leading a life of great austerity. Of his numerous publications, many of them under the pseudonym of 'J. M. Carus', his editions of the ancient *Sacramentaries and *Missals are esp. valuable. They include the Codices Sacramentorum Nongentis Annis Vetustiores (1680), which comprises Gallican books and contains the editiones principes of the '*Missale Gothicum' and the '*Missale Francorum', the Responsalia et Antiphonaria Romanae Ecclesiae a Sancto Gregorio Magno disposita (1686), and Antiqui Libri Missarum Romanae Ecclesiae (1691), as well as several editions of the Psalter and of biblical texts used in the liturgy of the first ten centuries. A project for a reformed and much simplified *Breviary was probably compiled in 1706. Tommasi was made a cardinal in 1712. He was canonized in 1986; feast day, 3 Jan.

An edn. of his works was begun by J. Bianchini (Rome, 1741; vol. 1 (in parts) only pub.); new ed. by A. F. Vezzosi, Theatine (7 vols., ibid., 1747–54); cont. with Institutiones Theologicae, ed. id. (4 vols., ibid., 1769), with Life prefixed to vol. 1. Opuscoli inediti, ed. G. *Mercati (ST 15; 1905). The reformed Breviary ed., with Eng. tr. and introd. by J. W. Legg (HBS 80; 1904). Lives by A. Borromeo (Venice, 1713) and D. Bernino (Rome, 1714). I. Scicolone, OSB, Il Cardinale Giuseppe Tomasi di Lampedusa e gli Inizi della Scienze Liturgica (Studia Anselmiana, 82; Rome, 1981). F. Andreu, Theatine, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1414–16, s.v. 'Joseph-Marie Tomasi'.

tongues, gift of. See GLOSSOLALIA.

tonsure. The shaving of all or part of the head, traditionally a distinctive feature of monks and clerics in the RC Church; it was formerly prescribed by Canon Law (cf. CIC (1917), can. 136) for all clerics, except in places where, as in England and USA, it was not in accordance with popular usage. The cutting of the hair, a religious ceremony of many E. peoples, became a generally received custom in 4th- and 5th-cent. monasticism and thence was introduced into the W. as the form of admission to the clerical state, distinct from Minor Orders, in the 6th and 7th cents. From the 16th cent. onwards it became customary to shave only a small space on the crown of the head of the secular clergy and in modern times the shaving of some hair during the admission of a layman to the clerical state became purely symbolic. It has no place in the 1972 rite of *Admission to Candidacy for Ordination of Deacons and Priests. Among monks various congregations now follow different customs in the matter.

Classic study by G. Chamillard, De Corona, Tonsura et Habitu Clericorum Locuples cum veterum tum recentiorum Canonum, Pontificarumque Constitutionum etc. Collectio (Paris, 1659). E. *Martène, De Antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus, 2 (Rouen, 1700), pp. 294–301 (Lib. 1, cap. 8, art. 7: 'De Tonsura Clericali'); id., De Antiquis Monachorum Ritibus (Lyons, 1690), pp. 723–35 (Lib. 5, cap. 7: 'De Tonsura et Rasura Fratrum'). There is a useful appendix by J. Smith to his edn. of *Bede, HE (Cambridge, 1722), pp. 705–15 (Appendix no. IX. b: 'De Tonsura Clericorum'), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 95. 327–32. P. Gobillot, 'Sur la tonsure chrétienne et ses prétendues origines païennes', RHE 21 (1925), pp. 399–451; E. James, 'Bede and the Tonsure Question', Peritia, 3 (1984), pp. 85–98; L. Trichet, La Tonsure: Vie et mort d'une pratique ecclésiastique (1990), with bibl. F. E. Warren in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 1989 f., s.v.; A. Michel in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1228–35, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2430–43, s.v. See also comm. on the 1917 Codex Juris Canonici, ad loc.

Tophet. A place or object in the valley of Hinnom, immediately to the SW of *Jerusalem, where human sacrifices were burned by idolatrous Israelites in the worship of Molech (2 Kgs. 23: 10, Jer. 7: 31, etc.).

Toplady, Augustus Montague (1740–1778), author and hymn writer. He was a native of Farnham, Surrey, and educated at Westminster School and *Trinity College, Dublin. He was ordained priest in 1764 and in 1768 became vicar of Broad Hembury in Devonshire. At first he fell under J. *Wesley's influence, but in 1758 he was converted to extreme *Calvinist opinions and henceforward bitterly attacked Wesley. His position was set out in his most important prose work, The Historic Proof of the Doctrinal Calvinism of the Church of England (1774), in which he developed his subject from the *Apostolic Fathers downwards. He also wrote on the same subject *The Church of England Vindicated from the Charge of Arminianism (2 vols., 1769). Toplady, however, is remembered esp. for his hymns, of which he published several collections. His well-known 'Rock of Ages' first appeared in the Gospel Magazine in 1775, though the tradition that he wrote it while sheltering in the Mendips from a storm is without foundation.

Works pub. 6 vols., London, 1794, with memoir [by W. Row] in vol. 1, pp. 1–125; new edn., 6 vols., ibid., 1825. Separate edn. of his Hymns and Sacred Poems on a Variety of Divine Subjects (London, 1860). Life by T. Wright ('The Lives of British Hymnwriters', 2; 1911). G. Lawton, Within the Rock of Ages: The Life and Work of Augustus Montague Toplady (Cambridge [1983]). H. L. Bennett in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 57–9.

Torah. The English equivalent of the Heb. תּוֹרָה, usually translated 'Law'. The word probably comes from a root meaning 'throw', 'shoot', 'direct', 'instruct'. Although it could be used of the teaching of the Prophets (e.g. Is. 8: 16), of the precepts of parents (e.g. Prov. 1: 8 and 4: 2), and of the utterances of wise men (e.g. Prov. 13: 14), for all of which the OT writers characteristically claim a Divine origin, it was pre-eminently the function of the priests to give 'torah' or instruction on the Will of God (e.g. Jer. 18: 18), and it was for their failure in, or misuse of, this aspect of the priestly office that the Prophets denounced them (e.g. Mic. 3: 11, Zeph. 3: 4). By a natural development, 'torah' came to be used also of written collections of such priestly decisions (e.g. Hos. 8: 12), and so of the Pentateuch as containing the Mosaic legislation, as well as of individual laws within that legislation (e.g. Lev. 7: 1). Rabbinic Judaism ascribes equal and Divine authority to the written and oral Torah (see MISHNAH).

Torgau Articles. A memorandum summarizing the disciplinary and ceremonial demands of the four Reformers, M. *Luther, P. *Melanchthon, J. *Bugenhagen, and J. *Jonas. It was compiled in Mar.–Apr. 1530, and handed in to the Diet of *Augsburg by John, Elector of Saxony. The name is misleading, as no gathering at Torgau of the four theologians mentioned ever took place.

They are to be distinguished from the Torgau Book of 1570, produced by a conference of theologians at Torgau called to reconcile the Swabian-Saxon Confession and the Maulbronn Formula. J. *Andreae's summary of the Book, known as the Epitome, was incorporated in the Formula of *Concord (q.v.).

Text in Corpus Reformatorum, 26 (1858), pp. 171–200. T. Brieger, 'Die Torgauer Artikel', in Kirchengeschichtliche Studien Hermann Reuter zum 70. Geburtstag gewidmet (1888), pp. 265–320. See also bibl. to AUGSBURG CONFESSION.

Torquemada, Juan de (1388–1468), 'Turrecremata', Spanish theologian. In 1404 he entered the *Dominican Order. In 1417 he accompanied his provincial to the Council of *Constance and from there went to Paris to finish his studies. Having been prior of the houses of his order at Valladolid and Toledo, from 1432 to 1437 he attended the Council of *Basle, and in 1435 *Eugenius IV made him master of the Sacred Palace. He took an active part in the negotiations with the Bohemians and with the Greeks on the question of reunion, was created Cardinal of St Sixtus in 1439, and till the end of his life had a decisive share in ecclesiastical Papal policy. His most important works are the 'Commentarii in Decretum Gratiani' (pub. 1519) on canon law, and the 'Summa de Ecclesia' (pub. 1489), a systematic treatise on the Church, defending the infallibility and plenitude of the spiritual power of the Pope, but taking only a moderate view of his temporal power. An edition of his treatise De Veritate Conceptionis B. Virginis (pub. 1547; rejecting the *Immaculate Conception) was issued by E. B. *Pusey in 1869.

Modern edns. of his Apparatus super decretum Florentinum Unionis Graecorum, ed. E. Candal, SJ (Concilium Florentinum, Documenta et Scriptores, 2, fasc. 1; 1942); Oratio Synodalis de Primatu, ed. id. (ibid. 4, fasc 2; 1954), and of his Tractatus contra Madianitas et Ismaelitas by N. L. Martínez and V. P. Gil (Burgos, 1957). Eng. tr. of his 'Oratio Synodalis' as A Disputation on the Authority of Pope and Council, with introd., by T. M. Izbicki (Dominican Sources, 4; Oxford, 1988). V. Beltrám de Heredia, OP, 'Noticias y Documentos para la Biografía del Cardenal Juan de Torquemada', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 30 (1960), pp. 53–148. K. Binder, Wesen und Eigenschaften der Kirche bei Kardinal Juan de Torquemada O.P. (Innsbruck, 1955); id., Konzilsgedanken bei Kardinal Juan de Torquemada, O.P. (Wiener Beiträge zur Theologie, 49; 1976). P. Massi, Magistero infallibile del Papa nella teologia di Giovanni da Torquemada (Scrinium Theologicum, 8; 1957). U. Horst [OP], 'Grenzen der päpstlichen Autorität. Konziliare Elemente in der Ekklesiologie des Johannes Torquemada', Freiburger Zeitschrift für Philosophie und Theologie, 19 (1972), pp. 361–88. T. M. Izbicki, Protector of the Faith: Cardinal Johannes de Turrecremata and the Defense of the Institutional Church (Washington, DC [1981]). Kaeppeli, 3 (1980), pp. 24–42 and 4 (1993), pp. 173–6, s.v. 'Iohannes de Turrecremata', with extensive bibl. H. J. Sieben, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 1048–54, s.v.

Torquemada, Tomás (1420–98), Spanish Inquisitor General. A nephew of Juan de *Torquemada, he entered the *Dominican Order at Valladolid at an early age and was prior there by 1474. He was an enthusiast for the reform of the Order and *c.*1474 became prior of Segovia, where the reform was being introduced. He retained this office until his death. In 1482 he founded a new, reformed priory in Ávila, where he introduced the first statute of 'limpieza' ('purity of blood') into a Dominican house. For many years he was (at least titular) confessor to *Ferdinand V and *Isabella. In 1482 he was appointed an inquisitor in the newly established Spanish *Inquisition; he became its first Inquisitor General in 1483, with a concentration of power never equalled by his successors. Between 1484 and 1498 he issued a series of instructions for the practice of the Inquisition, which were gathered together and published in 1537; these left an indelible mark on the character and operation of the institution. Under Torquemada's leadership, the Spanish Inquisition rapidly became an extremely powerful force used particularly in the repression of the only nominally Christianized Jews (the 'conversos'). (Torquemada's ancestors were apparently of Jewish origin, converts to Christianity.) He was also influential in the decision made in 1492 to expel the Jews from Spain. See also INQUISITION.

E. de Molènes (ed.), Documents inédits: Torquemada et l'Inquisition, la Jurisprudence du Saint-Office, l'Enfant de la Guardia, le Cœur et l'Hostie, Sortilèges et vénéfices, Sentences et autodafés, l'Expulsion des Juifs, les Procès à la mort (1897). His 'Instructions' on the operation of the Inquisition are pr. in M. Jiménez Monteserín (ed.), Introducción a la Inquisición española [1980], pp. 82–121. There is no satisfactory biog. of Torquemada. J. Meseguer Fernández, 'Tomás de Torquemada, inquisidor general (1483–1498)', in J. Pérez Villanueva and B. Escandell Bonet (eds.), Historia de la Inquisición en España y América, 1 (Biblioteca de autores cristianos, 2nd edn., 1984), pp. 310–42. Quétif and Échard, 1, pp. 892 f.

Torres, Francisco, also 'Turrianus' (*c.*1509–1584), patristic scholar and RC controversialist. After studying at Alcalá, he went to Rome, where he became a well-known controversial author. From 1562 to 1563 he was at the Council of *Trent as Papal theologian. In 1563 he brought out the first edition of the '*Apostolic Constitutions', attributing them to St *Clement of Rome. In 1567 he entered the Society of Jesus (*Jesuits), and later was appointed professor at the Roman College, where he was one of the scholars entrusted with the revision of the official *Vulgate. He sought to defend the authenticity of the '*Apostolic Canons', the *False Decretals, and the 80 *Nicene Canons, all of them spurious, as well as that of the (genuine) Acts of the Sixth and Seventh General Councils. He was a very voluminous writer, but he had little critical sense. In his controversial writings he upheld the *Immaculate Conception, the superiority of the Pope over Councils, and the Divine origin of episcopal authority.

C. Gutiérrez, SJ, Españoles en Trento (Corpus Tridentinum Hispanicum, 1; Valladolid, 1951), pp. 446–72 [in Lat. and Sp.]. Sommervogel, 8 (1898), cols. 113–26. J. P. Grausem, SJ, in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1239 f., s.v., with bibl.

Tosefta (Heb., 'supplement'). A collection of early Jewish traditions of the same character as and contemporary with, but not incorporated in, the *Mishnah (q.v.). It contains so-called baraita material (i.e. material which pre-dates the formation of the Mishnah, but was not included in the Mishnah). Like the Mishnah it has six main divisions, each of which is subdivided into tractates. It contains a much larger proportion of *Haggadic elements than the Mishnah.

Eng. tr. by J. Neusner and others (6 vols., New York, etc., 1977–86). A. Goldberg in S. Safrai (ed.), The Literature of the Sages, 1 (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, Section 2, vol. 3, pt. 1; Assen and Philadelphia, 1987), pp. 283–302.

total depravity. A term in common use esp. in *Calvinism to express the extreme wretchedness of man's condition as the result of the *Fall. It emphasizes the belief that this result was not a mere loss or deprivation of a supernatural endowment possessed by unfallen man, but a radical corruption or depravation of his whole nature, so that apart from Christ he can do nothing whatever pleasing to God. Even his reason has been radically vitiated, so that, acc. to Calvinism, all natural knowledge of God (such as obtains in the system of St *Thomas Aquinas) is held to be impossible.

total immersion. See SUBMERSION.

totemism. A phenomenon partly social, partly magical (or, acc. to some, religious), allegedly found among 'primitive' peoples, by which the members of a tribe believe themselves to be associated with and named after a species of animal or plant. Proponents of totemism held that the totem had a holy and sacrosanct nature and was therefore an object of worship, and that its flesh was untouchable save at a tribal feast where the eponymous animal was ritually slain and eaten by the members of the tribe who thus identified themselves with their god. Some 19th-cent. anthropologists held that totemism was an early phase of all religion, and it was suggested that the prevalence of animal and plant names among Canaanite place-names and the fact that the tribes of Israel were descended from Leah ('wild cow') and Rachel ('ewe') indicate a totemic ancestry for the religion of the Hebrews and therefore for Christianity; but the evidence for this thesis is altogether too slender to give it any show of probability and it has now been generally abandoned.

J. G. Frazer, Totemism and Exogamy: A Treatise on Certain Early Forms of Superstition and Society (4 vols., 1910; suppl. vol., Totemica, 1937). A. R. Radcliffe-Brown, 'The Sociological Theory of Totemism', repr. in his Structure and Function in Primitive Society (1952), pp. 117–32. C. Lévi-Strauss, Le Totémisme aujourd'hui (1962; Eng. tr., 1964). W. R. Smith, Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia (Cambridge, 1885; 2nd edn. by S. A. *Cook, London, 1903), esp. ch. 7; id., Lectures on the Religion of the Semites (Edinburgh, 1889; 3rd edn. by S. A. Cook, London, 1927). J. W. Rogerson, Anthropology and the Old Testament (Oxford, 1978), pp. 22–45.

touching for the King's evil. See KING'S EVIL, TOUCHING FOR THE.

Tower of Babel. See BABEL, TOWER OF.

tract (liturgical). The chant formerly sung or recited at Mass on certain penitential days instead of the Alleluia. It is already mentioned in the oldest Roman Ordines. It was originally the Psalm chanted after the second Lesson, but this was later supplanted by the Alleluia, though preserved on days of penance and mourning. It differed from the *Gradual in that it was chanted without a responsory (Lat. tractim, 'straight through'), but acc. to recent scholars its name is probably not derived from this, as formerly assumed, but is connected with the Greek εἱρμός ('train', 'series'), a technical term of Greek musical theory denoting a typical tune by which the several parts of a hymn are joined together. Some tracts such as that of the First Sunday in *Lent and of *Palm Sunday preserved almost the whole Psalm, whereas most others were reduced to a few verses. The tract was said on the Sundays from Septuagesima till Easter and on the Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays of Lent; also on the Saturdays in Ember Weeks (when it replaced the Gradual), and in Masses for the Dead. It was suppressed by the Ordo Missae of 1969.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 550–2 (Eng. tr., 1 (1951), pp. 430 f.). M. Huglo in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 221 f., s.v. On the musical settings, also H. Hucke in S. Sadie (ed.), New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 19 (1980), pp. 108–10, s.v.

tract (propagandist) (Lat. tractare, 'to treat of the matter'). A pamphlet, usually issued with a religious or moral purpose. Its early history is obscure, but many medieval works, e.g. the lesser English works of J. *Wycliffe, come under this heading. The religious controversies of the 16th and 17th cents. stimulated the production of tracts which often (e.g. under the Commonwealth) reached vast proportions. The abusive *Marprelate Tracts (1588) are an instance from the age of *Elizabeth I. The *Bangorian Controversy also inspired a number of tracts. On the Tracts for the Times (1833–41) see following entry. Various tract societies have been formed, among them the *SPCK (1698) and the *Religious Tract Society (1799).

Tractarianism. A name for the earlier stages of the *Oxford Movement, derived from the Tracts for the Times issued under its aegis. The purpose of the tracts was to disseminate Church principles 'against Popery and Dissent'. The first, written by J. H. *Newman and published with two others on 9 Sept. 1833, was a 4-page leaflet entitled 'Thoughts on the Ministerial Commission respectfully addressed to the Clergy' and containing a defence of the Apostolic Succession. Others followed rapidly and on 21 Dec. appeared E. B. *Pusey's first tract ('Thoughts on the Benefits of the System of Fasting enjoined by our Church'; no. 18 of the series). The other tract writers included J. *Keble, J. W. Bowden (1798–1844), A. P. *Perceval, R. H. *Froude, C. *Marriott, and I. *Williams. They secured a wide circulation, and their influence, as the first public utterances of the Oxford Movement, was enormous. Their form gradually changed from brief leaflets to learned treatises and catenae assembled from the 17th-cent. Anglican divines in support of Catholic theology and practice in the C of E. On 25 Jan. 1841 Newman's famous Tract 90 ('Remarks on Certain Passages in the Thirty-Nine Articles') appeared; the storm which it provoked brought the series to an end.

The tracts were issued in bound vols. as follows: vol. 1, nos. 1–46 (1834); 2, nos. 47–70 (1836); 3, nos. 71–7 (1836); 4, nos. 78–82 (1838); 5, nos. 83–8 (1840); 6, nos. 89–90 (1841). D. Croly, An Index to the Tracts for the Times (1842). Full discussion and attribution of authorship by R. Imberg, In Quest of Authority: The 'Tracts for the Times' and the Development of the Tractarian Leaders, 1833–1841 (Bibliotheca Historico-Ecclesiastica Lundensis, 16 [1987]); id., Tracts for the Times: A Complete Survey of all the Editions (ibid. 17; 1987). R. D. Middleton, 'Tract Ninety', JEH 2 (1951), pp. 81–101. See also bibl. on OXFORD MOVEMENT.

Tractatus Origenis (Lat., 'Tractates of Origen'). A collection of 20 Homilies on the Scriptures, 19 of them on OT texts, first published in 1900 by P. *Batiffol and A. *Wilmart, OSB. In the 10th-cent. Orléans MS and the 12th-cent. St-Omer MS where they are preserved, they are ascribed to *Origen. Batiffol held that their Gk. originals were really the work of Origen; but it is now generally agreed, following G. *Morin's earlier view, that they were the work of *Gregory, Bp. of Elvira (q.v.).

P. Batiffol and A. Wilmart, OSB, Tractatus Origenis de Libris SS. Scripturarum (Paris, 1900); also ed. by V. Bulhart (CCLS, 69, 1967, pp. 1–146). G. Morin, OSB, 'Les Nouveaux Tractatus Origenis et l'héritage littéraire de l'évêque espagnol Grégoire d'Illiberis', Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, 5 (1900), pp. 145–61. H. Koch, 'Zu Gregors von Elvira Schrifttum und Quellen', ZKG 51 (1932), pp. 238–72. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 370 and 627.

tractoria. Originally a 'letter of summons' (from Lat. trahere, 'to convey', i.e. by the cursus publicus or postal service), the word was applied also to letters containing the decisions of Councils. It is used esp. of the (lost) 'Epistola Tractoria' of *Zosimus (417–18), in which that Pope reversed his previous support of *Pelagianism.

The chief frags. of Zosimus' Ep. Tractoria are preserved in *Augustine, Ep. 190. 23, and in *Prosper of Aquitaine, Auctoritates, cap. 9; repr. with others in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 693–5.

Tracts for the Times. See TRACTARIANISM.

Traditio-Historical Criticism (Ger. Überlieferungsgeschichte), also called 'History of Traditions Method'. The study of the development of texts and motifs (often with particular reference to oral transmission), the circumstances in the life of the community in which they were created and its cultural background. It largely overlaps with *Form Criticism, which draws inferences about the transmission and community use of tradition by studying the oral and literary processes behind most biblical texts. The roots of this approach lie in the 18th cent., but the modern pioneer was H. *Gunkel, whose work was continued by M. *Noth and G. von *Rad in the OT and by R. *Bultmann and M. *Dibelius in the NT, esp. the Synoptic Gospels. In Scandinavia I. Engnell led a group who elevated this approach to the exclusion of more literary methods. See also FORM CRITICISM.

E. Nielsen, Oral Tradition: A Modern Problem in Old Testament Introduction (Studies in Biblical Theology, 11; 1954 [Eng. tr. of arts. published in Dansk Theologisk Tidsskrift, 1950 and 1952]).

D. A. Knight (ed.), Tradition and Authority in the Old Testament (Philadelphia, 1977). G. Thiessen, Lokalkolorit und Zeitgeschichte in den Evangelien (Novum Testamentum et Orbis Antiquus, 8; 1989; Eng. tr., The Gospels in Context, Minneapolis, 1991). R. [C.] Morgan and J. Barton, Biblical Interpretation (Oxford, 1988), pp. 96–132. I. Engnell in Svenskt Bibliskt Uppslagsverk (2nd edn.), 2 (1962), cols. 1254–61, s.v. 'Traditionshistorisk metod'; Eng. tr. as 'The Traditio-Historical Method in Old Testament Research', in his Critical Essays on the Old Testament (1970), pp. 3–11. D. A. Knight in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 633–8, s.v. 'Tradition History'.

Traditio Symboli (Lat., the 'delivery' or 'handing over of the Creed'). During early times candidates for Baptism, who were mainly adults, were subjected to a long course of instruction before admission to the sacrament. Their training was both practical and doctrinal, as in modern 'Confirmation classes', and the latter part of it consisted of explanations of the Creed. This was the 'delivery' or traditio, made by the teacher to the candidates, who thus 'received the creed' into their own keeping. At their Baptism they were required to recite and profess the Creed, thus 'returning it' (redditio symboli) to the presiding bishop. The ceremony has been restored in the 1972 RC Order for Adult Baptism.

For main lit. see histories of Baptism, cited s.v. J. Barbet and C. Lambot, OSB, 'Nouvelle Tradition du symbole de rit gallican', R. Bén. 75 (1965), pp. 335–45.

tradition. In the early Christian Fathers, tradition (παράδοσις, traditio) means the revelation made by God and delivered by Him to His faithful people through the mouth of His prophets and apostles. It does not mean something 'handed down' but something 'handed over'. Similarly in the NT the word, or its corresponding verb, is applied equally to the betrayal of Christ by *Judas to the Jews, and to the delivery of Christian teaching by St *Paul to his converts. The tradition was at first called 'apostolic', because delivered by the apostles to the Churches which they founded, and later also 'ecclesiastic', because delivered again in each generation by the Church's teachers to their people. Its substance was held to consist of the central facts and beliefs crystallized in the creeds of the great orthodox bishoprics. From the beginning of the 3rd cent. the tradition was sometimes expressly identified with the Gospel record contained in Scripture. The occasional references in early Christian literature to an 'unwritten tradition' left by the apostles appear to relate not to any body of information independent of Scripture, but to the evidence of primitive Christian institutions and customs which confirms scriptural teaching.

In a more modern sense, tradition means the continuous stream of explanation and elucidation of the primitive faith, illustrating the way in which Christianity has been presented and understood in past ages. That is to say, it is the accumulated wisdom of the past. Sometimes, again, it means simply customs and ideas which have grown up imperceptibly and been accepted more or less uncritically. All tradition in these modern senses needs to have its true value proved by the double test—(1) whether it is in accordance with the principles embodied in divine revelation, and (2) whether it can be justified by right reason.

In the Reformation era the relation of unwritten tradition to the scriptural revelation was the subject of acute controversy between Protestants and Catholics. As against the Protestant belief in the sole sufficiency of the Bible, the Council of *Trent (Sess. 4. 8; 8 Apr. 1546) laid down that Scripture and unwritten traditions were to be received as of equal authority (pari pietatis affectu ac reverentia). In recent years it has been argued that, contrary to popular belief, the Tridentine decision did not imply that Scripture and tradition were the two sources (fontes) of revelation, and some RC writers have held that all revelation is materially contained in the Scriptures. The Dogmatic Constitution on Revelation of the Second *Vatican Council minimizes the distinction, stating that Scripture and tradition 'flow from the same divine wellspring, merge into a unity and tend to the same end' (Section 9).

J.-B. *Bossuet, Défense de la tradition et des saints pères (2 vols., 1763); J. B. *Franzelin, Tractatus de Divina Traditione et Scriptura (Rome, 1870). Extracts from the Fathers ed., with Fr. tr., by W. Rordorf and A. Schneider, L'évolution du concept de tradition dans l'Église ancienne (Traditio Christiana, 5 [1982]; with Ger. tr. [1983]). G. L. Prestige, Fathers and Heretics (1948), pp. 1–22 ('Tradition'); W. *Sanday and N. P. *Williams, Form and Content in the Christian Tradition: A Friendly Discussion (1916); C. H. *Turner, Catholic and Apostolic (1931); A. Deneffe, SJ, Der Traditionsbegriff (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, Heft 18; 1931); O. *Cullmann, La Tradition: Problème exégétique, historique et théologique (1953); Y. M. J. *Congar, OP, La Tradition et les traditions (2 vols., 1960–3; Eng. tr., 1966); R. P. C. Hanson, Tradition in the Early Church (1962); J. R. Geiselmann, Die Heilige Schrift und die Tradition (Quaestiones Disputatae, 18; 1962; Eng. tr., 1966); J. P. Mackey, The Modern Theology of Tradition (1962); id., Tradition and Change in the Church (Dublin, 1968); De Scriptura et Traditione, ed. C. Balić, OFM (Rome, 1963); V. *Lossky, À l'Image et à la ressemblance de Dieu [1967], pp. 139–66 ('La Tradition et les traditions'); Eng. tr. (New York, 1974; London, 1975), pp. 141–68; F. F. Bruce, Tradition Old and New (Exeter, 1970); N. Lash, Change in Focus: A Study of Doctrinal Change and Continuity (1973). P. Longfield, M. Feiner, and others in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 1 (Einsiedeln [1965]), pp. 239–88 and 463–605.

Tradition of the Instruments. See INSTRUMENTS, TRADITION OF THE.

Traditionalism. In its strict sense a theory proposed by a group of 19th-cent. RC thinkers, acc. to which all metaphysical, moral, and religious knowledge is based on a primitive revelation of God to man handed down in an unbroken tradition. Denying to human reason the power of attaining by itself to any truths, esp. those of natural theology, it makes an act of faith in a revealed tradition the origin of all knowledge. It was historically a reaction from 18th-cent. rationalism in the direction of the other extreme and flourished chiefly in France and Belgium. Among its advocates were L. G. A. de Bonald (1754–1840) and F. R. de *Lamennais and of esp. influence was the latter's Essai sur l'indifférence en matière de religion (4 vols., 1817–23) with its doctrine of the 'sens commun'. To restore belief to the modern world the Traditionalists aimed at removing it from discussion by individual reason and at imposing it by the authority of the common consent of mankind, which, acc. to Lamennais, is invested with infallibility. Modified forms of the doctrine were held by L. E. M. Bautain (1796–1867), A. Bonnetty (1798–1879), and G. C. *Ubaghs (q.v.) and the philosophers of the Louvain school. Though the insistence on the social nature of man and on the importance of tradition in religion were orthodox elements in the teaching of Traditionalism, its fundamental distrust of human reason could not but eventually lead to scepticism. It was officially condemned by a number of decrees, and finally ruled out as a possible Catholic system by the constitution 'De fide catholica' at the First *Vatican Council in 1870.

The word is also used less strictly by liberal theologians, usually with a more or less opprobrious nuance, of what they consider unduly conservative beliefs.

The condemnations of E. Bautin and A. Bonnetty are conveniently repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 762–4 (nos. 2751–6) and 776 f. (nos. 2811–14). J. Lupus, Le Traditionalisme et le rationalisme examinés au point de vue de la philosophie et de la doctrine catholique (3 vols., Liège, 1858). J. Henry, 'Le Traditionalisme et l'ontologisme à l'université de Louvain (1835–1865)', Annales de l'Institut Supérieur de Philosophie [at Louvain], 5 (1924), pp. 41–149, with bibl. refs. B. [M. G.] Reardon, Liberalism and Tradition: Aspects of Catholic Thought in Nineteenth-Century France (Cambridge, 1975), esp. pp. 43–61, 71–82, 113–16, and 175–81; G. A. McCool, Catholic Theology in the Nineteenth Century (New York, 1977), esp. pp. 37–58 ('French Traditionalism'). S. A. Matczak in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 228–30, s.v.

traditors. The name given in Africa in early times to Christians who surrendered the Scriptures when their possession was forbidden in the persecution of *Diocletian. The controversy between Catholics and *Donatists which followed the persecution was centred chiefly in the refusal of the Donatists to recognize *Caecilian, Bp. of Carthage, on the ground that he had been consecrated by traditors.

Traducianism (Lat. tradux, 'shoot', 'sprout'). The theory acc. to which the human soul is transmitted by the parents to the children. The term is sometimes restricted to the crudely materialistic view which asserts that this happens in the physical act of generation; it is then distinguished from opinions which refrain from dogmatizing on this point, collectively styled 'Generationism'. Traducianism was advocated by some of the Fathers, esp. *Tertullian in his 'De Anima' (chs. 23–41). For St *Augustine it suggested a simple explanation for *Original Sin, though he was unable to decide between it and *Creationism (q.v.). Pope Anastasius II condemned the theory in his Ep. to the Gallican bishops (498). In the Middle Ages Creationism was the almost universally accepted doctrine, but in the 19th cent. Traducianism was revived in a modified form by several RC theologians, e.g. A. *Rosmini, who argued that the parents generate a sensitive soul which God changes by illumination into a spiritual one. The theory in its crude form is incompatible with the spiritual nature of the soul, and even in the attenuated form of Generationism is widely held to be heretical.

A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1350–65.

Traherne, Thomas (*c.*1636–74), English *Metaphysical poet and divine. Probably a native of Hereford, he entered Brasenose College, Oxford, in 1652, which he left after taking his degree in 1656. In 1657 he became rector of Credenhill, nr. Hereford, and in 1667 private chaplain to Sir Orlando Bridgman, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and 'minister' in the parish of Teddington. Only one work, Roman Forgeries (1673), a controversial treatise on forged documents of the RC Church, appeared before his death. His Christian Ethics, issued in 1675 and until recently almost unknown, is an eloquent description of Christian virtue, though sometimes over-subtle in discussing theological niceties. In 1699 a friend published a little devotional book of Traherne, A Serious and Pathetical Contemplation of the Mercies of God, but his poems, for which he is now famous, remained in MS until they were published by B. Dobell in 1903. They were followed in 1908 by four Centuries of Meditations, a collection of reflections on ethics and religion which have proved more attractive than the verse.

Traherne, who was an ardent admirer and constant reader of the '*Hermetic Books', is the least orthodox of the metaphysical poets. From his essentially optimistic and 'vitalistic' conception of experience, the elements of sin and suffering are almost entirely excluded. His poetry, remarkable for a penetrating sense of the glory of nature and childhood, is clearly pantheistic in feeling. Among his more famous poems are 'The Rapture' and 'An Hymn upon St Bartholomew's Day'.

Centuries, Poems, and Thanksgivings, ed. H. M. Margoliouth (2 vols., Oxford, 1958). Poems, Centuries and Three Thanksgivings, ed. A. Ridler ('Oxford Standard Authors', 1966). Modern edn. of Christian Ethics by G. R. Guffey, with introd. by C. L. Marks (New York, 1968). Studies by G. E. Willett (Cambridge, 1919), [H.] Q. Iredale (Oxford, 1935), G. I. Wade (Princeton, NJ, 1944), and K. W. Salter (London, 1964). A. L. Clements, The Mystical Poetry of Thomas Traherne (Cambridge, Mass., 1969). A. M. Allchin and others, Profitable Wonders: Aspects of Thomas Traherne (3 lectures, Oxford [1989]); G. Dowell, Enjoying the World: The Rediscovery of Thomas Traherne [1990].

transcendentals (transcendentalia, transcendentia in *Scholastic philosophy), those properties which belong to all beings, as opposed to the categories (belonging only to finite beings) which they 'transcend'. They are usually held to include 'unity' (unum), goodness (bonum), truth (verum), and beauty (pulchrum), but the list varies.

transenna (Lat., properly a 'net'). In ecclesiastical architecture, a wall, usually of marble, which is pierced with holes in a regular pattern. Apart from purely ornamental purposes, transennae were also used to surround the tomb of a martyr (e.g. in the confessio), and thus to enable the worshipper to see it, and sometimes also touch it, through the grating.

Transfiguration, the. The appearing of the Lord in glory during His earthly life, related in the first three Gospels (Mt. 17: 1–13, Mk. 9: 2–13, Lk. 9: 28–36), and alluded to in 2 Pet. 1: 16–18. This vision of the Lord, transfigured, with *Moses and *Elijah, was witnessed by Sts *Peter, *James, and *John, and is described by the Evangelists as a historic event; some critics have suggested that it is a misplaced *Resurrection appearance. Tradition locates it on Mount Tabor, but many scholars prefer Mount Hermon, and some have even suggested the Mount of *Olives. The event was significant as showing the testimony of the Jewish Law and Prophets to the Messiahship of Christ, as furnishing a further Divine proclamation of His Sonship, and as foreshadowing His future glory. The Feast of the Transfiguration is observed on 6 Aug. It originated in the E. Church, where it appears to have been at first a local and unofficial feast, but it had become widely adopted before AD 1000. In the W., where the feast was not introduced till a much later date, its general observance goes back to 1457, when *Callistus III ordered its universal celebration in commemoration of the victory gained over the Turks at Belgrade on 22 July 1456, news of which reached Rome on 6 Aug.

G. H. Boobyer, St Mark and the Transfiguration Story (1942); H. Riesenfeld, Jésus transfiguré: L'Arrière-plan du récit évangélique de la transfiguration de Notre-Seigneur (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, 16; 1947); A. M. *Ramsey, The Glory of God and the Transfiguration of Christ (1949); H. Baltensweiler, Die Verklärung Jesu (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 33; 1959); J. A. McGuckin, The Transfiguration of Christ in Scripture and Tradition (Studies in the Bible and Early Christianity, 9; Lewiston, NY [1986]), incl. Eng. tr. of relevant texts from the Fathers; B. E. Reid, OP, The Transfiguration: A Source- and Redaction-Critical Study of Luke 9: 28–36 (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, 32; 1993). R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 13–39.

Transitorium. A prayer in the *Ambrosian rite corresponding to the *Communion anthem in the Roman Mass. It is apparently so named because the celebrant passes over (transit) to the S. side of the altar to recite it.

translation. In ecclesiastical contexts the word is used in various senses:

(1) The transference of the relics of a saint either from their original place of burial into an altar tomb or shrine, or from one shrine to another. The solemnities connected with it frequently gave rise to a new liturgical feast. Thus the translation of St Thomas *Becket, observed on 7 July, commemorates the reburial of the saint's relics at *Canterbury on 7 July 1220.

(2) The transference to a different day of a feast when a particular season (e.g. *Holy Week) prohibits its observance, or a feast of higher rank occurs on the same day. Acc. to the Calendarium Romanum of 1969 the Sundays of Lent and Eastertide, all days in Holy Week and the last eight days of Advent take absolute precedence, and the impeded feast is transferred to the nearest free day.

(3) In canon law the transference of a cleric from one ecclesiastical office to another. The translation of a bishop from one see to another was forbidden by can. 15 of the Council of *Nicaea (325), but the decree was never rigorously adhered to, and in the Middle Ages the translation of bishops became one of the prerogatives of the Popes and the practice has continued down to modern times.

transmigration of souls. See METEMPSYCHOSIS.

transubstantiation. In the theology of the *Eucharist, the conversion of the whole substance of the bread and wine into the whole substance of the Body and Blood of Christ, only the *accidents (i.e. the appearances of the bread and wine) remaining. The word was in widespread use in the later part of the 12th cent., and at the *Lateran Council of 1215 the Eucharistic elements were said to be 'transubstantiated' into the Body and Blood of Christ; but the elaboration of the doctrine was not achieved till after the acceptance of the *Aristotelian metaphysics later in the 13th cent., when it found classic formulation in the teaching of St *Thomas Aquinas. At the Council of *Trent (sess. 13, cap. 4) the medieval doctrine was reaffirmed, but with a minimum of technical philosophical language; 'transubstantiation' was confirmed as the 'most apt' term to describe the conversion. Since the 15th cent. the E. Church has used the word μετουσίωσις to denote an essentially identical doctrine and has on occasion given it formal approval, e.g. at the Synod of *Jerusalem (1672); but many modern Orthodox theologians avoid the term, because of its close associations with Latin Scholasticism. The *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission in 1971 reached agreement on Eucharistic doctrine, relegating the term 'transubstantiation' to a footnote, in which it is said to affirm the fact of the 'mysterious and radical change' rather than to explain how the change takes place. See also DECLARATION AGAINST TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

For main bibl. see works cited s.v. EUCHARIST. H. Jorissen, Die Entfaltung der Transsubstantiationslehre bis zum Beginn der Hochscholastik (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 28, Heft 1; 1965), with bibl. J. F. McCue, 'The Doctrine of Transubstantiation from Berengar through Trent: The Point at Issue', HTR 61 (1968), pp. 385–430. B. F. Byron, Sacrifice and Symbol: A New Theology of the Eucharist for Catholic and Ecumenical Consideration (Faith and Culture, 19; Sydney, 1991), pp. 89–149 passim. J. de Ghellinck, 'A propos du premier emploi du mot transsubstantiation', Rech. S.R. 2 (1911), pp. 466–9, 570–2; 3 (1912), pp. 255–9. A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1396–406, s.v.

Trappists. Since the French Revolution the popular name for the reformed *Cistercians belonging to foundations originating from the exiled community of *la Trappe, the sole survivor of the Order in France. The union of three Trappist congregations in 1893, soon followed by the recovery of *Cîteaux, which became the mother house of the newly independent Order, led in 1902 to its current official designation as the Order of Reformed Cistercians, or Cistercians of the Strict Observance (OCSO), omitting any mention of la Trappe. The name Trappistines, popularly applied to nuns of the Order, also originates from Revolutionary times, when Cistercian nuns fleeing persecution rallied under the leadership of the Trappist Abbot Augustin Lestrange, and eventually formed new foundations under Trappist direction. They now form a single order with the monks.

See bibl. to CISTERCIAN ORDER and LA TRAPPE.

Traversari, Ambrogio (*c.*1386–1439), also Fra Ambrogio, scholar and theologian. In 1400 he entered the *Camaldolese Order at the monastery of Sta Maria degli Angioli at Florence and in 1431 became its General. From about 1414 he devoted himself to the study of the Fathers, whom he regarded as a model for the contemporary Church. As well as bringing to light numerous patristic MSS, he translated into Latin the works of several Greek Fathers, notably John *Chrysostom and *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite. Between *c.*1431 and 1435 he was active in promulgating monastic reforms instituted by Pope *Eugenius IV. In 1435 he defended Papal supremacy at the Council of Basle. As a Greek expert, Traversari provided textual and linguistic material in the discussions on the Filioque at the Council of Florence and was responsible for the Greek version of the Decree of Union (Laetentur Coeli) signed on 5 July 1439.

His correspondence and other material was pub. from different 15th-cent. collections by E. *Martène, OSB, and U. Durand, OSB (eds.), Veterum Scriptorum et Monumentorum . . . Amplissima Collectio, 3 (Paris, 1724), cols. 1–728, and ed. P. Canneti, with Life by L. Mehus (2 vols., Florence, 1759). F. P. Luiso, Riordinamento dell'Epistolario di Ambrogio Traversari con lettere inedite e note storico-cronologiche (3 fascs., Florence, 1898–1903). Twelve further letters ed. L. Bertalot in RQ 29 (1915), pp. *91–*106. Further letters in G. *Mercati, Ultimi contributi alla storia degli umanisti, fasc. 1: Traversariana (ST 90; 1939). A. Dini Traversari, Ambrogio Traversari e i suoi tempi (Florence, 1912), incl. text of the Hodoeporicon. C. Somigli, Camaldolese, Un amico dei Greci: Ambrogio Traversari (Arezzo, 1964). C. L. Stinger, Humanism and the Church Fathers: Ambrogio Traversari (1386 1439) and Christian Antiquity in the Italian Renaissance (Albany, NY, 1977). G. C. Garfagnini (ed.), Ambrogio Traversari nel VI Centenario della Nascita: Convegno Internazionale di Studi (Camaldoli–Firenze, 15–18 settembre 1986) (Florence, 1988).

Travers, Walter (c.1548–1635), *Puritan divine. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and elected a Fellow of Trinity in 1567. Having formed a friendship with T. *Beza on a visit to *Geneva, Travers returned to England an acknowledged leader of the movement of Reform. Owing to his unwillingness to subscribe the *Thirty-Nine Articles, he was refused a licence to preach and returned to the Continent, where he was ordained to serve the English congregation at Antwerp. In 1581, through the influence of Lord Burghley, he became afternoon lecturer at the Temple, and three years later he would have been made Master had he not declined to receive orders in the C of E. Continuing as afternoon lecturer, he was soon engaged in controversy with R. *Hooker, the new Master, which lasted until he was inhibited by J. *Whitgift. Throughout the 1580s, he was one of the leaders of *Presbyterian activity in London. In 1594 he was made first Provost of *Trinity College, Dublin. His principal works were the Ecclesiasticae Disciplinae, et Anglicanae Ecclesiae . . . Explicatio (pub. anon. at La Rochelle in 1574 and later in the same year in an Eng. tr. by T. *Cartwright), and the Disciplina Ecclesiae Sacra ex Dei Verbo descripta (written by 1587 and circulating in MS until an Eng. tr., *A Directory of Church Government was printed early in 1645). These both defended the Presbyterian form of Church government as of Dominical institution and proposed a scheme for practical implementation; they provided the most important English exposition of the Presbyterian case, and as such exercised great influence in that wing of the Puritan movement.

Disciplina Ecclesiae Sacra is pr. by F. *Paget, An Introduction to the Fifth Book of Hooker's Treatise of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (Oxford, 1899), pp. 238–51. S. J. Knox, Walter Travers: Paragon of Elizabethan Puritanism (1962), with refs. P. [G.] Lake, Anglicans and Puritans? Presbyterianism and English Conformist Thought from Whitgift to Hooker (1988), pp. 71–87. R. Bauckham, 'Hooker, Travers and the Church of Rome in the 1580s', JEH 29 (1978), pp. 37–50.

Treacle Bible. A popular title for M. *Coverdale's '*Great Bible' (q.v.; 1539) from its rendering of Jer. 8: 22, 'There is no more triacle [AV, 'balm'] in Gilead'.

Trecanum (from Gk. τρικάνων, 'triple canon'). In the *Gallican liturgy the title of the Communion chant. It consisted in an act of faith in the Trinity. The name is found already in pseudo-*Germanus of Paris.

Tre Fontane. This monastery, now *Trappist, is some 3 miles south of Rome and the traditional site of St *Paul's martyrdom. Acc. to legend, St Paul's head, on severance from his body, rebounded from the ground at three points, from which issued the three springs that give the site its name.

Dom Marie Gabriel [Montbet], Abbé d'Aiguebelle, L'Abbaye des Trois Fontaines située aux Eaux-Salviennes, près de Rome, et dédiée aux saints martyrs Vincent et Anastase (1869). A. Sartorio, 'L'abbazia cistercense delle Tre Fontane', Nuova Antologia, 167 (5) (1913), pp. 50–65. C. Bertelli, 'L'Enciclopedia delle Tre Fontane', Paragone, 235 (1969), pp. 24–49.

Tregelles, Samuel Prideaux (1813–75), biblical scholar. A boy of exceptional talent, he devoted his spare time while at the Neath Abbey Iron Works in S. Wales to learning Greek, Hebrew, Aramaic, and Welsh. Returning to his native Falmouth, he joined the *Plymouth Brethren, although he subsequently became a *Presbyterian. In 1838 Tregelles formed the design for a new critical text of the NT which should replace the '*textus receptus', and thenceforward he was engaged in the collation of Greek texts, making very extensive travels for the purpose. An Account of the Printed Text of the Greek New Testament appeared in 1854, to be followed by the publication of all the NT, with the exception of Rev., by 1870. From 1862 Tregelles was in receipt of a Civil List pension.

F. G. Kenyon, Handbook to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament (1901), pp. 82–100 passim, 248 f. E. C. Marchant in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 170 f.; C. Bertheau in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 90–5, s.v., with further refs.

Tremellius, John Immanuel (1510–80), Hebrew scholar. The son of a Ferrarese Jew, he was educated at the University of Pavia and converted to Christianity in 1540 through the influence of R. *Pole. In 1541 he was persuaded by *Peter Martyr to become a Protestant and, leaving Italy, he taught at Strasbourg under Johannes *Sturm. After the peace of *Schmalkalden he came to England at the invitation of Abp. T. *Cranmer (1547), and in 1549 succeeded Paul Fagius as the King's Reader of Hebrew at Cambridge University. Having returned to the Continent on the death of *Edward VI (1553), he became professor of OT studies at the University of Heidelberg in 1561. In 1577 he was expelled by Louis VI, the Lutheran Count Palatine, on account of his *Calvinistic opinions, and finally appointed by the Duc de Bouillon as a teacher of Hebrew at his newly founded college at Sedan. Tremellius's greatest work is his translation of the Old and New Testaments into Latin from Hebrew and Syriac respectively. This was long the standard Protestant Latin translation of the Bible. The NT (Syriac text with Lat. tr.) appeared in 1569; the OT (Lat. tr. only) in 5 parts between 1575 and 1579. Among his other works are a Hebrew and Greek Catechism (1551) and a Chaldean and Syriac Grammar (1569).

W. Becker, Immanuel Tremellius, ein Proselytenleben im Zeitalter der Reformation (1887; 2nd edn., 1890). G. Lloyd Jones, The Discovery of Hebrew in Tudor England: A Third Language (Manchester [1983]), pp. 50–52. E. I. Carlyle in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 186 f. T. J. Ney in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 95–8, s.v.

Trench, Richard Chenevix (1807–86), Abp. of *Dublin. Educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1832. For a brief time he was curate at Hadleigh to H. J. *Rose and later (1841–4) to S. *Wilberforce at Alverstoke. He became rector of Itchenstoke (1844–5), professor of divinity at *King's College, London (1846–58), Dean of *Westminster (1856–1863), and finally Abp. of Dublin (1863–84). His two books on the Gospels, Notes on the Parables of our Lord (1841) and Notes on the Miracles of our Lord (1846), at once scholarly and stimulating, created a fresh interest in the Gospels in many quarters. Trench also took a keen interest in philology, the fruits of which included his Study of Words (1851) and Synonyms of the NT (1854). He also exercised a decisive influence in the early stages of the Oxford English Dictionary. In addition, he wrote much religious poetry. As Abp. of Dublin he vigorously opposed W. E. *Gladstone's proposals for disestablishing the Irish Church. His other publications included Sacred Latin Poetry (1849) and many volumes of sermons and poetry.

Letters and Memorials [ed. M. Trench] (2 vols., 1888). J. Bromley, The Man of Ten Talents: A Portrait of Richard Chenevix Trench 1807 86 (1959). R. Bayne in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 191–4.

Trent, Council of (1545–63). This Council, reckoned by RC theologians the Nineteenth *Oecumenical Council, was the most impressive embodiment of the ideals of the *Counter-Reformation.

The spread of Protestantism and the drastic need of moral and administrative reforms within the RC Church led to widespread demand among Catholics for a Universal Council, but disputes between *Charles V and others who favoured such action, and the Popes, who were generally averse to it, long prevented a move. At last *Paul III summoned a council to Mantua for 23 May 1537, but the plan fell through owing to French resistance. In 1538 further proposals for a council at Vicenza were frustrated by the unexpected indifference of the Emperor. In 1542 the Pope again convoked the Council, this time to Trent. After yet another postponement it eventually met on 13 Dec. 1545. At the outset it was a very small assembly, composed of 3 legates, 1 cardinal, 4 archbishops, 21 bishops, and 5 generals of orders.

Period I (1545–7; Sessions 1–8). As it was decided that voting should be by individual heads rather than (as at *Constance, 1415) by nations, the bishops from the Italian states had a preponderant influence on account of their numbers. The principal preliminary, whether the Council should first discuss dogma or disciplinary reform, was settled by the compromise that the subjects should be treated concurrently. The control of the presiding legates was then asserted and subsequently maintained through all the Sessions.

At Session 3 (4 Feb. 1546), the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed was formally reaffirmed as the basis of faith. At Session 4 (8 Apr. 1546) the validity of both Scripture and unwritten *traditions as sources of truth, the sole right of the Church to interpret the Bible, and the authority of the text of the *Vulgate were asserted. The decrees of Session 5 (17 June 1546) on *Original Sin and of Session 6 (13 Jan. 1547) on *justification and merit struck at the root of the Protestant system. No decision was reached, however, on many of the points in dispute on these matters in the Catholic schools. At Session 7 (3 Mar. 1547) the theology of the Sacraments in general was defined. The institution of all seven by Christ and their necessity to salvation were affirmed. Baptism and Confirmation were also treated in detail and a number of decrees on administrative reforms were also passed.

Meanwhile, renewed political tension between Charles V and the Pope hindered progress. An epidemic at Trent offered a pretext for transferring the Council to *Bologna (Session 8, 11 Mar. 1547). The Council was now virtually suspended for four years, until *Julius III (1550–5) reconvoked the assembly to Trent, which some prelates had refused to abandon.

Period II (1551–2; Sessions 9–14). Important decisions were reached at Session 13 (11 Oct. 1551) on the *Eucharist and at Session 14 (25 Nov. 1551) on *Penance and Extreme *Unction. *Transubstantiation was affirmed and the *Lutheran, *Calvinist, and *Zwinglian Eucharistic doctrines repudiated. The Protestants present demanded renewed discussion of the subjects previously defined, the release of the bishops from their oaths of allegiance to the Papacy, and the supremacy of General Councils over the Pope.

The revolt of the princes against Charles V led to the suspension of the Council on 28 Apr. 1552. Under the austere and violently anti-Protestant *Paul IV (1555–9, Carafa) there was no hope of its reassembly, and it first met again ten years later under his more tolerant successor, *Pius IV.

Period III (1562–3; Sessions 15–25). When the Council reassembled on 18 Jan. 1562, all hope of conciliating the Protestants had gone and the *Jesuits were now a strong force. The proceedings were henceforward hampered by struggles between the Papal and the opposition bishops, Imperial, Spanish, and French. A far-reaching plan of reform, devised by the Emp. Ferdinand II and advocated by the Cardinal of Lorraine (a Guise), failed. The Papal party owed its success largely to the diplomatic skill of the legate, Cardinal G. *Morone. At Session 21 (16 July 1562) the subject of Eucharistic Communion was treated and the presence of the undivided Christ under either species (*concomitance) and the adequacy of Communion in one kind was affirmed. Session 22 (17 Sept. 1562) issued a series of important definitions on the sacrificial doctrine of the Mass. Session 23 (15 July 1563) dealt with Orders and Session 24 (24 Nov. 1563) with the Sacrament of *Matrimony. Other work was done on the reform of the *Index and the residence of bishops. Of great practical significance was the legislation establishing clerical seminaries and regulating the appointment of bishops, provincial and diocesan synods, preaching of sermons, etc. Finally, Session 25 (3–4 Dec. 1563) dealt cursorily with *purgatory, the invocation of *saints, the veneration of *relics and *images, and *indulgences.

The Council ended on 4 Dec. 1563. The decrees were confirmed in a body on 26 Jan. 1564 by Pius IV, who in the same year published the 'Profession of the Tridentine Faith', a brief summary of doctrine, generally known as the *Creed of Pius IV.

Several important works, which the Council recommended or initiated but could not effectually carry through, were handed over to the Pope for completion. The revision of the Vulgate, ordered at Trent in 1546, was concluded under *Clement VIII in 1592; and *Pius V founded the Congregation of the Index in 1571 to carry out other unfinished work, having himself issued the '*Roman Catechism' (1566) and revised *Breviary (1568) and *Missal (1570).

Though the Council failed to satisfy the Protestants and its reforms were less comprehensive than many Catholics had hoped for, it had established a solid basis for the renewal of discipline and the spiritual life in the RC Church, which emerged from Trent with a clearly formulated doctrinal system and an enhanced religious strength for the subsequent struggle with Protestantism.

The Acta of the Council ed. A. Theiner (2 vols., Leipzig, 1874); the decrees have frequently been repr. and are conveniently available, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees, 2 (1990), pp. 657–799. The principal collections of docs. are J. Le Plat (ed.), Monumentorum ad Historiam Concilii Tridentini Illustrandam Spectantium Collectio (7 vols., Louvain, 1781–7) and the Concilium Tridentinum: Diariorum, Actorum, Epistolarum, Tractatuum nova Collectio. Edidit Societas Goerresiana (Freiburg i.B., 1901 ff.). J. Šusta (ed.), Die römische Curie und das Concil von Trient unter Pius IV.: Actenstücke zur Geschichte des Concils von Trient (4 vols., Vienna, 1904–14). S. Kuttner (ed.), Decreta septem priorum sessionum Concilii Tridentini sub Paulo III Pont. Max. (Washington, DC, 1945), reproducing in facsimile the autograph of A. Massarelli, Secretary of the Council, with important introd. H. Jedin, Das Konzil von Trient: Ein Ueberblick ueber die Erforschung seiner Geschichte (1948). J. Olazarán, SJ (ed.), Documentos inéditos tridentinos sobre la Justificación (Madrid, 1957). Early histories by P. *Sarpi, *Servite (under the pseudonym of P. S. Polano), Historia del Concilio Tridentino (London, 1619; Eng. tr. by N. Brent, Warden of Merton College, Oxford, Oxford, 1620; very hostile), and S. Pallavicino, SJ, Istoria del Concilio di Trento (2 vols., Rome, 1656–7; reply to preceding work). H. Jedin, Geschichte des Konzils von Trient (4 vols. in 5, 1949–75; Eng. tr., 1957 ff.); G. Schreiber (ed.), Das Weltkonzil von Trient: Sein Werden und Wirken (2 vols., 1951). H. Jedin, Krisis und Abschluss des Trienter Konzils 1562/3 (Freiburg, 1964; Eng. tr., 1967). J. Lecler, SJ, and others in Latran V et Trente (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques publiée sous la direction de G. Dumeige, SJ, 10; 1975), pp. 115–470; idd., Trente (ibid. 11; 1981). J. M. R. Belloso, Trento: Una Interpretación Teológica (Colectánea San Paciano, 25; Barcelona, 1979); A. Duval, Des Sacrements au Concile de Trente (1985). R. V. Laurence in CMH 2 (1903), pp. 639–89, with bibl. pp. 818–24. P. Richard and A. Michel in Hefele and Leclercq, 9 and 10 (pt. 1) (1930–38). L. Cristiani in Fliche and Martin, 17 (1948), pp. 13–242. A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1946), cols. 1414–508, s.v. 'Trente (Concile de)'; H. Jedin in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 271–8, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to COUNTER-REFORMATION.

Trental. A set of thirty *Requiem Masses for the repose of a soul, whether said on a single or on successive days. The word was also formerly in occasional use for a Mass or other service (also 'Month's Mind') on the 30th day after death or burial.

Treuga Dei. See TRUCE OF GOD.

Triad (Gk. τριάς). A word first used of the *Trinity in the Godhead by *Theophilus of Antioch, who names as the Triad 'God and His Word and His Wisdom' (ad Autol. 2. 15).

Tridentine. Having reference to the Council of *Trent (Concilium Tridentinum), 1545–63.

Triduum Sacrum (Lat., 'the sacred three days'). The three concluding days of *Holy Week commemorating the Last Supper, Passion, and Death of Christ, i.e. *Maundy Thursday (evening only, acc. to modern RC reckoning), *Good Friday, and *Holy Saturday.

Triers and Ejectors. Persons appointed to ensure the theological and political reliability of the English clergy. In 1640 a committee of Parliament was formed to eject 'scandalous' ministers [i.e. those with *Laudian or '*Arminian' sympathies] and in 1642 Parliament replaced it with a Committee for Plundered Ministers, which had the additional task of providing substitutes. Local committees were then formed to eject further 'scandalous ministers', particularly those who would not accept the *Solemn League and Covenant. A national commission of Triers was appointed by O. *Cromwell, under an Ordinance of 20 Mar. 1654, for the 'approbation' of all public preachers and lecturers before their admission to benefices. It consisted of 29 clerics and 9 laymen drawn from various regional bodies. On 28 Aug. 1654 new county commissions of Ejectors were appointed. Both Triers and Ejectors ceased work at the *Restoration of Charles II.

The 1654 Ordinance for appointing Triers is pr. in C. H. Firth and R. S. Rait (eds.), Acts and Ordinances of the Interregnum, 1642–1660, 2 (1911), pp. 855–8; that for appointing Ejectors, ibid., pp. 968–90. Much information on ejected clergy is collected in A. G. Matthews (ed.), Walker Revised, being a Revision of John Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy during the Grand Rebellion 1642–60 (Oxford, 1948). Primary docs. concerning the committees in one county are ed. by C. Holmes, The Suffolk Committees for Scandalous Ministers 1644–1646 (Suffolk Records Society, 13; 1970), with introd.

Trimmer, Sarah (1741–1810), authoress, known as 'Good Mrs. Trimmer'. Sarah Kirby was born at Ipswich, where her father, J. J. Kirby (1716–74), was an artist of some standing. She married in 1762 and had six sons and six daughters, whom she educated herself except for the boys' classics. She later interested herself esp. in the establishment of *Sunday Schools, a project which she ventilated in her book The Oeconomy of Charity (1786). In 1793 began her connection with the *SPCK, which published two of her books in the same year, The Abridgment of the Old Testament and The Abridgment of the New Testament, which were designed as textbooks for charity schools. The best known of her writings, The History of the Robins (1786; originally in Fabulous Histories), long remained a favourite children's book for the upper classes, whereas her numerous school books were intended for the instruction of the poor.

Some Account of the Life and Writings of Mrs. Trimmer (2 vols., 1814) contains mainly extracts from her private journals. E. Lee in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 231 f.

Trinitarian. A person who believes in the doctrine of the Holy *Trinity, esp. as contrasted with a *Unitarian. In the 15th and 16th cents., however, the word was occasionally applied to those who held heretical, as opposed to orthodox, views on the Trinity.

Trinitarians (Order of the Most Holy Trinity). This order was founded in 1198 at Cerfroid in the diocese of Meaux by St *John of Matha (d. 1213) and St Felix of Valois (d. 1212) with the approval of *Innocent III. Its members, also known as 'Mathurins', followed an austere form of the *Augustinian Rule, wearing a white habit with a cross 'flory' (upright red, crossbar blue) on the *scapular and cloak. They devoted themselves esp. to the ransoming of countless captives to which one third of their revenue was devoted; at the height of their influence in the 15th cent. they possessed about 800 houses. In 1596 a reform called the Barefooted Trinitarians was started in Spain by Fr. Juan Bautista of the Immaculate Conception. It became a distinct order and is the only body of Trinitarians that now survives (with some 400 priests and 40 lay brothers in 1993). Its members are engaged in education, nursing, and pastoral work. There were nuns affiliated to the order at an early date and other communities were founded in the 16th cent. The various contemplative communities (Calced and *Discalced) were united in 1972. There are a number of other Trinitarian communities of women engaged in educational and other social work.

Acta Ordinis S. Trinitatis, vol. 1 (Rome, 1919–23) includes important primary docs. P. Deslandres, L'Ordre des Trinitaires pour le rachat des captifs (2 vols., Toulouse, 1903). C. Mazzarisi di Gesù, OSST, L'Ordine Trinitario nella Chiesa e nella Storia (Turin [1964]). Antoninus ab Assumptione, Ord. Trinit., Les Origines de l'ordre de la Très Sainte Trinité d'après les documents (Rome, 1925). Id., Ministrorum Generalium Ordinis SS. Trinitatis Series (Isola del Liri, 1936), and other works of this author. G. Cipollone, OSST, Studi intorno a Cerfroid, prima casa dell'ordine trinitario (1198–1429) (Ordinis Trinitatis Institutum Historicum, 1st ser. 1; Rome, 1978); id., La casa della Santa Trinità di Marsiglia (1202–1547): Prima fondazione sul mare dell'ordine trinitario (ibid. 2; Vatican City, 1981). Further vols. planned. J. Pujana, OST, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 1259–87, s.v. 'Trinitaires', with extensive bibl.

Trinity, doctrine of the. The central dogma of Christian theology, that the one God exists in three Persons and one substance, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. God is one, yet self-differentiated; the God who reveals Himself to mankind is one God equally in three distinct modes of existence, yet remains one through all eternity.

Though the word 'Trinity', first used in its Greek form τριάς by *Theophilus of Antioch (c. AD 180), is not found in Scripture, Christian theologians have seen adumbrations of the doctrine in the biblical narratives; in the OT, for example, the appearance of the three men to *Abraham (Gen. 18) was held by the Fathers to foreshadow the revelation of the threefold nature of God. In the NT the most influential text was the reference to the three Persons in the baptismal formula at the end of Mt. (28: 19), but there are other passages held to have Trinitarian overtones, such as the Pauline benediction of 2 Cor. 13: 14. From the biblical language concerning Father, Son (or *Logos), and Spirit, Trinitarian doctrine developed, as the Church's expansion led to the need for reflection, confession, and dialogue.

Finding the appropriate concepts was not easy, and many 2nd- and 3rd-cent. Christians adopted views that were later considered unorthodox. These included the so-called 'economic Trinity', in which the distinctions between the Persons depended solely on their distinct functions (or 'economies') towards the created universe. *Tertullian taught that the divine Word existed originally within the Father's mind, and first became a distinct Person when the world was created; the Spirit's Personality was subsequent to that of the Word; they were thus not strictly co-eternal with the Father. *Origen conceived the Word (or Son) as the offspring of the Father and the Spirit as coming into being through the Word; their special roles were respectively to control the universe and inspire the saints. Such *subordinationism is not counterbalanced by Origen's affirmation of the eternal generation of the Word from the Father, since Origen held that the whole universe of created spirits had always existed in some form, so that the Word's co-eternity with the Father does not entail equality. These subordinationist views echoed those of contemporary *Platonists, who envisaged three eternal divine powers arranged in descending order of dignity. The opposite deviation, extreme *Modalism, pictured only one divine Person who acted successively as creator, redeemer, and sanctifier.

At the Councils of *Nicaea (325) and *Constantinople (381) the doctrine was defined in its simplest outlines, by negative rather than positive pronouncements, affirming against *Sabellianism the real distinction of the divine Persons, and against *Arianism and *Macedonianism their equality and co-eternity. The Persons differ only in origin, in that the Father is ungenerated, the Son is generated by the Father, and the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father. Some E. Fathers (notably St *Gregory of Nyssa and St *Cyril of Alexandria) understood the Spirit to proceed from the Father through the Son; others are less explicit (e.g. St *Gregory of Nazianzus) or deny any '*double procession' altogether (e.g. *Theodoret). Later, from the time of *Photius, the doctrine of the procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father alone became characteristic of E. theology. In a 7th-cent. work on the Trinity, attributed to Cyril of Alexandria and largely incorporated in the De Orthodoxa Fide of St *John of Damascus, the doctrine of the mutual indwelling of the Persons of the Trinity (περιχώρησις or *circumincession), already implicit in the Trinitarian theology of the Cappadocian Fathers and in *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, was developed.

In the W., the doctrine was developed in a somewhat different manner. Starting not from the difference of the Persons, as did many of the more philosophically minded Greek Fathers, but from the unity of the Substance, it readily safeguarded the co-equality of the Persons. The procession of the Holy Spirit was attributed both to the Father and the Son. The chief exponent of the teaching of the Latin Church during the patristic period was St *Augustine, esp. in his 'De Trinitate'; his great contribution was the comparison of the two processes of the Divine life (the later 'filiation' and 'spiration') to the analogical processes of human self-knowledge and self-love. Whereas his conception of the generation of the Son as the act of thinking on the part of the Father was based on Tertullian, the explanation of the Holy Spirit as the mutual love of the Father and the Son was the fruit of his own reflections. This so-called 'psychological theory of the Trinity' was taken over from him and developed by medieval Scholasticism. In its more formal aspects, medieval teaching on the Trinity reasserted the doctrines of the *Athanasian Creed. It received classical exposition in the writings of St *Thomas Aquinas.

The Trinitarian teaching thus elaborated by the Schoolmen, though challenged in the 17th cent. by *Socinianism and *Unitarianism, has remained the central strand of subsequent W. theology. In the 20th cent. both K. *Barth and K. *Rahner have made considerable contributions to the subject, both emphasizing the essential unity of the immanent and the economic Trinity. Other scholars, e.g. G. W. H. Lampe, have sought to maintain the Divinity of Christ while regarding Trinitarian doctrine as basically outdated. J. Moltmann has developed a distinctive doctrine of the social Trinity, reviving a version of the patristic theory of circumincession to express the self-differentiation of God as the crucified God. A number of scholars, notably Walter Kasper, have re-examined the Filioque controversy in an ecumenical context.

Discussions of the doctrine of the Trinity figure in all works on Christian dogmatics and in writings concerned with the nature of God. Modern studies devoted to the subject as a whole incl. F. C. *Baur, Die christliche Lehre von der Dreieinigkeit und Menschwerdung Gottes in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (3 vols., 1841–3); T. de Régnon, SJ, Études de théologie positive sur la Sainte Trinité (4 vols., 1892–8); J. Lebreton, SJ, Histoire du dogme de la Trinité (Bibliothèque de Théologie Historique, 2 vols., 1910–28; Eng. tr. of vol. 1; 1939); A. E. J. Rawlinson (ed.), Essays on the Trinity and the Incarnation (1928); K. Barth, Kirchliche Dogmatik, 1. 1 (Munich, 1932), pp. 311–514; Eng. tr. (Edinburgh, 1975), pp. 295–489; P. Galtier, SJ, De SS. Trinitate in se et in nobis (Paris, 1933); G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), passim; L. Hodgson, The Doctrine of the Trinity (Croall Lectures, 1942–3; 1943); V. *Lossky, Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (1944), pp. 43–86 and 131–69; Eng. tr. (1957), pp. 44–90 and 135–73; R. S. Franks, The Doctrine of the Trinity (1953); C. C. Richardson, The Doctrine of the Trinity (New York, 1958); A. W. Wainwright, The Trinity in the New Testament (1962); E. Jüngel, Gottes Sein ist im Werden (Tübingen, 1965; Eng. tr., 1976); K. Rahner, 'Der dreifaltige Gott als transzendenter Urgrund der Heilsgeschichte', in J. Feiner and M. Löhrer (eds.), Mysterium Salutis, 2 (1967), pp. 317–401; separate Eng. tr., The Trinity (1970); also other arts. in Mysterium Salutis, 2, esp. pp. 47–220; B. de Margerie, SJ, La Trinité Chrétienne dans l'Histoire (Théologie Historique, 31 [1975]); G. W. H. Lampe, God as Spirit (Bampton Lectures, 1976; Oxford, 1977); J. Moltmann, Trinität und Reich Gottes (Munich, 1980; Eng. tr., 1981); W. [J.] Kasper, Der Gott Jesu Christi (Glaubensbekenntnis der Kirche, 1; 1982; Eng. tr., New York, 1983; London, 1984); D. Brown, The Divine Trinity (1985); T. F. Torrance, The Trinitarian Faith: The Evangelical Theology of the Ancient Catholic Church (Edinburgh, 1988); id., The Christian Doctrine of God, One Being Three Persons (ibid., 1996); F. Courth, Trinität in der Schrift und Patristik (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, ed. M. Schmaus and others, 2, fasc. 1a; 1988). G. Bardy and A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1545–855, s.v. 'Trinité', with detailed bibl.

Trinity College, Dublin. The (one) College in the University of *Dublin, founded in 1591. Membership was long confined to Anglicans but religious tests were eventually abolished in 1873. Since 1904 women have been admitted to degrees. The College is governed by a Provost and Fellows and is represented in Seanad Eireann. The library has a very valuable collection of Irish and other MSS, among them the 'Book of *Kells', and the 'Book of *Armagh' (qq.v.).

J. P. Mahaffy and others, The Book of Trinity College, Dublin (1892); J. P. Mahaffy, An Epoch in Irish History: Trinity College, Dublin, its Foundation and Early Fortunes, 1591–1660 (1903). C. Maxwell, A History of Trinity College, Dublin, 1591–1892 (Dublin, 1946); K. C. Bailey, A History of Trinity College, Dublin, 1892–1945 (ibid., 1947); R. B. Dowell and D. A. Webb, Trinity College, Dublin 1592–1952 (Cambridge, 1982). J. V. Luce, Trinity College, Dublin, the first 400 years (Dublin, 1992). G. D. Burtchaell and T. U. Sadleir (eds.), Alumni Dublinenses: A Register of the Students, Graduates, Professors and Provosts of Trinity College, in the University of Dublin (1924; rev. and cont., 1935).

Trinity Sunday. The first Sunday after *Pentecost or *Whitsun. It was not till the Middle Ages that the Sunday was at all widely observed as a separate feast in honour of the Holy Trinity. Its observance, introduced to mark the conclusion of the liturgical commemorations of the life of Christ and the descent of the Holy Spirit by a celebration embracing God in all three Persons, was universally enjoined by Pope *John XXII in 1334. The feast became specially popular in England, perhaps by its association with St Thomas *Becket, who was consecrated bishop on that day (1162). The restriction of the feast to a single day by the absence of an octave is appropriate to the Unity of the Godhead which the feast commemorates. Sundays are reckoned after Trinity in the *Sarum Missal and in the BCP. They were formerly also reckoned after Trinity (or after the first Sunday after Trinity) in the *Carmelite, *Dominican, and *Carthusian Orders and not after *Pentecost as was usual in the Roman Rite until 1969.

A. Klaus, OFM, Ursprung und Verbreitung der Dreifaltigkeitsmesse (1938). F. *Cabrol, OSB, 'Le Culte de la Trinité dans la liturgie de la fête de la Trinité', EL 45 (1931), pp. 270–8. P. Browe, SJ, 'Zur Geschichte des Dreifaltigkeitsfestes', Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 1 (1950), pp. 65–81.

Triodion (Gk. τριῴδιον). In the Byzantine rite, the liturgical book containing the variable portions of the services from the 4th Sunday before *Lent till the Saturday before *Easter. It is so named because during this season the *canons ordinarily contain only three odes (ᾠδαί) instead of the usual nine. In the Slavonic Churches the Triodion is called the 'Fasting Triodion' to distinguish it from the 'Flowery Triodion', the Slavonic term for the *Pentecostarion.

Partial Eng. tr. by Mother Mary and K. [T. R.] Ware, The Lenten Triodion (1978). H. J. Schulz in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 10 (1965), cols. 363 f.

triple candlestick. The candlestick used until 1955 in the Latin Rite at the 'Lumen Christi', in the liturgy of *Holy Saturday, to hold the three candles which were successively lighted in the course of the procession up to the altar. It was commonly mounted on a long pole. A triple candlestick (together with a double candlestick) is also used in the E. Church for episcopal blessings at the Liturgy. The bishop holds one candlestick in each hand, the one symbolizing the Trinity, the other the two natures of Christ.

Trisagion (Gk. τρισάγιον, 'thrice holy'). The refrain 'Holy God, Holy and strong, Holy and immortal, have mercy upon us' is a characteristic feature of *Orthodox worship. It is solemnly chanted in all E. liturgies before the lections, except at certain great feasts, and is recited at all other services. It occurred also in the *Gallican liturgy, and in the Roman rite it is sung as part of the *Reproaches on Good Friday. The earliest datable occurrence of the word is in the Acts of the Council of *Chalcedon (451). At Jerusalem, Constantinople, and in the W. the Trisagion was taken to be addressed to the Trinity; in Syria, parts of Asia Minor and in Egypt in the 5th cent. it was understood as referring to Christ. These differing interpretations were reflected in the controversy over *Theopaschism.

J. M. Hanssens, SJ, Institutiones Liturgicae de Ritibus Orientalibus, 3 (pt. 2; Rome, 1932), pp. 96–156. L. Brou, OSB, 'Études sur la liturgie mozarabe. Le Trisagion de la Messe d'après les sources manuscrites', EL 61 (1947), pp. 309–34. V.-S. Janeras, 'Les Byzantins et le Trisagion Christologique', in Miscellanea Liturgica in onore di sua Eminenza il Cardinale Giacomo Lercaro, 2 (1967), pp. 469–99. E. Klum-Böhmer, Das Trishagion als Versöhnungsformel der Christenheit: Kontroverstheologie im V. und VI. Jahrhundert (Munich, 1979). S. [P.] Brock, 'The thrice-holy hymn in the Liturgy', Sobornost/Eastern Churches Review, vol. 7, no. 2 (1985), pp. 24–34.

Tritheism. The heretical teaching about the Trinity which denies the unity of substance in the Three Divine Persons. The name is esp. applied to the teaching of a group of 6th-cent. *Monophysites, the best known of whom was *John Philoponus; he taught that the common nature shared by the Three Persons is an intellectual abstraction, and that though the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit have a common nature and substance (are 'consubstantial'), they are as individuals distinct substances or natures and also distinct in their properties. This teaching was condemned as tritheism at the Third Council of *Constantinople (680–1). In the Middle Ages the extreme *Nominalism of *Roscelin and the exaggerated *Realism of *Gilbert de la Porrée caused both these Schoolmen to be accused of teaching tritheistic doctrines; and they were condemned by the Councils of *Soissons (*c.*1092) and of *Reims (1148) respectively. Gilbert's doctrines later influenced *Joachim of Fiore and issued in a firm declaration of the numerical unity of the Divine Nature by the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215). A more recent exponent of tritheistic teaching was A. *Günther, who, in his struggle against *Hegelian pantheism, affirmed the existence of three absolute realities in the Trinity, distinct from each other and bound together only by a unity of origin. Popular ideas about the Trinity, in intention orthodox, often tend to be tritheistic in expression.

Trithemius, Johannes (1462–1516), Abbot of Sponheim, so named from his birthplace, Trittenheim, on the Moselle. After harsh treatment at the hands of his stepfather, he fled to Würzburg, where his intellectual powers developed rapidly and he came into close contact with the humanist movement. A chance visit to the monastery of Sponheim in 1482 led him to join the community, and in 1483 he was elected its abbot. He rapidly brought about its reform, collecting a library of MSS which soon made it one of the most famous in Europe. In 1506, however, through dissensions caused by the stringency of his discipline, he was induced to resign his abbacy, and for his last ten years he presided over the Scottish abbey of St Jakob at Würzburg. His writings include many useful historical compilations, e.g. De Viris Illustribus Germaniae (1495); works on natural science and magic, e.g. Steganographia (pub. 1606); and some fine sermons.

Theological writings first pub., Mainz, 1604 and 1605; Historical writings, Frankfurt, 1601; Letters, Dresden, 1536. Modern edn. of his De Laude Scriptorum by K. Arnold (Mainfränkische Heft, 10; Würzburg, 1973; repr., with Eng. tr., Lawrence, Kan., 1974). Studies by id. (Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte des Bistums und Hochstifts Würzburg, 23; 1971; 2nd edn., 1991) and N. L. Brann [in Eng.] (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 24; Leiden, 1981), both with bibl. of earlier works. P. Séjourné, OSB, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1862–7.

Trito-Isaiah. The name coined by B. *Duhm in 1892 for the author of the last 11 chapters of Isaiah (56–66), in the belief that they were written by a later prophet than the 6th-cent. 'Deutero-Isaiah' who wrote chs. 40–55. The term is also in current use for chs. 56–66 themselves, even when they are not held to be the work of a single individual.

triumphant, the Church. The body of Christians in heaven, i.e. the perfected saints, distinguished from those still on earth (*militant) and those in *purgatory (*expectant). See COMMUNION OF SAINTS.

trivium. The medieval name for the group of three sciences consisting of grammar, rhetoric, and dialectic, which together constituted the inferior group of the *seven liberal arts.

Troas. A city of NW Asia Minor visited several times by St *Paul. It was on his first visit here that he saw the vision of 'a man of Macedonia' which led him to carry the Gospel into Europe (Acts 16: 8–11).

Troeltsch, Ernst (1865–1923), theologian and philosopher. A native of Augsburg, he taught theology successively at Göttingen (1891–2), Bonn (1892–4), and Heidelberg (1894–1915). From 1915 until his death he was professor of the history of philosophy and civilization at Berlin.

In theological outlook Troeltsch was much influenced by A. *Ritschl, in philosophy by the Neo-Kantian Wilhelm Windelband (1848–1915) and Heinrich Rickert (1863–1936), and in the religious understanding and assessment of culture by W. *Dilthey. His originality as a theologian lay in his application of sociological theory to theology, notably in Die Soziallehren der christlichen Kirchen und Gruppen (1912; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1931). He was also among the first seriously to consider the claims to truth of other world religions alongside Christianity in Die Absolutheit des Christentums und die Religionsgeschichte (1902; Eng. tr., 1972) and Der Historismus und seine Probleme (1922). This position led him into increasing relativism, esp. in Christian Thought: Its History and Application (1923). Close students of Troeltsch in Britain included F. *von Hugel and C. C. J. *Webb.

Gesammelte Schriften (4 vols., Tübingen, 1912–25). Eng. tr. of his Writings on Theology and Religion by R. Morgan and M. Pye (1977), and Religion in History by J. L. Adams and W. F. Bense (Edinburgh, 1991). Studies by E. Vermeil (Études d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses, 2; 1922), W. [E.] Köhler (Tübingen, 1941), W. Bodenstein (Gütersloh, 1959), W. F. Kasch (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 34; 1963), J. P. Clayton (ed.), Ernest Troeltsch and the Future of Theology (1976), S. Coakley, Christ without Absolutes: A Study of the Christology of Ernst Troeltsch (Oxford, 1988), W. E. Wyman (American Academy of Religion, Academy Series, 44; Chico, Calif., 1983), and H.-G. Drescher (Göttingen, 1991; Eng. tr., 1992). H. Renz and F. W. Graf (eds.), Troeltsch-Studien (Gütersloh, 1982 ff.). F. W. Graf and H. Ruddies, Ernst Troeltsch Bibliographie (Tübingen, 1982).

troparion (Gk. τροπάριον). In the E. Church, a generic term to designate a stanza of religious poetry. In particular it is applied to the *Apolytikion, which is often known as the 'troparion of the day'.

E. [J.] Wellesz, A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (1949), pp. 144–52. L. Clugnet, Dictionnaire grec-français des noms liturgiques (1895), pp. 153–5, s.v. τροπάριον. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 130–2 ('Tropariendichter'). A. Raes, SJ, in EC 12 (1954), cols. 571 f.

trope. In the W. Church, a phrase or sentence, with its music, introducing, or interpolated into, any of the chants of the Mass and some of those of the Divine *Office. The words are often highly poetic. They were intended to embellish, increase the solemnity, and deepen understanding of the texts to which they were attached. Some 200 trope MSS have survived, a tenth of them dating from the 10th cent. Tropes for the *Proper flourished particularly in the 11th cent. and then went out of use; those for the *Ordinary continued and developed until tropes were forbidden by the Council of *Trent. The 'Troper' is a collection of such pieces, and can also contain *sequences.

C. Blume, SJ, and H. M. Bannister (eds.), Tropen des Missals im Mittelalter (AHMA 47 and 49; 1905–6); R. Jonsson and others (eds.), Corpus Troporum (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, 21, 22, 25, 26, 31, 32, 34, etc.; 1975 ff.), with extensive bibl. in vol. 3, pp. 363–77. W. H. *Frere (ed.), The Winchester Troper (HBS 8; 1894), with introd. L. Gautier, Histoire de la poésie liturgique au moyen âge: Les Tropes, 1 (1886; all pub.). Liturgische Tropen: Referate zweier Colloquien des Corpus Troparum in München (1983) und Canterbury (1984), ed. G. Silagi (Münchener Beiträge zur Mediävistik und Renaissance-Forschung, 36; 1985); Pax et Sapientia: Studies in Text and Music of Liturgical Tropes and Sequences in Memory of Gordon Anderson, ed. R. Jacobsson (Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, 29; 1986). H. Husmann, Tropen- und Sequenzenhandschriften (Répertoire international des sources musicales, B.5.1 [1964]); A. E. Planchart, The Repertory of Tropes at Winchester (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1977). J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), esp. pp. 275–81.B. Stäblein in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, 13 (1966), cols. 797–826, s.v. 'Tropus'; R. Steiner in S. Sadie (ed.), New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 19 (1980), pp. 172–87, s.v.

Trophimus, St. (1) Acc. to Acts 20: 4 and 21: 29, he was an Ephesian Gentile, who accompanied St *Paul on part of his third missionary journey and to *Jerusalem, where Paul's introduction of him into the Temple was the chief ground for the riot. He is also mentioned at 2 Tim. 4: 20 ('Trophimus I left at Miletum sick'). In the Gk. *Menology he is reckoned one of the Seventy (cf. Lk. 10: 1) and commemorated with St Aristarchus (cf. Acts 19: 29, etc.) and St *Pudens on 14 Apr.

(2) St Trophimus, traditionally reckoned the first Bp. of Arles, is first mentioned in 417 in an Ep. of Pope *Zosimus to Patroclus, Bp. of Arles, as an early preacher of the Gospel sent from Rome to Gaul. Acc. to St *Gregory of Tours he was one of the bishops who came to Gaul with St *Dionysius of Paris. At Arles as early as the 5th cent. he was identified with the Trophimus of the NT in furtherance of the city's claim to primatial status, and he became greatly venerated. Feast day, 29 Dec.

(1) See comm. to Acts, cited s.v., and to Titus, Epistle to, cited s.v. TIMOTHY AND TITUS, EPISTLES TO. J. Polien in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 667 f., s.v.

(2) L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, 1 (1894), pp. 246 f., with refs. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, 1 (1930), esp. pp. 347 f. and 449 f. É. Griffe, La Gaule chrétienne à l'époque romaine, 1 (2nd edn., 1964), pp. 104–8. L. Levillain, 'Saint Trophime, confesseur et métropolitain d'Arles et la Mission des Sept en Gaule. Étude d'un texte de Grégoire de Tours et d'un passage de la Passion de Saint Saturnin', Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, 13 (1927), pp. 145–89. S. A. Bennett in DCB 4 (1887), p. 1055, s.v.; M.-O. Garrigues in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (1969), cols. 665–72, s.v. 'Trofimo di Arles'.

Truce of God (Lat. pax, treuga Dei). In medieval times, a suspension of hostilities ordered by the Church on certain days and during certain seasons. The institution goes back to attempts to remedy the feudal anarchy of the 11th cent. By a canon of the Council of Elne of 1027, the conduct of hostilities between Saturday night and Monday morning was forbidden. At a later date *Advent and *Lent were also brought within the Truce.

Trullan Synod. The synod held in 692 by the E. bishops to pass disciplinary canons to complete the work of the Fifth (553) and Sixth (680–1) General Councils (hence its other name of Πενθέκτη, 'Quinisext', or Fifth-Sixth, Council). It sat in the domed room ('trullus') of the Emp. Justinian II's palace at *Constantinople, where the Sixth General Council had also met. The disciplinary decrees of the synod were rejected by the Pope and, though by no means completely observed in the E., served to accentuate the growing division between W. and E. practice. They are sometimes quoted (wrongly) as having been passed by the Sixth General Council, and as such seem to have received some sort of recognition by Pope *Hadrian I (772–95). The subjects legislated on included clerical marriage, ecclesiastical dress, the age of ordination, and affinity and other impediments to matrimony.

There survive only the Council's allocution to the Emperor and the 102 Canons, with the signatures of the participants of the Council. Hardouin, 3, cols. 1645–712; Mansi, 11 (Florence, 1765), cols. 929–1006. Texts also pr., with Fr. tr., in Joannou, 1, pt. 1 (1962), pp. 98–241. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 560–81. V. Laurent, 'L'Œuvre canonique du Concile in Trullo (691–692), source primaire du droit de l'Église orientale', Revue des Études byzantines, 23 (1965), pp. 7–41. H. Ohme, Das Concilium Quinisextum und seine Bischofsliste: Studien zum Konstantinopoler Konzil von 692 (Arbeiten zum Kirchengeschichte, 56; 1990). J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 24–9. CPG 4 (1980), p. 184 (nos. 9443 f.). G. Fritz in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1581–97, s.v. 'Quinisexte (Concile)'. See also bibl. to SERGIUS I.

Trumpets, Feast of. A Jewish feast kept on the first day of the seventh month (i.e. Tishri, Oct.), the observance of which is ordained in Lev. 23: 24 and Num. 29: 1. It is now regarded by the Jews as New Year's Day ('Rosh ha-Shanah').

Truro. The Anglican diocese of Truro was created in 1877, out of the Archdeaconry of Cornwall, previously in the diocese of *Exeter. Until Anglo-Saxon times the Cornish Church had been independent, and it is probable that the British bishops who assisted in St *Chad's consecration (664) were Cornish. In 931 the Cornish Church was finally incorporated with the English Church and Cornwall became an English diocese. In 1027 it was annexed to the see of *Crediton, and in 1050 the see of the united diocese was fixed at Exeter. In 1877, when Truro became the see of the reconstituted diocese, E. W. *Benson became its first bishop. The fine cathedral church of St Mary, designed by J. L. *Pearson in the Early English style and incorporating the south aisle of the old parish church, was begun in 1880 and completed in 1910. The Community of the Epiphany, founded in London *c.*1880 by G. H. Wilkinson, the second Bp. of Truro, when Vicar of St Peter's, Eaton Square, London, has its mother house at Truro.

A. B. Donaldson, The Bishopric of Truro: The First Twenty-Five Years, 1877–1902 (1902); H. M. Brown, A Century for Cornwall: The Diocese of Truro, 1877–1977 (Truro, 1976). [L.] F. Barham, The Creation of a Cathedral: The Story of St Mary's, Truro (Falmouth [1976]).

Truth, Gospel of. See EVANGELIUM VERITATIS.

Tübingen. The university for Württemberg, founded in 1477, soon grew in importance and numbered many celebrities among its early teachers, e.g. G. *Biel and P. *Melanchthon (1514–18). When Württemberg was made Protestant by Duke Ulrich in 1534–5, Tübingen became a centre of *Lutheran orthodoxy and increased the number and standard of its students through the famous 'Stift', a kind of public school at which later G. W. F. *Hegel and F. W. J. *Schelling were educated. In the 18th cent. G. C. Storr founded the older 'Tübingen School' of theology. Its chief characteristic was a 'biblical supranaturalism', which put the guarantee of Christ and the Apostles in the place of the orthodox Protestant doctrine of the inspiration of Scripture and regarded the Bible as the exclusive source and law book of Christianity, from which the tenets of faith were to be derived by purely deductive methods. In the early part of the 19th cent. another school of theology was formed under the influence of Hegel, F. C. *Baur being its leader and chief representative (see TÜBINGEN SCHOOL). In 1817 a Catholic faculty of theology was opened which soon became one of the most important centres of Catholic scholarship in Germany, counting among its members J. A. *Möhler and K. J. *Hefele and, in recent times, K. *Adam and H. *Küng. The Catholic school has been characterized by a combination of the historical and speculative methods, and by its emphasis on the need for relating modern thought to the data of the faith.

J. Haller, Die Anfänge der Universität Tübingen 1477–1537 (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1927–9). H. *Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, 2 (ed. F. M. Powicke and A. B. Emden, 1936), pp. 278–80, with full bibl. H. Hermelink, Die theologische Fakultät in Tübingen vor der Reformation 1477–1534 (1906). M. Brecht (ed.), Theologen und Theologie an der Universität Tübingen: Beiträge zur Geschichte der Evangelisch-Theologischen Fakultät (Contubernium. Beiträge zur Geschichte der Eberhard-Karls-Universität Tübingen, 15; 1977). On the Catholic faculty, see E. Vermeil, Jean-Adam Möhler et l'école catholique de Tubingue, 1815–1840 (1913), the special number of Th.Q. to mark the 450th anniversary of the foundation of the university (Th.Q. 128; 1927, pp. 1–220), J. R. Geiselmann, Die katholische Tübinger Schule: Ihre theologische Eigenart (Freiburg, etc., 1964), J. T. Burtchaell, CSC, 'Drey, Möhler and the Catholic School of Tübingen', in [R.] N. Smart and others (eds.), Nineteenth Century Religious Thought in the West, 2 (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 111–39, and D. McCready, Jesus Christ for the Modern World: The Christology of the Catholic Tübingen School (American University Studies, 7th ser. 77; 1991).

Tübingen School. A school of German NT theologians founded by F. C. *Baur. Among its most prominent members were Eduard Zeller, who edited its organ, the Tübinger Theologische Jahrbücher (1842–57), and A. *Hilgenfeld, who continued it as the Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie (1858–1914). The principal endeavour of the School was to apply G. W. F. *Hegel's conception of development to primitive Christianity. The early Church was to be divided into 'Petrinists' (Jewish Christians) and 'Paulinists' (Gentile Christians), the cleavage between them being healed only in the later 2nd cent. ('Catholicism'). This state of things is reflected in the books of the NT, several of which represent the views of one or other of the parties, the bulk, however, being products of the 2nd cent. synthesis and therefore of practically no historical value for the period to which they profess to refer. These theories were expressed most vigorously in A. *Schwegler's Nachapostolisches Zeitalter (1846), which assigns to Mk. a date later than St *Justin Martyr, and sees in Baptism and the Episcopate substitutes introduced by the Judaizers for circumcision and the aristocracy of Israel respectively. The school was at the height of its influence in the 1840s, but it soon lost its prestige through the discrepancy between its axioms and historical fact. A. *Ritschl, who for a time belonged to the group, later founded a school of his own. Since A. *Harnack the Tübingen position has been generally abandoned. For the Catholic Tübingen School, see the previous entry.

The chief sources are, besides the writings of its leading members (qq.v.), the Theologische Jahrbücher mentioned above. R. W. Mackay, The Tübingen School and its Antecedents (1863). E. Zeller, Vorträge und Abhandlungen (1865), pp. 267–353 ('Die Tübinger historische Schule'). H. Harris, The Tübingen School (Oxford, 1975).

Tuckney, Anthony (1599–1670), *Puritan divine. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1619. In 1633 he became vicar of Boston, Lincs. In 1643 he was nominated to the *Westminster Assembly, where as chairman of committee he took a leading part in the drawing-up of its doctrinal formularies, the section on the Decalogue in the 'Larger Catechism' being his work. He then became master successively of Emmanuel (1645) and St John's (1653) colleges, Cambridge, and in 1656 also Regius professor of divinity. After the Restoration he was superseded in his mastership and his chair, and passed the rest of his life in retirement. He published little and his chief works are posthumous, but his four letters to B. *Whichcote, published with the replies as an appendix to the latter's Moral and Religious Aphorisms (1753), illustrate the strength of his Puritan convictions, his fear of the rationalistic tendencies of the *Cambridge Platonists, and his charity towards the opinions of his opponents.

Forty Sermons upon Several Occasions, ed. by his son, J. Tuckney (London, 1676); Praelectiones Theologicae, ed. id. (Amsterdam, 1679), with short biog. preface by W. D[illingham] (no pagination). 'Eight Letters of Dr. Anthony Tuckney and Dr. Benjamin Whichcote' are appended to Whichcote's Moral and Religious Aphorisms, ed. S. Salter (1753; separate pagination), with preface, pp. i–xl. J. *Tulloch, Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the Seventeenth Century, 2 (1872), pp. 47, 53–5, and 59–84; J. B. Mullinger, The University of Cambridge, 3 (1911), pp. 529–32, 576–8, 591–4, and passim. J. D. Roberts, From Puritanism to Platonism in Seventeenth Century England (The Hague, 1968), pp. 42–65. A. Gordon in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 286–8.

Tulchan Bishops. Term contemptuously applied to the titular bishops introduced into the Reformed Church of Scotland after a concordat in the Assembly of Leith (1572). They were to be responsible to the General Assembly, but they became tools of the lay nobles who drew the revenues of their sees. The term derives from the Gaelic tulachan, 'little hillock', used to describe the device of stuffing a calf's skin with straw to deceive a cow into giving milk: a reference to the bishops' diversion of revenues. On his return from Geneva (1574), A. *Melville condemned episcopacy in any form as incompatible with a pure Church, and the office of bishop was abolished in the *Second Book of Discipline (1581); however, the ban was never fully enforceable, and from the late 1580s the episcopal office was put on an increasingly strong footing until swept away by the violent reaction to the ecclesiastical policies of *Charles I expressed in the Scottish *National Covenant (1638).

Tulloch, John (1823–86), Scottish theologian. Ordained in the Church of Scotland, he became in 1854, after several years' parochial work, Principal and professor of theology at St Mary's College, St Andrews. From about 1875 he was the most prominent member of his Church, and in 1878 was elected *Moderator. He is chiefly remembered for the prominent part he took in trying to awaken a spirit of liberal orthodoxy in the Church of Scotland. He sought to defend its comprehensiveness in doctrine and did not wish its members to be bound to the letter of its credal formularies. His most important treatise was his Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy in England in the Seventeenth Century (2 vols., 1872).

Memoir by Mrs [M. O. W.] Oliphant (Edinburgh, 1888). T. Bayne in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 307–10.

tunicle. In the W. rite the outer liturgical garment of the *subdeacon. Until 1968 it was also worn by the bishop under his *dalmatic and *chasuble. It seems to have developed out of the ordinary overcoat (tunica) of the later Empire, though without the usual girdle. St *Gregory I (Ep. 9. 26) suppressed it at Rome, but it survived in other places and was reintroduced at Rome *c.*1000. Its further development was closely parallel with that of the dalmatic. The tunicle formerly differed from it in possessing no clavi or stripes of coloured material and in having narrower sleeves, but the two garments came to be identical. When the office of subdeacon was suppressed in the RC Church the garment was rendered obsolete.

Braun, LG, pp. 247–305. J. Braun, SJ, Handbuch der Paramentik (1912), pp. 108–19; id. in CE 15 (1912), pp. 87 f., s.v. 'Tunic', with bibl.

Tunkers, also known as Dunkers, Dunkards (from Old Ger. tunken, 'to dip') and as German Baptists, a Protestant sect so named from its distinctive baptismal rite. Originating in Germany in 1708 under Alexander Mack (1679–1735), they quickly gathered adherents in Germany, the Netherlands, and Switzerland; but persecution compelled them to emigrate to America (1719–29), where they have been settled ever since. In the 1880s the Tunkers became divided into three bodies: (1) the very conservative Old German Baptist Brethren; (2) the majority, who continued to be known as the German Baptist Brethren until 1908, when the title 'Church of the Brethren' was adopted; and (3) the more liberal 'Brethren Church', which in 1939 divided into the 'Brethren Church (Ashland, Ohio)' and the 'National Fellowship of Brethren Churches (Grace Brethren)'. They all profess no creed other than the NT, reject infant baptism, insist on total immersion, accompany the Lord's Supper by an agape, and generally refuse to bear arms or take oaths.

In Canada the term 'Tunkers' was applied to a group of *Mennonite origin that arose out of a religious awakening in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, in the 18th cent., now known as the 'Brethren in Christ'.

D. F. Durnbaugh (ed. and tr.), European Origins of the Brethren: A source book on the beginnings of the Church of the Brethren in the early eighteenth century (Elgin, Ill. [1958]). M. G. Brumbaugh, A History of the German Baptist Brethren in Europe and America (Mount Morris, Ill., 1899). J. L. Gillin, The Dunkers: A Sociological Interpretation (Columbia University thesis; New York, 1906). J. H. Moore in S. M. Jackson (ed.), The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, 4 (1909), pp. 24–7; E. Boardman in EB (1969 edn.), 4, pp. 156 f., s.v. 'Brethren, Church of the'.

Tunstall, Cuthbert (1474–1559), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at Cambridge and Padua. His interest in learning won him the friendship of Abp. W. *Warham, who appointed him his chancellor *c.*1508. The width of his early academic achievement is reflected in his mathematical work, De Arte Supputandi (London, 1522). After holding a series of preferments and being employed on various political missions by *Henry VIII, he was made Bp. of London in 1522 and translated to Durham in 1530. In the divorce question he was one of the counsel of the Queen, but during the following years, though continuing sympathetic to Catholic doctrine, he lacked strength of purpose. He yielded in the matter of the Royal Supremacy after first opposing it, and introduced into his diocese the religious changes confirmed by Parliament. In 1537 he was made president of the Council of the North, but continued to take an active part in ecclesiastical affairs, writing in favour of auricular confession, using his influence to keep the '*Bishops' Book' (1537) as Catholic as possible, and assisting with the preparation of the '*Great Bible' of 1539. Under *Edward VI his position became more and more difficult. In 1547 he voted against the abolition of *chantries, and in 1549 against the Act of *Uniformity and the Act permitting priests to marry. In 1551 he was imprisoned in his house in London, where he wrote his treatise De Veritate Corporis et Sanguinis Domini Nostri Jesu Christi in Eucharistia (pub. Paris, 1554), a careful exposition of Catholic Eucharistic doctrine. In 1552 he was tried by a lay commission for high treason and deprived of his bishopric, but reinstated by *Mary in 1554, when he refrained from taking part in the persecution of Protestants. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he refused to take the Oath of Supremacy and declined to consecrate M. *Parker to the Archbishopric of Canterbury (1559). He was then deprived of his see and kept a prisoner under the care of Parker in *Lambeth Palace, where he died shortly afterwards.

The Register of his Durham episcopate was ed. and calendared by G. Hinde (Surtees Society, 161 for 1951; 1952, pp. 1–131, with introd., pp. xi–xxxv). A collection of Certain Godly and Devout Prayers written by Tunstall in Lat., tr. into Eng. by T. Paynell, Augustinian Friar (London, 1558; ed. R. Hudleston, OSB, 'Orchard Books', extra series, 1; 1925). Full Life by C. Sturge (London, 1938). M. Thomas, 'Tunstall—Trimmer or Martyr?', JEH, 24 (1973), pp. 337–55; D. M. Loades, 'The Last Years of Cuthbert Tunstall, 1547–1559', Durham University Journal, NS 35 (1973–4), pp. 10–21. A. F. Pollard in DNB 57 (1899), pp. 310–15; H. Gee in DECH, pp. 603–5, s.v. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1913–15; BRUC, pp. 597–8 and 684–5.

Tur 'Abdin (literally 'mountain for the servants [of God]'). An area in SE Turkey noted for the survival of a number of early *Syrian Orthodox monasteries and parish churches still in use. Among the most notable are the monasteries of Mar Gabriel at Kartmin (said to have been founded in 394 and from *c.*614 to 1089/90 the residence of the Bp. of Tur 'Abdin) and Deir Za'faran, near Mardin (which existed in the 6th cent., and from the Middle Ages until the 1920s was the seat of the Syrian Orthodox Patr. of Antioch), and the parish churches of Kefr Zeh and Arnas (both before the 8th cent.). The buildings are of great interest in tracing the history of early Christian architecture.

G. Bell, The Churches and Monasteries of the Tur 'Abdin (expanded edn. by M. M. Mango, 1982). H. Anschütz, Die syrischen Christen vom Tur 'Abdin (Das östliche Christentum, NF 34; 1984). O. H. Parry, Six Months in a Syrian Monastery [Deir Za'faran], Being the Record of a Visit to the Head Quarters of the Syrian Church in Mesopotamia (1895). A. [N.] Palmer, Monk and Mason on the Tigris Frontier: The early history of Tur 'Abdin (Cambridge, 1990).

Turner, Cuthbert Hamilton (1860–1930), *patristic and NT scholar. Educated at *Winchester and at New College, Oxford, he was a Fellow of Magdalen from 1889 until his death. In 1920 he was elected Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis at Oxford in succession to W. Lock; he was the first layman to hold the office. An early interest in chronology bore fruit in 'The Day and Year of St. *Polycarp's Martyrdom [Saturday, 22 Feb. 156]', in Studia Biblica, 2 (1890), pp. 105–55; this was followed by a comprehensive article 'Chronology of the NT' in J. *Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible, 1 (1898). His main life-work was Ecclesiae Occidentalis Monumenta Iuris Antiquissima, a very painstaking and accurate edition of the early Latin ecclesiastical canons. Six fascicules (1899–1930) appeared at intervals during his life; the 7th fascicule came out in 1939, leaving the work incomplete. His writings also include Studies in Early Church History (1912), and an important essay on 'The Apostolic Succession' in Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918; ed. H. B. *Swete).

Catholic and Apostolic: Collected Papers by . . . Cuthbert Hamilton Turner, ed. H. N. Bate (1933), with Memoir by id., pp. 1–65. Id. DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 861–4.

Turrecremata, Juan de; Tomás. See TORQUEMADA, JUAN DE; TOMÁS.

Tutiorism (also termed Rigorism). The system of moral theology acc. to which, in cases of doubt or perplexity, the 'safer opinion' (opinio tutior; i.e. that in favour of the moral principle) must be followed unless there is a degree of probability amounting to moral certitude in the 'less safe opinion' (opinio minus tuta; i.e. that against the principle). A kind of Tutiorism was the normal position held by Catholic moral theologians before the notion of 'probability' achieved its full development in the 17th and 18th cents. As against *Probabilism, many of the *Jansenists (e.g. P. *Nicole) maintained Tutiorist doctrines; but the system was obsolescent by 1690, when the *Holy Office included statements of Tutiorism in a list of condemned rigorist propositions. Its critics urge that the system, if strictly practised, would render life intolerable, its requirement of absolute certainty before taking action making moral decisions in many cases impossible.

Twelfth Night. The evening preceding Twelfth Day (the *Epiphany), 12 days after *Christmas, formerly kept as a time of merry-making and associated with many old customs such as taking down the Christmas decorations. In Herefordshire there was a tradition of lighting 12 bonfires, representing the Twelve Apostles, to secure a blessing on the fruits of the earth, and similar practices prevailed elsewhere. The 'Twelfth Cake' was an ornamented cake made for the occasion, containing a bean or coin, the drawer of which became the 'King' or 'Queen' of the festivities.

Twelve Apostles, Teaching of the. See DIDACHE.

Twelve Articles. The main charter of the *Peasants' War, in the form of 'Twelve Articles' adopted at Memmingen in Mar. 1525. Among the peasants' demands were the right to appoint their own pastors, control over tithes, abolition of serfdom, proper rights in the matters of fishing (in streams, but not in ponds), game, and woodcutting, just conditions of work and rent, justice in the courts and abolition of Todfall ('heriot', i.e. the usage whereby the landlord appropriated the most valuable chattel of a deceased tenant). M. *Luther formally professed his agreement with the Articles, though he opposed the attempt to achieve their demands by revolt.

Crit. edn. of the text by A. Götze in Historische Vierteljahrsschrift, 5 (1902), pp. 1–33; text also in H. Böhmer, Urkunden zur Geschichte des Bauernkrieges und der Wiedertäufer (H. *Lietzmann (ed.), Kleine Texte, no. 50/1; 1910), pp. 3–10; Eng. tr. in Kidd, no. 83, pp. 174–9. A variant form is ed. by P. Blicke in R. Postel and F. Kopitzsch (eds.), Reformation und Revolution (1989), pp. 90–100. G. Franz, 'Die Entstehung der "Zwölf Artikel" der deutschen Bauernschaft', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 36 (1939), pp. 195–213; M. Brecht, 'Der theologische Hintergrund der Zwölf Artikel der Bauernschaft in Schwaben von 1525', ZKG 85 (1974), pp. 174–208.

Twelve Great Feasts, the. In the E. Church, the 12 principal feast days in the liturgical year: *Epiphany (6 Jan.), *Presentation of Christ in the Temple (2 Feb.), *Annunciation of the BVM (25 March), *Palm Sunday, *Ascension Day, *Pentecost, *Transfiguration (6 Aug.), *Dormition of BVM (15 Aug.), *Nativity of BVM (8 Sept.), *Holy Cross (14 Sept.), *Presentation of BVM in the Temple (21 Nov.), and *Christmas Day (25 Dec.). *Easter Day, the 'Feast of Feasts', stands in a class by itself, and is not reckoned as one of the 12.

Twelve Patriarchs, Testaments of the. See TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS.

Tychicus. Acc. to Acts 20: 4 he was a native of Asia who accompanied St *Paul on his third missionary journey. He is mentioned as the bearer of the letters to Colossae (Col. 4: 7 f.) and *Ephesus (Eph. 6: 21 f.) and also at 2 Tim. 4: 12 and Tit. 3: 12. Several cities claim him as bishop, while some martyrologies make him a deacon. Feast day in the E., 8 Dec.; in the W., 29 Apr.

Tychon, St. See TIKHON, ST.

Tyconius (d. *c.*400), *Donatist theologian. He seems to have been a layman of considerable importance in his community, but was attacked for his catholicizing views by the Donatist bishop, Parmenian (*c.*378), and condemned by a Donatist Council at *Carthage *c.*380; he refused, however, to join the Catholic Church. His condemnation was probably caused by two works, 'De Bello Intestino Libri Tres' and 'Expositiones Diversarum Causarum', now lost, in which he seems to have taught that the Church must be a society spread over the whole earth and contain both good and bad. Tyconius' chief work was his 'Liber Regularum' (*c.*380), which propounded seven rules for the interpretation of Scripture, which St *Augustine, who greatly esteemed him despite his being a Donatist, incorporated in his 'De Doctrina Christiana'; hence they played an important part in medieval exegesis. His commentary on Rev. no longer exists in its original form, but it is quoted and used by a number of subsequent commentators, notably *Primasius, *Bede, and the Spanish presbyter, Beatus of Liebana (*c.*776). Fragments of an anonymous commentary on Rev. in a Turin MS (Codex F. iv. 18; formerly at *Bobbio) appear to be directly derived from Tyconius' commentary.

Editio princeps of the 'Liber Regularum' by J. J. Grynaeus, Monumenta Patrum Orthodoxographa (Basle [1569]), pp. 1352–87; the 'Rules' are also repr. from a later edn. in J. P. Migne, PL 18. 13–66. Discussion and crit. text in F. C. *Burkitt, The Book of Rules of Tyconius (Texts and Studies, 3, pt. 1; Cambridge, 1894); text repr., with Eng. tr. by W. S. Babcock (Texts and Translations, 31; Atlanta [1989]). The Turin Fragments of Tyconius' Commentary on Revelation, ed. F. Lo Bue (Texts and Studies, NS 7; 1963). On his comm. on Rev., see also J. Haussleiter, 'Die lateinische Apokalypse der alten Afrikanischen Kirche', in T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons und der altkirchlichen Literatur, 4 (1891), pp. 1–244; and K. B. Steinhauser, The Apocalypse Commentary of Tyconius: A History of its Reception and Influence (European University Studies, 23rd ser. 301; Frankfurt etc. [1987]). P. [M.] Bright, The Book of Rules of Tyconius: Its Purpose and Inner Logic (Christianity and Judaism in Antiquity, 2; Notre Dame, Ind. [1988]; to be used with caution). T. Hahn, Tyconius-Studien (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, 6, Heft 2; 1900). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, 5 (1920), pp. 165–219. M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 119–22, with bibl. E. Dinkler in PW, Zweite Reihe, 6 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 849–56, s.v. 'Ticonius'; E. Romero Pose in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3447–50, s.v. 'Ticonio'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 838 f., s.v. 'Tichonius'.

Tyndale or Tindale, William (1494?–1536), translator of the Bible and Reformer. He sometimes used the pseudonym 'William Huchyns'. A native of Gloucestershire, he studied from 1510 to 1515 at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and later at Cambridge. About 1522 he conceived the project of translating the Bible; but when C. *Tunstall, Bp. of London, refused his support, Tyndale went to Germany and settled at Hamburg (1524), never to return to his own country. The printing of his first translation of the NT, which was begun at *Cologne in 1525, was interrupted by the local magistrates, but completed at Worms the same year. On its arrival in England in 1526, it was bitterly attacked by Abp. W. *Warham, C. Tunstall, and T. *More. Tyndale spent most of his remaining years at Antwerp, where he frequently revised the NT. His other writings include A Prologue on . . . Romans (1526; largely derived from M. *Luther), Parable of the Wicked Mammon (1528), and Obedience of a Christian Man (1528). Like Luther, he insisted on the authority of Scripture, but in the course of his work on the Bible, he moved away from Luther's teaching on *justification by faith alone towards the idea of double justification by faith and works. His Eucharistic teaching came to resemble that of H. *Zwingli, although the tract The Souper of the Lorde (1535), formerly thought to be by Tyndale, is now generally attributed to his associate G. Joye (1495?–1553). He wrote also against T. *Wolsey and the 'Divorce' (Practice of Prelates, 1530) and against T. More, his ablest opponent. Besides his NT, Tyndale printed translations of the Pentateuch (1530) and Jonah (1531), and left Jos.–2 Chron. in MS. His biblical translations, made direct from the Greek and Hebrew into straightforward, vigorous English, remain the basis of both the AV and the RV. In 1535 he was arrested, imprisoned at Vilvorde, nr. Brussels, and strangled and burnt at the stake prob. on 6 Oct. 1536. Feast day in some Anglican Churches, 6 Oct.

Collection of his works pub. London, 1573. Doctrinal Treatises ed. H. Walter (*Parker Society, 1848); selections from his works ed. S. L. Greenslade (London, 1938) and G. E. Duffield (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, 1; 1964). Complete text of the 1534 revision of the NT, with introd. by N. Hardy Wallis (Cambridge, 1938), and in modernized spelling, with introd. by D. Daniell (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1989). Modern Lives by R. Demaus (London [1871]), J. F. Mozley (ibid., 1937), and D. Daniell (New Haven, Conn., and London [1994]). W. A. Clebsch, 'More Evidence that George Joye wrote The Souper of the Lorde', HTR 55 (1962), pp. 63–6; W. D. J. Cargill Thompson, 'The Two Regiments: the Continental Setting of William Tyndale's Political Thought', in D. Baker (ed.), Reform and Reformation: England and the Continent c.1500–c.1750 (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 2; Oxford, 1979), pp. 17–33; M. McGiffert, 'William Tyndale's Conception of Covenant', JEH, 32 (1981), pp. 167–84; E. Ní Chuilleanáin, 'The Debate between Thomas More and William Tyndale, 1528–33: Ideas on Literature and Religion', ibid., 39 (1988), pp. 382–411; J. A. R. Dick and A. Richardson (eds.), William Tyndale and the Law (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 25; Kirksville, Mo. [1994]);

C. R. Trueman, Luther's Legacy: Salvation and English Reformers, 1525–1556 (Oxford, 1994), esp. pp. 9–14 and 83–120. See also bibl. to BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS).

types (Gk. τύποι, 'examples', 'figures'). In theology, the foreshadowings of the Christian dispensation in the events and persons of the OT. Just as Christ Himself could refer to *Jonah as a symbol of His *Resurrection, so St *Paul found in the Israelites' crossing of the *Red Sea (1 Cor. 10: 1–6) the 'type' of Baptism, while to the author of the Ep. to the Hebrews *Melchizedek was the foreshadowing of Christ (Heb. 7). A Christian type differs from an *allegory in that the historical reference is not lost sight of. Types are looked upon, however, as having a greater significance now than was apparent in their pre-Christian OT context. Typology, with an increasingly allegorical emphasis, was much employed in the early Church, esp. by the *Alexandrian Fathers, for whom almost everything in the OT was capable of interpretation by this method.

W. J. Phythian-Adams, The Fulness of Israel: A Study of the Meaning of Sacred History (Warburton Lectures for 1935–1937; 1938); L. Goppelt, Typos: Die typologische Deutung des Alten Testaments im Neuen (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 43; 1939; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids, Mich. [1982]). A. G. Hebert, SSM, The Throne of David: A Study of the Fulfilment of the Old Testament in Jesus Christ and His Church (1941); P. Lundberg, La Typologie baptismale dans l'ancienne Église (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, 10; 1942); J. *Daniélou, SJ, Sacramentum Futuri: Études sur les origines de la typologie biblique (1950; Eng. tr., 1960); G. W. H. Lampe and K. J. Woollcombe, Essays on Typology (Studies in Biblical Theology, 22; 1957); P. Grelot, Sens chrétien de l'ancien testament (Bibliothèque de théologie, Série 1; théologie dogmatique, 3; 1962); A. C. Charity, Events and their Afterlife: The Dialectics of Christian Typology in the Bible and in Dante (Cambridge, 1966); R. T. France, Jesus and the Old Testament: His Application of Old Testament Passages to Himself and His Mission (1971); A. T. Hanson, The Living Utterances of God: The New Testament Exegesis of the Old (1983). J. E. Alsup in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 682–5, s.v. 'Typology'.

typicon (Gk. τυπικόν). In the E. Church, a liturgical manual which indicates how the services are to be recited during the ecclesiastical year, with directions as to the rules to be followed when two or more feasts fall on the same day. The term is also used of the Rule of a monastic house.

Typos, the. The Imperial edict issued by Constans II in Sept. 647 or 648 to supersede *Heraclius' *Ecthesis. It was prob. the work of Paul, Patr. of *Constantinople, 641–53. With a view to securing peace, it forbade anyone to assert either *Monothelite or *Dyothelite beliefs, and required that teaching should be limited to what had been defined in the first Five Oecumenical Councils. The refusal of Pope *Martin I (649–55; q.v.) to accept it led to his deposition.

The text is preserved in the Acts of the Lateran Council of 649; crit. edn., with Lat. tr., by R. Riediger (ACO, 2nd ser. 1; 1984), pp. 208–11. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 432–4. J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 19–22. See also bibl. to MARTIN I.

tyrannicide. The murder of a tyrant whose rule has become insupportable. On the ethical question, three opinions have been current among Christians:

(1) Those who hold that the sixth commandment is to be interpreted as forbidding killing in any form, e.g. in police action or in war, naturally believe tyrannicide to be included in the prohibition.

(2) Those who (e.g. on the basis of Rom. 13: 1 f.) hold that force is by Divine authority wholly invested in the de facto civil government also believe tyrannicide to be morally unjustifiable.

(3) Those who hold that rebellion, including tyrannicide, is defensible and right in circumstances where, if the oppressor were an alien, war would be justified, and provided that the grievance is considerable, that the circumstances offer no milder means of redress, and that the killing is not simply an act of revenge. Such is the general view of Catholic moral theologians.

A. Bride in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1988–2016, s.v.

Tyre and Sidon. The two chief cities of the Phoenicians, on the coast of Syria. In OT times they carried on a lucrative maritime trade, and the Israelites knew them as rich heathen neighbours, whence in the time of King Ahab (*c.*875–853 BC) the worship of the Tyrian *Baal was introduced into Israel, and combated by *Elijah (1 Kgs. 16: 31 ff.; 18: 18 ff.). In the Gospels inhabitants of the region of Tyre and Sidon are mentioned among the multitudes attracted to Christ (Lk. 6: 17), and He Himself visited the district and healed the daughter of a Gentile woman there (Mk. 7: 24–30). In His comparison of the final judgement on these two cities with that being incurred by the towns of Palestine (Mt. 11: 22), it would appear that Tyre and Sidon represented the heathen world. Tyre was held by the *Crusaders, 1124–1291.

N. Jidejian, Tyre through the Ages (Beirut, 1969); id., Sidon through the Ages (ibid., 1971). H. J. Katzenstein, The History of Tyre from the Beginning of the Second Millenium B.C.E. until ... 538 B.C.E. (Jerusalem, 1973). J.-P. Rey-Coquais, Inscriptions grecques et latines découvertes dans les Fouilles de Tyr (1963–1974), 1: Inscriptions de la Nécropole (Bulletin du Musée de Beyrouth, 29; 1977); M. H. Chébab, Fouilles de Tyre: La Nécropole (ibid. 33–6; 1983–6); id., Tyre à l'Époque des Croisades (ibid. 27–8 and 31–2; 1975–9). [E.] Honigmann in PW, 2. Reihe, 2 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2216–29, s.v. 'Sidon'; [O.] Eissfeldt, ibid. 6 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1876–907, s.v. 'Tyros (3)'; P. C. Schmitz in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 17 f., s.v. 'Sidon'; H. J. Katzenstein and D. R. Edwards ibid., pp. 686–92, s.v. 'Tyre'.

Tyrrell, George (1861–1909), English *Modernist theologian. He was a native of Dublin, of Evangelical upbringing, and educated at Trinity College. At an early age he had come under High Church influence, esp. that of R. W. R. *Dolling, and was later received into the RC Church (1879). In 1880 he entered the *Jesuit novitiate and in 1891 was priested and became lecturer in moral theology at *Stonyhurst. In 1896 he was transferred to Farm Street, the principal church of his order in London, where he was a sought-after confessor and made a name by writing, publishing two collections of Meditations, Nova et Vetera (1897) and Hard Sayings (1898), and a series of Lectures, On External Religion (1899). His friendship with F. *von Hügel led to his acquaintance with the writings of H. *Bergson, M. *Blondel, L. *Laberthonnière, and A. *Loisy, which contributed to his increasing hostility to *Scholasticism and his stress on the anti-intellectual and experiential aspects of religion. From 1899 he moved further and further from traditional RC orthodoxy, notably in an article on hell, entitled 'A Perverted Devotion', which appeared in the Weekly Register (1899). Though its publication led to his removal from Farm Street and his retirement to the Jesuit mission house at Richmond in N. Yorks, Tyrrell did not cease to feel a strong attraction to the devotional aspects of Catholicism, for which he continued to work as a keen apologist. In 1900 he wrote Oil and Wine (printed 1902; new preface, 1907), another book of meditations, but its immediate publication was prohibited by his episcopal superiors on account of its immanentist tendencies. In 1901 he published The Faith of the Millions and in 1903 his Lex Orandi, his last work to appear with an '*imprimatur'. After he had in vain asked for his secularization (1905), the final rupture with the Society of Jesus came in 1906, following the publication of extracts from an anon. 'Letter to a Professor' by the Corriere della Sera. This writing, in which he contrasted living faith with dead theology, he published with amplifications in 1906 as A Much Abused Letter. Though expelled from his order and suspended 'a divinis', Tyrrell continued his literary activities. Lex Credendi (1906) is for the most part a devotional exposition of the 'Our Father' with a strong anti-intellectual and anti-theological bias, and Through Scylla and Charybdis (1907) a collection of essays which reflected his increasing sympathy with a thoroughgoing symbolism. After *Pius X's issue of the encyclical 'Pascendi', Tyrrell wrote two letters of protest to The Times of 30 Sept. and 1 Oct. 1907; they drew upon him the minor excommunication. In 1908 Tyrrell published his Medievalism, a bitter attack on Card. D. J. *Mercier and a violent denunciation of the contemporary RC Church. His posthumous work, Christianity at the Cross-Roads (1909), questioned whether Christianity was the final religion and held out hopes of a universal religion of which Christianity was but the germ. Many of his articles were published under assumed names. Tyrrell died with the last rites of the Church, but was refused Catholic burial. His remains were deposited in the Anglican churchyard at Storrington, where H. *Bremond took part in the funeral.

M. D. Petre, Autobiography and Life of George Tyrrell (2 vols., 1912); id., Letters (1920); id., Von Hügel and Tyrrell: The Story of a Friendship (1937). A. Loisy, Georges Tyrrell et Henri Bremond (1936); J. J. Stam, George Tyrrell 1861 1909 (Utrecht, 1938); J. Ratté, Three Modernists (1968), pp. 143–256; D. G. Schultenover, SJ, George Tyrrell in Search of Catholicism (Shepherdstown, W. Va., 1981); E. Leonard, CSJ, George Tyrrell and the Catholic Tradition (1982); N. Sagovsky, 'On God's Side': A Life of George Tyrrell (Oxford, 1990). T. M. Loome, 'A Bibliography of the Published Writings of George Tyrrell (1861–1909)', Heythrop Journal, 10 (1969), pp. 280–314; 11 (1970), pp. 161–9; and in id., Liberal Catholicism, Reform Catholicism, Modernism (Tübinger Theologische Studien, 14; 1979), pp. 218–27. Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 576–82. J. M. Rigg in DNB, 1901–1911, 2, pp. 542–5, s.v.

U

Ubaghs, Gerhard Casimir (1800–75), chief representative of the *Traditionalist *Ontologism of Louvain. He became professor of philosophy at Louvain in 1834 and from 1846 onwards was editor of the Revue Catholique, the principal organ of Ontologism. Among his most important works are his Logicae seu Philosophiae Rationalis Elementa (1834), Ontologiae seu Metaphysicae Generalis Elementa (1835), and Theodiceae seu Theologiae Naturalis Elementa (1841) in which he expounds a mitigated Traditionalism acc. to which the knowledge of metaphysical and moral truths is based on a primitive Divine teaching handed on by oral tradition. This teaching he combined with the Ontologist doctrine of the direct contemplation of God by the intellect in the 'objective ideas'. Though his books were not placed on the *Index, his teaching was censured by the *Holy Office on 21 Sept. 1864, and soon afterwards Ubaghs submitted and resigned his chair. See also TRADITIONALISM.

J. Jacops, 'Notice sur la vie et les travaux de M. le Chanoine G. C. Ubaghs, Professeur Émérite à la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université Catholique de Louvain', Annuaire de l'Université Catholique de Louvain (1876), pp. 417–66. A. Simon, 'Le Cardinal Sterckx et la condamnation de Ubaghs en 1843', Collectanea Mechliniensia, 31 (1946), pp. 639–44; id., Le Cardinal Sterckx et son temps (1792–1867), 2 (Wetteren, 1950), pp. 162–97, passim. J. Henry in Biographie nationale publiée par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, 25 (1930–2), cols. 889–92; L. Ceyssens, OFM, in Nationaal Biografisch Woordenboek, 9 (1981), cols. 767–70, both s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under TRADITIONALISM.

Ubertino of Casale (1259–c.1330), a leader of the '*Spiritual Franciscans' (q.v.). He became a *Franciscan in 1273, studied at *Paris, and returned to Italy as a preacher and lecturer. Here *John of Parma and Peter John *Olivi, then leading figures among the Spirituals, with whom he became acquainted, gained a strong influence on him. In 1305 he wrote his principal work, 'Arbor vitae crucifixae Jesu Christi', a mystical work with a strong apocalyptic vein, later used by a number of orthodox writers. From 1306 to 1308 he was chaplain to Cardinal N. Orsini, pontifical legate in N. and Central Italy, and in 1310 was called to *Avignon by *Clement V to defend the Spirituals in the controversy on poverty. Having failed to obtain the erection of convents and provinces for his party, he was allowed, in 1317, to be transferred to the *Benedictines of Gembloux. In 1322 *John XXII asked his opinion in the question of 'theoretical poverty', then a matter of dispute between the *Dominicans and the Franciscans. Two years later he was still at the *Curia, in the service of Cardinal Orsini. He fled, however, in 1325, probably because accused of heresy; in 1328 he was probably among the Franciscans who accompanied Louis the Bavarian on his journey to Rome; and in 1329 he seems to have preached against John XXII at Como. Nothing is known of his death. He is mentioned by *Dante in canto 12 of the 'Paradiso', and was venerated by the *Fraticelli of the 15th century.

His Arbor Vitae Crucifixae Jesu was pr. at Venice, 1485; repr. (Monumenta politica et philosophica rariora, 1st ser. 1; Turin, 1961), with introd. and bibl. by C. T. Davis. F. Callaey, L'Idéalisme franciscain spirituel au XIV^e siècle: Étude sur Ubertin de Casale (Université de Louvain. Recueil de travaux publiés par les membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, fasc. 28; 1911). G. L. Potestà, Storia ed escatologia in Ubertino da Casale (Milan, 1980). M. Damiata, *Pietà e Storia nell'*Arbor Vitae di Ubertino da Casale (Biblioteca di Studi Francescani, 19; Florence, 1988). M. D. Lambert, Franciscan Poverty (1961), esp. pp. 174–6, 184–97. P. Godefroy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2021–34, s.v.; G. L. Potestà in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 3–16, s.v.

ubiquitarianism. The doctrine held by M. *Luther and many of his followers that Christ in His human nature is everywhere present. Luther employed it, e.g., in his two writings Das diese Worte Christi, 'Das ist mein Leib', noch fest stehen wider die Schwarmgeister (1527) and Bekenntnis vom Abendmahl Christi (1528), to uphold his belief in the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist; and it was formally defended by J. *Brenz at a Lutheran synod at Stuttgart in 1559.

Udall, John (c.1560–92), also 'Uvedale', *Puritan pamphleteer and Hebrew scholar. Matriculating at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1578, he was chiefly educated at Trinity College, where he became strongly inclined to Puritanism. While curate of Kingston-on-Thames (1584–8) he was charged before the Court of *High Commission in 1586 for his criticism of Episcopacy. In 1588 he published anonymously a widely read pamphlet on The State of the Church of England, laid open in a Conference between Diotrephes a Bishop, Tertullus a Papist, Demetrius a Usurer, Pandochus an Inn-keeper and Paul a Preacher of the Word of God. Suspected of complicity in the *Marprelate Tracts, he was summoned before the Privy Council in 1589. In 1590, on his refusal to clear himself on oath, he was found guilty of the authorship of A Demonstration of the Truth of that Discipline which Christ hath Prescribed for the Government of His Church [1588]; but the sentence of death was not executed. He died in prison in Southwark, shortly after his pardon had been procured.

He published several volumes of his sermons, including Amendment of Life [1584], The True Remedy against Famine and Wars [1588], and The Combat betwixt Christ and the Devil (1588). In 1593 his Commentary upon the Lamentations of Jeremy (anon.) was published posthumously. In the same year there appeared at *Leiden his Key of the Holy Tongue, which comprised a Hebrew Grammar translated from Petrus Martinius and a Hebrew dictionary of his own compilation; the work was highly valued by *James I.

The State of the Church of England was repr. by E. Arber (The English Scholar's Library of Old and Modern Works, 5; 1880); A Demonstration of the Truth of that Discipline which Christ hath Prescribed, also ed. id. (ibid. 9; 1880). S. Lee in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 4–6, s.v., with refs.

Udall, Nicholas (*c.*1505–56), also 'Uvedale', alias 'Randall', reformer and dramatist. Born at Southampton, he was admitted a scholar of *Winchester in 1517 and of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1520, where he became a probationary Fellow in 1524. His *Lutheran sympathies prob. forced him to leave Oxford in 1529 and prevented his proceeding to MA until 1534. In 1533 he joined John Leland (d. 1552) in the composition of verses for the coronation of *Anne Boleyn. He was appointed Headmaster of Eton in 1534, but dismissed in 1541 on charges of complicity in the theft of silver images and college plate and of unsuitable behaviour, which led to a short imprisonment in the Marshalsea. In 1547, with the patronage of Catherine Parr, he was appointed to assist with Princess (later Queen) *Mary in translating the first volume of the Paraphrases of *Erasmus (pub. 1548). Through the favour of *Edward VI he became a Canon of *Windsor in 1551 and in 1553 he became rector of Calbourne (Isle of Wight). Possibly because of his association with Mary over the translation of Erasmus' Paraphrases he remained in favour in the next reign, continuing to write for the Court stage and in 1555 being appointed Headmaster of *Westminster (in succession to Alexander *Nowell).

Udall is a significant example of the influence of Protestantism on the new humanist movement. His other published works include translations of Erasmus' Apophthegms (1542), of *Peter Martyr's Tractatio de Sacramento Eucharistiae [1550], and of T. Gemini's Compendiosa Totius Anatomiae Delineatio (1553). His play Ezekias, performed before *Elizabeth I in 1564, has been lost. His Ralph Roister Doister, however, a Christmas comedy, originally written for a London school, prob. between 1545 and 1552 (*c.*1566), although lost since the 16th cent., was recovered in the early 19th cent. and has been frequently reprinted.

Ralph Roister Doister ed. for the Shakespeare Society by W. D. Cooper (London, 1847), with memoir, pp. xi–xxxiv. Later edns. incl. those of W. C. Hazlitt (ibid., 1874), J. S. Farmer (ibid., 1906, with notes on his other dramatic works), C. G. Child (ibid., 1913; with introd.), and G. Scheurweghs (Materials for the study of Old English Drama, ed. H. de Vocht, 16; Louvain, 1939), with biog. introd. pp. xi–l. N. Pocock (ed.), Troubles Connected with the Prayer Book of 1549 (Camden Society, NS 37; 1884), pp. xviii–xxv, 141–93. W. L. Edgerton, Nicholas Udall (Twayne's English Author Series, 30; New York [1965]). BRUO, 1506–1546, pp. 586–88, with bibl. S. Lee in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 7–9, s.v. D. S. Bland in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 1414–16.

Uganda, Christianity in. The first Christian missionaries were sent to the kingdom of Buganda by the *CMS in 1877 in response to an appeal by H. M. *Stanley. The RC mission was inaugurated by the arrival of the *White Fathers in 1879. Despite the rivalry between the C of E and RC missionaries, exacerbated by the royal refusal to allow either to settle away from the court and focused in the tension between two outstanding missionaries, Père S. Lourdel and A. M. *Mackay, the early preaching was welcomed by many younger men at the court of King Mutesa. Under his successor, Mwanga, both Churches suffered persecution. J. *Hannington, the Anglican Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa, was killed on Mwanga's orders in 1885 before even entering the country. Over 40 RCs and Anglicans were martyred together between 1885 and 1887, the RCs being canonized in 1964. In the period before the establishment of the British Protectorate in 1894, the political instability erupted into armed conflict between parties nominally Muslim, RC, and Protestant. Missionaries had been expelled from the country and the young leadership established among both RCs and Protestants during the period of civil war would be decisive in establishing a major lay role in subsequent Church life, as well as encouraging the first movement of mass Christian conversion in modern African history. British rule reinforced and extended the political dominance of the Christian (and esp. Protestant) minority. It also enabled evangelism to move out from Buganda to cover all parts of the newly created Protectorate of Uganda. In this Ugandan lay catechists and quickly ordained clergy, such as the outstandingly holy Anglican missionary Apolo Kivebulaya (d. 1933), played a leading role. Upon the RC side the mostly French White Fathers were reinforced by British and Dutch *Mill Hill Fathers and, later, for the north of the country, Italian *Verona Fathers. Impressive networks of schools were established, and by the latter part of the 20th cent. 75 per cent of the population professed Christianity.

Uganda was notable for the speed with which a local clergy developed. The first Anglican ordinations of Ugandans took place in 1893; the first RC priests were ordained in 1913; and in 1910 the Bannabikira (Daughters of the Virgin) became the first RC religious sisterhood in sub-Saharan Africa. In 1939 an entire Vicariate Apostolic, Masaka, was already handed over to African priests and Joseph Kiwanuka consecrated as its bishop, the first black African RC bishop of modern times. The first Anglican Ugandan bishop was Aberi Balya, consecrated in 1947. In 1961 what was hitherto known as the 'Native Anglican Church' became the Church of Uganda, an autonomous Province of the Anglican Communion (until 1980 this also included the Churches in Rwanda and Burundi). From the 1930s the E. African Revival Movement (Balokole, 'saved ones') had a considerable effect on the Church of Uganda, stimulating its spiritual life but at times threatening to split the Church.

Before Uganda became independent in 1962, there were few other Christian denominations, apart from a small *Seventh-day Adventist Church dating from 1926, and an *Orthodox Church which originated in a breakaway movement from the Church of Uganda led by Reuben Spartas in 1929. Spartas secured ordination from a bishop in the J. R. *Vilatte succession line and his Church was recognized by the Greek Orthodox Church in 1946. During the tyrannical rule of Idi Amin (President 1971–9) Christians in Uganda suffered badly, Benedicto Kiwanuka, the Chief Justice and a leading RC lawyer, and Janani Luwum, the Anglican Abp. of Uganda, being among many murdered.

J. V. Taylor, The Growth of the Church in Buganda (1958); A. D. T. Tuma and P. Mutibwa (eds.), A Century of Christianity in Uganda, 1877–1977 (Nairobi, 1978). E. Stock, The History of the Church Missionary Society, 3 (1899), pp. 94–112, 402–27, and 735–46; 4 (1916), pp. 83–104; G. Hewitt, The Problems of Success: A History of the Church Missionary Society 1910–1942, 1 (1971), pp. 205–60. Y. Tourigny, WF, So Abundant a Harvest: The Catholic Church in Uganda 1879–1979 (1979). J. F. Faupel, African Holocaust: The Story of the Uganda Martyrs (1962). H. P. Gale, Uganda and the Mill Hill Fathers (1959). M. L. Pirouet, Black Evangelists: The spread of Christianity in Uganda 1891–1914 (1978); A. D. T. Tuma, Building a Ugandan Church: African Participation in Church Growth and Expansion in Busoga 1891–1940 (Nairobi, 1980). R. Oliver, The Missionary Factor in East Africa (1952), passim. H. B. Hansen, Mission, Church and State in a Colonial Setting: Uganda 1890–1925 (1984). F. B. Welbourn, East African Rebels: A Study of Some Independent Churches (1961), pp. 15–110. A. Hastings, Mission and Ministry (1971), pp. 144–76; id., The Church in Africa 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994), passim.

Ukrainian Churches. These comprise both the Orthodox Churches of the Ukraine and certain *Uniat Churches, mostly found in the west of the Ukraine, Slovakia, *Hungary, and *Poland, with colonies in N. America and elsewhere. The latter were formerly known as the Ruthenian Churches, but now more often as Ukrainian. Their ancestors, who were Slavonic converts of St *Vladimir, formed part of the *Russian Church under the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan of Kiev until the destruction of Kievan Russia by the Mongols in 1237–40 and the absorption of the Ukraine by Lithuania and Poland. After the Council of *Florence, Isidore, Metropolitan of Kiev, was delegated by the Pope to secure the acceptance of the Union in the countries of his jurisdiction, but in Moscow he was repudiated by Prince Vasili, who deposed him and appointed a successor (1448). In 1458 *Pius II appointed a Catholic Metropolitan of Kiev, who, by agreement with Casimir IV of *Poland (1447–92), was permitted to exercise jurisdiction over the eight *eparchies of the province under the control of Poland and Lithuania. Although these Churches reverted to Orthodoxy at the beginning of the 16th cent., RC influence revived with the closer union of Poland and Lithuania in 1569, under which the Ukraine was attached to Poland, and in 1595 the Metropolitan of Kiev and the Bps. of Vladimir, Lutsk, Polotsk, Pinsk, and Kholm petitioned for communion with Rome; this was achieved on 23 Dec. 1595 by the Union of *Brest-Litovsk (q.v.). They were joined in 1694 by the Bp. of Przemysl and in 1700 by the Bp. of Lvov. Despite a decree of *Urban VIII (1624), during the 17th cent. the majority of the Ruthenian (Ukrainian) nobility and landowners in Poland adopted the Latin rite. Those who remained Orthodox in Polish Ukraine suffered severe repression. After the partitions of Poland (1772–95) most of the Ruthenians, except those of Galicia, passed under the sovereignty of Russia and their Churches were gradually suppressed in the early 19th cent. in favour of the Orthodox Church; in the Kholm district (ceded by Austria in 1815), they survived until *c.*1875. When toleration was granted to RCs in Russia in 1905, Catholic Byzantines still being illegal, the survivors passed to the Latin rite.

After the Ruthenians of Galicia had come under the sovereignty of Austria, Lvov was constituted an Archbishopric in 1807. During the 19th cent. the Galician Ruthenians enjoyed religious toleration; so, in theory at least, did the Uniat Ruthenians (now more generally known as Ukrainians) in the independent Poland reconstituted after 1918. At the time of the Russian Revolution, the Orthodox Church in the Ukraine was declared a self-governing exarchate of the Russian Orthodox Church, and this situation was confirmed in 1941 by the formation of an Autonomous Orthodox Church of the Ukraine. It was formed in response to the creation in the Ukraine in 1919 of a Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox Church, associated with the 'Living Church' movement in Russia; this was never recognized by other Orthodox Churches. At the end of the Second World War, the Ukrainian Uniat Church in the Soviet Union and in Poland was suppressed after a Council at Lvov (then under Soviet jurisdiction) in 1946 was forced to declare the 'reunion' of the Uniats with the Autonomous Orthodox Church of the Ukraine. They, however, maintained a clandestine existence in the Soviet Union until 1987, when a number of bishops, priests, and laity in the Ukraine declared their intention of seeking legal status; the campaign gathered strength during the millennial celebration of Christianity in E. Slav lands in 1988 and in Dec. 1989 the Uniat Church in the Ukraine was restored. The monastic element appears to be strong, and is esp. fostered by the austere Studites (see STUDIOS) founded *c.*1900. The liturgy is based on the Byzantine rite with certain modifications from Rome. In 1992 Metropolitan Filaret of Kiev, of the Autonomous Orthodox Church, was suspended and joined forces with the Autocephalous (now 'Unified') Church, which has the support of the political authorities of the Ukraine. There are now three Churches of the Byzantine Rite in the Ukraine claiming legitimacy: the Greek-Catholic Ukrainian Church (the 'Uniats'), the Ukrainian Orthodox Church (the 'Autonomous' Orthodox), and the 'Unified' Ukrainian Orthodox Church (the 'Autocephalous' Orthodox).

There is a further Ukrainian community (the Podcarpathian Ruthenians), which was created when a majority of the Ruthenian population south of the Carpathians was brought into communion with Rome in 1646 by the Union of Užhorod. It was granted a separate jurisdiction by the erection of the eparchy of Mukachevo, subject to the primacy of Hungary, by Pope *Clement XIV in 1771. Since 1945 this community has been split between the Transcarpathian Ukraine; Slovakia, where it was first suppressed and then reconstituted in 1968; and Hungary, which has a single largely Magyarized Uniat diocese.

There are considerable Ukrainian communities of all jurisdictions in the USA (since *c.*1876), *Canada (from the 1890s), *Brazil, and *Argentina. At Rome, a Ruthenian College, founded in 1897 by *Leo XIII and run since 1904 by Basilian monks, has done much to sustain the traditions of the Ukrainian Uniats in recent decades.

O. Zinkevych and A. Sorokowski (eds.), A Thousand Years of Christianity in the Ukraine: An encyclopedic chronology (New York, 1988); N. L. Chirovsky (ed.), The Millennium of Ukrainian Christianity (ibid. [1988]). I. Wlasowsky, Outline History of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, vol. 1 [to 1596] (New York, 1956; 2nd edn., 1974), vol. 2 [17th cent.] (ibid., 1979) (Eng. tr. of earlier part of a larger work in Ukrainian). A. Theiner, Die neuesten Zustände der katholischen Kirche beider Ritus in Polen und Russland seit Katherina II bis auf unsere Tage (Augsburg, 1841). J. Pelesz, Geschichte der Union der ruthenischen Kirche mit Rom (2 vols., Würzburg, 1878–81). M. Lacko, SJ, Unio Užhorodensis Ruthenorum Carpaticorum cum Ecclesia Catholica (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 143; 1955). A. B. Pekar, OSBM, Narysy istoriji cerkvy Zakarpattja, 1: Jerarchične oformlennja (Prague, 1967; rev. Eng. tr., The History of the Church in Carpathian Rus', Classics of Carpathian-Rusyn Scholarship, 4; New York, 1992). D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wis. [1935]), pp. 76–95, rev. as The Christian Churches of the East, 1 (London, 1961), pp. 72–101. J. Krajcar, SJ, 'The Ruthenian Patriarchate. Some remarks on the project for its establishment in the 17th century', OCP 30 (1964), pp. 65–84. E. Likowski, Geschichte des allmaeligen Verfalls der Unirten Ruthenischen Kirche im XVIII. und XIX. Jahrhundert unter polnischem und russischem Scepter (Ger. tr., 2 vols., 1885–7). F. Heyer, Die Orthodoxe Kirche in der Ukraine von 1917 bis 1945 (Osteuropa und der Deutsche Osten, 3; 1953). I. Kirillova, 'The Orthodox Church in the Ukraine: Divisions and Conflicts', Sourozh, 54 (Nov. 1993), pp. 12–22. P. R. Magocsi, The Shaping of a National Identity: Subcarpathian Rus', 1848 1948 (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1978), esp. pp. 178–87; id., Galicia: A Historical Survey and Bibliographical Guide (Toronto and London, 1983), esp. pp. 33 f., 61 f., 81–4, and 159 f. O. Subtelny, Ukraine: A History (Toronto, 1988). N. Andrusiak in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 382–407, s.v. 'Ruthène (Église)'; M. M. Wojnar in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 372–5, s.v. 'Ukrainian (Ruthenian) Rite'.

UIODG (sometimes IODG), i.e. the initial letters of (ut) in omnibus Deus glorificetur ('that God may be glorified in all things'), one of the mottoes of the *Benedictine Order. It occurs in the 'Rule of St Benedict', ch. 57.

Ullathorne, William Bernard (1806–89), RC Bp. of Birmingham. He was a direct descendant of St Thomas *More. After over three years as a cabin-boy, Ullathorne entered the *Benedictine monastery at *Downside in 1824. He was ordained priest in 1831 and, in 1832, volunteered for the mission in *Australia, of which he was made *Vicar General. He organized the RC Church there, working esp. among the convicts, whose cause he defended vigorously during a stay in England. His tract The Catholic Mission in Australasia (1837), as the first popular attack on the convict system, earned him much hostility in Australia. In 1840 he returned to England and in the next year was put in charge of the Benedictine mission at Coventry. Having repeatedly refused a see in Australia, he was appointed *Vicar Apostolic for the Western District of England in 1846. Transferred to the Central District in 1848, he took an active part in the negotiations for establishing the hierarchy in England. During these years he worked together with Cardinal N. *Wiseman to bring about the fusion of the old Catholics with the recent Oxford converts and the Italian priests of the modern congregations, taking up an intermediate position and forming a firm friendship with J. H. Newman. On the restoration of the hierarchy in 1850 he became Bp. of Birmingham, and later engaged in the controversies about the Rambler and E. B. *Pusey's Eirenicon (1866). At the First *Vatican Council, though a firm *Ultramontane, he occupied an independent position and was a member of the deputation on ecclesiastical discipline. In 1888 he resigned his see and became titular Abp. of Cabasa. His most popular work, the Autobiography, ending with the year 1851, which was written in 1868–9 and revised in the last year of his life, was published together with his Letters in 1891–2.

[E.] C. Butler, OSB, The Life and Times of Bishop Ullathorne (2 vols., 1926); id., The Vatican Council: The Story told from inside in Bishop Ullathorne's Letters (2 vols., 1930). A. Austin, OSB, in D. H. Farmer (ed.), Benedict's Disciples (Leominster, 1980), pp. 308–26. T. Cooper in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 19–21.

Ulphilas (*c.*311–83), Apostle of the Goths. Of Cappadocian ancestry, he was completely at one with the Goths, among whom he was born, in both language and sympathy. He spent much of his life as a young man at *Constantinople, and *c.*341 was consecrated bishop in the city by *Eusebius (formerly Bp. of Nicomedia), then bishop of the capital. Shortly afterwards he returned to his native country to spend the rest of his life as a keen missionary, at first beyond the confines of the Empire, and later among the Goths settled in Moesia II. He translated the Bible into the *Gothic language for the first time, omitting (acc. to *Philostorgius) only the Books of Kings, as their warlike deeds might have a bad influence upon a nation so fond of war as the Goths. Through his connections with Eusebius of Nicomedia, he was led into *Arianism; and it was esp. through his influence that for several centuries the Goths continued attached to that heresy. An Arian confession of faith, of which Ulphilas was the author, has survived in an imperfect form.

Auxentius, Bp. of Dorostorum, Epistola de Fide, Vita et Obitu Ulfilae, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Supplementum, ed. A. Hamman, OFM, 1 (1958), cols. 703–7; with text of creed col. 707; Eng. tr. of this and the relevant portions of Philostorgius, with introd., in P. [J.] Heather and J. [F.] Matthews, The Goths in the Fourth Century (Translated Texts for Historians, 11; Liverpool, 1991), pp. 133–53. F. Kauffmann, Aus der Schule des Wulfila (Texte und Untersuchungen zur altgermanischen Religionsgeschichte, 1; 1899). J. Zeiller, Les origines chrétiennes dans les provinces danubiennes de l'Empire romain (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 112; 1918), esp. pp. 440–74. M. Simonetti, 'L'arianesimo di Ulfila', Romanobarbarica, 1 (1976), pp. 297–323, with summary in Eng. E. A. Thompson, The Visigoths in the Time of Ulfila (Oxford, 1966), passim. M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 95–7. G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2048–57, s.v. 'Ulfila'; A. Lippold in PW, 2te Reihe, 17 (1961), cols. 512–31, s.v. 'Ulfila'. For works on his version of the Bible see bibl. to GOTHIC VERSION.

Ulrich, St (*c.*890–973), Bp. of Augsburg from 923. He took a prominent part in the political and ecclesiastical history of his time. Staunchly loyal to the Emp. Otto I, he supported him in the Swabian uprising of 953, and he led the defence of Augsburg against the Magyars in 955. He was an effective administrator of his diocese and took his pastoral duties seriously, upholding a high standard of clerical morality. He had himself been educated at St Gall, and during his episcopacy the school at Augsburg flourished. He is the first person known to have been formally canonized by a Pope; at the instigation of a delegation from Augsburg John XV pronounced him a saint at the *Lateran synod of 29 Jan. 993. Feast day, 4 July.

A Sermo Synodalis of Ulrich is repr. from P. *Labbe in J. P. Migne, PL 135. 1071–4. The 'Epistola de Continentia Clericorum' (a forged letter opposing clerical celibacy ascribed to him in the 11th cent.), ed. L. von Heinemann in MGH, Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII, 1 (1891), pp. 254–60. The principal source for his life is the biog. by Gerhard, Provost of Augsburg, which was taken to Rome in 993 in support of his canonization; it is pr. in AASS, Jul. 2 (1721), pp. 97–131; also ed. G. Waitz in MGH, Scriptores, 4 (1841), pp. 377–425; Ger. tr., with introd., by H. Kallfelz, Lebensbeschreibungen einiger Bischöfe des 10.–12. Jahrhunderts (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 22; Darmstadt, 1973), pp. 35–167. The Life by Bernard of *Reichenau (d. 1248), tr. into Ger. *c.*1200, ed. in Ger. and Lat. by J. A. Schmeller (Munich, 1844). K. Haupt, 'Die Ulrichsvita in der mittelalterlichen Malerei', in Bischof Ulrich und der Augsburger Religionsfriede: Neue Quellenforschungen zum Augsburger Gedenkjahr 955 + 1555 + 1955 (Zeitschrift des historischen Vereins für Schwaben, 61; 1955), pp. 1–159, incl. illustr. F. Zoepfl, Das Bistum Augsburg und seine Bischöfe im Mittelalter [1955], pp. 61–77. A. Finck von Finkenstein, 'Ulrich von Augsburg und die ottonische Kirchenpolitik in der Alemannia', in I. Eberl and others (eds.), Früh- und hochmittelalterlicher Adel in Schwaben und Bayern (Regio. Forschungen zur schwäbischen Regionalgeschichte, 1; Sigmaringendorf, 1988), pp. 261–9; G. Althoff, Amicitiae und Pacta: Bündnis, Einung, Politik und Gebetsgedenken im beginnenden 10. Jahrhundert (MGH, Schriften, 37; 1992), pp. 295–306.

Ultramontanism. The name widely given to a tendency in the RC Church which favours the centralization of authority and influence in the Papal *Curia, as opposed to national or diocesan independence. The word is found as early as the 11th cent., but opinions differ as to whether it was used in an ecclesiastical as distinguished from a geographical sense before the rise of *Gallicanism in France in the 17th cent. In this cent. and the next, Ultramontanism became a definite point of view which gained more and more power as national and centrifugal movements such as Gallicanism, *Jansenism, and *Josephinism became discredited either as involved in definite heresy or as lending countenance to the new liberal and anti-Christian movements of which the French Revolution of 1789 was the logical and most systematic expression. The 19th cent., therefore, saw the triumph of the Ultramontane cause, since there rallied to it all those elements in the RC Church which were most opposed to the rising theological liberalism of the age. In France the Gallican party was overpowered by the reproach of having conformed to the Revolution; in Germany the Ultramontanes seized the part of defenders of the Church against the interference of the State in spiritual affairs; in England the new missionary element among the RCs, little hampered by national traditions of the past, had every inducement, in spite of opposition from the hereditary RC families, to support to the utmost the policy of the Curia. The stages of the triumph of Ultramontanism were roughly as follows:

1814. The revival of the *Jesuit Order, which was always the mainstay of curial as opposed to local authority.

1864. The issuing by Pius IX of the Syllabus, in which Catholicism and any form of liberalism were held to be incompatible.

1870. The declaration by the First *Vatican Council that the Pope is infallible when he makes, by virtue of his office, a solemn pronouncement on faith or morals. This declaration, though not conceding the claim of administrative infallibility which many Ultramontanes would have wished, marked a substantial triumph for their point of view.

F. Nielsen, Pavedømmet i den nittende Hundredaar (2 vols., 1876; 2nd edn. rev., 1895–8; Eng. tr., The History of the Papacy in the XIXth Century, 2 vols., 1906); J. B. Bury, History of the Papacy in the Nineteenth Century (1930); J. D. Holmes, The Triumph of the Holy See: A Short History of the Papacy in the Nineteenth Century (1978). A. Gough, Rome and Paris: The Gallican Church and the Ultramontane Campaign 1848–1853 (Oxford, 1986). H. Linn, Ultramontanismus in Köln (Studien zur Kölner Kirchengeschichte, 22; Siegburg, 1987); E. Garhammer, Seminaridee und Klerusbildung bei Karl August Graf von Reisach: Eine pastoralgeschichtliche Studie zum Ultramontanismus des 19. Jahrhunderts (Münchener Kirchenhistorische Studien, 5 [1990]). R. Aubert in Fliche and Martin, 21 (1952), pp. 262–310, with bibl.

UMCA. The (Anglican) Universities' Mission to Central Africa. It was founded in response to an appeal by D. *Livingstone in the Senate House at Cambridge in 1857 and has received continuous support from members of the universities. The first expedition was led by C. F. Mackenzie, who was consecrated Bp. in South Africa on the way out, but died in Nyasaland within two years of sailing up the Zambezi river. In 1864 the second bishop, W. G. Tozer (Bp. 1863–73), moved the Mission to the island of Zanzibar. Reports from the Mission were instrumental in rousing opinion against the slave trade, which was centred at Zanzibar; in 1873 the Sultan was persuaded to abolish it, and the foundation-stone of the cathedral was laid on the site of the slave market. In the same year work was re-established on the mainland; it extended through what are now Tanzania, Malawi, and *Zambia. Owing to the climate there was a high rate of mortality among the missionaries, and from the first the training of a native ministry has been in the forefront of the Mission's work. The first African (a former slave given to Bp. Tozer by the Sultan) was ordained deacon in 1879. Nearly all the clergy and bishops in the countries served by the Mission are now nationals. The Community of the Sacred Passion, founded by Bp. F. *Weston of Zanzibar in 1910, has African and British nuns.

The formation in the 1950s of the Provinces of East and Central Africa cut across the area of the Mission's activities. In 1965 the UMCA joined with the *SPG to form the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (*USPG).

R. Keable, Darkness or Light (1912); G. H. Wilson, History of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa (1936); The History of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa: vol. 1 by A. E. M. Anderson-Morshead, covering 1859–96 (1897; 5th edn., covering 1859–1909, 1909); vol. 2 by A. G. Blood, covering 1907–32 (1957); vol. 3 by id., covering 1933–57 (1962). M. Dewey, The Messengers: A Concise History of the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (1975).

Una Sancta (Lat., 'One Holy'). Two of the *Notes of the Church in the *Nicene Creed, and often used, esp. in quite recent times, substantively for the Church, usually with emphasis upon its corporate aspect.

Unam Sanctam. The bull (so named from its opening words) which *Boniface VIII issued on 18 Nov. 1302 during his quarrel with Philip IV of France, declaring that there was 'One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church' outside which there was 'neither salvation nor remission of sins'. It strongly emphasized the position of the Pope as the Supreme Head of the Church; and it maintained that to reject his authority was to cease to belong to the Church. It further declared that the 'temporal sword' and the 'spiritual sword' were alike committed to the Church. Of these the spiritual sword was in the hands of the clergy, while the temporal sword was delegated to the secular authority, to be wielded on behalf of the Church and under its direction. Since what was spiritual was greater than what was temporal, the temporal power was to be subject to the spiritual, which was itself subject only to the judgement of God. As the authority of the spiritual power had been divinely granted to St *Peter and his successors, to oppose it was to oppose the law of God Himself. The bull concluded by affirming that it was necessary to salvation for every human creature to be subject to the Roman Pontiff. Although the text of the bull contained nothing new, it brought to a point the ever-growing claims of the Papacy and marks the zenith of medieval Papal ecclesiastical polity.

Crit. edn. of text in G. Digard, M. Faucon, A. Thomas, and R. Fawtier (eds.), Les Registres de Boniface VIII (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 4), 3 (1921) cols. 888–90 (no. 5382); text also in Mirbt and Aland, 1 (1967), pp. 458–60 (no. 746); Eng. tr. of operative portions in Bettenson, pp. 159–61. T. S. R. Boase, Boniface VIII (1933), esp. ch. 12, pp. 313–37; J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'État au temps de Philippe le Bel (SSL 8; 1926), esp. pp. 79–91, 150–5.

uncial script. A form of majuscule script used for books in Greek and Latin from about the 4th to the 8th cents. AD. Greek examples are the *Codices Sinaiticus, Vaticanus, and Alexandrinus; Latin examples are the Codex of *Eusebius of Vercelli and the *Codices Fuldensis and Amiatinus (qq.v.). Its name is derived from a passage in *Jerome's preface to Job, but its present meaning is that assigned to it by the *Maurist authors of the Nouveau Traité de diplomatique (1765). See also CURSIVE SCRIPT.

Uncreated Light. In the *Hesychast system, the mystical light of God's visible Presence (also known as the Light of Tabor) which the soul was held to be capable of apprehending by submitting to an elaborate process of ascetic purification and devotion. Its attainment was considered the highest end of man on earth. See also HESYCHASM.

unction. The process of anointing with oil with a religious significance, usually by a bishop or priest, e.g. at the *Coronation of a monarch. In the RC and E. Orthodox Churches unction is used both at *Baptism and *Confirmation. The word is most commonly applied, however, to the Sacrament of the Unction (or Anointing) of the Sick. This rite was long known in the W. Church as 'extreme unction' (unctio extrema), the word 'extreme' being explained either by the fact that it was the last of the three Sacramental Unctions or because it was normally administered only when the patient was in extremis. The 'Constitution on Liturgy' of the Second *Vatican Council recommended the title 'Anointing of the Sick' and this has been adopted in the Ordo issued in 1972 ('Ordo Unctionis Infirmorum eorumque Pastoralis Curae').

In the NT the anointing of the sick is referred to in Mk. 6: 13 and Jas. 5: 14 f. There is a prayer for the Blessing of Oil in St *Hippolytus, Apostolic Tradition, 5, and in the Euchologion of St *Serapion of Thmuis (d. *c.*365). From the 5th cent. references are more frequent. *Innocent I, in his Ep. to Decentius of Eugubium (416), describes the rite of unction with both spiritual and physical effects from which those undergoing canonical *penance are excluded. In St *Caesarius of Arles the rite is found in connection with the reception of Holy Communion; *Bede represents it as a well-established custom; and from the 10th cent. it is frequently discussed in connection with the theology of the Sacraments. Since *Peter Lombard, the first known author to use the term 'extreme unction', it has been numbered among the *Seven Sacraments. According to developed medieval doctrine, as expounded by St *Thomas Aquinas, the remote matter of the Sacrament is the oil consecrated by the bishop, its proximate matter the anointing of the five senses, its form prayer and its minister the priest.

In the first seven cents. recovery from illness was commonly expected as a result of unction. In the early Middle Ages, however, the rite became so closely connected with repentance and the whole penitential system that it was commonly postponed until death was approaching, and in practice bodily recovery was not ordinarily looked for. The 1972 RC Ordo lays much greater emphasis on healing and underlines the position of sickness in the normal life of Christians and its part in the redemptive work of the Church. The Ordo provides for a blessing of the room (with *Holy Water if desired), a brief address, a penitential act (which may include sacramental *confession), the reading of one of a selection of scriptural passages, with commentary if circumstances permit, intercession for the sick person and his attendants, and the laying on of hands in silence; the patient is then anointed on the forehead and hands with a formula in two parts, to each of which he replies 'Amen'; the rite closes with a collect asking for healing, the *Lord's Prayer (after which the sick person may receive Communion if appropriate), and a special blessing. Normally oil blessed by the bishop on *Maundy Thursday is used, but in cases of necessity the priest administering the Sacrament may bless the oil. In the past olive oil was required, but oil from any plant may now be used. The Sacrament may be administered to all who are seriously ill, more than once during the same illness if a new crisis arises, to old people who are weak but not ill, and to children old enough to appreciate the nature of the Sacrament. RC Canon Law on the subject is contained in CIC (1983) cans. 998–1007.

In the Greek Church the rite is called Euchelaion (Gk. εὐχέλαιον, εὐχή, 'prayer', and ἔλαιον, 'oil') and administered in church by seven, five, or three priests, or by a single priest. Here its primary end is held to be the physical cure, though it is in fact frequently received as a preparation for Communion even by those who are not ill, esp. on the Wednesday in *Holy Week.

In the First English BCP (1549) a form of unction was included in the Order for the Visitation of the Sick for use 'if the sick person desire'. It contained an accompanying prayer for healing of body and mind, forgiveness, and spiritual strengthening. In 1552 and later versions of the BCP there has been no provision for unction. In modern times a desire for its restoration has been widely expressed in the Anglican Communion. The revised Scottish and American Prayer Books (1929) and most later Anglican liturgies make provision for unction of the sick. In Britain in 1935 a 'Form of Unction and the Laying on of Hands' was approved by the *Convocations of Canterbury and York 'for provisional use subject to due diocesan sanction'. The 1969 Canons (can. B 37) allows that if the sick 'person so desires, the priest may lay hands upon him and may anoint him with oil upon the forehead with the sign of the Cross using the form of service sanctioned by lawful authority'. The ASB includes provision for the Blessing of the Oils on Maundy Thursday, and the Alternative Services Ministry to the Sick (1983) allows other parts of the body to be anointed in addition to the forehead.

J. Kern, SJ, De Sacramento Extremae Unctionis Tractatus Dogmaticus (Ratisbon, 1907). A. Chavasse, Étude sur l'onction des infirmes dans l'église latine du iiie au xie siècle, 1. Du iiie siècle à la réforme carolingienne (Lyons, 1942). P. Murray, 'The Liturgical History of Extreme Unction', Studies in Pastoral Liturgy, 2, ed. V. Ryan, OSB (Dublin, 1963), pp. 18–38 [based on unpub. 2nd pt. of Chavasse's work]. B. Poschmann, Busse und Letzte Ölung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, ed. M. Schmaus and others, 4, Fasz. 3; Freiburg i.B., 1951), pp. 125–38; Eng. tr. rev. by F. Courtney, SJ, Penance and Anointing of the Sick (1964), pp. 234–57; H. Vorgrimler, Busse und Krankensalbung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, 4, Fasz. 3; 1978), pp. 215–34. H. B. Porter, 'The Origin of the Medieval Rite for Anointing the Sick or Dying', JTS NS 7 (1956), pp. 211–25; id., 'The Rites for the Dying in the Early Middle Ages', ibid. 10 (1959), pp. 43–62 and 299–307. A special number of Maison-Dieu (no. 113; 1973), 'Le Nouveau Rituel des malades', incl. bibl. by J. C. Didier, pp. 81–5. E. J. Lengeling, '"Per istam sanctam unctionem . . . adiuvet te Dominus gratia Spiritus Sancti". Die heilige Geist und die Krankensalbung', in Lex Orandi, Lex Credendi: Miscellanea in onore di P. Cipriano Vagaggini, ed. G. Békés and G. Farnedi (Studi Anselmiana, 79; 1980), pp. 235–94. B. Kranemann, Die Krankensalbung in der Zeit der Aufklärung: Ritualien und pastoralliturgische Studien im deutschen Sprachgebiet (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 72 [1990]). K. M. Rallis, Περὶ τῶν μυστηρίων τῆς μετανοίας καὶ τοῦ εὐχελαίου κατὰ τὸ δίκαιον τῆς ὀρθοδόξου ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας (1905). T. Spáčil, SJ, Doctrina Theologiae Orientis Separati de Sacra Infirmorum Unctione (Orientalia Christiana, 24, Heft 2; no. 74; 1931), with bibl. B. J. Groen, 'Ter Genezing van Ziel en Lichaam': Die viering van het oliesel in de Grieks-Orthodoxe kerk (Theology & Empire, 11 [1990]), with Eng. summary, pp. 255–7. C. W. Gusmer, The Ministry of Healing in the Church of England: An Ecumenical-Liturgical Study (Alcuin Club Collections, 56; 1973). G. Martimort in id. (ed.), L'Église en Prière, new edn., 3 [1984], pp. 132–53; Eng. tr. (1988), pp. 117–37, with further bibl. C. Ruch and L. Godefroy in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1897–2022, s.v. 'Extrême-Onction'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (1922), cols. 1029–37, s.v. 'Extrême-Onction', and ibid. 12 (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 2116–30, s.v. 'Onction'; E. Cothenet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 701–32, s.v. 'Onction'; T. A. Vismans, OP, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 2988–92, s.v. 'Ziekenzalving', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to SPIRITUAL HEALING and VISITATION OF THE SICK.

Underhill, Evelyn (1875–1941), exponent of the mystical life. The daughter of a distinguished barrister, she was educated at *King's College, London, and later travelled much on the Continent. In 1907 she underwent an experience of religious conversion; she was drawn to the RC Church, but after the condemnation of *Modernism felt unable to join it and in her spiritual struggles turned to the study of the mystics. The first literary fruit of her newly awakened interest was her well-known book Mysticism (1911; 13th edn., 1940). Its range extended from St *Teresa to J. *Boehme and from Christian mystical experience to *Neoplatonist speculations, and its comprehensive approach to religious experience at once made it a standard work. In 1911 she came under the influence of F. *von Hügel, and about the same time began to undertake individual spiritual direction, but it was not until 1921 that she formally put herself under von Hügel's direction, and became a communicant member of the C of E. From 1924 onwards she was a much sought-after retreat-conductor. In 1927 she was made a Fellow of King's College, London. She was a prolific writer, the most important work of her later years being Worship (1936), which embodied her general outlook in a broad review of the subject. She also published valuable modernized editions of the Cloud of Unknowing (1912) and W. *Hilton's Scale of Perfection (1923), and wrote a study of *Jacopone da Todi (1919). In her later years she was a keen pacifist. She is commemorated in the *Episcopal Church in the United States of America on 15 June.

The Letters of Evelyn Underhill, ed. with introd. by C. [W. S.] *Williams (1943). A collection of her arts., ed. with introd. and bibl. by D. Greene, Evelyn Underhill: Modern Guide to the Ancient Quest for the Holy (New York [1988]). Lives by M. [B.] Cropper (London, 1958) and C. J. R. Armstrong (ibid., 1975). Study by D. Greene (New York, 1990; London, 1991). M. Vernon in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 897 f.

Uniat Churches. The Churches of E. Christendom in communion with *Rome, which yet retain their respective languages, rites, and canon law in accordance with the terms of their union; these last in most cases provide for *Communion in both kinds, *Baptism by *immersion, and marriage of the clergy. In 1972 a commission was set up to prepare a code of canon law for all Uniat Churches; this was promulgated in 1990 and came into force in 1991. The term 'Uniat' (Lat. Unio, so Polish Unia) was first used by the opponents of the Union of *Brest-Litovsk (1595), and has been consistently disowned by the Churches concerned. The main groups covered by the designation are the *Maronites (united 1182), the *Syrians under the Patriarch of *Antioch, and the *Malankarese (1930), all of the Antiochene rite; the *Armenians under the Patriarch of Cilicia (united 1198–1291 and 1741); the *Chaldeans (1551 and 1830) and the *Malabarese (before 1599) of the Chaldean rite; the *Copts (1741) and *Ethiopians (1839), both of the Alexandrian rite; and of the Byzantine rite the Polish Ruthenians (now called *Ukrainians; 1595), the *Hungarians (1595), the Serbs in Croatia (1611), the Podcarpathian Ruthenians (1646), the *Romanians (1701), the Melkites (1724), and certain Bulgars (1860) and *Greeks (1860). Of these the largest body is the Ukrainians. The term is also applied to the Italo-Greek-Albanian community of S. Italy which, although never separated from Rome, is permitted to follow similar practices. In 1946 the Uniat Church in the Ukraine, and in 1948 that in Romania, were suppressed and their faithful forced to join the *Russian and Romanian Orthodox Churches respectively. They continued an underground existence and were legalized in 1989 and 1990. The total number of Uniats or Eastern Rite Catholics is prob. some 15 million. See also under separate groups.

D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, 1937), rev. as The Christian Churches of the East, 1 (London, 1961). C. de Clercq, Les Églises unies d'Orient (Bibliothèque Catholique des Sciences Religieuses; 1934). J. Hajjar, Les Chrétiens uniates du Proche-Orient (1962). Maximos IV Sayegh (ed.), The Eastern Churches and Catholic Unity (Freiburg and Edinburgh [1963]). J. Madey and S. T. Erackel (eds.), The Future of the Oriental Catholic Churches (Tiruvalla, India [1979]). C. A. Frazee, Catholics and Sultans: The Church and the Ottoman Empire 1453–1923 (1983). S. Gaselee, The Uniats and their Rites (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 16; 1925). The 'Codex Canonum Ecclesiarum Orientalium' is pr. in AAS 82 (1990), pp. 1045–363. V. J. Pospishil, Eastern Catholic Church Law according to the Code of Canons of the Eastern Churches (Brooklyn, N.Y., 1993). On the Melkites and Uniats of S. Italy, A. *Fortescue, The Uniate Eastern Churches, ed. G. D. Smith (1923).

Uniformity, Acts of. There have been four:

(1) UNIFORMITY ACT 1548. This was passed on 21 Jan. 1549, and imposed the exclusive use of the First BCP of *Edward VI from the ensuing *Whitsunday (9 June) in the 'celebration of the Lord's Supper, commonly called the Mass' and in all public services. Holders of benefices who did not comply were punishable for a first offence with forfeiture of a year's income and six months' imprisonment, for a second offence with deprivation and a year's imprisonment, and for a third offence with imprisonment for life. Penalties of the same order were imposed for depraving or speaking against the Book. The public services were to be in English, with the exception that at the universities, 'for the encouragement of learning', all services other than the Mass might be said in Latin, Greek, or Hebrew; and in private use of the Book everyone was at liberty to use those languages as he wished. Only eight bishops and three lay peers voted against the Bill.

(2) UNIFORMITY ACT 1551. This was passed on 14 Apr. 1552. It stated that, owing to doubts occasioned by the interpretation of the 'very godly order' of the first Act, the BCP had been revised; and the use of the Second BCP of Edward VI was ordered from *All Saints' Day (1 Nov.) 1552. Absence from church on Sundays and Holy Days by all not reasonably hindered was now made punishable by ecclesiastical censures, and attendance at any other form of service by imprisonment.

(3) ACT OF UNIFORMITY 1558. This Act, Primo Elizabethae, which forms part of the 1662 BCP, received the Royal Assent on 8 May 1559. After repealing the legislation of *Mary's reign reimposing the forms of worship in use under *Henry VIII, it ordered the use of the Book of 1552, with three modifications and omission of the *Black Rubric, from 24 June 1559. The penalties for depraving the Book were increased, and absence from church made punishable by a fine of 12 pence as well as ecclesiastical censures. The *Ornaments Rubric was inserted in the Book, modified by a proviso in the Act itself.

(4) ACT OF UNIFORMITY 1662. As part of the Restoration settlement, a Bill for reintroducing the BCP passed the Commons in July 1661, but as the *Convocations did not complete the revision of the Book until December, the Bill was again considered in 1662. The Book itself (i.e. the 1662 BCP still in use), which was annexed to the Bill, was not discussed by either Commons or Lords. The Bill received the Royal Assent on 19 May. Before the ensuing St *Bartholomew's Day (24 Aug.), all ministers were required publicly to assent to the Book, from which day its exclusive use was ordered. Ministers not episcopally ordained by that date were to be deprived. All ministers and schoolmasters were also required to make a declaration of the illegality of taking up arms against the King and to repudiate the *National Covenant. Some 2,000 Presbyterian ministers who refused to conform were ejected from their livings.

This Act still remains on the Statute Book. It has been modified at a few points by the *Clerical Subscription Act 1865, the *Universities Tests Act 1871, the Prayer Book (Table of Lessons) Act 1871, the Act of *Uniformity Amendment Act 1872 and, more radically, by the Church of England (*Worship and Doctrine) Measure 1974.

The texts are pr. in Gee and Hardy as follows: (1) pp. 358–66 (no. 69); (2) pp. 369–72 (no. 71); (3) pp. 458–67 (no. 80); and (4), pp. 600–19 (no. 117).

Uniformity Amendment Act 1872, Act of. More generally known as the 'Shortened Services Act', this Act, passed by Parliament after its approval by the *Convocations of *Canterbury and *York, provided for the optional use of shortened forms of Morning and Evening Prayer, as additional services, in parish churches on Sundays and certain other days, and in cathedrals on any day, and as substitutes for the full services in parish churches on weekdays. The chief omissions sanctioned were the Exhortation 'Dearly beloved brethren', all but one of the appointed *Psalms, one of the *Canticles, and the State Prayers. It also provided that Morning Prayer, the Litany, and the Communion Service might be recited separately. The Act was repealed by the Church of England (*Worship and Doctrine) Measure 1974.

For exact details see the 'Schedule' to the Act, pr. in R. *Phillimore, Ecclesiastical Law (2nd edn., 1895), 1, pp. 757–61.

Unigenitus (1343). The bull of *Clement VI, issued on 27 Jan. 1343, which gave official approval to the teaching of the Schoolmen that *indulgences owed their efficacy to the Pope's dispensation of the accumulated *merit of the Church. In 1518 Cardinal T. de Vio *Cajetan accused M. *Luther of contravening its contents.

Text in Corpus Iuris Canonici, ed. A. Friedberg, 2 (Leipzig, 1881), cols. 1304–6, repr. in Mirbt and Aland, 1 (1967), pp. 472–4 (no. 760).

Unigenitus (1713). The Constitution of *Clement XI, pub. 8 Sept. 1713, condemning 101 propositions extracted from P. *Quesnel's Réflexions morales sur le Nouveau Testament. Some of these propositions contain doctrine previously condemned in the works of M. *Baius (1567) and C. O. *Jansen (1653). Most of the others are reactionary criticisms of modern developments in Catholic faith and practice. Many French Jansenists appealed from Clement's verdict to a 'future Council'.

Text in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 21 (1871), pp. 567–75 (no. 187); abbrev. text in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 670–82 (nos. 2400–502). J. Parguez, La Bulle Unigenitus et le jansénisme politique (1936); J. F. Thomas, La Querelle de l'Unigenitus (1950). L. Ceyssens and J. A. G. Tans, Autour de l'Unigenitus: Recherches sur la Genèse de la Constitution (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 76; 1987 [repr. series of arts. orig. pub. 1981–4]). Further collection of arts. by L. Ceyssens, ed. M. Lamberigts, Le Sort de la Bulle Unigenitus (ibid. 104; 1992). J. M. Gres-Gayer, 'The Unigenitus of Clement XI: A Fresh Look at the Issues', Theological Studies, 49 (1988), pp. 259–82. J. Carreyre, PSS, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2061–162, s.v. 'Unigenitus (Bulle)'.

Union of Brest. See BREST-LITOVSK, UNION OF.

Union of Christendom. See REUNION.

Union Theological Seminary, New York City. An institution for the training of ministers founded in 1836, by the independent action of 'New School' Presbyterians, for 'men of moderate views' of any denomination. It has always encouraged critical studies and advocated toleration. Temporarily under Presbyterian control after 1870, it reclaimed its independence in 1892 and refused to dismiss C. A. *Briggs. Twelve years later it became a fully non-denominational institution. Its professors have regularly been scholars of international reputation, a number of them from abroad.

R. T. Handy, A History of Union Theological Seminary in New York (New York, 1987).

Unitarianism. A type of Christian thought and religious observance which rejects the doctrines of the Trinity and the Divinity of Christ in favour of the unipersonality of God. Unitarians have no formal creed. Originally their teaching was based on scriptural authority, but J. *Martineau (1805–1900) in England and T. *Parker (1810–60) in the USA led the way from biblical to rational Unitarianism. Hence reason and conscience have now become the criteria of belief and practice for Unitarians. Owing to their belief in the abiding goodness of human nature, they are critical of the orthodox doctrines of the *Fall, the *Atonement, and eternal punishment.

Though the unipersonality of God was voiced in the early Church in the various forms of *Monarchianism, modern Unitarianism dates historically from the Reformation era. It soon attracted adherents among those of extreme reforming views, esp. in the sects. Probably its earliest exponent was Martin Cellarius (1499–1564), a pupil of J. *Reuchlin, who defended Unitarian views in De Operibus Dei (Strasbourg, 1527). Other early Unitarians were J. de *Valdés (at least in sympathy), M. *Servetus, and B. *Ochino. As an organized community, it became established in the 16th–17th cents. in Poland, Hungary, and England.

In Poland George Blandrata, a Piedmontese physician, became leader of an active group of Unitarians in 1558. They continued to grow until 1565, when anti-Trinitarians were excluded from the synod of the Reformed Church and henceforward compelled to hold their own synods as the 'Minor Church'. From 1579 until his death (1604) Faustus *Socinus led the party. In 1605 the *Racovian Catechism (q.v.) was issued. Towards the middle of the 17th cent. they had to face strong opposition. In 1638 the *Jesuits secured the suppression of the Unitarian college at Raków; in 1658 Socinians were expelled from the realm and all traces of Unitarianism disappeared from Poland.

In Hungary also, Blandrata, who arrived in the country in 1563, was largely responsible for the spread of anti-Trinitarianism, and the King himself, John Sigismund, was converted. But after Sigismund's death (1570) the sect was persecuted. In 1638 the Unitarians put forward a common confession and were recognized as a legitimate religion.

In England John *Biddle (q.v.; 1615–62) is generally reckoned the father of Unitarianism. He published Unitarian tracts and in 1652–4 and 1658–62 held conventicles in London. Rather more than 100 years later J. *Priestley defended Unitarian principles in his Appeal to the Serious and Candid Professors of Christianity (1770). But until T. *Lindsey seceded from the C of E in 1773 and formed for the first time a Unitarian denomination, there was only one other Unitarian conventicle in England. In 1774 Lindsey opened Essex Chapel in London. Penal Acts continued in force against Unitarians until 1813. In the 18th cent. Unitarian views were also widely accepted by Dissenting congregations, esp. among the English *Presbyterians. The long disputes as to the endowments of chapels, once orthodox but now in the hands of the Unitarians, were ended in 1884 by the *Nonconformists' Chapels Act, which allowed the Unitarians to keep chapels founded on an Open Trust where over 25 years' usage could be proved for their opinions. In the later 19th cent. much influence was exercised by J. Martineau, who insisted that the term 'Unitarian' could be only the name of the belief of individuals and should never be adopted as the restrictive title of a denomination. In 1888 Manchester College was moved from London to Oxford with the aim of establishing it there as a college of liberal education without denominational ties. The *Hibbert Trust (founded 1853) devoted its income to promoting public lectures on comparative religion and similar subjects and to supporting a journal of liberal theology (the Hibbert Journal, 1902–68). The first quarter of the 20th cent., however, witnessed a swing towards more radical Unitarianism in some quarters. In 1925 the British and Foreign Unitarian Association (founded in 1825) and the National Conference (long the stronghold of the anti-dogmatic party) united into the 'General Assembly of Unitarian and Free Churches', the British and Foreign Unitarian Association remaining in existence only as a legal custodian of funds. From this time the Unitarians in England have been a distinctive and organized denomination, whose numbers have dwindled markedly in modern times.

In America the first definitely Unitarian congregation was King's Chapel, Boston. In 1785 it adopted a form of the American liturgy, revised to meet the needs of Unitarians. In the early 19th cent. Unitarianism was also adopted in *Congregationalist Churches. The American Unitarian Association was formed in 1825 and in 1865 the first National Conference of Unitarian Churches. The ethical and philosophical aspects of Unitarianism were emphasized in different ways by W. E. *Channing (1780–1842) and R. W. *Emerson (1803–82). Before the end of the 19th cent. Unitarianism in America had become a very liberal or rationalistic movement, accepting scientific methods and ideas and recognizing the truth of non-Christian religions. It came to exercise an influence disproportionate to the number of its adherents largely through the Divinity School at Harvard University as reconstituted by Charles W. Eliot (1869–1909). In 1961 the American Unitarian Association joined with the Universalist Church of America to form the Unitarian Universalist Association.

Collection of the works of F. Socinus, J. Crellius, J. Stichling, and L. Wolzogen in the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum quos Unitarios Vocant (8 vols., Amsterdam, 1656). F. S. Bock, Historia Antitrinitariorum, maxime Socinianismi et Socinianorum (2 vols., Königsberg, 1774–8). F. Trechsel, Die Protestantischen Antitrinitarier vor Faustus Socin (2 vols., 1839–44); O. Fock, Der Socinianismus nach seiner Stellung in der Gesammtentwickelung des christlichen Geistes (2 vols., Kiel, 1847). The Polish Brethren: Documentation of the History and Thought of Unitarianism in the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth and in the Diaspora, 1601–1685, ed. and tr. G. H. Williams (Harvard Theological Studies, 30; 2 parts, Missoula, Mont. [1980]). J. H. Allen, An Historical Sketch of the Unitarian Movement since the Reformation (New York, 1894). J. E. *Carpenter (ed.), Freedom and Truth: Modern Views of Unitarianism (1925). H. Gow, The Unitarians ('The Faiths', 1928). E. M. Wilbur, A History of Unitarianism: Socinianism and its Antecedents (Cambridge, Mass., 1946); id., A History of Unitarianism in Transylvania, England, and America (ibid., 1952). K. Twinn (ed.), Essays in Unitarian Theology (1959). R. Wallace, Antitrinitarian Biography (3 vols., 1850). H. J. McLachlan, Socinianism in Seventeenth-Century England (1951); H. McLachlan, The Unitarian Movement in the Religious Life of England, 1: Its Contribution to Thought and Learning, 1700–1900 (1934); R. V. Holt, The Unitarian Contribution to Social Progress in England (1938). C. G. Bolam, J. Goring, H. L. Short, and R. Thomas, The English Presbyterians from Elizabethan Puritanism to Modern Unitarianism (1968). J. H. Allen in id. and R. Eddy, A History of the Unitarians and the Universalists in the United States (American Church History Series, 10; 1894), pp. 1–249; C. Wright, The Liberal Christians: Essays on American Unitarian History (Boston [1970]); C. E. Wright (ed.), American Unitarianism, 1805–1865 (Massachusetts Historical Society Studies in American History and Culture, 1 [1989]). D. Robinson, The Unitarians and the Universalists (Denominations in America, 1; Westport, Conn., and London, 1985). W. J. Kühler, Socinianisme in Nederland (Leiden, 1912); J. C. van Slee, De Geschiedenis van het Socinianisme in Nederlanden (Haarlem, 1914). S. Kot, Ideologia polityczna i spoleczna Braci Polskich zwanych Arjanami (Warsaw, 1932; Eng. tr., Socinianism in Poland, Boston [1957]). J. E. Carpenter in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 519–27, s.v. (also issued separately, London, 1922). J. C. Godbey in M. Eliade (ed.), Encyclopedia of Religion, 15 (1987), pp. 143–7, s.v. 'Unitarian Universalist Association'.

Unitas Fratrum. The Latinized form of the Czech jednota bratrská ('society of brethren'), the title assumed by the branch of the *Hussites known as the *Bohemian Brethren (q.v.) and their successors, the *Moravian Brethren.

United Church of Christ. A Church in the USA formed in 1957 by the union of the Evangelical and Reformed Church with the *Congregational Christian Churches. The Evangelical and Reformed Church was itself the result of a union in 1934 between the Evangelical Synod of North America and the Reformed Church of America. The former of these bodies was composed mainly of immigrants from Germany who were in sympathy with the Union of Lutheran and Reformed (Calvinist) traditions ordered by King Frederick of Prussia in 1817; the latter drew on refugees driven from the Palatinate region of Germany as a result of the devastations of the *Thirty Years War and on the Reformed Churches of Switzerland and the Netherlands. The Congregational Christian Churches were formed by a union in 1931 between the Congregational National Council and the Christian Churches, the latter being a small group of Churches holding similar principles of Churchmanship. Negotiations between the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian Churches were authorized in 1942. After various legal difficulties the United Church of Christ was formed in a Uniting General Synod on 25 June 1957; its constitution came into force in 1961. About 85 per cent of the Congregational Christian Churches and nearly all the Evangelical and Reformed Churches joined to form the United Church of Christ, which originally had nearly 2 million members (by the early 1990s, some 1.6 million). The union has a particular significance owing to the wide differences in styles of Churchmanship, as well as in historical and social background, of the two bodies participating.

D. Horton, The United Church of Christ: Its Origins, Organization and Role in the World Today (New York [1962]); L. H. Gunnemann, The Shaping of the United Church of Christ (ibid. [1977]); R. S. Paul, Freedom with Order: The Doctrine of the Church in the United Church of Christ (ibid. [1987]). D. Dunn [and others], A History of the Evangelical and Reformed Church (Philadelphia [1961]). G. G. Atkins and F. L. Fagley, History of American Congregationalism (Boston [1942]). J. R. Willis in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 415–17; L. E. Wilshire in D. G. Reid and others (eds.), Dictionary of Christianity in America (Downers Grove, Ill. [1990]), pp. 1199–201, s.v.

United Free Church of Scotland. The Church formed in 1900 by the union of the *United Presbyterian Church and the *Free Church of Scotland. In 1929 the greater part of the United Free Church of Scotland joined with the Established Church of Scotland. A small minority, however, remained outside this union; it retained the name 'United Free Church of Scotland', for five years adding 'Continuing' to its title. For training of its ministry it shares the Scottish Congregational College in Edinburgh. It ordains women, and has about 6,500 communicant members.

United Methodist Church. (1) The branch of English Methodism formed in 1907 by the union of the *Methodist New Connexion, the *Bible Christians, and the *United Methodist Free Churches (qq.v.), and itself embodied in the *Methodist Church (q.v.) in 1932.

The possibility of reunion in Methodism was discussed throughout the 19th cent. and towards its end negotiations between various bodies took place. In 1901 the third Methodist Ecumenical Conference recommended that reunion in British Methodism was desirable and in 1902 active steps to that end were taken. Although other Methodist Churches were consulted and agreed in principle to the plan of reunion, only the above-named three Churches took part in the union of 1907.

The constitution accepted for the new Church closely followed that common to all branches of Methodism. Central government was in the hands of a conference meeting annually and presided over by a president elected each year. The missionary and social activities of the uniting Churches were maintained and increased.

The achievement of the union increased the desire for wider reunion in Methodism, and proposals in this direction were made by the Wesleyan Conference in 1913. In 1932 the United Methodist Church finally united with the *Wesleyan and *Primitive Methodist Churches to form a Methodist Church including almost the whole of English Methodism.

(2) In the *United States of America the United Methodist Church was formed in 1968 by a union between the Methodist Church and the Evangelical United Brethren Church. It is the principal Methodist Church in the USA and the largest Methodist community in the world, with nearly 10 million members.

On (1) see foll. entry; on both see bibl. to METHODIST CHURCHES; on (2) see also works cited under UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

United Methodist Free Churches. One of the bodies which went to form the *United Methodist Church in 1907. It originated in the amalgamation of smaller communities which had broken away from *Wesleyan Methodism. In every case the reason for division was not doctrinal but constitutional, the Free Churches embodying the most democratic elements of Methodism.

The Protestant Methodists, formed in 1827, arose from discontent of long standing with the government of the Methodist Church. The great power vested in the annual Conference of ministers was oppressive to those who wished the laity to have a share in the government of their Church, and feeling ran high when Dr Jabez *Bunting (q.v.) asserted at the Conference: 'Methodism knows nothing of democracy; Methodism hates democracy as it hates sin.' The immediate occasion of their secession was trifling—the erection of an organ at Brunswick Chapel, Leeds. After much dissension the Protestant Methodists were founded at Leeds, with a few associated societies, mostly in Yorkshire.

The next group, the Wesleyan Methodist Association, was formed in 1835 through a dispute about the founding of a Theological Institution for the training of ministers. The principal ground of offence was that the Conference had acted contrary to its constitution and not consulted the people before taking a step of such importance; objection to the theological institution as such was of secondary importance. The expulsions which followed led to the formation of the new democratic association. In 1836 it was joined by the 'Protestant Methodists' and a year later by a small body of secessionists at Derby.

Further dissension was brought to a head at the Wesleyan Conference of 1849. For some years Methodism had been disturbed by the circulation of anonymous pamphlets, known as the Fly Sheets, containing accusations of favouritism, narrowness, and the mismanagement of Connexional funds against the predominant party in Methodism. Vigorous and, as some thought, unjust steps were taken to discover their authors, and finally, in the Conference of 1849, three ministers were expelled for refusing to answer questions. At the same time some 80,000 members left the Wesleyan Church. At first they were content to agitate for reform in Wesleyanism; but when it became apparent that they would not gain their end, a separate body, the Wesleyan Reformers, was formed.

After several years of discussion, largely on the subject of their constitution, the 'Wesleyan Methodist Association' and the bulk of the 'Wesleyan Reformers' united in 1857, taking the name of the 'United Methodist Free Churches'. Some Reformers stayed out of the union and formed the Wesleyan Reform Union which still continues. Peace and a settled constitution contributed to solid progress both in England and in foreign missions. As early as 1837 the Wesleyan Association had commenced work in Jamaica, and in 1851 the first missionary had been sent to Australia. In both West and East Africa missions were established and maintained in spite of much hardship. From 1864 stations were supported in China.

The constitution adopted by the United Methodist Free Churches reflects the opposition to autocratic rule by the ministry which led to their separation from the parent Church. The annual Assembly, unlike the Wesleyan Conference, was not composed wholly of ministers. It was composed, with the exception of a very small number of officials elected at the previous Assembly, of representatives elected by their own circuits. In organization an endeavour was made to combine the congregational with the connexional system, and great authority was given to the circuits in dealing with their own affairs, e.g. the Assembly did not determine the circuits to which ministers should be appointed.

In 1907 the United Methodist Free Churches united with the *Methodist New Connexion and the *Bible Christians to form the *United Methodist Church.

G. Eayrs in W. J. Townsend, H. B. Workman, and G. Eayrs (eds.), A New History of Methodism, 1 (1909), pp. 514–51. H. Smith, J. E. Swallow, and W. Treffy (eds.), The Story of the United Methodist Church [1932]. O. A. Beckerlegge, The United Methodist Free Churches: A Study in Freedom (1957). R. Currie, Methodism Divided: A Study in the Sociology of Ecumenicalism (1968), passim. D. A. Gowland, Methodist Secessions: The origins of Free Methodism in three Lancashire towns: Manchester, Rochdale, Liverpool (Chetham Society, 3rd ser. 26; 1979).

United Presbyterian Church. The Church formed in Scotland in 1847 by the union of two earlier groups, the *United Secession Church and the Relief Synod. The latter body had been formed in 1761 after difficulties over the system of patronage in the Church of Scotland. In 1900, apart from a very small minority (the *Wee Frees), the United Presbyterians united with the Free Church of Scotland to form the *United Free Church of Scotland.

United Reformed Church. The Church formed in 1972 by the union of a large majority of the *Congregational Church of England and Wales with the *Presbyterian Church of England. In 1981 the majority of the *Disciples of Christ in Britain joined it; as some of these congregations were in Scotland, the Church took the name 'United Reformed Church in the United Kingdom'. In government it combines elements from its constituent traditions (e.g. *Church Meeting and the office of *elder); in belief and practice it stands in the mainstream of *Reformed Churches. It belongs to the *Council for World Mission, the *World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the *World Council of Churches, and the *Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland (the successor of the *British Council of Churches, to which it had previously belonged).

The United Reformed Church issued A Book of Services (Edinburgh, 1980), rev. as the Service Book (Oxford, 1989); its use was recommended, though not prescribed. The 'Scheme of Union' is pr. in the Church's Manual (1973), pp. 3–29, with the Act of Parliament which effected the union, pp. 31–65; a summary of sections 1–10 and the complete text of the remaining part of the Scheme are pr. in The Manual (2nd edn. [1984]), pp. 2–24, with the 1972 Act (but not its schedules), pp. 25–47, and the 1981 Act (which made obsolete the schedules of the 1972 one), pp. 48–69. The Basis of the Union of the United Reformed Church, with amendments approved in 1981, is pr. in D. M. Thompson (ed.), Stating the Gospel (Edinburgh, 1990), pp. 248–65. K. Slack, The United Reformed Church (Exeter, 1978).

United Secession Church. The Church formed in Scotland in 1820 by the fusion of the 'New Lichts' of the *Burghers and *Antiburghers. These two groups had divided into 'Auld Lichts' and 'New Lichts' in 1799 and 1806 respectively, and the 'New Lichts' of both groups joined to form the United Secession Church. In 1847 this united with the Relief Synod to form the *United Presbyterian Church (q.v.).

United Society for Christian Literature. A Society founded in 1935 by the fusion of the *Religious Tract Society (q.v.), the Christian Literature Society for India and Africa (founded 1858), and the Christian Literature Society for China (founded 1884) for the spread of the Christian faith through literature in Britain and overseas. It works closely with 'Feed the Minds', a charity founded in 1964, which gives grants for Christian literature and communications projects in developing countries and Eastern Europe.

G. Hewitt, Let the People Read: A Short History of the United Society for Christian Literature, Religious Tract Society, 1799, Christian Literature Society for India and Africa, 1858, Christian Literature Society for China (British Support), 1887 (1949). Annual Reports (London, 1937 ff.).

United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. See USPG.

United States of America, Christianity in. Since its introduction into the geographical areas now comprising the United States, Christianity has left its mark in both public and private spheres, exercising influence upon society in general and upon the lives of individuals. At the same time American Christianity has been shaped in distinctive ways by its peculiar socio-political context.

The transplantation of W. Christianity to America began when European explorers sailed across the Atlantic in pursuit of fortune and national honour. Both profit and religion motivated these adventurers and their patrons. Christopher Columbus's choice of San Salvador as the name for the first island he encountered in 1492 reflected his personal zeal. Subsequent explorers carried the Christian traditions of their respective nations to the New World where they attempted to convert the native 'Indians'.

The colonial settlement of North America produced a patchwork pattern of religious diversity reflecting the fragmented and strife-torn state of European Christianity. In 1565 on the Florida peninsula the Spanish founded St Augustine, the oldest Christian settlement in what would become the United States. Later they established other RC missions in the SW part of the continent. At the time Spanish Catholicism was characterized by a close association between the Church and the Crown, as well as by a fervent, enthusiastic spirituality. The *Dominican, *Franciscan, and *Jesuit orders played a major role in the settlement of New Spain. Fur traders carried the flag of France into the upper regions of North America, accompanied by RC missionaries. Despite heroic efforts by Jesuit priests, conversions by the French among the natives were limited. The English joined the exploration and colonization effort relatively late. Land companies chartered by the Crown organized the first successful settlements at Jamestown (1603) in Virginia and at Plymouth (1620) and Massachusetts Bay (1630) in New England. In Virginia the C of E was legally established. In New England *Puritanism, in its separating and non-separating congregational forms, was initially the official religion. During the next 100 years the English settled much of the eastern seaboard of North America. Lord Baltimore (1606–47), a RC nobleman, founded Maryland (1634) under a grant from *Charles I. Roger *Williams, a separatist exiled from Massachusetts Bay who became a *Baptist, organized Rhode Island (1636) for dissenters. The *Quaker William *Penn received a charter for Pennsylvania (1681), which became a haven for the oppressed. The Dutch and the Swedish, engaging in more limited colonial enterprises, brought the Dutch Reformed and *Lutheran Churches respectively to New Netherland (1626) and New Sweden (1638).

By the end of the 17th cent. regional patterns were evident among the Churches. The C of E was dominant in the southern English colonies where it faced the challenge of adapting the parish system to the new context. Anglicanism was also nominally established in other royal colonies, although that fact had little practical effect. In the Puritan colonies of New England, where Church and State co-operated closely, Reformed ideas, as modified by covenant theology, held sway. Among the Puritans biblical *covenants provided models for reflection on the process of redemption as well as on the nature of ecclesiastical and political order. The English colonies between New England and Virginia were religiously more disparate and more tolerant of that diversity. In these middle colonies *Presbyterians and Quakers, RCs and Lutherans, Jews and *Baptists, lived side by side. In the Spanish and French regions of North America, RCism remained the established Church.

The 18th cent. witnessed the consolidation and expansion of the Churches in the English colonies. The C of E, for example, tried to strengthen its position by supporting missionaries sent by the *SPG. RCs struggled to maintain the semblance of a sacramental life. Both Anglicans and RCs desperately needed resident bishops. The most significant religious event of the first half of the 18th cent. was the *Great Awakening, a series of religious revivals originating in isolated Dutch Reformed, *Congregational, and Presbyterian congregations in the 1720s and 1730s. At the beginning of the 1740s a general surge of religious activity swept through the English colonies, producing a spate of evangelical conversions and recommitments. George *Whitefield, then an Anglican priest from England, was the most celebrated itinerant preacher associated with the Awakening, Jonathan *Edwards of Massachusetts its foremost theologian. Gilbert Tennent (1703–64) led the revivals in the middle colonies, as did Samuel Davies (1723–61) and Shubal Stearns (1706–71) in the South. The 'New Light' movement, arising out of the Great Awakening, featured the necessity of a 'new birth', a describable spiritual experience of transforming grace. This evangelical principle provided grounds for an assault upon the traditional authority of the clergy and the integrity of the parish system by supporting lay exhorters and itinerant preachers. It also gave expanded religious opportunities to women and new impetus for Christianizing Blacks and Indians.

The Great Awakening was not without its critics. Drawing upon intellectual currents fed by the *Enlightenment, opponents charged that the excessive emotionalism and the divisive tendencies of the revivals were detrimental to religion and social order. These rationalists, adopting an *Arminian theological perspective, affirmed human capacity, the notion of progress, and the centrality of morality and virtue in the religious life. Later the same optimism about the moral order of the universe and an even sharper criticism of 'enthusiasm' informed the views of a small but articulate group of *Deists. Radical expressions of an anti-ecclesiastical and anticlerical variety surfaced in the writings of Thomas *Paine at the end of the 18th cent. The rationalists shared with the evangelicals a strong anti-Catholic and anti-episcopal bias.

The effects of the American Revolution (1776–83) upon the Churches were mixed. The Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and Baptists who enthusiastically supported the patriotic cause enjoyed some cultural advantage. The Anglicans, by contrast, were devastated by defections of clergy, the destruction of facilities, and general ill-will against them. The *Methodists experienced similar hostility because of their close association with Anglicanism and because of John *Wesley's counsel against rebellion. The peace Churches, incl. the Quakers and *Mennonites, suffered for their pacifism. The years of the War of Independence and the following decades were not prosperous times for the Churches, though they witnessed developments of importance for the future. The Anglicans secured the first American bishop with the consecration in 1784 of Samuel *Seabury, and the Protestant *Episcopal Church in the United States of America became an autonomous organization, no longer dependent on the C of E. The Methodists, who had held their first American Conference in 1773, decisively broke with Anglicanism when Wesley appointed a Superintendent for America in 1784. In the same year the RCs ceased to be dependent on the *Vicars Apostolic in England, acquiring a bishop of their own with the consecration in 1790 of John *Carroll (q.v.). The most significant direct result of the Revolution for the history of Christianity in the United States was the adoption of the new nation's Constitution with its Bill of Rights (1791) guaranteeing religious liberty. The First Amendment proscribed religious establishments (although they continued to exist on a state level as late as 1833) and articulated the principle of the free exercise of religion, thereby laying the foundation of the system of religious pluralism and for the further expansion of diversity within American Christianity.

The 19th cent. opened on a more positive note for the Churches, despite lingering fears that disestablishment would lead to irreligion and that Deism was making inroads into the population. The evangelical Churches experienced a new surge of revivalism at the same time that thousands of migrants were leaving the seaboard areas for the transappalachian regions. No portion of the new republic escaped the Second Great Awakening (1800–35). This evangelical movement flourished in the colleges of New England and the remote hamlets of the Northwest Territory, in the urban centres on the seaboard as well as in the backwoods of the SW frontier. The revivalists stimulated innovations or 'new measures' such as the use of the 'anxious bench' during protracted meetings and the gathering of rural *camp meetings. Ecstatic behaviour became commonplace. Theological change occurred, too, as evangelicalism, under the influence of Wesleyanism, adopted a more *Arminian perspective with strains of perfectionism and optimistic *Millenarianism. Lyman *Beecher, Peter Cartwright (1785–1872), and Charles G. *Finney were prominent revivalists. The Methodists and Baptists benefited most from this activity. The Awakening produced an informal evangelical alliance which remained a powerful religious and cultural force throughout the 19th cent.

An increasing stream of immigrants from N. and W. Europe added to the diversity and complexity of America's religious scene after 1820. Germans by thousands—RC, Lutheran, Reformed, and Jewish—left their homeland for the United States. Nearly a million Irish, most fervently RC, also arrived before 1860. The situation of the RC Church in America was transformed: in 1800 there had been *c.*50,000 RCs, too few clergy, and only one bishop (John Carroll, Bp. of Baltimore). By 1860 the RC Church was the largest single denomination (3.5 million members) in the nation. This rapid growth fanned the fears of 'nativist' Protestants who mounted an anti-Catholic drive. Lutheran and Reformed immigrants likewise prospered, but as outsiders they too faced pressures.

A remarkable burst of reformist activity occurred in the first half of the 19th cent. The vast expanse of unsettled territory and the large influx of immigrants stimulated efforts to 'Christianize' and civilize the young nation. Evangelicals formed voluntary associations to convert RCs, *Unitarians, and the unchurched. An elaborate network of local and state societies aimed at eradicating particular sins, such as intemperance, profanity, and sabbath-breaking, through the dissemination of Bibles and religious tracts, the education of children in Sunday Schools, and the legislation of morals. Some of the same reforming zeal was evident in the RC Church which sought to improve educational opportunities for the immigrants and to assist the poor. In 1808 Elizabeth Bayley Seton (1774–1821) established the Sisters of Charity, a teaching order. Liberal Protestants, incl. the Quakers, Unitarians, and Universalists, joined campaigns for peace, prison reform, and women's rights.

The United States proved a fertile seedbed for new religious movements. The principle of the 'free exercise' of religion, the presence of open land, and the energy of revivalism all contributed to the proliferation of such groups. Some were imported from abroad, such as the *Harmonists led by the German *Pietist George Rapp (1757–1847). Many more were indigenous. They often centred on charismatic leaders who laid claim to special revelations and chose patterns of life at odds with conventional mores, seeking economic independence and isolation from the 'world'. The *Shakers, founded by the English Ann Lee (*c.*1736–84), established celibate communities which accepted a male–female principle in the Deity and sexual equality. By contrast, the Perfectionists (or *Oneida Community), led by John H. Noyes (1811–86), called for community both of goods and of persons, the latter structured in a system of complex marriage. The 'Christians' (later *Disciples of Christ), followers of Barton Stone (1772–1844), Alexander *Campbell, and others, sought to restore primitive Christianity. The Latter-day Saints (*Mormons) accepted the authority of Joseph Smith (1805–44) as a prophet of God, the scriptural status of the Book of Mormon (1830), and the goal of the establishment of Zion on earth. The historic denominations viewed these new groups as heretical and often persecuted them.

No issue proved more divisive to Americans in the 19th cent. than racial *slavery, a problem with roots in the earliest days of colonization. Christians split over slavery and their religious obligations towards slaves. Some argued for freeing them; others justified enslavement both as having biblical sanction and as a means to Christianization. In the North free Blacks organized independent Churches, the first of which was the African Methodist Episcopal Church founded in 1816 by Richard Allen (1760–1831). In the South after 1830 the Churches ministered to the slaves in various ways, filling religious and social needs. The crisis over slavery came to a head in the middle of the century. By that time the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists had split over the conflict. The conclusion of the Civil War (1861–5) brought an end to racial slavery, but the failure of Reconstruction (1865–77) signalled the beginning of the system of racial segregation. After the war the *Black Churches continued to play a major socio-political role, at the same time nurturing a unique Afro-American heritage of spirituality in word, action, and song.

The period after the Civil War was marked by tremendous social change. The agrarian South, devastated by the war, struggled slowly to rebuild. In the North urbanization moved forward rapidly, fed by the growth of industrialization and by waves of new immigrants, mainly from S. and E. Europe, over 23 million arriving between 1865 and 1910. These included large numbers of RCs, Jews, and *Orthodox Christians. Poverty, crime, and other problems plagued urban residents, challenging society and the Churches to help. Some religious leaders proposed adapting evangelicalism to the new setting, establishing 'rescue missions' or organizing urban revivals. In this vein the revivalist Dwight L. *Moody utilized Sunday Schools and the *YMCA. Proponents of the Gospel of Wealth such as Russell Conwell (1843–1925) identified individual effort as the key to success. By contrast, advocates of a '*Social Gospel', including the theologian Walter *Rauschenbusch, criticized the individualistic ethic of capitalism, calling upon the Churches to 'Christianize' the social order. The solutions proposed by the Churches varied widely, from the radical application of the '*Golden Rule' to support for trade unions, socialism, and settlement houses, such as Hull House founded by Jane Addams (1860–1935). RC supporters of social Christianity drew upon the teachings of Pope *Leo XIII, channelling their efforts through Church-sponsored charities.

Modernization was accompanied by an intellectual revolution. Modern science, symbolized by the publication of Charles *Darwin's Origin of Species (1859), contested old ways of thinking about the universe. Protestant Modernists, such as the theologian Shailer Mathews (1863–1914), though few in number, sought to embrace science and use it as a measure of the religious traditions, including the Bible. Conservative Protestants, led by theologians at Princeton Theological Seminary, rejected the new science in the name of tradition, formulating their position on the basis of *Baconian science, the notion of biblical inerrancy, and assumptions drawn from common-sense realism. These Conservatives, later identified as *Fundamentalists, became embroiled in ecclesiastical controversies, incl. celebrated heresy trials in the Presbyterian Church. Protestant Liberalism, also known as the 'New Theology' or Progressive Orthodoxy, anticipated in the writings of Horace *Bushnell, attempted a reconciliation of science and tradition in support of an optimistic perspective on human nature and progress, emphasizing the immanence of God. There were few RC *Modernists in the United States, for the American Church was firmly in the control of doctrinal conservatives. The condemnation of Modernism by *Pius X in 1907, following the Papal condemnation of '*Americanism' in 1899, stifled liberal activity even further.

Changing socio-economic patterns in modern America transformed the role of many middle-class women, reshaping popular ideas about the family and contributing to the 'feminization' of the Churches. As economic production moved outside the home, the patriarchal household gave way to the notion of the domestic world as woman's proper sphere. Religion was increasingly viewed as the particular province of women who were regarded as morally superior to men and who were responsible for the spiritual nurture of children and the moral rehabilitation of men. The Churches became the special forum for women, and the clergy, experiencing their own crisis of authority, directed greater attention to them. Religious societies, convents, and female schools provided unique opportunities for sisterhood, as did some sectarian groups. Large numbers of religiously motivated women organized campaigns within the Churches against slavery and alcoholism and for women's rights.

The expanding urban environment proved no less productive of new religious movements than had the frontier. The stress and uncertainties of the situation nurtured sects. Advocates of the New Thought movement, echoing Transcendentalist ideas, affirmed the power of constructive thinking. *Christian Science, founded by Mary Baker Eddy (1820–1910), provided its followers, predominantly women, with an idealistic metaphysical outlook and an antidote to the sense of ill-being in its practice of mental healing set out in Science and Health (1875). *Seventh-day Adventism, led by Ellen Harmon White (1827–1915), sought an answer in traditional eschatology and dietary regimens. The followers of Charles Taze *Russell, later called *Jehovah's Witnesses, found apocalyptic signs of an impending destruction of the world from which only members of their organization would be spared. *Holiness and *Pentecostal Churches arose in scattered locations, both urban and rural, in response to a perceived loss of spiritual vitality. They stressed the possibility of sinlessness and the restoration of the ecstatic patterns of the primitive Church. At the same time the Latter-day Saints were prospering in the western inter-mountain region as they accommodated to American society, renouncing the practice of polygamy and the creation of an earthly kingdom. These sectarian developments both fuelled ecclesiastical conflict and energized the Churches.

The religious and cultural hegemony exercised by Protestantism during the 19th cent.—an 'unofficial establishment'—was eroded in the early decades of the 20th cent. The rapid increase of the RC, Orthodox, Jewish, and sectarian communities; the theological divisions within Protestantism itself, esp. the Modernist–Fundamentalist struggle which gained notoriety during the Scopes Trial of 1925 when the teaching of evolution in state schools was tested; the failure of the Interchurch World Movement, a sweeping evangelical strategy for benevolence and mission; the repeal of the constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcohol after the failure of Prohibition as a social and moral experiment—these developments contributed to the loss of Protestant authority and influence. Additionally, the First World War and subsequent economic depression destroyed the cultural basis for optimism which had fuelled religious and social movements in the 19th cent.

In the early decades of the 20th cent. a growing effort to overcome divisions among denominations drew upon the legacy of earlier co-operative international missionary undertakings, incl. the Student Volunteer Movement (1888), and upon wide support for the expanding global involvement of America justified in terms of a 'Manifest Destiny'. Representatives from liberal Protestant denominations formed the Federal Council of Churches in 1908, a step encouraged by the growing worldwide interest in Christian unity. The American Council of Christian Churches (1941) and the National Association of Evangelicals (1942) were formed as alternative federations of conservative Protestant Churches. Ecclesiastical mergers among Presbyterians, Methodists, and Lutherans took place around the middle of the cent. After the formation of the *World Council of Churches in 1948, the Federal Council was reorganized into the National Council of Churches (1950). Although it expanded to include Orthodox Christian bodies, which by 1950 numbered *c.*2 million members in America, it remained predominantly liberal Protestant. The earliest representatives of Orthodoxy in the United States were primarily of Russian and Greek background. After the Second World War large numbers of immigrants from E. Europe and the Middle East brought other branches of Orthodoxy and also members of the *Oriental Orthodox Churches to America.

By 1950 the United States had recovered from the 'Great Depression' and had emerged from the Second World War (a military effort which the Churches had supported vigorously), only to find itself involved in a new conflict in Korea and in the larger East–West 'Cold War'. During the 1950s organized religion prospered in America. It became fashionable for middle-class Americans in the suburbs to attend church. The RC Church, for example, became a powerful institutional force in American life. Led by a hierarchy noted for its practicality, the Church prospered. Although it retained its theological conservatism and its traditional loyalty to Rome, these factors no longer antagonized Americans to the same degree as they did earlier. The election of the RC John Kennedy to the Presidency in 1960 was a measure of that change. Conservative evangelicalism experienced a resurgence during this period. Billy *Graham, its most prominent revivalist, rose to influence by his effective use of the media. Rivalling him was Oral Roberts (b. 1918), a Pentecostal faith healer. In Protestant seminaries another kind of reassessment was under way, influenced by European theological developments. Neo-orthodox theologians, including R. *Niebuhr and his brother H. R. *Niebuhr, re-examined the assumptions of Liberalism, calling for a more realistic assessment of human nature and reaffirming traditional Reformation emphases in the light of modern developments. During the 1950s popular religion prospered too, as the teachings of Norman Vincent Peale (1898–1993) on the power of 'positive thinking' testifies. In 1954 the phrase 'under God' was added to the national pledge of allegiance.

The prosperity of the Churches during the 1950s contrasted sharply with the situation in the 1960s, a time of radical change in American society and among the denominations. Social conflict developed over the involvement of the United States in the Vietnam War, the role of the government in the civil rights movement, the legitimacy of the youth culture, and the general shift towards a more secular life-style. The RC Church experienced revolutionary changes of its own, leaving behind patterns dominant since the Council of *Trent. The Second *Vatican Council (1962–5) seemed to point to a new way of being a Catholic, emphasizing the responsibility of individuals to follow the dictates of conscience, renewing and altering liturgical practice, encouraging ecumenical contacts, and generally promoting a climate for questioning in a less authoritative Church. Among American RC theologians none was more influential in anticipating these developments than John Courtney Murray (1904–67). A charismatic movement with similarities to Protestant Pentecostalism and a revival of mystical spirituality associated with Thomas *Merton also developed within the Church. Activist priests and nuns represented the Church in the social arena. Radical theologians among the Protestants celebrated the onset of the new secularism as a liberating force. The Baptist theologian Harvey Cox (b. 1929) extolled the virtues of the new urban environment and its revelatory possibilities. Others spoke of the '*death of God' in a world come of age, a world where traditional theological language was no longer meaningful. Still others called for a 'new morality' combined with responsible ethical decisions. These voices did not gain wide support among the Protestant Churches which were experiencing difficult times on an institutional level, suffering losses both in membership and finance. Ecumenical efforts among mainline Protestant Churches, which during this decade included the *Consultation on Church Union (COCU) supported by nine denominations, surged and then ultimately faltered. The more conservative Churches (notably the Southern Baptists), however, continued to grow, as did sectarian communities. The most important religious figure was Martin Luther *King, whose leadership of the civil rights drive symbolized the continuing commitment of Black Christians to the social aims of Christianity.

Increasing conflict characterized the Churches in the United States after the 1960s. Conservative and liberal factions organized themselves for both religious and political action. Through organizations such as the Moral Majority headed by the Baptist television evangelist Jerry Falwell (b. 1933), Fundamentalists carried their programme to the electorate. The agenda of the Religious Right included support for prayer and Bible reading in the state schools and for 'traditional' family values as well as opposition to *abortion, to equal rights for women and homosexuals, to the teaching of evolution in the schools, and to pornography. Television preachers, dubbed the 'electronic church', disseminated these ideas widely (see BROADCASTING, RELIGIOUS). Conservative leadership in the RC Church joined in support of some of these causes, most notably opposition to abortion and equal rights for women. *Feminist Theology became a potent influence. The idea of ordaining women, practised in some Protestant bodies for many years and in the Episcopal Church since 1977, remained a matter of controversy among RCs, as did a host of post-Vatican II developments. Liberal Protestant Churches addressed themselves to issues involving freedom of choice, gender, minority rights, and nuclear disarmament. *Liberation theologians, such as James Cone (b. 1938) and Mary Daly (b. 1928) spoke to these issues across denominational lines. During this period White denominations in America drew back from involvement in the flagging civil rights movement, leaving Black Churches relatively isolated in the quest for full citizenship. Sectarian groups, with some exceptions, drifted closer to the positions of the older traditional communities. Neverthless, religious pluralism in America became more diverse than ever before, esp. with the growth of religious traditions of E. origin as well as with continuing interest in Native American religions and the occult. Christianity no longer exercises the hegemony in American life that it did before the middle of the 20th cent.

The literature has grown as a result of expanding and changing interests. Earlier concerns with denominational and intellectual history and with Protestantism, esp. Puritanism in New England and its offshoots, have been complemented by new approaches employing social history as well as regional, thematic, and comparative studies.

Instructive general surveys inc. S. E. Ahlstrom, A Religious History of the American People (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1972); R. T. Handy, A History of the Churches in the United States and Canada (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1976), pp. 1–115, 136–227, 262–343, and 377–427; C. L. Albanese, America: Religions and Religion (Belmont, Calif. [1981]). M. A. Noll, A History of Christianity in the United States and Canada (1992) presents a sociological and cultural approach. On particular denominations, J. P. Dolan, The American Catholic Experience: A History from Colonial Times to the Present (Garden City, NY, 1985); P. Gleason, Keeping the Faith: American Catholicism Past and Present (Notre Dame, Ind. [1987]); E. S. Bucke (ed.), The History of American Methodism (3 vols., New York, 1964); F. A. Norwood, The Story of American Methodism: A History of the United Methodists and their Relations (Nashville and New York, 1974); A. R. Wentz, A Basic History of Lutheranism in America (Philadelphia, 1955); E. T. Thompson, Presbyterians in the South (3 vols., Richmond, Va. [1963–73]); R. E. Miller, The Larger Hope (2 vols., Boston, 1979–86 [on the Universalists]), and D. Robinson, The Unitarians and the Universalists (Denominations in America, 1; Westport, Conn., and London, 1985). See also under individual denominations mentioned in the article. E. S. Gaustad, Historical Atlas of Religion in America (New York [1962]; rev. edn. [1976]); M. E. Marty, Pilgrims in their own Land: 500 Years of Religion in America (Boston, 1984); J. W. Smith and A. L. Jamison (eds.), Religion in American Life (Princeton Studies in American Civilization, no. 5; vols. 1, 2, and 4 in 2 parts, 1961), esp. vol. 4 (N. R. Burr, A Critical Bibliography of Religion in America). Documentary histories incl. H. S. Smith, R. T. Handy, and L. A. Loetscher (eds.), American Christianity: An Historical Interpretation with Representative Documents (2 vols., New York [1960–3]); E. S. Gaustad (ed.), A Documentary History of Religion in America (2 vols., Grand Rapids, Mich. [1982–3]); J. T. Ellis (ed.), Documents of American Catholic History (Milwaukee [1956]; rev. edn., 2 vols., Chicago, 1967); M. C. Sernett (ed.), Afro-American Religious History: A Documentary Witness (Durham, NC, 1985); and R. R. Ruether and R. S. Keller (eds.), Women and Religion in America (3 vols., San Francisco, etc. [1981–6]).

Representative publications in the general chronological order of topics are C. H. Lippy and others, Christianity Comes to the Americas, 1492–1776 (New York, 1992); P. [G. E.] Miller, The New England Mind: The Seventeenth Century (New York, 1939); C. E. Hambrick-Stowe, The Practice of Piety: Puritan Devotional Disciplines in Seventeenth-Century New England (Chapel Hill, NC [1982]); D. S. Lovejoy, Religious Enthusiasm in the New World: Heresy to Revolution (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1985); S. Bercovitch, The American Jeremiad (Madison, Wis., 1978); J. Butler, Power, Authority, and the Origins of American Denominational Order: The English Churches in the Delaware Valley 1680–1730 (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, 68, pt. 2; Philadelphia, 1978); A. [E.] Heimert, Religion and the American Mind from the Great Awakening to the Revolution (Cambridge, Mass., 1966); R. Isaac, The Transformation of Virginia 1740–1790 (Chapel Hill, NC, 1982), passim; J. D. Marietta, The Reformation of American Quakerism, 1748–1783 (Philadelphia [1984]); S. A. Marini, Radical Sects of Revolutionary New England (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1982); H. F. May, The Enlightenment in America (New York, 1976); S. E. Mead, The Lively Experiment: The Shaping of Christianity in America (ibid. [1963]); J. B. Boles, The Great Revival 1787–1805: The Origins of the Southern Evangelical Mind (Lexington, Ky. [1972]); E. B. Holifield, The Gentlemen Theologians: American Theology in Southern Culture 1795–1860 (Durham, NC, 1978); W. R. Cross, The Burned-over District: The Social and Intellectual History of Enthusiastic Religion in Western New York, 1800–1850 (Ithaca, NY, 1950); P. E. Johnson, A Shopkeeper's Millennium: Society and Revivals in Rochester, New York, 1815–1837 (New York, 1978); J. P. Dolan, Catholic Revivalism: The American Experience 1830–1900 (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1978]); R. J. Carwardine, Evangelicals and Politics in Antebellum America (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1993); D. G. Mathews, Religion in the Old South (Chicago and London, 1977); A. J. Raboteau, Slave Religion: The 'Invisible Institution' in the Antebellum South (New York, 1978); C. L. Albanese, Corresponding Motion: Transcendental Religion and the New America (Philadelphia, 1977), passim; B. Kuklich, Churchmen and Philosophers from Jonathan Edwards to John Dewey (New Haven, Conn. [1985]); C. R. Wilson, Baptized in Blood: The Religion of the Lost Cause 1865–1920 (Athens, Ga. [1980]); R. M. Miller and T. D. Marzik (eds.), Immigrants and Religion in Urban America (Philadelphia, 1977); A. I. Abell, American Catholicism and Social Action: A Search for Social Justice, 1865–1950 (Garden City, NY, 1960); E. R. Sandeen, The Roots of Fundamentalism: British and American Millenarianism 1800–1930 (Chicago and London, 1970); S. Gottschalk, The Emergence of Christian Science in American Religious Life (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1973]); R. T. Handy, Undermined Establishment: Church-State Relations in America 1880–1920 (Princeton, NJ [1991]); W. R. Hutchison, The Modernist Impulse in American Protestantism (Cambridge, Mass., 1976; Oxford, 1982); G. M. Marsden, Fundamentalism and American Culture: The Shaping of Twentieth-Century Evangelicalism: 1870–1925 (New York and Oxford, 1980); P. A. Carter, The Spiritual Crisis of the Age (DeKalb, Ill., 1971); R. D. Cross, The Emergence of Liberal Catholicism in America (Cambridge, Mass., 1958); R. M. Anderson, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism (New York and Oxford, 1979); S. S. Hill, Southern Churches in Crisis (New York [1967]); D. J. O'Brien, American Catholics and Social Reform: The New Deal Years (New York, 1968); I. I. Zaretsky and M. P. Leone (eds.), Religious Movements in Contemporary America (Princeton, NJ [1974]); M. E. Marty, A Nation of Behavers (Chicago and London [1976]); D. F. Wells and J. D. Woodbridge (eds.), The Evangelicals: What They Believe, Who They Are, Where They are Changing (Nashville [1975]); M. J. Weaver, New Catholic Women: A Contemporary Challenge to Traditional Religious Authority (San Francisco, 1985); D. W. Lotz and others (eds.), Altered Landscapes: Christianity in America, 1935–1985. Essays in Honor of Robert T. Handy (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1989]); S. Bruce, The Rise and Fall of the New Christian Right: Conservative Protestant Politics in America 1978–1988 (Oxford, 1988).

Examples of thematic interpretations incl. R. L. Moore, Religious Outsiders and the Making of Americans (New York, 1986); W. G. McLoughlin, Revivals, Awakenings, and Reform: An Essay on Religion and Social Change in America 1607–1977 (Chicago and London [1978]); P. W. Williams, Popular Religion in America: Symbolic Change and the Modernization Process in Historical Perspective (Englewood Cliffs, NJ [1980]); A. Porterfield, Feminine Spirituality in America from Sarah Edwards to Martha Graham (Philadelphia, 1980); J. W. James (ed.), Women in American Religion (ibid., 1980); J. J. Kenneally, The History of American Catholic Women (New York, 1990). N. O. Hatch and M. A. Noll (eds.), The Bible in America: Essays in Cultural History (New York and Oxford, 1982); H. W. Bowden, American Indians and Christian Missions: Studies in Cultural Conflict (Chicago and London [1981]); E. L. Tuveson, Redeemer Nation: The Idea of America's Millennial Role (Chicago and London, 1968); E. A. Smith, Religious Liberty in the United States: The Development of Church State Thought since the Revolutionary Era (Philadelphia [1972]); L. I. Sweet (ed.), The Evangelical Tradition in America (Macon, Ga. [1984]).

There is material on the contemporary situation in F. S. Mead, Handbook of Denominations in the United States (New York [1951]; 7th edn., Nashville [1980]); Yearbook of the American Churches (ibid., 1933–72); Yearbook of the American and Canadian Churches (1973 ff.); J. G. Melton, The Encyclopedia of American Religions (2 vols., Wilmington, NC [1978]). Church History (Scottdale, Pa., 1932 ff.), Journal of the American Academy of Religion (Philadelphia, 1957 ff. [previously called Journal of the National Association of Biblical Instructors (Wolcott, NY, 1933–6) and Journal of Bible and Religion (ibid., 1937–57)], and American Quarterly (Philadelphia, 1949 ff.) carry scholarly articles and reviews on Christianity in the USA. C. H. Lippy and P. W. Williams (eds.), Encyclopedia of Religious Experience: Studies of Traditions and Movements (3 vols., New York [1988]); D. G. Reid and others (eds.), Dictionary of Christianity in America (Downers Grove, Ill. [1990]).

unitive way. The third and final stage of the spiritual life. See PURGATIVE, ILLUMINATIVE, AND UNITIVE WAYS.

Univers, L'. The organ of the violently *Ultramontane opinions of Louis *Veuillot, who took over its editorship in 1843. Though many Catholics were offended by its virulent tone, it forced the anticlerical French Government to make some concessions to the Church, esp. in the much-debated issue of religious education. In later days its claims for the Church and the Papacy exceeded those commonly defended even at Rome. The paper was suppressed by the French Government in 1860 for publishing *Pius IX's encyclical Nullis certe, but it was revived in 1867, only to be again suppressed in 1874.

Universalism. (1) The teaching of certain of the later Hebrew prophets (e.g. *Deutero-Isaiah, *Jonah) that God's purposes covered not only the Jewish race but also at least some people of other nations.

(2) The doctrine, also known as ἀποκατάστασις, that hell is in essence purgative and therefore temporary and that all intelligent beings will therefore in the end be saved. See APOCATASTASIS.

universals. In metaphysics, general concepts, representing the common elements belonging to individuals of the same genus or species. The medieval doctrine of universals traces its origin to Greek philosophy, esp. to *Porphyry's 'Introduction to the Categories of Aristotle', which poses three questions: whether the universals exist substantially or only in the human mind; if the former, whether they have bodies or are disembodied beings; and lastly, whether they exist separated from the objects of sense or only in them. These problems were combined with the question treated by *Boethius whether the universals are things (res) or only names (voces, nomina), and acc. to the answer given philosophers subscribed to the systems of either *Realism or *Nominalism (qq.v.) which were developed in manifold variations during the Middle Ages. Among the best-known representatives of early Realism are John Scottus *Erigena, St *Anselm, and *William of Champeaux; in the 13th cent. St *Thomas Aquinas and *Duns Scotus developed a doctrine which has come to be known as 'Moderate Realism'. Among the Nominalist opponents of the earlier forms of Realism were *Roscelin and *Abelard, whilst the Realist system of the 13th cent. was attacked by *William of Ockham, Gabriel *Biel, and others.

Universities' Mission to Central Africa. See UMCA.

Universities Tests Act 1871. By this Act it was laid down that no person taking any degree at *Oxford, *Cambridge or *Durham University other than a degree in divinity, holding lay academical or collegiate office, should henceforward be required to subscribe any article or formulary of faith.

Unknowing, The Cloud of. See CLOUD OF UNKNOWING, THE.

unleavened bread. See BREAD, LEAVENED AND UNLEAVENED.

Upper Room. See CENACULUM.

Uppsala. Long after the introduction of Christianity into *Sweden by St *Anskar, Old Uppsala (now a neighbouring town to the north) continued a centre of pagan religious rites. Old Uppsala Church was built on and contains remains of a pagan temple, probably that mentioned by Adam of Bremen (d. *c.*1085). In 1164 Pope *Alexander III made it the head of an ecclesiastical province, separate from *Lund. The see was transferred from Old Uppsala to its present site (Aros) under Abp. Folke (1274–7). The cathedral, still the largest church in Sweden, dates from 1287 to 1435. The archbishop, who from the middle of the 15th cent. until the Reformation bore the title of 'Primate of Sweden' ('Primas Sueciae'), is still accorded a certain primacy, though his position is now only that of a 'primus inter pares'. The university, modelled on that of *Bologna, was founded in 1477, and became in the 19th cent. the home of a liberal and 'Low Church' theology as contrasted with the orthodoxy of Lund. Among its most notable bishops of recent times was N. *Söderblom (d. 1931). The *World Council of Churches held its fourth Assembly in Uppsala in 1968.

The 'Historia Pontificum Metropolitanae Ecclesiae Upsalensis' of Johannes Magnus Gothus (Rome, 1560) is conveniently pr. in the Scriptores Rerum Svecicarum Medii Aevi, 3 (pt. 2; Uppsala, 1871), pp. 1–97, with other material pp. 97–102. G. Kallstenius, Blad ur Uppsalasangens Historia (Stockholm, 1913). N. J. and E. Söderberg, Studier till Uppsala Domkyrkas Historia (3 pts., Kyrkohistoriska Föreningen Skrifter, Ser. 1, Arg. 35 and 36; 1936–7). Ö. Sjöholm (ed.), Uppsala Domkyrka (Uppsala, 1982), with summaries in Eng. C. Annerstedt, Uppsala Universitets Historia [1477–1792] (3 vols. in 6 parts, 1877–1914, + register by E. Colliander, 1931; in Swedish); S. Lindroth, A History of Uppsala University 1477–1977 (Stockholm, 1976). H. Lundh (ed.), Uppsala Stads Historia (3 vols., Uppsala, 1953–8), esp. 1, pp. 369–427; 2, pp. 220–41; and 3, pp. 409–17. G. Armfelt in CE 15 (1912), pp. 207 f., s.v. 'Upsala, Ancient See of'; K. Hoeber, ibid., p. 208, s.v.

'Upsala, University of'; S. Göransson in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 475 f., s.v. 'Uppsala, Royal University of'. See also works cited under SWEDEN, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Urban II (*c.*1035–99), Pope from 1088. Odo of Lagery studied at *Reims under St *Bruno, who afterwards became his most trusted adviser. Having early been canon and archdeacon, *c.*1070 he entered the monastery of *Cluny, where he became prior. He was later called to Rome by *Gregory VII, who made him Cardinal Bp. of Ostia in 1080. Sent as Papal legate to France and Germany, he held a synod at Quedlinburg in Saxony in 1085, at which the *antipope, Guibert of Ravenna (Clement III), was anathematized. Elected to the Papacy in 1088, he expressed his intention of adhering closely to the principles of Gregory VII, which he did, though in a more measured and diplomatic form than his predecessor. The three great difficulties of his pontificate were the antipope, the interference of secular princes in the question of *investiture, and the simony and incontinence of the clergy. Owing to the presence in the city of Guibert and his followers, Urban could not at first enter Rome. He held a Council at Melfi in 1089 which promulgated 16 canons against simony, lay investiture, and clerical marriage. In the same year his position was temporarily strengthened by the marriage of his ardent supporter, Matilda of Tuscany, with Guelph V of Bavaria, which enabled Urban to enter Rome and expel Guibert. The latter was brought back, however, by *Henry IV in 1090, and Urban was once more an exile in S. Italy. But from 1093 Henry's power began to weaken, esp. through the defection of his son Conrad, who went over to the Pope and was crowned King of Italy. In the same year Urban re-entered Rome and took possession of the *Lateran in 1094. In 1095 he held two Councils at Piacenza and *Clermont, whose chief object was the general reform of the Church, esp. on the subjects of simony and clerical marriage. At Clermont the '*Truce of God' was proclaimed a law of the Church, and Philip I of France, who had put away his queen Bertha and married Bertrada, wife of the Count of Anjou, was anathematized. Having received an appeal for help against the Seljuk Turks from the Greek Emperor, Alexius I Comnenus, Urban proclaimed the First *Crusade. His call, which was received with enthusiasm by the people, initiated the great medieval Crusading movement that was to become a source of strength and prestige to the Papacy. Having returned to Rome in 1096 he held a synod at the Lateran and, in 1098, one at Bari with the object of healing the E. schism. At the latter St *Anselm defended the *Filioque clause against the Greeks. Urban died in 1099 before the news of the capture of *Jerusalem by the Crusaders could reach him. His cult was sanctioned in 1881. Feast day, 29 or 30 July.

304 of his letters are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 151. 283–552. Jaffé, 1, pp. 657–701, and 2, pp. 713 and 752 f. Life by Peter of Pisa in LP (Duchesne), 2 (1892), pp. 293 f. R. Somerville, The Councils of Urban II, 1: Decreta Claromentensia (Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, Suppl. 1; Amsterdam, 1972). A. Becker, Papst Urban II. (1088–1099) (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae Historica, 19; 2 vols., 1964–88). B. Leib, Rome, Kiev et Byzance à la fin du XI^e siècle: Rapports religieux des Latins et des Gréco-Russes sous le pontificat d'Urbain II (1924). H. Fuhrmann, Papst Urban II. und der Stand der Regularkanoniker (Sb. (Bayr.), 1984, Heft 2). W. Holtzmann, 'Die Unionsverhandlungen zwischen Kaiser Alexios I und Papst Urban II im Jahre 1089', BZ 28 (1928), pp. 38–66. R. Crozet, 'Le Voyage d'Urbain II et ses négotiations avec le clergé de France (1095–1096)', Revue historique, 175 (1937), pp. 271–310. Mann, 7 (1910), pp. 245–346; A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 8 (1946), pp. 199–337, both with bibl. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 337–465. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2269–85, s.v. 'Urbain II'; G. Mollat in EC 12 (1954), cols. 905 f., s.v. 'Urbano II'. See also works cited under CRUSADES.

Urban V (1309/10–70), Pope from 1362. Guillaume de Grimoard, born at Grisac in Languedoc of a noble family, became a *Benedictine monk at the priory of Chirac and studied at *Paris and *Avignon. After ordination, he taught canon law at Montpellier and Avignon and later became Vicar General at Clermont and Uzès. In 1352 Clement VI named him Abbot of St-Germain d'Auxerre and entrusted him with several legations in Italy; in 1361 he was appointed Abbot of St-Victor at Marseilles; and in 1362 was elected Pope. In many ways the best of the Avignon Popes, Urban seriously undertook the reform of the Church, esp. with regard to the distribution of benefices. He made peace with Barnabo Visconti in 1364, and endeavoured to suppress the condottieri in France and Italy, but without success. His plans for a Crusade against the Turks, despite the temporary occupation of Alexandria by Peter de Lusignan in 1365, came to nothing. In preparation for a return to Rome, Urban had already appointed a separate Bp. of Avignon on 12 Dec. 1363. After Cardinal Albornoz had reconquered the States of the Church, Urban, encouraged by the Roman Emperor, Charles IV, went to Italy in 1367, disregarding the remonstrances of the French court and cardinals, who feared the loss of their influence on the *Curia. He was enthusiastically received by the Roman people and began at once to restore the badly neglected city and to establish discipline among clergy and laity. In 1368 he crowned the consort of Charles IV Empress, and in 1369 received the Greek Emperor, John V Palaeologus, into communion. In the same year Perugia revolted and war broke out between England and France, two facts which added weight to the wish of Urban's advisers to go back to Avignon. Against the admonitions of St *Bridget, who foretold his early death if he were to leave Rome, he returned to France in 1370, where he died soon after. Urban was a great benefactor of the universities and generously assisted poor scholars. His cult was confirmed in 1870. Feast day, 19 Dec.

A. Fierens and C. Tihon (eds.), Lettres d'Urbain V, 1362–1370 (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, 9 and 15; 1928–32); P. Lecacheux and G. Mollat (eds.), Lettres secrètes et curiales du pape Urbain V (1362–1370) se rapportant à la France (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, sér. 3, 1955); M. Dubrulle (ed.), Les Registres d'Urbain V (ibid., 1926 ff.; fasc. 1 only pub. to date); M.-H. Laurent, M. Hayez, and others (eds.), Urbain V (1362–1370): Lettres communes (ibid., 12 vols., 1954–89); D. T. Leccisotti (ed.), Documenti Vaticani per la storia di Montecassino: Pontificato di Urbano V (Miscellanea Cassinese, 28; Montecassino, 1952); J. Prochno (ed.), Acta Urbani V. (1362–1370) (Monumenta Vaticana Res Gestas Bohemicas illustrantia, 3; 1944; index by V. Jenšovská, 1954); A. L. Tăutu (ed.), Acta Urbani PP. V (1362–1370) (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes, 3rd ser. 11; 1964). A. Fierens (ed.), Suppliques d'Urbain V, 1362–1370 (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, 7; 1914). É. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat, 1 (1914), pp. 349–414. Modern Lives by J. B. Magnan (Paris, 1862), M. Chaillon ('Les Saints', 1911), E. de Lanouvelle (Paris, 1928), and P. Armagier (Marseilles, 1987). J. M. Prou, Étude sur les relations politiques du pape Urbain V avec les rois de France Jean II et Charles V (Bibliothèque des Hautes Études, 76; 1888). J. P. Kirsch, Die Rückkehr der Päpste Urban V und Gregor XI von Avignon nach Rom (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, 6; 1898), pp. 1–165. É. Delaruelle, 'La Translation des reliques de saint Thomas d'Aquin à Toulouse (1369) et la politique universitaire d'Urbain V', Bulletin de Littérature ecclésiastique, 56 (1955), pp. 129–46. J. Gill, SJ, 'Pope Urban V (1362–1370) and the Greeks of Crete', OCP 39 (1973), pp. 461–8. M. and A.-M. Hayez, 'Juifs d'Avignon au tribunal de la cour temporelle sous Urbain V', Provence Historique, 23, fasc. 93–4 (1973), pp. 165–73. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (10th edn., 1965), pp. 116–29, with bibl.; Eng. tr. (from 9th edn. of 1949; 1963), pp. 52–8. N. Housely, The Avignon Papacy and the Crusades, 1305–1378 (Oxford, 1986), esp. pp. 40–6, 77 f., 139 f., 185 f., and 248–50. G. Mollat in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2295–302, s.v. 'Urbain V', with extensive bibl. See also works cited under AVIGNON.

Urban VI (1318–89), Pope from 8 Apr. 1378. Bartolommeo Prignano became Abp. of Acerenza in 1363 and was translated to Bari in 1377. On the death of *Gregory XI (1378), under whom he had been head of the Papal chancery, he was elected Pope under pressure from the Roman populace, who demanded an Italian. Hitherto he had been an ecclesiastic noted for his austerity and his aptitude for affairs, but his pontificate became a series of grave imprudences and extravagances, frequently attributed to partial mental derangement. During the first months of his reign he estranged the cardinals by his violent and overbearing manner, his irritation culminating in the threat to establish an Italian majority in the Sacred College. The French members, therefore, in Aug. 1378 announced the nullity of the election on account of its having been performed under duress, and in Sept., by electing Clement VII (Robert of Geneva) as antipope, began the *Great Schism in the W. Among Clement's adherents was Queen Joanna of Naples, whom Urban excommunicated (1380), putting in her place Charles of Durazzo. With him, too, he soon began to quarrel, and personally led an expedition against him during which he was almost captured (1383–4). After his escape, Urban had six of his cardinals tortured and five of them executed for conspiracy. From that time the conquest of Naples became his chief preoccupation, but various attempted expeditions came to nothing. He appointed the *Holy Year to be celebrated every 33 years and on 6 Apr. 1389 extended the Feast of the *Visitation of the BVM to the whole Catholic Church (decree pub. by Boniface IX, 9 Nov. 1389).

The principal authority is *Dietrich of Niem (d. 1418), De Schismate, bk. 1 (ed. G. Erler, Leipzig, 1890), pp. 7–123. 'Aktenstücke zur Geschichte des Papstes Urban VI' mitgeteilt von H. B. Sauerland, Hist. J. 14 (1893), pp. 820–32. L. Macfarlane, 'An English Account of the Election of Urban VI, 1378', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 26 (1953), pp. 75–83, incl. text. O. Přerovsky, L'elezione di Urbano VI e l'insorgere dello scisma d'Occidente (Miscellanea della Società Romana di Storia Patria, 20; 1960). M. Seidlmayer, Die Anfänge des grossen abendländischen Schismas (Spanische Forschungen der Görresgesellschaft, Reihe 2, Band 5; Munster, 1940). S. Fodale, La Politica Napoletana di Urbano VI [1973]. W. Brandmüller, 'Zur Frage nach der Gültigkeit der Wahl Urbans VI.', Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, 6 (1974), pp. 78–120, repr. in id., Papst und Konzil im Grossen Schisma (1378–1431) (Paderborn, 1990), pp. 1–41. M. Dykmans, SJ, 'La troisième élection du pape Urbain VI', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 15 (1977), pp. 217–64. M. Harvey, 'The Case for Urban VI in England to 1390', in J. Favier and others, Genèse et débuts du Grand Schisme d'Occident (Colloques Internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, no. 586; 1980), pp. 541–60, and other papers in this vol. Pastor, 1 (1891), pp. 117–37. G. Mollat in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2302–5, s.v. 'Urbain VI', with detailed bibl. See also works cited under GREAT SCHISM (2).

Urban VIII (1568–1644), Pope from 1623. Maffeo *Barberini, descendant of one of the oldest Florentine families, distinguished himself early by his literary activities. Having been twice Papal Nuncio in France he became titular Abp. of *Nazareth in 1604, Cardinal in 1606, and Bp. of Spoleto in 1608. In 1617 *Paul V appointed him legate of *Bologna and prefect of the Segnatura di Giustizia. He was elected in 1623, and, though essentially a 'political' Pope, was a zealous promoter of ecclesiastical reforms. By canonizing and beatifying a number of saints, e.g. Elizabeth of Portugal (1625) and Francis *Borgia (1624), and by approving new religious orders such as the *Visitation (1626) and St *Vincent de Paul's *Lazarists (1632), he encouraged the religious life. He fostered missionary efforts by founding the Urban College of *Propaganda in 1627 and in the same year gave its final form to the bull '*In coena Domini' which consisted of a number of excommunications against heretics and others, ordered to be read on every *Maundy Thursday. His decrees on *canonization (1625; confirmed by brief of 1634) still have a place in the present law, and the revisions he introduced into the *Breviary in 1632 remained in force till the Breviary Reform of *Pius X (1912). He also revised the *Missal and the *Pontifical and much reduced the number of *Feasts of Obligation (1642). Under him G. *Galilei was condemned for the second time (1633), and the '*Augustinus' of C. O. *Jansen declared heretical by the bull 'In eminenti' of 1642. Urban, who was much interested in military matters, had St Angelo and Civitavecchia fortified and built the new Fort Urban. From 1625 he favoured the policy of Cardinal *Richelieu against the House of Habsburg and deprived the Catholic League of sufficient subsidies against the Protestant powers, an attitude that earned him the unfounded reproach of sympathizing with *Gustavus Adolphus and estranged the Emperor; on the other hand he tried to prevent the alliance between France and Sweden (1631), thus straining his relations with Richelieu. Urban's greatest fault was his nepotism, which lost him the sympathies of the Romans and involved him in an unfortunate war against the Duke of Parma (1642–4). He established close contact with the English Court through *Henrietta Maria by means of his agents, G. Panzani (1634) and G. Conn (1638), in a vain endeavour to re-establish the RC Church in England. Both before and after he became Pope he was a notable patron of the artist Giovanni Lorenzo Bernini (1598–1680); in 1629 he made him architect of *St Peter's (in which he designed Urban's tomb). Urban himself was a highly gifted classical scholar. His Latin poems were published at Paris in 1623 and often reprinted.

The official acts of his pontificate are pr. in the Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 13 (Turin, 1858), 14 (ibid., 1858), and 15 (ibid., 1858), pp. 1–428. A. Leman, Urbain VIII et la rivalité de la France et de la Maison d'Autriche de 1631 à 1635 (Mémoires et Travaux publiés par les professeurs des Facultés Catholiques de Lille, 16; 1920). O. Pollak, Die Kunsttätigkeit unter Urban VIII (2 vols., Quellenschriften zur Geschichte der Barockkunst in Rom, 1928–[31]). G. Hofmann, SJ, Griechische Patriarchen und römische Päpste: Untersuchungen und Texte, 3. 1: Theophanes III Patriarch von Jerusalem und Papst Urban VIII (Orientalia Christiana, 30, pt. 1 [no. 84]; 1933). J. Grisar, 'Päpstliche Finanzen, Nepotismus und Kirchenrecht unter Urban VIII', in Xenia Piana SSmo Dno Nro Pio Papae XII (Rome, 1943), pp. 207–366 (also separately pub. as Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 14; 1943). L. Ceyssens, OFM, La Première Bulle contre Jansénius: Sources relatives à son histoire (1644–1653) (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 9–10; 1961–2). A. Kraus, Das päpstliche Staatssekretariat unter Urban VIII. 1623–1644 (RQ, Supplementheft, 29; 1964). T. Magnuson, Rome in the Age of Bernini, 1 (Kungl. Vitterhets Historie och Antikvitets Akademiens Hanglingar, Antikvariska Serien, 34; 1982), pp. 215–360. L. Nussdorfer, Civic Politics in the Rome of Urban VIII (Princeton, NJ [1992]). Pastor, 28 and 29 (both 1938). M. Ott in CE 15 (1912), pp. 218–21, s.v.; R. Ciasca in EC 12 (1954), cols. 912–16, s.v. 'Urbano VIII'; V. Ponko, Jun., in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 482 f., s.v. See also bibl. to THIRTY YEARS WAR.

Urbi et Orbi (Lat., 'to the City [i.e. of Rome] and for the World'). A phrase used esp. of the solemn blessing which the Pope imparts from time to time from the balcony of one of the Roman basilicas (now from *St Peter's church). The custom, which fell into abeyance after 1870, was revived by *Pius XI after his election in 1922.

Urbs Beata Hierusalem. A 6th–7th cent. hymn celebrating the Heavenly Jerusalem in terms suggested by Rev. 21. In medieval Breviaries it was the *office hymn for the dedication of a church. In the revised Roman Breviary of 1632, its crude rhythm was changed into quantitative iambic metre beginning 'Coelestis Urbs Jerusalem', and much of its beauty was lost. The earlier text was restored in 1971. As printed in modern Breviaries and Hymnals it consists of two parts, the first four stanzas (with an added doxology) being used for *Vespers, the second part, beginning 'Angularis fundamentum' (in the revised version: 'Alto ex Olympi vertice') for *Lauds. Of the many Eng. translations of the original hymn, J. M. *Neale's 'Blessed City, heavenly Salem' is probably the best known.

Text, with introd., notes, and refs., in A. S. Walpole, Early Latin Hymns (1922), no. 119, pp. 377–80. H. Ashworth, OSB, ' "Urbs Beata Ierusalem". Scriptural and Patristic Sources', EL 70 (1956), pp. 238–41.

Urbs Sion Aurea. A set of extracts from the 'Hora novissima, tempora pessima' of *Bernard of Cluny (q.v.) in use as a well-known hymn ('Jerusalem the golden'). The familiar Eng. rendering is by J. M. *Neale. The hymn is not to be confused with that of the preceding entry.

Urgeschichte (Ger.), 'prehistory'. A term much used in the *Dialectical Theology for events which, from the standpoint of faith, are seen to be the means of God's direct supernatural revelation to man, though viewed from the human angle they appear merely as historical occurrences. This use of the word apparently derives from F. *Overbeck.

Uriel. Acc. to Jewish apocryphal writings, one of the four chief *archangels. In 1 *Enoch 20 he is said to have charge of Tartarus.

Urim and Thummim. Prob. originally 'lots', used in early Heb. divination to interpret the will of God to the people. There are several refs. in the OT, and from the *Septuagintal text of 1 Sam. 14: 41 it would seem that the lots were cast so as to yield a negative or affirmative answer to the question posed. Their nature is not stated; but the Arabic custom of divination by headless arrows (cf. Ezek. 21: 21 f.), with the alternatives written on them, may indicate the procedure followed.

Their divinatory use is nowhere mentioned after the time of *Solomon, perhaps because it was replaced by the living voice of the Prophets, who disapproved of all mechanical oracles (cf. Hos. 4: 12), and Ez. 2: 63 and Neh. 7: 65 expressly suggest that such divination had ceased in post-exilic times. The inclusion of Urim and Thummim in the breastplate worn by the *High Priest in later times (cf. Exod. 28: 30, Lev. 8: 8) was prob. a traditional survival (note the association of 'Thummim and Urim' with Levi in Deut. 33: 8). They were numbered by the Rabbis among the five things no longer possessed by the Second Temple. By the time of *Josephus they were so little understood as to be confused with the breastplate itself (Ant. 3. 214–18).

Etymologically the meaning of the words, which was unknown to the ancient translators of the Bible, is obscure; LXX has δήλωσις and ἀλήθεια, Vulg. doctrina and veritas. In RV marg. they are rendered 'the Lights and the Perfections'. It has been suggested (G. R. *Driver) that 'Urim' is to be connected with a word meaning 'to give oracular response'.

R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 204–6, with bibl. p. 447; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 352 f., with bibl. p. 544. G. F. Moore in E.Bi. 4 (1903), cols. 5235–7, s.v., with bibl.; E. F. Kautzsch in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 328–36, s.v., also with bibl.; M. Greenberg in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 16 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 8 f., s.v. See also works cited under EPHOD.

Urmarcus (Ger.), 'primitive Mark', a supposed early and lost draft of St *Mark's Gospel. The case for its existence is based partly on apparent signs of revision in the Gospel as we have it, partly on the study of the other *Synoptics (Mt. and Lk.), which (it is argued) presuppose knowledge of a variant, and earlier, form of Mk. The theory was popular in the 19th cent., but is now only weakly reflected in the view that the earliest versions of Mk. may have varied.

E. Wendling, Urmarcus (1905); id., Die Entstehung des Marcus-Evangeliums (1908). F. C. *Burkitt, The Gospel History and its Transmission (1906), pp. 40–61. N. P. *Williams, Studies in the Synoptic Problem (ed. W. *Sanday, 1911), pp. 387–421 (a critique of Wendling). V. Taylor, The Gospel according to St Mark (1952; 2nd edn., 1966), pp. 68–72. See also other comm. to MARK, GOSPEL OF ST, cited s.v.

Ursacius (fl. *c.*335–71), Bp. of Singidunum (now Belgrade). Leader with *Valens, Bp. of Mursa, of the *Arians in the W. See VALENS.

Ursinus, Zacharias (1534–83), *Calvinist theologian. A native of Breslau, he studied at *Wittenberg (1550–7) and came under the influence of P. *Melanchthon. During a tour of various universities, he met J. H. *Bullinger, J. *Calvin, S. *Castellio, and other Calvinists whose views he gradually adopted. He taught at Breslau before he went to Heidelberg in 1561. Here, at the behest of the Elector *Frederick III, with K. Olevian he drew up the *Heidelberg Catechism (q.v.). On the death of Frederick he left Heidelberg for Neustadt, where he wrote his Admonitio Christiana (see NEOSTADIENSIUM ADMONITIO), intended as a rebuttal of the Formula of *Concord.

Collected edns. of his Theological Works pub. in 2 vols., Neustadt, 1587–9, and ed. Q. Reuter, 3 vols., Heidelberg, 1612. K. Sudhoff, C. Olevianus und Z. Ursinus: Leben und ausgewählte Schriften (Elberfield, 1857). E. K. Sturm, Der junge Zacharias Ursin: Sein Weg vom Philippismus zum Calvinismus (1534–1562) (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 33; Neukirchen [1972]). D. Visser, Zacharias Ursinus: The Reluctant Reformer. His Life and Times (New York [1983]). C. J. Burchill, 'On the Consolation of a Christian Scholar: Zacharius Ursinus (1534–83) and the Reformation in Heidelberg', JEH 37 (1986), pp. 565–83.

Ursula, St. The legend of the martyr St Ursula and her 11,000 virgins developed from the veneration of some nameless virgin martyrs at *Cologne. Its earliest basis is a 4th–5th-cent. inscription formerly at Cologne, acc. to which a certain Clematius restored an old basilica on the site where holy virgins had shed their blood for Christ. The next mention of the martyrs occurs in a sermon of the 8th or 9th cent. in honour of several thousand virgins who had perished in the persecution of Maximian. Acc. to a later form of the story, Ursula, whose name now came to be affixed to their leader, was a British princess who, accompanied by 11,000 virgins, went on a pilgrimage to Rome, and on her return was massacred with her companions at Cologne by the Huns. This legend was a favourite of the Middle Ages, and the discovery, in 1106, of a burial ground near the church of St Ursula, believed to contain the relics of the martyrs, gave rise to many further embellishments. St Ursula became the patron of many educational institutions; in modern times her name is chiefly known through the teaching order of the *Ursulines (q.v.). Feast day, 21 Oct., suppressed in 1969.

Texts ed., with full discussion, by V. de Buck, SJ, in AASS, Oct. 9 (1885), pp. 73–303. W. Levison, 'Das Werden der Ursula-Legende', Bonner Jahrbücher, 132 (1927), pp. 1–164; also separately issued, Cologne, 1928. Extensive refs. to other lit. in the discussion of Levison's book by M. Coens in Anal. Boll. 47 (1929), pp. 89–110. Studies in Eng. incl. M. (Mrs T. F.) Tout, 'The Legend of St. Ursula and the Eleven Thousand Virgins', Historical Essays by Members of Owens College, Manchester, ed. T. F. Tout and J. Tait (1902), pp. 17–56. Good modern popular study by J. Solzbacher and V. Hopmann, Die Legende der hl. Ursula: Die Geschichte der Ursula-Verehrung (Cologne, 1964). On the representation of the legend in art, G. de Tervarent, La Légende de sainte Ursule dans la littérature et l'art du moyen âge (2 vols., 1931). A. Poncelet, SJ, in CE 15 (1912), pp. 225–8, s.v.

Ursulines. The oldest and most considerable teaching order of women in the the RC Church. It was founded at Brescia in 1535 by St *Angela Merici. The original members lived in their own houses, continuing their normal occupations in addition to pastoral work which included catechetics. Approved by *Paul III in 1544, community life and simple vows were introduced in 1572 by *Gregory XIII at the instigation of St *Charles Borromeo. In 1612 *Paul V allowed the Ursulines of Paris solemn vows and strict enclosure, and convents were erected on these lines, following a modified form of the Rule of St *Augustine. From this time the pastoral work of the order developed into the institutional form of schools for girls, esp. in 17th-cent. France, where Ursulines became noted for their educational work. The order spread not only in Europe, but to the New World and the Far East. Most houses were autonomous, but in 1900 at a Congress in Rome of Ursulines from all over the world, the union was effected of a great number of convents belonging to different congregations in the 'Roman Union'. There have since been a number of other unions, of which the largest is that of Eastern Quebec, formed in 1953 of all convents founded from Quebec. A union of Ursulines in German-speaking countries, constituted in 1907, became a federation in 1964. There are also autonomous houses in many parts of the world. Since the Second *Vatican Council removed the obligation of strict enclosure from nuns leading an active (as opposed to a contemplative) life, Ursulines have been able to live more closely among the people and to undertake a wider range of pastoral work, in addition to their educational undertakings. One of the most famous members of the order was the mystic, Marie *Guyard ('Mary of the Incarnation'), who founded the house at Quebec in 1639.

Annales de l'ordre de Ste Ursule . . . : avec une préface par M. C. Ste-Foi (2 vols., Clermont-Ferrand, 1857). M. Aron, Les Ursulines (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux, 1937; Eng. tr., New York, 1947). T. Ledóchowska, OSU, Angèle Merici et la Compagnie de Sainte-Ursule (2 vols., Rome [1968]; Eng. tr., ibid. [1970]), with bibl. M. de Chantal Gueudré, OSU, Histoire de l'ordre des Ursulines en France [to 1802] (3 vols., 1958–64). H. Albisser, Die Ursulinen zu Luzern: Geschichte, Leben und Werk, 1659–1847 (Stans, 1938). Les Ursulines des Trois Rivières (3 vols., Three Rivers, Canada, 1888–98; vol. 4, Quebec, 1911); Les Ursulines de Québec (4 vols., Quebec, 1864–6). P. G. Roy, À travers l'histoire des Ursulines de Québec (Lévis, 1939). C. J. Beaumier, L'Union romaine des Ursulines d'après les documents pontificaux (Three Rivers, 1951); D. Dunkerley and others in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 491–5, s.v.; T. Ledóchowska and others in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 836–57, s.v. 'Orsoline, II'; L. Mariani, OSU, and others in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 78–99, s.v. 'Ursulines, II–III'.

Usagers. The section of the *Nonjurors who in 1719 accepted the Communion Service which had been newly drawn up by J. *Collier, T. *Brett, and T. Deacon on the basis partly of the primitive Christian liturgies and partly of the 1549 BCP. They were so named from four 'usages' which the new rite contained, namely: (1) the *mixed chalice; (2) prayers for the dead; (3) a prayer for the descent of the Holy Spirit on the elements (see EPICLESIS); and (4) an Oblatory prayer. The schism between the 'Usagers' and 'Non-Usagers' was healed in 1732.

J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors: Their Lives, Principles, and Writings (1902), pp. 290–308, 321 f., 443–5; H. Broxap, The Later Non-Jurors (1924), pp. 35–65 and passim; and W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (*Alcuin Club Collections, 40; 1958), esp. pp. 71–112.

use. In liturgiology, a local modification of the standard (esp. the Roman) rite. In Latin Christendom such uses arose partly through the absorption of *Gallican features by the Roman rite as it spread through Europe and partly through later local developments in the Roman rite itself. These uses, which differed from the Roman rite only in details, were gradually consolidated and codified in metropolitan and diocesan cathedrals and in some of the religious orders and, after ritual books came to be printed, were often used over wide areas. In the Preface to the BCP of 1549, where the five uses of *Hereford, *York, *Lincoln, *Bangor, and *Salisbury are referred to, it was ordered that 'from henceforth all the whole realm shall have but one use'. In the RC Church all uses, except those which could prove an existence of two centuries (notably the *Ambrosian use at Milan, the *Mozarabic use at Toledo, and those of some religious orders), were abolished by the Council of *Trent.

USPG. The United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was formed in 1965 by the amalgamation of the SPG and the UMCA (qq.v.). It continues to work in the areas previously covered by these societies.

M. Dewey, The Messengers: A Concise History of the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (1975), esp. pp. 121–42.

Ussher, James (1581–1656), Abp. of *Armagh. Educated at the newly founded *Trinity College, Dublin, he was ordained in 1601 and appointed chancellor of St Patrick's Cathedral in 1606 and first professor of divinity at Dublin in 1607. Subsequently he became Bp. of Meath (1621) and Abp. of Armagh (1625). A scholar and historian of vast learning, he was intimate with most of the English writers and divines of the day and was an authority on such diverse topics as the letters of St *Ignatius of Antioch (of which he distinguished the 7 genuine from the later spurious ones, whose existence had previously discredited them all) and the early history of Ireland. Although a *Calvinist in theology, he was not unfriendly with W. *Laud, and advised *Charles I against the execution of Strafford. After the Irish rebellion of 1641 he remained in England, endeavouring to bring about a reconciliation between Churchmen and Dissenters. So great was his repute for scholarship, tolerance, and sincerity that on his death he was given a state funeral in *Westminster Abbey by O. *Cromwell. See also IRISH ARTICLES (1615).

Ussher's published writings include: A Discourse of the Religion anciently professed by the Irish (1623); Gotteschalci et Prædestinatianæ Controversiæ . . . Historia (1631); Britannicarum Ecclesiarum Antiquitates (1639); The Original of Bishops (1641); Polycarpi et Ignatii Epistolæ (1644); De Græca Septuaginta Interpretum Versione Syntagma (1655); Chronologia Sacra (1660; ed. T. *Barlow); The Power communicated by God to the Prince (1661); Historia Dogmatica Controversiæ inter Orthodoxos et Pontificios de Scripturis (1690; ed. H. *Wharton). His Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti (1650–4) are said to be the source of the dates later inserted in the margins of the AV of the Bible (edns. 1701 onwards).

Works ed. C. R. Elrington and J. H. Todd (17 vols., Dublin and London, 1847–64), with Life by C. R. Elrington in vol. 1, pp. 1–324. Early Lives by N. Bernard (Ussher's chaplain; London, 1656) and R. Parr (also chaplain; ibid., 1686, mainly important for letters). Modern studies by J. A. Carr, The Life and Times of James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh (1895), and R. B. Knox, James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh (Cardiff, 1967). J. Barr, 'Why the World was created in 4004 B.C.: Archbishop Ussher and Biblical Chronology', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 67 (1984–5), pp. 575–608. H. Trevor-Roper, Catholics, Anglicans and Puritans (1987), pp. 120–65. A. Gordon in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 64–72.

Usuard, Martyrology of. The most widely circulated of the *martyrologies in the Middle Ages and the basis of the current '*Roman Martyrology'. Its compiler, Usuard (d. *c.*875), who was commissioned for the work by Charles the Bald, was a Benedictine monk of the abbey of *St-Germain-des-Prés at Paris. He seems to have based his work on the somewhat earlier Martyrology of *Ado of Vienne (d. 875). It was edited at Paris in 1718 by Dom Jacques Bouillart from a MS contemporary with its compiler and possibly the autograph.

The most important earlier edns. are those of J. Molanus (Louvain, 1563 and 1573, and Antwerp, 1583) and J. B. du Sollier, SJ (AASS, Jun. 7, 1714, and Venice, 1745, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 123. 453–992, and 124. 9–860). Crit. edn., with comm., by J. Dubois, OSB (Subsidia Hagiographica, 40; 1965). P. Grosjean, SJ, 'Sur les éditions de l'Usuard de Jean Molanus', Anal. Boll. 70 (1952), pp. 327–33; J. Dubois, OSB, 'À la recherche de l'état primitif du martyrologe d'Usuard. Le manuscrit de Fécamp', ibid. 95 (1977), pp. 43–71, repr. in id., Martyrologes d'Usuard au Martyrologe Romain (Abbeville, 1990), pp. 121–49. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2313–16, s.v. 'Usuard'. See also works cited under MARTYROLOGY.

usury. The exacting of interest was forbidden in the OT in the case of Jewish debtors (Exod. 22: 25, Deut. 23: 19 f.). The NT is not explicit on the subject, but during the patristic age all lending on interest was forbidden to clerics by the Councils of *Arles (314) and *Nicaea (325). The first Council of *Carthage (348) and the Council of Aix (789) objected to this method of making profit even in the case of laymen; and in the Decree of *Gratian, and subsequently at the Third *Lateran Council (1179) and the Second of *Lyons (1274), the practice was formally condemned, though it was allowed to the Jews by the Fourth Lateran Council of 1215. The condemnation was justified by the medieval view of money as solely a medium of exchange for articles of consumption, the use of which is adequately repaid by the return of a sum equal to that which was lent. This doctrine, founded on *Aristotle's theory of the 'barren' nature of money, was elaborated by the Schoolmen, esp. St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol., II/IIae, q. 78, art. 1) and held sway in the RC Church till the 19th cent. It was restated, e.g., by *Benedict XIV in 1745.

With the rise of capitalism the principle had to be gradually abandoned. M. *Luther and U. *Zwingli, as well as the 16th-cent. Anglican divines, still condemned the lending of money for interest, but J. *Calvin permitted it in the case of wealthy debtors, and the civil legislation, which had hitherto followed canon law, began to provide for moderate charges of interest in England in 1571, in Germany in the same century, but in many Continental countries much later, in France e.g. not until 1789. Today money is no longer thought of, as in the Middle Ages, as a barren means of exchange but as capital productive of wealth like other property. Since the exaction of a reasonable interest for its loan has been tolerated by the Christian Church, the term 'usury' has tended to be restricted to excessive rates.

R. H. Tawney, Religion and the Rise of Capitalism (Holland Memorial Lectures for 1922; 1926). B. N. Nelson, The Idea of Usury (Princeton, NJ, 1949; rev. edn., Chicago and London, 1969), with bibl. J. T. Noonan, Jun., The Scholastic Analysis of Usury (Cambridge, Mass., 1957). T. F. Divine, SJ, Interest: An Historical and Analytical Study in Economics and Modern Ethics (Milwaukee, 1959), pp. 3–116. J. W. Baldwin, Masters, Princes, and Merchants (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1970), 1, pp. 270–311, with notes, 2, pp. 185–211 [on the 12th cent.]. L. Poliakov, Les Banchieri juifs et le Saint-Siège du XIII^e au XVII^e siècle (1965; Eng. tr., 1977). O. Langholm, The Aristotelian Analysis of Usury (Bergen [1984]). N. Jones, God and the Moneylenders: Usury and Law in Early Modern England (Oxford, 1989). H. Siems, Handel und Wucher im Spiegel frühmittelalterlicher Rechtsquellen (MGH, Schriften, 35; 1992). A. Bernard, G. Le Bras, and H. du Passage, SJ, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2316–90; s.v. 'Usure', with refs.

Utica, the Martyrs of. A group of early African martyrs of uncertain date who suffered at the Massa Candida (lit. 'White Farm'). The place, misunderstood as 'White Lump', gave rise to the legend that in the time of Valerian (c.258) they were thrown alive into slaking quicklime and their bodies reduced to a white mass of powder. Acc. to St *Augustine (Serm. 306, preached on their anniversary) there were 153 (cf. Jn. 21: 11), and the massacre took place at Utica, 35 miles from Carthage, though the *Roman Martyrology increases the number to 300 and assigns it to Carthage. *Prudentius, who extols the purity (candor) of their souls reflected in the whiteness (candor) of their bodies, prob. had a decisive influence on the legend. Feast day, 24 Aug.

Prudentius, Peristephanon, 13, lines 76–87; Augustine, Sermones, 306 and 311. 10; also Sermones post Maurinos reperti, ed. G. *Morin, OSB (Miscellanea Agostiniana, 1; Rome, 1930), pp. 645 f. (no. 14); also Enarrationes in Pss., 49. 9, and 144. 17; and among the Ps.-Augustinian sermons no. 317. P. Monceaux, 'Les Martyrs d'Utique et la légende de la "Massa Candida"', Revue archéologique, 3rd ser. 37 (1900), pp. 404–11; F. P. de' Cavalieri, 'I martiri della Massa Candida', in Nuove Note agiografiche (ST 9; 1902), pp. 39–51. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2649–53, s.v. 'Massa Candida', and 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2878 f., s.v. 'Utique'; G. D. Gordini in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (Rome, 1967), cols. 4–6, s.v. 'Massa Candida'.

Utilitarianism. The doctrine in ethics which identifies the good with happiness and maintains those actions to be right which bring the greatest happiness to the greatest number. In principle it was maintained by T. *Hobbes, B. de Mandeville, D. *Hume, and C. A. Helvetius, but it came into prominence with J. Bentham, J. S. Mill, and the Philosophical Radicals. H. *Rashdall sought to interpret the Christian ethic as an 'Ideal Utilitarianism'.

J. S. Mill's classic defence of the doctrine was originally pub. in three arts. in Fraser's Magazine, 64 (1861; pt. 2), pp. 391–406 (Oct.), 525–34 (Nov.), 659–73 (Dec.); they were reissued in book form as Utilitarianism (1863). L. Stephen, The English Utilitarians (3 vols., 1900). E. Albee, A History of English Utilitarianism (1902). D. Baumgardt, Bentham and the Ethics of Today, with Bentham Manuscripts hitherto unpublished (Princeton, NJ, 1952). A. [M.] Quinton, Utilitarian Ethics (1973; 2nd edn., 1989), with bibl. Good account by A. W. Hastings in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 558–67.

Utraquism. The Hussite doctrine that the laity, like the clergy, should receive the Holy Communion under the forms of both bread and wine (sub utraque specie). It was first formally defended by Jacob of Mies, a professor of the University of Prague, in 1414. John *Huss did not personally press the thesis, but, despite condemnation at the Councils of *Constance (1415) and *Basle (1432), it was maintained by his followers, including the more moderate group of them (who were also called *Calixtines, from their demand for the cup, calix). Communion in both kinds was conceded to the laity of Bohemia by the Compactata of Prague (1433), which, though formally cancelled by *Pius II in 1462, were maintained by the Bohemian Diet until 1567. At that stage, with most of the country Protestant, the RC authorities continued to turn a blind eye to Utraquist practice; but they were able to abolish it after the defeat of the Bohemian revolt in 1620.

See bibl. to CALIXTINES and HUSS, J.

Utrecht, Declaration of. The Profession of Faith which is the doctrinal basis of the *Old Catholic Church. It was drawn up by an assembly of the Old Catholic bishops at Utrecht on 24 Sept. 1889. Professing adherence to the beliefs of the primitive Church, esp. as formulated in the decrees of the *Oecumenical Councils down to AD 1000, it is mainly concerned with controverting specific doctrines of the RC Church. Among the formulae repudiated are the decrees on the Papacy of the First *Vatican Council in 1870, the dogma of the *Immaculate Conception, the encyclicals '*Unigenitus' and '*Auctorem fidei', and the *Syllabus of 1864. Positively it maintains the sacrificial element in the *Eucharist and the *Real Presence, though without mention of the propitiatory nature of sacrifice or of *transubstantiation.

Eng. tr. in the Report of the *Lambeth Conference for 1930, pp. 142–4; repr. in C. B. Moss, The Old Catholic Movement (1948), pp. 281 f.

Uvedale, John and Nicholas. See UDALL, JOHN and NICHOLAS.

V

Vacancy-in-See Commitee. Under an Act of the General *Synod promulgated in 1977, when a diocese in the C of E becomes vacant, the Vacancy-in-See Committee of the diocese draws up a statement setting out the needs of the diocese and providing factual information about it, discusses possible candidates for the vacancy, and elects four representatives to sit on the *Crown Appointments Commission. The Committee consists of the *suffragan bishop(s) of the diocese, the Dean or Provost of the Cathedral (or if he cannot serve, a residentiary canon), one of the archdeacons, the diocesan proctors in the Lower House of *Convocation, the diocesan representatives in the House of Laity of the General Synod, and the chairman and not less than two elected members each of the Houses of Clergy and Laity of the Diocesan Synod. Two additional persons, one in *Orders and one lay, may be nominated by the Bishop's Council to represent some special interest in the diocese.

Vaison, Councils of. Two important ecclesiastical synods were held at Vaison (*c.*25 miles NE of Avignon, in SE France):

(1) On 13 Nov. 442. It enacted ten canons which provided inter alia that clergy should receive the *chrism at Easter from their own bishops (can. 3), that any unwilling to accept the judgements of their bishop should resort to the Synod (can. 5), and that there should be no intimacy with those hostile to the bishop (can. 6). It also regulated the adoption of children (cans. 9 and 10). Acc. to St *Ado, Abp. of Vienne (9th cent.), his predecessor, Nectarius of Vienne, presided at the Council.

(2) On 5 Nov. 529. It enacted five canons of liturgical import, ordering the frequent repetition of *Kyrie Eleison in the Office and at Mass (can. 3), the regular use of prayer for the Pope (can. 4) and of Sicut erat after Gloria Patri (can. 5). Twelve bishops were present, among them St *Caesarius of Arles.

(1) Hardouin, 1, cols. 1787–90; Mansi, 6 (Florence, 1761), cols. 451 f.; C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (CCSL 148; 1963), pp. 94–104. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 454–60.

(2) Hardouin, 2, cols. 1105 f.; Mansi, 8 (Florence, 1762), cols. 725–8; C. de Clercq (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 511–A. 695 (CCSL 148 A; 1963), pp. 82 f., repr., with Fr. tr. and notes by J. Gaudemet and B. Basdevant, Les Canons des Conciles Mérovingiens (VI^e–VII^e siècles), 1 (SC 353; 1989), pp. 186–93. O. Pontal, Die Synoden im Merowingerreich (1986), pp. 56–8; rev. Fr. tr. [1989], pp. 82–4. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 2; 1908), pp. 1110–15.

Valdés, Juan de (?1490–1541), Spanish religious writer. A native of Cuenca in New Castile, he studied at Alcalá, fled from the Spanish *Inquisition to Italy in 1531, and became camerario to *Clement VII in 1533. From 1534 he lived in Naples, where he became the spiritual centre of a group of prominent men and women anxious for reforms and spiritual revival in the Church, among them Giulia Gonzaga and Vittoria Colonna. Though at least outwardly he remained a Catholic, his conception of personal religion and interiority was largely Protestant in character and later had wide appeal for the Reformed traditions. After his death various of his friends, incl. *Peter Martyr and B. *Ochino, left the RC Church. Besides an important work on the Spanish language, Diálogo de la lengua (pub. 1737), he wrote a number of religious works, expounding Christian doctrine and the Scriptures. Among these are the Diálogo de doctrina cristiana (1529) and the Alfabeto cristiano (1536). He also translated the Hebrew Psalter into Castilian. His Las ciento diez divinas consideraciones, published in Italian in 1550, was translated into English by N. *Ferrar (1638).

His brother, Alfonso de Valdés (?1490–1532), who became Latin Secretary to the Emp. *Charles V, was a noted humanist and admirer of *Erasmus. After the Sack of Rome in 1527, he wrote the Diálogo de Lactancio y un arcediano (otherwise, Diálogo de las cosas acaecidas en Roma) (prob. first pub. 1529; Eng. tr. 1590) to justify the event; it vigorously attacks the Papacy for its part in contemporary international politics and for the corrupt state of the Church over which it presided, esp. the Curia, setting in contrast the fundamentals of New Testament Christianity as Erasmus interpreted them. The same themes recur in his Diálogo de Mercurio y Carón (1529), where he attacks religion that has become a matter of empty outward forms, devotion to inanimate objects, and good works undertaken on a quid pro quo basis. It contains a powerful apologia for lay Christianity as embodied in an ideal ruler. The work was long, but erroneously, attributed to Juan de Valdés.

Modern crit. edns. of Juan de Valdés, Diálogo de la lengua by C. Barbolini de García (Messina and Florence, 1967; rev., Madrid, 1982), which J. M. Lope Blanch (Clásicos Castalia, 11; 1969) follows; also by J. F. Montesinos (Clásicos Castellanos, 86; 1928); of his Alfabeto cristiano by B. *Croce (Bari, 1938); photographic repr. of the 1529 edn. of his Diálogo de doctrina cristiana with introd. and notes by M. Bataillon (Coimbra, 1925; repr., Paris, 1981); further edn. of this work, with his tr. of the Psalter, by D. Ricart (Mexico, 1964). Edns. of Las ciento diez divinas consideraciones by L. Usoz y Rio (Reformistas Antiguos Españoles, 17; 1863), E. Cione (Milan, 1944) and, following MS of Juan Sánchez (1558), by J. I. Tellechea Idígoras (Salamanca, 1975). Unpub. letters to Card. Gonzaga, ed. J. F. Montesinos (Anejos de la Revista de Filología Española, 14; 1931). Modern Life by E. Cione (Bari, 1938; 2nd edn., Naples, 1963), with good bibl. J. E. Longhurst, Erasmus and the Spanish Inquisition: The Case of Juan de Valdés (Albuquerque, NM, 1950). M. Bataillon, Érasme et l'Espagne (1937; rev. edn., 3 vols., Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 250; Geneva, 1991), ch. 7; id., Erasmo y el Erasmismo (Barcelona, 1977), pp. 245–85. Domingo de Sta. Teresa, OCD, Juan de Valdés, 1498(?) 1541 (Analecta Gregoriana, 85; 1957). P. McNair, Peter Martyr in Italy (Oxford, 1967), esp. pp. 17–28. J. H. Bakhuizen van den Brink, Juan de Valdés, réformateur en Espagne et en Italie 1529–1541 (Geneva, 1969). J. C. Nieto, Juan de Valdés and the Origins of the Spanish and Italian Reformation (ibid., 1970; rev. Sp. tr., 1979). M. Firpo, Tra Alumbrados e 'Spirituali': Studi su Juan de Valdés e il Valdesianesimo nella Crisi religiosa del '500 Italiano (Studi e Testi per la Storia Religiosa del Cinquecento, 3; Florence, 1990). A. [A. H.] Hamilton, Heresy and Mysticism in Sixteenth-Century Spain (Cambridge, 1992), esp. pp. 40–2, 86–8, and 129 f. J. C. Nieto in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 3 (Toronto, etc., 1987), pp. 368–70, s.v.

Modern edns. of Alfonso de Valdés, Diálogo de Lactancio by J. F. Montesinos (Clásicos Castellanos, 89; 1928), and of Diálogo de Mercurio y Carón by id. (ibid. 96; 1929) and by R. Navarro Durán (Barcelona [1987]). M. Bataillon, 'Alonso de Valdés, auteur du "Diálogo de Mercurio y Carón" ', in Homenaje ofrecido a Menéndez Pidal, 1 (1925), pp. 403–15; id., Erasme et l'Espagne (cited above), ch. 8; D. Donald and E. Lázaro, Alfonso de Valdés y su época (Cuenca [1983]). J. C. Nieto in Contemporaries of Erasmus (cited above), pp. 366–8.

Valdes, Peter. See WALDENSES.

Valence, Councils of. Of the many Councils held at Valence in Dauphiné, the three most important were:

(1) 12 July 374. A Council of 30 bishops, summoned to deal with various disciplinary problems, among them the refusal of Acceptus to become Bp. of Forum Iulii (Fréjus). It issued four disciplinary canons. Can. 1 forbade the ordination of digamists, can. 2 easy penance to lapsed virgins, and can. 3 absolution until death to those who had lapsed into idolatry or received second baptism. Can. 4 dealt with clerics who falsely accused themselves of crime to escape office.

(2) *c.*530. Its Acts are lost, and it is uncertain whether it was held before or after the Council of *Orange (529). Like the latter, it was directed against *Pelagianism and *Semipelagianism. Its president was *Cyprian of Toulon, who represented St *Caesarius of Arles.

(3) 8 Jan. 855. The Council was convoked by the Emp. Lothair (817–55) to try the Bp. of Valence on various counts. It then proceeded to discuss *predestination, upholding against *Hincmar of Reims and the Council of *Quiercy (853) 'double predestination' and rejecting the view that the redemptive work of Christ extended to the whole human race.

(1) Hardouin, 1, cols. 795–8; Mansi, 3 (Florence, 1759), cols. 491–500; C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314 A. 506 (CCSL 148; 1963), pp. 35–45; repr., with Fr. tr. and introd. by J. Gaudemet, Conciles Gaulois du IVᵉ Siècle (SC 241; 1977), pp. 100–11. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 2; 1907), p. 982.

(2) Hardouin, 2, cols. 1103 f.; Mansi, 8 (Florence, 1762), cols. 723–6. C. de Clercq (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 511–A. 695 (CCSL 148 A; 1963), pp. 82 f. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 2; 1908), p. 1110. O. Pontal, Die Synoden im Merowingerreich (1986), pp. 61–7; revised Fr. tr. [1989], pp. 89–94. See also works cited s.v. ORANGE, COUNCILS OF.

(3) Hardouin, 5, cols. 87–96; Mansi, 15 (Venice, 1770), cols. 1–16; W. Hartmann (ed.), Die Konzilien der Karolingischen Teilreiche 843–859 (MGH, Concilia, 3; 1984), pp. 347–65. Hefele and Leclercq, 4 (pt. 1; 1911), pp. 204–10, and 4 (pt. 2; 1911), pp. 1326 and 1390–8, with further refs. See also works cited s.v. HINCMAR.

Valens (4th cent.), Bp. of Mursa, who with *Ursacius, Bp. of Singidunum, was an *Arian leader in the W. Pupils of *Arius, they became bitter enemies of St *Athanasius, whom they opposed, e.g. at the Council of Tyre in 335. After retracting their charges at the Council of Milan in 347, owing to a temporary change in the policy of the Emp. Constantius, they resumed their opposition to him at *Arles in 353 and at Milan in 355, and at Sirmium (357) maintained the extreme Arian ('Anomoean') position. Again in acc. with Imperial policy they took up a compromising attitude in 359 at the Synod of *Ariminum, where they were responsible for the victory of the *Homoean party. Though frequently excommunicated in the W. Church, they seem to have retained considerable influence at the court of Constantius. The last mention of Valens dates from 367.

There are scattered refs. in *Hilary of Poitiers, Athanasius, *Socrates, and *Sozomen. Frags. of a treatise of Hilary, 'Adv. Valentem et Ursacium', known to St *Jerome (De Vir. Ill. 100), survive; text in J. P. Migne, PL 10. 627–724; crit. edn. by A. L. Feder, SJ, in CSEL 65 (1916), pp. 39–193. M. Meslin, Les Ariens d'Occident 335 430 (Patristica Sorbonensia, 8; 1967), pp. 71–84. See also bibl. to ARIMINUM AND SELEUCIA, SYNODS OF.

Valentine, St. The commemoration formerly observed on 14 Feb. appears to refer to two Valentines: a Roman priest martyred on the Flaminian Way under the Emp. Claudius (*c.*269) and a Bp. of Terni (Interamna) who was taken to Rome and martyred, and whose remains were later conveyed back to Terni. Though the surviving accounts of both martyrdoms are clearly legendary, there are indications that each contains a nucleus of fact; and it is just possible that the kernel of truth in the two legends refers to a single person. The traditional association of St Valentine's day with courtship and the choosing of a 'Valentine' of the opposite sex is connected perhaps with certain customs of the pagan festival of *Lupercalia (mid-Feb.) at Rome, or with the natural season, not with any tradition concerning either saint of the name.

'Acta' of both SS. Valentine in AASS, Feb. 2 (1658), pp. 751–62. Note on the SS. Valentine in Anal. Boll. 11 (1892), pp. 471–3. E. M. Fusciardi, Vita di S. Valentino, V. e M., patrono di Terni: Con messa, novena, triduo e preghiere (Terni, 1936). O. *Marucchi, Il cimitero e la basilica di S. Valentino (1890); R. Krautheimer and S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 4 (Rome, 1970), pp. 289–311 (in Eng.). On the origin of the association of St Valentine's day with courtship, H. A. Kelly, Chaucer and the Cult of Saint Valentine (Davis Medieval Texts and Studies, 5; Leiden, 1986).

Valentinus (2nd cent.), *Gnostic theologian and founder of the Valentinian sect. Acc. to St *Irenaeus and others he was a native of Egypt whose disciples claimed that he had been taught by Theodas, a pupil of St *Paul. He came to Rome *c.*136 and is said to have had hopes of being elected Bishop 'on account of his intellectual force and eloquence' (quia et ingenio poterat et eloquio; *Tertullian, Adv. Valentinianos, 4), but was passed over in favour of a '*confessor', seceded from the Church, and went to the E., perhaps to *Cyprus. Later he returned to Rome, where he died *c.*165.

Valentinus produced a variety of writings, but we have only fragments, preserved chiefly by *Clement of Alexandria, which are insufficient to allow us to reconstruct his teaching, except in broad outline. The Coptic texts from Nag Hammadi include several which clearly derive from the Valentinian school (Evangelium Veritatis, the 'Tripartite Tractate', Gospel of *Philip, 'On the Resurrection', etc.), but none of them can be assigned to Valentinus himself with any confidence. *Hippolytus (Haer. 6. 37. 7) preserves one of his hymns. His system is known to us only in the developed and modified form given to it by his disciples. It appears to have been based on earlier systems (perhaps including the *Ophite), and to incorporate

*Platonic and Pythagorean elements. The spiritual world or 'pleroma' comprises 30 'aeons' emanated by the Primal Ground of Being, who form a succession of pairs (*syzygies). The visible world owes its origin to the fall of Sophia, the last of these aeons; this fall is variously described, but results in the emergence of her offspring the *Demiurge or creator, identified with the God of the OT. The Valentinian myth is intended to explain the human predicament by showing how a divine element has come to be imprisoned in this alien and hostile world, at the mercy of the Demiurge and his 'archons', the rulers of the planetary spheres. Redemption is effected by another aeon, Christ, who unites with the man Jesus (either at his conception or at his baptism) to bring mankind the saving knowledge ('gnosis') of its true origin and destiny. This gnosis, however, is given only to the 'spiritual' or 'pneumatics', i.e. the Valentinians, who through it are destined to return to the pleroma; other Christians, described as 'psychics' (cf. 1 Cor. 2: 14 etc.), can attain by faith and good works to a form of salvation, but only in a lower realm below the pleroma; the rest of mankind, called 'hylics' as merely material and not 'spiritual', are doomed to eternal perdition.

Valentinus was probably the most influential of the Gnostics and had a very large following (frequentissimum plane collegium inter haereticos; Tertullian, op. cit. 1). Later the school divided into two branches (Hippolytus, Haer. 6. 35), an E. one including *Theodotus, and an Italian or W. one including *Ptolemaeus, *Heracleon, and Marcus (see MARCOSIANS). The patristic reports frequently mention the divergent views of 'others' in describing the system, and thus show how easily and quickly modifications could be introduced or differences of opinion arise within the school.

The chief Christian sources are Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1, passim, and 3. 4; Tertullian, Adv. Valentinianos; Clement of Alexandria, Stromateis (several refs.) and Excerpta ex Theodoto; Hippolytus, Haer. 6. 20–55; Pseudo-Tertullian, Adversus Omnes Haereses, 4 [De Praescriptione, 49]; *Eusebius, HE 4. 11; *Epiphanius, Haer. 31, 33 f., and 56. Most of these, together with other material on the Valentinians, are conveniently collected in W. Völker, Quellen zur Geschichte der christlichen Gnosis (1932), pp. 57–141. Eng. tr. of primary texts, with brief introd., in W. Foerster, Gnosis, 1 (Eng. tr. by R. McL. Wilson, Oxford, 1972), pp. 121–243. There are comprehensive studies by F.-M.-M. Sagnard, OP, La Gnose valentinienne et le témoignage de saint Irénée (Études de Philosophie médiévale, 36; 1947); A. Orbe, SJ, Estudios Valentinianos (Analecta Gregoriana, 65, 99, 100, 113, and 158; 1955–66); and C. Markschies, Valentinus Gnosticus? Untersuchungen zur valentinianischen Gnosis (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testaments, 65; Tübingen [1992]). Other important studies incl. C. Barth, Die Interpretation des Neuen Testaments in der valentinianischen Gnosis (TU 37, Heft 3; 1911); W. Foerster, Von Valentin zu Herakleon: Untersuchungen über die Quellen und die Entwicklung der valentinianischen Gnosis (Beihefte zu ZNTW, 7; 1928); G. Quispel, 'The Original Doctrine of Valentine', VC 1 (1947), pp. 43–73; G. C. Stead, 'The Valentinian Myth of Sophia', JTS NS 20 (1969), pp. 75–104; and B. Layton (ed.), The Recovery of Gnosticism: Proceedings of the International Conference on Gnosticism at Yale, New Haven, Connecticut, March 28–31, 1978, 1: The School of Valentinus (Numen, 41; Leiden, 1980). Convenient summary in K. Rudolph, Die Gnosis (Leipzig, 1977), pp. 339–47; Eng. tr. (1983), pp. 317–25. R. A. Lipsius in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 1076–99, s.v. 'Valentinus (1)'; G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2497–519, s.v. 'Valentin'. See also works cited under GNOSTICISM.

Valerian, St (d. after 450), Bp. of Cemele (now Cimiez, nr. Nice) in S. Gaul. He may have been a monk of *Lérins before he became bishop, and he is perhaps to be identified with the Valerian to whom *Eucherius addressed his 'De contemptu mundi'. The only facts known of his life are that he was present at the Councils of Riez (439) and *Vaison (442), and upheld the ancient jurisdictional claims of the see of *Arles against Pope *Leo the Great. He was the author of 20 homilies which, apart from one already known ('De bono disciplinae'), were discovered by J. *Sirmond in a *Corbie MS early in the 17th cent. Their subjects are mainly moral and ascetic. Written in a highly rhetorical but effective style, they are valuable for the light they throw on the history of their age. Valerian was also the author of an 'Epistola ad Monachos de Virtutibus et Ordine Doctrinae Apostolicae'. Theologically he seems to have inclined to *Semipelagianism. Feast day, 23 July.

'Homiliae' and 'Epistola', first ed. J. Sirmond, SJ, Paris, 1612; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 52. 691–758. J.-P. Weiss, 'La Personalité de Valérien de Cimiez', Annales de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Nice, 11 (1970), pp. 141–62. R. W. Mathisen, 'Petronius, Hilarius and Valerianus: Prosopographical Notes on the Conversion of the Roman Aristocracy', Historia, 30 (Wiesbaden, 1981), pp. 106–12, esp. pp. 110–12. C. Tibiletti, 'Valeriano di Cimiez e la teologia dei Maestri Provenzali', Augustinianum, 22 (1982), pp. 513–32. A. Hamman in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 543 f. G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2520–2, s.v.

Valesius, Henricus (1603–76), French historian. Henri de Valois was a native of Paris who, after being educated by the *Jesuits at Verdun and Paris, spent nearly all his life in the capital. In 1630 he abandoned a career in law to devote himself exclusively to learning. In his earlier years he issued editions of many classical authors, including Ammianus Marcellinus (1636). In 1650 he began an intensive study of the early ecclesiastical historians, which bore fruit in his celebrated editions of the Church histories of *Eusebius (1659), *Socrates and *Sozomen (1668), and *Theodoret and *Evagrius (1673).

His edns. of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, and Evagrius were reissued at Amsterdam, 3 vols., 1695–1700, and are repr. in J. P. Migne, PG (see under separate authors); rev. by W. Reading (3 vols., Cambridge, 1720). His minor works ed. P. Burmann, Henrici Valesii . . . Emendationum Libri Quinque et de Critica Libri Duo (Amsterdam, 1740). Life by his brother, A. Valesius, was appended to a Lat. tr. of his edn. of Eusebius, Socrates, etc., pub. Paris, 1677, pp. i–viii; repr. in G. Bates, Vitae Selectorum Aliquot Virorum (London, 1681), pp. 719–33; by P. Burmann, op. cit. (no pagination); and by W. Reading, op. cit. 3, pp. 615–22. E. *Schwartz (ed.), Eusebius Werke, Band 2, Teil 3 (GCS; 1909), pp. xliii–xlv. H. Hurter, SJ, Nomenclator Literarius Theologiae Catholicae, 4 (Innsbruck, 1910), cols. 173–7. P. Lejay in CE 15 (1912), pp. 263 f., s.v. 'Valois, Henri'; É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2526 f., s.v. 'Valois, Henri de'.

validation of marriage. A marriage null by reason of defective consent or some *diriment impediment can be validated in canon law (1) by simple renewal of consent or (2) by *dispensation. Simple renewal of consent is sufficient when the marriage is null because of defective consent or when the impediment has ceased to exist. If the impediment is a public one, i.e. if it can be proved in the external forum, then, the renewal must be public; if secret, it may be private. But if the marriage is null because of a persisting removable diriment impediment, the marriage may be validated by a simple dispensation followed by renewal of consent. In certain cases, esp. where a renewal of consent is difficult to obtain, a marriage can be validated by a sanatio in radice (q.v.). The validation of marriage is treated in CIC (1983), cans. 1156–65.

validity. A term used in W. *Sacramental theology denoting the fact that a Sacrament is genuine if certain formal conditions have been fulfilled. It is distinguished from fruitfulness (or efficacy) and regularity. Thus a Sacrament, even if celebrated irregularly (e.g. outside the unity of the Church), and even if unfruitful in that the participants will not receive *grace through the Sacrament, may still be a real Sacrament, conferring membership of the Church (in the case of *Baptism), Holy *Orders (in the case of Ordination), or the Real Presence of Christ in the Eucharist. The formal conditions are that the minister of the Sacrament be himself validly ordained (if necessary), that the essential part of the Church's liturgy be used (see FORM), and that there be a proper *intention (q.v.) on the part of the minister (i.e. to do what the Church intends in celebrating the Sacrament). The concept of validity was developed in the W. in connection with the problem of the Church's attitude to Sacraments conferred in heresy or schism. It is first found in the Roman insistence in controversy with St *Cyprian, Bp. of Carthage, that Baptism is validly conferred by heretics and therefore may not be repeated; it achieved its classic formulation by St *Augustine in his controversy with *Donatism. Augustine developed the concept of validity as a way of opposing the Donatist notion that the Sacraments were the possession of the perfect Church, insisting against them that the true minister of the Sacrament is Christ and thus the unworthiness of the minister (or the Church) does not affect the validity of the Sacrament. By thus enabling him to recognize Donatist Baptism and Ordination, it made easier the reconciling of repentant Donatists. At the Reformation most Protestants abandoned the concept of validity, regarding Sacraments as established by a true preaching of pure doctrine; it is affirmed in the *Thirty-Nine Articles of the C of E (art. 26). More recently the notion has been criticized (e.g. by C. H. *Turner and A. M. *Ramsey) as driving a wedge between the doctrine of the Church and the doctrine of the ministry, or as being a merely legalistic concept inadequate to deal with the problems of a divided Church.

The concept is discussed in most works on Sacramental theology, e.g. B. Leeming, SJ, Principles of Sacramental Theology (1956; 2nd edn., 1960), pp. 215–73. Doctrine in the Church of England* (1938), pp. 130–6. C. H. Turner, 'Apostolic Succession', in H. B. *Swete (ed.), Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918), pp. 93–214; A. M. Ramsey, The Gospel and the Catholic Church (1936; 2nd edn., 1956), pp. 152–4, 218 f., and 223; K. E. *Kirk, 'The Apostolic Ministry', pt. 5: 'The Meaning of Validity', in id. (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry (1946), pp. 33–46. G. G. Willis, Saint Augustine and the Donatist Controversy (1950), pp. 144–68 and 176–86. J. A. Gurrieri, 'Sacramental Validity: The Origins and Use of a Vocabulary', The Jurist, 41 (1981), pp. 21–58; id., 'Sacraments Shaping Faith: The Problem of Sacramental Validity Today', in G. Austin (ed.), Fountain of Life: In Memory of Niels K. Rasmussen, O.P. (Washington, DC [1991]), pp. 165–81. See also works cited under ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS.

Valla, Lorenzo (*c.*1406–57), Italian humanist. He became an excellent classical scholar, through studies in Rome. In 1431 he accepted a chair of eloquence at Pavia, but had to leave the city in 1433 owing to quarrels with the jurists of the university. In 1435 he obtained a position in Naples at the court of Alfonso of Aragon, who was his protector for the next ten years. The King's controversy with the Pope over the legitimacy of his kingdom perhaps lay behind Valla's famous attack on the authenticity of the '*Donation of Constantine'. In 1447 Valla went to Rome, where he became 'scriptor' and later Apostolic Secretary, and in 1450 professor of eloquence at the university.

Valla's earliest work of importance, De Voluptate, is a dialogue between representatives of the *Stoic, *Epicurean, and Christian views, in which he defends the pleasures of the senses as the greatest good, though not perfectly attainable in this life. The first version was written in 1431; like many of his works, it was revised later. His Dialecticae Disputationes contra Aristoteles (the first version dates from 1439) ridicules the dialectic method of *Scholasticism. The work by which he has long been best known is De Falso Credita et Ementita Constantini Donatione Declamatio (1440) in which, using methods of modern historical criticism, he demonstrated the spuriousness of the 'Donation of Constantine'; it contained a bitter attack on the temporal power of the Papacy and led to his being summoned for trial before a tribunal of the *Inquisition in 1444. He was saved from imprisonment by Alfonso. His De Elegantiis Linguae Latinae (the first version dates from 1441) long remained a standard work on humanist Latin. He also undertook a critical comparison between the *Vulgate and the Greek NT in Collatio Novi Testamenti (first version completed in 1442). In his De Libero Arbitrio (completed by 1444), he denies the possibility of understanding the harmony of God's omnipotence with human free will. His other works include De Professione Religosorum, a sustained attack on the ideals of the religious life (not printed until 1869), an account of the reign of Ferdinand of Aragon (written in 1446), and a defence of his historical writings, Antidotum in Facium (1447). His audacious views had a deep influence on Renaissance scholars. His work on the text of the NT was valued by *Erasmus (who published his Collatio in 1505), and his writings were held in high esteem by the Reformers, esp. M. *Luther.

Works, pub. Basle, 1540; anastatic repr., 2 vols., Turin, 1962. Modern edns. of his De Constantini Donatione, with Eng. tr. by C. B. Coleman (New Haven, Conn., 1922), by W. Schwahn (Teub., 1928) and W. Setz (MGH, Quellen zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, 10; 1976); of De Libero Arbitrio by M. Anfossi (Opuscoli Filosofici: Testi e Documenti Inediti o Rari Pubblicati da Giovanni Gentile, 6; Florence, 1934); and of De Voluptate, with later corrections, as De Vero Falsoque Bono, by M. de Panizza Lorch (Bari, 1970 [with notes in Eng.]); previously unpub. recension of Collatio Novi Testamenti ed. A. Perosa (Istituto Nazionale di Studi sul Rinascimento, Studi e Testi, 1; Florence, 1970), and Defensio Questionum in Philosophia (hitherto unpub.) ed. G. Zippel, 'L'Autodifesa di Lorenzo Valla per il processo dell'inquisizione napoletana (1444)', Italia Medioevale e Umanistica, 13 (1970), pp. 59–94. More recent edns. of Antidotum Primum: La Prima Apologia contro Poggio Bracciolini, ed. A. Wesseling (Respublica Literaria Neederlandica, 4; Assen and Amsterdam, 1978); Antidotum in Facium, ed. M. Regoliosi (Thesaurus Mundi, 20; Padua, 1981); Repastinatio Dialectice et Philosophie, ed. G. Zippel (ibid. 21 and 22; 1982); Gesta Ferdinandi Regis Aragonum, ed. O. Besomi (ibid. [no vol. no.]; 1983); and Epistole, ed. O. Besomi and M. Regoliosi (ibid. 24; 1984).

G. Mancini, Vita di Lorenzo Valla (Florence, 1891). L. Barozzi and R. Sabbadini, Studi sul Panormita e sul Valla (Pubblicazioni del R. Istituto di Studi Superiori Practici di Perfezionamento in Firenze, Sezione di Filosofia e Filologia, 25; 1891). J. Vahlen, 'Laurentii Vallae Opuscula Tria', Sb. (Wien), 61 (1869), pp. 7–66, 357–444, and 62 (1869), pp. 93–149; also pub. separately, ibid., 1869. G. Antonazzi, 'Lorenzo Valla e la Donazione di Costantino nel secolo XV con un testo inedito di Antonio Cortesi', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 4 (1950), pp. 186–234. F. Gaeta, Lorenzo Valla: Filologia e storia nell'umanesimo italiano (Istituto Italiano per gli Studi Storici in Napoli, 8; 1955). Giovanni di Napoli, Lorenzo Valla: Filosofia e religione nell'umanesimo Italiano (Uomini e Dottrine, 17; 1971). S. I. Camporeale, Lorenzo Valla: Umanesimo e Teologia (Florence, 1972). W. Setz, Lorenzo Vallas Schrift gegen Konstantinische Schenkung De falso credita et ementita Constantinti donatione: Zur Interpretation und Wirkungsgeschichte (Bibliothek des deutschen historischen Instituts in Rom, 44; 1975). Lorenzo Valla e l'Umanesimo Italiano: Atti del Convegno Internazionale di Studi Umanistici (Parma, 18–19 ottobre 1984), ed. O. Besomi and M. Regoliosi (Medioevo e Umanesimo, 59; 1986). G. Radetti, 'La religione di Lorenzo Valla', in Medioevo e Rinascimento: Studi in onore di Bruno Nardi, 2 (Florence [1955]), pp. 595–620. G. Zippel, 'Lorenzo Valla e le origini della storiografia umanistica a Venezia', Rinascimento, 7 (1956), pp. 93–133. C. Trinkaus, In Our Image and Likeness (2 vols., 1970), pp. 103–78 and 765 f. M. Lorsch, 'Lorenzo Valla', in A. Rabil (ed.), Renaissance Humanism, 1 (Philadelphia, 1988), pp. 332–49. R. Montano in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 522 f., s.v.

Vallarsi, Domenico (1702–71), editor of St *Jerome's writings. He was a native of *Verona, where he spent most of his life. His edition of Jerome (11 vols., 1734–42), was considerably superior to that of the *Maurists (Paris, 1693–1706) and long remained the standard text.

His edn. of the works of Jerome was repr., in J. P. Migne, PL 22–30; the edn. of the works of St *Hilary, in which Vallarsi assisted F. S. *Maffei (Verona, 1730), was repr., ibid. 9, 10; the first vol. of his edn. of the works of *Rufinus (Verona, 1745; vol. 2 not pub.) was repr., ibid. 21. 45–632. L. Federici, Elogi istorici de' più illustri ecclesiastici veronesi, 3 (Verona, 1819), pp. 134–48. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), col. 2525, s.v.

Valley of Jehoshaphat, the. See JEHOSHAPHAT, THE VALLEY OF.

Vallumbrosans. A monastic *Congregation, formerly a separate order, so named from the mother-house at Vallombrosa, some 20 miles E. of Florence. The order was founded *c.*1036 by St *John Gualbert and confirmed by Pope Victor II in 1056. After the death of the founder, the order spread rapidly. In the 15th cent. a reform of the order through *Cassinese Benedictines was instigated by *Eugenius IV, and another was effected in the 17th cent. by Bl John Leonardi. The mother-house at Vallombrosa was burnt by the soldiers of *Charles V in 1527, plundered by Napoleon's troops in 1808 and suppressed by the Italian government in 1866, but restored in 1949. The order has declined, but it still has a few houses in Italy. The Vallumbrosans joined the *Benedictine Confederation in 1966. The Vallumbrosan way of life is based on the Rule of St *Benedict, but with greater stress on austerity and penance. The order has been noted for its contribution to ascetical literature, art, and science, and for a time counted *Galileo among its novices.

There are also a few houses of Vallumbrosan nuns, at Florence and elsewhere in Italy. They trace their origin to St Bertha Bardi (d. 1163), but the real foundress was St Humilitas (d. 1310).

F. Tarani, L'ordine vallombrosano (Florence, 1921). E. Lucchesi, OSB, I Monaci Benedettini Vallombrosani nella diocesi di Pistoia e Prato (ibid., [1941]), and other works of this author. [R.] N. Vasaturo, OSBV, 'L'espansione della Congregazione Vallombrosana fino alla metà del secolo XII', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 16 (1962), pp. 456–85; J. R. Gaborit, 'Les Plus Anciens Monastères de l'Ordre de Vallombreuse (1037–1115). Étude archéologique', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 86 (1964), pp. 451–90; 87 (1965), pp. 179–208. R. N. Vasaturo and others, Vallombrosa nel IX Centenario della Morte del Fondatore Giovanni Gualberto 12 Iulio 1073 (Florence [1973]). T. Sala, Dizionario storico biografico di scrittori, letterati ed artisti dell'ordine di Vallombrosa (ibid., 1929). R. Webster, OSB, in CE 15 (1912), pp. 262 f.; E. Baccetti in NCE 14 (1967), p. 526, both s.v. See also works cited under JOHN GUALBERT, ST.

Valois, Henri de. See VALESIUS, HENRICUS.

Valor Ecclesiasticus. The official valuation of ecclesiastical and monastic revenues made in 1535. It became necessary through the legislation of *Henry VIII, and esp. the First Fruits and Tenths Act 1534, whereby the *annates of every benefice, which had formerly been paid to the Pope, together with a tenth of the annual income, were appropriated to the Crown. Its importance to the ecclesiastical historian, with its details of every benefice, may be compared with that of the Domesday Survey of 1086 to the student of secular history. It became popularly known as the 'King's Books'.

It was ed. by J. Caley for the Record Commission (6 vols., 1810–34), with general introd. by J. Hunter in vol. 1, pp. i–viii. A. Savine, 'English Monasteries on the Eve of the Dissolution', in P. Vinogradoff (ed.), Oxford Studies in Social and Legal History, 1 (1909), pp. 1–217, esp. bk. 1, pp. 1–75. [M.] D. *Knowles, The Religious Orders in England, 3 (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 241–54. S. L. Ollard in DECH (1912), p. 609, s.v. See also works cited under DISSOLUTION OF THE MONASTERIES.

van den Steen, Cornelis Cornelissen. See CORNELIUS A LAPIDE.

van der Kemp, Johannes Theodorus (1747–1811), missionary. A native of Rotterdam, he resigned from the Dutch army on making an unsuitable marriage; he then studied medicine in Edinburgh and there in 1781 published Parmenides, a work on philosophy. He underwent a spiritual conversion after his wife and daughter drowned in his presence in 1791. Soon after the formation of the *LMS (1795), van der Kemp took a leading part in the foundation of a similar body, the Netherlands Missionary Society, at Rotterdam in 1797. He was ordained as a minister in the Church of Scotland and went as leader of the three missionaries sent by the LMS to *South Africa in 1799. Though conditions prevented sustained work among the Xhoso people, his preaching was prob. heard by Ntsikana (*c.*1760–1820), the visionary Xhosa prophet and spiritual fount of all later Xhosa Christianity. Van der Kemp finally settled among the Khoi (Hottentots, later known as 'Cape Coloured') whose cause he championed. His mission settlement for them at Bethelsdorp, near Uitenhage, came under much White criticism and was the subject of a government inquiry in 1811. He lived in conditions of extreme poverty but his marriage late in life to a former slave was bitterly criticized. He was the first of the great African missionary linguists of the 19th cent.

I. H. Enklaar, Life and Work of Dr. J. Th. van der Kemp 1747 1811, Missionary Pioneer and Protagonist of Racial Equality in South Africa (Cape Town and Rotterdam, 1988). J. Sales, Mission Stations and the Coloured Communities of the Eastern Cape 1800 1852 (ibid., 1975), passim. P. B. Hinchliff in W. J. Kock and D. W. Krüger (eds.), Dictionary of South African Biography, 2 (Cape Town, 1972), pp. 774–8, s.v.

Van Espen, Zeger Bernhard (1646–1728), Belgian canonist. A native of Louvain, he was ordained priest in 1673 and became professor of canon law at Louvain university in 1675. His comprehensive knowledge soon made him a much-consulted adviser of princes and bishops, and his works, the most important of which is Jus Ecclesiasticum Universum (2 vols., 1700), are remarkable for their learning and lucidity. Van Espen vigorously defended *Gallican theories and was an ardent upholder of secular power against religious authority. In the question of the 'Chapter of Utrecht' he gave his opinion in favour of the validity of the ordination of a *Jansenist bishop, an act which led to his suspension a divinis and deprivation of his academic functions in 1728. Summoned by the Abp. of Utrecht to retract, he fled to the Jansenist colony at Amersfoort, where he died soon afterwards. All his works were placed on the *Index in 1704, and again in 1714 and 1732.

Best collected edn. of works [by J. Barre] (4 vols., 'Louvain' [Paris], 1753); [id.,] Supplementum ad Varias Collectiones Operum clar. viri Z. B. van Espen (Brussels, 1758). Anon. Life by G. du Parc de Bellegarde (Louvain, 1767; also appended to suppl. vol. of works [separate pagination]). M. Nuttinck, La Vie et l'œuvre de Zeger-Bernard Van Espen (Université de Louvain. Recueil de travaux d'histoire et de philosophie, 4th ser. 43; 1969), with bibl. E. [W.] Kemp, 'Zeger Bernhard Van Espen', Theology, 49 (1946), pp. 194–200, with further refs. A. Depreester in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 457–61, s.v. 'Espen'.

van Eyck, Hubert (d. 1426) and Jan (d. 1441), Flemish painters, renowned esp. for the Ghent Altarpiece. They were prob. natives of Maasiek, a small town on the R. Meuse downstream from Maastricht. Hubert is thought to have been the elder brother and is prob. the painter in Ghent referred to in five documents between 1424 and 1426 and buried in the cathedral at Ghent; nevertheless his connection with the Altarpiece has sometimes been denied. Jan is well documented from 1422 until his death: he was in the service of John of Bavaria (1422–4), became court painter to Philip, Duke of Burgundy in 1425, and prob. in 1430 settled in Bruges. Several signed paintings are extant. The Ghent Altarpiece, still in the cathedral of St *Bavon in Ghent, has a quatrain on the frame which asserts that it was begun by Hubert and finished by Jan, arte secundus, in May 1432. It is a very large polyptych of 12 oak panels arranged in two layers, the outer panels painted on both sides, making 24 scenes in all. The panels on the lower tier of the inside depict the Adoration of the Lamb by all conditions of men, largely derived from Rev.; other panels show Christ enthroned between St *John the Baptist and the BVM, the *Annunciation, *Adam and *Eve, and other figures. The iconography is extremely complicated; the ideas expressed have been linked with *Rupert of Deutz. Since at least the 16th cent. the van Eycks have been believed to be the inventors of oil painting; this is clearly untrue since pigments mixed with oil were in use before their time, but nevertheless they (or Jan, since no work is known as certainly Hubert's) made technical advances which permitted unprecedented realism of detail and richness of colour. All Jan's known works are in this style, and the religious ones are similar to the Ghent Altarpiece, but there are a few pictures, notably the Three Maries at the Tomb (Boymans-van Beuningen Museum, Rotterdam) and the Annunciation (Metropolitan Museum, New York), which appear more archaic in style and have been attributed to Hubert. Jan's unblinking realism is esp. notable in portraits, such as the Arnolfini Wedding (1434; National Gallery, London) and his influence as a religious artist was therefore less widespread than that of Roger van der Weyden (*c.*1400–64), whose emotional style was attuned to the spirit of pathos notable in Flemish and German devotional practices in the 15th cent.

The first scholarly investigation of the problems surrounding the work of the two brothers was W. H. J. Weale, Hubert and John van Eyck (1908; 2nd edn., abridged, with the co-operation of M. W. Brockwell, The van Eycks and their Art, 1912). L. Baldass, Jan van Eyck (London, 1952); E. Dhanens, Hubert and Jan van Eyck (New York [1980]), both with numerous illustrations. The case against the existence of Hubert was argued by E. Renders, Hubert van Eyck: Personnage de légende (1933), and in other works of this author, but is not widely accepted. The results of a laboratory examination of the Ghent Altarpiece were pub. by P. Coremans, L'Agneau Mystique au Laboratoire (Les Primitifs Flamands, Série 3, tome 2; Antwerp, 1953). E. Dhanens, Van Eyck: The Ghent Altarpiece (1973). C. J. Purtle, The Marian Paintings of Jan van Eyck (Princeton, NJ [1982]). C. Harbison, Jan van Eyck: The Play of Realism (1991). E. Panofsky, Early Netherlandish Painting (Charles Eliot Norton Lectures, 1947–8; Cambridge, Mass., 1953), 1, pp. 178–246, with notes, pp. 427–57, and illustrations, 2, plates 109–68.

van Manen, Willem Christiaan (1842–1905), Dutch biblical critic. After studying at Utrecht and holding pastorates in the Dutch Reformed Church, he was professor of Old Christian literature and NT exegesis at *Leiden from 1885 till his death. He was also co-editor of the Theologisch Tijdschrift. The opinions of van Manen, who was among the most radical biblical critics of the 19th cent., attracted attention more as curiosities than for their intrinsic importance. He maintained, e.g., that all the NT writings belong to the Sub-Apostolic period. His methods are most fully exhibited in his Paulus (3 vols., 1890–6), in which he rejected the authenticity of St *Paul's Epistles, arguing that they were the creation of a group of theologians who sought to transform primitive Christianity, which was originally a movement in Judaism, into a universal religion, with a system closely akin to *Gnosticism. He admitted that there was a historic St Paul, totally unlike the author of the Epp., but why he was taken by this school as its patron must, van Manen held, remain an insoluble mystery. Van Manen's views became widely known in Great Britain through his contributions to the Encyclopaedia Biblica (ed. T. K. *Cheyne and J. S. Black, 1899–1903).

T. Whittaker, The Origins of Christianity with an Outline of van Manen's Analysis of the Pauline Literature (1904; 3rd edn., 1914, with additional prologue, pp. xi–xxxii; 4th edn., rev., 1933).

A. Meyer in RGG (2nd edn.), 3 (1929), cols. 1958 f., s.v. 'Manen, W. C. van'.

Van Mildert, William (1765–1836), Bp. of *Durham. Of Dutch descent, he was appointed Regius professor of divinity at Oxford in 1813, made Bp. of *Llandaff in 1819, Dean of *St Paul's (in plurality) in 1820, and Bp. of Durham in 1826. He was the last Bp. of Durham with palatine rank, and was one of the founders of the university of Durham (1832). His chief works were An Historical View of the Rise and Progress of Infidelity (*Boyle Lectures, 2 vols., 1806) and an elaborate edition of the Works of D. *Waterland (10 vols., 1823–8), prefaced by a Life.

A Collection of his Sermons on Several Occasions and Charges (Oxford, 1838), with Memoir by C. Ives, pp. 3–158. E. A. Varley, The Last of the Prince Bishops (Cambridge, 1992). W. P. Courtney in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 1333 f.

Vane, Henry (1613–62), English politician. To distinguish him from his father, Henry Vane (1589–1655), he is commonly known as 'the Younger'. He was educated at Westminster and at Magdalen College, Oxford, and for a time travelled abroad, esp. in France and Switzerland, where he found encouragement for his already latent anti-episcopal and anti-monarchical views. On returning to England he decided to emigrate to America, where he became Governor of Massachusetts (1636). Before long he came back again and was appointed co-treasurer of the Navy, elected MP for Hull and made a knight (1640). In the Long Parliament he was a vigorous and bitter opponent of W. *Laud and Strafford, and one of the commissioners chiefly responsible for the *Solemn League and Covenant. He strongly disliked, however, the Presbyterian system of state-enforced discipline. He became a member of the Council of State in 1649 and its president in 1652, but latterly lost influence, owing to his opposition to O. *Cromwell's dictatorial methods. At the Restoration he was arrested, imprisoned, tried, and executed on Tower Hill, 14 July 1662.

[G. Sikes], The Life and Death of Sir Henry Vane (1662). Modern Life by V. A. Rowe (London, 1970). R. Spalding, Contemporaries of Bulstrode Whitelocke 1605 1675 (Records of Social and Economic History, NS 14; Oxford, 1990), pp. 390 f. C. H. Firth in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 116–29.

Vangeon, Henri Léon. See GHÉON, HENRI.

Vásquez, Gabriel. See VÁZQUEZ, GABRIEL.

Västerås, Ordinance of. The regulations passed by the Diet of Västerås, which Gustavus Vasa assembled on 24 June 1527 to carry through the Protestant Reformation in *Sweden. Their effect was to transfer to the Crown the enormous power hitherto possessed by the Swedish episcopate, to alienate its property, and to make the Church completely subservient to the King.

Text in Svenska Riksdagsakter jämte andra handlingar som höra till statsförfattningens historia under tidehvarfvet 1521–1718, 1, ed. E. Hildebrand and O. Alin (1887), pp. 89–95; Eng. tr. in Kidd, pp. 234–6 (no. 101). See also works on the Reformation in Sweden, cited under SWEDEN, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Vatican. The modern Papal residence in Rome on the ancient 'Mons Vaticanus', once adorned with the Circus of Nero. A Papal domicile is said to have been erected near the court of the old basilica of St Peter's by Pope *Symmachus (498–514). An earlier residence on the site was rebuilt by *Innocent III (*c.*1200) and extended by Nicholas III (1277–80). During the *Avignonese captivity (1308–77) it fell into disrepair; but as the *Lateran palace had also been seriously damaged by fire in 1309, the Vatican became the principal Papal residence after the return in 1377. The first *conclave was held here in the following year. Little of the existing building is earlier than the 15th cent. In 1410 *John XXIII restored the covered passage to the Castle of S. Angelo and in 1447 *Nicholas V began an extensive plan of building which included administrative offices and residences for the cardinals. This programme was actively carried into effect by Nicholas's successors. *Sixtus IV erected the *Sistine Chapel (1473–81), Innocent VIII the Belvedere (*c.*1490), *Julius II and *Leo X Bramante's cortile and the stanze of *Raphael, and *Paul III the Sala Regia. (For the building of the basilica, see ST PETER'S.) The present palace was completed by *Clement VIII (d. 1605), the Braccio Nuovo (designed by Raffael Stern) by *Pius VII in 1821. By the Law of *Guarantees (13 May 1871) the Vatican, the Lateran, and the Papal villa at *Castel Gandolfo were granted extraterritoriality, and additional privileges were conceded by the *Lateran Treaty of 1929. The Vatican Museum houses valuable collections of early Christian art and other antiquities, including much that was formerly in the Lateran Museum; a collection of modern religious art was opened by *Paul VI in 1973. The celebrated Library ('Bibliotheca Apostolica Vaticana') is administered by a Cardinal Prefect. Among its more famous collections of MSS are the Palatini (presented by the Elector Maximilian on the capture of Heidelberg; 1623), the Reginenses (formerly the property of Queen *Christina of Sweden; 1690), and the Ottoboniani (purchased by *Alexander VIII, Ottoboni; incorporated, 1746). See also CODEX VATICANUS.

Much information is to be found in the many good guides to the Vatican palace, intended in the first place for tourists. There are also countless monographs on the various collections. Modern general works incl. F. Ehrle, SJ, and H. Egger, Der vaticanische Palast in seiner Entwicklung bis zur Mitte des XV. Jahrhunderts (Studi e Documenti per la Storia del Palazzo Apostolico Vaticano, 2; 1935); K. B. Steinke, Die mittelalterlichen Vatikanpaläste und ihre Kapellen: Baugeschichtliche Untersuchung anhand der schriftlichen Quellen (ibid. 5; 1984); G. Fallani and M. Escobar (eds.), Vaticano (Florence [1946]); D. Redig de Campos, I palazzi vaticani (Roma Cristiana, 18 [1967]); and J. Daley and others, The Vatican: Spirit and Art of Christian Rome (New York [1982]). C. Pietrangeli, I musei vaticani: Cinque secoli di storia (Rome [1985]). The catalogues of Gk. MS collections are listed in M. Richard, Répertoire des bibliothèques et des catalogues des manuscrits grecs (Publications de l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes, 1; 2nd edn., 1958), pp. 198–202; the Lat. ones by P. O. Kristeller, Latin Manuscript Books before 1600: A List of the Printed Catalogues and Unpublished Inventories of Extant Collections (3rd edn., New York [1965]), pp. 209–14 and 279 f. J. Bignami Odier, La Bibliothèque Vaticane de Sixte IV à Pie XI (ST 272; 1973). There are also numerous studies on Vatican MSS in other vols. of ST. L. E. Boyle, OP, 'The Future of Old Libraries. The Vatican Library', Ligue des Bibliothèques Européennes de Recherche, Bulletin, 29 (1987), pp. 42–5. Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, ed. under the patronage of A. M. Stickler and L. E. Boyle, OP (Florence, 1985; Eng. tr., The Vatican Library, Yorktown Heights, NY, 1989 [popular]). P. M. Baumgarten in CE 15 (1912), pp. 276–302, s.v.;

G. Caraci and others in EC 12 (1954), cols. 1040–140, s.v. 'Vaticano'. See also bibls. to ST PETER'S, ROME; SISTINE CHAPEL.

Vatican Council, First. The Council held at Rome in 1869–70 and reckoned in the RC Church as the Twentieth *Oecumenical Council. Convoked by *Pius IX by a bull of Indiction dated 29 June 1868, it was planned to deal with a vast variety of subjects including faith and dogma, ecclesiastical discipline and canon law, religious orders, oriental Churches and foreign missions, and the relations between the Church and the civil powers. Even before the Council began, two bodies of opinion stood out clearly. The majority party, usually designated the '*Ultramontanes', were in favour of the heightening of Papal authority and of the definition of Papal infallibility. They included such distinguished laymen as W. G. *Ward in England and L. *Veuillot in France, and, among members of the Council, Abps. H. E. *Manning of Westminster and V. A. Dechamps of Malines, and Bps. L. Pie of Poitiers and I. von Senestrey of Ratisbon. The liberal minority was represented by J. H. *Newman in England and J. J. I. von *Döllinger in Bavaria, and, among the members of the Council, by F. *Dupanloup, Bp. of Orléans, and most German and many Austrian and American bishops. Of the governments none except the Russian, which forbade the Catholic bishops to attend, interfered with the Council; the French attitude, one of benevolent neutrality, was largely influenced by E. Ollivier (1825–1913), the French premier, who later embodied his views in L'Église et l'État au concile du Vatican (2 vols., 1879).

After elaborate preparations the Council began with a pre-synodal congregation on 2 Dec. 1869 at which Pius IX nominated the presidents. It was followed by the issue of the brief 'Multiplices inter' which established the procedure, acc. to which the Pope had the right of proposing questions (ius proponendi), though bishops might suggest subjects for discussion to congregations set up for this purpose. Four Deputations—on dogma, on ecclesiastical discipline, on religious orders, and on the oriental Churches—were appointed.

The business of the Council was opened by Pius IX on 8 Dec. 1869 in the presence of nearly 700 bishops. It began with a discussion on the schema 'De Fide' which had been drawn up against rationalism, naturalism, materialism, pantheism, and kindred errors. While this schema, which was criticized as too cumbrous, was being revised by the Deputation on dogma, the Council discussed matters of ecclesiastical discipline with special reference to canon law and repeatedly listened to the desire for a reform of the *Breviary.

In Feb. 1870 the procedure, which had proved very slow, was hastened by new regulations. Long debates were prevented by the application of closure and the quicker method of voting by standing up was adopted. Both measures were later much criticized by the minority. The revised constitution on Faith, 'Dei Filius', was laid before the Council on 1 Mar., and after detailed discussion was promulgated in its final form on 24 Apr. It consists of a proemium deploring the pantheism, materialism, and atheism of the time, followed by four chapters on God the Creator of all things, on Revelation, on Faith, and on Faith and Reason. The respective spheres of reason and faith were defined, esp. with a view to excluding *Traditionalism and other doctrines anathematized in the appended canons.

The public announcement that the question of Papal infallibility was to be discussed at the Council had been made on 6 Mar. After some controversy it was decided that this subject and the Primacy of the Pope, both of which divided the members of the Council, should be dealt with before the other points of the schema 'De Ecclesia'. From 27 Apr. the Deputation on dogma worked on the schema 'De Romano Pontifice'; and the debate on the 'opportunity' of the definition, which lasted from 13 May to 3 June, was ended by closure. In the debate on the Primacy which followed, the point to which the minority esp. objected was the definition of the Pope's jurisdiction as ordinary, immediate, and truly episcopal. In the debate on infallibility, the minority party desired to see the Pope's infallibility linked more closely with the infallibility of the Church by the use of some such expression as St *Antoninus of Florence's formula that the Pope 'using the counsel and seeking for the help of the universal Church' cannot err. The infallibility debate was closed on 4 July. On 13 July the definition received 451 placets, 88 non-placets, and 62 placets juxta modum, and at the Fourth Public Session on 18 July the constitution '*Pastor Aeternus' was passed by 533 placets to 2 non-placets, the remainder of the minority having abstained from voting. The definition as finally accepted disappointed the extremists of both sides. It stated plainly the infallibility of the Roman Pontiff, affirming that his definitions are 'irreformable of themselves, and not from the consent of the Church', but it restricted this infallibility only to those occasions 'when he speaks ex cathedra, that is, when in discharge of the office of Pastor and Doctor of all Christians, by virtue of his supreme Apostolic authority he defines a doctrine regarding faith or morals to be held by the Universal Church'.

On 19 July, the day after the promulgation, war broke out between France and Prussia, and the removal of the French troops from Rome and the Italian occupation of the city brought the Council to an end. It was formally suspended on 20 Oct. 1870.

The definitions of the Council, which were accepted by all the minority bishops, roused serious opposition only in Germany and Austria. In these countries some small groups organized themselves as the 'Old Catholics', and in Germany the opposition of Bismarck to the increased consolidation of Papal power issued in the Kulturkampf. J. J. I. von Döllinger, who had vigorously opposed the Council throughout, esp. in his articles in the Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung and his book The Pope and the Council (1869), also refused to submit and was excommunicated, though he did not join the Old Catholic body. The chief result in Austria was the renouncing of the Concordat by the State.

In the RC Church itself, the result of the definition of the Papal primacy and infallibility was the final settlement of the controversies that began at the Council of *Constance (1415) and had been sustained by *Gallican theologians in later times, while the constitution 'Dei Filius' provided the principles on which Catholicism was soon to make its stand against the infiltration of *Modernism into its own ranks.

Acta et Decreta Sacrosancti Concilii Oecumenici Vaticani cum permultis aliis Documentis ad Concilium eiusque Historiam Spectantibus auctoribus Presbyteris SJ e Domo BVM sine Labe Conceptae ad Lacum (Collectio Lacensis Conciliorum Recentiorum, 7; Freiburg i.B., 1892); Mansi (continuation), 49–53 (Arnhem and Leipzig, 1923–7). Decrees, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), 2, pp. 800–16. E. Cecconi, Storia del concilio ecumenico vaticano (2 vols. in 4 parts, to end of second session, 1872–9; all pub.). J. *Friedrich, Geschichte des vatikanischen Konzils (3 vols., 1877–87); T. Granderath, SJ, Geschichte des vatikanischen Konzils, ed. K. Kirch, SJ (3 vols., 1903–6). E. Campana, Il concilio vaticano (2 vols., Lugano, 1926). [E.] C. Butler, OSB, The Vatican Council: The Story Told from Inside in Bishop Ullathorne's Letters (2 vols., 1930). R. Aubert, Vatican I (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 12; 1964). K. Schatz, Vaticanum I. 1869–1870 (Konziliengeschichte, Reihe A, Darstellung; 3 vols., 1992–4). F. J. Cwiekowski, SS, The English Bishops and the First Vatican Council (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique, 52; 1971); M. O'Gara, Triumph in Defeat: Infallibility, Vatican I, and the French Minority Bishops (Washington, DC [1988]). T. *Mozley, Letters from Rome on the Occasion of the Oecumenical Council, 1869–1870 (1891; hostile). H. E. Manning, The True Story of the Vatican Council (1877). A. Vacant, Études théologiques sur les constitutions du concile du Vatican, d'après les actes du concile (2 vols., 1895). A. B. Hasler, Pius IX. (1846–1878), Päpstliche Unfehlbarkeit und 1. Vatikanische Konzil (Päpste und Papsttum, 12; 2 vols., Stuttgart, 1977). G. Thils, Primauté et infaillibilité du pontife romain à Vatican I et autres études d'ecclésiologie (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 89; 1989). J. Brugerette and É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2536–85, s.v. 'Vatican (Concile du)'.

Vatican Council, Second (1962–5). The proposal to hold this Council was apparently entirely due to Pope *John XXIII, who attributed the idea of convening such an assembly to a sudden inspiration of the Holy Spirit. He defined its immediate task as renewing the life of the Church and bringing up to date its teaching, discipline, and organization, with the unity of all Christians as the ultimate goal.

On 25 Jan. 1959 at *St Paul's outside the Walls John first made public his intention to summon a Council. Preparatory commissions and secretariats were set up by the motu proprio of 5 June 1960 and the Council was formally summoned by the Apostolic Constitution 'Humanae Salutis' of 25 Dec. 1961. The norms and procedures of the Council were settled by the Apostolic Constitution 'Appropinquante Concilio' of 5 Sept. 1962. The members of the Council were assisted by several thousand experts in theology, canon law, and Church history. There were also present in an official capacity (though without the right to speak or vote) observers from the main Churches not in communion with the RC Church.

Session I. 11 Oct.–8 Dec. 1962. Already on the second day of the Council the assembled prelates adjourned to elect their own commission members in place of those on the prepared list, and thus indicated their independence of the Roman *Curia. On 20 Oct. the Council issued a 'Message to Humanity', but when it adjourned in Dec. it had reached no formal decision.

John XXIII died on 3 June 1963 and was succeeded on 21 June by *Paul VI, who announced on his election his intention to continue the Council.

Session II. 29 Sept.–4 Dec. 1963. On 30 Oct. votes were taken which showed support for the *collegiality of the bishops, the Divine right of the episcopal college, and the restitution of the diaconate as a separate and permanent order. After the close of the session the Council promulgated a Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy and a decree on the Instruments of Social Communication.

During the recess Paul VI made an ecumenical journey to the Holy Land and met the *Oecumenical Patriarch, *Athenagoras (4–6 Jan. 1964). On 17 May 1964 the Secretariat for Non-Christian Religions was set up.

Session III. 14 Sept.–21 Nov. 1964. At the close of this session the Council promulgated the Dogmatic Constitution on the Church, the Decree on Ecumenism, and the Decree on the Eastern Catholic Churches; and the Pope proclaimed the BVM to be the 'Mother of the Church'.

Session IV. 14 Sept.–8 Dec. 1965. In an Apostolic Constitution on 15 Sept. ('Apostolica Sollicitudo') the Pope formulated the norms for the new episcopal synod which was to be established to assist him to govern the Church. On 28 Oct. the following documents were promulgated: the Decree on the Bishops' Pastoral Office in the Church, the Decree on the Appropriate Renewal of the Religious Life, the Decree on Priestly Formation, the Declaration on Christian Education, the Declaration on the Relationship of the Church to Non-Christian Religions. To these were added on 18 Nov. the Dogmatic Constitution on Divine Revelation and the Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity. The Pope also announced the beginning of the reform of the Roman Curia and the introduction of the process for the beatification of *Pius XII and John XXIII. On 4 Dec. a 'Service of Prayer (Sacra Celebratio) for Promoting Christian Unity' took place at St Paul's outside the Walls. In this the delegated observers and guests took part. On 7 Dec. were promulgated: a Declaration on Religious Freedom, the Decree on the Ministry and Life of Priests, the Decree on the Church's Missionary Activity, and the Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World. The next day the Council was solemnly closed.

The consequences of the Council have been far-reaching. The most obvious effect has been the almost complete replacement of Latin by the vernacular in the liturgy throughout the 'Latin rite', together with very considerable revision of almost all liturgical texts. The process of translation went with an increased pluralism in liturgy and in many other ways. Added to this were other changes, such as the extension of *Communion in both kinds to the laity, which collectively have brought the public worship of the RC Church fairly closely into line with that of many other W. Churches. Almost equally striking is the change in relationship with most other Churches from frigidity to warmth, including regular consultations with *Orthodox, *Anglican, *Lutheran, *Methodist, and other Churches, and close co-operation in various areas of work. Thirdly, the 'Constitution on the Church in the Modern World', while not in itself very radical, inaugurated a major shift in Church concern, esp. in 'Third World' countries, towards social and political issues (manifest above all in the work of 'Justice and Peace' Commissions). The development of a permanent married diaconate has significantly altered the shape of the RC Church's ministry, esp. in N. America. The Council's central theological debate over collegiality led to the establishment of an advisory episcopal synod meeting in Rome every two or three years, but in practice both collegiality and several other major conciliar themes such as that of 'the People of God', have made little permanent impact upon the Church as a whole. The division between a 'minimizing' and a 'maximizing' interpretation of the meaning of the Council had become, 25 years later, the central underlying issue within the RC Church, dividing Rome and 'Conservatives' on the one hand from 'progressive theologians' and vocal opinion in many local Churches on the other.

For details of legislation implementing the decision of the Council, see PAUL VI.

Acta Synodalia Sacrosancti Concilii Oecumenici Vaticani Secundi (4 sections in 25 vols. + index, Vatican City, 1970–1980). The Constitutiones, Decreta, Declarationes were issued, ibid., 1966. They are also pr. in AAS 56 (1964), pp. 97–157; 57 (1965), pp. 5–112; 58 (1966), pp. 673–744, 817–64 and 929–1120. The Acts of the various commissions appointed after the Council are contained in subsequent volumes of AAS. Convenient Eng. trs. of the official docs. by W. M. Abbott, SJ, and J. Gallagher, The Documents of Vatican II (London and Dublin, 1966), and ed. A. Flannery, OP, Vatican Council II: The Conciliar and Post Conciliar Documents (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1975; Dublin, 1981); id. (ed.), Vatican Council II: More Postconciliar Documents (Grand Rapids and Dublin [1982]). Decrees, with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), 2, pp. 817–1135. H. Vorgrimler (ed.), Das Zweite Vatikanische Konzil, Dokumente und Kommentare (3 vols., Freiburg, etc., 1966–8; abridged Eng. tr., 5 vols., 1967–9). C. Butler [OSB], The Theology of Vatican II (Sarum Lectures, 1966; 1967; enlarged edn., 1981). G. Alberigo and J.-P. Jossua (eds.), La réception de Vatican II (1985; Eng. tr., with additional ch. by A. Dulles, Washington, DC [1987]). Le deuxième Concile du Vatican (1959–65): Actes du colloque organisé par l'École française (Rome 28–30 mai 1986) (Collection de l'École française de Rome, 113; 1989); Paolo VI e i problemi ecclesiologici al Concilio: Colloquio internazionale di Studio, Brescia 19–20–21 settembre 1986 (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto Paolo VI, 7; Brescia, 1989). G. Alberigo (ed.), History of Vatican II (Louvain, 1995 ff.). A. Stacpoole [OSB] (ed.), Vatican II by those who were there (1986). A. Hastings (ed.), Modern Catholicism (1991). Three suppl. vols. of L.Th.K. (2nd edn.) are devoted to the Council, incl. Lat. text and Ger. tr. of docs. (1966–8).

Vaudois. See WALDENSES.

Vaughan, Charles John (1816–97), Dean of *Llandaff. Educated at Rugby under T. *Arnold and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1841. From 1844 to 1859 he was Headmaster of Harrow, where he made a considerable reputation as the person who restored the prestige of the school. After withdrawing his acceptance of the bishopric of *Rochester he became vicar of Doncaster in 1860, where he undertook to prepare graduates for ordination. He carried on this work all through his life, so that by his death over 450 young men, popularly known as 'Vaughan's Doves', had gone through his training. In 1869 he became Master of the Temple and in 1879 Dean of Llandaff. Here his sympathies with Nonconformity gained him considerable influence in S. Wales, and he took an active part in the foundation of the University College at Cardiff (1883/4). Vaughan was a notable preacher who combined force and lucidity of expression with warmth of feeling and conviction. He opposed contemporary critical views in biblical scholarship, but maintained close friendship with notable liberals such as A. P. *Stanley. Among his numerous publications are commentaries on Rom. (1859), Phil. (1885), and Heb. (1890) and collections of sermons, including Lessons of Life and Godliness (1862) and Words from the Gospels (1863).

Vaughan left strict instructions that no biog. should be published. Brief sketch by F. D. How, Six Great Schoolmasters (1904), pp. 138–80 ('Charles J. Vaughan, D.D., Headmaster of Harrow, 1844–1859'). R. R. Williams, 'A Neglected Victorian Divine, Vaughan of Llandaff', CQR 154 (1943), pp. 72–85. C. E. Vaughan in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 159–61.

Vaughan, Henry (1622–95), 'Silurist', English poet. Born near Brecon of an ancient Welsh family, in 1638 he was entered at Jesus College, Oxford, where he was an ardent supporter of *Charles I. He left without taking a degree, studied medicine in London and *c.*1645 began to practise at Brecon, and from *c.*1650 at his native place Newton-by-Usk. About this time a spiritual transformation took place in his life, partly due perhaps to the death of a brother and a severe illness. The poetical outcome was the Silex Scintillans (2 parts, 1650 and 1655), a collection of spiritual poems, influenced by G. *Herbert, which are marked by an atmosphere of intense and sustained religious fervour. The first volume of Silex was followed in 1652 by The Mount of Olives, a small collection of prayers and meditations, and in 1654 by Flores Solitudinis, translations from J. E. Nieremberg (1595–1658) and St *Eucherius, with a Life of St *Paulinus of Nola by Vaughan himself. Apparently through the neglect of his works by the public, he published nothing after the second volume of the Silex except a heterogeneous collection of verse which was brought out by one of his friends, 'J. W.' (prob. John Williams), under the title Thalia Rediviva, in 1678. Vaughan is usually numbered among the '*Metaphysical Poets' of the 17th cent., but his style is simpler than that of J. *Donne and less abstract than T. *Traherne's. The likeness between Vaughan's poem 'The Retreat' and W. *Wordsworth's 'Ode on Intimations of Immortality' has often been remarked but is sometimes disputed.

Crit. edn. of his Works by L. C. Martin (2 vols., Oxford, 1914; 2nd edn., 1957). Poems also ed. F. Fogle (New York, 1964) and A. Rudrum (Harmondsworth, 1976). J. D. Simmonds, Masques of God: Form and Theme in the Poetry of Henry Vaughan (Pittsburgh [1972]); T. O. Calhoun, Henry Vaughan: The Achievement of Silex Scintillans (Newark, Del., etc. [1981]); J. F. S. Post, Henry Vaughan: The Unfolding Vision (Princeton, NJ [1982]). R. D. Dunn and J. Horden in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 1230–4. See also METAPHYSICAL POETS.

Vaughan, Herbert (1832–1903), Abp. of *Westminster. Descended from an old English RC family, Vaughan was ordained to the priesthood at Lucca in 1854. For a time he was vice-president of the seminary of St Edmund's College, Ware. Having conceived the idea of founding a college in England to train missionaries, he toured S. America in 1863–5 to raise money for the purpose. In 1866 he founded St Joseph's College, *Mill Hill, whose members were commissioned to work among the Black population of the United States. At the height of the controversies prior to the First Vatican Council he bought the Tablet (1868) and for three years acted as editor, championing the *Ultramontane cause. In 1872 he was appointed Bp. of Salford, and in 1892 Abp. of Westminster. He became a cardinal in 1893. The most notable events of Vaughan's archiepiscopacy were his obtaining the permission of the authorities at Rome for RCs to attend the ancient English universities, the building of *Westminster Cathedral (begun 1895), the discussions regarding *Anglican Ordinations, which ended in their condemnation by *Leo XIII (1896), and his activities in connection with the Education Bill of 1902, which recognized his main thesis, i.e. that all schools, whether denominational or public schools, are equally the concern of the state.

Of Vaughan's family, six of his eight brothers became priests, and all six sisters entered convents. His eldest brother, Roger William Bede Vaughan (1834–83), was educated at *Downside and entered the *Benedictine Order in 1853. Appointed Prior of St Michael's, Belmont, nr. Hereford, in 1862, in 1873 he was consecrated with the title of Abp. of Nazianzus as coadjutor to the Abp. of Sydney, whom he succeeded in 1877. Bernard John Vaughan (1847–1922), who was educated at *Stonyhurst and entered the Society of Jesus [*Jesuits] in 1866, was a notable preacher. Several volumes of his Sermons have been published.

S. Leslie (ed.), Letters of Herbert Cardinal Vaughan to Lady Herbert of Lea, 1867 to 1903 (1942). Life of Herbert Vaughan by J. G. Snead-Cox (2 vols., London, 1910; abridged edn., 1934). Modern studies by A. McCormack (London, 1966) and R. O'Neil, MHM (Tunbridge Wells, 1995). E. [R.] Norman, The English Catholic Church in the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1984), esp. pp. 345–73. J. G. Snead-Cox in DNB, 1901–11, 3 (1912), pp. 550–4.

Of Roger William Bede Vaughan there is a memoir [by J. C. Hedley] in Downside Review, 3 (1884), pp. 1–27; A. E. Cahill in Australian Dictionary of Biography, 6 (Melbourne, 1976), pp. 327–9, s.v. Life of Bernard John Vaughan by C. C. Martindale, SJ (London, 1923).

Vaughan Williams, Ralph (1872–1958), English composer. The son of an Anglican priest, he was born at Down Ampney, Glos. (from which he named a hymn tune), and received his musical training at the Royal College of Music and at Trinity College, Cambridge; later he studied abroad with Max Bruch and Ravel. Apart from four years of active service during the First World War (1914–18), his life was devoted to composition, teaching, conducting, and the promotion of public interest in music. His enthusiasm for folk song and his work in that field made a distinctive contribution to English music, and markedly influenced his own style and outlook. He composed works of every kind, including nine symphonies, six operas, and many songs and choral works.

Although Vaughan Williams held only one ecclesiastical appointment, being for about three years organist at St Barnabas's in Lambeth (1895–7), he was music editor of *The English Hymnal, and helped in the preparation of Songs of Praise* and The Oxford Book of Carols. He wrote a number of hymn tunes, among them the notable Sine Nomine ('For all the saints'); his occasional works include the Te Deum* in G for the enthronement at *Canterbury of C. G. *Lang and a Festival Te Deum for the coronation of George VI. He also composed a superb *Mass in G minor, organ pieces, *canticle settings, and *anthems. He himself was a man of mystical inclination rather than specifically Christian commitment who did not fit comfortably into the Anglican choral tradition, and some of his settings for religious texts may better be described as spiritual music than as Church music designed for performance in choir.

Vaughan Williams's National Music (Flexner Lectures, 1932; pub. 1934) was repr., with other essays, 1963. His correspondence with Gustav Holst was ed. by U. Vaughan Williams (widow) and I. Holst, Heirs and Rebels (1959). [G.] M. [S] Kennedy, The Works of Ralph Vaughan Williams (1964; rev. edn., 1980); U. Vaughan Williams, R. V. W.: A Biography of Ralph Vaughan Williams (1964); these two works were written in accordance with the express wish of Vaughan Williams. The Catalogue of Vaughan Williams's Works, orig. incl. in the former, rev. as a separate vol. in 1982. H. [J.] Foss, Ralph Vaughan Williams: A Study (1950), incl. Vaughan Williams's 'Musical Autobiography', pp. 18–30; F. Howes, The Music of Ralph Vaughan Williams (1954); J. Day, Vaughan Williams ('Master Musicians' Series, 1961). N. Butterworth, Ralph Vaughan Williams: A Guide to Research (New York and London, 1990). F. Howes in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 1006–9; H. Ottaway in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 19 (1980), pp. 569–80, both s.v.

Vázquez, Gabriel (1549–1604), less correctly 'Vásquez', Spanish theologian. From his birthplace near Belmonte, he is sometimes known as Bellomontanus. He became a *Jesuit in 1569, and taught moral theology in the universities of Madrid, Ocaña, and Alcalá. He spent six years (1585–91) in Rome, but returned thence to Alcalá, where he taught till his death. His most important work is his commentary (Commentarii ac Disputationes) on the Summa Theologiae of St *Thomas Aquinas (8 vols. in all; 1598–1615), largely directed in its details against the theses of his co-Jesuit, F. *Suárez. In the discussion then raging as to the doctrine of grace, he opposed to the *Congruism of F. Suárez and R. *Bellarmine a strictly *Molinist position. His learning was immense; but it was often squandered on the discussion of useless questions and the defence of eccentric theories.

A. Astrain, SJ, Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la assistencia de España, 4 (1913), pp. 68–73. F. Stegmüller, 'Zur Prädestinationslehre des jungen Vásquez', BGPM, Supplementband 3 (Halbband 2; 1935), pp. 1287–311. J. A. de Aldama, SJ (ed.), 'Un parecer inédito del P. Gabriel Vázquez sobre la doctrina augustiniana de la gracia eficaz', Estudios eclesiásticos, 23 (1949), pp. 515–20. L. Pereña Vicente (ed.), 'Importantes documentos inéditos de Gabriel Vázquez', Revista Española de Teología, 16 (1956), pp. 193–213. R. Araud, SJ, 'Une étape dans l'histoire du traité de la conscience morale; le 'traité de la conscience' chez G. Vasquez', Mélanges de Science Religieuse, 24 (1967), pp. 3–48 and 113–52. Sommervogel, 8 (1898), cols. 513–19; 12 (1911–30; repr. 1960), cols. 857 f. and 1239; Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 608–10. J. Hellin, SJ, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2601–10, s.v., with further bibl.

Vecchioni. Members of an ancient guild at Milan officially known as the 'Scuola di S. Ambrogio', consisting of 10 old men and 10 old women. Until recent times four of them (two of each sex) made public offerings of bread and wine on behalf of the laity at the solemn celebration of the (*Ambrosian) Liturgy in Milan Cathedral. The ceremony was a survival of the primitive offerings in kind by the faithful at Mass now represented by the offertory procession.

Vedast, St (d. 539), also 'Vaast', Bp. of Arras. He was ordained to the priesthood at Toul, where he was deputed to prepare King *Clovis I, returning from his victory over the Alemanni, for Baptism. For a time he assisted St *Remigius in his mission work among the Franks at *Reims. About 499 he was consecrated Bp. of Arras, where he successfully established Christianity; and he was also charged with the diocese of Cambrai. He was venerated in England as 'St Foster' (cf. the church of St Vedast in Foster Lane, London). Feast day, 6 Feb.

Two medieval Lives, the one ascribed to St Jonas of Bobbio (7th cent.), the other by *Alcuin, in AASS, Feb. 1 (1658), pp. 792–80; crit. edn. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 3 (1896), pp. 399–427. I. Deug-Su, 'L'opera agiografica di Alcuino: la "Vita Vedastis"', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 21 (1980), pp. 665–706; repr. in id., L'opera agiografica di Alcuino (Spoleto, 1983), pp. 73–114. G. and W. Sparrow Simpson, The Life and Legend of S. Vedast (1896); E. Guilbert, S. Vaast, fondateur de l'église d'Arras (Arras, 1928). É. Brouette in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (1969), cols. 965–8, s.v. 'Vedasto', with bibl.

veil (1), Christian headdress. The veil, which was the customary feminine headdress among many ancient peoples, was worn by the Roman matron as a mark of distinction from the unmarried woman. In the Christian Church it was given to consecrated virgins by the bishop from the 3rd cent., as the symbol of their spiritual marriage to Christ. Since then it has come to be considered the most important part of the religious habit of women (cf. the expression 'to take the veil'). In most orders and congregations the veil of the professed sister is black, that of the novice white, but other colours, e.g. blue, are possible. Some modern congregations, such as the Sisters of Charity of St *Vincent de Paul, dispense with it altogether. In the C of E until about the middle of the 20th cent. female candidates usually wore a white veil at *Confirmation.

veil (2), liturgical cloths for covering various objects, e.g. the *chalice veil (q.v.), the veil used for the *ciborium while containing the sacred species, and the *humeral veil (q.v.). Acc. to a custom of the W. Church, traceable as far back as the 11th cent., all crucifixes, statues, and pictures were veiled during *Passiontide. In the Middle Ages the veiling lasted throughout *Lent, when the veils were usually of unbleached linen. In modern RC practice veiling is no longer obligatory; when used, it is from *Vespers preceding Palm Sunday to the Gloria in excelsis of the *Paschal Vigil Service, and violet veils are used except for the crucifix on the high altar on *Maundy Thursday, which is veiled in white.

Velichkovsky, St Paisy (1722–94), Ukrainian monk and spiritual writer. In 1746 he became a monk on Mt. Athos; his austerity attracted other Slavs and Romanians and his community grew so large that he transferred it to Moldavia. At Dragomirna, and later at Neamţ, he organized a huge monastery modelled on the life on Mt. Athos. He encouraged his monks to produce revisions and translations of the works of the Greek and Latin Fathers; he himself translated into Slavonic the Philocalia of Sts Macarius Notaras and *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain (1793). Through his writings and the training of disciples who became spiritual guides and monastic superiors, he started a spiritual revival which continued the *hesychast tradition and is still of influence in the E. Orthodox world. He was proclaimed a saint by the 1988 Synod of the Russian Church; feast day, 15 Nov.

A.-E. N. Tachiaos, The Revival of Byzantine Mysticism among Slavs and Romanians in the XVIIIth Century: Texts Relating to the Life and Activity of Paisy Velichkovsky (Thessalonica, 1986).

Venantius Fortunatus (*c.*530–*c.*610), Latin poet. A native of Treviso, near *Venice, he was educated at *Ravenna. About 565 he set out on a pilgrimage to the tomb of St *Martin of Tours, in gratitude for the curing of an eye-complaint. On the way he was well received at the court of Sigebert of Austrasia at Metz, where he stayed until 567. By the time he had completed his pilgrimage, North Italy had been overrun by the Lombards, and Venantius settled at Poitiers. He became acquainted with the former Queen *Radegunde, by then a nun, and Agnes, the Abbess of her community; he entered the service of the community, first as steward and, after his ordination, as chaplain. He later became a friend of St *Gregory of Tours, who encouraged him to publish collections of his poetry. Towards the end of the 6th cent. he was elected Bp. of Poitiers.

Venantius Fortunatus was the author of 11 books of occasional verse, including epigrams, elegies, panegyrics, and epitaphs, as well as some hymns; a long metrical Life of Martin of Tours, prose Lives of St *Hilary of Poitiers, St *Germanus of Paris, Radegunde, and various local celebrities; the 'De Excidio Thoringiae', a touching lament on the extinction of the royal house of Thuringia and a moving monument to his friendship with Radegunde, and the hymns which stand out as the true expression of his genius. Venantius may be regarded 'not as the last of the Roman but as the first of the medieval poets' (Raby). The technique of his poetry was that of classical antiquity handled with exceptional formal skill, but the emotional and cultural content were imbued with the Christianized spirit of the Middle Ages. He was the first Christian poet to express himself in terms of erotic mysticism, and his hymns are steeped in the Catholic spirit and Catholic symbolism. The two greatest of them, '*Vexilla Regis' and '*Pange lingua gloriosi', became an integral part of the Passiontide Office of the W. Church.

Editio princeps of his poems pub. Cagliari, 1573; fuller edns. of his works by C. Brouwer, SJ (Mainz, 1603), and M. A. Luchi, OSB (2 vols., Rome, 1786–7), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 88. 59–592, with addition, cols. 592–6; crit. edn. by F. Leo and B. Krusch in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 4 (2 pts., 1881–5). Studies by W. Meyer (Abh. (Gött.), NF 4, Nr. 5; 1901), R. Koebner (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters und der Renaissance, 22; 1915), D. Tardi (Paris thesis, 1927) and J. W. George (Oxford, 1992). S. Blomgren, Studia Fortunatiana (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1933, Filosofi, Språkvetenskap och Historiska Vetenskaper, 1, 1933 (in Band 2 of 1933), and ibid., 1934, 3, 1934 (in Band 2 of 1934)). G. M. Dreves, Hymnologische Studien zu Venantius und Rabanus Maurus (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, 3. Reihe, Nr. 3; 1908), pp. 1–54. B. de Gaiffier, 'S. Venance Fortunat, évêque de Poitiers. Les témoignages de son culte', Anal. Boll. 70 (1952), pp. 262–84. P. [J.] Godman, Poets and Emperors: Frankish Politics and Carolingian Poetry (Oxford, 1987), pp. 1–37, with bibl. Raby, pp. 86–95, with bibl. p. 489. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 337–41 (nos. 1033–52). J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 128–40; F. Brunhölzl, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters, 1 (Munich, 1975), pp. 118–28, with bibl. pp. 525 f.

Venerable. (1) In the RC Church, a title bestowed on a departed person when a certain stage in the process of *canonization has been reached. This stage has been fixed at different points in recent times; at present the title is granted only when the Pope declares that a person has led an heroically virtuous life or has been martyred. Formerly the title was popularly given on the introduction of the case before the Congregation of Sacred *Rites, and was the occasion of great celebrations; the regulations now insist that there are to be no solemn celebrations or laudatory prayers in church, and outside church all actions are to be avoided that might lead people to assume that the diocesan inquiry will certainly result in future canonization. In a less limited sense the word is used of other persons of marked holiness of life, esp. the 'Venerable *Bede'.

(2) In the C of E, the title of an *archdeacon.

Veneration of the Cross. A ceremony of the Latin Rite for *Good Friday, sometimes also called Creeping to the Cross, in which clergy and people solemnly venerate a crucifix, usually at the entrance to the sanctuary. It originated in the veneration of the relics of the True Cross in *Jerusalem (mentioned in the 'Pilgrimage of Egeria'). Subsequently the custom was transferred to Rome with relics of the Cross deposited in the church of Santa Croce in Gerusalemme, and then it spread to churches which had no relics. The prayers were originally of an extra-liturgical character and appear to date from the Carolingian era. An early description of the ceremony occurs in the Regularis Concordia. An analogous ceremony, consisting in a solemn procession, veneration, and elevation of the cross, takes place in the E. Church on *Holy Cross Day (14 Sept.) and on the 3rd Sunday in Lent.

H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 345–62. L. Gjerlow, Adoratio Crucis: The Regularis Concordia and the Decreta Lanfranci (Oslo, 1961).

Veni Creator (Lat. 'Come, Creator'). A hymn to the Holy Spirit, prob. composed in the Frankish Empire in the 9th cent. and frequently attributed to *Rabanus Maurus. It was used as the Vespers Hymn of *Whitsuntide from the 10th cent., and from the 12th cent. came to be substituted during the Octave of the feast for the usual hymn of Terce, 'Nunc Sancte nobis Spiritus'. It is also widely used outside Pentecost, e.g. at the ordination of priests and of bishops. The best-known English version is that of Bp. John *Cosin, 'Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire', included since 1662 in the Anglican *Ordinal (to replace the earlier version in the 1550 Rite). Other versions of the 'Veni Creator' are due to J. *Dryden, R. *Mant, F. W. *Faber, and E. *Caswall.

Crit. text by G. M. Dreves, Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, 2 (AHMA 50; 1907), pp. 193 f. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'L'Hymne et la Séquence du Saint-Esprit', La Vie et les Arts liturgiques, 10 (1924), pp. 395–401, repr. in his Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), pp. 37–45. H. Lausberg, Der Hymnus 'Veni Creator Spiritus' (Abhandlungen der Rheinisch-Westfälischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 64; 1979). Raby, p. 183.

Veni Sancte Spiritus. The *Sequence, sometimes called the 'Golden Sequence', for *Whitsunday. Its authorship is now usually attributed to Stephen *Langton (not *Innocent III). The most popular Eng. trs. are those of J. M. *Neale ('Come, Thou Holy Paraclete') and E. *Caswall ('Holy Spirit, Lord of Light').

Crit. text with notes by C. Blume, SJ, and H. M. Bannister, Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche, insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (AHMA 54; 1915), pp. 234–9. H. Thurston, SJ, 'Notes on Familiar Prayers. IV, The Veni, Sancte Spiritus of Cardinal Langton', The Month, 121 (1915), pp. 602–16, repr. in his Familiar Prayers (ed. J. H. Crehan, SJ, 1953), pp. 54–72. A. *Wilmart, OSB, Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), pp. 37–45 ('L'Hymne et la Séquence du Saint-Esprit'). Raby, pp. 342–4.

Veni, veni, Emmanuel ('O come, O come, Emmanuel'). The origins of both the words and the music of this well-known hymn (AM 49, EH 8), a versification of the *O-Antiphons (q.v.), are very obscure. The words have been traced back to the Psalteriolum Cantionum Catholicarum (Cologne, 1710). (J. M. *Neale's ascription of it to the 12th cent. seems wholly unfounded.) The tune, which first appeared in the Hymnal Noted (1854), is possibly founded on a reminiscence of a plainsong phrase.

The text of the words is pr. in H. A. Daniel (ed.), Thesaurus Hymnologicus, 2 (Leipzig, 1844), p. 336, and in J. M. Neale (ed.), Hymni Ecclesiae e Breviariis quibusdam et Missalibus Gallicanis, Germanis, Hispanis, Lusitanis desumpti (Oxford, 1851), pp. 57 f. P. *Dearmer, Songs of Praise Discussed (1933), pp. 43 f. For other Eng. trs. see J. Julian in J. Julian (ed.), A Dictionary of Hymnology (2nd edn., 1907), p. 74, s.v. 'Antiphon', with additional note p. 1551; J. Mearns, ibid., p. 1721, s.v.

venial sin. In moral theology, a sin which, though it disposes the soul to death and is the greatest of all evils except *mortal sin (q.v.), unlike mortal sin, does not wholly deprive the soul of sanctifying grace. The Fathers made a distinction (often supported by reference to 1 Jn. 5: 16) between grave (mortalia, capitalia) sins which could be remitted only by public *Penance and light (levia) sins, remitted by fasting, almsgiving, and esp. prayer. The modern distinction, however, goes back to the Schoolmen, esp. St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol., II (1), qq. 88, 89). It was formally approved (against M. *Luther) at the Council of *Trent (Sess. VI, cans. 23, 25, 27). Acc. to the theology of Penance, there is no obligation to confess venial sins when resorting to the Sacrament.

Venice. The present see of Venice goes back to the bishopric, founded in 774, on the isle of Olivolo, later known as Castello. It belonged to the patriarchate of Grado, the relations of which to the see of Castello were finally settled under Marco II Michele (1225–35). In 1328 Jacopo Albertini, Bp. of Castello, who was an adherent of Louis of Bavaria, crowned Louis with the *Iron Crown and was deposed in consequence. Half a century later Giovanni Piacentini (1376–78) met with the same fate for supporting the antipope Clement VII. Angelo Corrario, Bp. of Olivolo from 1380 to 1390, became (Latin) Patr. of *Constantinople and in 1406 Pope under the name of Gregory XII. Owing to constant disputes between the patriarch of Grado and the see of Olivolo both were suppressed and replaced by the patriarchate of Venice in 1451, St Lawrence Giustiniani being the first Patr. of Venice (1433–56). The *Tridentine reforms were introduced into the diocese by Giovanni Trevisano (1560), and later by Laurentius Priuli (1591–1600), who restored the cathedral and founded a seminary. The patriarchate was reorganized in 1818. Among its most important prelates of recent times were the learned Thomist, D. Agostini (1877–91), Giuseppe M. Sarto (1893–1903), later Pope *Pius X, Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli (1953–8), later Pope *John XXIII, and Albino Luciani (1973–8), later Pope *John Paul I.

The most famous church of Venice is San Marco, originally the chapel of the Doges. Destined to receive the relics of St *Mark, it was begun *c.*830 and completed in 883. Burned down in 976, it was rebuilt after the model of the Basilica of the Apostles at Constantinople from 1063 to 1071. Its plan forms a Greek cross of equal arms, the centre and each of the arms being surmounted by a dome. The interior is richly decorated with many-coloured marbles and mosaics, dating from the end of the 11th to the 17th cents. The retable of the high altar is the famous Pala d'oro, a magnificent 10th-cent. piece of goldsmiths' and jewellers' art, with additions dating from the 12th to the 15th cents., representing Christ surrounded by angels, prophets, and saints. The treasury contains a unique collection of plate and jewellery, mostly of Byzantine origin. Immediately in front of the church stands the celebrated campanile, built in 1329 and rebuilt in 1910 after its fall in 1902. Since 1807 San Marco has been the cathedral church of the patriarchate in place of S. Pietro di Castello.

Among other famous Venetian churches are the *Franciscan Santa Maria Gloriosa (1250–1338), for which *Titian painted an Assumption, and the *Dominican SS. Giovanni e Paolo (1333–90), with the tombs of the Doges. Of the many religious orders that have houses in Venice the *Armenian Benedictine Congregation of the *Mechitarists is esp. remarkable; their convent on the island of San Lazzaro is a centre of Armenian education.

S. Romanin, Storia documentata di Venezia (10 vols., 1853–61). W. C. Hazlitt, The Venetian Republic: Its Rise, its Growth, and its Fall, 421 1797 (2 vols., 1900); H. Kretschmayr, Geschichte von Venedig (3 vols., 1905–34); A. Battistella, La repubblica di Venezia ne' suoi undici secoli di storia (1921); R. Cessi, Storia della repubblica di Venezia (Bibliotheca Storica Principato, 23 and 24; 1944–6); La Civiltà Veneziana, pub. under the auspices of the Centro di Cultura della Fondazione Giorgio Cini (11 vols., Florence [1955–65]; repr., ed. V. Branca, Storia della Civiltà Veneziana, 3 vols. [1979]); P. Longworth, The Rise and Fall of Venice (1974); J. J. Norwich, Venice: The Rise to Empire (1977); id., Venice: The Greatness and the Fall (1981). M. Muraro and A. Grabar (Eng. tr. by J. Emmons), Treasures of Venice [1963]. F. Ughelli, Ord. Cist., Italia sacra, 5 (Rome, 1652), cols. 1225–406; P. F. Kehr, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum: Italia Pontificia sive Repertorium Privilegiorum et Litterarum a Romanis Pontificibus ante Annum MCLXXXXVIII Italiae Ecclesiis Monasteriis Civitatibus Singulisque Personis Concessorum, 7 (pt. 2; Berlin, 1925), esp. pp. 1–26 and 124–99. F. Tonon (ed.), Le Origini della Chiesa di Venezia (Contributi alla Storia della Chiesa di Venezia, 1; Venice [1987]), and other vols. in this series. U. Franzoi and D. Di Stefano, Le Chiese di Venezia (Venice, 1976). F. Schillmann, Venedig: Geschichte und Kultur Venetiens (1933). There are copious illustrations in La basilica di San Marco in Venezia, ed. F. Ongania with various others (15 vols., 1881–6); O. Demus, The Church of San Marco in Venice (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, 6; 1960). Archivio veneto (Venice, 1871 ff.). V. Piva, P. Paschini, and M. Muraro in EC 12 (1954), cols. 1205–21, s.v. 'Venezia', with further bibl.

Venite. Ps. 95 [Vulg. 94], from its first words ('Venite exultemus'). In the Rule of St *Benedict (ch. 9), it is prescribed at the 'vigil' (i.e. the night service which became commonly known as *Mattins), whence it found its way into the Roman, Sarum, and other *Breviaries, and in 1549 it was set in its familiar place in the BCP at the beginning of Mattins. The version of the BCP is that of the '*Great Bible'. The stern language of the concluding four verses led the revisers of the BCP of 1927–8 to propose their excision, and in the ASB the last three verses are replaced by Ps. 96: 13.

Venn, Henry (1725–97), *Evangelical divine. In 1749 he was elected a Fellow of Queens' College, Cambridge, and after holding several curacies he became vicar of Huddersfield from 1759 to 1771. Here his piety and zeal made a great impression. His The Complete Duty of Man (1763), designed to combat *The Whole Duty of Man, became popular among Evangelicals. Forced by ill-health to retire from Huddersfield in 1771, for the rest of his life he held the living of Yelling, Cambs, where he influenced C. *Simeon. His son, John Venn (1759–1813), also a prominent Evangelical and rector of Clapham from 1792 till his death, was one of the founders of the *CMS.

H. *Venn (grandson, ed.), The Life and a Selection from the Letters of the late Rev. Henry Venn (1834), with Memoir of his life mainly by John Venn (son), pp. 1–57, and list of his works, pp. 58–60. M. L. Loane, Cambridge and the Evangelical Succession (1952), pp. 119–71. M. [M.] Hennell, John Venn and the Clapham Sect (1958). J. Venn in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 207 f. See also bibl. s.v. CLAPHAM SECT.

Venn, Henry (1796–1873), *Evangelical missionary statesman. The son of John Venn and grandson of Henry *Venn of Huddersfield, he was a leading Evangelical in his generation and secretary to the *CMS from 1841 to 1872. His aim was that overseas Churches should become 'self-supporting, self-governing and self-extending'. He was instrumental in securing the appointment of the first Black Anglican bishop, S. A. *Crowther, in 1864.

Selections from his writings ed. M. [A. C.] Warren, To Apply the Gospel (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1971]), with introd., pp. 15–34, and list of his works, pp. 35–47. W. Knight, Memoir of the Rev. H. Venn (1880). T. E. Yates, Venn and Victorian Bishops Abroad (Studia Missionalia Upsaliensia, 33; Uppsala and London, 1978). M. [M.] Hennell, Sons of the Prophets (1979), pp. 68–90. W. R. Shenk, Henry Venn Missionary Statesman (American Society of Missiology Series, 6; Maryknoll, NY, and Ibadan [1983]). C. P. Williams, The Ideal of the Self-Governing Church (Studies in Christian Mission, 1; Leiden, 1990). J. Venn in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 208 f.

verger. Strictly the official who carries a mace or 'verge' (Lat. virga) before a dignitary. Today the term is commonly used for one who takes care of the interior fabric of the church. In the *Sarum Rite the verger headed the procession. The form 'virger', formerly also in general use, has been occasionally revived in a few places.

Vergil. See VIRGIL.

Vergilius of Salzburg, St. See VIRGILIUS OF SALZBURG, ST.

Veritatis Splendor. The *encyclical issued by *John Paul II on 6 Aug. 1993 expounding the fundamental principles of the ethical teaching of the RC Church. It affirms the importance of morality for humanity, and the mission of the Church to exhort, judge, and explain. It repeats earlier condemnations of *contraception, artificial insemination, and *homosexual acts. Evangelium Vitae, an encyclical issued by John Paul II on 25 Mar. 1995, applied these ethical principles to issues concerning the value and inviolability of human life.

Text pr. in AAS 85 (1993), pp. 1133–228; that of Evangelium Vitae, ibid., 87 (1995), pp. 401–522.

Vermigli, Pietro Martire. See PETER MARTYR.

Vermittlungstheologie. A school of 19th cent. German Protestant theologians. The name derives from a memorandum drawn up by F. Lücke in 1827 and published in 1828 in the first issue of the Theologische Studien und Kritiken, the leading organ of the movement. Among its chief representatives were J. A. W. *Neander, K. I. *Nitzsch, F. A. G. *Tholuck, I. A. *Dorner, R. *Rothe, H. L. *Martensen, and W. *Beyschlag. The term is also used of the speculative theology of the Hegelians K. Daub and P. *Marheineke. All endeavoured in various ways to combine the traditional Protestantism of the Reformation Confessions with modern science, philosophy and historical scholarship. Most of them owed much to F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. The mediating aspirations of the school were vigorously attacked by A. *Ritschl and his disciples, and, more recently, by the theologians of the school of K. *Barth.

E. Hirsch, Geschichte der neuern evangelischen Theologie im Zusammenhang mit den allgemeinen Bewegungen des europäischen Denkens, 5 (Gütersloh, 1954), esp. pp. 364–430. F. Traub in RGG (2nd edn.), 5 (1931), cols. 1548–51, s.v. For further bibl. see under separate representatives of the school.

Vernazza, Battista (1497–1587), *Augustinian canoness and mystic. She was the daughter of Ettore Vernazza, the friend and disciple of St *Catherine of Genoa (who was Battista's godmother). From 1510 till her death she lived in a convent at Genoa. She wrote letters, some verses, many 'Spiritual Discourses' or homilies, and some 'Colloquies' on her mystical experiences. It was at one time thought that she was the final redactor of Catherine's works, but recent scholarship has discredited this suggestion.

Opere spirituali, ed. D. Gaspare da Piacenza, 3 vols., Venice, 1588; additional vol. 4, Verona, 1602; 6th edn., 6 vols., Genoa, 1755. F. *von Hügel, The Mystical Element of Religion as Studied in Saint Catherine of Genoa and her Friends, 1 (1908), pp. 336–67. Umile Bonzi de Genova, OFM Cap., 'La Vênérable Battistina Vernazza', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 16 (1935), pp. 147–79. C. Carpaneto da Langasco, OFM Cap., in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 461–6, s.v. See also recent works cited under CATHERINE, ST, OF GENOA.

Verona. The beginnings of Christianity in Verona are described in the legendary 9th-cent. 'Carmen Pipinianum', which gives a list of its churches and of its early bishops. As its first bishop the city venerates St Euprepius (probably 3rd cent.). Its first historically attested bishop is Lucilius, who took part in the Council of *Sardica in 343. Its patron is St *Zeno (Bp., *c.*362–*c.*375). Among its later bishops were Nottingus (*c.*840), who opposed *Gottschalk; Francesco Condulmer (1439), who founded the College of Acolytes; and L. Lippomano (1548–58), who was one of the presidents of the Council of *Trent. An important synod was held at Verona in 1184, which introduced the episcopal inquisition. Till 1752 the see was suffragan of *Aquileia, then of Udine, and since 1818 of *Venice. Among the famous churches of the city are the cathedral (12th cent.), which houses *Titian's painting of the Assumption; S. Zeno Maggiore, also 12th cent.; and the 13th-cent. *Dominican church, S. Anastasia. The Chapter Library has a notable collection of MSS, including MSS of St *Augustine's De Civitate Dei (XXVIII [26]), St *Hilary of Poitiers' Super Psalmos (XIII [11]) and De Trinitate (XIV [12])—all dating from the 5th cent.; the famous 'Verona *palimpsest' in which part of St *Isidore of Seville's Sententiae has been written on leaves from a 5th-cent. MS which contained Latin versions of the Didascalia Apostolorum*, the '*Apostolic Church Order', and the '*Apostolic Tradition' (LV [53]); the 6th-cent. so-called *Leonine Sacramentary (LXXXV [80]); the *Theodosian Collection [LX [58]); and a MS dated 517 containing works of St *Sulpicius Severus, copied by the earliest known scribe of the Library, Ursicinus (XXXVIII [36]). The city suffered severely in the Second World War in the spring of 1945 but has since been splendidly restored.

'Annales Veronenses Antiqui', ed. C. Cipolla, in Bulletino dell'Istituto Storico Italiano, 29 (1908), pp. 7–81. F. S. *Maffei. Verona illustrata (4 vols., Verona, 1731–2). G. Venturi, Compendio della storia sacra e profana di Verona (ibid., 1820); A. M. Allen, A History of Verona (1910); L. Simeoni, Verona (Rome, 1929). Verona e il suo Territorio (4 vols. in 6, Verona, 1960–84). L. Franzoni, Verona: Testimonianze Archeologiche (Collana 'Monografie d'Arte', 7, ibid., 1965); also other vols. in this series. F. Ughelli, Italia sacra, 5 (Rome, 1653), cols. 523–1090. P. F. Kehr, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum: Italia Pontificia sive Repertorium Privilegiorum et Litterarum a Romanis Pontificibus ante Annum MCLXXXXVIII Italiae Ecclesiis Monasteriis Civitatibus Singulisque Personis Concessorum, 7 (pt. 1; Berlin, 1923), pp. 212–304. G. B. G. Biancolini, Notizie storiche delle chiese di Verona (8 vols., 1749–71). A. da Lisca, La Basilica di San Zenone in Verona (Verona, 1956); P. Brugnoli (ed.), La Cattedrale di Verona nelle sue vicende edilizie dal secolo IV al secolo XVI (ibid., 1987). On the Council of 1184, Hardouin, 6, pt. 2, cols. 1881 f.; Mansi, 22 (Venice, 1778), cols. 487–94; Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1117–27. G. Turrini, Indice dei Codice Capitolari di Verona (Verona, 1965). P. L. Zovatti and G. Turrini in EC 12 (1954), cols. 1289–98, s.v., with further bibl.

Verona Fathers. The popular name for the Comboni Missionaries of the Heart of Jesus, a RC religious society of priests and lay brothers dedicated exclusively to missionary work. The Verona Fathers, founded by D. *Comboni (q.v.) in 1867, received Papal approbation in 1910. The Comboni Missionary Sisters (formerly called Verona Sisters), founded by him in 1871, were approved in 1906. In the mission work of both communities priority is given to work among the Black populations of Africa and other parts of the world. The Verona Fathers began work in Egypt and the *Sudan, and later expanded their activities to *Uganda, *Ethiopia and Mozambique, *Zaire and Togo. The Comboni Missionary Sisters have missions in *Mexico, *Brazil, and Ecuador, and they also work among Black Americans in the *United States of America.

A. Gilli [MCCJ], L'Istituto Missionario Comboniano dalla fondazione alla morte di Daniele Comboni (Bologna, 1979; Eng. tr., Rome, 1979). See also works cited under COMBONI, D.

Veronica, St. A woman of Jerusalem who, acc. to a legend (prob. of French origin) first found in its present form in the 14th cent., offered her head-cloth to the Lord to wipe the blood and sweat from His face on the way to Calvary. He returned it with His features impressed upon it.

The name is applied in a late version of the 'Acts of *Pilate' to the woman 'diseased with an issue of blood' (Mt. 9: 20–2). In this account she is said to have cured the Emp. Tiberius with a miraculous portrait of Christ. *Giraldus Cambrensis mentions that she had long wanted to see Him, and that, accepting a cloth, He returned it with His features impressed upon it. He applies the word 'veronica' to the cloth, suggesting vera εἰκών ('true image') as its etymology. *Matthew Paris also applies the name to the portrait, but says that it was so called after the woman at whose request the Lord's features were impressed upon it. A portrait professing to be the original imprint, which seems to have been at Rome since the 8th cent., was translated by *Boniface VIII to St Peter's in 1297. The relic at Rome was greatly venerated throughout the Middle Ages, esp. in the 14th and 15th cents., and Milan and Jaen also claimed possession of the original head-cloth. The incident now occupies a recognized position in the *Stations of the Cross. Although St Veronica is not mentioned in the *Roman Martyrology, her feast is kept on 12 July.

The identification of Veronica with the woman 'with an issue of blood' occurs in ch. 7 of the Acts of Pilate (ed. C. Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha, 2nd edn., Leipzig, 1876, p. 239, with note; Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament, 1993, p. 175); the account of the cure of the Emp. Tiberius is preserved in the Lat. legend of the Death of Pilate (text in C. Tischendorf, op. cit., pp. 456 f.; Eng. tr. in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament, 1924, pp. 157 f., with further information, p. 158; a similar text is tr. by J. K. Elliott, op. cit., pp. 215 f.). Giraldus Cambrensis, Speculum Ecclesiae, cap. 6 (Opera, ed. J. S. Brewer, RS, 1873, pp. 278 f.); Matthew Paris, Chronica Majora, ed. H. R. Luard, 3 (RS, 1876), pp. 7 f. AASS, Feb. 1 (1668), pp. 449–57, and Jul. 3 (1723), pp. 273–9. E. von Dobschütz, Christusbilder: Untersuchungen zur christlichen Legende (TU 18; 1899), ch. 4, 'Die Veronica-Legende', pp. 197–263, with docs. and bibl. pp. 250*–335* and 157–203. K. Pearson, Die Fronica: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Christusbildes im Mittelalter (Strasbourg, 1887); A. Grabar, La Sainte Face de Laon: Le Mandylion dans l'art orthodoxe (Prague, 1931; orig. pub. in Russian, Prague, 1930); E. Kuryluk, Veronica and her Cloth (Oxford, 1991). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2962–6, s.v. 'Véronique'; A. P. Frutaz in EC 12 (1954), cols. 1299–303, s.v. See also works cited under PILATE, ACTS OF.

versicle. A short sentence, often taken from the Pss., which is said or sung antiphonally in Christian worship. It is answered by a 'response' on the part of the congregation or other half of the choir. Thus, in the services of *Mattins and *Evensong in the BCP, the words 'O Lord, open Thou our lips' and 'And our mouth shall shew forth Thy praise' are respectively versicle and response.

Vesperale. (1) A liturgical book containing the psalms, hymns, etc., used at *Vespers with their appropriate chants. For convenience the corresponding items at *Compline are also commonly added.

(2) In the W. Church, the cloth spread over the altar when not in use to keep the white linen altar-cloths free from dirt and dust. The name is derived from the circumstance that the front part of it used to be turned back when the altar was being censed at Vespers. It is now removed before the service.

Vespers. The evening service of both the E. and the W. Church and one of the oldest parts of the Divine *Office (q.v. for references to morning and evening prayers in the early Church). It was also known as 'lucernarium' (Gk. λυχνικόν), because candles were lit at its celebration. From the time of St *Benedict, however, the Office was recited before dark, and since the later Middle Ages in the afternoon and until recently on weekdays in *Lent even before midday. Until the recent rearrangement of the Offices, in the W. Church the structure of Vespers resembled that of Lauds, with five Psalms (in the Monastic Breviary, four), with their antiphons, followed by a short lesson (capitulum), hymn, the canticle *Magnificat, collect and concluding versicles. On the ferias of Advent and Lent, on certain Vigils and Ember Days the 'preces feriales' were added after the Magnificat. In the 1971 Breviary a hymn is followed by two Psalms, a NT canticle, a short lesson, short response, Magnificat with antiphon, intercessions, *Lord's Prayer, collect, and blessing. Acc. to the present RC rite, all Sundays and solemn feasts have a first and second Vespers; in the case of concurrence of the first and second Vespers of two succeeding feasts, the celebration is governed by the rules regulating the rank of the feasts. Vespers is, together with Lauds, the most important Day Office and is frequently celebrated with great solemnity, culminating in the chanting of the Magnificat, during which the celebrant censes the altar. The service of Evensong in the BCP was partly formed on the model of Vespers, with important additions from *Compline.

In the E. Church (following the Jewish custom) the day is reckoned to begin at sunset, and Vespers ('Hesperinos') is the first service of the liturgical day. The central point is the singing of the *Phos Hilaron (after a procession with incense [the 'Entrance'] on Sundays and feast days). It is preceded by the singing of Psalms, litanies and *troparia, and followed by Scriptural readings (on feast days and in Lent), more litanies, prayers and troparia and the *Nunc Dimittis. In Lent the latter part of the service is extended and includes a prayer attributed to St *Ephraem Syrus, said with prostrations. Incense is always used.

P. *Batiffol, Histoire du bréviaire romain (1893), esp. pp. 84–8 (3rd edn., 1911, pp. 108–14; Eng. tr., 1912, pp. 70–4). C. Callewaert, Sacris Erudiri (1940), no. 5, 'Vesperae Antiquae in Officio praesertim Romano', pp. 91–117. A. G. Martimort in id. (ed.), L'Église en Prière (édition nouvelle), 4 [1983], esp. pp. 279–83; Eng. tr. (1986), pp. 262–6. 'D. G. M.' [perh. Dom G. *Morin] in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2939–49, s.v. 'Vêpres'; P. C. Langeveld, OSB, and A. Hollaardt, OP, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 2798–808, s.v. See also works cited under OFFICE, DIVINE.

Vespers, the Sicilian. See SICILIAN VESPERS.

Vestiarian Controversy. The dispute concerning clerical dress begun under *Edward VI, which under *Elizabeth I became one of the foundations of the *Puritan party. Already discussed before the publication of the First BCP of Edward VI (1549), the question of vestments became acute when John *Hooper, on being nominated to the bishopric of *Gloucester (1550), refused to be consecrated in the surplice and rochet prescribed in the *Ordinal.

Although he eventually agreed to wear the appropriate vestments on public occasions, considerable laxity seems to have existed for the rest of the reign.

The restoration of vestments in 1559, and esp. the vestments in the Chapel Royal, excited opposition. Acc. to the Interpretations of 1560/1, an order apparently issued by the bishops, a cope was to be worn in the celebration of Holy Communion and a surplice at other times. Strong opposition to any vestments was voiced in the Convocation of 1563. After the failure of M. Parker's attempts in 1564 to reach a compromise with the most learned of the returned exiles, he issued his Advertisements (q.v.) in 1566 and required the use of a 'four-cornered cap, a scholar's gown priestly and in the church a linen surplice' and a cope in cathedral and collegiate churches. Thirty-seven of the London clergy who refused to promise compliance were deprived. Serious disturbances followed. Parker tried to enforce the Advertisements in other dioceses, but, with the bishops divided, laxity remained. Polemical literature and some bitterness continued throughout the reign.

The controversy was of purely ministerial origin, concerning a subject which one party regarded as indifferent and therefore fit for the legislation of the magistrate and the other a matter of real importance because of its connection with Popery. In the end most of the latter group, on the advice of the Continental reformers, acquiesced. Such opposition as remained was based less on the use of vestments as such than on the claim to freedom of conscience against the attempts of the bishops to enforce conformity, and before the end of the 16th cent. had become merged in the disputes about Church government.

J. H. Primus, The Vestments Controversy (Amsterdam diss., Kampen, 1960). W. P. Haugaard, Elizabeth and the English Reformation: The Struggle for a Stable Settlement of Religion (Cambridge, 1968), esp. pp. 182–232. See also Lives of PARKER, MATTHEW, cited s.v.

vestments. The distinctive dress worn by the clergy when performing the liturgical and other services of the Church. This dress did not, as formerly believed, derive from the vestments of the Aaronic priesthood, but originated in the ordinary secular costume of the world of antiquity in which the early Church grew up. During the first centuries a better kind of dress was probably set aside for the sacred functions, but the development of a specific priestly costume took place only between the 4th and 9th cents., one of the chief reasons being the abandonment of long tunics and cloaks by laymen and their continued use in the Church. By the 10th cent. the principal liturgical vestments and their use had been established in the W. From the 10th to the 13th cents. further minor additions and alterations were made. The *surplice was introduced as a substitute for the *alb on many occasions, the *chasuble came to be almost reserved to the celebration of Mass, and the *tunicle became the distinctive vestment of the *subdeacon. In the same period the bishops, owing to their enhanced importance in the medieval world, received additional vestments such as *sandals, *mitre, and *gloves. Since the 13th cent. the vestments have varied in form and material, the general tendency being towards reducing their size for the sake of convenience. The *Liturgical Movement, however, advocated a return to the 'Gothic' style, based on late medieval models. Subsequently there has been a revival of the earlier more flowing and ample style, which is now generally used.

The precise shape and adornment of vestments are largely dependent on the artistic style and taste of the period. In the past the RC Church has regulated the material and colour in some detail, but much is now left to the judgement of local conferences of bishops. In the Middle Ages the several Eucharistic vestments were endowed with symbolic meaning, being variously interpreted as signifying the Passion of Christ or the priestly virtues. From the 9th cent. onwards they were regularly blessed. Until 1969 special prayers were provided for recitation while they were being put on.

The principal vestments of the E. Church are similar to those of the W., though tunicle, dalmatic, and some others are not represented, whereas there is no equivalent of *epigonation and *epimanikion in the W. For the use of vestments in the C of E, see COPE, EUCHARISTIC VESTMENTS, and ORNAMENTS RUBRIC.

J. Braun, SJ, Die liturgische Gewandung im Occident und Orient nach Ursprung und Entwicklung, Verwendung und Symbolik (1907). C. E. Pocknee, Liturgical Vesture, Its Origins and Development (1960). J. Mayo, A History of Ecclesiastical Dress (1984). F. E. *Brightman in DECH, pp. 611 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 15 (pt. 2; 1953), cols. 2989–3007, s.v. 'Vêtement', with bibl.; G. Cope in J. G. Davies (ed.), A New Dictionary of Liturgy and Worship (1986), pp. 521–40, s.v.

vestry. A room in or attached to a church in which the vestments, vessels, and other requisites for Divine worship are kept and in which the clergy robe. From the fact that it was here that the parishioners formerly met to transact the business of the parish, the word came to be used both of the parochial body (which consisted of the incumbent or curate-in-charge, the persons rated for relief of the poor in the parish, whether resident or not, and the occupiers of the property so rated), and of the actual meeting. By the Local Government Act 1894 and subsequent legislation, vestries in the C of E lost all their powers except those concerned with the administration of the church and of ecclesiastical charities. In 1921 (as a result of the *Enabling Act) the administration of the church passed to the newly formed *Parochial Church Councils, though the 'meeting of the parishioners', which since 1964 has been charged with the responsibility for choosing *churchwardens jointly with the incumbent, is in substance a continuation of the former vestry meeting. In the *Episcopal Church of the USA every parish has a 'vestry', consisting of the incumbent, two wardens, and a number of 'vestrymen'. This vestry is responsible for the financial administration of the parish and exercises control over the appointment of the incumbent (subject to the bishop's approval).

Veuillot, Louis (1813–83), *Ultramontane French journalist. Born at Boynes in Loiret, of poor parents, he entered journalism in 1831. He was converted to a living Catholic faith at Rome in 1838, and in 1843 he became editor until his death of *L'Univers, a newspaper at that time of little importance, which increased in authority and acquired an international significance through his defence of the Church. The violence of his views led to his imprisonment in 1844. From 1860 to 1867 L'Univers was suspended by the French Government, but Veuillot continued in books and pamphlets to advocate his views, esp. his dislike of attempts to reconcile religion with modern ideas and his belief in Papal infallibility. During the First *Vatican Council he was so closely in the confidence of the Pope that L'Univers became an almost official organ. During the siege of 1870 Veuillot elected to remain in Paris.

His brilliant and incisive style, together with his single-minded devotion to Catholicism, made him one of the foremost defenders of the Church in 19th-cent. France. In his original stand for the freedom of Catholic teaching he was supported by the majority of French Catholics, but from *c.*1844, when he defended the temporal sovereignty of the Papacy, and esp. when he advocated Papal infallibility, he was opposed not only by freethinkers but also by moderate Catholics such as F. *Dupanloup. His published works include Le Parfum de Rome (1861), Les Satires (1863), Les Odeurs de Paris (1866) and Rome pendant le Concile (2 vols., 1872), as well as 18 vols. of Mélanges (1842–75).

Collected edn. of his works by F. Veuillot, nephew (39 vols., Paris, 1924–38). The primary Life is that by E. Veuillot (brother), cont. by F. Veuillot (4 vols., Paris, 1899–1913). The numerous other studies incl. those of E. Tavernier, Veuillot's secretary and later ed. of L'Univers (Paris, 1913), E. Lecigne (ibid., 1913), G. Bontoux (ibid., 1914), M. M. McDevitt (ibid., 1935), F. Veuillot (ibid., 1937), M. L. Brown, Jun. (Durham, NC, 1977), and B. Le Roux (Paris, 1984). E. Gauthier, Le Vrai Louis Veuillot [1939]; id., Le Génie satirique de Louis Veuillot [1953]. P. Fernessole, Les Origines littéraires de Louis Veuillot, 1813–43 (1923); id., Bio-bibliographie de la jeunesse de Louis Veuillot, 1813–43 (2 parts of a thesis, 1923). W. Gurian, 'Louis Veuillot', Catholic Historical Review, 36 (1951), pp. 385–414. Louis Veuillot et son temps: Colloque historique organisé à l'occasion du 100ᵉ anniversaire de sa mort (Revue de l'Institut Catholique de Paris, 10; 1984). E. Tavernier in CE 15 (1912), pp. 394–6, s.v.; É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2799–835, s.v.

Veuster, Joseph de. See DAMIEN, FATHER.

Vexilla Regis. The Latin hymn by *Venantius Fortunatus celebrating the mystery of Christ triumphant on the tree of the Cross. In the Roman Rite it is sung at *Vespers during *Holy Week and on the *Exaltation (14 Sept.) of the Holy Cross. The fine Eng. trans., 'The royal banners forward go', is due to J. M. *Neale.

Text, with notes and introd., in A. S. Walpole, Early Latin Hymns (1922), no. 34, pp. 173–7; text also in W. Bulst, Hymni Latini Antiquissimi LXXV (Heidelberg [1956]), p. 129. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 135–7, with refs.; id., Hymns of the Holy Cross (Medieval Classics: Texts and Studies, 7; Brookline and Leiden, 1976), pp. 15–18.

Via Appia. See APPIAN WAY.

Via Dolorosa. The route in *Jerusalem which Christ is believed to have followed from the judgement-hall of *Pilate, where He received the sentence of death, to Mount *Calvary, the site of the Crucifixion. It is marked by 14 'Stations of the Cross', and it is the traditional custom for *Franciscans resident in Jerusalem to conduct devotions along it every Friday.

via media (Lat., 'the middle way'). A term in use esp. by J. H. *Newman and other *Tractarians for the *Anglican system as a middle road between 'Popery' and 'Dissent'. This conception of Anglicanism is already found in English divines of the 17th cent., e.g. G. *Herbert and S. *Patrick.

Via Ostiensis. See OSTIAN WAY.

Vianney, J.-B. M., St. See CURÉ D'ARS, THE.

Viaticum (Lat., 'provision for a journey'; Gk. ἐφόδιον). The Holy Communion given to those in likelihood of immediate death to strengthen them with grace for their journey into eternity. Acc. to W. usage it can be given at any time of the day and the ordinary regulation requiring fasting (until 1955, from the preceding midnight) is dispensed.

P. Browe, SJ, 'Die Sterbekommunion im Altertum und Mittelalter', ZKT 60 (1936), pp. 1–54 and 211–40. G. Grabka, OFM Conv., 'Christian Viaticum: A Study of its Cultural Background', Traditio, 9 (1953), pp. 1–43. R. Rutherford, The Death of a Christian (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 7; New York [1980]), esp. pp. 42 f. and 66. A. Bride in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2842–58, s.v.

vicar. In the C of E, every incumbent of a parish is now a rector or a vicar. Originally, all incumbents were *rectors, entitled to the tithes and other revenues of the parish without deduction. In medieval times, these profits were often *appropriated to other bodies, such as monasteries, who would then be compelled to appoint and endow a vicar (Lat. vicarius, 'a substitute') as their deputy for performance of the parochial duties. About one third of the *tithes were usually set apart for the vicar's maintenance (the 'vicarial' or 'small' tithes), the remainder ('rectorial' or 'great' tithes) being reserved for the monastery or other appropriator. In certain cases, the rector was permitted to put in a curate, who was not endowed and had no security, but at the *dissolution of the monasteries these curacies became *perpetual. They were given the title of vicar by the Incumbents Act 1868 and were converted into vicarages in law by the Pastoral Measure 1968 s. 87. As parish priest a vicar has exactly the same spiritual status as a rector, and the forms of *institution and *induction are identical, since in both cases he holds his full spiritual jurisdiction from the *bishop. Subject to the personal rights of the bishop and to the Extra-Parochial Ministry Measure 1967, he has the exclusive cure of souls and conduct of divine service in his parish, unless he is in a *team or group ministry.

Vicar Apostolic. The name given to a RC ecclesiastic who is entrusted with the pastoral care of certain people in an area, generally in missionary countries, which for special reasons has not yet been constituted into a diocese. He governs in the name of the Pope, and is usually a titular bishop. The origins of the office go back to the 17th cent., but the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici (can. 371) does not specify the legal position of the Vicar Apostolic in any detail. The RC community in England was ruled by Vicars Apostolic from 1623 until 1850. At present there are Vicars Apostolic in Kuwait, Tripoli, and Istanbul, for example.

B. Hemphill, OSB, The Early Vicars Apostolic of England 1685–1750 (1954).

Vicar of Christ. A title of the Roman Pontiff dating from the 8th cent. From the 13th cent. it completely superseded the older title, 'Vicar of St *Peter'. It expresses his claim to universal jurisdiction in virtue of Christ's words to Peter, 'Feed my lambs. . . . Feed my sheep' (Jn. 21: 15 ff.). Down to the 9th cent. other bishops sometimes called themselves Vicars of Christ, though probably not as a formal title. For another four centuries kings and even judges were sometimes so described.

A. *Harnack, 'Christus Praesens—Vicarius Christi. Eine kirchengeschichtliche Skizze', Sb. (Berl.), 1927, pp. 415–46. M. Maccarrone, Vicarius Christi: Storia del titolo papale (Lateranum, NS 18; 1952), with refs.

Vicar General. An official whom a bishop deputes to represent him in the exercise of his jurisdiction. In early times his functions were mostly performed by the *archdeacons, but by the end of the 13th cent. the office had become well established and its duties were exactly defined in the *Sext of *Boniface VIII. No member of a *mendicant order was permitted to fill the office.

In the C of E the office is nowadays ordinarily committed to the *Chancellor of the Diocese, together with that of *Official Principal. In *Sodor and Man, however, it survives as a separate office. Each archbishop also has a Vicar General who holds a court for the confirmation of bishops which 'praeconizes' opposers to appear and produce evidence against the validity of the election or the qualifications of the elected candidate.

In the RC Church it is now obligatory for a bishop to appoint a Vicar General. For current legislation, see CIC (1983), cans. 475–81.

M. A. Campagna, Il vicario generale del vescovo: Una sinossi storica e commento (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, 66; Washington, DC, 1931). E. Fournier, Les Origines du vicaire général (1922; also in id., L'Origine du vicaire général et des autres membres de la Curie diocésaine, 1940, pp. 283–400).

Vicelin, St (*c.*1090–1154), 'Apostle of Holstein'. A native of Hameln, he studied at the Paderborn cathedral school and from *c.*1123 to 1126 in Laon. He was ordained priest by St *Norbert in 1126 and in the same year was sent by Adalbero, Bp. of Bremen, as a missionary to the pagan Wagrians. From 1127 he worked in Holstein, and despite constant revolts of the Wend population founded the monasteries of *Augustinian Canons at Neumünster and Faldera and a great number of other churches. After the unfortunate Crusade of the Wends in 1147 had destroyed all his labours, he was consecrated Bp. of Oldenburg in 1149, but, declining to be *invested by Henry the Lion, Count of Saxony, was not recognized by him as bishop. The ensuing political dissensions darkened his last years; he became partly paralysed and lost the use of his tongue two years before his death. Feast day, 12 Dec.

The principal sources are Helmold of Bosau, Chronica Slavorum, capp. 42–79 (ed. B. Schmeidler, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, 1909, pp. 84–149; Eng. tr. by F. J. Tschan, Records of Civilization, 21, New York, 1935, pp. 140–208), and a metrical Life ascribed to Sidon of Neumünster and a letter of the same Sidon (pr. by B. Schmeidler, op. cit., pp. 219–45). R. Haupt, Nachrichten über Wizelin den Apostel der Wagern und seine Kirchenbauten (3 vols., 1913–16). F. Hestermann, Sankt Vizelin, Apostel der Holsten und Wagrier (Dülmen i.W., 1926).

Vico, Giovanni Battista (1668–1744), Italian jurist and philosopher. The son of a Neapolitan bookseller, he was educated in a *Jesuit school and at Naples University, where he became Professor of Rhetoric in 1697. In 1734 he was appointed historiographer to Charles III. He died after a period of mental disturbance.

Vico's chief work was his Principii di una scienza nuova d'intorno alla natura comune delle nazioni (1725; 2nd edn., enlarged, 1730; 3rd edn., further enlarged, 1744). The treatise (commonly known as the Scienza nuova) was the first attempt in modern times to expound a philosophy of history. Vico responded to R. *Descartes's attack on the value of historical study by drawing a distinction between the aims and methods of natural science and those of history; the realm of nature, he argued, being a divine and not a human creation, is largely obscure to human beings, whereas history, which describes the behaviour of human beings, is a human creation and therefore open to human understanding: 'the world of civil society has certainly been made by men, and its principles are therefore to be found in the modifications of our human mind'. In his understanding of the past, Vico distinguished three ages: that of the gods, of heroes, and of men. In the age of gods men interpreted the world around them in terms of divine beings; the heroic age was a 'barbarous' age in which might was right; the age of men is the period of civil society. Each age has its good and bad points; their succession is not progress, and regression (ricorso) is observable (e.g. the Middle Ages was a return to the heroic age). Language and the nature of ritual and myth are keys to the understanding of society; esp. through the use of metaphor, they reveal its values. Vico also resisted the tendency among his contemporaries to explain similarities between geographically remote areas in terms of influence or diffusion.

Vico's immensely suggestive ideas have appealed to many later thinkers. The great French historian J. Michelet (1798–1874) claimed him as the inspiration for his romantic understanding of history with its emphasis on the character of peoples; B. *Croce found warrant in Vico for his cultural relativism; more recently Vico's support has been sought for the notion of social science, as well as for the impossibility of such a study.

Standard edn. of his works by G. *Gentile, F. Nicolini, and B. Croce (Scrittori d'Italia, 11, 67, 112, 113, 135, 160–2, 168, 174, and 183; Bari, 1914–41). Opere Filosofiche, also ed. P. Cristofolini (Florence [1971]). Eng. tr. of Selected Writings, ed. and tr. by L. Pompa (Cambridge, 1982); also of his autobiog. by M. H. Fisch and T. G. Bergin (Ithaca, NY, 1944), and of Scienza nuova by idd. (ibid., 1948; rev. edn., 1968). R. Flint, Vico (Blackwood's Philosophical Classics, 9; 1884). B. Croce, La filosofia di Giambattista Vico (Saggi Filosofici, 2; Bari, 1911; Eng. tr. by R. G. Collingwood, 1913). H. P. Adams, The Life and Writings of Giambattista Vico (1935). I. Berlin, Vico and Herder (1976), pp. 1–142. G. Tagliacozzo and D. P. Vereme (eds.), Giambattista Vico's Science of Humanity (Baltimore and London [1976]). B. A. Haddock, Vico's Political Thought (Swansea, 1986). J. Milbank, The Religious Dimension in the Thought of Giambattista Vico 1668 1774 (Studies in the History of Philosophy, 23 and 32; Lewiston, NY, etc. [1991–2]). J. Mali, The Rehabilitation of Myth: Vico's 'New Science' (Cambridge, 1992). Introd. by [U.] P. Burke, Vico (Past Masters, Oxford, 1985). B. Croce, Bibliografia vichiana, ed. F. Nicolini (2 vols., Naples, 1947–8); M. Donzelli, Contributo alla bibliografia vichiana (1948 70) (Studi vichiani, 9; 1973); A. Battistini, Nuovo contributo alla bibliografia vichiana (1971 80) (ibid. 14; 1983). G. Tagliacozzo and others, A Bibliography of Vico in English 1884–1984 (Bowling Green, Oh. [1986]). P. Gardiner in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 8 (1967), pp. 247–51, s.v.

Victimae Paschali (Lat., 'To the Paschal Victim'). The Easter *Sequence in the W. Church. It is a short, dramatic hymn celebrating Christ's triumphant conquest of death, and was composed by *Wipo (d. after 1046).

Crit. edn. of text in C. Blume, SJ (ed.), Sequentiae Ineditae: Liturgische Prosen des Mittelalters, 4 (AHMA 34; 1900), no. 23, pp. 27 f. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 372–4, with refs.

Victor I, St (d. 198), Pope from 189. Acc. to the '*Liber Pontificalis' he was an African by birth. His name is chiefly connected with the *Quartodeciman controversy, for the settlement of which he ordered synods to be held throughout Christendom. He himself assembled a Council at *Rome and threatened *Polycrates of Ephesus and other bishops of Asia Minor with excommunication if they refused to give up their practice of keeping *Easter on 14 Nisan instead of the following Sunday. When he actually carried out his threat, St *Irenaeus and other bishops blamed his severity, but the fact that the Churches in Asia Minor remained in communion with Rome would suggest that the Pope took back his sentence. The whole incident is an important step in the history of the Papal supremacy. Among other incidents of Victor's pontificate were the deposition of the presbyter Florinus for defending *Valentinian doctrines and the excommunication of the leather merchant, *Theodotus, the founder of Dynamic *Monarchianism. Acc. to St *Jerome, Victor was the first Latin ecclesiastical writer, but it seems that he wrote nothing but his encyclicals, which would naturally have been issued in both Latin and Greek. Though venerated as a martyr in the Liturgy, there is no other evidence that he died by violence. Feast day, 28 July; suppressed in 1969.

Jaffé, 1, pp. 11 f. The principal authorities are LP (ed. Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 137 f., and *Eusebius, HE 5. 23 f. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, 1 (1930), esp. 19–22. H. von Campenhausen, 'Ostertermin oder Osterfasten? Zum Verständnis des Irenäusbriefs an Viktor', VC 28 (1974) pp. 114–38, with bibl. Fliche and Martin, 2 (1935), pp. 90–3, with bibl. p. 87. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2862 f., s.v. See also bibl. to PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES and QUARTODECIMANISM.

Victor (5th cent.), presbyter of *Antioch. His name is attached to what has been described as a Gk. commentary on Mk., but is really a compilation from earlier exegetical writings (*Origen, *Titus of Bostra, *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Chrysostom, *Cyril of Alexandria) on Mt., Lk., and Jn. *Catena fragments on other biblical Books, notably on Jer., are also ascribed to him.

No crit., or even complete, text exists. Older edns. of the commentary on Mk. by P. Possinus, SJ (Rome, 1673), C. F. Matthaei (Moscow, 1775), and J. A. *Cramer, Catenae in Evangelia S. Matthaei et S. Marci (Oxford, 1840), pp. 259–447. Modern discussion of problems in J. Reuss, Matthäus-, Markus- und Johannes-Katenen nach den handschriftlichen Quellen untersucht (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 18, Hefte 4–5; 1941), pp. 118–41. H. Smith, 'The Sources of Victor of Antioch's Commentary on Mark', JTS 19 (1918), pp. 350–70. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 255 f. (nos. 6529–34). G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2872–4, s.v.

Victor, St (d. 554), Bp. of Capua from 541. He was the author of many writings, including a treatise on Noah's ark ('Reticulus') and a Paschal cycle; but his most celebrated work is a Harmony of the Gospels, made on the basis of the *Vulgate text, preserved in the so-called *Codex Fuldensis (q.v.). Feast day, 17 Oct.

Apart from the 'Codex Fuldensis', Victor's writings survive only in frags. Texts collected by J. B. *Pitra from 'De Reticulo seu de Arca Noe' in Spicilegium Solesmense, 1 (1852), pp. 287–9; from 'De Cyclo Paschali', ibid., pp. 296–301; from 'De Resurrectione Domini', ibid., p. liv. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), p. 308 f. (nos. 953a–956). G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2874–6; V. Loi in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3606 f.; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 868. See also bibl. to CODEX FULDENSIS.

Victor (late 5th cent.), 'Vitensis', Bp. of Vita in N. Africa. He wrote 'Historia Persecutionis Africanae Provinciae', a history of the persecution of the Catholic Church in Africa by the Arian Vandals under Gaiseric and Huneric (429–84). Its 2nd and 3rd books, based on contemporary material and the author's own experiences, are of special value as giving not only a trustworthy account of the historical events, but also a vivid picture of the political and religious civilization of the country. The work, which was written *c.*488 in exile, contains several official documents, and appended to it is a 'Notitia Africae' for 484, i.e. a list of the Catholic bishops of the African Vandal Empire. The 'Passio Septem Monachorum', added to the history in some older editions, is not by Victor but belongs to a later period.

Editio princeps of his 'Historia' by Jehan Petit, Paris, *c.*1510. Later edn. by T. *Ruinart, OSB, ibid., 1694, repr., with dissertations by J. *Sirmond, SJ, and others, in J. P. Migne, PL 58. 125–434. Crit. edns. by C. Halm in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 3 (pt. 1; 1879), and M. Petschenig in CSEL 7, 1881. C. Courtois, Victor de Vita et son œuvre (Algiers, 1954). H.-J. Diesner, 'Sklaven und Verbannte, Märtyrer und Confessoren bei Victor Vitensis', Philologus, 106 (1962), pp. 101–120. S. Costanza, 'Vittore di Vita e la Historia persecutionis Africanae provinciae', Vetera Christianorum, 17 (1980), pp. 229–68. L. *Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, 3 (1910), pp. 625–45; Eng. tr. (1924), pp. 430–41. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 550–2. S. Costanza in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3609–12, s.v. 'Vittore di Vita'; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 868 f., with bibl.

Victoria, Tomás Luis de (1548–1611), Spanish composer. A native of Ávila, he studied in Rome at the Collegio Germanico, of which he became 'maestro di cappella' in 1573. Ordained priest in 1575, he joined St *Philip Neri's *Oratorians before returning to Spain by 1587 to become chaplain to the Dowager Empress Maria (sister of *Philip II), and 'maestro' of the choir of the Madrid convent where she lived. Here he remained until his death, serving in the less demanding role of organist from 1604. His compositions, which were mostly printed in his lifetime, consist entirely of sacred music. Imbued with a strong mystical Iberian feeling, they rank among the greatest music of the Renaissance. His best-known works include a six-part Requiem, and music for *Holy Week, including the motet 'O vos omnes'.

Complete works ed. F. Pedrell (8 vols., Leipzig, 1902–13); rev. edn. by H. Anglés (Monumentos de la música española, 25, 26, 30, 31, etc.; Rome, 1965 ff.). F. Pedrell, Tomás Luis de Victoria Abulense (Valencia, 1918). R. [M.] Stevenson, Spanish Cathedral Music in the Golden Age (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1961), pp. 345–464. Id. in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 19 (1980), pp. 703–9.

Victorines. The *canons regular of the former abbey dedicated to St *Victor at *Paris. The house was founded by *William of Champeaux (the most famous scholar of his day and teacher of *Abelard) and built in 1113 at the cost of King Louis VI. The 'customs' of the house, which were drawn up under the influence of St *Bernard, acquired considerable prestige. But though the Victorines enjoyed great respect, they never became large in numbers. Many famous scholars, mystics, and poets were found in their ranks, esp. during the 12th cent., among them *Adam of St-Victor, *Hugh of St-Victor, *Richard of St-Victor, and *Walter of St-Victor (qq.v.). The abbey was secularized at the outbreak of the French Revolution.

Liber Ordinis Sancti Victoris Parisiensis, ed. L. Jocqué and L. Milis (CCCM 61; 1984). F. Bonnard, Histoire de l'abbaye royale et de l'ordre des chanoines réguliers de Saint-Victor de Paris (2 vols. [1904–8]). J. Chatillon, 'De Guillaume de Champeaux à Thomas Gallus. Chronique d'histoire littéraire et doctrinale de l'école de Saint-Victor', Revue du moyen âge latin, 8 (1952), pp. 139–62 and 249–72. J. Longère (ed.), L'Abbaye Parisienne de Saint-Victor au Moyen Âge: Communications présentées au XIIIe Colloque d'Humanisme médiéval de Paris (1986–1988) (Bibliotheca Victorina, 1; 1991).

Victorinus, St (d. *c.*304), Bp. of Pettau (Poetovio) in Pannonia. Acc. to St *Jerome he was martyred, probably under *Diocletian. Victorinus is the earliest known exegete of the Latin Church, but nearly all his works are lost, probably on account of his *millenarianist tendencies, which caused them to be condemned as apocryphal by the '*Decretum Gelasianum'. He followed *Origen and other Greek commentators, but Jerome finds fault with both his style and his erudition. Of his many commentaries only that on Rev. survives. It has come down in a 15th-cent. *Vatican MS (Ottob. lat. 3288 A) and in a working-over of it by Jerome. The treatise 'De Fabrica Mundi', though not, as formerly believed, part of his commentary on Gen., is almost certainly also to be assigned to him. The attribution of the Pseudo-Tertullianic 'Adversus omnes haereses' (De Praescr. 46–53), to Victorinus (A. *Harnack) is improbable. Acc. to E. *Schwartz, however, Victorinus translated it from a Greek original. Feast day, 2 Nov.

The only crit. text is that of J. Haussleiter in CSEL 49 (1916). Older texts, with prolegomena, partly repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 5. 281–344. M. Dulaey, Victorin de Poetovio, premier exégète latin (2 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1993). E. Schwartz, Zwei Predigten Hippolyts (Sb. (Bayr.), 1936, Heft 3), p. 43. Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 657–63; Altaner and Stuiber (1966), pp. 182 f. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 79 f. (nos. 79–83). J. Haussleiter in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 614–19; G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 1; 1950), cols. 2882–7; C. Curti in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 3612–5, s.v. 'Vittorino di Petovio'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 867, s.v., with bibl.

Victorinus Afer, Caius (or Fabius) Marius (4th cent.), rhetor and theologian. A native of Africa, he taught in Rome, where he gained a great reputation. About the middle of the century he became a Christian, resigned his rhetorship under *Julian in 362 (an event which excited much comment, and contributed towards determining *Augustine to follow his example in 386), and wrote theological works against the *Arians. The notorious obscurity of his manner of writing is very largely due to the fact that he was translating difficult philosophical Greek into Latin in an attempt to make use of a form of 4th-cent. *Neoplatonic metaphysics to elucidate and defend the Nicene doctrine of the Trinity. Modern research has shown that it is probable that he was closely following *Porphyry's development of the thought of *Plotinus in a direction very different from that taken by later Neoplatonists. The result is a philosophical theology of great power, though restricted in its influence because of the difficulty of the language and thought. Both in method and in conclusions he occasionally anticipates Augustinian positions, e.g. in his treatment of the Pauline doctrine of *justification.

In his pagan period Victorinus commented extensively on Cicero; translated some writings of *Aristotle and the 'Isagoge' of Porphyry, and prob. also part of Plotinus' 'Enneads'; and wrote some original philosophical works. His surviving Christian writings consist of what are collectively known as his works on the Trinity, namely a letter to Candidus, an Arian (De Generatione Verbi Divini), four books Adversus Arium (also addressed to Candidus), to which are appended a short treatise De Homoousio recipiendo and three hymns on the Trinity; and comm. on Eph., Gal., and Phil.

Apart from the collected edn. in J. P. Migne, PL 8. 993–1310, which is a compilation from earlier edns. of particular works by J. *Sirmond, SJ, J. *Mabillon, OSB, A. *Mai, and others, the first complete edn. is that projected in CSEL, of which two vols. have so far appeared (Opera Theologica, i.e. the writings on the Trinity, ed. P. Henry, SJ, and P. Hadot, CSEL 83/1; 1971, and Opera Exegetica, i.e. the comm. on Eph., Gal., and Phil., ed. F. Gori, ibid. 83/2; 1986). An earlier edn. of the treatises on the Trinity, ed. P. Henry, SJ, with introd., notes, and Fr. tr. by P. Hadot (SC 68–9; 1960). Eng. tr. by M. T. Clark, RSCJ (Fathers of the Church, 69; Washington DC, 1981). Ars grammatica, ed., with Italian tr., by I. Mariotti (Florence, 1967). E. Benz, Marius Victorinus und die Entwicklung der abendländischen Willensmetaphysik (1934). P. Hadot, Marius Victorinus: Recherches sur sa vie et ses œuvres (1971). Id., Porphyre et Victorinus (2 vols. [1968]). A. Ziegenaus, Die trinitarische Ausprägung der göttlichen Seinsfülle nach Marius Victorinus (Münchener Theologische Studien, Abteilung II, Bd. 41; 1972). A. *Souter, The Earliest Commentaries on the Epistles of St Paul (1927), pp. 8–38. W. Erdt, Marius Victorinus Afer, der erste lateinische Pauluskommentator (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 23, Bd. 135; 1980). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, 3 (1905), pp. 373–422. Altaner and Stuiber (1978 edn.), pp. 368 f. and 626. C. *Gore in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 1129–38, s.v. 'Victorinus (6)'; P. Séjourné, OSB, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2887–954, s.v.

Victorius, Claudius Marius (d. 425/30), rhetor. A native of Marseilles, he wrote, in three books of hexameters, the poem Alethia, a paraphrastic commentary on Gen. from the Creation to the fall of *Sodom. It owes much to St *Ambrose's Hexaemeron.

Crit. edns. of Alethia by C. Schenkl (CSEL 16, 1888, pp. 335–498) and by P. F. Hovingh (CCSL 128, 1960, pp. 115–93). H. H. Homey, Studien zur Alethia des Claudius Marius Victorius (Diss., Bonn, 1972). Altaner and Stuiber (1978 edn.), pp. 411 f., and 636.

Victricius, St (*c.*330–*c.*407), Bp. of Rouen from *c.*386. As a young man he entered the army. Becoming a Christian not long afterwards, he renounced the military profession as incompatible with his new faith and, acc. to St *Paulinus of Nola, narrowly escaped execution on a charge of desertion. He is next heard of as Bp. of Rouen, where he became a zealous defender of the faith against pagans and heretics, and undertook mission work as far afield as Flanders, Hainault, and Brabant. About 396 he was called to Britain to settle some ecclesiastical dispute. He also visited Rome. He was the recipient of a celebrated decretal ('Liber Regularum') on disciplinary matters sent by Pope *Innocent I in 404. His 'De Laude Sanctorum' (based on a sermon) provides valuable evidence concerning the cult of relics and other aspects of contemporary religious life. He was a close friend of Paulinus of Nola and an admirer of St *Martin of Tours. Feast day, 7 Aug.

The Liber de Laude Sanctorum is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 443–58; crit. edn. by J. Mulders, SJ, and R. Demeulenaere in CCSL 64 (1985), pp. 53–93, with bibl. pp. 64 f. Text also pr., with Fr. tr., in R. Herval, Origines Chrétiennes [1966], pp. 108–53. The principal source for his life is the two letters by Paulinus of Nola, Epistolae, 18 (ed. W. Hartel, CSEL 29, 1894, pp. 128–37) and 37 (ibid., pp. 316–23). The letter from Innocent to Victricius is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 469–81. Study by J. Mulders, SJ (Rome diss., Nijmegen, 1956). P. Andrieu-Guitrancourt, 'Essai sur saint Victrice, l'Église et la province ecclésiastique de Rouen aux derniers temps gallo-romains', Année Canonique, 14 (1970), pp. 1–23; C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311 440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 244; 2 vols., 1976), 2, pp. 982–91. J. Fontaine, 'Victrice de Rouen et les origines du monachisme dans l'Ouest de la Gaule (IV^e–VI^e siècles)', in L. Musset (ed.), Aspects du Monachisme en Normandie (IV^e-XVIII^e siècles): Actes du Colloque Scientifique de l''Année des Abbayes Normandes', Caen, 18–20 octobre 1979 (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire ecclésiastique de la France, 1982), pp. 9–29. S. Prete in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (Rome, 1969), cols. 1310–15, s.v. 'Vittricio'.

Vidi Aquam (Lat., 'I beheld water'). In the W. Church, the anthem traditionally sung in Eastertide during the sprinkling of the congregation at Mass on Sundays, in place of the *Asperges sung during the rest of the year. Both anthems may now be replaced by other suitable chants. The words of the 'Vidi aquam' are based on a combination of verses from Ezek. 47.

L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 1 (1932), pp. 479 f.

Vieira, António (1608–97), Portuguese theologian. Of humble origins, Vieira was born in Lisbon, but when he was 6 his family moved to Bahia in Brazil. Here he was educated by the *Jesuits and entered the Society of Jesus in 1623. From an early age he was drawn towards missionary work, but in 1641 he was sent back to Lisbon. His preaching gained him considerable influence at court and King John IV appointed him preacher of the royal chapel in 1644 and sent him on a number of (not altogether successful) diplomatic missions. On Vieira's advice the King organized a chartered company (incorporated in 1649) for the Brazilian trade, financed by Jewish capital; the capital invested was to be exempted from confiscation by the *Inquisition.

In 1652 Vieira was sent by the Jesuits to refound the missions to the Maranhão and Grão Pará which had lapsed on the death of the last missionaries in 1649. His most notable achievement in this field was the conversion of the Nheengaíbas on the island of Marajó. His persistent efforts to uphold the freedom of the Amerindians against the attempts of the colonists to exploit them created difficulties, especially after the death of John IV in 1656, and in 1661 he was compelled to return to Portugal. After a palace revolution he was arraigned before the Inquisition on account of a work in which he prophesied the resurrection of John IV; he was imprisoned for two years and suffered much humiliation. In 1669 he went to Rome to plead his own cause and on behalf of the Jews converted to Christianity (the 'New Christians' as they were called). In Rome his preaching won him fame, and he was later invited by Queen Christina of Sweden to be her confessor. The Pope imposed a seven-year ban on Inquisitorial trials and autos de fe in Portugal (1674) and Vieira returned to Portugal with a brief (1675) exempting him from the jurisdiction of the Portuguese Inquisition. In 1681 he sailed for Bahia, where he spent the rest of his life. From 1688 to 1691 he was Visitor-General of the Brazil and Maranhão missions, and he continued to espouse the cause of the Amerindians.

Vieira's sermons are masterpieces of Baroque pulpit oratory, famous in their time and since for their brilliant flights of imagination and compelling style. Vieira was a man of considerable political acumen, but was also strongly influenced by Messianic and *chiliastic beliefs. In both his sacred and his secular writings there appears his conviction that the Catholic Church, through the agency of Portugal, would soon prevail throughout the world and prepare the way for the Second Coming.

Sermões pub. in 16 vols., Lisbon, 1679–1748; Obras escolhidas, ed. A. Sérgio and H. Cidade (12 vols., ibid., 1951–4); Cartas ed. J. L. de Azevedo (3 vols., Coimbra, 1925–8); História do Futuro, ed. M. L. Carvalhão Buescu (Lisbon, 1982); crit. edn. of his Sermão pelo bom sucesso das armas de Portugal contra as de Holanda (preached in 1640), by F. Smulders (Nijmegen diss., Middleburg, 1989), with introd. (in Eng.) and extensive bibl. R. Cantel, Prophétisme et messianisme dans l'œuvre d'António Vieira (Paris, 1960); J. [J.] van den Besselaar, António Vieira: o homem, a obra, as ideias (Biblioteca Breve, 58; Amadora, 1981); M. Vieira Mendes, A oratória barroca de Vieira (Lisbon, 1989); S. Leite, SJ, História da Companhia de Jesus no Brasil, 9 (Rio de Janeiro, 1949), pp. 192–363. In Eng. there is a lecture by C. R. Boxer (London, 1957). Further bibl. in Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 620–36.

Vienne, Council of (1311–12). Accounted in the RC Church as the Fifteenth *Oecumenical Council, it was summoned by *Clement V in 1308 primarily to deal with the question of the *Templars, who were being accused of heresy and immorality by those who coveted their wealth. The Council, which eventually met at Vienne on 16 Oct. 1311, also aimed at providing assistance for the Holy Land and reforming the Church. The majority of the Council at first held that the evidence against the Templars was insufficient. But owing to the transference of the Papacy to *Avignon the Council was under French dominance; and, when Philip IV of France appeared with an army before Vienne in Feb. 1312, the Pope by an administrative ordinance suppressed the Order in the bull 'Vox Clamantis' (22 Mar. 1312), and this was promulgated at the next session of the Council. The King then undertook to go on a Crusade within six years. On the question of *Franciscan poverty the Council decided in favour of the more austere party. It also issued a large number of miscellaneous decrees, relating inter alia to the *Beguines and the *Inquisition, which were later partly incorporated in the '*Clementines' by *John XXII. Another decree sought to further the missionary objects fostered by R. *Llull by providing for studia in oriental languages (Arabic, Chaldee, and Hebrew, and prob. also Greek) to be set up in five universities (*Paris, *Oxford, Salamanca, *Bologna, and the Roman Court). In the event Philip IV never went on the Crusade, but appropriated to his own use the tithe levied for the purpose, and also managed to obtain much of the property of the Templars.

Hardouin, 7, cols. 1321–62; Mansi, 25 (Venice, 1782), cols. 367–426. Relevant bulls and constitutions, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 333–401. F. Ehrle, SJ, 'Zur Vorgeschichte des Concils von Vienne', Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, 2 (1886), pp. 353–416 and 672, and 3 (1887), pp. 1–195. Id., 'Ein Bruchstück der Acten des Concils von Vienne', ibid. 4 (1888), pp. 361–470. Hefele and Leclercq, 6 (pt. 2; 1915), pp. 643–719, with bibl. to date. E. Müller, Das Konzil von Vienne, 1311–1312: Seine Quellen und seine Geschichte (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, 12; 1934), with further refs. J. Lecler, SJ, Vienne (Histoire des conciles œcuméniques, 8; 1964). J. Leclercq, OSB, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2973–9, s.v. See also works cited under TEMPLARS.

Vietnam, Christianity in. Vietnam comprises those portions of the Indo-Chinese peninsula formerly known as Cochin China, Annam, and Tonkin; the predominant religion is Mahayana Buddhism. Christianity was first preached by Spanish *Franciscans from the *Philippines and Portuguese *Dominicans in the 1580s or perhaps as early as the 1530s. The mission of Cochin China was founded in 1615 by *Jesuits, who had been driven out of *Japan by persecution. An influential figure among the early missionaries was Alexander de Rhodes (1591–1660), a French Jesuit and outstanding linguist who achieved the feat of writing Vietnamese phonetically in the Latin alphabet supplemented by five signs (the quốc ngữ)—a legacy adopted by the whole nation ever since. He sought to create a Church adapted to Vietnamese culture and made extensive use of celibate lay *catechists who lived in community. After his expulsion from Cochin China in 1645, Rhodes returned to France and assisted in the foundation of the 'Société des Missions Étrangères de Paris' (*c.*1660). In 1658 the Congregation of *Propaganda Fidei created two apostolic *vicariates, one for the north and one for the south. The first Vietnamese priests were ordained in 1668, and an indigenous religious order of women was formed in 1690. By the end of the 18th cent. the Christian community numbered 300,000. Throughout this period Christians suffered waves of severe persecution, which continued until in the 1860s the King of Annam granted partial toleration; the number of martyrs has been estimated at 130,000. In the face of this persecution, in the 1780s, Pierre Pigneau de Béhaine (1741–99), a member of the Société des Missions Étrangères de Paris and Vicar Apostolic of West Tonkin, encouraged French political intervention in the region. During the 19th cent. French influence increased and in 1884 Cochin China became a French colony. By 1912 RCs (mainly in the north, in the Hanoi delta region) comprised over 5 per cent of the total population of Vietnam. The number of Vietnamese clergy grew rapidly and the first Vietnamese bishop was appointed in 1933. Protestant missionary work was begun by the Christian and Missionary Alliance in 1911. The Evangelical Church of Vietnam was formed in 1927.

During the colonial war against the French (1945–54) the great majority of RCs were opposed to the nationalist movement because of its association with Communists. After the defeat of the French in 1954 the country was divided along the 17th degree of latitude: the (Communist) Democratic Republic of Vietnam in the north and the Republic of Vietnam, supported by the USA, in the south. A large migration of RCs from north to south followed, led by their bishops. In South Vietnam, under the rule of Presidents Ngo Dinh Diem and Nguyen Van Thieu, the RC Church prospered and held an influential position as a bulwark of anti-Communism. After the collapse of the Thieu government in 1975 and the withdrawal of United States forces, foreign missionaries were expelled. Since 1975 in the Communist state of Vietnam the public activities of the RC Church have been severely restricted. Christians, who numbered 3.6 million in 1980, comprise 7 per cent of the population; more than 90 per cent of them are RCs.

A. Launay, Histoire de la Mission de Cochinchine, 1658 1823: Documents historiques (3 vols., Paris, 1923–5); id., Histoire de la Mission du Tonkin: Documents historiques, 1: 1658–1717 (ibid., 1927; no more pub.). N. H. Lai, 'Vietnam', in A. Hastings (ed.), The Church and the Nations (1959), pp. 171–92. B. E. Colless, 'The Traders of the Pearl. The Mercantile and Missionary Activities of Persian and Armenian Christians in South-East Asia', 4: 'The Indochina Peninsula', Abr-Nahrain, 13 (for 1972–3; Leiden, 1972), pp. 115–35; see also vol. 18 (for 1978–9; 1980), pp. 13 f. E. F. Irwin, With Christ in Indo-China: The Story of Alliance Missions in French Indo-China and Eastern Siam (Harrisburg, Pa. [1937]), pp. 25–108; H. E. Dowdy, The Bamboo Cross: Christian Witness in the Jungles of Viet Nam (New York [1964]; London, 1965). R. De Roeck in G. H. Anderson (ed.), Christ and Crisis in Southeast Asia (New York [1968]), pp. 55–71. A. Gélinas in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 661–3.

Vigil (Lat. vigilia, 'wakefulness', 'watchfulness', 'watch'), a service held at night (i.e. later at night, overnight, or before dawn), and by extension used of the day before a festival. Acc. to *Philo, the *Essenes spent a third of the night in prayer and reading, but nocturnal prayer formed no part of regular Jewish worship. Among Christians there was a widespread belief that the *Parousia would take place at midnight, and this may be reflected in the accounts of prayer at night in Acts 12: 12 and 16: 25. The letter of *Pliny to Trajan (*c.*111–23) provides clear evidence of Christians gathering for worship before daybreak, though here the practice may have been dictated by the fact that Sunday was a working day. In his sermon 'On the Pasch' *Melito of Sardis (*c.*160–70) speaks of *Easter as a Christian *Passover, still clearly celebrated at night. From an early date, the *Paschal Vigil Service (q.v.) comprised a lengthy series of readings and culminated in a Eucharist at dawn. By the early 3rd cent. it was seen as the most appropriate occasion for Baptism, and when in the 4th cent. Baptism was administered at *Whitsun, a similar Vigil emerged. By this time there is also evidence of regular weekly Vigils, on Saturday night to Sunday morning or perhaps from early on Sunday morning; such Vigils, recorded by *Egeria, were popular services of prayer which reached their climax in the reading of the Gospel account of the Resurrection. The opening of this so-called 'Cathedral Vigil' is connected with the custom of greeting the evening light or lamp with a hymn and/or prayer, from which, in the W., the tradition of the *Paschal Candle appears to have developed. From the 4th cent. Vigils on other occasions became popular, esp. on the feasts of local martyrs or Apostles. St *Augustine is a witness to such practices in N. Africa. Some night services were marred by unseemly behaviour and from the Synod of *Elvira (*c.*306) conciliar legislation increasingly restricted the participation of women at the Vigils. Their popularity continued. In some places, e.g. at *Constantinople, the Vigil took the form of an extension to *Vespers; elsewhere it sometimes, by a long series of readings, extended the morning office backwards into the early hours.

From the 8th cent. it became common to anticipate the Vigil on the evening of the previous day, and then the Vigil was gradually put back to the morning of that day. Thus the Paschal Vigil came to be celebrated on the morning of *Holy Saturday until, in the W. Church, it was restored to its position as a night service in 1951. By a similar process, in the Middle Ages many feasts had a Vigil, which came to be little more than a special Mass on the previous day, a relic of the time when the day was marked by a fast broken only by Communion in the evening. The BCP allotted fasts for the eves or vigils of 16 feast days, but modern Anglican liturgies mention few vigils apart from those of *Christmas and Easter. The RC *Calendar of 1969 retained only the Easter Vigil, but special texts are provided for an evening Mass on the days before Christmas and Whitsun and the Feasts of the Nativity of St *John the Baptist, St *Peter and St *Paul, and the *Assumption of the BVM, and there are some texts for the Vigils of Sundays and Feasts in the Breviary.

The custom or watching through the night in prayer in expectation of the Parousia, attested from the early 3rd cent. by *Tertullian and others, may have influenced the Vigils of the early Egyptian monks. When they began to live in communities, it became customary for them to spend the greater part of the night in prayer and psalmody. The urban based ascetics, whose practices were described by St *Basil and St John *Chrysostom, appear to have assembled for prayer and the recitation of psalms before the public services at dawn. Esp. in the W., with the development of *Benedictine monasticism, these psalms came to be interspersed with readings. The monastic Vigils tended to be simple and scriptural in form, but they adopted some of the more ceremonial features of non-monastic churches when they were in contact with them. Similarly, the non-monastic churches progressively adopted practices that were monastic in origin. The Rule of St *Benedict refers to the night office as 'vigiliae', and this remains the common name for the service before the morning office among the *Cistercians.

In the E. the Vigil service, or ἀγρυπνία (consisting of Vespers, *Apodeipnon, Midnight Office, and *Orthros), has retained its importance. In monasteries major Vigils (e.g. of great feasts or the dedication feast of the monastery) are celebrated with great solemnity and can last up to 15 hours (from Vespers at 6 p.m.). In Slav usage a shortened 'All-Night Vigil' (Vsenoshchnye bdenie, lit. 'all-night service') is regularly celebrated in parishes on Saturday evening in preparation for the Sunday Liturgy.

A. Gastoué, Les Vigiles nocturnes (Science et Religion, 295; 1908). C. Callewaert, 'De Vigiliarum Origine', Collationes Brugenses, 23 (1923), pp. 425–66, repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), no. 31, pp. 329–33. C. Marcora, La vigilia nella liturgia: Ricerche sulle origini e sui primi sviluppi (Sec. I–VI) (Archivio Ambrosiano, 6; 1954). A. *Baumstark and O. Heiming [OSB], Nocturna Laus: Typen frühchristlicher Vigilienfeier und ihr Fortleben vor allem im römischen und monastischen Ritus (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, 32; 1957). J. Mateos, SJ, 'La vigile cathédrale chez Égérie', OCP 27 (1961), pp. 281–312. R. Taft, SJ, The Liturgy of the Hours in East and West (Collegeville, Minn. [1986]), esp. pp. 165–90. P. C. Langeveld, OSB, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 2815–24, s.v. 'Vigilie', with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to MATTINS.

Vigilantius (fl. *c.*400), a presbyter of Aquitaine. Most of our knowledge of him comes from his bitter opponent, St *Jerome, who nicknamed him 'Dormitianus' (i.e. 'the dormant', instead of 'the vigilant'). He was a native of Calagurris in Aquitania. Having paid Jerome a visit at *Bethlehem which ended in a quarrel, Vigilantius on his return to the W. attacked Jerome as an *Origenist. Jerome replied with his 'Contra Vigilantium' (406), accusing his adversary of rejecting such practices as the cult of the saints and martyrs, the observance of vigils, and celibacy and monasticism. As Jerome's writings against him are full of invective and his opponent's replies have not survived, the justice of these allegations cannot be assessed. It is possible that Vigilantius did not go further than attack certain excesses which threatened the practice of asceticism at that period.

Jerome also attacked him in Epp. 61 (ad Vigilantium) and 109 (ad Riparium). A. Réville, Vigilance de Calagurris: Un chapitre de l'histoire de l'ascétisme monastique (Paris, 1902). H. Crouzel [SJ], 'Saint Jérôme et ses Amis Toulousains', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 73 (1972), pp. 125–46, esp. pp. 140–5. G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2992–4, s.v.

Vigilius (d. 555), Pope from 537. Of a noble Roman family, he was a deacon in 531, when Boniface II nominated him his successor. The nomination, however, was nullified in 532 as uncanonical and in 535–6 Vigilius became *apocrisarius at the court of *Constantinople. Here, induced, it is said, by the Empress *Theodora, he promised his help to restore the deposed *Monophysite patriarch, Anthimus, and to condemn the Council of *Chalcedon. In 537 the legitimate Pope Silverius was deposed with the help of the Byzantine commander Belisarius, and Vigilius consecrated in his place. The new Pope, however, neither reinstalled Anthimus nor did he favour Monophysitism. The letter addressed to the deposed patriarchs Anthimus, Severus, and Theodosius privately supporting the Monophysite position is perhaps a forgery, and in letters to *Justinian and *Menas of Constantinople Vigilius certainly upheld the doctrine of Chalcedon quite decisively. A letter which he addressed to Profuturus, Bp. of Braga, in 538 provides important evidence for the early history of the Roman *Canon of the Mass (q.v.). The Emperor's religious policy soon involved him in the *Three Chapters Controversy (q.v.) raised by Justinian's edict of 543–4, which condemned writings of *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Theodoret, and *Ibas of Edessa. Vigilius, in accordance with the opinion of the W., refused at first to assent to the condemnation, in which he saw a repudiation of Chalcedon. But, brought to Constantinople by order of Justinian, he repudiated the Three Chapters after considerable resistance and waverings in his 'Iudicatum' of 548, though not without reservations in favour of the Council of Chalcedon. His capitulation met with violent opposition in the W. The Pope was even excommunicated at a synod at Carthage, presided over by its bishop, Reparatus, and in consequence he retracted the 'Iudicatum'. After his protest against another Imperial edict in 551 he fled to Chalcedon, and in 553 refused to preside at the Second Council of *Constantinople. He again declined to condemn the Three Chapters in the 'Constitutum', in the drawing-up of which his deacon, the future Pope Pelagius I, had a large share. The Council, however, finally condemned the Three Chapters, leaving intact the authority of Chalcedon. Pressed by the Emperor, who would not allow him to return to Rome unless he accepted the decrees of Constantinople, Vigilius consented to them after six months' consideration and departed for Italy in 555, dying before he reached Rome.

The case of Pope Vigilius was adduced at the First *Vatican Council by the opponents of Papal *infallibility. It is generally held by RC theologians that infallibility was not involved and that the condemnation of the Three Chapters was in itself justified on account of their *Nestorian tendencies, though inopportune under the circumstances.

Correspondence and decrees in J. P. Migne, PL 69. 12–328. E. *Schwartz, I. Vigiliusbriefe. II. Zur Kirchenpolitik Justinians (Sb. (Bayr.), 1940, Heft 2), pp. 1–32. Vigilius' correspondence connected with the Second Council of Constantinople also ed. J. Straub in ACO 4. 1 (1971). Jaffé, 1, pp. 117–24. LP (ed. Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 296–302. A. Chavasse, 'Messes du Pape Vigile (537–555) dans le sacramentaire léonien', EL 64 (1950), pp. 161–213; 66 (1952), pp. 145–215. L. Magi, La Sede Romana nella corrispondenza degli imperatori e patriarchi bizantini (VI–VII sec.) (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 57; 1972), pp. 132–58. E. Zettl, CSSR, Die Bestätigung des V. Ökumenischen Konzils durch Papst Vigilius (Antiquitas, Reihe 1, Bd. 20; 1974). L. *Duchesne, L'Église au VI^e siècle (1925), pp. 151–218. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, 2 (1933), pp. 229–286. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2994–3005, s.v., with further bibl.; F. X. Murphy in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 664–7, s.v.; A. Lippold in PW, Suppl. 14 (1974), cols. 864–85, s.v. See also bibl. to THREE CHAPTERS.

Vigilius (fl. *c.*500), Bp. of Thapsus. Banished from Africa in 484 by the Arian king, Huneric, he fled to Constantinople. His chief work, 'Against Eutyches', attacks *Monophysitism and defends the *Tome of St *Leo and the *Chalcedonian Definition. He also wrote several anti-Arian works, but all that survives is the 'Dialogue against Arians, Sabellians, and Photinians' and the pseudo-Augustinian Contra Felicianum which is prob. Vigilius' work. Other writings, notably a 'De Trinitate', have been wrongly attributed to him, while P. *Quesnel held that he was the author of the *Athanasian Creed.

Works ed. P. F. Chifflet, SJ (Dijon, 1664), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 62. 93–544. G. Ficker, Studien zu Vigilius von Thapsus (1897). M. Simonetti, 'Letteratura antimonofisita d'Occidente', Augustinianum, 18 (1978), pp. 487–532, esp. pp. 505–22. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 272–4 (nos. 806–12). Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 553–7. G. Ficker in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 640–4, s.v.; G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3005–8.

Vilatte, Joseph René (1854–1929), '*episcopus vagans'. A Frenchman by birth, he joined the RC Church on several separate occasions, to leave it each time for a different Protestant denomination. In 1892, on the authority of an apparently forged bull, he was consecrated at Colombo in Sri Lanka by Abp. Alvarez, a schismatic from the Church of Antioch, as *Old Catholic bishop in America, and took the name of 'Mar Timotheos'. He himself consecrated a large number of bishops who have been recognized by no other Christian body. In 1898 he ordained 'Father *Ignatius' to the priesthood at Llanthony.

J. Parisot, OSB, Monseigneur Vilatte, fondateur de l'Église Vieille-Catholique aux États-Unis d'Amérique (Tours, 1899). H. R. T. Brandreth, OGS, Episcopi Vagantes and the Anglican Church (2nd edn., 1961), pp. 47–69, with bibl. pp. 126–9.

Vilmar, August Friedrich Christian (1800–60), *Lutheran theologian. A native of Solz in Kurhessen, he held a number of pastoral and administrative appointments until in 1855 he was appointed professor of theology at Marburg. He was a vigorous opponent of all forms of rationalism, upholding dogmatic and confessional Lutheranism by opposing to the prevalent 'theology of rhetoric' (as he termed it) a 'theology of facts' (Theologie der Tatsachen). He defended the retention of the ancient creeds in worship. In addition to a widely read Geschichte der deutschen Nationalliteratur (1845; rev. by J. Rohr, 1936), he wrote many theological works, largely dealing with the contemporary situation in Church politics. He also compiled a hymn-book (Kleines evangelisches Gesangbuch, 1838) embodying improved ideals in hymnology.

Selected Essays ed. K. Ramge (Munich [1939]). Studies by J. H. Leimbach (Hanover, 1875) and W. Hopf (2 vols., Marburg, 1912–13). P. Dietz, Dr. August Friedrich Christian Vilmar als Hymnolog (ibid., 1899). U. Asendorf, Die Europäische Krise und das Amt der Kirche: Voraussetzungen der Theologie von A. F. C. Vilmar (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, 18; 1967), with bibl. J. Haussleiter in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 649–61, s.v.; K. Scholder in RGG (3rd edn.), 6 (1962), cols. 1401–3, s.v.

Vincent, St (4th cent.), the protomartyr of Spain. Acc. to a tradition of the late 4th cent. onwards, referred to by St *Augustine and by *Prudentius, St Vincent was educated and ordained deacon by Valerius, Bp. of Saragossa, and suffered in the *Diocletianic persecution. The details surrounding his death were considerably developed in later times. Feast day, in the W., 22 Jan.; in the E., 11 Nov.

Prudentius, Peristephanon, 5; St Augustine, Sermones, 274–7; Sermo in Natali S. Vincentii Martyris attributed to *Leo I (Sermo 13 in J. P. Migne, PL 54. 501–6). A 'Passio Sancti Vincentii Levitae', which Ruinart suggested was used by St Augustine, is pr. in T. *Ruinart, OSB, Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (Paris, 1689), pp. 387–404; various 'Acta S. Vincentii Martyris' in Anal. Boll. 1 (1882), pp. 259–78, incl. the 'Passio Brevior', more prob. used by St Augustine, pp. 260–2. AASS, Jan. 2 (1647), pp. 397–414. É. Hurault, Saint Vincent, martyr, patron de vignerons et son culte dans le diocèse de Châlons (Châlons-sur-Marne, 1910). P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, 8 (ST 65; 1935), pp. 117–25. Marquise de Maillé, Vincent d'Agen et saint Vincent de Saragosse: Étude de la 'Passio S. Vincentii Martyris' (Melun, 1949). A. de Waal, 'Zum Kult des hl. Vinzenz von Saragossa', RQ 21 (1907), pp. 135–8. T. Moral in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (Rome, 1969), cols. 1149–55, s.v. 'Vincenzo di Saragozza', with further bibl.

Vincent of Beauvais (*c.*1194–1264), author of the vast popular encyclopaedia and *florilegium, the Speculum Maius, which draws on some 450 authors. He studied in Paris, and it was probably there that he entered the *Dominican Order. He may have been associated with the foundation of the Dominican house in Beauvais in 1225; his presence there is attested from *c.*1230, and in 1246 he was subprior. Later in 1246 he was appointed lector to the *Cistercian abbey of Royaumont, near Paris, where he came into close contact with King *Louis IX. He left this position some time before 1260.

His main work, the Speculum Maius, was conceived and partly written by *c.*1244. From *c.*1245 he was supported financially and in other ways by Louis IX and was enabled to visit the libraries of France. He also received help from the Cistercians in collecting material. He retained links with the Dominicans in Paris and was able to make prompt use of some of the work of St *Thomas Aquinas. Originally envisaged as a two-part compendium, the book grew far beyond its author's expectations and was completed *c.*1259 in three sections, the Speculum Naturale, Speculum Doctrinale, and Speculum Historiale. A supposed fourth part, the Speculum Morale, is not authentic; it was added towards the end of the 13th cent. Vincent's other works include a treatise De eruditione filiorum nobilium (written 1246–9), the Liber consolatorius, written for Louis IX on the death of the crown prince in 1260, and the Tractatus de morali principis institutione (written 1260–3).

Speculum Historiale was pub. Strasbourg, 4 vols., 1473; Speculum Naturalis, ibid., not later than 1477; Speculum Doctrinale, ibid., not later than 1478; Speculum Morale, ibid., 1476. Speculum Maius ed., 4 vols. bound in 3, Venice, 1591. The latest, and least satisfactory, edn. is that by the Benedictines of *Douai, 4 vols., Douai, 1624. Collected Opuscula pub. Basle, 1481. Crit. edns. of the De Eruditione by A. Steiner (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication 32; Cambridge, Mass., 1938); of his Apologia totius operis [i.e. of Speculum Maius] by A.-D. v. den Brincken in Deutsches Archiv, 34 (1978), pp. 410–99, with extensive refs., and by S. Lusignan, Préface au Speculum Maius de Vincent de Beauvais, Réfraction et diffraction (Cahiers d'Études médiévales, 5; Montreal and Paris, 1979); and of De Morali Principis Institutione by R. J. Schneider (CCCM, 137; 1995). Parts of his work are still unpub. B. L. Ullman, 'A Project for a New Edition of Vincent of Beauvais', Speculum, 8 (1933), pp. 312–26, with discussion of existing edns. J. Échard, OP, Sancti Thomae Summa suo auctori vindicata sive de V. F. Vincentii Bellovacensis scriptis (Paris, 1708). J. B. Bourgeat, Études sur Vincent de Beauvais (Paris thesis, 1856). L. Lieser, Vincenz von Beauvais als Kompilator und Philosoph: Eine Untersuchung s. Seelenlehre im Speculum Maius (1928). G. Göller, Vinzenz von Beauvais O.P. (um 1194–1264) und sein Musiktraktat im Speculum doctrinale (Kölner Beiträge zur Musikforschung, 15; 1959), incl. text of Speculum Doctrinale, 17. 10–35, pp. 86–118. P. von Moos, 'Die Trotschrift des Vinzenz von Beauvais für Ludwig IX.', Mittellateinische Jahrbuch, 6 (1967), pp. 173–218, incl. text of Liber consolatorius, 1–3. A. L. Gabriel, The Educational Ideas of Vincent of Beauvais (Texts and Studies in the History of Mediaeval Education, 4; Notre Dame, Ind., 1956; rev. Ger. tr., Frankfurt, 1967); J. M. McCarthy, Humanistic Emphases in the Educational Thought of Vincent of Beauvais (Studien und Texte zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, 10; Leiden, 1976). J. Schneider, 'Un encyclopédie du XIII^e siècle: Le "Speculum Maius" de Vincent de Beauvais', in G. Hasenohr and J. Longère (eds.), Culture et travail intellectuel dans l'Occident médiéval: Bilan des 'Colloques d'humanisme médiéval' (1960–1980) (1981), pp. 187–96. W. J. Aerts and others (eds.), Vincent of Beauvais and Alexander the Great: Studies on the Speculum Maius and its Translators into Medieval Vernaculars (Mediaevalia Groningana, 7; 1987). M. Paulmier-Foucart, S. Lusignan, and A. Nadeau (eds.), Vincent de Beauvais: Intentions et réception d'une œuvre encyclopédique au Moyen-Age. Actes du XIV^e Colloque de l'Institut d'études médiévales ... 27–30 avril 1988 (Cahiers d'études médiévales, 4; Cahier spécial, 4; 1990). Spicae: Cahiers de l'atelier Vincent de Beauvais (Paris, 1978 ff., with bibl. in vol. 1). Kaeppeli, 4 (1993), pp. 435–58.

Vincent Ferrer, St (1350–1413), *Dominican mission preacher. In 1367 he entered the Dominican Order in his native city, Valencia. His talents as a preacher quickly became apparent, but until 1390 much of his time was devoted to academic life. He lectured on logic at Lerida, where between 1370 and 1372 he wrote two philosophical works, the Tractatus de Suppositionibus and the Quaestio de Unitate Universalis. In 1380 he wrote a treatise on the schism. Later (1385–90) he taught theology at the cathedral school at Valencia. Probably while he was a student at Barcelona he won the confidence of Card. Pedro de Luna (later *Benedict XIII), who employed him in his curia for several years (1394–8). He worked hard to end the schism and later abandoned Benedict because of his intransigence. From 1399 until his death he toured much of Europe as a preacher, generally accompanied by a group of followers who helped by hearing confessions, giving instruction and leading processions of *flagellants. His preaching was notably scriptural and aroused great popular support; he also converted heretics, Jews, and Moors. He died at Vannes in Brittany. He was canonized in 1455. Feast day, 5 Apr.

Works ed. H. Fages, OP (2 vols., Paris, 1909). Separate edns. of sermons preached at Valencia during Lent 1413, Quaresma, ed. J. Sanchez Sivera (Barcelona, 1927; repr., with introd. by M. Sanchez Guarner, 2 vols., Valencia, 1973); other sermons ed. J. Sanchez Sivera and G. Schib (4 vols., Barcelona, 1932–77). Tractatus de Suppositionibus, ed. J. A. Trentman (Grammatica Speculativa, 2; Stuttgart and Bad Cannstatt, 1977); Quaestio de Unitate Universalis, ed. id., Mediaeval Studies, 44 (1982), pp. 110–37. Sp. tr. of these two works by V. Forcada [OP], Tractados Filosóficos, with notes and introd. by A. Robles [OP] (Valencia, 1987). Process of canonization, ed. H. Fages, OP (Paris, 1904); id., Notes et documents de l'histoire de saint Vincent Ferrier (1905). Id., Histoire de saint Vincent Ferrier (2 vols., 1894). M.-M. Gorce, OP, Saint Vincent Ferrier, 1350–1419 (Paris thesis, 1923); id., Les Bases de l'étude historique de saint Vincent Ferrier (Thèse Complémentaire, Paris, 1923). S. Brettle, San Vicente Ferrer und sein literarischer Nachlass (Vorreformationsgeschichtliche Forschungen, 10; 1924). J. M. de Garganta, OP, and V. Forcada, OP, Biografía y escritos de San Vicente Ferrer (Madrid, 1956). Popular Life by V. Forcada, OP (Valencia, 1987). B. Montagnes, OP, 'Prophétisme et eschatologie dans la prédication méridionale de saint Vincent Ferrier', in Fin du Monde et Signes des Temps (Cahiers de Fanjeaux, 27; 1992), pp. 331–49. Eng. Life by S. M. Hogan, OP (London, 1911). Kaeppeli, 4 (1993), pp. 458–74. M.-M. Gorce, OP, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3033–45, s.v. 'Vincent Ferrier (Saint)'.

Vincent of Lérins, St (d. before 450), the author of the 'Commonitorium'. Little is known for certain about his life beyond the fact that, after a period in secular employment, he became a monk on the island of *Lérins. Although the view has recently been challenged, it is generally thought that here, as a *Semipelagian, he opposed the teaching of St *Augustine on *predestination and was prob. the object of *Prosper of Aquitaine's 'Responsiones ad capitula objectionum Vincentianarum' (which preserve the substance of the 'objectiones'). J. Madoz discovered and in 1940 published a text of Vincent's 'Excerpta', the earliest known Augustinian *florilegium. Vincent's main work, the 'Commonitorium', written under the pseudonym 'Peregrinus', was designed to provide a guide to the determination of the Catholic faith; it embodies the famous *Vincentian Canon (q.v.). Despite his emphasis on *tradition, Vincent maintained that the final ground of Christian truth was Holy Scripture, and that the authority of the Church was to be invoked only to guarantee its right interpretation. He did not, however, preclude a development in matters of doctrine, maintaining that in the process of history the truth of Scripture often became more fully explicated. Feast day, 24 May.

Crit. edn. of his surviving works ('Commonitorium' and 'Excerpta') by R. Demeulenaere (CCSL 64, 1985, pp. 125–231), with introd. [in Fr.] and bibl. The numerous earlier edns. of the 'Commonitorium' incl. that of É. *Baluze (Paris, 1663; 3rd edn., 1684 [excellent for its period], repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 50. 637–86) and R. S. Moxon (Cambridge Patristic Texts, 1915). Eng. trs. by C. A. Heurtley (NPNCF, 2nd ser. 11, 1894, pp. 123–59), T. H. Bindley ('Early Church Classics', 1914) and others. Excerpta Vincentii Lirinensis según el Códice de Ripoll, No. 151, ed., with introd., by J. Madoz, SJ (Estudios Onienses, 1st ser. 1; Madrid, 1940). Id., El concepto de la tradición en S. Vicente de Lerins (Analecta Gregoriana, 5; Rome, 1933). W. O'Connor, C.S.Sp., 'Saint Vincent of Lerins and Saint Augustine', Doctor Communis, 16 (1963), pp. 123–257. H. J. Sieben, Die Konzilsidee der Alten Kirche (1979), pp. 148–70 ('Der Konzilsbegriff des Vinzenz von Lerin'). A. Hamman in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 546–51. G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3045–55, s.v.

Vincent de Paul (or Depaul), St (1581–1660), founder of the *Lazarist Fathers and of the 'Sisters of Charity'. Born of a peasant family in Pouy in the Département of Landes in SW France, he was at first a shepherd; he later went to school in Dax and then studied theology in Toulouse. He was ordained priest in 1660. According to his own account, he was captured by pirates and spent two years as a slave in Tunisia before returning to *Avignon with his former master, whom he had converted. After visiting Rome, in 1608 he went to *Paris and, coming under the influence of P. de *Bérulle, he decided to devote his life to the service of the poor. From 1613 to 1626 he was attached to the household of the Count de Gondi, General of the galleys; at the same time he undertook pastoral work in the parishes of Clinchy (near Paris) and Châtillon-les-Dombes (near Lyons), conducted missions in NE France, founded Confraternities of Charity for men and women, and as chaplain of the galleys from 1619 did much to relieve the lot of the prisoners. In 1622 St *Francis de Sales gave him charge of the convents of the *Visitation Order in Paris. In 1625 Vincent founded the Congregation of the Mission, usually called Lazarists (q.v.) or Vincentians, for giving missions among country people and for the training of priests. The first of the seminaries grew out of the Collège des Bons-Enfants, founded as a school for young boys. In 1633, together with St Louise de Marillac, he founded the Sisters of Charity, the first congregation of women who were not enclosed, and who took no final vows; they were entirely devoted to the care of the sick and poor in a way that was impossible for the Ladies of the Confraternity of Charity. In 1638 he created the first viable home for foundlings. In 1643 the Queen Regent, Anne of Austria, appointed him a member of Louis XIV's Council of Conscience during the King's minority; during the Wars of the Fronde he organized relief work among the suffering populations. He had for some time been a friend of *Saint-Cyran and, in spite of some misgivings, he refused to make any accusation against him when he appeared as a witness after his imprisonment. He was, however, entirely opposed to *Jansenism and in particular the views of A. *Arnauld. His manner of simple preaching was widely followed. He was canonized in 1737. Feast day, 27 Sept. (formerly 19 July). In 1833 the 'Society of St Vincent de Paul', a lay association for personal service of the poor, was founded by A. F. *Ozanam and others.

P. Coste, CM (ed.), Saint Vincent de Paul, correspondance, entretiens, documents (14 vols., 1920–5; supplementary vol. 15, ed. A. Dodin, in the periodical Mission et Charité, 19–20; 1970); Eng. tr. (Brooklyn, NY [1985 ff.]). Earlier Eng. trs. of selected letters and addresses as St Vincent de Paul and Mental Prayer (1925), of further letters (1937), and of the Conferences of St Vincent de Paul to the Sisters of Charity (4 vols., 1938–40), all by J. Leonard, CM. L. Abelly, La Vie du vénérable serviteur de Dieu, Vincent de Paul (1664); P. Collet, La Vie de saint Vincent de Paul (2 vols., 1748); U. Maynard, Saint Vincent de Paul: Sa vie, son temps, ses œuvres, son influence (4 vols., 1860); L. E. Bougaud, Histoire de saint Vincent de Paul (2 vols., 1889; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1899). P. Coste, CM, Le Grand Saint du grand siècle, Monsieur Vincent (3 vols., 1932; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1934–5). Other studies by J. Calvet (Paris, 1948; Eng. tr., 1952), with bibl., A. Dodin (Maîtres Spirituels, Paris, 1960), L. Cognet and L. von Matt (Bruges, 1959; Eng. tr., 1960), M. Purcell (London, 1963), and L. Mezzadri (tr. into Fr., Paris [1985]). L. Mezzadri, Fra giansenisti e antigiansenisti: Vincent Depaul et la Congregazione della Missione (1624 1737) (Florence, 1977), pp. 1–118. Vincent de Paul: Actes du Colloque International d'Études Vincentiennes, Paris 25–26 septembre 1981 (Rome [1983]). Bremond, 3 (1921), pp. 222–57, with refs.; Eng. tr., 3 (1936), pp. 193–222; Pourrat, 3 (1925), pp. 575–86; Eng. tr., 3 (1927), pp. 387–94. A. Dodin in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 841–63, s.v. 'Vincent (7) de Paul'.

Vincentian Canon. The threefold test of Catholicity laid down by St *Vincent of Lérins in his 'Commonitorium' (2. 3), namely quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est ('what has been believed everywhere, always, and by all'). By this triple test of ecumenicity, antiquity, and consent, the Church is to differentiate between true and false traditions. The order of the tests is to be noted, as the canon was very frequently misquoted with 'antiquity' (quod semper) first by English writers in the 19th century.

Vinci, Leonardo da. See LEONARDO DA VINCI.

vincible ignorance. In moral theology, the converse of *invincible ignorance (q.v.).

Vineam Domini Sabaoth. The Constitution issued by *Clement XI on 16 July 1705 against the French *Jansenists. Besides confirming the three earlier Papal bulls—

'*Cum Occasione' (1653), 'Ad Sanctam' (1656), and 'Regiminis Apostolici' (1664)—it maintained that the Pope could determine questions of historic fact (the case in point being whether or not certain propositions, condemned by the Pope, were in fact contained in *Jansen's Augustinus) as well as matters of doctrine, and that when such a determination had been made by the Pope, it must be accepted 'by the heart' of the believer, and not merely received 'with a respectful silence'. As its issue was believed to infringe the liberties of the French clergy, its promulgation in France was accompanied by a Declaration of the *Assembly of the Clergy that maintained the prerogatives of the bishops to judge with the Pope on matters of faith.

The orig. text, which incorporates the earlier bulls mentioned above, is pr. in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 21 (Turin, 1871), pp. 233–6; part repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 669 f. (no. 2390). A. Le Roy, Le Gallicanisme au XVIII^e Siècle: La France et Rome de 1700 à 1715 (1892), pp. 161–234. L. Ceyssens, 'La bulle Vineam Domini (1705) et le Jansénisme français', Antonianum, 64 (1989), pp. 398–430. M. Ott in CE 15 (1912), pp. 445 f., s.v.; B. Matteucci in EC 12 (1954), cols. 1446 f., s.v. See also works cited under GALLICANISM and JANSENISM.

Vinegar Bible. A popular name for the fine folio edition of the Bible, printed at Oxford in 1716–17 by John Baskett (d. 1742), the King's Printer. The headline of Lk. 20 reads 'The Parable of the Vinegar' instead of 'The Parable of the Vineyard'.

Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968), p. 244.

Vines, Richard (1600?–56), *Puritan divine. Educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, where he became a good Greek scholar, he was a schoolmaster and non-resident rector of two parishes. On 30 Nov. 1642 he preached before the House of Commons and in 1643 was nominated a member of the *Westminster Assembly, where he became a member of the committee which drafted the Confession. In 1644 he became Master of Pembroke College, Cambridge. In the same year he was put on the Parliamentary Committee of Accommodation, and, though episcopally ordained, defended *Presbyterian ordinations. He was opposed, however, to lay elders as Church governors. In 1645 he was present at the negotiations between *Charles I and Parliament, and in 1648 he took part in a written discussion with the King on episcopacy. In 1649 he opposed the abolition of the kingly office and the House of Peers, and being ejected from Pembroke College and Watton Rectory he became minister of St Lawrence Jewry.

XII Sermons Preached upon Several Public Occasions: By ... Mr. Richard Vines (1658), 'To which is adjoined, the Sermon Preached at his Funeral, By Mr. Thomas Jacomb' (orig. pub. 1656; sep. pagination). S. Clarke, The Lives of Sundry Eminent Persons in this Later Age (1683), pp. 48–56. B. Brook, The Lives of the Puritans, 3 (1813), pp. 230–5. A. Gordon in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 369–71, s.v.

Vinet, Alexandre Rudolf (1797–1847), Swiss Reformed theologian. A native of Ouchy, nr. Lausanne, from 1817 he taught French language and literature at Basle, where he came under the influence of W. M. L. *de Wette, and was ordained minister in 1819. He became professor of pastoral theology in 1837 at Lausanne, where he remained till 1847, when he attached himself to the newly constituted Free Church in Canton Vaud. He was a strenuous defender of liberty of worship and the separation of Church and State and advocated these principles in his Mémoire sur les libertés des cultes (1826), Essai sur la manifestation des convictions religieuses (1842; Eng. tr., 1843), and Du socialisme considéré dans son principe (1846). His conception of Christianity was thoroughly individualistic, the seat of religion being the conscience and dogma important only in so far as it issued in moral action. Vinet gave forceful expression to these views in his sermons, collected in Discours sur quelques sujets religieux (1831 and 1841; Eng. tr. of both, 1846), which have had a lasting influence on Swiss and French Protestants, owing to their combination of classic form with modern scholarship and warmth of feeling. Shortly after his death appeared his brilliant *Études sur Blaise Pascal (1848; Eng. tr., 1859), with whom Vinet had certain affinities in his emphasis on the heart as the chief organ of religion and in his use of psychology in apologetics. Other formative influences on his theology were I. *Kant and T. *Erskine. He has sometimes been designated the 'Swiss Schleiermacher'.

Œuvres pub. under the auspices of the Société d'Édition Vinet, founded 23 April 1908, with introd. by various authors (30 vols., Lausanne, 1910–64). Selections ed. P. Bridel, La Pensée de Vinet (Lausanne, 1944), with refs. E. Rambert, Alexandre Vinet: Histoire de sa vie et ses ouvrages (ibid., 1875). L. M. Lane, The Life and Writings of Alexandre Vinet (1890). L. Molines, Études sur Alexandre Vinet: Critique littéraire (1890). P. A. Robert, La flamme sur l'autel: Essai sur la crise religieuse d'Alexandre Vinet (Lausanne, 1948); F. Jost, Alexandre Vinet: Interprète de Pascal (ibid., 1950). P. T. Fuhrmann, Extraordinary Christianity: The Life and Thought of Alexander Vinet (Philadelphia, 1964). A. Ruegg in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 680–92, s.v.

Vio, Thomas de. See CAJETAN, THOMAS DE VIO.

Viret, Pierre (1511–71), Reformer of W. Switzerland. Born in Orbe, he studied in Paris, where he adopted Protestantism. On returning to Orbe in 1531 he was ordained by G. *Farel and assisted him in establishing the Reformation in Geneva and in the Canton of Vaud (1534–6). From 1537 to 1559 he was in charge of the Lausanne Church. Expelled in 1559 because of a quarrel over Church discipline, he worked as a preacher in Geneva, Montpellier, Lyons, and elsewhere, playing a leading part in the affairs of the French Reformed Church. His Instruction chrestienne (Geneva, 1564) and other vernacular treatises are mostly popularizations of J. *Calvin's doctrine.

Letters were pub. in A. L. Herminjard (ed.), Correspondance des réformateurs (9 vols., 1866–97), passim. J. Barnaud (ed.), Quelques Lettres inédites de Pierre Viret (1911). Pierre Viret d'après lui-même: Pages extraites des œuvres du réformateur à l'occasion du 4^e centenaire de sa naissance (Lausanne, 1912). Quatre Sermons français sur Esaïe 65 (mars 1559), ed. H. Meylan (Publications de la Faculté de Théologie, Université de Lausanne, 3; 1961); L'Interim fait par dialogues, ed. G. R. Mermier (Berne and New York, 1985). J. Barnaud, Pierre Viret: Sa vie et son œuvre (1911), with bibl. of his writings, pp. 677–96. Other studies by P. Godet (Lausanne, 1892), H. Vuilleumier (ibid., 1911), and G. Bavaud (Geneva, 1986; uncritical). R. D. Linder, The Political Ideas of Pierre Viret (Geneva, 1964). C. Schmidt and C. Schetzler in PRE (3rd edn.), 20 (1908), pp. 693–5, s.v.

virger. See VERGER.

Virgil (70–19 BC), Roman poet. Publius Vergilius Maro, the son of a rich citizen of Mantua, was educated at Cremona, Milan, and Rome, with a view to a political career. He soon abandoned rhetoric and politics to study philosophy under the Greek *Epicurean Siron, near Naples (?49–45 BC). He intended, after completing the Aeneid, to devote himself to philosophy. He was the author of ten pastorals, Bucolica (?45–37 BC), known as the Eclogues (i.e. occasional poems); the Georgics (36–31 BC), on Italy and its agricultural wealth, the fourth book of which deals with the ordered civil life of the beehive and how it may be restored to life by a magical process of sacrifice, and culminates in the story of Orpheus' descent into the Underworld to recover his wife Eurydice; and the Aeneid (26–19 BC), an epic in 12 books on the foundation of Rome by the exiled Trojan. This work is a fusion of Homer's two poems, Iliad and Odyssey, into a prophetic sequel, looking forward to the inauguration of a golden age by Aeneas' descendant, the Emp. Augustus, under the providential guidance of Jupiter. It was at first criticized as plagiaristic, but by the time of the Emp. Tiberius' death (AD 37) the Aeneid was recognized as the epic of Rome and had become the staple of literary education in the Roman West.

Virgil's language and style were widely influential in the next 1,500 years and frequently imitated, with Christians writing Virgilian centos to tell biblical stories. The Emp. *Constantine tried to appropriate the Fourth ('Messianic') Eclogue as a prophecy of Christ, born of a virgin (1. 6: iam redit et virgo), and *Lactantius went some way towards accepting such a view (Inst. 1. 19. 5; 7. 24. 1). This, and the fact that Virgil was nicknamed Parthenias (Gk. παρθένος, 'virgin') and lived at Parthenope (Naples), led to the alteration of the spelling of his name. St *Jerome protested against the facile Christianization of Virgil, and St *Augustine made him his chief target in his De Civitate Dei. During the last period of serious pagan opposition at Rome, and in the struggle over the 'Altar of Victory' in the Senate House (AD 384), the pagans came to regard Virgil as a philosophical authority and a source of oracles (Sortes Vergilianae). But in the subsequent period whatever in Virgil resisted Christianization was explained by *allegory (e.g. by *Fulgentius, *John of Salisbury, and *Dante).

Later Christian writers accorded Virgil a unique position among pagan authors, partly because of their naïve acceptance of the *Sibylline Oracles and the Sibylline Fourth Eclogue, but also because of the poet's genuine qualities. The pietas of Aeneas (his loyal devotion to his gods, to his father, wife, and son, and to his city and its 'remnant', his companions), his responsibility and warmth of emotion, his consideration for Dido, his goodness and wisdom in spite of lapses and errors, and his eventual faith in Providence, evince a moral standard with appeal to Christians. Aeneas' creator could be taken as anima naturaliter Christiana, separated only by a few years from the faith for which he was ready. In the Divine Comedy* Dante makes Virgil his guide through Hell and Purgatory, but excludes him from salvation. Virgil sinks back to Limbo, but only after hearing that he has mediated the light of faith to Statius, and after seeing Beatrice's cortège in the Earthly Paradise.

The numerous edns. of Virgil's works incl. those by O. Ribbeck (4 vols., Leipzig, 1859–68; rev., Teub., 3 vols., 1894–5), and R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1969). Comm. on individual books of the Aeneid: Book 1 by R. G. Austin (Oxford, 1971), Book 2 by id. (ibid., 1964), Book 3 by R. D. Williams (ibid., 1962), Book 4 by R. G. Austin (ibid., 1955), Book 5 by R. D. Williams (ibid., 1960), Book 6 by E. Norden (Leipzig, 1903; 4th edn., Stuttgart, 1957) and by R. G. Austin (Oxford, 1977), and Book 8 by K. W. Gransden (Cambridge, 1976); on the Eclogues by R. Coleman (Cambridge, 1977); and on the Georgics by R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1990). General studies incl. W. F. J. Knight, Roman Vergil (London, 1944; rev. edn., Harmondsworth, 1966); V. Pöschl, Die Dichtkunst Virgils (Innsbruck and Vienna [1950]; 3rd edn., Berlin and New York, 1977; Eng. tr., Ann Arbor, Mich. [1962]); G. N. Knauer, Die Aeneis und Homer: Studien zur poetischen Technik Vergils (Hypomnemata, 7 [1964]); B. Otis, Virgil: A Study in Civilized Poetry (Oxford, 1964); D. R. Dudley (ed.), Virgil (Studies in Latin Literature and its influence, 1969); R. D. Williams and T. S. Pattie, Virgil: His poetry through the ages [1982]. Studies more specifically concerned with his religious significance incl. E. Norden, Die Geburt des Kindes (Studien der Bibliothek Warburg, 3; 1924); H. Jeanmaire, Le Messianisme de Virgile (1930); C. N. Smiley, 'Vergil—his Philosophic Background and his Relation to Christianity', Classical Journal, 26 (1930–31), pp. 660–75; C. Bailey, Religion in Virgil (Oxford, 1935); H. J. Rose, The Eclogues of Vergil (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1942); I. S. Ryberg, 'Vergil's Golden Age', Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association, 89 (1958), pp. 112–31; P. Boyancé, La Religion de Virgile (1963); E. A. Hahn, 'Body and Soul in Vergil', Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association, 92 (1961), pp. 193–219; F. A. Sullivan, SJ, 'Virgil and the mystery of suffering', American Journal of Philology, 90 (1969), pp. 161–77; G. Luck, 'Virgil and the mystery religions', ibid. 94 (1973), pp. 147–66; G. Williams, Virgil's Fourth Eclogue (Center for Hermeneutical Studies in Hellenistic and Modern Culture; Berkeley, Calif., 1975). D. Comparetti, Virgilio nel medio evo (2 vols., Livorno, 1872; Eng. tr., 1895); V. Zabughin, Vergilio nel Rinascimento italiano de Dante a Torquato Tasso (2 vols., Bologna [1921–3]); J. W. Spargo, Virgil the Necromancer (Harvard Studies in Comparative Literature, 10; Cambridge, Mass., 1934).

Virgilius of Salzburg, St (*c.*700–84), 'Apostle of Carinthia'. An Irishman—the Gaelic form of his name was prob. 'Fergal'—he was one of the most learned men of his age, esp. in mathematical matters. The facts of his early life are uncertain; but acc. to one tradition he was at first a monk of Aghaboe, where he later became abbot. He may have had some early association with *Iona. Having made his way to the Continent in 743, for several years he governed the diocese of Salzburg without becoming bishop. St *Boniface, who disapproved of this ecclesiastical arrangement no less than of some of Virgilius' scientific doctrines, in 748 accused him to Pope *Zacharias for heretical views about the spherical shape of the earth and the existence of the antipodes. Virgilius was, however, eventually consecrated to the see of Salzburg in either 755 or 767 (the sources are not clear). In 772 he took advantage of the fact that the inhabitants of Carinthia were seeking protection from the Avars to secure conversion of the Alpine Slavs, and in 774 he dedicated the first cathedral at Salzburg. He established a famous scriptorium here, where an Irishman (perhaps Virgilius himself) wrote under the pseudonym Aethicus Ister a fictitious cosmography, which claimed the authority of St *Jerome. Virgilius has been held in continuous repute in his diocese and was canonized by *Gregory IX in 1233. Feast day, 27 Nov.

A 12th-cent. Life ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 11 (1854), pp. 86–95; of greater historical importance is the epitaph by *Alcuin, ibid., Poetae, 1 (1881), p. 340. F. S. Betton, SJ, St Boniface and St Virgil: A Study from the Original Sources of Two Supposed Conflicts (Benedictine Historical Monographs, 2; Washington, DC, 1927). P. Grosjean, SJ, 'Virgile de Salzburg en Irlande', Anal. Boll. 78 (1960), pp. 92–123. H. Dopsch and R. Juffinger (eds.), Virgil von Salzburg, Missionär und Gelehrter: Beiträge der Internationalen Symposiums von 21.–24. Sept. 1984 in der Salzburger Residenz (Salzburg, 1985). H. Löwe, 'Ein literarischer Widersacher des Bonifatius. Virgil von Salzburg und die Kosmographie des Aethicus Ister', Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur in Mainz, Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, 1951, pp. 899–988 (Nr. 11). É. Amann in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3093–7, s.v.

Virgin Birth of Christ. The belief that Jesus Christ had no human father, but was conceived by the Blessed Virgin Mary by the power of the Holy Spirit, is clearly stated in the two narratives of Christ's Infancy recorded in the Gospels (Mt. 1 f. and Lk. 1 f.), and has been a consistent tenet of orthodox Christian theology. It is also implied in the *Apostles' and *Nicene Creeds. It has generally been regarded by Christian theologians as altogether congruous with the Catholic doctrine of the *Incarnation, with its stress on the uniqueness of Christ.

In early times the fact was questioned only by a few heretical sects (*Psilanthropists, *Adoptionists). Within the last hundred years, however, it has been challenged by a number of liberal theologians on such grounds as: (1) a general suspicion of everything miraculous and in particular the belief that the LXX of Is. 7: 14 (παρθένος, 'virgin'), as an inexact rendering of the Heb., gave rise to, or at least promoted, the legend; (2) the absence of reference to the Virgin Birth in other parts of the NT, notably the Christological teaching of the Epp. and the Fourth Gospel; and (3) the contention that it would have been more congruous with the full Humanity of Christ for His Birth to have been like that of other men. It is answered: (1) that belief in miracle is integral to the Christianity of the NT and, as regards the supposed influence of Is. 7: 14, the more circumstantial account of the Birth of Christ in Lk. (as contrasted with that in Mt.) is in no way associated with this OT passage; (2) it was the kind of fact which from its nature would at first have become known in the Church much less rapidly than the public facts of the Lord's life; and (3) it is rash to suppose that the Son of God needed two parents in order to assume human nature. Yet it should be observed that the acceptance of Christ's Divine Sonship is not theologically dependent on the fact that He was not the son of Joseph, and in any case the doctrine of the Virgin Birth is to be clearly distinguished from that of the Incarnation itself.

(In current RC usage, the term 'Virgin Birth' has a wider connotation, covering both virginal conception (as described above) and the belief, attested since the 2nd cent., that the BVM gave birth as a virgin, i.e. that she remained virgo intacta).

Modern works defending the traditional belief incl. C. *Gore, Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation (1895), pp. 3–68; W. M. *Ramsay, Was Christ born at Bethlehem? A Study on the Credibility of St Luke (1898); J. G. Machen, The Virgin Birth of Christ (1930); D. [A.] Edwards, CR, The Virgin Birth in History and Faith (1943); T. Boslooper, The Virgin Birth (1962); R. E. Brown, The Virginal Conception & Bodily Resurrection of Jesus (1973), pp. 1–68; and id., The Birth of the Messiah: A Commentary on the Infancy Narratives in Matthew and Luke ([1977]; rev. ed., 1993). J. McHugh, The Mother of Jesus in the New Testament (1975), esp. pp. 157–347, with list of the main opponents and defenders of the historicity of the Virgin Birth, pp. 456–8. Useful crit. examination of the NT evidence in V. Taylor, The Historical Evidence for the Virgin Birth (1920; no conclusion drawn and belief must be determined by dogmatic considerations). Study of the development of the doctrine in the early Church by H. von Campenhausen, Die Jungfrauengeburt in der Theologie der alten Kirche (Sb. (Heid.), 1962, Abt. 3; Eng. tr., Studies in Historical Theology, 2; 1964), takes it for granted that the Virgin Birth is unhistorical; similarly, A. R. C. Leaney, 'The Virgin Birth in Lucan Theology and in the Classical Creeds', in R. [J.] Bauckham and B. Drewery (eds.), Scripture, Tradition and Reason: . . . Essays in Honour of Richard P. C. Hanson (Edinburgh, 1988), pp. 65–100. L. G. Owens in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 692–7, and F. M. Jelly, ibid. 17 (1979), pp. 691 f., both s.v., with bibl. See also comm. to Gospels, ad locc., and bibl. to INCARNATION and MARY, THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

Virgin Mary, the Blessed. See MARY, THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

virtualism. A form of *Eucharistic doctrine acc. to which, while the bread and wine continue to exist unchanged after consecration, the faithful communicant receives together with the elements the virtue or power of the Body and Blood of Christ. Its classical exponent was J. *Calvin.

virtues, cardinal. See CARDINAL VIRTUES.

virtues, theological. See THEOLOGICAL VIRTUES.

Visigothic rite. Another name, used e.g. by Dom M. Férotin (1855–1914), for the *Mozarabic rite, derived from its use in Spain when the country was dominated by the Visigoths (5th–7th cents.).

Visitandine Order. See VISITATION ORDER.

Visitatio Liminum Apostolorum. See AD LIMINA APOSTOLORUM.

visitation, episcopal. Episcopal visitations are designed for the periodic inspection of those temporal and spiritual affairs of a diocese under the bishop's control. From the 6th cent., such visitations were regulated by several ecclesiastical councils. Triennial visitation, which was the usual medieval practice, was exacted by the Anglican *Canons of 1604 (can. 60); can. G 5 of the 1969 canons is less specific, although can. C 22 requires an archdeacon to hold yearly visitations unless inhibited by a visitation of the bishop or archbishop. Biennial visitation is the minimum stipulated by the Council of *Trent. In the later Middle Ages, when the work of visitation was already conducted by commissaries of the bishop, including archdeacons, there developed elaborate legal forms centring in the presentation of offenders by both clergy and laity, to whom articles of inquiry had been previously administered. The cases were then tried by canon law in much the same form as that of the *consistory court. The Abps. of *Canterbury and *York have the right to visit all the dioceses within their respective provinces, e.g. W. *Laud in 1634 instituted a visitation of all his suffragan dioceses. See also CHARGE.

C. R. Cheney, Episcopal Visitation of Monasteries in the Thirteenth Century (Manchester, 1931; 2nd edn., ibid. and Philadelphia, 1983). N. Coulet, Les visites pastorales (Typologie des sources du moyen âge occidental, 23; 1977). P. M. Smith, 'Points of Law and Practice concerning Ecclesiastical Visitations', Ecclesiastical Law Journal, 2 (1992), pp. 189–212.

Visitation of Our Lady. The feast, formerly observed on 2 July, commemorates the Blessed Virgin's visit to her cousin *Elizabeth, recorded in Lk. 1: 39–56. It made its first appearance in the 13th cent., when it was introduced into the *Franciscan Order by the General Chapter of 1263 at the instigation of St *Bonaventure. Its extension to the universal Church in order to obtain the end of the *Great Schism was decided upon by *Urban VI and prescribed by Boniface IX in 1389, but accepted only by the part of the Church under his obedience. The Council of *Basle, in 1441, again ordered its celebration, and *Pius V finally established it for the whole RC Church. In 1969 it was moved to 31 May. In the C of E, 2 July was inserted as a *Black Letter Day into the calendar of the 1662 BCP, but the ASB and various other modern Anglican liturgies assign the feast to 31 May.

J. V. Pole, De origine festi Visitationis B.M.V. (Corona Lateranensis, 9 A; 1967). B. Fischer, 'Why is the Feast of the Visitation Celebrated on July 2?', in J. N. Alexander (ed.), Time and Community: In Honor of Thomas Julian Talley (Washington, DC [1990]), pp. 77–80. R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 40–61.

Visitation Order (also known as the Visitandines). The order of contemplatives founded in 1610 by St *Francis de Sales and St *Jane Frances de Chantal. It was designed to include women unable to bear the austerities of the older orders and devoted itself to the special cultivation of humility, gentleness, and sisterly love. Originally the Visitandines were a congregation with simple vows. Only the novices were strictly enclosed, while the professed sisters went out on works of mercy, esp. nursing the sick. But this innovation was received unfavourably by the Abp. of Lyons, D. S. de Marquemont, who refused to admit the sisters to his diocese unless they kept to the enclosure. St Francis gave way, and on 23 Apr. 1618 Pope *Paul V constituted the congregation an order with full privileges ('Ordo Visitationis BMV'). It was solemnly approved by *Urban VIII in 1626 and has remained primarily contemplative. The 'constitutions' drawn up by St Francis were an adaptation of the *Augustinian Rule, with the characteristic substitution of the *Little Office of Our Lady for the Canonical Hours. This feature disappeared in the new constitutions finally approved in 1987. The house at Annecy has a primacy of honour in the order, but each house is under the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop. Since 1957 the houses have been grouped into federations to reinforce the bonds of charity which unite them to each other and to Annecy. The most notable saint of the order is St *Margaret Mary Alacoque, whose visions had a large share in the institution of the Feast of the *Sacred Heart.

C. F. Ménestrier, SJ, Projet de l'histoire de l'ordre de la Visitation de Sainte-Marie (Annecy, 1701). La Visitation Sainte-Marie (Les Grands Ordres religieux, Paris, 1923); E. Lecouturier, La Visitation (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux, 1935). F. A. *Gasquet, OSB, The Order of the Visitation: Its Spirit and its Growth in England [1910]. F. M. de Chaugy, Les Vies des quatre premières mères de l'ordre de la Visitation Sainte-Marie (1659; repr. as vol. 1 of the Œuvres historiques de la Mère Françoise-Madeleine de Chaugy, 1892); also other works by this author. R. Devos, L'origine sociale des Visitandines d'Annecy aux XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles (Mémoires et documents publiés par l'Académie Salésienne, 84; 1973). For the early history of the order see also The Life of Jeanne Charlotte de Bréchard by the Sisters of the Visitation, Harrow (1924). M. L. Lynn, VHM, in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 719–21, s.v.; M.-P. Burns, VSM, Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 1002–10, s.v. 'Visitandines'.

Visitation of the Sick. The 'Order for the Visitation of the Sick' in the BCP follows in arrangement that in the *Sarum *Manuale, but with considerable omissions, e.g. of the *Seven Penitential Psalms formerly recited on the way to the sick person's house. In the 1662 Book the minister of the parish, after an opening versicle and response on entering the sick person's presence, says the *Lord's Prayer, followed by further versicles and responses, collects for the sick person's faith, repentance, and perseverance, an exhortation (added in 1549, and partly based on the Homilies of 1547), a profession of faith in the articles of the *Apostles' Creed in an interrogatory form, an exhortation to confession of sin, followed by a form prescribed for priestly absolution, a further collect for the sick person's forgiveness, Psalm 71, 'O Saviour of the world', a final collect, and the Blessing (in the form in Num. 6: 24–6). Four occasional collects are appended. In the 1549 Book provision was also made for the *unction of the sick person, but this has been omitted since 1552. The 'Communion of the Sick', included as a separate item since 1549, originally provided either for the elements consecrated at the Communion Service in church to be taken to the sick person and those who were to communicate with him, or for a celebration in the sick-room with a special collect, Epistle (Heb. 12: 5), and Gospel (Jn. 5: 24); from 1552 only the latter option was permitted. The form of priestly absolution provided in the Order for the Visitation of the Sick formed the basis of the 19th-cent. revival of the sacrament of *Penance in the C of E. Modern Anglican liturgies have abandoned much of the ethos of the BCP Order, with its expectation of imminent death and its suggestion that sickness itself might be a deserved punishment from God. They include prayers for healing and provide for the laying on of *hands, unction, and Communion either from the Reserved Sacrament or a celebration in the presence of the sick person. Whereas provision for the reservation of the consecrated elements (at least ostensibly for the Communion of the sick) in the proposed BCP of 1927–8 was one of the factors leading to its rejection, the Alternative Services Ministry to the Sick (1983) encouraged such 'extended communion', as it is frequently called, without arousing old controversies. In many parts of the Anglican Communion lay people bring and administer the consecrated elements to the sick person.

In the RC Church the 1972 'Order for Anointing the Sick and their Pastoral Care' (Ordo Unctionis Infirmorum eorumque Pastoralis Curae), now slightly revised, provides for a comparable rite consisting of prayers, readings from Scripture, Psalms, and a blessing, with laying on of hands. In cases of serious illness this is followed by unction and Communion, and, when death approaches, by Viaticum and the Commendatio animae (called in the new Ordo Commendatio morientium). The 1972 Ordo replaces similar provisions contained in the *Rituale (Tit. 5, cap. 4).

F. Procter and W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1919), esp. pp. 622–9. C. Harris, 'Visitation of the Sick', in W. K. L. Clarke and C. Harris (eds.), Liturgy and Worship: A Companion to the Prayer Books of the Anglican Communion (1932), pp. 472–541; id., 'The Communion of the Sick, Viaticum, and Reservation', ibid., pp. 541–615. Forms of Service for 'Unction and the Laying-on of Hands' and for 'The Laying-on of Hands without Unction' were approved by both Houses of the *Convocation of Canterbury on 6 June 1935; they are repr. in A. F. Smethurst and H. R. Wilson (eds.), Acts of the Convocations of Canterbury and York . . . passed since . . . 1921 (1948), pp. 72–83; for somewhat similar provision made by both Houses of the Convocations of York, see ibid., pp. 83–6. See also bibl. to UNCTION and SPIRITUAL HEALING.

Vitalian (d. 672), Pope from 657. Despite the strained relations between Rome and *Constantinople during the *Monothelite controversy, he kept on good terms with the E. during the earlier part of his pontificate, exchanging the customary compliments with the E. Emp. Constans II at his consecration, and receiving him at Rome in 663. Later, however, Vitalian's name was removed from the *Diptychs at Constantinople for his adhesion to 'Dyothelite', i.e. orthodox, views. It was he who consecrated *Theodore of Tarsus Abp of *Canterbury in 668. Feast day, 27 Jan.

Jaffé, 1 (1885), pp. 235–7. LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 343–5. Mann, 1 (pt. 2; 1902), pp. 1–16, with notes on sources. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, 2 (1933), pp. 580–6, 588 f., 600, and 681 f. J. N. D. Kelly, Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 75 f.

Vitalis, St. St *Ambrose relates that in 393 he attended the exhumation, at *Bologna, of the remains of Sts Agricola and Vitalis which lay buried in the Jewish cemetery there, and that both Vitalis and Agricola (whose slave Vitalis was) had suffered death together. The cult of Vitalis spread rapidly through W. Christendom and famous churches were dedicated to his honour at *Ravenna (5th cent.; rebuilt in 6th) and *Rome (5th cent., formerly the basilica of the titulus Vestinae). Two historically valueless later accounts of the death of St Vitalis exist, in one of which he is associated not with Agricola but with his wife Valeria. Feast days: Vitalis and Valeria, 28 Apr.; Vitalis and Agricola, 4 Nov.

Ambrose, Exhortatio virginitatis, 1–2; *Paulinus of Milan, Vita S. Ambrosii, 29, who attributes the discovery of the martyrs' remains to Ambrose himself. F. Savio, SJ, 'Due lettere falsamente attribuite a S. Ambrogio', Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia cristiana, 3 (1897), pp. 153–77. On the legend associating St Vitalis with Agricola, see also AASS, Nov. 2 (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 233–53; H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'L'Hagiographie ancienne de Ravenne', Anal. Boll. 47 (1929), pp. 5–30, esp. pp. 7–10; id., Les Origines du culte des martyrs (2nd edn., Subsidia Hagiographica, 20; 1933), esp. pp. 324 f. and 328 f. On the legends associating St Vitalis with Valeria, id., 'Trois Dates du calendrier romain', Anal. Boll. 46 (1928), sect. 2, 'Saint Vital (28 avril)', pp. 55–9. On the titulus Vestinae, C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . 311–440 (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 476 f.

Vitalis, Ordericus. See ORDERICUS VITALIS.

vitandi (Lat., 'persons to be avoided'). The technical name formerly used in *canon law for those excommunicated persons with whom members of the Church were debarred from having any kind of intercourse unless there was reasonable cause. They were distinguished from the tolerati, with whom relations of a personal kind were more readily allowed. Unless he had laid violent hands upon the Pope, in which case ipso facto he was vitandus, an offender acquired this status only when he was expressly so named by the Roman see. These rulings are embodied in the Codex Iuris Canonici* (1917), cans. 2258, 2259, and 2343. The category is not used in the 1983 Codex.

Vitoria, Francisco de (1483–1546), Spanish theologian. He entered the *Dominican Order in 1505 and studied in Burgos and Paris. In Paris he came under the influence of Pieter Crockaert, OP (*c.*1470–1514). He prob. taught philosophy at the Dominican convent of S. Jacques in Paris from 1513 to 1516 and thereafter taught theology there, receiving his doctorate in theology in 1522. After his return to Spain he lectured on theology at Valladolid from 1523 to 1526, and from 1526 held the Prime Chair of Theology at the University of Salamanca.

Vitoria may be considered a forerunner of the '*Salmanticenses'. By substituting the '*Summa Theologiae' of St *Thomas Aquinas for *Peter Lombard's 'Sentences' as the theological textbook, he inaugurated a new school at Salamanca which, under his pupils Dominic *Soto, Andreas de Vega (1498–1560), Melchior *Cano, and others, became the chief university in Europe in the 16th cent. for the study of *Scholasticism. A humanist as well as a philosopher and theologian, he developed a method which, without disregarding philosophical speculation, made the Scriptures and the Fathers the foundation of theological teaching. He is often also regarded today as the 'Father of International Law', and at some points H. *Grotius was dependent on him. In his famous 'Relectiones', lectures given between 1527 and 1540, he dealt inter alia with the chief problem of his day in international morality, namely the conquest of the Indies. He was critical of the Spanish methods of colonization in America and also laid down the conditions of a just war. On this last matter, basing himself on St *Augustine and St Thomas, he confined legitimate warfare to the redressing of a wrong received; and, indeed, he went further than St Thomas in holding that no war would be permissible if it should bring serious evil to Christendom and the world at large.

The early edns. of Vitoria's writings are very rare, and part of his work is still unpub. Modern edns. of his comm. on the Secunda Secundae of St Thomas by V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP (Bibliotheca de Teólogos Españoles, 2–6 and 17; 1932–52); of the sections 'De Indis' and 'De Jure Belli' of his Relectiones Theologicae XII (orig. pub. Lyons, 1557) by L. Pereña and others (Corpus Hispanorum de Pace, 5 and 6 respectively; Madrid, 1967–81). The Relectiones, ed., with Sp. tr., by T. Urdánoz, OP (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1960). Eng. tr. of selections, Political Writings, ed. A. Pagden and J. Lawrance (Cambridge Texts in the History of Political Thought, 1991). L. G. A. Getino, El Mro. Francisco de Vitoria (1930); J. B. Scott, Francisco de Vitoria and his Law of Nations (The Spanish Origin of International Law; 1934); V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP, Francisco de Vitoria (Barcelona, 1939); R. Hernández, OP, Francisco de Vitoria (Burgos, 1983); id., 'Documento más antiguo, inédito, de Francisco de Vitoria', Archivo Dominicano, 11 (1990) pp. 69–84. F. Stegmüller, Francisco de Vitoria y la doctrina de la gracia en la escuela salmantina (Biblioteca histórica de la Biblioteca Balmes, 2nd ser. 10; 1934). Bruno de S. José, OCD, El Dominico Burgalès P. Maestro Fray Francisco de Vitoria y Compludo (1485–1546) (Burgos, 1946). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain: A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963). M. Andrés [Martín], La teología española en el Siglo XVI (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 13–14; 1976–7), esp. 2, pp. 356–61. R. C. Gonzales, OP, Francisco de Vitoria: Estudio bibliográfico (Buenos Aires, 1946). J. K. Farge, Biographical Register of Paris Doctors of Theology 1500 1536 (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Subsidia Mediaevalia, 10; Toronto, 1980), pp. 424–31, with bibl. V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP, and J.-G. Menendez-Rigada, OP, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3117–44, s.v.; R. García Villoslada in Q. Aldea Vaquero and others (eds.), Diccionario de Historia de España, 4 (1975), pp. 2776–8, s.v.

Vitringa, Campegius (1659–1722), biblical exegete. A native of Leeuwarden in Friesland, he was educated at Franeker and *Leiden universities and in 1680 was offered a teaching post at Franeker. Here he lectured with great success for the rest of his life, repeatedly refusing to leave the town for a more prominent position at Utrecht. His fame rests on his biblical exegesis, which, though inspired by the *Calvinistic orthodoxy of his age, succeeded in interpreting the sacred text with unusual freshness and penetration. His principal work was a commentary on Isaiah (2 vols. fol., Leeuwarden, 1714, 1720). Among his other writings were De Synagoga Vetere (1696; Eng. tr., The Synagogue and the Church, 1842), Anakrisis Apocalypsios Joannis Apostoli (1705), and Observationum Sacrarum libri septem (1727).

H. Bauch, Die Lehre vom Wirken des heiligen Geistes im Frühpietismus (Theologische Forschungen, 55; 1974), pp. 14–33. K. M. Witteveen in Biografisch Lexikon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantsime, 3 (1988), pp. 379–82.

Vitus, St (d. perhaps 303), martyr. The common legend about him is much later, and exists in several forms. He is generally supposed to have been born of pagan parents in Lucania, S. Italy, and secretly brought up as a Christian by Crescentia, his nurse, and Modestus, her husband, all three being martyred under *Diocletian. St Vitus is invoked against sudden death, hydrophobia, and the convulsive disorder known as St Vitus' dance. The association of his cultus with bodily health appears already in the Gelasian Sacramentary, and an early S. Italian Gospel pericope appointed for his feast (Mt. 9: 35–10: 1) connects him with the cure of sickness and of demonic possession. He is one of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints. Feast day, 15 June.

AASS, Jun. 2 (1699), pp. 1013–42; BHL 2, pp. 1257–9 (nos. 8711–23), and novum supplementum (1986), pp. 870–2. Eng. tr. of Church Slavonic material by M. Kantor, The Origins of Christianity in Bohemia (Evanston, Ill., 1990), pp. 113–29, with notes pp. 282–7. Text of the Translatio S. Viti also ed. F. Stentrup in F. Philippi (ed.), Abhandlungen über Corveyer Geschichtsschreibung (Veröffentlichungen der historichen Kommission für Westfalen, 1906), pp. 51–100 (text, pp. 75–100), and, with Ger. tr., by I. Schmale-Ott (Veröffentlichen der Historischen Kommission für Westfalen, 41; 1979). J. Oswald in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 10 (1965), cols. 825–7, s.v.

Vladimir, St (d. 1015), the Apostle of the Russians and Ukrainians. Though he was a grandson of St Olga, he was brought up a pagan. In 980 he took Kiev from his elder brother, and subsequently conquered Polotsk, subjugated large districts of White Russia, and was involved in many other wars. Having assisted the Byzantine Emp. Basil II in quelling a revolt, he married *c.*989 the Emperor's sister Anne. Henceforth he was an ardent promoter of Christianity and erected many churches and monasteries; but his work of evangelism owed part of its success to physical compulsion, and those who refused Baptism were punished. Vladimir's later years were troubled by insurrections of his sons by his former pagan wives, and he died on an expedition against one of them. Feast day, 15 July.

The principal authority is the chronicle attributed to Nestor, monk of Kiev (11th–12th cent.); Eng. tr., with introd. and notes of edns. in Russ. and Ger. and Fr. trs., by S. H. Cross in Harvard Studies and Notes in Philology and Literature, 13 (1930), pp. 77–309 (text, pp. 178–214). N. de Baumgarten, Saint Vladimir et la conversion de la Russie (Orientalia Christiana, vol. 27, fasc. 1; num. 79; 1932), with full bibl. J. Fennell, 'The Canonization of Saint Vladimir', in K. C. Felmy and others (eds.), Tausend Jahre Christentum in Russland (Göttingen, 1988), pp. 299–304. I. Dujčev in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (Rome, 1969), cols. 1323–9, s.v., with further bibl.

Voetius, Gisbert (1589–1676), Dutch Reformed theologian. A native of Heusden in the Netherlands, he was educated at the University of *Leiden, where he was deeply influenced by F. *Gomar. A minister successively at Vlijmen (1611) and Heusden (1617), he was a delegate to the Synod of *Dort (1618–19). From the first he fought against *Arminianism and defended an uncompromising *Calvinistic predestinarianism. In 1634 he was appointed professor of theology and oriental languages at Utrecht, and in 1637 also pastor of the Reformed Church there. A man of strong convictions and violently hostile to everything Catholic, he was involved in frequent controversies. A proponent of Reformed scholasticism, he defended strict Calvinism against the freer school represented by J. *Cocceius, carried on bitter and often unfair attacks against R. *Descartes, and at the end of his life quarrelled with J. de *Labadie because of his separatist tendencies. Greatly influenced by the works of Willem Teellinck (1579–1629) and those of English *Puritans, esp. W. *Ames, Voetius did much to promote the rise of Dutch *Pietism. His writings include Disputationes Theologicae Selectae (5 vols., Utrecht, 1648–69), Politica Ecclesiastica (4 vols., Amsterdam, 1663–76) and Diatribae de Theologia (Utrecht, 1668).

Eng. tr. of extracts from his Disputationes Theologicae Selectae by J. W. Beardslee, Reformed Dogmatics (Library of Protestant Theology, New York, 1965), pp. 263–334. Life by A. C. Duker (3 vols. + index vol., Leiden, 1897–1915; repr., with introd. by A. de Groot, ibid., 1989). M. Bouwman, Voetius over het Gezag der Synoden (Amsterdam, 1937). C. Steenblok, Gisbertus Voetius: zijn leven en werken (Gouda, 1942; 2nd edn., 1976). J. van Oort (ed.), De onbekende Voetius: voordrachten wetenschappelijk symposium, Utrecht 3 maart 1989 (Kampen, 1989). D. Nauta in Biografisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 2 (1983) pp. 443–9.

Voltaire, pseudonym of François-Marie Arouet (1694–1778), French writer. His burning desire for social reform and his biting pen made him the most celebrated of the French 'Philosophes'. Educated by the Paris *Jesuits, throughout his life he was violently opposed to the Catholic Church, in whose institutions he saw nothing but deceit, superstition, and fanaticism; on the other hand he undertook the defence of *Deism with, as Lanson wrote, 'determination, warmth and courage'. After a quarrel with the Chevalier de Rohan, Voltaire went into exile in London from 1726 to 1729. His Lettres philosophiques or Lettres sur les Anglais (1734; originally published in England as Letters concerning the English Nation, 1733) held up an idealized picture of England as a land of rationalist philosophy, just social institutions, and religious toleration, as an object-lesson to the French reader. He also praised J. *Locke and I. *Newton, the authors who, with Samuel *Clarke, had the greatest influence on his Deism, although whenever possible he reduced metaphysical problems to matters of ethics. An attack on B. *Pascal, whom Voltaire selected as representative of the strain in Christianity most opposed to his own ethical optimism, was added to the letters as an appendix. When the book was publicly burnt in Paris, he fled to Cirey in Champagne, the country house of Madame du Châtelet, where he wrote his (posthumously pub.) Traité de métaphysique (1734) and Éléments de la philosophie de Newton (1738), and completed several of his most successful plays, among them Mahomet (1742), as well as the blasphemous epic on St *Joan of Arc, La Pucelle (1739; pub. 1755). From 1750 to 1752 he lived at the court of Frederick II of Prussia, and in 1758 bought the estate of Ferney, on the Swiss frontier, where he led the life of a country gentleman. The problem of *Theodicy always preoccupied him. At first inclined towards the solution of G. *Leibniz, he then violently rejected it, delivering its coup de grâce in Candide (1759); after this he attempted to set aside metaphysical inquiry for positive social action, taking up in particular the cause of the victims of religious intolerance, such as the Huguenot Jean Calas. During the last 15 or so years of his life his views came increasingly into conflict with those of the younger generation of 'Philosophes', notably P. H. D. d'Holbach (1723–1789), who were materialists and atheists and considered Voltaire's Deism retrograde. Voltaire bitterly attacked atheism not, as is sometimes maintained, because he regarded belief in the existence of God and personal immortality as necessary simply for the government of the masses, but out of a pragmatic conviction that without these beliefs human existence would be one of meaningless anarchy. The Irish Catholic writer Alfred Noyes described Voltaire as a true son of the Church 'whose criticisms, like those of Erasmus, were only letters to the family'. While this view is clearly untenable, it should nevertheless not be overlooked that the belief in absolute moral values which Voltaire's Deism subserved, his championship of religious toleration, and even the faint stirrings of personal faith which occasionally diversified his scepticism, were qualities often sadly lacking in the official institutions and representatives of Christianity in his day.

Voltaire's Complete Works are being newly ed. by T. Besterman and others (Geneva and Toronto, 1968–9; Geneva, 1970–1; Thorpe Mandeville, Banbury, 1971–6; Oxford 1976 ff.); they are expected to run to some 150 vols. Individual works have frequently been ed. and tr., incl. Correspondence, ed. T. Besterman (107 vols., Geneva, 1953–65). The extensive lit. incl., besides the well-known Life by J. Morley (London, 1872), studies by G. Lanson ('Les Grands Écrivains français', 1906), H. N. Brailsford (HUL, 1935), N. L. Torrey (New York, 1938), R. Naves (Paris, 1942), P. [J.] Gay (Princeton, NJ, 1959), I. O. Wade (ibid., 1969), and H. [T.] Mason (London, 1981). R. Pomeau, La Religion de Voltaire (1956; new edn., 1969), and other works of this author. G. Bengesco, Voltaire: Bibliographie de ses œuvres (4 vols., 1882–90); M. M. H. Barr, A Century of Voltaire: A Bibliography of Writings on Voltaire, 1825–1925 (New York, 1929); id., Quarante Années d'Études Voltairiennes: . . . 1926–1965 (1968); F. A. Spear, Bibliographie analytique des écrits relatifs à Voltaire 1966–1990 (Oxford, 1992). C. Constantin in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3387–471, s.v.

voluntary. A piece of music played on the organ at the beginning or end of (and, occasionally, during) a religious service. Those played at the beginning and close are sometimes distinguished as the in- and out-voluntaries.

Voluntaryism. Esp. in *Scotland, the doctrine that the Church ought to be spiritually independent of the State. It rests on the theses that the establishment of a particular denomination is unjust and that State endowments are devitalizing.

von Harnack, Adolf. See HARNACK, ADOLF.

von Hofmann, J. C. K. See HOFMANN, J. C. K. VON

von Hügel, Baron Friedrich (1852–1925), RC theologian and philosopher. He was born at Florence, the elder son of Carl Alexander Anselm, Baron von Hügel (1795–1870), and of Elizabeth, née Farquharson, a Scottish Presbyterian lady who was a convert to the RC Church. After a cosmopolitan education he settled in England in 1867. In 1870 an attack of typhus left him deaf and permanently weakened in health. After a religious crisis he was brought to a firm faith at Vienna through the influence of Raymond Hocking, a Dutch *Dominican (1870). He married in 1873 and for the rest of his life lived at Hampstead (1876–1903) and Kensington (1903–25), though he constantly travelled abroad. In 1884 he met for the first time H. *Huvelin at *Paris, who made a profound spiritual impression on him.

Meanwhile von Hügel had become a keen student of science (esp. geology), philosophy, biblical criticism, and religious history. Having become convinced of the critical view of the OT, he defended it in 1897 in a Congress at Fribourg (Switzerland). He found himself in growing accord with the cultural and liberalizing tendencies in the RC Church and several of the leaders of the *Modernist Movement (A. *Loisy, G. *Tyrrell) became his lifelong friends. In 1904 he founded the London Society for the Study of Religion, which brought him into touch with thinkers and scholars of the most diverse views. In 1908 he published The Mystical Element of Religion as studied in St Catherine of Genoa and her Friends. This was followed in 1911 by an article on St John's Gospel in the Encyclopaedia Britannica (11th edn.) and in 1912 by his book Eternal Life. In 1921 appeared his Essays and Addresses on the Philosophy of Religion; a second series followed in 1926, after his death. He was appointed *Gifford Lecturer at Edinburgh for 1924–6, but owing to ill-health was unable to deliver the course; portions of it were published posthumously in The Reality of God (1931).

Among the problems with which von Hügel constantly wrestled were the relation of Christianity to history (in which field he found a kindred spirit in E. *Troeltsch), the place of human culture in the Christian life, the Christian conception of time, and the significance of eschatology for the modern world. He saw the Institutional, the Intellectual, and the Mystical as the three abiding elements in religion. In his earlier life he had much sympathy with the activist philosophy of M. *Blondel, but believing that the essence of religion was 'adoration', he came in his later years to emphasize the Divine transcendence and the 'givenness' of faith. 'The Baron' became one of the chief religious influences in cultured circles in England, more so outside the RC Church than within it, though his 'Modernism' escaped formal condemnation. The confidence which he inspired as a spiritual counsellor may be clearly discerned in his published correspondence.

Von Hügel's Selected Letters, 1896–1924, ed. B. Holland (1927), with Memoir by id., pp. 1–68; Letters from Baron Friedrich von Hügel to a Niece, ed. G. Greene (1928), with introd., pp. vii–xlv; The Letters of Baron Friedrich von Hügel and Professor Norman Kemp Smith, ed. L. F. Barmann (New York, 1981). Much of his correspondence with G. Tyrrell is pr. in M. D. Petre, Von Hügel and Tyrrell: The Story of a Friendship (1937). Life by M. de la Bedoyère (London, 1951). Studies by M. Nédoncelle (Paris thesis, 1935; Eng. tr., 1937), J. Steinmann (Paris, 1962), J. J. Heaney (Washington, DC, 1968; London, 1969), J. P. Whelan, SJ (London, 1971), and L. F. Barmann (Cambridge, 1972). P. Neuner, Religiöse Erfahrung und geschichtliche Offenbarung: Friedrich von Hügels Grundlegung der Theologie (Beiträge zur ökumenischen Theologie, 15; 1977); J. J. Kelly, Baron Friedrich von Hügel's Philosophy of Religion (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 62; 1983). T. M. Loome, Liberal Catholicism, Reform Catholicism, Modernism (Tübingen Theologische Studien, 14; 1979), esp. pp. 123–92 and 209–17. C. C. J. *Webb in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 874–6.

Vonier, Anscar (1875–1938), *Benedictine theologian. Born in Württemberg, he entered *Buckfast Abbey as a boy. After surviving a shipwreck in which his abbot died, Vonier was elected to succeed him in 1906 and immediately undertook to rebuild the abbey church. His theological writings were noted for their clear exposition of abstruse questions. They covered a wide range of subjects, including Christology and spirituality. The most influential was A Key to the Doctrine of the Eucharist (1925) which, at a time when it was not usual to do so, emphasized the corporate nature of the liturgy.

Collected Works (3 vols., 1952–3). E. Graf, OSB, Anscar Vonier: Abbot of Buckfast (1957).

Vorstius, Conradus (1569–1622), Konrad von der Vorst, *Arminian theologian. He was a native of *Cologne. After abandoning his early intention of entering business, he studied theology at Herborn and Heidelberg, and later proceeded to Basle and Geneva, where he greatly impressed T. *Beza by his abilities. In 1596 he accepted a teaching post at Count Arnold of Bertheim's academy at Steinfurt. Certain of his writings gave rise to a charge of Socinianism; but having successfully cleared himself before the Theological Faculty at Heidelberg, he continued to teach at Steinfurt, where his reputation rose from year to year. In 1610, after the death of J. Arminius, he accepted, after much hesitation, a call by J. Uitenbogaert to the vacant chair at *Leiden. In the same year he issued a treatise against R. *Bellarmine and also the second, greatly expanded, edition of a work (orig. pub. in 1606), Tractatus Theologicus de Deo, sive de Natura et Attributis Dei, which at once provoked attention on account of its rationalist tendencies. Strict Calvinists led by F. *Gomar pronounced it heretical; the Heidelberg theologians, and even H. a *Saravia, professed themselves shocked; and when *James I's attention was drawn to it he drew up a list of its theological errors, had Vorstius' books publicly burned in England, and instructed Ralph Winwood, the British Ambassador at The Hague, to oppose their author's appointment. Vorstius in consequence found himself compelled to retire from Leiden to Gouda (1612). Meanwhile he increased suspicion by translating certain of the works of F. *Socinus; and at the Synod of *Dort (1618–19) he was condemned as a heretic and banished from the territory of the States-General. He was the author of a long series of writings, including a commentary on most of St Paul's Epp. (posthumous, 1631). He was more sympathetic to the Fathers than most Protestant theologians of his age.

A. Schweizer, 'Conradus Vorstius. Vermittlung der reformirten Centraldogmen mit den socinianischen Einwendungen', Theologische Jahrbücher, 15 (1856), pp. 435–86, and 16 (1857), pp. 153–84. F. Shriver, 'Orthodoxy and diplomacy: James I and the Vorstius affair', EHR 85 (1970), pp. 449–74. C. van der Woude in Biografisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 1 (1978), pp. 407–10, s.v.

Voss, Gerhard Jan (1577–1649), Gerardus Joannes Vossius, Dutch humanist theologian. Born in Germany of Dutch parents, he was educated at *Leiden. In 1600 he became rector of the Latin School at Dordrecht and *c.*1615 regent of the States' College at Leiden. In common with his lifelong friend, H. *Grotius, he believed that the religious disputes of the day could be solved only by a profound study of Christian antiquity. He became involved in the disputes between the *Remonstrants and their opponents; and as himself suspected of Remonstrant leanings, he was compelled to resign his post in 1619. In 1622 he accepted a professorship of rhetoric and chronology, and later also of Greek, at Leiden University. He twice refused a call to Cambridge, but accepted a non-residential prebend at *Canterbury Cathedral from Abp. W. *Laud, being installed in 1629, and made a DCL at Oxford. In 1632 he was appointed professor of general and Church history at the newly founded Athenaeum at Amsterdam.

Voss's Historia Pelagiana (1618), De Theologia Gentili (1641), and Dissertationes Tres de Tribus Symbolis (1642) were all solid contributions to learning. In the last he was among the first to argue that the *Apostles' Creed was the work, not of the Apostles themselves, but of the early Roman Church. He also decisively disproved the traditional authorship of the *Athanasian Creed. He was one of the first scholars to apply the historical method to Christian dogmatics.

His son, Isaac Voss (1618–89), who became a residentiary Canon of Windsor in 1673, was also a classical and ecclesiastical historian of much erudition. He edited Pomponius Mela (1658), Marcus Junianus Justinus (1664), and Catullus (1684) and also zealously defended the genuineness of St *Ignatius's Epistles.

Collected edn. of G. J. Voss's Opera, pub. in 6 vols., Amsterdam, 1695–1701. P. Colomesius (ed.), Gerardi Joan. Vossii et Clarorum Virorum ad eum Epistolae (London, 1690). G. A. C. van der Lem and C. S. M. Rademaker, SSCC (eds.), Inventory of the Correspondence of Gerardus Joannes Vossius (1577–1649) (Respublica Literaria Neederlandica, 7; Assen, 1993). C. S. M. Rademaker, Life and Work of Gerardus Joannes Vossius (1577–1649) (ibid. 5; 1981). N. Wickenden, G. J. Vossius and the Humanist Concept of History (ibid. 8; 1993).

On Isaac Voss, see T. Seccombe in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 392–6.

Votive Masses. In the past Latin Missals have provided Votive Masses for a wide variety of occasions and objects, such as the election of a Pope or the restoration of peace, or in honour of particular mysteries, such as the Passion of our Lord. In the 1970 Roman Missal there are 15 Votive Masses, including those of the Trinity, the Holy Spirit, the Blessed Sacrament, the BVM, *angels, St *Joseph, the Apostles, St *Peter and St *Paul, and All Saints. Their purpose is defined as to encourage the piety of the people, and this consideration alone is to govern their use. They may be said at the discretion of the celebrant on any day on which there is no feast or obligatory *memoria, though the trend of contemporary practice is to discourage the celebration of Votive Masses in favour of observing the ecclesiastical calendar. The Solemn Votive Masses (for a 'grave cause'), which were usually prescribed by the bishop, have now been replaced by prayers or Masses for Various Occasions (46 of these, some with alternative texts) which may be said on any days except *Solemnities and the Sundays of Advent, Lent, and Eastertide, while the *Ritual Masses (q.v.) provide for particular needs, such as marriage (see NUPTIAL MASS).

vowel points. In common with some other Semitic languages, *Hebrew was originally written without vowel signs. In early inscriptions, certain consonant signs were used to represent vowels as well as consonants, especially at the end of words, and in course of time these 'vowel letters' were increasingly used to represent both final and medial vowels. Later, when the language was no longer spoken and there was a danger of the traditional pronunciation being forgotten, a system of 'vowel points' was introduced. These are dots or strokes, superimposed upon the consonantal text. Similar points are used to harden the pronunciation of certain consonants and to distinguish the letters 'Sin' (שׂ) and 'Shin' (שׁ), which are otherwise identical. In the Babylonian and Palestinian systems pointing signs are exclusively superlinear, but in the Tiberian system the signs came to be placed above, below and within the consonants. The Tiberian system, which largely replaced the earlier systems, is attributed to the *Massoretes. It was probably completed by c. AD 900. However, this system of vowel points has never been widely used in non-biblical texts, and certain biblical texts, such as synagogue scrolls, are also unvocalized. Modern (Israeli) Hebrew is normally written without vowel points. See also HEBREW (TONGUE).

E. Würthwein, Der Text des Alten Testaments (4th edn., 1973), pp. 23–30; Eng. tr. of this edn. (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1979; London, 1980), pp. 21–7. J. Barr, 'Vocalization and the Analysis of Hebrew among the Ancient Translators', in Hebräische Wortforschung: Festschrift zum 80. Geburtstag von Walter Baumgartner (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 16; 1967), pp. 1–11.

vows. Solemn and voluntary promises to perform something not otherwise required but believed to be acceptable to the person to whom the vows are made. Such promises to the Deity are common in many religions.

In the OT vows are sometimes explicitly dependent upon the performance of certain favours by Yahweh (e.g. the oath of Jacob at Bethel, Gen. 28: 20–2; Hannah's dedication of Samuel, 1 Sam. 1: 11); others appear to have been made unconditionally (cf. Ps. 132: 2–5). In the former case the vow was conceived less as a payment than as an offering of thankfulness (cf. the custom which still survives in some countries of vowing the model of a ship after deliverance from shipwreck). The special kind of vows made by the *Nazirites (q.v.) were prob. in origin an extension of such vows of self-dedication as are found in Ps. 132 and in Saul's prohibition against eating before sundown (1 Sam. 14: 24). The obligation to fulfil a vow once undertaken could be seen as absolute, as appears in the case of Jephthah's daughter (Jgs. 11: 30–9). This obligation was emphasized in the Law (Deut. 23: 21–3), though it was recognized that things unlawful should not be offered to Yahweh even in fulfilment of a vow (Deut. 23: 18). However, in Lev. 27: 1–8 (attributed by those scholars who favour a 'documentary hypothesis' to *P, c. 5th cent. BC), a system was elaborated whereby persons under vows might evade a direct offering of themselves by the payment of a fixed sum; things vowed might be redeemed by the payment of their value together with an extra sum in compensation. Later Jewish practice can be found in the tractate 'Nedarim' of the *Talmud.

In the NT Christ condemned the Jewish rule which enabled a man to escape his duty to his parents on the pretext of a vow (Mk. 7: 9–13), thus emphasizing that the matter of a vow pleasing to God must itself be acceptable. St *Paul is recorded to have been under a vow on his own account on one occasion (Acts 18: 18) and on another occasion to have joined others in fulfilling one (Acts 21: 23 f.). Vows of virginity, which were taken from a very early date, may be implied in 1 Cor. 7.

Acc. to Catholic moral theologians a vow to be valid must be freely made by a person who has a sufficient use of reason, be within the bounds of possibility of performance and tending to some future good. By definition it cannot relate to matters of precept. With the development of monasticism the threefold vow to follow the evangelical *counsels of perfection, taken on entering the religious life, came to occupy special prominence. Those most commonly taken outside religious profession include vows to go on a pilgrimage, vows of chastity, and vows dedicating property, but they may cover a variety of subjects. A vow may be private, in which case it is usually taken with the consent of a confessor, or public, when it is accepted in the name of the Church by a legitimate authority, such as an Abbot receiving a vow of profession. Since c. the 13th cent. *canon law has also distinguished between 'simple' and 'solemn' vows. The exact scope of the distinction is disputed, but acc. to a common view the solemnity of vows is determined by their irrevocable acceptance. In practice the distinction is determined in the RC Church by whether a vow is instituted and accepted as solemn by the Church. In the religious life, however, the main distinction is now between temporary and perpetual vows (rather than between simple and solemn ones). Current legislation on vows is contained in CIC (1983), cans. 1191–8.

L. I. Rabinowitz in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 16 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 227 f., s.v. 'Vows and Vowing'. P. Séjourné, OSB, in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3182–281, s.v. 'Vœu, Vœux de Religion'.

Voysey, Charles (1828–1912), Theistic preacher. He was educated at St Edmund Hall, Oxford. After ordination in the C of E he held a number of curacies in London and elsewhere, at one of which (St Mary's, Victoria Docks) he preached a sermon denying the doctrine of eternal punishment. From 1864 to 1871 he was vicar of Healaugh, nr. Tadcaster. Here his heterodox opinions led to his citation before the Chancellor of *York, and the sentence of deprivation which followed was upheld on his appeal to the Privy Council. Removing to London, Voysey began holding services in St George's Hall, Langham Place, and founded the 'Theistic Church', whose headquarters from 1885 were in Swallow Street, off Regent Street. On Voysey's death some of his followers formed a schism, the 'Free Religious Movement'.

D. Wright in DNB, 1912 1921, pp. 545 f., s.v.

Vulgate. The Latin version of the Bible (editio vulgata) most widely used in the W. It was for the most part the work of St *Jerome, and its original purpose was to end the great differences of text in the *Old Latin MSS circulating in the latter part of the 4th cent.

Jerome began his work, at the request of Pope *Damasus in 382, with a revision of the Gospels which was completed in 384. Here he seems to have used as the basis of his revision a Greek MS closely akin to the *Codex Sinaiticus. That he revised the remaining books of the NT is unlikely.

In revising the Latin text of the OT, Jerome began with the Psalms. He records that he had made a 'hasty' attempt to translate the *Psalter from the *Septuagint before *c.*392, when he completed the '*Gallican Psalter', using as his basis Origen's *Hexaplaric text of the Septuagint. Further work on other books of the OT on the same lines convinced him that a satisfactory version could only be made by working directly from the Hebrew original and making a completely fresh translation, which should be entirely independent of the Greek. This translation occupied him intermittently for some 15 years and included a third recension of the Psalter (the 'Hebrew Psalter'). The 'Hebrew Psalter', however, never won general acceptance; the 'Gallican Psalter' was adopted for liturgical use and came to be included in Vulgate MSS and so became standard in the printed texts.

Jerome's translations had at first to face considerable opposition through the long and sacred associations of the earlier texts; both the old and the new versions remained in use together for some time, but the excellence of Jerome's work was gradually recognized. When (prob. in the 6th cent.) the various books came to be collected into a single Bible (the Vulgate as we know it), it consisted of Jerome's translation from the Hebrew of the Jewish canonical books except the Psalter; the Gallican Psalter; Jerome's translation of Tobit and Judith; Old Latin translations of the rest of the Apocrypha; Jerome's revision of the Gospels; and a revised text of Acts, Epistles, and Rev. Various suggestions have been made about the identity of the reviser or revisers of the latter part of the NT, but all that can be said with certainty is that the earliest evidence for its existence is found in quotations in the writings of *Pelagius and his circle. The first unambiguous reference to a collection of biblical books within one cover occurs in the work of *Cassiodorus (Institutes, 1. 12. 3); the oldest known MS containing the whole Vulgate is the *Codex Amiatinus.

From the first, the translations which came to form the Vulgate were liable to easy corruption by reminiscence of Old Latin readings, esp. in the NT. Confusion was also caused by the practice of inserting into Old Latin MSS the more important of Jerome's corrections; the NT contained in the Book of *Armagh provides an example of the type of 'mixed' text which resulted. Attempts to standardize the text were made from the time of Cassiodorus onwards: notable among these were that associated with the name of *Alcuin and the work of *Theodulf of Orléans. A fresh, but corrupt, standard text (the 'Exemplar Parisiense') was put forth by the University of Paris in the 13th cent. Further efforts to preserve a standard text were made by the various '*correctoria' (q.v.).

The first printed edition was the *Mazarin (or 'Gutenberg') Bible (1456). A great many printed editions followed. The first critical text was that of Robert *Stephanus (Paris, 1528). At its Fourth Session (8 Apr. 1546) the Council of *Trent pronounced the Vulgate the only authentic Latin text of the Scriptures, and an edition eventually issued under the authority of *Sixtus V in 1590 was intended to be definitive. As, however, it contained many errors, existing copies, as far as possible, were called in and a revised text issued in 1592 by *Clement VIII, with some 3,000 corrections. Since, however, Sixtus had declared in his Bull authorizing the 1590 edition that that alone was the approved edition and its text was unalterable, the revised edition of 1592 bore the title-page: Biblia Sacra Vulgatae Editionis Sixti Quinti Pont. Max. jussu recognita atque edita, though it is commonly known as the 'Clementine edition'.

Later research has shown that the Clementine edition departs at many points from Jerome's text, and several attempts have been made to revise it. An emended text was printed by D. *Vallarsi in 1734; but owing to Papal prohibitions against further emendation of the Bible he included it in his edition of Jerome as the 'Divina Bibliotheca'. A fresh edition projected by R. *Bentley was never completed. A critical edition of the NT, by John *Wordsworth (d. 1911), H. J. White (d. 1934), H. F. D. Sparks, and A. W. Adams was pub. in the years 1889–1954. In 1908 *Pius X appointed a Commission with F. A. *Gasquet as president to produce a new edition. Publication began with Genesis at the Vatican Press in 1926, and is in progress. A handy, two-volume edition, prepared by R. Weber, OSB, and four collaborators, was pub. by the Württemberg Bibelanstalt at Stuttgart in 1969. There is a concordance ed. B. Fischer, OSB (5 vols., ibid., 1977).

Edns. of the Clementine Vulgate are innumerable. Besides the two crit. texts (Papal Commission; J. Wordsworth, H. J. White, etc.) and the two Stuttgart volumes, there is a convenient students' edn., Novum Testamentum Latine: Editio Minor (Oxford, 1911), by H. J. White. S. Berger, Histoire de la Vulgate pendant les premiers siècles du moyen âge (1893). F. Stummer, Einführung in die lateinische Bibel (1928). H. *Quentin, OSB, Mémoire sur l'établissement du texte de la Vulgate, 1, Octateuque (Collectanea Biblica Latina, 6; Rome and Paris, 1922). J. *Chapman, OSB, Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908); H. J. Vogels, Vulgatastudien: Die Evangelien der Vulgata, untersucht auf ihre lateinische und griechische Vorlage (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 14, Hefte 2–3; 1928); H. Glunz, Britannien und Bibeltext: Der Vulgatatext der Evangelien in seinem Verhältnis zu irisch-angelsächsischen Kultur des Frühmittelalters (Kölner anglistische Arbeiten, 12; 1930); id., History of the Vulgate in England from Alcuin to Roger Bacon: Being an Inquiry into the Text of some English Manuscripts of the Vulgate Gospels (1933). B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (1941; 3rd edn. [1983]), passim; J. Fontaine and C. Pietri (eds.), Le Monde latin antique et la Bible (Bible et tous les temps, 2 [1985]). T. Stramare (ed.), La Bibbia 'Vulgata' dalle origini ai nostri giorni: Atti del Simposio Internazionale in onore di Sisto V, Grottammare, 29–31 agosto 1985 (Collectanea Biblica Latina, 16; 1985). B. Fischer [OSB], Die lateinischen Evangelien bis zum 10. Jahrhundert (Vetus Latina, Aus der Geschichte der Lateinischen Bibel, 13, 15, 17, and 18; 1988–91). R. Loewe, 'The Medieval History of the Latin Vulgate' in The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2 (ed. G. W. H. Lampe; Cambridge, 1969), pp. 102–54; H. F. D. Sparks, 'Jerome as a Biblical Scholar', ibid. 1 (ed. P. R. Ackroyd and C. F. Evans; 1970), pp. 510–41, esp. pp. 517–26. B. Fischer, OSB, 'Das Neue Testament in lateinischer Sprache', in K. Aland (ed.), Die alten Übersetzungen des Neuen Testaments, die Kirchenväterzitate und Lektionare (Arbeiten zur Neutestamentlichen Textforschung, 5; 1972), pp. 1–92, repr. in id., Beiträge zur Geschichte der lateinischen Bibeltexte (Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, 12; 1986), pp. 156–274; also other items in this vol. P.-M. Bogaert, OSB, 'La Bible latine des origines au moyen âge. Aperçu historique, état des questions', Revue Théologique de Louvain, 19 (1988), pp. 137–59 and 276–314. B. Kedar, 'The Latin Translations', in M. J. Mulder (ed.), Mikra (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, 2. 1; Assen/Maastricht and Philadelphia, 1988), pp. 299–338, esp. pp. 313–38. W. E. Plater and H. J. White, A Grammar of the Vulgate (1926). H. J. White in HDB 4 (1902), pp. 873–90, s.v.; E. Mangenot in Dict. Bibl. 5 (1912), cols. 2456–500, s.v.; V. Reichmann in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 178–81, s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen', 3. 3. 'Zum Geschichte der Vulgata'. See also CODEX AMIATINUS and CODEX FULDENSIS.

W

Wace, Henry (1836–1924), Dean of *Canterbury. He was educated at Rugby and Brasenose College, Oxford, and ordained in 1862. In 1863 he became a regular contributor to The Times. He was chaplain (1872–80), and then (1880–96) preacher, of Lincoln's Inn; Principal of *King's College, London (1883–96); rector of St Michael's, Cornhill (1896–1903); and from 1903 until his death Dean of Canterbury. He was a staunch Evangelical and supporter of the Reformation settlement, an admirer of M. *Luther, and equally opposed to the modern methods of 'higher criticism' of the Bible and to the High Church attempts at revising the BCP. He was the editor, with W. Smith, of the Dictionary of Christian Biography (4 vols., 1880–6), with P. *Schaff of the second series of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers (14 vols., 1890–1900), and with C. A. Buchheim of Luther's Primary Works (1896). His own writings include lectures on The Gospel and its Witnesses (1883), and The Bible and Modern Investigations (1903), as well as numerous articles in newspapers and periodicals.

A. Cochrane in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 876 f., s.v.

Wadding, Luke (1588–1657), *Franciscan historian. A native of Waterford, he made his profession in the Franciscan Order at Matozinhos, nr. Oporto, in 1608, studied at Lisbon and Coimbra, and was ordained priest in 1613. In 1617 he became president of the Irish College at Salamanca, and in 1618 theologian to the Spanish Embassy sent to Rome to promote the definition of the *Immaculate Conception. His studies led to his Legatio Philippi III et IV pro definienda controversia Immaculatae Conceptionis (1624). In 1625 he took over the new friary of St Isidore in Rome, which he developed into a college for Irish Franciscans. The establishment of the Ludovician College for Irish secular clergy followed in 1627. He served as consultor to the *Holy Office, was appointed a member of the commission set up to reform the *Breviary (1629) and the *Missal (1631), and advised the Sacred Congregation of the *Propaganda over the reorganization of the RC Church in Ireland, to which he was largely instrumental in securing the dispatch of a Papal Nuncio. In 1652 he was a member of the commission set up by *Innocent X to investigate *Jansenism. His principal works were the Annales Ordinis Minorum (8 vols., 1625–1654; 3rd edn., 25 vols., 1931–5), a monumental collection of material on the history of the Franciscan Order to 1540, with its subsidiary Scriptores Ordinis Minorum (1650; new edn., 1906), which is still indispensable for students of Franciscan history; and his edition of the works of *Duns Scotus (16 vols., 1639; new edn., 26 vols., 1891–5, repr. Farnborough, 1969).

B. Jennings, OFM (ed.), Wadding Papers 1614–38 (Irish Manuscripts Commission, Dublin, 1953); id., 'Some Correspondence of Father Luke Wadding, O.F.M.', Collectanea Hibernica, 2 (1959), pp. 66–94. Life by F. Harold (nephew) orig. pr. in Epitome to Annales (Rome, 1662), prefixed to Annales, 1 (2nd edn., Rome, 1731), pp. i–clxxx. J. A. O'Shea, OSF, The Life of Father Luke Wadding (Dublin, 1885). F. Casolini, Luca Wadding, O.F.M.: L'annalista dei Francescani (Milan, 1936). G. Cleary, Father Luke Wadding and St Isidore's College, Rome (Rome, 1925). Father Luke Wadding: Commemorative Volume, edited by the Franciscan Fathers of Dún Mhuire, Killeney (1957). C. Mooney, OFM, 'The Writings of Father Luke Wadding, O.F.M.', Franciscan Studies, 18 (1958), pp. 225–39. E. Pásztor, 'Luca Wadding, editore della "Vita Anselmi episcopi Lucensis" ', AFH 54 (1961), pp. 303–28. B. Millett, OFM, in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 761 f. s.v., with further bibl.

Wailing Wall, known in Jewish tradition as the 'Western Wall', in *Jerusalem. Originally part of the *Temple structure erected by *Herod the Great, since the 7th cent. it has formed the W. wall of the Haram-es-Sherif ('The Noble Sanctuary'), which is the third most holy place in the world to Muslims after Mecca and Medina. The wall has been venerated by Jews since the destruction of the Temple in AD 70. They have been accustomed, prob. since the Middle Ages, to lament at this wall the downfall of the Temple and the Holy City and to pray, esp. on the *Sabbath, for their restoration; it is this custom which has given rise to the popular name.

J. Auerbach in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 16 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 467–72, s.v. 'Western Wall'.

wake. A vigil, and hence a holiday. The name (from Lat. vigilia) was originally applied to the all-night *vigil kept, from Anglo-Saxon times onwards, before certain holy days, but it early came to refer to the feasting and merry-making on the holy day itself, and then (by the 16th cent.) to a fair held annually at the festival of the local patron saint. The word survives as the name of annual local holidays of two or three days observed by a whole town or village in the Northern and West Midland districts of England. In Ireland a wake is a vigil and feast at a funeral.

Wake, William (1657–1737), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, he went to Paris as chaplain of the English ambassador in 1682, an office to which he owed his acquaintance with *Gallicanism. After his return to England in 1685 he held various ecclesiastical appointments, being made Canon of Christ Church in 1689 and Dean of *Exeter in 1703. In 1705 he became Bp. of *Lincoln and in 1716 Abp. of Canterbury. From 1717 to 1720 he was engaged in negotiations with representatives of Gallicanism, notably L. E. *Dupin, on a plan of reunion between the C of E and the French Church, in which both parties showed themselves ready for concessions. The death of Dupin in 1719, however, checked the project, which would probably have proved unacceptable in any case to both the English and the French clergy. A man of liberal views, Wake was in sympathy with the Nonconformists, and even advocated changes in the BCP to meet their difficulties, though he opposed, in 1718, a bill for modification of the *Corporation and *Test Acts. Among his numerous writings the most important is The State of the Church and Clergy of England (1703), a history of English ecclesiastical synods which was intended as a reply to F. *Atterbury's theories of Convocation. His Principles of the Christian Religion (1700), a commentary on the BCP Catechism, became very popular. Wake bequeathed his valuable collections and library to Christ Church, which also possesses a large number of his unpublished manuscripts.

William Wake's Gallican Correspondence and Related Documents, 1716–1731, ed. L. Adams (American University Studies, Series 7, vols. 26 [in 2 parts], 55–8, and 134; New York, etc., 1988–93). J. Gres-Gayer (ed.), Paris-Cantorbéry (1717–1720): Le Dossier d'un oecuménisme [1989]. Life by N. Sykes (2 vols., Cambridge, 1957). J. H. Lupton, Archbishop Wake and the Project of Union (1717 20) between the Gallican and Anglican Churches (1896); E. Préclin, L'Union des Églises gallicane et anglicane: Une tentative au temps de Louis XV. P.-F. le Courayer (de 1681 à 1732) et Guillaume Wake (1928). J. H. Lupton in DNB 58 (1899), pp. 445 f., s.v.

Walafrid Strabo (*c.*808–49), i.e. 'Walafrid the Squinter', poet and biblical exegete. Of a local family, he spent his childhood and adolescence in the monastery of *Reichenau, where he wrote his first major poem, the Visio Wettini. After completing his education with *Rabanus Maurus at *Fulda (827–9), he became tutor to the Emperor's son Charles (the future King and Emp. Charles the Bald) in 829. His reward was the abbacy of Reichenau itself in 839 (confirmed in 842). He was drowned crossing the Loire on 18 Aug. 849. Walafrid wrote occasional verse for members of the court and the higher clergy, and a more ambitious poem De Cultura Hortorum (on gardening) that draws heavily on *Virgil and Ovid. He developed Rabanus' exegetical writings and followed him too in his liturgical treatise De Exordiis et Incrementis quarundam in Observationibus Ecclesiasticis Rerum. He wrote saints' Lives in verse and prose, and several sermons. He abridged Rabanus' commentaries on the Pentateuch and perhaps himself commented on the Psalter and Catholic Epistles; but the long-standing scholarly belief that he wrote the Glossa Ordinaria* to the Bible is unfounded. A Reichenau letter-collection refers to him both as a young monk ('Straboni strionico') and as abbot, and his own commonplace book of grammar, metrics, and computistica—the raw material of Charles the Bald's education—is still preserved at St *Gall.

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PL 113–14; crit. edn. of his verse by E. Duemmler in MGH, Poetae, 2 (1884), pp. 259–423; of the De Exordiis et Incrementis by A. Boretius and V. Krause in MGH, Leges, Section 2, vol. 2 (1897), pp. 473–516; of Visio Wettini, with Eng. tr., by D. A. Traill (Lateinische Sprache und Literatur des Mittelalters, 2; Berne and Frankfurt, 1974). Six of his poems are pr., with Eng. tr., by P. [J.] Godman, Poetry of the Carolingian Renaissance (1985), pp. 214–29. The Reichenau letter-collection is ed. K. Zeumer in MGH, Leges, Section 5 (1886), pp. 364–77, the passages on Walafrid, pp. 368 f. Analysis of the commonplace book by B. Bischoff, 'Eine Sammelhandschrift Walahfrid Strabos (Cod. Sangall. 878)', in Aus der Welt des Buches: Festgabe zum 70. Geburtstag von Georg Leyh (Beiheft zum Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, 75; 1950), pp. 30–48; rev. in his Mittelalterliche Studien, 2 (1967), pp. 34–51. H. Sierp, 'Walafried Strabos Gedicht über den Gartenbau', in K. Beyerle (ed.), Die Kultur der Abtei Reichenau, 2 (Munich, 1925), pp. 756–72. On other aspects of his life and work, K. Beyerle, ibid. 1 (1925), pp. 92–108, K. Künstle, ibid. 2 (1925), pp. 706–10, and A. Bergmann, ibid., pp. 712–38. E. S. Duckett, Carolingian Portraits (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1962]), pp. 121–60. A. Önnerfors, 'Philologisches zu Walahfrid Strabo', Mittellateinisches Jahrbuch, 7 (1972), pp. 41–92. P. [J.] Godman, Poets and Emperors: Frankish Politics and Carolingian Poetry (Oxford, 1987), pp. 129–48. Raby (1953), pp. 183–9; F. J. Raby, A History of Secular Latin Poetry in the Middle Ages, 1 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1957), pp. 229–34; J. Szövérffy, Weltliche Dichtungen des lateinischen Mittelalters, 1 (1970), pp. 571–89. F. Stegmüller, Repertorum Biblicum Medii Aevi, 5 (Madrid, 1955), pp. 426–31 (nos. 8316–31). Manitius, 1, pp. 302–15; F. Brunhölz, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters, 1 (Munich, 1975), pp. 345–58 and 557–9. H. Peltier in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3498–505; K. Langosch in Stammler, 4 (1953), cols. 734–69, both s.v.

Walburga, St (*c.*710–79), sister of St *Willibald and St Wynnebald (d. 761) and Abbess of Heidenheim. Born in England and educated at the abbey at Wimborne, she went at the wish of St *Boniface to assist in his mission work in Germany. On Wynnebald's death she assumed the direction of his double monastery at Heidenheim, and remained there till her death. Her feast day is observed on 25 Feb. and 1 May. The coincidence of the latter date with an old pagan feast commemorating the beginning of summer, with rites protecting from witchcraft, has given to 1 May the name 'Walpurgis [i.e. Walburga's] Night', e.g. in Goethe's Faust.

AASS, Feb. 3 (1658), pp. 511–72. The account of her miracles by Wolfhard of Herrieden, written at the end of the 9th cent., is ed., with Ger. tr., by A. Bauch, Quellen zur Geschichte der Diözese Eichstätt, 2 (Eichstätter Studien, NF 12; 1979), pp. 141–348. F. M. Steele, The Life of Saint Walburga [1921]. M. Coens, 'Le Séjour légendaire de sainte Walburge à Anvers d'après son office à la collégiale de Zutphen', Anal. Boll. 80 (1962), pp. 345–60. A. Bauch, 'Monheim, ein Wallfahrtszentrum der Karolingerzeit. Frühe Walpurgisverehrung', Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, 90 (1979), pp. 32–44; M. Mengs, 'Schrifttum zum Leben und zur Verehrung der heiligen Walburga', ibid., pp. 121–46. A. Bang-Kaup in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 10 (1965), col. 928, s.v., with further bibl. See also bibl. to St Willibald, for whom the sources are historically more reliable.

Walden, Roger (d. 1406), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of Essex, he rose to a position of importance in the *Channel Islands and held livings at Fenny Drayton, Leicestershire, and Burton in Kendal. In 1387 he became Archdeacon of *Winchester and from then onwards, under court influence, advanced rapidly. From 1387 to 1392 he was treasurer of Calais. In 1395 he was created Treasurer of England and, continuing to hold numerous other preferments, Dean of *York. On *Arundel's banishment in 1397 Richard II secured his provision to the see of Canterbury from the Pope; but when Arundel returned with Henry of Lancaster (1399), Walden's property was plundered and his register destroyed. On 10 Jan. 1400 he was committed to the Tower on a charge of complicity in the Epiphany plot against Henry IV, but liberated about a month later. In 1405 he succeeded Robert Braybrooke as Bp. of London. He died at Much Hadham, Herts, on 6 Jan. 1406. A MS collection of chronological tables (Cotton MS Julius B. XIII), known as the 'Historia Mundi', has been wrongly attributed to him.

J. H. Wylie, History of England under Henry the Fourth, 3 (1896), pp. 123–8. J. Tait in DNB 59 (1899), pp. 24–6, s.v., with further refs.

Waldenses, also Vaudois. The name 'Waldenses' has since the late 12th cent. been applied to several groups of similar and possibly interrelated heretics. Since some Waldenses in the valleys of Piedmont adopted the creeds and structures of Genevan *Calvinism in the 16th cent., they and their descendants formed an organized 'Waldensian' Protestant Church, the 'Chiesa Evangelica Valdese', taking the name and inhabiting some of the same regions as their medieval predecessors.

The earliest medieval sources attribute the foundation of the 'Waldensian' heresy to one called Valdensis, Valdesius, or 'Valdes'; the form 'Waldo' and the addition of 'Peter' to his name are later. The suggestion that the heresy originated earlier, in the 4th or 9th cent., can be discounted. Acc. to the Chronicle of Laon (c. 1220) and the nearly contemporary Richard of Poitiers, Valdes was a rich citizen of Lyons, either a merchant or a farmer of feudal revenues (hence technically a usurer); around 1170–3 he was converted, perhaps by hearing a street performer retell the story of St Alexis (a 5th-cent. Roman patrician who left a wealthy bride for a life of mendicancy and almsgiving in Syria), and gave all his wealth to the poor. He settled an income on his wife, placed his daughters in Robert of Abrissel's abbey of *Fontevrault, and began to live on alms and to preach, as well as having a translation (now lost) of parts of the Bible and the Fathers made for himself. His way of life was approved by Pope *Alexander III at the Third *Lateran Council in 1179, so long as he and his followers refrained from preaching except at the invitation of the clergy. In 1180 Valdes subscribed a profession of orthodox belief in the presence of the Cardinal Henry of Clairvaux and Abp. Guichard of Lyons. However, shortly afterwards he and his followers broke the Church's ban on unofficial preaching and in 1182 or 1183 they were excommunicated and expelled from Lyons by Abp. Jean Bellesmains. Summoned to the Council of *Verona in 1184, they were declared 'pertinacious and schismatic', and included with the *Cathars, *Humiliati, and others in the general condemnation of heretics pronounced at that Council. This condemnation was progressively echoed throughout W. and S. Europe. At this stage Valdes's movement was characterized essentially by itinerant lay preaching (esp. against the Cathars), voluntary poverty, and works of charity; hence the earliest Waldenses' alternative title of 'Poor men of Lyons'. Valdes himself died sometime between 1205 and 1218.

Around the time of Valdes's death the movement was split by a series of schisms. Some heretics known as 'Poor Lombards', perhaps originally separate and later under Valdes's leadership, established themselves in and around Milan and Piacenza. In 1205 these Lombards, under the leadership of Giovanni di Ronco, broke with the 'Lyonnais' poor over several issues, esp. manual labour (practised by the Lombards) and the validity of Catholic sacraments. The two groups aired their differences at Bergamo in 1218. Meanwhile the 'Lyonnais' themselves split; after a dispute at Pamiers in Languedoc in 1207, Valdes's former follower Durand of Osca led a group of Lyonnais Waldenses back into the Catholic obedience; he had made a profession of Catholic orthodoxy in 1208, and in 1210 he was authorized by *Innocent III to establish a community of 'Catholic Poor'. In 1210 Bernard Prim returned other Waldenses to Catholicism as the 'Reconciled Poor'.

By the 1220s Waldenses were also found in the (*Holy Roman) Empire, presumably due to missions from Lombardy. They suffered under the inquisitor *Conrad of Marburg, and were described in detail by such authors as the 'Passauer Anonymous' and works attributed to *David of Augsburg. Such authors portrayed a Waldensianism in which the preachers (often called 'Brethren') did not preach openly to Catholics, but reserved their services for known sympathizers called 'friends'. These writers also established a scheme of Waldensian beliefs: '*Donatist' distrust of the 'Roman' [i.e. Catholic] clergy, esp. those in mortal sin, and of sacraments offered by them; doubts regarding prayers for the *dead and *purgatory; rejection of *oaths and of homicide; and insistence on their right to preach. After the middle of the 13th cent. persecution abated, leaving a gap in the sources of the movement. From the 1290s groups of 'Waldenses' were found and investigated in the SW Alps; others were widely scattered in the Empire, from Brandenburg and Pomerania to the regions of Austria; from the 14th cent. onwards detailed *inquisitorial proceedings against these groups survive. The Germans and Lombards occasionally corresponded, as in 1368. These later medieval movements were characterized by a more attenuated form of heresy: they entertained doubts about the Church's rites, but in many cases continued to participate in and receive the sacraments. Their pastors (called 'Brethren' in Germany and 'Barbes' in the Alps) travelled and taught in secret as far as possible.

Shortly after the outbreak of the *Hussite schism in Bohemia, the Swabian heretic pastor Friedrich Reiser established contacts between some German Waldenses and the Bohemian heretics. By the mid-15th cent. the Bohemian 'Unity of Brethren' was also known as the 'Waldensian Brethren'; that title was used when their confession was printed by the *Lutherans in 1538, and when they subscribed the Consensus of Sandomierz in 1570. The Bohemians may also have influenced the Waldenses in Latin Europe through the missions of their theologian Lukasz of Prague.

The Waldenses of the SW Alps, who before 1500 had spread to parts of Provence, Calabria, and Apulia, quickly took an interest in the Protestant *Reformation; reformed pamphlets circulated among them and in 1530 two of their pastors went to Neuchâtel, Berne, Basle and Strasbourg to take advice from leading reformers. In the autumn of 1532 several reformers, incl. Antoine Saunier and Pierre Robert (*Olivetan), and prob. G. *Farel, went to Piedmont to dispute with them and teach them. It has traditionally been held that at a meeting on 12 Sept. 1532 a gathering of 'barbes' at Chanforan in the Val d'Angrogna adopted a statement of beliefs based on Farel's teaching. However, the sources for this tradition are contradictory, and the 'statement of beliefs' is ambiguous; no historian located this meeting at 'Chanforan' before 1847. Protestant preachers were certainly heard, not always with approval, by the Waldenses in the 1530s; but the latter did not change their way of life and cease to receive Catholic sacraments, either in Provence or in the Alps, until they formed distinct Protestant Churches, with special buildings, settled pastors sent by J. *Calvin from *Geneva, and a Genevan confession and Church ordinance, between c.1555 and c.1564.

With the advent of Protestantism in France, Germany, and Bohemia, the Waldenses lost their separate identity, except in that part of their Alpine valleys which fell under the Dukes of Savoy rather than the Kings of France. There they were attacked by Duke Emanuele Filiberto in 1560–61; they defended themselves so successfully that by the Treaty of Cavour (5 June 1561) they were given limited freedom of worship. Thereafter they were tolerated, but occasionally savagely persecuted. In 1655 Duke Carlo Emanuale II permitted a massacre which led to O. *Cromwell's intervention and the collection of a large fund for their relief in England; in 1686 Duke Vittorio Amedeo II, copying Louis XIV's revocation of the Edict of *Nantes, expelled them from their valleys, but some of them fought their way back in 1689 under their pastor Henri Arnaud. Only in 1848 were they given full civil rights within Piedmont-Savoy, where they still practise a form of worship based closely on 16th-cent. Genevan Protestantism. Their Church structure comprehends urban Churches in such cities as Turin, Florence, and Rome, as well as emigré communities in S. America. Their theological college, the 'Facoltà Valdese di Teologia', founded in 1855 at Torre Pèllice near Turin, was moved in 1861 to Florence and in 1920 to Rome.

Useful collection of docs. ed. A. Patschovsky and K.-V. Selge, Quellen zur Geschichte der Waldenser (Texte zur Kirchen- und Theologiegeschichte, 18 [1973]). The earliest evidence is found in the Chronicle of Laon (Chronicon universale anonymi Laudunensis), ed. A. Cartellieri and W. Stechele (Leipzig and Paris, 1909), pp. 20–2; also ed. G. Waitz in MGH, Scriptores, 26 (1882), pp. 442–57, at pp. 447 f.; other early medieval sources are pr. by A. Lecoy de la Marche (ed.), Anecdotes historiques, légendes et apologues tirés du recueil inédit d'Étienne de Bourbon, dominicain du XIII^e siècle (Société de l'Histoire de France, 1887), pp. 290–3; A. Dondaine, OP, 'Aux origines du valdéisme. Une profession de foi de Valdès', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 16 (1946), pp. 191–235; G. Gonnet (ed.), Enchiridion Fontium Valdensium, 1 (Collana della Facoltà Valdese de Teologia, Roma; Turin, 1958 [all pub.]); id., Le Confessioni de Fede Valdesi prima della Riforma (ibid., 1967); K.-V. Selge, Die ersten Waldenser (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 37; 2 vols., 1967), incl. edn. of the Liber Antiheresis of Durandus of Osca.

Modern works on the early Waldenses incl. H. Grundmann, Religiöse Bewegungen im Mittelalters (Historische Studien, 267; 1935; 2nd edn., Hildesheim, 1961), esp. pp. 91–127, 161–7; C. Thouzellier, Catharisme et Valdéisme en Languedoc à la fin du XII^e siècle et au début du XIII^e siècle (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences humaines de Paris, Série 'Recherches', 27; 1966); Vaudois languedociens et Pauvres Catholiques, with introd. by M.-H. Vicaire (Cahiers de Fanjeaux, 2 [1967]); A. Patschovsky, Der Passauer Anonymous (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae historica, 22; Stuttgart, 1968); W. Erk (ed.), Waldenser: Geschichte und Gegenwart (Frankfurt am Main, 1971); J. Gonnet and A. Molnar, Les Vaudois au Moyen Âge (Turin [1974]); A. Molnar, Storia dei Valdesi, 1: Dalle origini all'adhesione alla Riforma (ibid. [1974]); G. G. Merlo, Valdesi e valdisimi medievali: Itinerari e proposte di ricerca (ibid. [1984]); id., Valdesi e valdismi medievali, 2: Identità valdesi nella storia e nella storiografia (ibid., 1991); and G. Audisio, Les 'Vaudois': Naissance, vie et mort d'une dissidence (XII^me–XVI^me siècles) (ibid. [1989]).

Texts and studies on the later medieval movements in Ger.-speaking lands incl. D. Kurze (ed.), Quellen zur Ketzergeschichte Brandenburgs und Pommerns (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission zu Berlin, 45; 1975), passim; A. Patschovsky, Die Anfänge einer ständigen Inquisition in Böhmen: Ein Prager Inquisitoren-Handbuch aus der ersten Hälfte des 14. Jahrhunderts (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Quellenkunde des Mittelalters, 3; 1975); and R. Kieckhefer, Repression of Heresy in Medieval Germany (Liverpool [1979]), pp. 13 f., 53–73. On the later Middle Ages and Reformation, J. H. Todd, The Books of the Vaudois: The Waldensian Manuscripts Preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin (1865); J. Marx, L'Inquisition en Dauphiné: Étude sur le développement et la répression de l'hérésie et de la sorcellerie du XIV^e siècle au début du règne de François I (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Sciences historiques et philologiques, 206; 1914), esp. pp. 11–27 and 145–200; A. Armand Hugon, Storia dei Valdesi, 2: Dal sinodo di Chanforan all'Emancipazione (Turin [1974]); V. Vinay, Le Confessioni di fede dei Valdesi Reformati (Collana della Facoltà Valdese di Teologia, 12; Turin [1975]); G. G. Merlo, Eretici e Inquisitori nella Società Piemontese del Trecento (ibid. [1977]), with edn. of primary texts; G. Audisio, Le Barbe et l'inquisiteur: Procès du barbe vaudois Pierre Griot par l'inquisiteur Jean de Roma (Apt, 1532) (Aix-en-Provence [1979]); E. Cameron, The Reformation of the Heretics: The Waldenses of the Alps, 1450–1580 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1984); G. Audisio, Les Vaudois du Luberon: Une minorité en Provence (1460–1560) (1984); id., Procès-Verbal d'un Massacre: Les Vaudois du Luberon (avril 1545) (Aix-en-Provence [1992]); A. de Lange (ed.), Dall'Europa alle Valli Valdesi. Atti del XXIX Convegno storico internazionale: 'Il Glorioso Rimpatrio (1689–1989) . . .', Torre Pellice (To), 3–7 settembre 1989 (Collana della Società di Studi Valdesi, 11; Turin [1990]). Late medieval and early modern MSS associated with the Waldenses are discussed in E. Balmas and M. Dal Corso, I Manoscritti valdesi di Ginevra (Turin [1977]); several texts ed. by the former. On the modern Waldensian Church see V. Vinay, Storia dei Valdesi, 3: Dal movimento evangelico italiano al movimento ecumenico (1848–1978) (Turin [1980]). Bulletin de la Société d'histoire vaudoise, later Bollettino della Società di Studi Valdesi (1884 ff.). A. Armand Hugon and G. Gonnet, Bibliografia valdese (Torre Pellice, 1953). H. Grundmann, Bibliographie zur Ketzergeschichte des Mittelalters, 1900–1966 (Sussidi eruditi, 20; 1967), pp. 41–5. L. Cristiani in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2586–600, s.v. 'Vaudois'.

Waldenström, Paul Peter (1838–1917), Swedish preacher and Free Churchman. As a young man he held various teaching appointments. In 1864 he was ordained a pastor. Attaching himself to the revivalist movement of C. O. Rosenius (d. 1868), he succeeded him as editor of the Pietisten, a widely circulating revivalist newspaper. In various writings between 1872 and 1875 he put forward a theory of the *Atonement inconsistent with *Lutheran orthodoxy: man had to be reconciled to God, not God to man, and God sent His Son, not in wrath but in love. He also rejected the doctrine that when Christ died His atoning work was finished. A long controversy ensued, and Waldenström became the founder of the largest sectarian movement in *Sweden. In 1905 he took over the direction of the separatist Swedish Mission Society (Svenska Missionsförbundet), which, besides work in Sweden, established missions in the *Congo, *China, and Chinese Turkestan. From 1884 to 1905 he was a member of the Swedish Riksdag.

Collected Sermons, 2 vols., Stockholm, 1918–19; Memoirs, 1838–75, ed. B. Nyrén (ibid., 1928). There are Eng. trs. by J. G. Princell, with notes and introds., of Waldenström's meditations on The Blood of Jesus (Chicago, 1888) and on The Reconciliation (ibid., 1888). Studies by N. P. Ollén (Stockholm, 1917), ed. A. Ohldén (Uppsala, 1917), E. Leufvén (ibid., 1920), E. Newman (Stockholm, 1932), and W. Bredberg (Uppsala, 1948). C. Olsson, Försoningen enlight C. O. Rosenius och P. Waldenström (1928). E. Beyreuther in RGG (3rd edn.), 6 (1962), col. 1534, s.v.

Wales, Christianity in. The early history of Christianity in Wales is obscure. The archaeological and literary evidence for the period before 500 is slight, but the writings of *Gildas (though he names no single ecclesiastic of his own times) have been held to suggest continuity of belief and organization from late Roman times. The 6th cent. is known as 'The Age of the Saints', but their lives, compiled at least five centuries later, are unsafe foundations for detailed historical reconstruction. In SE Wales Cadoc (founder of the monastery of Llancarfan), *Dubricius, and *Illtyd were apparently followed elsewhere in the south by a more ascetic group, *Teilo, Padarn, and *David; Seiriol, Cadfan, Cybi, and *Deiniol were active in the north. According to the Lives of these saints their journeys along the western sea-routes linked *Scotland, *Ireland, Cornwall, and Brittany with Wales; inscribed stones provide independent evidence of this activity. The monasteries they founded (esp. *Bangor Iscoed) were at first very large and were the religious centres of large districts; in time they came into the hands of smaller communities (clasau) of often hereditary clergy, clerical marriage being widespread in Wales. Those on the coast were despoiled by the Norsemen. Some of the early monasteries were also the seat of a bishop, and three of them (*St Asaph, *St Davids, and *Bangor), together with the later foundation of *Llandaff, eventually emerged as territorial bishoprics, though others (esp. Llanbadarn Fawr) are said to have been ruled by abbot-bishops for some time. There are, however, many gaps in the Welsh episcopal lists until the 12th cent.

The meeting of British bishops with St *Augustine *c.*603 failed to produce any union between the *Celtic and Roman missions. The Welsh Church remained stubbornly conservative, but eventually adopted the Roman date for Easter from 768, though it resisted the claims of *Canterbury to supremacy over Wales and maintained closer contacts with the Church in Ireland and Brittany than with England.

The Norman conquest of England and the subsequent conquest of parts of Wales by Norman lords reopened the Church in Wales to English and Continental influences. Abp. *Anselm won the first successes in the long struggle to subject all four Welsh sees to Canterbury; this was eventually achieved despite the efforts of *Giraldus Cambrensis to gain metropolitan status for St Davids. Twelfth-cent. bishops began the definition of diocesan and parochial boundaries: parishes in the north were generally large and in episcopal patronage; those in the south were small and in lay or monastic patronage. The system of *tithes was instituted, and by the end of the 13th cent. an administrative and judicial organization was in being and clasau replaced by cathedral chapters. Leadership in learning passed from notable individual families (esp. that of Sulien) to the religious houses. Latin monasticism came to Wales when the early Norman invaders founded *Benedictine houses (e.g. Chepstow, *c.*1071) on the borders of the S. and SE; later Normans founded some *Cistercian houses (e.g. *Tintern), but the Cistercians' initial austerity and their lack of Norman connections appealed strongly to the Welsh princes, who gave them a ready welcome and liberal endowments at Strata Florida (1164) and elsewhere. Houses of other orders were also established.

Pressure from the last native Welsh prince, Llewelyn ap Gruffydd (d. 1282), led the Welsh bishops to support Edward I, whose conquest of Wales was followed by a relatively stable and prosperous half-century for the Welsh Church. But plague and economic depression, and resentment at the exploitation of ecclesiastical revenues and appointments in the interests of the English state, led many of the Welsh secular clergy and religious to support the revolt of Owain Glyn Dwr against Henry IV in 1400. Its failure strengthened the position of the secular administration and the bishops (many of them English). The pre-*Reformation Church in Wales suffered to a special degree from inertia; *Lollardy, humanism, and *Lutheranism made little impression, and the religious houses became seriously undermanned.

The Tudor monarchs enjoyed the advantage of Welsh descent; higher clergy and parvenu gentry accepted their policies, and the breach with Rome and the *Dissolution of the Monasteries (whose lands found ready buyers) aroused little opposition; the greatest upheaval was caused by *Mary Tudor's brief attempt to impose clerical *celibacy. *Elizabeth I appointed resident, active, Welsh-speaking bishops, who imposed the 1559 settlement. The *Counter-Reformation made little impact in Wales, though some families of gentry remained *recusant and a few RCs were executed. The educational standards of the Welsh clergy were improved; medieval Welsh students had frequented Oxford, where Jesus College, founded in 1571, developed spontaneously into a college for Wales attended by future Welsh clergy. Nine-tenths of the output of the Tudor and Stuart printing presses in Wales consisted of religious works, esp. the *Welsh Bible and Prayer Book, authorized by an Act of 1563; Welsh became the language of Protestantism in Wales and a rift gradually developed between the anglicized squires and clergy and their Welsh-speaking parishioners.

The foundation of the 'gathered' Church at Llanfaches (west of Chepstow) in 1639 represents the faint beginnings of Nonconformity, which spread from England. Wales was mainly Royalist in the Civil War, but a more rapid growth of sects followed the Commonwealth's Act for the Propagation of the Gospel in Wales (1650) and the consequent activities of such new 'saints' as the *Fifth Monarchist Vavasor Powell (1617–70) from Heyop (near Knighton). After the Anglican reaction of 1660–2, Nonconformists (mainly in the SE) formed only 5 per cent. of the population in 1676; these were mostly *Baptists and *Independents, with some *Presbyterians and *Quakers, but in and after 1682 many Welsh Quakers and Baptists emigrated to Pennsylvania. The Welsh sees were poor and for well over a century after the Restoration they were often held by absentees hopeful of translation: that of Llandaff was for some time held with the Deanery of *St Paul's. The undoubted distinction as scholars of such bishops as B. *Hoadly, T. *Tanner, S. *Horsley, and E. *Copleston did not benefit their dioceses, and no Welsh bishop between 1715 and 1870 could preach in Welsh when appointed. Lay impropriation of tithes ensured that most parish clergy remained poor and ill-educated, though Bp. T. Burgess of St Davids tried to raise the standards of the clergy by the foundation of St David's College, Lampeter, in 1822. Great work had also been done in promoting popular education by Griffith *Jones (q.v.).

In the early 19th cent. the influence of the Church was at its lowest ebb. *Methodism, preached by H. *Harris, organized by Thomas Charles (1755–1814) and assisted by the popular hymns of William Williams of Pantycelyn (1717–91), spread widely, but its adherents remained within the Church until the (predestinarian) *Calvinistic Methodists (the only Christian denomination to originate in Wales) broke away in 1811. The (abortive) proposal to amalgamate the sees of Bangor and St Asaph in the 1840s was unpopular, while the zeal and teaching of *Tractarian clergy (such as I. *Williams) met with little sympathy. While the Church failed to adapt to a great increase in population, Nonconformity grew: in 1800 there were 50 Nonconformist chapels in the diocese of Llandaff, but in 1850 there were some 550. A split developed in Wales: the landowners and many ironmasters were English-speaking, Anglican, and Tory; the tenant farmers and the new miners and industrial workers were Welsh-speaking, Nonconformist, and radical. Nonconformists appear to have formed about three-quarters of the Church- or chapel-going population in 1851, but there was an Anglican revival under Bps. C. *Thirlwall at St Davids (1840–74), T. Vowler Short at St Asaph (1846–70), A. Ollivant at Llandaff (1849–82), and J. C. Campbell at Bangor (1859–90). In Llandaff, the most industrialized diocese, Dissent and the Church under the Evangelical Ollivant at first co-operated, esp. in the religious revival of 1859, but the co-operation ended after 1862. The *Temperance Movement (mainly Nonconformist) won a victory with the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881, some of the effects of which are still felt to this day.

The Disestablishment of the Irish Church (1869), the Englishness of the Church in Wales, and Nonconformist fears that the reviving Church might become the largest single religious body in Wales, led to demands for the disestablishment of the Welsh Church, whose privileged position led to a tithe war, e.g. in NE Wales, in 1886–8, and to disputes over education. The demand for disestablishment was ably resisted by A. G. Edwards, Bp. of St Asaph 1889–1934, and John Owen, Bp. of St Davids 1897–1926; but Nonconformist numbers increased again with the religious revival of 1904, and an Act of 1914 disestablished the Welsh Church. (In parliament three English bishops, including C. *Gore, supported the measure.) With financial safeguards added by the Welsh Church (Temporalities) Act 1919, disestablishment took effect in 1920, when a separate province was created. There are six dioceses (Monmouth, and Swansea and Brecon having been carved out of Llandaff and St Davids respectively); the bishops are nominated by electors representing various elements in the Church, and one of the diocesans is similarly elected to the rank of Archbishop of Wales, A. G. Edwards (1920) being the first. The Church in Wales is no longer Eglwys Loegr (the 'English Church') over-dependent on the landowners, and it provides regular services in Welsh as well as in English; after 1920 it increased in both influence and numbers. Welsh Nonconformity lost a unifying objective, and modern Welsh nationalism has turned to secular objectives. Of Free Church bodies the Calvinistic Methodists are the most numerous; their Church is Presbyterian in government and is a member of the World Presbyterian Alliance. The Baptists and Independents also remain strong, but among Wesleyans there has been a particularly marked decline in numbers. The RCs are a small but vigorous community, recruited chiefly from Irish immigrant stock in the SE; there is a RC Abp. of Cardiff and Bps. of Menevia (whose cathedral is in Swansea) and Wrexham. There is a Greek Orthodox community in Cardiff.

See also ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ENGLAND AND WALES AFTER THE REFORMATION and WELSH BIBLE AND PRAYER BOOK.

There are a number of studies in Welsh. Works in Eng. incl. A. G. Edwards, Landmarks in the History of the Welsh Church (1912); J. E. de Hirsch-Davies, A Popular History of the Church in Wales from the Beginning to the Present Day (1912); D. A. Jones, A History of the Church in Wales (Carmarthen, 1926); J. W. James, A Church History of Wales (Ilfracombe, 1945); D. Walker (ed.), A History of the Church in Wales (Penarth, 1976). A. W. Wade-Evans, Welsh Christian Origins (Oxford, 1934). E. G. Bowen, The Settlements of the Celtic Saints in Wales (Cardiff, 1954; 2nd edn., 1956). N. K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958). Lives of St Dubricius, St Illtyd, St Paulinus, St Teilo and St Oudoceus, by G. H. Doble, orig. pub. between 1942 and 1944, collected and ed. by D. S. Evans, Lives of the Welsh Saints (Cardiff, 1971), with introd. essay and extensive refs., pp. 1–55. G. Williams, The Welsh Church from Conquest to Reformation (1962). J. C. Davies (ed.), Episcopal Acts and Cognate Documents relating to Welsh Dioceses 1066–1272 (1946 ff.). L. Thomas, The Reformation in the Old Diocese of Llandaff (Cardiff, 1930). E. T. Davies, Religion in the Industrial Revolution in South Wales (Pantyfedwen Lectures, 1962; Cardiff, 1965). D. T. W. Price, A History of Saint David's University College, Lampeter (2 vols., Cardiff, 1977–90). C. A. H. Green, The Setting of the Constitution of the Church in Wales (1937). N. Doe (ed.), Essays in Canon Law: A Study of the Law of the Church in Wales (Cardiff, 1992). P. M. H. Bell, Disestablishment in Ireland and Wales (CHS, 1969), pp. 226–329. D. T. W. Price, A History of the Church in Wales in the Twentieth Century ([Penarth] 1990). J. E. de Hirsch-Davies, Catholicism in Mediaeval Wales (1916). D. Attwater, The Catholic Church in Modern Wales: A Record of the Past Century (1935). T. Rees, History of Protestant Nonconformity in Wales from its Rise to the Present Time (1861; enlarged edn., 1883). H. E. Lewis, Nonconformity in Wales (1904). G. F. Nuttall, The Welsh Saints 1640–1660 (Cardiff, 1957). There is also much information in the Report of the Royal Commission on the Church of England and Other Religious Bodies in Wales and Monmouthshire (Parliamentary Papers, England, 1910, vols. 14–19 [Cd. 5432–9]) and many relevant entries in The Dictionary of Welsh Biography down to 1940 (1959). Journal of the Historical Society of the Church in Wales (1947 ff.). See also bibl. to CELTIC CHURCHES; also to METHODISM, etc.

Wall, William (1647–1728), Anglican theologian. Educated at Queen's College, Oxford, he became vicar of Shoreham, Kent, in 1674, and rector of Milton-next-Gravesend in 1708. His chief work is The History of Infant Baptism (2 vols., 1705). Designed to combat the arguments of the *Baptists against Infant Baptism, it consisted in a learned exposition of the teaching of the Fathers, supported by ample quotations and taking into account recent controversies. It has remained the English classic on the subject. His other works include Brief Critical Notes, especially on the Various Readings of the New Testament Books (1730) and Critical Notes on the Old Testament (1734).

The History of Infant Baptism . . . Together with Mr. Gale's Reflections, and Dr. Wall's Defence, ed. H. Cotton (4 vols., Oxford, 1835–6), with introd., vol. 1, pp. v–xxvii; an abridged edn. of the History was pub. by W. H. Spencer (London, 1848). T. Cooper in DNB 59 (1899), p. 97, s.v., with refs.

Walloon Confession (1561). See BELGIC CONFESSION.

Walsingham (Norfolk), place of pilgrimage. A replica of the Holy House of *Nazareth, said to have been built there in the 11th cent., made the Walsingham pilgrimage one of the most important in England in the Middle Ages. The shrine was destroyed in 1538. In 1922 A. H. Patten, the vicar of Walsingham, placed in the church a statue of the BVM, which became the nucleus of a new shrine, and soon afterwards pilgrimages were organized. Until recently, they were the subject of much controversy. A separate building to house the shrine, known as the Holy House, was erected in 1931; in the considerable extensions to this building in 1938 a small Orthodox chapel was incorporated. The Medieval Slipper Chapel was opened as a RC shrine in 1934.

*Erasmus, Pilgrimages to Saint Mary of Walsingham and Saint Thomas of Canterbury, tr. into Eng. by J. G. Nichols (1849), pp. 11–43 and 82–110. The Foundation of the Chapel of Walsingham, orig. pr. by R. Pynson (c.1493), repr. in H. Huth (ed.), Fugitive Tracts Series, 1 (1875), no. 2 (sep. pagination). H. M. Gillet, Walsingham and its Shrine (1934); J. C. Dickinson, The Shrine of Our Lady of Walsingham (1956). [J.] C. Stephenson, Walsingham Way (1970). J. C. Cox in VCH, Norfolk, 2, ed. W. Page (1906), pp. 394–401, with refs.

Walter, Hubert. See HUBERT WALTER.

Walter de Stapeldon. See STAPELDON, WALTER DE.

Walter of St-Victor (d. after 1180), prior of the *Augustinian Canons of St-Victor (see VICTORINES). His 'Contra Quatuor Labyrinthos Franciae' (after 1179) was a violent attack on the dialectical method, directed chiefly against *Abelard, *Peter Lombard, Peter of Poitiers (d. 1205), and *Gilbert de la Porrée. He also wrote some 21 sermons, mostly for feast days, that show an ordinary piety reflecting little of the concern with contemplation found in *Hugh and *Richard of St-Victor.

The 'Contra Quatuor Labyrinthos Franciae', ed. P. Glorieux, AHDLMA 19 (for 1952; 1953), pp. 187–335. R. Studeny, SVD, 'Walter of St. Victor and the Apologia de Verbo Incarnato', Gregorianum, 18 (1937), pp. 579–85. J. Chatillon, 'Un sermon théologique de Gauthier de Saint-Victor égaré parmi les œuvres du Prieur Richard', Revue du Moyen Âge latin, 8 (1952), pp. 43–50. P. Glorieux, 'Mauvaise Action et mauvais travail. Le "Contra quatuor labyrinthos Franciae" ', RTAM 21 (1954), pp. 179–93. J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Le Mouvement théologique du XII^e siècle (Études d'Histoire des Dogmes et d'ancienne Littérature ecclésiastique, 1914), pp. 158–60 and 268 f. (2nd edn., Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, 10, 1948, pp. 260–3 and 404 f.). J. Châtillon, 'Sermons et prédicateurs victorins de la seconde moitié du xii^e siècle', AHDLMA 32 (for 1965; 1966), pp. 7–60, esp. pp. 40–4; J. B. Schneyer, Repertorium der lateinische Sermones des Mittelalters (BGPM 43, Heft 2; 2nd edn., 1970), pp. 118 f.

Walton, Brian (c.1600–61), Bp. of *Chester and editor of the 'London *Polyglot Bible'. Educated at Magdalene College and Peterhouse, Cambridge, in 1628 he became rector of St Martin's Orgar in London. His zealous defence of the claims of the clergy in the controversy with the citizens over the city tithes, added to his Laudian sympathies, led to his being accused in Parliament and deprived of his livings (1641). After a short imprisonment, he lived for some years in Oxford. The Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, which is among the first books in England to have been printed by subscription, was begun in 1653, and its six vols. of OT, Apocrypha, NT, and appendices were completed in 1657. Altogether nine languages are represented, though no individual book of the Bible is printed in more than eight versions. The work, which has not yet been superseded, is esp. useful because of its lucid arrangement. It was criticized by J. *Owen in his Considerations, to which Walton replied in an able defence entitled The Considerator Considered (1659). At the Restoration, he was appointed Bp. of Chester in 1660.

H. J. Todd, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Right Rev. Brian Walton, Lord Bishop of Chester (2 vols., 1821). A. Fox, John Mill and Richard Bentley: A Study of the Textual Criticism of the New Testament, 1675–1729 (1954), pp. 47–9 and passim. D. S. Margoliouth in DNB 59 (1899), pp. 268–71, s.v.

Walton, Izaak (1593–1683), English author. Born in Stafford, he set up shop as a linen-draper in London (although a freeman of the Ironmongers' Company), and in the late 1620s came to know the vicar of his parish, St Dunstan-in-the-West, J. *Donne, and his friend Henry King, poet and later Bp. of *Chichester. Walton married first into the Cranmer family (deriving thence much information about R. *Hooker), and then the elder half-sister of T. *Ken. A passionate Royalist (but no Laudian), he nevertheless espoused toleration, his friendship embracing the spectrum from *Calvinists to RCs, though principally firm C of E men such as W. *Chillingworth, H. *Hammond, R. *Sanderson, and G. *Sheldon. Retiring from business after the battle of Marston Moor (1644), he spent most of the rest of his life in the households of eminent ecclesiastics such as G. *Morley, Bp. of Worcester and Winchester, whose Steward he was. His Compleat Angler (1653; rewritten and greatly enlarged, 1655) combines practical handbook and idealized picture of country life. Though his Lives of J. Donne (1640; enlarged, 1658, 1670, 1675), H. Wotton (1651), R. Hooker (1665), G. *Herbert (1670), and R. *Sanderson (1678), were enduringly influential as Anglican hagiography, he was praised by S. *Johnson merely as a 'great panegyrist', and subsequent scholarship has revealed how he sometimes selected, conflated, transposed, distorted, and invented ideas, speeches, and events to produce ingenious propaganda for pious ends.

Waltoniana: Inedited Remains in Verse and Prose, ed. R. H. Shepherd (London, 1878). The Compleat Angler, the Lives of Donne, Wotton, Hooker, Herbert, & Sanderson, with Love and Truth & Miscellaneous Writings, ed. G. [L.] Keynes (ibid., 1929). The Compleat Angler, 1653 1676, ed. J. Bevan (Oxford and New York, 1983); also ed. J. Buxton (World's Classics, 1982). Lives also ed. G. Saintsbury (World's Classics, 1927) and S. B. Carter (London, 1951). D. Novarr, The Making of Walton's Lives (Ithaca, NY, 1958); J. Bevan, Izaak Walton's The Compleat Angler: The Art of Recreation (Brighton, 1988). H. Gardner, 'Dean Donne's Monument in St. Paul's', in R. Wellek and A. Ribeiro (eds.), Evidence in Literary Scholarship: Essays in Memory of James Marshall Osborn (Oxford, 1979), pp. 29–44; C. D. Lein, 'Art and Structure in Walton's Life of Mr. George Herbert', University of Toronto Quarterly, 46 (1976–7), pp. 162–76. N. J. Endicott in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 2222 f. A. Lang [and X] in DNB 59 (1899), pp. 273 7.

Wandering Jew, the. A Jew who, acc. to popular legend, taunted Christ on His way to crucifixion and was doomed to wander over the earth till the Last Day. The legend, which first appeared in a pamphlet published in 1602, professedly at *Leiden, immediately became popular throughout the Protestant world and was known in Britain by 1625. Recorded meetings with the Jew in various places and at various dates range from one at Hamburg in 1542 (mentioned in the original pamphlet) to one at Salt Lake City in 1868; but whether they were purely fictitious or some impostor played the part is uncertain. There existed in the 13th cent. a somewhat similar legend. Roger of Wendover, e.g., chronicles that some natives of Armenia who visited England in 1228 alleged that St *Joseph of Arimathaea had been recently seen in their own country under the name of 'Cartaphilis', and that he had confessed to having taunted Christ as He went to His death.

L. Neubaur, Die Sage vom Ewigen Juden untersucht (1884; rev. edn., 1893); W. Zirus, Der ewige Jude in der Dichtung vornehmlich in der englischen und deutschen (Palaestra, 162; 1928), and other works of this author; G. K. Anderson, The Legend of the Wandering Jew (Providence, RI, 1965); G. Hasan-Rokem and A. Dundes (eds.), The Wandering Jew: Essays in the Interpretation of a Christian Legend (Bloomington, Ind. [1986]).

war, Christian attitude to. It has always been recognized that in a world wholly governed by Christian principles war would be ruled out as at variance with the moral teaching of Christ, esp. as contained in the *Sermon on the Mount (Mt. 5–7), and the theology of the *Incarnation. But since Christians are also citizens of a secular order in which the exercise of force is necessary to maintain the authority of law it has been widely, but far from universally, held that the method of war and the active participation of Christians in it are on occasion morally defensible and even praiseworthy. In early times, when the form of civil government was essentially pagan, some ecclesiastical enactments were made which seemed to forbid Christians to take part in military service (St *Hippolytus' Ap. Trad. 17–19; *Nicaea, can. 12), while *Tertullian (De Corona Militis; from his *Montanist period) and *Lactantius (Div. Inst. 6. 20. 16) also expressly condemned it. On the other hand, there were numbers of Christians in the army from the 2nd cent. onwards (see THUNDERING LEGION, also THEBAN LEGION).

From the time of *Constantine, Christians were less troubled by scruples about participation in war. St *Augustine defended it when undertaken for the good of society (Ep. 138, to Volusianus) arguing that it was justified when the end of war is peace (Ep. 189, to Boniface). The *Crusades are the classic instance of warfare in defence of supposed religious ends. But the constant wars of all kinds in which Christians in the Middle Ages found themselves engaged led to a discrimination by moral theologians between wars in which a Christian legitimately could and could not take part. *Thomas Aquinas lays down three conditions for a 'just war': (1) it must be on the authority of the sovereign (auctoritas principis); (2) the cause must be just (justa causa); and (3) the belligerents should have a rightful intention (recta intentio), intending the advancement of good or the avoidance of evil (Summa Theol. 2. 2, q. 40, de bello). Similar lists of conditions were drawn up by other medieval moralists. F. de *Vitoria (d. 1546) insisted on the further condition, of which much has been made by recent Catholic moralists, that the war must be waged by 'proper means' (debito modo). The Anglican Reformers dealt with the subject briefly in the *Thirty-Nine Articles (art. 37; note justa bella in the Latin text).

In modern times 'Absolute Pacifism', i.e. the doctrine that warfare is in all circumstances forbidden by the Gospel, has been upheld by the *Anabaptists, the *Quakers, and L. *Tolstoy. In comparatively recent times, esp. in Great Britain, it has been widely defended on humanitarian, and sometimes even on frankly hedonistic, grounds as well as on Christian principles. Leading exponents of it in the inter-War years (1918–39) were C. J. Cadoux, H. R. L. *Sheppard, and C. E. Raven. Another group of (mainly RC) moralists (F. Stratmann, G. Vann, E. I. Watkin, E. *Gill) argued against the permissibility of participation in modern warfare on the ground that a 'just war' is nowadays not possible, since, e.g., the means (bombing of civilians, etc.) are never 'proper' (debito modo). The development of total methods of warfare during the Second World War (1939–1945), culminating in the use of nuclear weapons, gave new perspectives to the debate. In Great Britain the most widely based expression by Christians of opposition to war has been in the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (a secular organization founded in 1958), in which such leading Churchmen as G. K. A. *Bell, Canon L. J. Collins of *St Paul's, and Donald (later Lord) Soper aligned themselves with a wide spectrum of political opinion. The Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament gained wide publicity through the Easter Marches from Aldermaston in the early 1960s and to a lesser extent from the Greenham Common camp in the later 1980s. There were similar 'peace movements' in Continental Europe, notably in West Germany against the stationing of nuclear weapons there in the 1950s and again in the 1980s. Prominent figures in the *Lutheran Church, including M. *Niemöller, took part in the earlier protests. Though 'peace movements' in the Soviet Union and E. Europe were seldom independent of the ruling Communist parties, in East Germany an unofficial movement under the protection of the Church became a serious challenge to the regime. With the end of the Cold War, anti-nuclear protest movements lost their traditional rationale, but the underlying question of the legitimacy of the use of force, and of the kind of force which may be used, remain. These are questions of debate among Christians, though the main stream of Christian thought has not supported the modern pacifist movements, on the ground that there are even worse evils than physical destruction.

Eng. tr. of selected passages from the Fathers, L. J. Swift, The Early Fathers on War and Military Service (Message of the Fathers of the Church, 19; Wilmington, Del., 1983). A. *Harnack, Militia Christi: Die christliche Religion und der Soldatenstand in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (Tübingen, 1905; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1981]). C. J. Cadoux, The Early Christian Attitude to War (1919); F. Stratmann, OP, Weltkirche und Weltfriede (1924; Eng. tr., The Church and War, 1928); R. Regout, SJ, La Doctrine de la guerre juste de saint Augustin à nos jours (1935); C. E. Raven, War and the Christian (1938); G. Vann, OP, Morality and War (1939); R. *Niebuhr, Why the Christian Church is not Pacifist (1940); A. Sampson (ed.), This War and Christian Ethics: A Symposium (1940); J. Lasserre, La Guerre et l'évangile (1953; Eng. tr., 1962); R. H. Bainton, Christian Attitudes to War and Peace: A Historical Summary and Critical Re-evaluation (New York [1960]; London, 1961); J.-M. Hornus, L'Évangile et Labarum: Étude sur l'attitude du christianisme primitif devant les problèmes de l'État, de la guerre et de la violence (Geneva, 1960; Eng. tr., It is Not Lawful for Me to Fight, Scottdale, Pa., 1980); J. D. Tooke, The Just War in Aquinas and Grotius (1965); P. Brock, Pacificism in Europe to 1914 (Princeton, 1972); id., Pacificism in the United States from the Colonial Era to the First World War (ibid., 1968); id., Twentieth-Century Pacificism (New York, etc. [1970]); F. H. Russell, The Just War in the Middle Ages (Cambridge, 1975); W. J. Sheils (ed.), The Church and War: Papers read to the . . . Ecclesiastical History Society (Studies in Church History, 20; 1983); R. G. Musto, The Catholic Peace Tradition (Maryknoll, NY [1986]).

war, participation of the clergy in. Since the Middle Ages clerics in *major orders have been expressly forbidden to take a direct part in the shedding of blood. The prohibition was based on the grounds that it was unseemly for the ministers of the altar to shed blood and that the military life was detrimental to the discharge of pastoral duties. This teaching is embodied in the present RC canon law (CIC (1983), can. 289). In the modern state, however, clerics are permitted to conform to the force majeure of military law both in peace-time and in war. The C of E has commonly upheld the medieval discipline, though ecclesiastical penalties have not been imposed on the few clerics who have entered the services and such clerics have been allowed to resume their clerical life when the war has ended.

Warburton, William (1698–1779), Bp. of *Gloucester. After being apprenticed for five years to an attorney, he decided on an ecclesiastical career and was ordained priest in 1727. He held various livings, was made Dean of Bristol in 1757 and Bp. of Gloucester in 1759. He was a figure in the literary world of his time. His first theological work of importance was The Alliance between Church and State (1736), which defended the *Establishment of the C of E on essentially utilitarian grounds but justified the restrictions imposed upon dissenters by the operation of the *Test Act. In his most famous book, The Divine Legation of Moses (2 vols., 1737–41), he professed to uphold the Divine origin of the Mosaic Law against the *Deists by the singular argument that it contained no doctrine of eternal life. The doctrine of future rewards and punishments being essential to the well-being of humanity, its absence from the OT can only be explained by a special Divine inspiration. This eccentric argumentation involved him in a series of controversies. The 'enthusiasm' of *Methodism being esp. repugnant to him, he published in 1762 The Doctrine of Grace against J. *Wesley. Warburton's works are remarkable for paradox rather than for scholarship, and his arrogance in the conduct of his literary feuds made him many enemies. He is, however, more creditably remembered for having preached against the slave trade as early as 1766.

Works, ed. R. Hurd (7 vols., London, 1788); id., A Discourse by Way of General Preface to the Quarto Edition of Bishop Warburton's Works, Containing some Account of the Life, Writings and Character of the Author (1794). D. W. Nichol (ed.), Pope's Literary Legacy: The Book-Trade Correspondence of William Warburton and John Knapton with other Letters and Documents 1774–1780 (Oxford Bibliographical Society Publications, 23; 1992). J. S. Watson, Life of Warburton (1863). J. N. *Figgis, 'William Warburton', in W. E. Collins (ed.), Typical English Churchmen from Parker to Maurice (1902), no. 9, pp. 215–53. A. W. Evans, Warburton and the Warburtonians: A Study in some Eighteenth-Century Controversies (1932). S. Taylor, 'William Warburton and the Alliance of Church and State', JEH 43 (1992), pp. 271–86.

Ward, Mary (1585–1645), foundress of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Born at Mulwith, N. Yorkshire, she entered the Convent of the *Poor Clares of *St-Omer in 1606, and founded from there a daughter-house in Gravelines. In 1609, feeling called to 'some other thing', she left the convent. Returning to St-Omer after a brief stay in England, she began with five other Englishwomen what would later become a religious congregation modelled on the *Jesuit order. In subsequent years, she opened houses in Liège, *Cologne, *Rome, and elsewhere. Her project involved freedom from enclosure and from *office in choir; the Institute was also to be free from episcopal jurisdiction, subject directly to the Pope. Since these innovations were perceived as unacceptable, the Institute was suppressed in 1631, and Mary Ward herself imprisoned in the Convent of the Poor Clares in Munich. On regaining her liberty she went back to Rome, and, after securing the approval of *Urban VIII, resumed her activity on an informal basis. She returned to England in 1639, dying at Heworth, near York. Her Institute has had a complex canonical history, and survives today in three branches, each with their own General Superior.

Selection of writings, Till God Will, ed., with biog. comm., by M. E. Orchard, IBVM (1985). M. C. E. Chambers, IBVM, and H. J. Coleridge, SJ, The Life of Mary Ward, 1585–1645 ('Quarterly Series', 35 and 52; 1882–5). H. Peters, IBVM, Mary Ward: Ihre Persönlichkeit und ihr Institut (Innsbruck and Vienna [1991]; Eng. tr., Leominster, 1994). Brief study of her theological significance by L. Byrne, IBVM (Dublin, 1984). M. I. Wetter, IBMV, in Dict. Sp., 16 (1994), cols. 1317–24, s.v. 'Ward (1), Mary'.

Ward, Reginald Somerset (1881–1962), priest and spiritual director. Born in Newcastle-under-Lyme, he studied at Pembroke College, Cambridge. Ordained priest in 1905, he worked in parishes, mainly in London, and for the Sunday School Institute, until 1915, when he felt called to devote his life to spiritual direction. He spent the rest of his life at 'Ravenscroft' in Farncombe, Surrey, supported financially by an anonymous group of friends. Besides conducting a wide correspondence, he regularly heard confessions in various parts of the country. He exerted considerable influence in the C of E, esp. on the clergy, among whom the use of a spiritual director and the sacrament of *Penance became widespread. His appeal was not confined to *Anglo-Catholics. He published a number of books on the spiritual life, notably The Way (1922), Following the Way (1925), To Jerusalem (1931), and his Guide for Spiritual Directors (1957), all issued anonymously.

Life and Letters, ed. E. R. Morgan (London, 1963).

Ward, Seth (1617–89), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was educated at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1640, but was deprived of his fellowship in 1644 for his opposition to the '*Solemn League and Covenant'. In 1649, however, he took the oath to the English Commonwealth when he became Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, and was one of the group of natural scientists at Oxford which foreshadowed the Royal Society, of which he later became one of the original members. The fruits of his scientific studies included two works In Ismaelis Bullialdi Astronomiae Philolaicae Fundamenta Inquisitio Brevis (1653) and Astronomia Geometrica (1656), in which he expounded a theory of planetary motions, and a philosophical controversy with T. *Hobbes. Resigning his professorship in 1660, he subsequently held several ecclesiastical offices. He was consecrated Bp. of *Exeter in 1662 and translated to Salisbury in 1667. In 1671 he became Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, being the first Anglican bishop to hold this office. In both dioceses he did much for the improvement of the cathedral. He was also a determined opponent of the dissenters and as a vigorous supporter of the *Conventicles and *Five Mile Acts he was so severe that the Nonconformists brought an unsuccessful petition against him in 1669. Among his theological works are A Philosophical Essay towards an Eviction of the Being and Attributes of God (1652) and Seven Sermons (1673); he also edited several works of Samuel Ward, Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge (d. 1643), a strong *Calvinist, to whom Seth was not related.

Life by W. Pope (London, 1697), repr. with brief addenda, but some omissions, in S. H. Cassan, Lives and Memoirs of the Bishops of Sherborne and Salisbury (1824), pt. 2, pp. 31–163; also ed. J. B. Bamborough (Luttrell Society Reprints, 21; 1961). W. M. J. Fletcher, 'Seth Ward, Bishop of Salisbury, 1667–1689', Wiltshire Archaeological and Natural History Magazine, 49 (1942), pp. 1–16. S. Probst, 'Infinity and Creation: The Origin of the Controversy between Thomas Hobbes and the Savilian Professors Seth Ward and John Wallis', British Journal for the History of Science, 26 (1993), pp. 271–9. H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism (1965), pp. 200–203; W. G. Simon, The Restoration Episcopate (New York, 1965), pp. 54–8 and 143–6. E. I. Carlyle in DNB 59 (1899), pp. 336–40.

Ward, Wilfrid (1856–1916), biographer and RC critic. The son of W. G. *Ward, he was trained for the priesthood but, not finding his vocation there, took up literary work. After controversial writings against H. *Spencer and F. *Harrison, he first wrote his father's Life in two separate books, W. G. Ward and the Oxford Movement (1889) and W. G. Ward and the Catholic Revival (1893). A biography of Card. N. Wiseman followed in 1897. Under his direction the Dublin Review (of which he became editor in 1906) rose to distinguished rank among the quarterlies. In his Life of J. H. *Newman (dealing almost wholly with the RC period of his life; 2 vols., 1912) he showed considerable sympathy with the *Modernist Movement, and in so far departed from the rigidly orthodox opinions of his father.

Last Lectures, ed. J. and M. Ward (widow and daughter) (1918), with introd. study by his widow, pp. vii–lxxi. M. Ward, The Wilfrid Wards and the Transition (2 vols., 1934–7). S. Leslie in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 552 f.

Ward, William George (1812–82), theologian and philosopher. He held a fellowship of Balliol College, Oxford, from 1834 to 1845, during which period he became an ardent follower of J. H. *Newman. A keen logician, lacking Newman's concern with history, he pushed *Tractarian principles to their furthest extremes. In 1844 he published The Ideal of a Christian Church, strongly praising the RC Church. In 1845 he was deprived of his degrees for heresy and in the same year entered the RC Church. From 1851 to 1858 he was lecturer in moral philosophy at St Edmund's College, Ware. In later life he was a supporter of the *Ultramontane party, upholding Papal infallibility and maintaining fiercely anti-liberal views. He successfully opposed Newman's scheme to open a RC college in Oxford. In the last 30 years of his life he was constantly engaged in controversial writing.

Wilfrid Ward [q.v.], W. G. Ward and the Oxford Movement (1889) and W. G. Ward and the Catholic Revival (1893). J. M. Rigg in DNB 59 (1899), pp. 344–8.

Warham, William (*c.*1456–1532), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at *Winchester and New College, *Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1475. After taking his doctor's degree, in 1488 he went to London, where he practised in the Court of *Arches. A rapid career followed. He was in turn moderator in the civil law school at Oxford (*c.*1490), precentor of *Wells (1493), Master of the Rolls (1494), and Archdeacon of Huntingdon (1496), and employed on several notable commercial and diplomatic missions, esp. between 1496 and 1502, when he became Bp. of London. Nominated Abp. of Canterbury by *Julius II in 1503, he received the pallium in 1504, after having been made Lord Chancellor by Henry VII in the same year. From this time he took a leading part in all affairs of national importance. He was also a recognized patron of the New Learning. In 1506 he negotiated a marriage for the King to Margaret of Savoy (which, however, did not take place), and in the same year was elected chancellor of Oxford University. In 1509 he crowned *Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon, and in 1515 conferred the cardinal's hat on T. *Wolsey, who in the same year replaced him as Lord Chancellor.

After Wolsey's appointment as Papal legate (1518) official friction between archbishop and legate was continuous, though their personal relations remained friendly. In 1527 he was Wolsey's assessor in the secret inquiry into the validity of the King's marriage, and later the chief of the counsel for the Queen, whom, however, he in no way assisted. In 1530 he signed the petition to the Pope asking him to grant the King the divorce, his attitude in the matter being probably decided by the King's threat to destroy all ecclesiastical authority in the country unless his wishes were complied with. When, in 1531, the English clergy were bidden to acknowledge Henry as the Supreme Head of the Church, Warham introduced the amendment 'so far as the law of Christ will allow'. In 1532 he formally though ineffectually protested against all Acts of Parliament prejudicial to the authority of the Pope. He was a generous benefactor, esp. to scholars (*Erasmus, etc.), but without sympathy for the Protestant movement.

The principal sources are the State Papers and Calendars of the State Papers of the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII. See also 'Archbishop Warham's Letters', Archaeologia Cantiana, 1 (1858), pp. 9–41; 2 (1859), pp. 149–74, esp. 149–52. Calendar of Warham's Canterbury demesne leases, 1503–32, by F. R. H. Du Boulay in id. (ed.), Documents illustrative of Medieval Kentish Society (Kent Archaeological Society, Kent Records, 18; 1964), pp. 266–97. K. L. Wood-Legh (ed.), Kentish Visitations of Archbishop William Warham and his Deputies, 1511 1512 (ibid. 24; 1984). The only Life is that in W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, 6 (1888), pp. 155–421. J. Gairdner in DNB 59 (1899), pp. 378–83; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1988–92, s.v.

Wartburg. The 12th-cent. castle near Eisenach in Thuringia where M. *Luther was hidden for safety after being seized (with his own connivance) by the Elector *Frederick III on his way home from the Diet of *Worms in 1521. In his letters he described the Wartburg as his '*Patmos'; and during his ten months' residence he prepared his translation of the NT and also issued a number of polemical works.

Washington Cathedral. The cathedral church of St *Peter and St *Paul, Washington, DC, is the seat of the Bp. of Washington in the *Episcopal Church in the United States of America. It is known as the 'National Cathedral', but it has no extra-diocesan status. The diocese was founded in 1893, and the foundation stone of the cathedral, designed by G. F. *Bodley and Henry Vaughan of Boston, was laid in 1907. Building work began at the east end with the construction of the Bethlehem chapel and apse and continued westward under the direction of Philip Hubert Frohman, who modified the original design in detail, but adhered to the broad outline of the original plan. The cathedral, which was completed in 1990, is a vast cruciform building, in 14th-cent. Gothic style; it has a central 'Gloria in excelsis' tower, 301 feet high, and two west towers, each 235 feet high. Its position on the crown of Mount St Albans, overlooking the city, makes it visible for miles around. The interior is notable for its soaring proportions, magnificent collection of 20th-cent. stained glass, and fine craftsmanship in wood, stone, and metal.

T. Harrington, The Last Cathedral (Engelwood Cliffs, NJ [1979]); R. T. Feller, Completing Washington Cathedral for Thy Great Glory (Washington, DC, 1989).

Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society. See JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES.

water. See HOLY WATER.

Waterland, Daniel (1683–1740), Anglican theologian. He was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1704 and Master in 1713. In 1717 he was appointed chaplain to the King and in 1722 chancellor of the diocese of *York. In the following years he received many preferments, becoming a Canon of *Windsor in 1727 and Archdeacon of Middlesex in 1730. He took an active part in the theological controversies of his time, esp. those on the Divinity of Christ and the Trinity, on *Deism, and on the *Eucharist. His principal works were A Vindication of Christ's Divinity (1719), directed against S. *Clarke; Eight Sermons in Defence of the Divinity of Our Lord Jesus Christ (1720), his most popular work, in which he argued that the Divinity of Christ in no way impaired the unity of the Godhead; Scripture Vindicated (finished 1732), against M. *Tindal's Christianity as Old as the Creation, in which he defended the OT accounts of the Fall, of the origin of circumcision, and of the sacrifice of Isaac against the attacks of the Deists; The Nature, Obligation and Efficacy of the Christian Sacraments (1732); and his Review of the Doctrine of the Eucharist (1737). In this last work he sought to steer a middle course between the high views of the *Real Presence represented by T. *Brett and other *Nonjurors, and the minimizing opinions of *Socinians and Deists. The Eucharist was a commemorative and representative service, which possessed a sacrificial aspect from the remembrance of Christ's death, and the sacramental Presence was to be understood as the virtue and grace of the Lord's Body and Blood communicated to the worthy receiver. Waterland was a theologian of considerable learning, widely read not only in the Fathers but also in RC and Continental Protestant theologians, though hostile alike to philosophy and mysticism. His influence did much to restore sound Trinitarian teaching against the Arianizers, and his intermediate position in the Eucharistic controversy was for long widely accepted in the C of E.

Collected edn. of his Works pub. in 10 vols., Oxford, 1823, with 'Review of the Author's Life and Writings' by W. *Van Mildert as vol. 1, pt. 1. R. T. Holtby, Daniel Waterland 1683–1740: A Study in Eighteenth Century Orthodoxy (Carlisle, 1966). B. C. Rosendall, OFM Conv., The Eucharistic Doctrine of Daniel Waterland: A Roman Catholic Study (Fribourg thesis; Collegeville, Minn., 1970). J. M. Rigg in DNB 59 (1899), pp. 446–8.

Watson, Richard (1737–1816), Bp. of *Llandaff. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow in 1760. In 1764 he was elected professor of chemistry, a subject of which he then knew nothing but in which he soon became an adept, and in 1769 a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1771 he became Regius Professor of Divinity. In 1776 he published a reply to E. *Gibbon's attack on Christianity which Gibbon himself commended for its candour. In 1779 he was made Archdeacon of *Ely, and in 1782 Lord Shelburne offered him, as a known opponent of the American War, the see of Llandaff. Proposals for radical ecclesiastical reforms, including a redistribution of church revenues, combined with sympathy for the American colonists and—initially—for the French Revolution, brought him into disfavour with the government and put an end to his hopes of a better see. He settled at Calgarth Park in his native Westmorland, where he devoted himself largely to forestry and agriculture. He continued to write, issuing in 1796 An Apology for the Bible against T. *Paine, and in 1798 a work encouraging resistance to the French claims. He was one of the most versatile men of his age.

Anecdotes of the Life of Richard Watson . . . written by himself at different Intervals and revised in 1814, ed. R. Watson, son (London, 1817). J. R. Guy, 'Richard Watson and the Role of a Bishop', in B. Vogler (ed.), Miscellanea Historiae Ecclesiasticae, 8 (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, 72; 1987), pp. 390–97, with further bibl. A. Gordon in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 24–7, with further refs.

Watts, Isaac (1674–1748), Nonconformist hymn-writer. A native of Southampton, he was educated at the local grammar school, where his unusual abilities induced a local benefactor to offer him a university education. He preferred, however, to enter the Dissenting Academy at Stoke Newington (1690–4), the high educational standard of which left a permanent mark on his mind. After holding a post as a private tutor, he was appointed assistant (1699) and then full pastor (1702) to the *Independent congregation at Mark Lane, London. But Watts's health deteriorated from 1703 onwards, and his pastoral duties devolved increasingly on his assistant. In 1712 he resigned and spent the rest of his life at Abney Park, Stoke Newington. In his later years he seems to have inclined towards *Unitarianism. In 1719 he opposed the imposition of the doctrine of the *Trinity on dissenting ministers.

Watts deservedly holds a very high place among English hymn-writers. His hymns reflect his strong and serene faith and did much to make hymn-singing a powerful devotional force, esp. in Nonconformity, where hitherto the use of music in worship, apart from the *metrical Psalms, had been regarded with suspicion. They include many still in common use, among them 'Jesus shall reign where'er the sun', 'When I survey the wondrous Cross', and 'Our God, our help in ages past'. The two principal collections were Hymns and Spiritual Songs (1707) and The Psalms of David (1719). His other writings include Horae Lyricae (1706; poems), Divine Songs (1715; the first children's hymn-book), The Improvement of the Mind (1741), and a number of educational manuals, among them a Logic (1725).

Works ed. D. Jennings and P. *Doddridge (6 vols., London, 1753), 'with some account of the Author's life and character' in vol. 1, pp. iii–x; repr. with corrections (6 vols., ibid., 1810–11), with memoirs of the Life of the Author by G. Burder, vol. 1, pp. ix–lxxx. New edn. of his Horae Lyricae (London, 1837), with memoir by R. Southey, pp. i–lii. Abridged edn. of his A Guide to Prayer (orig. pub. 1715) by H. Escott (London, 1948). Hymns and Spiritual Songs, 1707–1748, ed. S. L. Bishop (London, 1962). T. Gibbons, Memoirs of the Rev. Isaac Watts (1830); T. Milner, The Life, Times and Correspondence of the Rev. Isaac Watts (1834); A. P. Davis, Isaac Watts: His Life and Works (New York, 1943; London, 1948). B. L. Manning, The Hymns of Wesley and Watts (1942), pp. 78–105. H. Escott, Isaac Watts Hymnographer (1962). [F.] J. Hoyles, The Waning of the Renaissance 1640–1740 (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 39; The Hague, 1971), pp. 143–250. I. Rivers, Reason, Grace, and Sentiment: A Study of the Language of Religion and Ethics in England, 1660–1780, 1 (Cambridge, 1991), esp. pp. 164–204. H. L. Bennett in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 67–70.

Waynflete, William. See WILLIAM OF WAYNFLETE.

Wazo (980/90–1048), Bp. of Liège. Educated at the abbey school of Lobbes, he was appointed head of the cathedral school of Liège in 1008 on the recommendation of *Notker, and dean in 1015. Later he became provost of Liège and in 1042 he was elected bishop. His brother Gonzo was abbot of Florennes. A man of great energy and austere habits, Wazo was a faithful adherent of the Emperor Henry III, whose rights he defended against Henry I of France. In the incipient conflict between Papacy and Empire, however, he upheld the superiority of the spiritual authority, denied the Emperor the right to interfere in the appointment of bishops, and generally defended the independence of the Church. Having warned Henry before the Synod of Sutri that no one could judge the Pope save God, he regarded the deposition of Gregory VI as unjustifiable.

The chief source is the account written shortly after his death by Anselm of Liège, which forms the last part of Anselm's continuation of the Gesta Episcoporum Tungrensium et Leodiensium begun by Heriger of Lobbes; it is ed. R. Koepke in MGH, Scriptores, 7 (1846), pp. 210–34; repr. from E. *Martène in J. P. Migne, PL 142. 725–64. R. Huysmans, Wazo van Luik in de Ideeënstrijd zijner Dagen (Nijmegen, 1932). C. Hoerschelmann, Bischof Wazo von Lüttich und seine Bedeutung für den Beginn des Investiturstreites (Frankfurt am Main diss.; Düsseldorf, 1955). J.-L. Kupper, Liège et l'Église imperiale, XI^e–XII^e siècles (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, 228; 1981), esp. pp. 130–4, with refs. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, 1 (SSL 6; 1924), pp. 113–28. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3520–4, s.v. 'Wazon de Liège'.

Wearmouth and Jarrow. The twin *Benedictine abbeys between the Tyne and the Wear, of St Peter at Wearmouth and St Paul at Jarrow, founded respectively in 674 and 682 by St *Benedict Biscop, soon became one of the chief centres of learning and culture in W. Christendom. Benedict himself and Ceolfrid, deputy Abbot of Jarrow, who made numerous journeys to Rome, were great collectors of books which formed the nucleus of the celebrated library at Jarrow. The '*Codex Amiatinus' (q.v.) was written at Jarrow at the end of the 7th cent. The abbeys were made widely known through the writings of the Venerable *Bede (d. 735), who was educated in them and carried on the traditions of scholarship. In 867–70 they were destroyed by the Danes, but restored *c.*1074 by Aldwin, former prior of Winchcombe. He and two of his friends settled there for a time, and soon the monasteries began to flourish once more, later becoming cells to the priory of *Durham. The houses were secularized at the Reformation, and today part of their site is occupied by the parish churches.

J. Raine (ed.), The Inventories and Account Rolls of the Benedictine Houses or Cells of Jarrow and Monk-Wearmouth (Surtees Society, 29; 1854). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 501–4. H. E. Savage, 'Jarrow Church and Monastery', Archaeologia Aeliana, 22 (1900), pp. 30–60. R. Cramp, 'Monkwearmouth and Jarrow. The Archaeological Evidence', in G. [I.] Bonner (ed.), Famulus Christi: Essays in Commemoration of the Thirteenth Centenary of the Birth of the Venerable Bede (1976), pp. 5–18. M. E. Cornford in VCH, Durham, 2, ed. W. Page (1907), pp. 81–5, with refs.

Webb, Benjamin (1819–85), ecclesiologist. In 1838 he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, and while still an undergraduate founded with J. M. *Neale the *Cambridge Camden Society for the revival of ecclesiology. In this and other ways he did much to promote the revival of ritual that followed the *Oxford Movement, though Webb himself was a strictly moderate ceremonialist and never wore the Eucharistic vestments. From 1862 till his death he held the living of St Andrew's, Wells Street, London, which became famed for its music and parochial organizations. See also following entry.

C. C. J. *Webb, 'Benjamin Webb', CQR 75 (1913), pp. 329–48. Id. in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 96 f., with further refs.

Webb, Clement Charles Julian (1865–1954), *Anglican religious philosopher. The son of Benjamin *Webb (q.v.), he was educated at *Christ Church, Oxford. From 1889 to 1922 he was a Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and from 1920 to 1930 (the first) Oriel (now Nolloth) Professor of the Philosophy of the Christian Religion at Oxford. His philosophical writings include Problems in the Relations of God and Man (1911), two sets of *Gifford Lectures, God and Personality (1918) and Divine Personality and Human Life (1920), and his Wilde Lectures for 1911–13, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915). His standpoint was in essentials that of orthodox Theism, with stress on the ultimate significance of personality against the *pantheism of *Hegelian Idealism. Webb also made important contributions to the study of medieval philosophy, incl. critical editions of *John of Salisbury's Policraticus (2 vols., 1909) and Metalogicon (1929). Among his other writings were Religious Thought in the Oxford Movement (1928), John of Salisbury (1932), and A Study of Religious Thought in England from 1850 (1933; Olaus Petri Lectures).

C. C. J. Webb, Religious Experience: A Public Lecture delivered ... on Friday 19 May 1944.... with a Foreword by L. W. Grensted ... together with a Bibliography of his published Writings (1945). F. M. Powicke in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 1026–8.

Wednesday (originally so named in English after the Norse god 'Woden' or 'Odin'). From early times, as is shown by the Didache* (8. 1), Wednesday was, together with *Friday, a Christian fast day; it long remained so in *Embertide and still is in the E. In the time of *Tertullian (De jejunio, 14), both these days were observed as *station days in Africa, as was the custom later elsewhere. In *Alexandria (Soc., HE 5. 22), and also in Rome until the 5th cent., there was a service of prayers and lessons without any Eucharistic celebration; the Liturgy of the *Presanctified is still the principal service of the E. Orthodox Churches on Wednesdays and Fridays during Lent. It is not clear why Wednesday was originally chosen as a fast day, but a tradition, first mentioned by St *Peter of Alexandria (Ep. can. 15) says that it was because it was the day of the week on which Judas and the chief priests planned the betrayal of Christ (cf. Mk. 10: 1; 10 f.).

G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 11; 1959), pp. 136–48.

Wee Frees. A popular name for the tiny minority of the *Free Church of Scotland which refused to countenance the action of the rest of their number in uniting in 1900 with the *United Presbyterian Church to form the *United Free Church.

week. The week as a liturgical institution derived from the Jewish observance of the *Sabbath day. The conception of a day of worship specially dedicated to God was taken over by the first Christians, but soon transferred to the first day of the week (Acts 20: 7, 1 Cor. 16: 2) in honour of the *Resurrection. The Jewish fasts on Tuesday and Thursday were translated to *Wednesday, the day of the Betrayal, and *Friday, the day of the Crucifixion (Didache, 8). Thursday as a day of rejoicing on account of the *Ascension and of the Institution of the Eucharist came into prominence in the early Middle Ages. About the same time in the W. *Saturday began to be dedicated to the BVM, and later other days, too, had their particular devotion, e.g. Monday became the day of the Holy Souls.

Possibly in NT times (cf. Rev. 1: 10), and certainly very early, the first day of the week was known as ἡ ἡμέρα κυριακή or τοῦ Κυρίου ('the Lord's Day'), but the other days retained their Jewish designations, namely ἡμέρα δευτέρα ('second day', i.e. 'Monday'), etc. In Latin these became dies dominica, feria secunda, etc. with sabbatum for Saturday. As fast days, Wednesday and Friday came to be known in the W. as 'stationes' (see STATION DAYS). The planetary names, which had been introduced into Roman usage shortly before the Christian era, were occasionally used by early Christian authors, but almost entirely in writings intended for non-Christians. Never adopted in the E., they gained currency in W. Christian usage only from the late 3rd cent. The English names are the Teutonic equivalents of the Roman planetary names.

G. Schreiber, Die Wochentage im Erlebnis der Ostkirche und des christlichen Abendlandes (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 11; 1959). J. A. Jungmann, SJ, in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 841–3, s.v.

Week, Holy. See HOLY WEEK.

Weeks, Feast of. The Jewish celebration (Exod. 23: 16) of the completion of the grain harvest. It was held on the 50th day (hence the Greek title 'Pentecost') after the offering of the barley-sheaf at the feast of unleavened bread (i.e. in the late spring or early summer). Two loaves of leavened bread were presented as a 'wave-offering', accompanied by a 'peace-offering', a 'burnt-offering', and a 'sin-offering'. The fullest account in the OT of the ceremonies surrounding it is in Lev. 23: 9–21. In later times the feast was regarded both by Jews (e.g. *Maimonides) and Christians (e.g. *Jerome, *Augustine) as commemorating the Giving of the Law on Sinai (Exod. 20).

R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 395–7; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 493–5. H.-J. Kraus, Gottesdienst in Israel (2nd edn., Munich, 1962), pp. 72–8; Eng. tr., Worship in Israel (Oxford, 1966), pp. 55–61.

Weigel, Valentin (1533–88), *Lutheran mystical writer. From 1567 he was pastor at Zschopau, nr. Chemnitz. Not till the 17th cent., however, when from 1609 onwards his writings (not all genuine) were printed at Halle, did his doctrines become generally known. These books consisted esp. of attacks on the 'Bibliolaters' (Buchstabentheologen) and of cosmological speculations incompatible with dogmatic Lutheranism. In the history of mysticism his ideas, largely the outcome of the prolonged study of such writers as *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and *Paracelsus, are important for the considerable influence which they exercised on J. *Boehme.

Sämtliche Schriften, ed. W.-E. Peuckert and W. Zeller (Stuttgart, 1962 ff.). A. Israel, M. Valentin Weigels Leben und Schriften (Zschopau, 1888). H. Maier, Der mystische Spiritualismus Valentin Weigels (Beiträge zur Forderung christlicher Theologie, 29, Heft 4; 1926). A. Koyré, 'Un Mystique protestant. Maître Valentin Weigel' in Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses [8] (1928), pp. 227–48 and 329–48. W. Zeller, Die Schriften Valentin Weigels (Historische Studien, 370; 1940). F. Lieb, Valentin Weigels Kommentar zur Schöpfungsgeschichte und das Schrifttum seines Schülers Benedikt Biedermann (Zurich, 1962), pp. 17–46 and 143–53, with refs. G. Wehr, Valentin Weigel: Der Pansoph und esoterische Christ (Fermenta Cognitionis, 7; Freiburg i.B, 1979), with bibl. R. H. Grützmacher in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 37–44, s.v.

Weiss, Bernhard (1827–1918), German NT critic and theologian. Educated at the universities of Königsberg, Halle, and Berlin, he became professor of NT exegesis at Kiel (1863–77) and Berlin (1877–1908). His Lehrbuch der biblischen Theologie des Neuen Testaments (1868; Eng. tr., Biblical Theology of the New Testament, 1882–3), which accepted the methods and conclusions of the then new historical study of Christian origins to the extent of distinguishing between different doctrinal systems within the NT, nevertheless remained the standard conservative work for a generation. His Das Leben Jesu (1882; Eng. tr., The Life of Christ, 1883–4) and Lehrbuch der Einleitung in das Neue Testament (1886; Eng. tr., A Manual of Introduction to the New Testament, 1887–8) were also widely read. He undertook several of the later editions of the commentaries of H. A. W. *Meyer on Books of the NT; these were notable for their careful exegesis, their attention to the history of interpretation, and their interest in the *Synoptic Problem. He also issued a critical edition of the NT text (3 parts, 1894–1900; 2nd edn., 1902–5).

His autobiog., Aus neunzig Lebensjahren, 1827 bis 1918, ed. H. Weiss (Leipzig, 1927). Theologische Studien (Festschrift to Weiss on his 70th birthday, with contributions by C. R. Gregory, A. *Harnack and others, Göttingen, 1897).

Weiss, Johannes (1863–1914), German NT scholar. The son of Bernhard *Weiss, he was educated at the universities of Marburg, Berlin, Göttingen, and Breslau, and became Privatdozent at Göttingen in 1888 and associate professor in 1890, full professor at Marburg in 1895 and at Heidelberg in 1908. His Die Predigt Jesu vom Reiche Gottes (1892; 2nd edn., 1900) was the first attempt at a consistent eschatological interpretation of the Gospel, defending the thesis that the central purpose of Christ's mission was to proclaim the imminence of a transcendental Kingdom of God, in which He Himself was to be manifested as the Messiah. He further elaborated this view in his Kommentar zum Lukasevangelium (1893) and elsewhere. In Paulus und Jesus (1909), Christus, die Anfänge des Dogmas (1909), and in his last and most comprehensive work, Das Urchristentum (1917; completed by R. Knopf; Eng. tr. 1937), he traced the growth of early Christianity. His commentary on 1 Cor. (KEK, 1910; repr. 1970) remains a classic. In his article 'Literaturgeschichte des NT', in Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart (1912), he expounded for the first time the principles of *Form Criticism which were elaborated later by M. *Dibelius, his successor at Heidelberg, R. *Bultmann, his pupil, and others. He also edited, and contributed to, Die Schriften des Neuen Testaments (1905 ff.).

Eng. tr. of Die Predigt Jesu vom Reiche Gottes as Jesus' Proclamation of the Kingdom of God, with introd., by R. H. Hiers and D. L. Holland (1971), with list of Weiss's major works, pp. 138–42. F. C. *Burkitt, 'Johannes Weiss. In Memoriam', HTR 8 (1915), pp. 291–5. B. Lannert, Die Wiederentdeckung der neutestamentlichen Eschatologie durch Johannes Weiss (Tübingen, 1989).

Wellhausen, Julius (1844–1918), biblical critic and orientalist. A native of Hameln, he studied under H. G. A. *Ewald at Göttingen, where he became Privatdozent in 1870. In 1872 he became Professor of OT at Greifswald, but in 1882 resigned his chair on conscientious grounds. In the same year he became Privatdozent in Semitics at Halle and later Professor in Semitics at Marburg (1885–92) and Göttingen (1892–1913). After original study of the texts of *Samuel (1871) and other parts of the OT, he devoted the greater part of his life to *Higher Criticism on lines foreshadowed by E. Reuss. He elaborated the problem of the structure of *Genesis by a close analysis of '*J' and '*E' (qq.v.), while his thesis on the relative dating of the component documents of the Pentateuch, acc. to which '*P' (the 'Priestly Code') was the latest, completely transformed OT studies. It sought to establish the development of Hebrew religion from a nomadic stage through that of the Prophets to the religion of the Law. Wellhausen's analysis of the Pentateuch became the established orthodoxy in OT scholarship; though challenged by many from the 1930s onwards, it still has numerous supporters. In his later years he devoted himself largely to a critical study of the NT on similar lines. He upheld the priority of the Gospel of St *Mark over '*Q', its composite nature and its original Aramaic form. In spite of his insight into philological problems, his conclusions in the NT field met with less ready acceptance, though his pregnant commentaries on the Gospels laid down many of the lines for the later development of *Form Criticism.

His most important works on the OT are Die Geschichte Israels (1878; 2nd edn. issued as Prolegomena zur Geschichte Israels, 1883; Eng. tr., 1885) and Die Komposition des Hexateuchs und der historischen Bücher des Alten Testaments (1885). His chief works on the NT were Das Evangelium Marci (1903), Einleitung in die drei ersten Evangelien (1905), and Kritische Analyse der Apostelgeschichte (1914).

K. Marti (ed.), Studien zur semitischen Philologie und Religionsgeschichte Julius Wellhausen zum siebzigsten Geburtstag am 17. Mai 1914 gewidmet (Beihefte zur ZATW, 27; 1914). E. *Schwartz, 'Julius Wellhausen', Nachr. (Gött. Gesch. Mitt., 1918), pp. 43–70. W. Baumgartner, 'Wellhausen und der heutige Stand der alttestamentlichen Wissenschaft', Theologische Rundschau, 2 (1930), pp. 287–307. H.-J. Kraus, Geschichte der historisch-kritischen Erforschung des Alten Testaments (Neukirchen, 1956), pp. 235–49; 3rd edn. (1982), pp. 255–74. R. Smend, 'Wellhausen in Greifswald', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 78 (1981), pp. 141–76; id., 'Wellhausen in Göttingen', in B. Moeller (ed.), Theologie in Göttingen (Göttingen, 1987), pp. 306–25; id., Deutsche Alttestamentler im drei Jahrhunderten (ibid., 1989), pp. 99–113. Semeia, 25 (1982 [1983]) is devoted to assessments of various aspects of Wellhausen's work. J. W. Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in Nineteenth Century England and Germany (1984), pp. 257–89. H. *Gunkel in RGG (2nd edn.), 5 (1931), cols. 1820–2, s.v.

Wells. A minster dedicated to St *Andrew existed in Wells by the third quarter of the 8th cent., and perhaps as early as 705. About 909 this church became the cathedral of the newly created diocese of the Somerset people. Its endowments were greatly increased by Bp. Giso (1061–88), who reorganized the canons under a modified form of the rule of St *Chrodegang. After the removal of the see to *Bath between 1088 and 1091, the establishment at Wells fell into neglect, but Bp. Robert of Lewes (1136–66) refounded the chapter on the lines of the constitution at *Salisbury and endowed the deanery and 22 *prebends, later increased to 55, of which 49 survived the Reformation. To settle legal questions arising from the surrender of the deanery and the alienation of capitular properties at the time of the Reformation, *Elizabeth I granted a charter to Wells in 1591 which also had the effect of assimilating its constitution partly to that of a New Foundation church (see *CATHEDRAL).

The present cathedral was begun *c.*1180 and the main structure was consecrated on 23 Oct. 1239; it lies to the north of the earlier Saxon church. The octagonal chapter house, the east end of the quire, the Lady chapel, and the central tower were added in the first half of the 14th cent., and the cloisters were rebuilt in the 15th cent. The magnificent 13th-cent. west front has 293 medieval figures (angels, saints, kings, and queens) and reliefs. There are *misericords with fine 14th-cent. woodwork and a 14th-cent. astronomical clock. The most striking interior feature is the inverted arches (14th cent.) by which the piers of the tower are strengthened.

The Vicars' Close and Hall, the moated Palace, the old Deanery, and the four great gates erected by Bp. Beckington form, with the cathedral, a unique group of medieval ecclesiastical buildings.

The Theological College, founded in 1840, was moved to Salisbury and united with the theological college there in 1971; recognition by the House of Bishops for full-time training of ordinands was withdrawn in 1994.

W. H. B. Bird and W. P. Baildon, (eds.), Calendar of the Manuscripts of the Dean and Chapter of Wells (Historical Manuscripts Commission, 2 vols., 1907–14). D. S. Bailey (ed.), Wells Cathedral Chapter Acts Book 1666–83 (Somerset Record Society, 72; 1973). For the Statutes of Wells, A. Watkin, OSB, Dean Cosyn and Wells Cathedral Miscellanea (ibid., 56; 1941). J. A. *Robinson, Somerset Historical Essays (1921), pp. 54–72 ('The First Deans of Wells'). H. E. Reynolds (ed.), Wells Cathedral: Its Foundation, Constitutional History and Statutes (1881); C. M. Church, Chapters in the Early History of the Church of Wells, A.D. 1136–1333 (1894); L. S. Colchester (ed.), Wells Cathedral: A History (West Compton, Somerset, 1982). Id., Wells Cathedral (New Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1987). T. S. Holmes, 'The Cathedral of Wells', VCH, Somerset, 2, ed. W. Page (1911), pp. 162–9. For edns. of Episcopal Registers see bibl. to BATH AND WELLS.

Welsh Bible and Prayer Book. In 1567 the New Testament first appeared in Welsh, translated from the Greek mainly by William Salesbury (*c.*1529–95). It served as the basis for the complete Bible published in 1588 by William *Morgan (q.v.). This was revised by Richard Parry (1560–1623; Morgan's successor in the see of St Asaph), probably with the help of John Davies (1570–1644), his chaplain, and published in 1620. This Bible, which used the language of the bards, was an important formative influence on the Welsh prose language. It was the Welsh Bible in general use until 1988, when a fresh translation from the original languages was published: Y Beibl Cymraeg Newydd (The New Welsh Bible).

The English Prayer Book of 1559 was translated into Welsh by Richard Davies (1501–81), Bp. of *St Davids, and appeared in 1567. The Psalms were translated direct from the Hebrew, and the first lesson continued to be read in English. A translation of the new Book of 1662 which was provided for in the Act of *Uniformity appeared in 1664. Minor revisions were made at intervals until 1841. In 1956 the Governing Body of the Church in Wales approved a Canon authorizing 'Experimental Use of Proposed Revisions of the Book of Common Prayer' for periods not exceeding ten years. Revisions of individual services were followed by a complete new 'Book of Common Prayer for use in the Church of Wales' (1984). This provides for services in Welsh and English.

J. Ballinger, The Bible in Wales (1906), with bibl. of Welsh Bibles [by J. I. Jones] appended (sep. paged pp. 1–90). Darlow and Moule, 4 (1911), pp. 1657–85. S. L. Greenslade in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible [3] (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 170–2. J. G. Jones, The Translation of the Scriptures into Welsh, 1588: Aim, Accomplishment and Achievement (Lecture, Cardiff [1988]). The Bible in Wales. Catalogue of the Exhibition held at the National Library of Wales, Aberystwyth (Aberystwyth, 1988). A. O. Evans, A Chapter in the History of the Welsh Book of Common Prayer, or The Letters which were written preparatory to the Revised Edition of 1841 (3 vols., Bangor, 1922), with general introd., 1, pp. xiii–xxxix. W. Muss-Arnolt, The Book of Common Prayer among the Nations of the World (1914), pp. 69–76 (ch. 7, 'Richard Davies and the Welsh Translations'). R. G. Gruffydd, 'The Welsh Book of Common Prayer, 1567', Journal of the Historical Society of the Church in Wales, 17 (1967), pp. 43–55; G. H. Jones, 'The Welsh Psalter, 1567', ibid., pp. 56–61. A. O. Evans, A Memorandum on the Legality of the Welsh Bible and the Welsh Version of the Book of Common Prayer (Cardiff, 1925).

Wenceslas, St (*c.*907–29 [or possibly 935]), Bohemian prince and martyr. The son of Duke Wratislaw and Drahomira, he received a good Christian education, supervised by his grandmother, St Ludmilla. After the death of his father (*c.*920) his mother became regent, but her violent actions so estranged the people that Wenceslas took over the government, probably *c.*922. Himself a man of much piety, he worked for the religious and cultural improvement of his people, which he sought to bring into closer connection with the W. world, and for this reason entertained friendly relations with Germany. It is likely that it was this policy, as well as the dissatisfaction of the pagan elements among his subjects, which led to his being murdered by his brother Boleslav, prob. in 929. He was soon venerated as a martyr, and Boleslav himself had his relics translated to the Church of St Vitus, at Prague. From 985 his feast is known to have been observed in Bohemia, whose patron he became. From the year 1000 his picture appeared on Bohemian coins, and the Crown of St Wenceslas came to be the symbol of Czech independence. The name of the saint has become familiar in England through J. M. *Neale's Christmas carol 'Good King Wenceslas', but its contents are wholly imaginary. Feast day, 28 Sept.

AASS, Sept. 7 (1760), pp. 770–844. J. Pekař, Die Wenzels- und Ludmila-Legenden und die Echtheit Christians (1906), with modern edn. of texts. Other primary texts listed in BHL 2 (1900–1), pp. 1273–5 (nos. 8821–44), and Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 879–82. P. Devos, SJ, 'Le Dossier de S. Wenceslas dans un manuscrit du XIIIe siècle', Anal. Boll. 82 (1964), pp. 87–105, with text pp. 106–31. Eng. tr. of material on Wenceslas and Ludmilla from Church Slavonic and Latin by M. Kantor, The Origins of Christianity in Bohemia (Evanston, Ill., 1990), pp. 59–110 and 143–244. A. Naegle, Der heilige Wenzel, der Landespatron Böhmens (1928); F. Dvorník, Zivot svatého Václava (1929; also in Eng., The Life of Saint Wenceslas, Prague, 1929; the Ger. tr., ibid., 1929, contains additional information). H. Kølln, Der Bericht über den Dänenkönig in den St.-Wenzels-Biographien des 13. und 14. Jahrhunderts (Det Kongelige Danske Videnskabernes Selskab. Historisk-filosofiske Meddelelser, 52: 2; 1986), with refs. C. Parrott, 'St. Wenceslas of Bohemia', History Today, 16 (1966), pp. 225–33. R. Turek and V. Ryneš in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (Rome, 1969), cols. 991–1000, s.v., 'Venceslao', with extensive bibl.

Werburg, St (d. *c.*699), less correctly 'Werburgh', English abbess. The daughter of the Mercian king, Wulfhere, and St Ermenilda, Werburg entered the *Benedictine abbey of *Ely, where she became abbess, and was later instigated by King Ethelred to reform the monasteries of nuns in his kingdom. She also established new monasteries at Trentham and Hanbury (in Staffordshire) and at Weedon (in Northants). She was renowned for her holy life and many miracles were reported to have occurred at her tomb. For fear of the Danes her body was removed to *Chester in 875. Her shrine, of which fragments are still to be seen in Chester Cathedral, was destroyed during the reign of *Henry VIII. The life by *Goscelin is almost entirely legendary. Feast day, 3 Feb.

Life by Goscelin pr. in AASS, Feb. 1 (1658), pp. 386–90; Florence of Worcester, Chronicon ex Chronicis (ed. B. Thorpe, London, 1, 1848, p. 32). Metrical Life by Henry Bradshaw (d. 1513), orig. pub. 1521, ed. E. Hawkins (Chetham Society, OS, 15; 1848) and C. Horstmann (EETS, orig. ser. 88; 1887). H. Chadwick, St Werburgh of Chester (Chester [1994] [pamphlet]). J. Tait (ed.), The Chartulary or Register of the Abbey of St Werburgh, Chester, 1 (Chetham Society, NS 79; 1920), pp. viii–xiv.

Wesel, John of. See JOHN OF WESEL.

Wesley, Charles (1707–88), 16th or 17th child and third surviving son of Samuel, and brother of John, *Wesley. Educated at Westminster School and *Christ Church, Oxford, he became a member of the Oxford *Methodists. In 1735 he was ordained and then accompanied his brother to Georgia, where he acted as secretary to J. E. Oglethorpe, the colony's leader; he returned to England in 1736. Like John he came under the influence of Peter Böhler and the *Moravians and experienced conversion on Whitsunday (21 May) 1738. Entering on the itinerant ministry in 1739, he occupied himself in preaching and travelled until 1756. He then settled in Bristol and from 1771 in London, where he ministered at the City Road Chapel. He was the most gifted and indefatigable of English hymnwriters (over 5,000 hymns in all); like his brother he understood the importance of hymns for missionary, devotional, and instructional purposes. The first collection, Hymns and Sacred Poems (with the original form of 'Hark! the herald angels sing' and 'Hail the day that sees Him rise') appeared in 1739, to be quickly followed by others, all professedly the joint work of the two brothers. They included Hymns on the Lord's Supper (1745), with a preface taken from D. Brevint's Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice (1673). Other well-known hymns include 'Jesu, Lover of my soul', 'Love divine, all loves excelling', and 'Lo! He comes, with clouds descending'. More emotional and less stable, but a warmer and more pastoral personality than his brother, Charles opposed all moves tending to separation from the C of E, esp. John's ordinations. Both are commemorated on 24 May in the ASB; on 3 May in the American BCP (1979). See also WESLEY, S. S.

His Journal, with selections from his Correspondence and Poetry, ed. T. Jackson (2 vols., London, 1849); first part (1736–9), with additional material, ed. J. Telford [1910]. Representative Verse, ed., with introd. by F. Baker (1962). J. Whitehead, The Life of the Rev. John Wesley . . . To which is prefixed . . . The Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley, 1 (1793), pp. 97–374. T. Jackson, The Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley (2 vols., 1841); J. Telford, The Life of the Rev. Charles Wesley ([1887]; rev. edn., 1900). Other studies by F. L. Wiseman (New York [1932]; London, 1933) and F. C. Gill (London, 1964). J. Telford, Sayings and Portraits of Charles Wesley (1927). F. Baker, Charles Wesley as Revealed by his Letters (1948). J. E. Rattenbury, The Evangelical Doctrines of Charles Wesley's Hymns (1941); id., The Eucharistic Hymns of John and Charles Wesley (1948); B. L. Manning, The Hymns of Wesley and Watts (1942), pp. 32–77; R. N. Flew, The Hymns of Charles Wesley (1953). R. Green, The Works of John and Charles Wesley: A Bibliography (1896); F. Baker, A Union Catalogue of the Publications of John and Charles Wesley (Durham, NC, 1966); B. M. Jarboe, John and Charles Welsey: A Bibliography (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1987). A. Gordon in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 298–302.

Wesley, John (1703–91), founder of the *Methodist Movement. The 13th or 14th child and second surviving son of the Revd Samuel Wesley (1662–1735), rector of Epworth, Humberside, and his wife Susanna, he was educated at Charterhouse and *Christ Church, Oxford. In 1726 he was elected to a fellowship at Lincoln College, Oxford, and also acted for a time (1727–9) as curate to his father. At Oxford he gathered round him a group which became known as the '*Holy Club' or Methodists; they included Charles *Wesley and G. *Whitefield. At this period he came much under the influence of W. *Law (whom he visited) and other *Nonjurors and RC writers who inspired him to follow an intensely ascetic pattern of life. In 1735 he set out with his brother Charles on a missionary journey to Georgia under the auspices of the *SPG, but his severe pastoral discipline, aggravated by an unsuccessful love affair, alienated the colonists and he fled home in 1737. After the *Moravian Peter Böhler had convinced him that he lacked saving faith, he underwent a conversion experience when his 'heart was strangely warmed' on 24 May 1738 during the reading of M. *Luther's Preface to Rom. at the meeting of a religious society in Aldersgate Street, London. This was followed by a visit to the Moravian colony at *Herrnhut. Henceforth Welsey's professed object was 'to promote as far as I am able vital practical religion and by the grace of God to beget, preserve, and increase the life of God in the souls of men', and the rest of his life was spent in evangelistic work.

Finding the churches closed to him, Wesley followed Whitefield in field-preaching to the Kingswood colliers in 1739. He broke with the Moravians in 1740 and in 1741 his opposition to the strict Calvinist view of election led to a breach with Whitefield also. Wesley then developed his own organization with the help of lay preachers and extended his activity to cover the whole of the British Isles by 1751. His chief centres were in London, Bristol, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne. He is alleged to have travelled over 200,000 miles and to have preached over 40,000 sermons, as well as writing thousands of letters. Though attracting large audiences, he also suffered mob violence and clerical hostility, but eventually became a tolerated national figure. From 1744 he held conferences of lay preachers which became annual events and for which a legal constitution was provided in 1784. From small beginnings in the 1760s the Methodist system gradually developed also in America. The needs of this new field induced Wesley in 1784 to ordain T. *Coke as *Superintendent or Bishop, and also to instruct him to ordain F. *Asbury in America as his colleague. Wesley himself still wished the Movement to remain within the C of E, but an increasingly independent system grew up. At the time of his death there were 294 preachers and 71,668 members in Great Britain, 19 missionaries and 5,300 members on mission stations, and 198 preachers and 43,265 members in America.

Theologically, Wesley combined the teaching of *justification by faith alone with an emphasis on the pursuit of holiness to the point of 'Christian *perfection'. Intellectually, he combined a strong belief in the supernatural with appeals to Scripture, reason, and the *Fathers of the Church, though increasingly also to experience. He placed great value on liturgical prayer and Eucharistic devotion as well as on extempore worship. Personal magnetism and an enormous capacity for self-discipline and organization enabled him to control his movement. Though he mixed easily in a variety of company, impressed Samuel *Johnson with his conversation, and was an effective spiritual counsellor to women, his marriage to Mary Vazeille was most unhappy. A High Church Tory in politics, Wesley engaged in extensive charitable work; for him the pursuit of money was only for the sake of giving, while he distrusted the rich and the effects of wealth on the spiritual life. His extensive writings and abridgements give him a role as a popular educator. He was the central figure in the rise of Methodism and one of the greatest Christians of his age. Feast day (with Charles) in the ASB, 24 May; in the American BCP (1979), 3 Mar.

Wesley himself ed. a collection of his works, 32 vols., Bristol, 1771–4; later edns. incl. those by T. Jackson (14 vols., London, 1829–31; 15 vols., ibid., 1856–62; and 14 vols., ibid., 1872, repr., Grand Rapids [1958–9]). New edn., known since 1984 as the 'Bicentennial Edition', by F. Baker and others (Oxford, 1975–82; Nashville, 1984 ff.). This incl., as vols. 1–4, Wesley's sermons, ed. A. C. Outler (1984–7). Until they are incl. in this edn., the standard text of his Journal (which extends from 1735 to 1790) is that of N. Cornford (8 vols., London, 1909–16); of his Letters that of J. Telford (8 vols., ibid., 1931). Collection of extracts, with introd., by A. C. Outler (New York, 1964) and of John and Charles Wesley by F. Whaling (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1981). Lives by J. Hampson (3 vols., London, 1791), T. Coke and H. Moore (ibid., 1792), J. Whitehead (2 vols., ibid., 1793–6), R. Southey (2 vols., ibid., 1820, and many later edns.), H. Moore (2 vols., ibid., 1824–5), L. Tyerman (3 vols., ibid., 1870–1; with much fresh material), R. D. Urlin (ibid., 1870), J. Telford (ibid., 1886; 3rd edn., 1910), J. H. Overton (ibid., 1891), J. S. Simon (5 vols., ibid., 1921–34; in the form of separate studies), M. Schmidt (2 vols., Zurich, 1953–66; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1962–73), V. H. H. Green (London, 1964), S. Ayling (ibid., 1979), and H. D. Rack, Reasonable Enthusiast [1989]. R. P. Heitzenrater, The Elusive Mr. Wesley (2 vols., Nashville, 1984, with extensive docs.). J. Telford (ed.), Sayings and Portraits of John Wesley (1924). On his life, also: M. Piette, La Réaction Wesléyenne dans l'évolution protestante (Louvain thesis; Brussels, 1925; 2nd edn., with slightly different title, ibid., 1927; Eng. tr., 1937); V. H. H. Green, The Young Mr. Wesley: A Study of John Wesley and Oxford (1961); R. L. Moore, John Wesley and Authority: A Psychological Perspective (American Academy of Religion Dissertation Series, 29; Missoula, Mont. [1979]). On his teaching and significance, M. [L.] Edwards, John Wesley and the Eighteenth Century: A Study of his Social and Political Influence (1933; rev. edn., 1955); G. C. Cell, The Rediscovery of John Wesley (New York [1935]); W. R. Cannon, The Theology of John Wesley, with Special Reference to the Doctrine of Justification (ibid. [1946]); H. Lindström, Wesley and Sanctification: A Study in the Doctrine of Salvation (Stockholm, 1946); W. L. Doughty, John Wesley, Preacher (1955); C. W. Williams, John Wesley's Theology Today (1960); A. B. Lawson, John Wesley and the Christian Ministry: The Sources and Development of his Opinions and Practice (1963); R. C. Monk, John Wesley: His Puritan Heritage (1966); F. Baker, John Wesley and the Church of England (1970). M. Marquardt, Praxis und Prinzipien der Sozialethik Wesleys (Göttingen, 1977). H. A. Snyder, The Radical Wesley and Patterns of Church Renewal (Downers Green, Ill. [1980]). R. E. Brantley, Locke, Wesley, and the Method of English Romanticism (Gainesville, Fla. [1984]), pp. 1–128 and 215–25. A. Gordon in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 303–14, s.v. See also works cited under METHODISM and WESLEY, CHARLES.

Wesley, Samuel Sebastian (1810–76), English composer and organist. He was a son of the composer Samuel Wesley (1766–1837), who was himself a son of Charles *Wesley. A chorister of the *Chapel Royal from 1819, he afterwards became organist of *Hereford Cathedral (1832–5), *Exeter Cathedral (1835–42), Leeds Parish Church (1842–9), *Winchester Cathedral (1849–65), and *Gloucester Cathedral (1865–76). He was a strong advocate of reform in church music, although seemingly often unable to achieve with his own choirs the standards he demanded from others. He nevertheless wrote some of the finest English church music since H. *Purcell, including a Service in E, and such well-known anthems as 'The Wilderness', 'Blessed be the God and Father', and 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace'.

Life by P. Chappell (Great Wakering, Essex, 1977). Further study by D. Hunt (Bridgend, S. Wales [1990]). E. [R.] Routley, The Musical Wesleys (1968), pp. 102–249; W. J. Gatens, Victorian Cathedral Music in Theory and Practice (Cambridge, 1986), pp. 128–46. N. Temperley in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 20 (1980), pp. 363–8, s.v.

Wesleyan Methodists. See METHODISM and other arts. there listed.

Wessel (*c.*1419–89), Dutch theologian. (He is also known as Gansfort, the name 'Wessel' having been given to him at his baptism; the designation 'John Wessel', by which he is sometimes described, appears to have arisen through confusion with *John of Wesel.) Educated by the *Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer, he was influenced by *Plato, St *Augustine, and St *Thomas Aquinas. For 16 years he studied and taught at Paris, where he defended the side of *Nominalism against *Realism, more, however, it appears, on ecclesiastical than on philosophical grounds. Later he visited Italy, where he came into contact with the Renaissance humanism, and finally returned home for his last years. He is commonly regarded by German Protestant writers as one of the 'Reformers before the Reformation', since in his attitude to the Papacy, to the authority of the Church, and to the superstitious tendencies of his age, he shared many of the sentiments of M. *Luther, who edited a collection of his writings (*c.1521). His practical system of meditation was a remote influence on the Spiritual Exercises of St *Ignatius Loyola.

Works pub. Groningen, 1614; repr., Nieuwkoop, 1966 (Monumenta Humanistica Belgica, 1). E. W. Miller, Wessel Gansfort: Life and Writings (2 vols., Papers of the American Society of Church History, 1 and 2; New York and London, 1917), with Eng. tr. by J. W. Scudder of his Correspondence in vol. 1, pp. 231–333, of his treatise 'concerning the Blessed Sacrament of the Eucharist and the Hearing of the Mass' in vol. 2, pp. 3–70, and of the Farrago, pp. 75–315, and full bibl. C. Ullmann, Reformatoren vor der Reformation, book 4, vol. 2 (2nd edn., 1866), pp. 236–557; Eng. tr. (1885), pp. 263–615. J. *Friedrich, Johann Wessel (1862). M. van Rhijn, Wessel Gansfort (The Hague, 1917); id., Studiën over Wessel Gansfort en zijn Tijd (1933). R. R. Post, The Modern Devotion (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 3; Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 476–86. S. D. Reeves in TRE 12 (1984), pp. 25–8, s.v. 'Gansfort, Wessel'; R. T. M. van Dijk, O.Cist., in Dict. Sp., 16 (1994), cols. 1393–6, s.v. 'Wessel Gansfort'.

Wessenberg, Ignaz Heinrich von (1774–1860), *Febronianist reformer. He was educated at Augsburg by ex-Jesuits, and later at Dillingen and Würzburg. In 1802, though only a subdeacon, he was appointed his *vicar general by K. von Dalberg (1744–1817), then Coadjutor Prince-Bp. of Constance. He became an increasingly warm advocate of Febronianist principles and aimed at the creation of a National German Church, largely independent of Rome. As early as 1802 he began a monthly review, Geistliche Monatsschrift (1802–4), which was replaced after two years by the less aggressive Konstanzer Pastoralarchiv (1804–27). Among his reforms were the raising of standards in the clerical seminaries, frequent gatherings of the clergy for mutual encouragement, bi-weekly religious instruction in the state schools, systematic provision for the blind and deaf-mute, and the establishment of an inter-confessional house of refuge. His *Josephinistic principles and writings met with much opposition at Rome. In support of his cause he accompanied Dalberg to Paris in 1811 and in 1814–15 attended the Congress of Vienna as Dalberg's deputy, but without positive result. During his absence in Vienna, Rome separated the Swiss portion of the diocese from Constance and shortly afterwards brought pressure on Dalberg to depose Wessenberg. Though Dalberg obeyed, he sought Wessenberg's appointment as his Coadjutor with the right of succession. The acceptance of this proposal by the Government of Baden was invalidated by Rome. When, on Dalberg's death (1817), the chapter elected Wessenberg as vicar and administrator of the diocese, *Pius VII again resisted the appointment and refused Wessenberg an audience. From now onwards Wessenberg, in open disobedience to the Pope, acted as administrator until 1827, when the diocese of Constance, which had been suppressed in 1821 by the bull 'Provida sollersque', was incorporated into that of Freiburg. In 1833 he retired into private life. Wessenberg was a voluminous writer. His publications included a large treatise, Die grossen Kirchenversammlungen des 15. und 16. Jahrhunderts in Bezug auf die Kirchenverbesserung (4 vols., 1840), but they lacked solidity and are without enduring value.

Unveröffentlichte Manuskripte und Briefe, ed. K. Aland and W. Müller (Freiburg, 1968 ff.). Correspondence with Heinrich Zschokke, ed. R. Herzog and O. Pfyl (Quellen zur Schweizer Geschichte, NF, 3. Abt., 10; 1990). Life by J. Beck (Freiburg i.B., 1862; put on *Index on 11 June 1866). A. Rösch, Das religiöse Leben in Hohenzollern unter dem Einfluss des Wessenbergianismus, 1800–1850 (1908). K. Aland, 'Wessenberg-Studien', Zeitschrift für die Geschichte des Oberrheins, 95 (1943), pp. 550–620; 96 (1948), pp. 450–567; id., 'Das Schrifttum I. H. v. Wessenbergs', ibid. 105 (1957), pp. 475–511. W. Müller, 'Ignaz Heinrich von Wessenberg', in H. Fries and G. Schwaiger (eds.), Katholische Theologen Deutschlands im 19. Jahrhundert, 1 (Munich, 1975), pp. 189–204, with bibl. M. Ott in CE 15 (1912), pp. 590 f.

West Africa, Christianity in. The first Europeans arrived on the coast of W. Africa at the end of the 15th cent., but for the most part they were involved in the slave trade rather than evangelization. The Portuguese, however, undertook missionary work in *Angola, but the success of this mission declined after the end of the 18th century.

The abolition of the slave trade in the early 19th cent. and the exploration of previously unknown parts of Africa was followed by sustained missionary activity by Churches of all denominations. Anglicans, *Methodists, and *Baptists were active in *Sierra Leone and, with *Presbyterians, in *Nigeria, while Methodists set up missions also in *Ghana, Gambia, and Dahomey. Protestant missionaries from Continental Europe, such as the Basel Mission, were also active in the area. The RC Church enjoyed a favoured position in the *Congo, and RC missionaries established posts in practically every part of W. Africa during the latter part of the 19th cent. In French territory an active part was taken not only by RCs but also by French Evangelicals; their most famous missionary was A. *Schweitzer. An Anglican mission from the *West Indies (under *SPG direction) also operated in French West Africa. The missions in Liberia (RC, Episcopalian and Protestant) were exclusively American in origin.

During the 20th cent., in W. Africa as elsewhere, there has been growth in co-operation between the non-RC Churches engaged in missionary work, and the independence which most W. African states achieved after the Second World War has been matched by the establishment of independent national Churches by Protestant bodies and the replacement of the older *vicariates by hierarchies in the RC Church. In the Anglican Communion, in 1951 all the existing dioceses in the area, apart from Liberia, were organized into the Church of the Province of West Africa, with a constitution which, coming into force in 1963, made it entirely independent of the C of E. In 1979 a separate Nigerian Province was formed out of part of the Province of West Africa, but the Province of West Africa was joined by the diocese of Liberia in 1982. See also AFRICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

For bibl. see AFRICA, CHRISTIANITY IN, and works cited under ANGOLA, CONGO, GHANA, NIGERIA, and SIERRA LEONE.

West Indies, Christianity in the. The earliest evangelization in the West Indies was carried out by the RC missionaries who accompanied the Spanish colonists from the end of the 15th cent. Large numbers of priests and religious went to work among the Indians. A bishopric was established at San Domingo in 1511 and further organization soon followed. The aboriginal population was, however, largely exterminated and replaced by Negro slaves from W. Africa. The wealth derived from the cultivation of sugar by these slaves in the 17th cent. led to colonization by other nations, notably the French, the British, and the Danes, in some cases as a result of war. In the French islands the Code Noir of 1685 prescribed that all slaves were to be instructed and baptized in the Catholic religion. The cruelty with which the slaves were treated, however, led to antagonism and revolts.

In the islands ruled by the British the Anglican Church was established. It ministered to a large part of the white population, but in the 17th and 18th cents. made only isolated attempts to evangelize the slaves, e.g. the building of the *Codrington Missionary College, Barbados, in 1714–42. Despite the antagonism of the planters, other bodies undertook missionary work among the slaves. The *Moravians, who arrived on the Danish island of St Thomas in 1732, met with a sympathetic reception there, and soon set up missions in the British West Indies, coming to Jamaica in 1754. *Methodist preaching began with the arrival of Nathaniel Gilbert in 1760. It was supported by the Wesleyan Missionary Society from England and met with considerable success. In 1883 two independent Methodist Conferences were set up, but owing to financial difficulties were taken over again by the Wesleyan Missionary Society in 1904. This situation continued until 1967 when an independent Methodist Conference was established with its headquarters in Antigua. The first *Baptist place of worship was opened in 1791 by George Liele, a manumitted slave from the USA; by 1813 responsibility for the work had been assumed by the British Baptists, but in 1842 the mission declared itself independent. In 1824 *Presbyterians arrived from the USA; they devoted themselves particularly to the East Indians of Trinidad and the inhabitants of the Cayman Islands. In 1846 Presbyterians from Jamaica began sending missionaries to *Nigeria, providing an early example of the substantial missionary endeavour which has come from the West Indies. In the Danish territories a royal ordinance of King Frederick V in 1755 provided that God's Word should be preached to the slaves and their children baptized like other people's children; Lutheran missions were subsequently established.

By the beginning of the 19th cent. the Anglican Church began to take its responsibilities to the slaves more seriously. In 1808 the Bp. of London issued a circular to all clergy recommending that Sunday Schools should be set up for the education of Negro children. In 1824 the first two bishoprics of Jamaica and Barbados were established. Between 1868 and 1870 the Anglican Church was disestablished everywhere except in Barbados but it continues to play an important role in the life of the former British colonies. The Province was created in 1883; it elects its own bishops, makes its own canons and regulations by synodical action and administers its own finances.

In those areas which were originally Spanish or French the RC Church retained its predominance. Though the RC Church was for a time proscribed in Jamaica, when Trinidad and Tobago were ceded to Britain in 1802 it was agreed that no change should be made in the status of the RC Church. The 19th cent. saw the creation of three *Vicariates Apostolic for the British West Indies in 1837, as well as the establishment in 1820 of a bishopric for the Port of Spain. This post, now an archbishopric, was filled by a West Indian for the first time in 1971. Other Churches also gradually developed indigenous ministries after the liberation of the slaves in 1833 and particularly as the colonies gained political independence in the 20th cent. The 20th cent. has also been marked by efforts of the non-RC denominations to form *ecumenical links, resulting, for instance, in the creation of the United Theological College of the West Indies at Kingston, Jamaica, in 1965; in this ten denominations (incl. Anglican, Presbyterians and Methodists) are involved.

In the mid-20th cent. *Pentecostalism was brought to the West Indies from the USA. While the mainstream Churches experienced a decline in the second half of the 20th cent., the Pentecostal movement has expanded phenomenally. The two largest groups are the Church of God and its daughter Church, the New Testament Church of God. The Pentecostal style of worship has exercised influence upon the RC and historical Protestant Churches in the West Indies. Most of the Negroes accepted some form of Christianity, but the Oriental immigrants, esp. Chinese and Indian, have largely retained their own religion.

A. Caldecott, The Church in the West Indies (Colonial Church Histories, 1898). J. B. Ellis, The Diocese of Jamaica (1913). H. L. Clarke, Constitutional Church Government in the Dominions beyond the Seas and other Parts of the Anglican Communion (1924), pp. 259–315. F. D. Walker, The Call of the West Indies: The Romance of Methodist Work and Opportunity in the West Indies and Adjacent Regions [1933]. F. X. Delany, SJ, A History of the Catholic Church in Jamaica, B.W.I., 1494 to 1929 (New York, 1930); F. J. Osborne, SJ, History of the Catholic Church in Jamaica (Aylesbury, Bucks [1977]; repr. Chicago [1988]). G. E. Simpson, 'Religions of the Caribbean', in M. L. Kilson and R. I. Rotberg (eds.), The Africa Diaspora: Interpretative Essays (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1976), pp. 280–311, esp. pp. 280–91. B. Stanley, The History of the Baptist Missionary Society 1792–1992 (Edinburgh, 1992), pp. 68–105 and pp. 240–68.

Westcott, Brooke Foss (1825–1901), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at King Edward VI's School at Birmingham under J. Prince Lee, where he became the lifelong friend of J. B. *Lightfoot and E. W. *Benson, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. Ordained in 1851, in 1852 he became assistant master under C. J. *Vaughan at Harrow, where he published a series of theological works, including the 1st edition of his History of the Canon of the New Testament (1855), the Introduction to the Study of the Gospels (1860), and a History of the English Bible (1868). In 1869 he left Harrow for a residentiary canonry at *Peterborough Cathedral, which he retained when, in 1870, he was elected Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. Here he prepared together with F. J. A. *Hort the celebrated critical edition of the Greek NT, published in 1881. It was followed by his three great commentaries on St John's Gospel (1881), on the Epp. of St John (1883), and on the Ep. to the Hebrews (1889), the fruit of his Cambridge lectures. At the same time he devoted much of his energy to the training of his students and to the encouragement of missions, the Cambridge Clergy Training School (now 'Westcott House') and the Cambridge Mission to Delhi owing their existence to his inspiration and direction. From 1883, when he resigned his canonry at Peterborough, he combined his chair with a canonry at *Westminster. In 1890 he was consecrated Bp. of Durham. In the diocese he made social problems his special concern, and one of the most notable events of his episcopate was his mediation in the coal strike of 1892. He also continued the plan inaugurated by J. B. Lightfoot whereby six or eight ordinands read for a year at Auckland Castle, and himself lectured to them each week. In 1892 he published his doctrinal work, The Gospel of Life, based on his Cambridge lectures, which was followed by several volumes of collected sermons and addresses, among them The Incarnation and Common Life (1893) and Christian Aspects of Living (1897).

A. Westcott (son), Life and Letters of Brooke Foss Westcott (2 vols., 1903). Shorter Life by J. Clayton ('Leaders of the Church, 1800–1900', ed. G. W. E. Russell, 1906); brief sketch by A. G. B. West, Memories of Brooke Foss Westcott (1936). Bishop Westcott Memorial Lectures (all pub., Cambridge): C. K. Barrett, Westcott as Commentator (1958 Lecture; 1959); H. Chadwick, The Vindication of Christianity in Westcott's Thought (1960 Lecture; [1961]); [W.] O. Chadwick, Westcott and the University (1962 Lecture; 1963); G. [F. A.] Best, Bishop Westcott and the Miners (1965 Lecture; 1966); D. Newsome, Bishop Westcott and the Platonic Tradition (1968 Lecture; 1969). F. Olofsson, Christus Redemptor et Consummator: A Study of the Theology of B. F. Westcott (Studia Doctrinae Christianae Upsaliensis, 19; 1979). D. L. Edwards, Leaders of the Church of England, 1828–1944 (1971), pp. 207–22. V. H. Stanton in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 635–41.

Western text of the NT. A type of text of the Greek NT marked by a distinctive cluster of variant readings, so named because the chief witnesses to it were thought to be of W. provenance, i.e. some Graeco-Latin MSS (e.g. *Codex Bezae), the *Old Latin, and quotations in the Latin Fathers. It is now acknowledged that this type of text is not confined to the W.; some of its variants appear in E. versions such as the Sinaitic *Old Syrian and the *Coptic. Thus, where the designation 'Western' continues to be used by textual critics, it is more as a proper name than as a geographical term.

B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort posited three early types of text which preceded the later standard text of the Greek Church: the *Neutral, the *Alexandrian, and the Western. The Western text, they claimed, represented a process of free handling by scribes, harmonizing, clarifying, and embellishing the text, which, unlike the other two types, was not subject to the restraint of conscious revision. It was therefore generally unreliable, except where, contrary to its tendency to make additions, it preserved original shorter readings (dubbed 'Western Non-interpolations', e.g. Mt. 9: 34; 21: 44; Lk. 22: 19b–20, 62; 24: 12, 40; Jn. 12: 8; Rom. 16. 25–7). This is probably too sweeping a judgement, for some of these omissions, represented by very few MSS, may also be explained by carelessness or tendentiousness.

The Western text of Acts has so many longer readings that it poses a separate problem. J. H. Ropes argued that it was the result of a deliberate revision and expansion produced in the E. *c.*150, but he found no particular theological motive behind it. More recently others (notably E. J. Epp) have claimed to detect a strong anti-Judaic bias. The language and style of the Western text have also been studied closely; some scholars argue that they are distinctive and imply a homogeneous revision, while others deny this. Certain Western readings reflect St *Luke's own style and perspective to such an extent that they have good claim to be treated as original. The problem then becomes how to explain how the abbreviated, non-Western text came to dominate the MS tradition. One solution to this, that Luke himself produced two versions of Acts, i.e. that he revised his own work at some later stage, has recently been revived.

Important discussions in B. F. Westcott and F. J. A. Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek, 2 (1881); B. H. *Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924); F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. *Lake (eds.), The Beginnings of Christianity, pt. 1, vol. 3 (1926; The Text of Acts, by J. H. Ropes); C. H. *Turner, 'Western Readings in the Second Half of St Mark's Gospel', JTS 29 (1928), pp. 1–16; A. C. Clark, The Acts of the Apostles (1933); G. D. Kilpatrick, 'Western Text and Original Text in the Gospels and Acts', JTS 44 (1943), pp. 24–36; E. J. Epp, The Theological Tendency of Codex Bezae Cantabrigiensis in Acts (Cambridge, 1966); M.-É. Boismard and A. Lamouille, Le Texte occidental des Actes des Apôtres: Reconstitution et Réhabilitation (2 vols., 1984); W. A. Strange, The Problem of the Text of Acts (Cambridge, 1992). E. J. Epp in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 909–12, s.v.

Westminster Abbey. Acc. to a legend, not mentioned by *Bede and prob. of 13th-cent. origin, a Benedictine abbey was founded in Thorney Island in 616 and miraculously consecrated by St *Peter, the patron of the Church. The abbey is mentioned in a charter of *Offa, dated 785, of which, however, the authenticity has been challenged. Acc. to *William of Malmesbury it was restored by St *Dunstan. The rebuilding and restoration of the abbey were undertaken by *Edward the Confessor in commutation of a vow to go on a pilgrimage to Rome, the new choir and transepts being dedicated in 1065. The nave was prob. completed by 1085 and the original cloister by 1100. After the canonization of Edward the Confessor (1161), his relics were translated to a shrine in the choir. A Lady chapel at the east end was built between 1220 and 1245. Henry III in 1245 began the erection of the present church in the French style. By 1269, when the relics of Edward the Confessor were translated to the shrine behind the High Altar, the eastern part of the church had been completed. Work on the nave, resumed in 1376, was finished *c.*1505. By 1519 the chapel planned by Henry VII as a shrine for *Henry VI had been added. The western towers, designed by C. *Wren and modified by N. Hawksmoor (1661–1736), were completed by 1745. The present choir-screen (reredos) was erected in 1867 after the designs of G. G. *Scott (d. 1878).

The Benedictine foundation of Edward the Confessor soon became one of the richest abbeys in the country, largely through the veneration accorded to the royal saint. As a royal foundation it occupied a special position in relation to the reigning sovereigns, and it was under the protection of the Holy See. From pre-Norman times until the reign of *James I it enjoyed wide rights of *sanctuary. Abbot Laurence (Abbot *c.*1158–73) obtained the right to wear a mitre. Complete exemption from the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London and the Abp. of *Canterbury was granted in 1222. Notable Abbots included Edwin (Abbot 1049–71), Gilbert Crispin (Abbot 1085–1117), Simon Langham (Abbot 1349–62), Nicholas Lytlington (Abbot 1362–86), and John Islip (Abbot 1500–32).

In 1540 the monastery was dissolved and a collegiate church under a Dean with 12 Prebendaries was founded, W. Boston (Abbot 1532–1540) becoming the first Dean (1540–49). The abbey became a Royal *Peculiar, retaining its independence of the see of London. At the same time most of the monastic quarters, rebuilt after a fire in 1298, were appropriated for the school founded by *Henry VIII in 1540. In the same year a see of Westminster was established under T. *Thirlby, covering most of the county of Middlesex; it was suppressed in 1550. A Benedictine community under J. Feckenham (d. 1584) was reinstated by *Mary in 1556; it was dissolved in 1559 when *Elizabeth I restored the collegiate church. From the time of J. Dolben (Dean 1662–83) to that of S. *Horsley (Dean 1793–1802) the Deanery was held in conjunction with the see of *Rochester. In 1840 the title of Prebendary was changed to that of Canon and the number reduced from 12 to 6. There are now normally four Canons. Notable Deans include L. *Andrewes (Dean 1601–5), J. *Williams (Dean 1620–44), J. *Ireland (Dean 1816–42), R. Chenevix *Trench (Dean 1856–63), and A. P. *Stanley (Dean 1864–81). Lord John Thynne, Sub-Dean from 1834 to 1881, did much to improve the standard of worship in the abbey.

Notable features in the abbey include the fan-vaulting in the chapel of Henry VII, the shrine of Edward the Confessor, the mosaic pavement in the sanctuary, the Coronation Chair, the mural paintings of St Christopher and the Incredulity of St Thomas in the south transept, the 11th-cent. chapel of the Pyx in the cloisters, and the tombs of numerous sovereigns from Henry III to George II and celebrities of all kinds, esp. since the 18th cent. Since the time of *William I it has been the invariable place for the Coronation of the sovereign, the Abbot or Dean having a special part in the ceremony. Until 1395 the House of Commons frequently sat in the 13th-cent. octagonal Chapter House. Almost throughout its history the abbey has retained a unique position as a centre of the national life.

A. P. Stanley, Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey (1868; 5th edn., 1882); W. R. Lethaby, Westminster Abbey & the King's Craftsmen (1906); id., Westminster Abbey Re-examined (1925); H. F. Westlake, Westminster Abbey (2 vols., 1923); J. [H. T.] Perkins, Westminster Abbey: Its Worship and Ornaments (Alcuin Club Collections, 33, 34, and 38; 1938–52); E. [F.] Carpenter (ed.), A House of Kings: A History of Westminster Abbey (1966), with bibl.; J. Betjeman and others, Westminster Abbey, commissioned by W. Annenberg [1972]; C. Wilson and others, Westminster Abbey (New Bell's Cathedral Guides, 1986); Westminster Abbey Official Guide (1987). W. R. Lethaby, 'Medieval Paintings at Westminster', Proceedings of the British Academy, 13 (1927), pp. 123–51; S. E. Rigold, The Chapter House and the Pyx Chamber, Westminster Abbey (Department of the Environment Official Handbook, 1976); H. M. Colvin (ed), The History of the King's Works, 1 (1963), pp. 14–17 and 130–57, and 3 (pt. 1; 1975), pp. 210–22. Cf. also W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 265–330. E. Mason, '"The Site of King-Making and Consecration": Westminster Abbey and the Crown in the Eleventh and Twelfth Centuries', in D. Wood (ed.), The Church and Sovereignty c.590–1918: Essays in Honour of Michael Wilks (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 9; Oxford, 1991), pp. 57–76.

Westminster Assembly (1643). The synod appointed by the Long Parliament to reform the English Church. A bill passed on 15 Oct. 1642 convening a body of divines having failed to receive the Royal Assent, Parliament issued on 12 June 1643 an ordinance to the same effect. The conference consisted of 151 nominated members—30 lay assessors (named first) and 121 divines. Among the laymen were such notable persons as J. Pym, J. *Selden, Bulstrode Whitelock, and H. *Vane. The ecclesiastics were carefully selected from men of widely diverse views. They fell into four groups: (1) Episcopalians, a group of four bishops (R. Brownrigg of *Exeter, J. Prideaux of *Worcester, J. *Ussher of *Armagh, and T. Westfield of Bristol) and five DDs (D. Featley, H. *Hammond, R. Holdsworth, G. *Morley, and R. *Sanderson); (2) Presbyterians, much the largest group, which included E. *Calamy, E. *Reynolds (later Bp. of *Norwich), A. *Tuckney, W. Twisse, and R. *Vines; (3) a small group of Independents of disproportionate influence, through the favour of Oliver *Cromwell and the Army—among them were Thomas Goodwin and Philip Nye; and (4) Erastians such as J. *Lightfoot. Out of loyalty to the King the Episcopalians practically never attended the sessions. It should be noted that despite its importance in the history of the Presbyterian Churches, the Assembly was in no sense a creation of Presbyterianism, nor indeed a Church court at all.

It met originally on 1 July 1643 in the Henry VII Chapel of *Westminster Abbey. When the autumn weather set in, it moved to the Jerusalem Chamber, which was thereafter its regular meeting-place. After the adoption of the *Solemn League and Covenant (q.v.), it was increased by five clerical and three lay Commissioners from Scotland. Between 1 July 1643 and 22 Feb. 1649 it held 1163 sessions; but the last mention of the presence of the Scottish Commissioners is on 9 Nov. 1647. Under the Commonwealth meetings continued at very irregular intervals down to 1653, mainly for the trial of ministers. The Assembly was never formally dissolved.

The Assembly began by revising the *Thirty-Nine Articles. But the appearance of the Solemn League and Covenant led to the construction of a wholly new formula, the celebrated *Westminster Confession (q.v.). At the same time the Assembly prepared the Directory of Public *Worship (q.v.) and the two *Westminster Catechisms (q.v.). The proceedings were long delayed by violent controversies between Presbyterians and Independents over the Sacraments and the jurisdiction of Church courts, and between Presbyterians and Erastians over Church censures.

Although only partially and temporarily accepted in England, the documents issued were approved by the Church of Scotland and came into general use throughout the Presbyterian world. In the present constitution of the Church of Scotland they are expressly mentioned as subordinate standards.

A. F. Mitchell, The Westminster Assembly (1883); S. W. Carruthers, The Everyday Work of the Westminster Assembly (Philadelphia, 1943); J. H. Leith, Assembly at Westminster: Reformed Theology in the Making (Atlanta, 1973); R. S. Paul, The Assembly of the Lord: Politics and Religion in the Westminster Assembly and the 'Grand Debate' (Edinburgh, 1985).

Westminster Catechisms. The two Catechisms ('Larger' and 'Shorter') compiled by the *Westminster Assembly. They were completed in the autumn of 1647 and, with slight changes, approved by Parliament on 15 Sept. 1648. Meanwhile the Larger Catechism had been adopted by the General Assembly at Edinburgh on 20 July, the Shorter on 28 July.

The Larger Catechism, partly based on J. *Ussher's Body of Divinity (1645), was mainly the work of A. *Tuckney. It is in essence a popular restatement of the teaching of the *Westminster Confession. It suffers from being in places unnecessarily elaborate, e.g. in its specification of what is commanded and forbidden in the Ten Commandments.

The Shorter Catechism, which came to fill a much more important place in *Presbyterianism, was probably also largely the work of A. Tuckney, who was assisted by John Wallis. It opens with the well-known Question and Answer: 'What is the chief end of man?' 'Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy Him for ever.' Its didactic usefulness is increased by its method, since the answer always embodies the question and forms a sentence complete in itself. It has been in regular use among *Congregationalists and *Baptists as well as Presbyterians.

The Catechisms have often been repr. Convenient text in T. F. Torrance, The School of Faith: The Catechisms of the Reformed Church (1959), pp. 183–234 and 261–78. The Shorter, with Latin translation, is in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1882), pp. 676–704.

Westminster Cathedral. The cathedral of the RC Abp. of Westminster, dedicated to the *Precious Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ. The building was proposed in 1865, begun in 1895 under Card. H. *Vaughan and opened for his funeral in 1903. It was consecrated by Abp. (later Card.) Francis Bourne in 1910. Designed by J. F. Bentley (1839–1902) in early 'Christian-Byzantine style' and executed mainly in red brick, the principal features are the spaciousness of the nave, the massive *ciborium over the High Altar, the interior decoration of marble and mosaic (still incomplete), and the domed campanile, 284 ft. high.

W. de l'Hôpital, Westminster Cathedral and its Architect (2 vols., 1919). P. Doyle, Westminster Cathedral 1895 1995 (1995). Westminster Cathedral, ed. by the Administrator (1930); A Popular Guide to Westminster Cathedral (*Catholic Truth Society [1930]). Westminster Cathedral: Guide to the architecture and interior, the history and pastoral functions of the Metropolitan Cathedral of Westminster, with preface by J. Betjeman [1968]. See also Life of H. Vaughan (cited s.v.) and E. Oldmeadow, Francis Cardinal Bourne (2 vols., 1940–4), passim.

Westminster Confession. The profession of *Presbyterian faith set forth by the *Westminster Assembly. Originally the Assembly had been directed to revise the *Thirty-Nine Articles of the C of E in a Puritan direction and changes were made with the help of the *Lambeth Articles of 1595 and the *Irish Articles of 1615. But when Art. 15 was reached, the *Solemn League and Covenant appeared, presupposing uniformity of doctrine between England and Scotland, and under Scottish influence Parliament ordered the suspension of the revision on 12 Oct. 1643 and the framing of 'a Confession of Faith for the three Kingdoms, according to the Solemn League and Covenant'. The task was entrusted to a large commission; it took 27 months in all and was completed on 4 Dec. 1646. After revision it was finally approved by Parliament on 20 June 1648. Meanwhile the General Assembly at Edinburgh had ratified it on 27 Aug. 1647.

The Confession expounded in 33 chapters all the leading articles of the Christian Faith from the creation of the world to the last judgement. It taught emphatically the Calvinistic doctrine of election, though it recognized freedom of the will and 'the liberty or contingency of second causes' in the Divine decrees. It distinguished the two covenants, that of works made with *Adam and his posterity and that of grace made in Christ with believers, with its offer of free salvation on condition of faith. The distinction between the invisible and the visible Church was upheld. Great stress was laid on the identification of the Jewish Sabbath with the Christian Sunday (dies dominica) and the due observance of the Sabbath rest.

The Confession at once established itself as the definitive statement of Presbyterian doctrine in the English-speaking world. It exercised a deep influence on other groups of Calvinists. Several of the 17th-cent. *Baptist Confessions are simply adaptations of it.

S. W. Carruthers, The Westminster Confession of Faith: Being an Account of the Preparation and Printing of its Seven Leading Editions (Presbyterian Historical Society of England, Extra Publications, no. 2 [1937]), with crit. edn. of text, pp. 89–157. G. S. Hendry, The Westminster Confession Today: A Contemporary Interpretation (1960). A. I. C. Heron (ed.), The Westminster Confession in the Church Today (Edinburgh, 1982). Text, with Lat. vers., also pr. in H. B. Smith and P. Schaff (eds.), The Creeds of the Evangelical Protestant Churches (1887), pp. 598–673.

Westminster Directory. See WORSHIP, DIRECTORY OF PUBLIC.

Weston, Frank (1871–1924), Anglican Bp. of Zanzibar. After several years' work in slum parishes in England, he joined the *UMCA in 1898, and was appointed principal of St Andrew's Training College, Kiungani, in 1901. Here he learned to live among Africans as one of themselves, and to understand their point of view as few Englishmen have done. In 1908 he was consecrated to the see of Zanzibar. He is chiefly remembered for the occasions on which he figured in controversy. Of these the most notable were (1) the *Kikuyu Dispute (1913), and (2) his severance of relations with the Bp. of Hereford (J. *Percival) in 1915, after the appointment of B. H. *Streeter to a canonry at Hereford. In 1920 he largely inspired the appeal for Christian unity put out by the *Lambeth Conference, and in the same year appeared his protest against forced labour in Africa, entitled Serfs of Great Britain. In 1923 he presided at the Second Anglo-Catholic Congress, where his personality made a great impression. Of his writings the most important is The One Christ (1907), an expression of the *kenotic view of the Incarnation.

H. Maynard Smith, Frank, Bishop of Zanzibar (1926). B. C. Cross, 'The Christology of Frank Weston', JTS NS 21 (1970), pp. 73–90. H. M. Smith in DNB, 1922 1930, pp. 902 f.

Westphalia, Peace of (1648). The treaty terminating the *Thirty Years War. Strictly it was a pair of treaties concluded by the Empire on 24 Oct. 1648: the one with France at Münster in Westphalia and the other with Sweden and the Protestant states at Osnabrück. Besides many territorial decisions, the formula of the *Augsburg Peace of 1555, 'cuius regio eius religio', was accepted as the basis of ecclesiastical settlement. But it was modified in two important respects. First, full protection was accorded to all religious minorities already established in a given territory by 1 Jan. 1624, with the exception of those formerly in the Habsburg lands of Austria, Bohemia, and Moravia, and in the Bavarian Palatinate. Secondly, *Calvinists were now regarded as being comprehended within the *Augsburg Confession, and therefore within the new settlement. These terms infuriated Pope *Innocent X, but his protest ('Zelo Domus Dei', 20 Nov. 1648) proved ineffectual. While the Peace proved unable to arrest the gradual dissolution of the *Holy Roman Empire, some of its provisions were strikingly advanced, particularly that for separate discussion of ecclesiastical issues by Catholic and Protestant member states, with an associated constitutional right of veto.

Text of Treaty of Münster pr. in J. Dumont, Corps universel diplomatique du droit des gens, 6 (pt. 1; Amsterdam, 1738), pp. 450–61; of that of Osnabrück, ibid., pp. 469–90. Treaty of Münster also pr., with introd., in H. Vast, Les Grands Traités du règne de Louis XIV, 1 (1893), pp. 1–64. 'Zelo Domus Dei' pr. in the Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 15 (Turin, 1868), pp. 603–6. Eng. tr. of the religious clauses of the Peace and of 'Zelo Domus Dei' in S. Z. Ehler and J. B. Morall (eds.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 189–98. J. G. von Meiern (ed.), Acta Pacis Westphalicae Publica oder Westphälische Friedens-Handlungen und Geschichte (6 vols., Hanover, 1734–6, + Register, 1740). [J. Dumont (ed.)], Négociations secrètes touchant la paix de Munster et d'Osnaburg: ou Recueil général des préliminaires, instructions, lettres, mémoires etc. concernant ces négociations depuis leur commencement en 1642 jusqu'à leur conclusion en 1648 (4 vols., The Hague, 1725–6). Acta Pacis Westphalicae: Im Auftrage der Vereinigung zur Erforschung der Neueren Geschichte, ed. M. Braumbach and K. Repgen (Munich, 1962 ff.). F. [O.] Dickmann, Der Westfälische Frieden (Münster i.W., 1959). See also works cited under THIRTY YEARS WAR.

westward position. The practice of the celebrant of the Eucharist standing on the far side of the altar and facing the people (i.e. normally facing westward) appears to have been customary in ancient Roman churches. From about the 8th or 9th cent. the *eastward position was increasingly adopted in the Roman rite. Since *c.*1947 the westward position has been gradually restored in the RC Church, and an Instruction of the Sacred Congregation of *Rites of 26 Sept. 1964 enjoined that altars should be free-standing in order that the celebrant might be able to face the people. The westward position is also used in many C of E churches.

Wetstein, J. J. See WETTSTEIN, J. J.

Wette, W. M. L. de. See DE WETTE, W. M. L.

Wettstein, Johann Jakob (1693–1754), NT critic. A native of Basle, where he became a Protestant pastor, he was twice removed from his office on the charge of *Socinianism. From 1733 onwards he was professor at Amsterdam. His edition of the Greek NT (2 vols., 1751–2), which marked a great advance on its predecessors, included in the critical apparatus innumerable important variants, hitherto unrecorded, and also the sigla for denoting the MSS since then in common use. On a visit to England in search of MSS in 1716, he made the acquaintance of R. *Bentley, who gave him considerable encouragement, though a rupture occurred between them a few years later.

C. L. Hulbert-Powell, John James Wettstein (CHS [1938]).

Weymouth New Testament. An English version of the NT, published in 1903 under the title The New Testament in Modern Speech. It was the work of R. F. Weymouth (1822–1902), a *Baptist who was for several years headmaster of Mill Hill School. Besides the translation, each book is provided with a short introduction, and there are footnotes to the text.

Wharton, Henry (1664–95), English medievalist. A native of Worstead in Norfolk, he was educated at Caius College, Cambridge. In 1686–7 he assisted W. *Cave in the compilation of his Historia Literaria, and in 1688 he published several controversial writings, including A Treatise on the Celibacy of the Clergy, as well as an edition of R. *Pecock's 'Book of Faith'. In the same year he became domestic chaplain to Abp. W. *Sancroft and began work on a catalogue of the MSS in *Lambeth Palace. His decision to take the oaths in 1689 antagonized some *Nonjurors, but did not disrupt his association with Sancroft, who entrusted him with the 'History', 'Diary' and other remains of W. *Laud when he died in 1694. Meanwhile, Wharton's greatest work, the Anglia Sacra, had been published in two volumes in 1691. Still indispensable for medieval studies, it provided the first comprehensive collection of sources for the pre-Reformation history of the English sees whose cathedrals were served by *regular clergy. The first volume deals with the dioceses and gives editions of medieval chronicles; the second is chiefly a collection of texts bearing on the lives of English bishops. In it are printed for the first time various important texts, such as *William of Malmesbury's 'Life of St *Wulfstan' and *John of Salisbury's 'Life of St Aidan'. Editorial abridgements and errors of transcription restrict the value of the work in parts, but they do not detract from its pioneering importance. It was, however, severely criticized by G. *Burnet, who also did much to obstruct Wharton's later search for preferment. A third volume, intended to deal with cathedrals served by the *secular clergy, was only partly finished and published, incomplete, in 1695.

Fourteen Sermons preached . . . before William Sancroft . . . in the Years MDCLXXXVIII, MDCLXXXIX (1697), with Life of the author (no pagination); One and Twenty Sermons Preached . . . in the years MDCLXXXIX, MDCXC (1698). 'Excerpta ex Vita MS. Henrici Whartoni, A. M., a seipso scripta' pr. in G. D'Oyly, The Life of William Sancroft, 2 (1821), pp. 103–74. D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), ch. 7, pp. 175–96; 2nd edn. (1951), pp. 139–55. W. H. *Hutton in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 404–7.

Whately, Richard (1787–1863), Anglican Abp. of *Dublin. Educated at Oriel College, Oxford, he became successively Fellow of Oriel (1811), vicar of Halesworth (1822), principal of St Alban Hall, Oxford (1825), Drummond professor of political economy at Oxford (1829), and Abp. of Dublin (1831). He was one of the best known of the '*Noetics', an anti-*Erastian, and an anti-*Evangelical; and almost certainly the author of Letters on the Church by an Episcopalian (1826). This had considerable influence on J. H. *Newman, for a time Whately's vice-principal at St Alban Hall, whom he asked to assist him in the preparatory work for his Elements of Logic (1826), over many generations a standard textbook for students. Later Whately became a vigorous opponent of the *Tractarians. Among his other writings were his Historic Doubts relative to Napoleon Buonaparte (1819), an attempted reductio ad absurdum of the principles of D. *Hume; his Elements of Rhetoric (1828); and his Introductory Lectures on Political Economy (1831–2). As Abp. of Dublin he took an active part in the religious and political life of *Ireland, and did valuable work as a Commissioner of National Education. It was on his advice that Lord John Russell nominated R. D. *Hampden (q.v.) to the Regius Professorship of Divinity at Oxford.

E. J. Whately (daughter; ed.), Miscellaneous Remains from the Commonplace Book of Richard Whately (1864). Id., Life and Correspondence of Richard Whately (2 vols., 1866). His Historic Doubts Relative to Napoleon Buonaparte ed., with crit. introd. and notes by R. S. Pomeroy (1985). W. J. Fitzpatrick, Memoirs of Richard Whately . . . with a Glance at his Contemporaries and Times (2 vols., 1864). J. M. Rigg in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 423–9.

Wheatly, Charles (1686–1724), English divine. Educated at St John's College, Oxford, of which he was a Fellow from 1707 to 1713, he was *lecturer at two London churches and from 1726 until his death vicar of Brent Pelham with Furneaux Pelham in Herts. In 1733–4 he delivered the Moyer Lectures, pub. in 1738 as The Nicene and Athanasian Creeds, and in 1739 he preached one of the earliest sermons against the rise of *Methodism. He is best remembered for his commentary on the BCP, The Church of England Man's Companion, or a Rational Illustration . . . of the Book of Common Prayer (1710; from the 3rd edn., in 1720, entitled A Rational Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer), which remained a standard work until the mid-19th cent. It shows his *High Church sympathy with the liturgical preferences of *Nonjurors such as T. *Brett.

Fifty Sermons on Several Subjects and Occasions (3 vols., London, 1746), with preface by J. Berriman in vol. 1 (no pagination); his A Rational Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, ed., with notes, by G. E. Corrie (Cambridge, 1858). E. I. Carlyle in DNB 60 (1899), p. 435.

Whichcote, Benjamin (1609–83), Provost of King's College, Cambridge. A native of Stoke, Salop, he entered Emmanuel College, Cambridge, in 1628, becoming Fellow in 1633 and tutor in 1634. Ordained both deacon and priest on 5 March 1637, he was appointed Sunday afternoon preacher at Trinity Church, Cambridge, where his preaching met with immediate success. On his marriage (1643) he retired to a college living at North Cadbury, Somerset. The following year, as a result of the Parliamentary reform of the University, he returned as Provost of King's College, but alone among the newly appointed heads of houses avoided subscribing to the *National Covenant. Vice-Chancellor for 1650–1, in 1655 he advised O. *Cromwell on the question of toleration of the Jews. At the *Restoration he was ejected by royal command, but was restored to favour in 1662 on accepting the Act of *Uniformity. From 1662 he held the cure of St Anne's, Blackfriars, until the church was burnt in 1666. In 1668 he was appointed vicar of St Lawrence Jewry; while the church was being rebuilt he preached frequently before the Corporation of London in the Guildhall Chapel.

Whichcote was one of the leading *Cambridge Platonists (q.v.). A sermon preached at the Commencement of 1650 involved him in a controversy with his old tutor and friend, A. *Tuckney. Averse to the pessimistic view of human nature prevalent among the *Puritans, he exalted man as a child of reason. He saw in reason the test of Scripture, maintained that some matters on which good men disagreed were insoluble, and pleaded for freedom of thought; and he was charged at different times with *Latitudinarianism, *Arminianism, and *Socinianism. His works, nearly all posthumous, include Θεοφορούμενα Δόγματα, or Some Select Notions of B. Whichcote (1685), Select Sermons (with preface by the third Earl of Shaftesbury, 1689), Several Discourses (ed. J. Jeffery, 1701), and Moral and Religious Aphorisms (ed. J. Jeffery, 1703).

Works (4 vols., Aberdeen, 1751), with short Life in vol. 1, pp. i–viii; selections from his Select Sermons and Aphorisms in E. T. Campagnac (ed.), The Cambridge Platonists (1901), pp. 1–75, with introd., pp. ix–xxvii; his Moral and Religious Aphorisms, ed. S. Salter (London, 1753), with 'Eight Letters of Dr. Anthony Tuckney and Dr. Benjamin Whichcote' appended (separate pagination), with introd. preface, pp. i–xl; Aphorisms repr. (London, 1930), with introd. by W. R. *Inge, pp. iii–x. B. F. *Westcott, 'Benjamin Whichcote', in A. Barry (ed.), Masters in English Theology (1877), pp. 147–73. J. D. Roberts, From Puritanism to Platonism in Seventeenth Century England (The Hague, 1968). J. B. Mullinger in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 1–3. See also other works cited under CAMBRIDGE PLATONISTS.

Whiston, William (1667–1752), mathematician and theologian. Educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, he was appointed chaplain to J. Moore, Bp. of *Norwich (1696), and vicar of Lowestoft (1698). In 1703 he succeeded I. *Newton as Lucasian professor of mathematics at Cambridge. His Arianizing views, however, caused him to be expelled from the university in 1710, and in 1747 he finally deserted the C of E and joined the *General Baptists. He wrote a large number of treatises, many of them of a startlingly paradoxical kind, which include his New Theory of the Earth (1696), Accomplishment of Scripture Prophecies (1708; in which he affirms that all prophecies have but one meaning), Primitive Christianity Revived (4 vols., 1711), *Life of Samuel Clarke (1730), and Primitive New Testament (1745). He is best remembered now by his translation of *Josephus, with many useful notes and dissertations (1737; very often reprinted).

The principal sources for his life are the Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Mr. William Whiston . . . written by himself (1733) and his An Account of the Convocation's Proceedings with Relation to Mr. Whiston (1711). J. E. Force, William Whiston, Honest Newtonian (Cambridge, 1985). L. Stephen in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 10–14, s.v.; G. Crosse in DECH (1912), pp. 629 f.

Whitaker, William (1547/8–95), *Puritan divine. A nephew of A. *Nowell, he was educated at St Paul's School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where in 1571 he was elected to a Major Fellowship. In 1580 he became Regius professor of divinity and in 1586 master of St John's College. A strict *Calvinist, he exercised a wide influence by his devotion to learning and his impartiality. A strong anti-Romanist, he held that the Pope was *Antichrist and attacked the writings of R. *Bellarmine and T. *Stapleton. In the last year of his life he was mainly responsible for drafting the *Lambeth Articles, though at one or two points J. *Whitgift softened the extreme Calvinism of Whitaker's original text. His writings include Greek versions of the BCP (1569) and of Nowell's Larger Catechism (1573).

Opera Theologica (2 vols., Geneva, 1610), with Life [by A. Assheton] in vol. 1, pp. 698–704. A Disputation on Holy Scripture against the Papists, also ed. W. Fitzgerald (*Parker Society, 1849). H. C. Porter, Reformation and Reaction in Tudor Cambridge (Cambridge, 1958), esp. pp. 183–203, 314–22, and 364–75; P. [G.] Lake, Moderate Puritans and the Elizabethan Church (ibid., 1982), esp. pp. 93–115 and 169–218. J. B. Mullinger in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 21–3.

Whitby, Synod of (664), a council held by King Oswiu of Northumbria in order to establish unity of practice in the date of observing *Easter (see PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES) and the style of *tonsure within his territory, where diversity had hitherto been accepted. Oswiu had grown up in N. Ireland and followed the *Celtic practice, as did his bishop, St *Colman; his queen Eanfleda, who had been brought up in Kent, and their son Alhfrith followed the Roman practice. Colman spoke in defence of the Celtic custom; the Roman view, represented by Bp. Agilbert, a Frank who had studied in S. Ireland and was in 664 bishop among the West Saxons, was put forward by his English disciple, the young St *Wilfrid. *Bede represents the debate as between the custom of St *John, founded on Mosaic law, and the authority of St *Peter. The king decided to follow Peter as being keeper of the keys of Heaven; Northumbria adopted the Roman practice, and those clergy who would not change withdrew to *Iona and later to Ireland. Colman's place was taken by Tuda, an Englishman trained in Roman practice in S. Ireland.

Bede made this council the turning-point of his history: until 664 Christianity came to the English through different traditions; from 664 the trend is towards unity and orthodoxy. Since the 17th cent. English historians have treated this synod as if it were a national decision against Ireland and for Rome, but this view misrepresents the state of affairs in both countries. Bede indicated only one sign of influence beyond Northumbria: St *Cedd, a Northumbrian who was bishop among the East Saxons, attended the council, was persuaded to adopt the Roman practice, and took this view back to Essex.

The principal sources are Bede, HE 3. 25 (cf. comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, Oxford, 1988, pp. 124–9 and 235 f.; also p. xxiii), and Stephanus' Life of St Wilfrid, 10, ed., with Eng. tr., B. Colgrave (Cambridge, 1927), pp. 20–3, and notes pp. 156–8. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 193–200. J. L. G. Meissner, The Celtic Church in England after the Synod of Whitby (1929), pp. 7–18 (ch. 2, 'The Synod of Whitby and its Immediate Results'). P. Grosjean, SJ, 'La Date du Colloque de Whitby', Anal. Boll. 78 (1960), pp. 233–74. H. Mayr-Harting, The Coming of Christianity to Anglo-Saxon England (1972), pp. 103–113. P. Hunter Blair, 'Whitby as a Centre of Learning in the Seventh Century', in M. Lapidge and H. Gneuss (eds.), Learning and Literature in Anglo-Saxon England: Studies presented to Peter Clemoes (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 3–32, esp. pp. 14–22. See also works cited under PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

Whitby, Daniel (1638–1726), English divine. Educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1664, he was appointed in 1668 to a prebendal stall at *Salisbury, and in 1669 became rector of St Edmund's church in that city. He gained notoriety for his hostility to Popery, for his desire for reconciliation with the Nonconformists, and for his provocative writings, the best-known of which were The Protestant Reconciler (1682; subsequently publicly burnt at Oxford) and Last Thoughts (1727). This last showed that Whitby was a *Unitarian in his later years. His most considerable work was a Paraphrase and Commentary on the NT (2 vols., 1703). He also wrote in defence of B. *Hoadly in the *Bangorian Controversy.

Extracts from Whitby's writings in P. E. More and F. L. Cross (eds.), Anglicanism (1935), nos. 57, 95, 118, 294, pp. 116 f., 221 f., 270–2, and 634 f. A. A. Sykes, 'A Short Account of Dr. Whitby. To which is Added, A Catalogue of his Works', prefixed to 2nd edn. of Whitby's Last Thoughts (1728), pp. i–xvi. A. Gordon in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 28–30, s.v., with refs.

Whitchurch, Edward (d. 1561), *Protestant printer. A citizen of London, he became a warm adherent of the Reformed doctrines and in 1537 associated himself with R. *Grafton (q.v.) for circulating *Matthew's Bible (printed at Antwerp). In 1538 he and Grafton gave M. *Coverdale financial assistance in printing his NT at Paris and in 1539 published the *Great Bible at Greyfriars House in London. Seven editions had appeared by 1541, some copies bearing Whitchurch's, others Grafton's, name. In 1543, with six other printers, they were imprisoned for Protestantism, but released four weeks later. In the last years of *Henry VIII's reign they continued to print religious books such as *Primers. Under *Edward VI Whitchurch printed both the First (1549) and Second (1552) Prayer Books. He was one of a consortium of printers who helped Abp. T. *Cranmer's family after his arrest in 1553, and he married his widow.

E. G. Duff, A Century of the English Book Trade (1905), p. 169, s.v. H. R. Plomer, A Short History of English Printing, 1476–1900 (1915), pp. 57–9. L. E. Osborne, 'The Whitchurch compartment in London and Mexico', The Library, 4th ser. 8 (1928), pp. 301–11. S. Lee in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 30 f., s.v. See also bibl. under GRAFTON, R., and GREAT BIBLE.

White Fathers (Fr. Pères Blancs). The Society of Missionaries of Africa was founded by C.-M. A.-*Lavigerie at Algiers in 1868. It is composed of secular priests and coadjutor brothers living in community without vows, but bound by solemn oath to lifelong work in the African mission and obedience to their superiors. They wear a white tunic and a cloak or burnous with a rosary round the neck. Their constitutions were approved by the Holy See in 1885 and confirmed in 1908. The White Fathers devote themselves to a thorough four years' preparation of the Africans for Baptism and to the subsequent training of converts for trades, agriculture, missionary work, and for the priesthood. They began their missions in Algeria and Tunisia but soon extended them into the interior of W., Central, and E. Africa, often meeting with violent opposition. Apart from their missionary achievements the White Fathers have done much for the abolition of slavery, for the improvement of agriculture, and for the scientific exploration of Africa. They remain the most numerous group of RC missionaries at work in Africa. See also WHITE SISTERS.

T. Frey, Die Gesellschaft der Missionare von Afrika in ihrem 50-jähr. Bestehen (Trier, 1918). J. Bouniol, WF, The White Fathers and their Missions ([1929]; based on T. Frey, op. cit.). La Société des Missionnaires d'Afrique (Pères Blancs) (Les Ordres religieux; 1924); P. Lesourd, Les Pères Blancs du Cardinal Lavigerie (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et instituts religieux; 1935); D. Attwater, The White Fathers in Africa (1937); G. D. Kittler, The White Fathers (1957). R. Heremans, L'Éducation dans les Missions des Pères Blancs en Afrique Centrale (1879–1914) (Université Catholique de Louvain. Recueil travaux d'histoire et de philologie, sér. 6, fasc. 26; 1983). L. Volker in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 894 f., s.v.; J. Casier, WF, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1430–7, s.v. 'Missionari d'Africa'. See also bibl. to LAVIGERIE, C.-M. A.-, and WEST AFRICA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

White Friars. The *Carmelite friars, so called from their white cloaks and *scapulars. The term has been applied, less accurately, to the *Premonstratensians or White Canons.

White Ladies. A name popularly given to the following religious orders, from their white habits: (1) The Sisters of the Presentation of Mary, a teaching order founded at Theuyts, Ardèche, in France in 1796, by Marie Rivier, for the education of young girls. The mother-house is at Saint-Andéol, Ardèche. Since 1853 they have been established also in Canada. (2) The *Magdalens (q.v.). (3) In medieval England the *Cistercian nuns, the designation still surviving here and there in the place-name 'White-ladies'.

White Monks. The *Cistercian monks, so named from the colour of their habit, which was of undyed wool.

White Sisters. (1) The Congregation of the Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa was founded by C.-M. A. *Lavigerie in 1869 to work alongside the *White Fathers (q.v.) and was recognized by the Pope in 1909. They have simple perpetual vows, no lay sisters, and devote themselves to teaching, nursing, and pastoral work in urban areas. They have been instrumental in setting up 18 congregations of African sisters and in training them for pastoral work.

(2) The Congregation of the Daughters of the Holy Ghost, usually called the White Sisters from their white habit, was founded in 1706 at Plérin in Brittany, moving to St-Brieuc in 1834. Its chief objects are education and nursing. The Congregation spread rapidly, esp. during the 19th cent., but the Sisters were driven from many of their houses in France by the legislation of 1902. They established convents in Belgium, England, and the USA. From 1936–51 they worked in Manchuria and since then have set up missions in Cameroon, Nigeria, and Chile.

(1) Heimbucher, 2, pp. 630–2, with bibl. G. Rocca, SSP, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1580 f., s.v. 'Missionarie di Nostra Signora d'Africa'. See also works cited s.v. WHITE FATHERS.

(2) C. Lemercier, Notice sur la congrégation des Filles du Saint-Esprit, 1706–1850 (Saint-Brieuc, 1888). A. du Bois de la Villerable, Dom Jean Leuduger, fondateur de la Congrégation des Filles du Saint-Esprit (2nd edn., ibid., 1924). R. Aubert in DHGE 17 (1971), cols. 106–8, s.v. 'Filles du Saint-Esprit'.

White, Francis (*c.*1564–1638), Bp. of *Ely. Educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, he was ordained priest in 1588, and after filling several livings was appointed Dean of *Carlisle in 1622. He became bishop successively of Carlisle (1626), *Norwich (1629), and Ely (1631). As a noted *Arminian, he licensed R. *Montagu's Appello Caesarem for printing in 1625, and in the following year attacked *Calvinist teaching at the York House conference. He was also a prominent anti-Papist disputant. In 1617 he published The Orthodox Faith and Way to the Church (1617), in answer to a RC treatise entitled White dyed Black, and in 1622 he was engaged by *James I to support W. *Laud in presenting the Anglican case in a formal dispute with the Jesuit, 'John *Fisher'. His final works, A Treatise of the Sabbath Day (1635), dedicated to Laud, and An Examination and Confutation of . . . a Briefe Answer to a late Treatise of the Sabbath Day (1637; the unnamed author of the Brief Answer was Richard Byfield, *c.*1598–1664) were both written to refute the *Sabbatarian tendencies of his time.

Extracts from White's works repr. in P. E. More and F. L. Cross (eds.), Anglicanism (1935), pp. 8 f., 46, 58 f., 132–4, 415, 437, 441 f., 514 f., 559, 573 f., 634. N. [R. N.] Tyacke, Anti-Calvinists: The Rise of English Arminianism c.1590–1640 (Oxford, 1987), pp. 108, 151, 159, 171 f., and 174–80. A. Gordon in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 34 f., s.v., with refs.

White, John (1867–1951), Scottish Church leader. He was minister of Shettleston, Glasgow (1893–1904), South Leith (1904–11), and The Barony of Glasgow (1911–51). An original member from the Church of *Scotland of the committee appointed in 1909 to negotiate a possible union between the Church of Scotland, which was by law established, and the *United Free Church of Scotland, which was a recent union of those who had at various times dissented from *Establishment, he became acknowledged by both sides as the dominant leader of the movement which led to the union of 1929. To achieve the union he was instrumental in promoting legislation in Parliament which by two Acts (1921 and 1925) preserved the status of the Church of Scotland as the national Church but gave it freedom to govern its own affairs, both spiritual and temporal, independently of Parliament and the courts. He had been *Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1925 and was unanimously chosen to be Moderator of the first General Assembly of the united Church. A forceful evangelical preacher, who appreciated the value of a pastoral ministry, he gave a strong lead after the union to Church Extension with the aim of placing a church in each new housing area. He was made a Companion of Honour in 1936.

A. Muir, John White (1958).

White, Joseph Blanco (1775–1841), theological writer. Born in Seville of an Irish RC family, he was ordained to the priesthood in 1800; but, becoming troubled by religious doubts, he came to England in 1810 and later became an Anglican. For a time he was attached to Oriel College, Oxford, where he became intimate with R. *Whately and was well known among the *Tractarians. Later he was again afflicted with doubts and, under the influence of J. *Martineau, became a *Unitarian. His writings include the Letters from Spain (1822), Practical and Internal Evidence against Catholicism (1825), and Second Travels of an Irish Gentleman in Search of a Religion (1833), and the sonnet 'Night and Death'.

Spanish translation of selections from his works, with introd. and extensive bibl., by V. Llorens (Barcelona, 1971). J. H. Thom, The Life of the Rev. J. B. White (3 vols., 1845). Modern study by M. Murphy (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1989).

White, William Hale. The real name of 'Mark *Rutherford' (q.v.).

Whitefield, George (1714–70), *Methodist evangelist. Born at *Gloucester of humble parentage, in 1732 he became a servitor at Pembroke, College, Oxford, where he came under the influence of John and Charles *Wesley. Ordained deacon in 1736, he followed the Wesleys to Georgia in 1738. He returned to England later the same year to obtain priest's orders and collect money to establish an orphanage in Georgia. His spectacular preaching (esp. at open-air meetings from early 1739) attracted a remarkable response in S. Wales and Scotland, as well as in England, despite opposition from ecclesiastical authority. His Journal, of which the first part was published in 1738, caused much scandal on account of its morbid asceticism and assertions of Divine guidance. In 1741 his *Calvinist theology led him to break with the Wesleys and build a 'Tabernacle' in Moorfields, London. His loose *Calvinistic Methodist Connexion, mostly in southern England, with regular 'Association' meetings from 1743, was overseen mainly by others (notably Howel *Harris), since Whitefield himself was determined to act as an 'Awakener' to all the Churches. Consequently his followers were scattered after his death, most joining the *Congregationalists. From 1749, under Lady *Huntingdon's patronage, he gained a hearing from the aristocracy. He made many visits to the *United States of America, where he helped to stimulate the *Great Awakening. He died in Massachusetts on 30 Sept. 1770. He was the most striking orator of the Evangelical Revival and his influence in awakening the religious conscience of the 18th cent. went deep.

Works pr. in 6 vols. (London, 1771–2), with Life by J. Gillies; Life also issued separately (ibid., 1772). Vol. 1 of letters (from 1734–42) repr., with additions (Edinburgh, 1976). The fullest edn. of his Journals (covering 1737–41 and 1744–5, with A Short Account and Further account of God's Dealings with George Whitefield, which give his autobiog. 1714–37) is that of I. Murray (Edinburgh, 1960). His sermons have frequently been repr. Studies by R. Philip (London, 1837), J. P. Gledstone (ibid., 1871), L. Tyerman (2 vols., ibid., 1876–7), A. D. Belden (ibid. [1930]), S. C. Henry (New York [1957]), O. Riecker (Wuppertal, 1962), and A. A. Dallimore (2 vols., London, 1970–80). J. [C.] Pollock, George Whitefield and the Great Awakening (New York, 1972; London, 1973). H. S. Stout, The Divine Dramatist: George Whitefield and the Rise of Modern Evangelicalism (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1991]). R. Austin, 'Bibliography of the Works of George Whitefield', Proceedings of the Wesley Historical Society, 10 (1916), pp. 169–84 and 211–23. A. Gordon in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 85–92. See also works cited s.v. CALVINISTIC METHODISTS.

Whitgift, John (prob. 1532–1604), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Queens' College and Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, he was elected a Fellow of Peterhouse in 1555 (like M. *Parker, he was not a Marian exile); he was ordained in 1560, and became later Lady Margaret (1563) and Regius (1567) professor of divinity, master of Trinity College (1567), Vice-Chancellor (1570), Dean of *Lincoln (1571), and Bp. of *Worcester (1577). His opposition as master of Trinity and Regius professor to the *Puritan, T. *Cartwright, had brought him to the notice of *Elizabeth I, who in 1583 nominated him Abp. of Canterbury in succession to the Puritan, E. *Grindal. His desire for a strong and unified C of E, impervious alike to Papal and extreme Puritan influence, was reflected in the 'Eleven Articles' which he issued in 1583, requiring subscription (Article 6) to three further articles of loyalty to the existing settlement. In repressing Puritanism (*Marprelate Tracts, etc.) he made great use of the Ecclesiastical Commission, summoning before it suspects for interrogation on oath ex officio mero. This form of oath left no right to refuse to answer incriminating questions. Whitgift also vigorously opposed the attempt of the extreme Puritans in 1584–89 to impose upon the Church a Presbyterian form of government. A determined advocate of episcopacy and ritual uniformity, he was theologically a *Calvinist (*Lambeth Articles of 1595). In his later years he concerned himself with various administrative reforms, e.g. fostering learning among the clergy, abolishing non-residence, and reforming the ecclesiastical courts. He is commemorated by the Whitgift schools and almshouses at Croydon, which he founded and endowed.

Works ed. J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 3 vols., 1851–3). Early Life by G. Paule, Controller of his Household (London, 1612). The fullest source, however, is the Life by J. *Strype (ibid., 1718; new edn., 3 vols., Oxford, 1822). P. M. Dawley, John Whitgift and the Reformation (Hale Lectures; New York, 1954; London, 1955); V. J. K. Brook, Whitgift and the English Church (1957). J. F. H. New, 'The Whitgift–Cartwright Controversy', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 59 (1968), pp. 203–11. [J. E.] C. Hill, Economic Problems of the Church from Archbishop Whitgift to the Long Parliament (Oxford, 1956), passim. P. [G.] Lake, Anglicans and Puritans? Presbyterianism and English Conformist Thought from Whitgift to Hooker (1988), esp. pp. 1–87. S. Lee in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 129–37.

Whitsunday. The feast of the descent of the Holy Spirit upon the Apostles on the 50th day after Easter (see PENTECOST). It ranks, after *Easter, as the second greatest festival in the Church. Its celebration at *Jerusalem in the late 4th cent. is described in the 'Peregrinatio *Egeriae'. In the W. the vigil of Pentecost soon became a secondary date for Baptisms with a ceremony closely resembling that of the *Paschal Vigil Service, except for the omission of the blessing of the New Fire and the candle, and the association of the vigil of Pentecost with Baptism survived in the RC Church until 1955. The word 'Whitsunday' is said to derive from the white robes worn by the newly baptized on that day. That the feast was kept with an *octave from early times is shown by the *Gelasian and *Gregorian Sacramentaries, though the following Sunday was never reckoned as the octave day, and in the Roman rite the whole octave was dropped in 1969. In the BCP the Monday and Tuesday after Whitsunday are '*Red Letter Days' and the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday are *Ember Days, but these provisions have largely disappeared from modern Anglican liturgies. The liturgical colour is red. In the RC Church the Sundays between Whitsunday and Advent were until 1969 reckoned as 'Sundays after Pentecost'; in the E. the Sundays outside the period of Lent–Eastertide are still so reckoned. In the E. Church, however, the feast itself is kept as that of the Holy Trinity, the Monday following being designated that of the Holy Spirit, and the Tuesday the 'third day of the Trinity'. Vespers on Whitsunday evening is a long service at which kneeling is introduced after being forbidden throughout the 50 days of Eastertide in accordance with the First Council of *Nicaea (can. 20). For current divisions of the ecclesiastical year, see YEAR, LITURGICAL.

R. Cabié, La Pentecôte: L'Évolution de la cinquantaine pascale au cours des cinq premiers siècles [1965]. J. [T. A.] Gunstone, The Feast of Pentecost (Studies in Christian Worship, 8; 1967), esp. pp. 48–56. E. Venables in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 1618 f., s.v. 'Pentecost'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 260–74, s.v. 'Pentecôte'; R. Cabié in LW 2 (1968), cols. 2196–204, s.v. 'Pinksteren', with extensive bibl.

Whittier, John Greenleaf (1807–92), American *Quaker poet. After working as a journalist until he was about 25, he became the poet-seer of the Anti-Slavery Movement, writing many poems and pamphlets in the cause of liberation, and suffering from mob-violence and political hate. His fervent Christianity, which shone through all his work, was esp. evident in many of his poems, verses from which have become well known as hymns, among them 'Dear Lord and Father of mankind', 'Immortal love, for ever full', and 'O Brother Man'.

Collected edn. of his Works, 7 vols., London, 1888–9; Poetical Works also pub. Cambridge, Mass., 1895, with biog. sketch by H. E. S[cudder], pp. xi–xix, and ed. W. G. Horder, London, 1892; 2nd edn., ibid., 1904. Selected Poems (World's Classics, 1913). Letters, ed. J. B. Pickard (3 vols., Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1975). S. T. Pickard, Life and Letters of John Greenleaf Whittier (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1894; London, 1895). Other studies by F. H. Underwood (Boston, 1884), G. K. Lewis (London [1913]), A. Mordell (Boston, 1933), E. Wagenknecht (New York, 1967), and R. H. Woodwell (Haverhill, Mass., 1985). Bibl. by T. F. Currier (Cambridge, Mass., 1937).

Whittingham, William (*c.*1524–79), Dean of *Durham. Educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1545 and two years later moved to Christ Church. His *Calvinistic views having forced him to flee from England in *Mary's reign, he took a leading part in the organization of the English congregation at Frankfurt, where he supported J. *Knox against R. *Cox, and, on Knox's defeat, followed him to Geneva. Here he succeeded him as minister in 1559, although he had apparently received no ordination of any kind. Returning to England in the following year, he was made Dean of Durham in 1563. His iconoclasm and repeated failures to conform to the BCP led eventually to an attempt by E. *Sandys, Abp. of *York, to deprive him on the ground that he had not been validly ordained, but he died before the proceedings were concluded. His chief literary work was in the field of biblical translation. In 1557 he published at Geneva an English version of the NT and he also took a leading part in the production of the *Geneva Bible, remaining behind to supervise its completion when most of the translators returned to England on Mary's death. He also rendered into metre a number of Psalms, the Lord's Prayer, and the Decalogue. He was long thought to be the author of A Brief Discourse of the Troubles begun at Frankfort . . . Anno Domini 1554 (1574).

Modern edn. of A Brief Discourse of the Troubles at Frankfort, by E. Arber ('A Christian Library', 1; 1907). Contemporary Life ed. from MS by A. *Wood in *Bodleian Library, Oxford (MS Wood E 64, Art. 5) by M. A. Everett Green in The Camden Miscellany, 6 (1871), pp. 1–40, with other relevant material, pp. 41–6. J. H. Colligan, The Honourable William Whittingham of Chester (?1524–1579) (1934). Brief notes on the question of his ordination in E. Denny, The English Church and the Ministry of the Reformed Churches (*Church Historical Society, Tract 57; 1900). pp. 59–62, with refs. P. Collinson, 'The Authorship of A Brieff Discours off the Troubles Begonne at Franckford', JEH 9 (1958), pp. 188–208, repr. in id., Godly People: Essays on English Protestantism and Puritanism [1983], pp. 191–211. A. F. Pollard in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 150–3. BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 625 f.

Whole Duty of Man, The. This devotional manual, first published *c.*1658 and formerly very widely used, contains 17 discourses, mainly on matters of Christian morals, 'one whereof being read every Lord's Day, the whole may be read over thrice in the year'. The identity of the author is not known with certainty, but among those to whom it has been ascribed are H. *Hammond (who certainly contributed the prefatory letter signed 'H. H.'), J. *Fell, and (with most probability) R. *Allestree. Its moral standards are exacting, though adapted to life in the world.

E. Elmen, 'Richard Allestree and The Whole Duty of Man', The Library, 5th ser. 6 (1951), pp. 19–27. C. J. Stranks, Anglican Devotion (1961), pp. 123–48.

Whyte, Alexander (1836–1921), Scottish *Evangelical. Minister of the *Free (later *United Free) Church of Scotland church of St George's, Edinburgh (1870–1916) and principal of New College, Edinburgh (1909–18), he was generally regarded as the finest preacher of late-Victorian Scotland. *Calvinist in his theology, and *Puritan in his piety, he was irenic and open-minded; he influenced many by the welcome he gave both to the biblical criticism of W. R. *Smith and the beginning of the *Ecumenical Movement in the *Edinburgh Conference of 1910. His writings include Bible Characters (6 vols., 1896–1902) and Thirteen Appreciations [1914], a collection of earlier studies on St *Teresa of Ávila (1897), W. *Law (1893), J. H. *Newman (1901), and others.

G. F. Barbour, The Life of Alexander Whyte (1923).

Wichern, Johann Hinrich (1808–81), founder of the German *Innere Mission. A native of Hamburg, he studied theology at Göttingen and Berlin, where he came under the influence of J. A. W. *Neander and F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. After his return to Hamburg he was deeply moved by the neglect from which the children suffered in the poor quarters of the city, and in 1833 founded an institute, the Rauhes Haus, based on the principle of family education, to provide for their spiritual and material needs. Under Wichern's powerful personality and educational gifts the house soon began to expand, and in 1842 he established a training-house of helpers. From 1844 he edited a periodical, Die Fliegenden Blätter aus dem Rauhen Hause, which became the central organ of all charitable undertakings in the German Protestant Churches. At his suggestion all these activities were co-ordinated in the central organization of the Innere Mission at the first congress of the Evangelical Churches (Erster evangelischer Kirchentag) at *Wittenberg in 1848. In 1857 he was entrusted with the Prussian prison reform, and in 1858 he founded the Johannisstift at Spandau, nr. Berlin, on the model of the Rauhes Haus. In the wars of 1864, 1866, and 1870–1 he and his 'Brothers' organized a service of assistance to the wounded, the Felddiakonie. In 1872 Wichern returned to the Rauhes Haus, where his last years were spent in illness.

Collected writings ed. J. Wichern (son) and F. Mahling (6 vols., Hamburg, 1901–8); also ed. P. Meinhold (5 vols. in 7, Berlin, 1958–71). Selections ed. K. Janssen (3 vols., Gütersloh, 1956–62). Diaries of his earlier years ed. M. Gerhardt with title Der junge Wichern (1925). Lives by F. Oldenberg (2 vols., Hamburg, 1882–7) and M. Gerhardt (3 vols., ibid., 1927–31). M. Hennig, Das Lebenswerk Wicherns (ibid., 1908). F. J. Leenhardt, La Mission intérieure et sociale de l'Église d'après Wichern, 1808–1881 [1931]. R. Kramer, Nation und Theologie bei Johann Hinrich Wichern (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte Hamburgs, 2; 1959); H. Lemke, Wicherns Bedeutung für die Bekämpfung der Jugendverwahrlosung (ibid. 7; 1964). H. Rahlenbeck in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 219–24; K. Janssen in RGG (3rd edn.), 6 (1962), cols. 1678–80, s.v.

Wiclif, John. See WYCLIFFE, JOHN.

widows. In NT times widows had an acknowledged claim to the charity of their fellow-Christians (Acts 6: 1). Before long they acquired, like virgins, a recognized status and privileges in the Church, though they do not seem to have been ordained or to have taken specific vows. 1 Tim. 5: 3–16, which contains a detailed account of what was expected of widows, restricted the privileges to those over 60, younger women being recommended to remarry. The early history of the office was closely connected with that of the *deaconess (q.v.).

J. Mayer (ed.), Monumenta de Viduis Diaconissis Virginibusque Tractantia (Florilegium Patristicum, 42; Bonn, 1938), with bibl. C. H. *Turner, 'Ministries of Women in the Primitive Church. Widow, Deaconess and Virgin in the First Four Christian Centuries', Constructive Quarterly, 7 (1919), pp. 434–59, esp. pp. 435–42 and 457–9; repr. in H. N. Bate (ed.), Catholic and Apostolic (1931), no. 11, pp. 316–51, esp. pp. 317–28 and 349–51. J. Viteau, 'L'Institution des diacres et des veuves', RHE 22 (1926), pp. 513–37. L. Bopp, Das Witwentum als organische Gliedschaft im Gemeinschaftsleben der alten Kirche (Mannheim, 1950). B. B. Thurston, The Widows: A Women's Ministry in the Early Church (Philadelphia, 1989).

Wied, Hermann von. See HERMANN OF WIED.

Wilberforce, Robert Isaac (1802–57), *Tractarian divine. The second son of W. *Wilberforce, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where he was elected a Fellow in 1826 and was brought into close association with J. H. *Newman and R. H. *Froude. He gradually acquired an extensive theological knowledge which made him one of the most learned of the Tractarians. In 1841 he was appointed Archdeacon of the East Riding. By Oct. 1843 he was in close personal relations with H. E. *Manning, then rector of Lavington, and carried on with him an extended theological correspondence which was largely concerned with the Roman claims. On 1 Nov. 1854 he was received into the RC Church at Paris. At the time of his death he was preparing for the priesthood in Rome, where he is buried in Santa Maria sopre Minerva. Besides the Life of his father, which he published in conjunction with his brother Samuel in 1838, his writings include three major theological studies: The Doctrine of the Incarnation (1848), The Doctrine of Holy Baptism (1849), and The Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist (1853).

A. R. Ashwell and R. G. Wilberforce, Life of the Right Reverend Samuel Wilberforce (3 vols., 1880–2), passim. D. [H.] Newsome, The Parting of Friends: A Study of the Wilberforces and Henry Manning [1966]. On his Eucharistic theology, A. Härdelin, The Tractarian Understanding of the Eucharist (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, Studia Historico-Ecclesiastica Upsaliensia, 8; Uppsala, 1965), pp. 123–219 passim. F. Legge in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 201–4, s.v., with further refs.

Wilberforce, Samuel (1805–73), successively Bp. of *Oxford and *Winchester. The third son of W. *Wilberforce, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and in 1828 ordained deacon. From 1830 to 1840 he was rector of Brighstone in the Isle of Wight. The repute of his eloquence and pastoral efficiency led to his appointment by the Prince Consort, in 1840, as one of his chaplains, which was the beginning of his influence at court. After holding the living of Alverstoke in Hants from 1840, he was appointed Dean of *Westminster in 1845 and later in the same year Bp. of Oxford. Though at first viewed with suspicion by both *Evangelicals and *Tractarians, esp. E. B. *Pusey, he soon gained general confidence by the many reforms he introduced in his diocese. He encouraged the building of churches and the formation of Anglican sisterhoods, and himself founded Cuddesdon Theological College (1854). He also established the system of Lenten missions and interested himself in the education of the poor. The effective methods of pastoral administration adopted in his diocese were widely imitated elsewhere. He took a leading part in the revival of *Convocation and was active in promoting legislation to provide synodical structures for the colonial Church and to enable the appointment of missionary bishops. In 1869 Wilberforce was translated to Winchester. One of his main achievements in his last years was his initiation of the revision of the AV. Throughout his life, however, he attracted considerable criticism from those who regarded him as pre-eminently a compromiser. His reputation as an opponent of modern science, based on his famous debate with T. H. *Huxley on evolution, was both unfortunate and unfair.

E. P. Baker (ed.), Bishop Wilberforce's Visitation Returns for the Archdeaconry of Oxford in the year 1854 (Oxfordshire Record Society, 35; 1954); R. K. Pugh and J. F. A. Mason (eds.), The Letter-Books of Samuel Wilberforce 1843–68 (ibid. 47; 1970). Life by A. R. Ashwell and R. G. Wilberforce [son] (3 vols., London, 1880–2), incl. extensive extracts from his diaries and correspondence. Shorter Life, based on the above, by R. [G.] Wilberforce (London, 1888). Further Lives by G. W. Daniell (ibid., 1891), R. G. Wilberforce (ibid., 1905), J. C. Hardwick, Lawn Sleeves (Oxford, 1933), and S. Meacham (Cambridge, Mass., 1970). D. [H.] Newsome, The Parting of Friends: A Study of the Wilberforces and Henry Manning [1966]. J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men, 2 (1888), pp. 1–70. F. Legge in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 204–8; G. W. E. Russell in DECH, pp. 633–6, s.v.

Wilberforce, William (1759–1833), philanthropist and advocate of the abolition of the slave trade. A native of Hull, he was educated at St John's College, Cambridge. In 1780 he became MP for Hull, later for Yorkshire, and formed an intimate friendship with W. Pitt, whose devoted supporter he became. In 1784–5 he travelled on the Continent. Under the influence of his NT reading he was converted to *Evangelicalism and determined to lead a more disciplined Christian life. In this purpose he was guided by John *Newton, who opposed his wish to take Holy Orders and persuaded him to serve the cause of Christianity in Parliament, a vocation for which he was particularly well fitted by his oratorical gifts. In 1787 he founded the Proclamation Society for the 'reformation of manners'. About the same time, under the influence of T. *Clarkson, he began to interest himself in the slave trade, which he determined to take up in Parliament. In 1797 he settled at Clapham, where he became a prominent member of the '*Clapham Sect'. His Practical View of the Prevailing Religious System of Professed Christians (1797)—a treatise promoting the view that religion depended on vital revealed truths and was not a matter of mere ethics and applied benevolence—enjoyed great popularity and established his reputation as the acknowledged leader of the Evangelical party. He contributed generously to the charities of Hannah *More and helped in the foundation of the *Church Missionary Society and the *British and Foreign Bible Society (1804). Throughout these years the abolition of the slave trade continued to be his chief concern, and after many vicissitudes the Bill, which had repeatedly been refused passage in the Lords, finally became law in 1807. Later he supported the movement for the complete abolition of slavery, which was effected by the Emancipation Act of 1833, shortly before his death. In 1813 he defended

*Catholic Emancipation; he also advocated the introduction of English missionaries into *India and long championed the cause of *Sunday observance. In 1825 he resigned his seat in Parliament owing to failing health. Feast day in the ASB, 29 July; in the American BCP (1979), 30 July.

William Wilberforce had four sons and three daughters. For Robert Isaac Wilberforce and Samuel Wilberforce see preceding entries. Henry William Wilberforce (1807–73), his youngest son, was received into the RC Church in 1850. From 1854 to 1863 he edited the Catholic Standard.

William Wilberforce's Family Prayers, ed. R. I. Wilberforce (son; London, 1834); Correspondence, ed. id. and S. Wilberforce (sons; ibid., 1840); Private Papers, ed. A. M. Wilberforce (ibid., 1897). The principal authority is the Life by R. I. and S. Wilberforce (5 vols. bound in 3, London, 1838; condensed edn., ibid., 1868). The best modern studies are those of R. Coupland (Oxford, 1923) and F. W. R. Smith, Viscount Furneaux, later Lord Birkenhead (ibid., 1974). Other Lives by J. S. Harford (London, 1864), J. C. Colquhoun (ibid., 1866), O. Warner (ibid., 1962) J. C. Pollock (ibid., 1977), and G. D. Lean (ibid., 1980). L. Stephen in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 208–17.

Wilfrid, St (634–709), Bp. of *York. He was the son of a Northumbrian thegn, and was educated at the monastery of *Lindisfarne. Dissatisfied, however, with the *Celtic way of religious life, he studied the Roman form at *Canterbury and in 653 he set out for Rome itself; on the first part of the journey he was accompanied by St *Benedict Biscop. After he had spent three years at Lyons, where he received the tonsure in the Roman manner, he returned to England and, being made Abbot of *Ripon, introduced the Benedictine Rule. At the Synod of *Whitby (664) he was largely responsible for the victory of the Roman party on the question of dating *Easter. Shortly afterwards he was consecrated Bp. of York at Compiègne by 12 Frankish bishops, to avoid consecration by the Celtic bishops whom he regarded as schismatical. On his return (666), which had been delayed, he found his see occupied by St *Chad and retired to Ripon, but was put in possession of it by St *Theodore of Tarsus, Abp. of Canterbury, in 669. When in 678 Theodore divided the diocese of York into three sees without Wilfrid's consent, he departed for Rome to appeal against the high-handed procedure, spending a year on the way preaching in Frisia. Though the synod, assembled by the Pope, declared in his favour, on his return to England he was imprisoned, and later retired to Sussex, where he carried out successful missionary work among the heathen population (681–6). Having become reconciled to Theodore, he was once more reinstated in his see, which he held from 686 to 691. When disputes with King Aldfrith compelled him to flee again, the King of Mercia asked him to administer the vacant see of *Lichfield. When, in 703, a synod called by Abp. Berhtwald of Canterbury decreed that he should resign his see of York and retire to Ripon, he went once more to Rome to appeal to the Holy See. Though his claims were completely vindicated, he agreed, on his return, to resign in favour of St *John of Beverley, contenting himself with the see of *Hexham, and spending the last years of his life in his monastery at Ripon. A cosmopolitan Churchman, a notable missionary, and a great defender of Papal authority, Wilfrid, despite many setbacks, succeeded in bringing England into closer touch with Rome, and in replacing the existing Celtic usages in the N. of England by the Roman liturgy, and Celtic by Benedictine monasticism. Feast day, 12 Oct.

Life by his disciple, Eddius Stephanus of Ripon, ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, 1 (RS, 1879), pp. 1–103, with introd., pp. xxxi–xxxviii; modern edn., with Eng. tr. and notes, by B. Colgrave (Cambridge, 1927; repr., 1985). Later authorities incl. *Bede, HE 5. 19 (comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, Oxford, 1988, pp. 51, 95, 106, 125–8, 133, 139, 142, 144, 150–3, 155 f., 159, 172, 180, 183 f., 191–5, 227 f., and 235–8); metrical Life by Frithegod of Canterbury (written between 948 and 958), called the 'Breviloquium Vitae Wilfridi', pr. in J. Raine, op. cit., pp. 105–59; also a Life by *Eadmer, pr., ibid., pp. 161–226, with introd. pp. xxxix–l, and notes on further sources, pp. l f.; modern edn. of Frithegod's Life by A. Campbell (Zurich, 1950). B. W. Wells, 'Eddi's Life of Wilfrid', EHR 6 (1891), pp. 535–50. G. F. Browne, Theodore and Wilfrith (1897). E. S. Duckett, Anglo-Saxon Saints and Scholars (New York, 1948), pp. 101–214. D. P. Kirby (ed.), Saint Wilfrid at Hexham (Newcastle, 1974); H. [M. R. E.] Mayr-Harting, 'St. Wilfrid in Sussex', in M. J. Kitch (ed.), Studies in Sussex Church History (1981), pp. 1–17; D. P. Kirby, 'Bede, Eddius Stephanus and the "Life of Wilfred"', EHR 98 (1983), pp. 101–14. W. T. Foley, Images of Sanctity in Eddius Stephanus' Life of Bishop Wilfrid (Lewiston, Queenston, and Lampeter [1992]). W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 187–200, 209–11, 280–308, 367–416, and 432 f. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (The Oxford History of England, 2; 1943; 3rd edn., 1971), pp. 123 f., 132–45. H. [M. R. E.] Mayr-Harting, The Coming of Christianity to Anglo-Saxon England (1972), esp. pp. 129–47. J. Raine in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 1179–85. See also HEXHAM.

Wilkes, Paget (1871–1934), Protestant missionary in Japan. The son of an Anglican clergyman, Wilkes was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he associated with the Oxford Inter-Collegiate Christian Union, well known in his day for its evangelistic fervour and missionary zeal. In 1897 he sailed for Japan under the *CMS to work with B. F. Buxton, the CMS pioneer. Here he formed the idea of a Japanese Evangelistic Band (JEB) which, free of ecclesiastical organization, would be directed towards aggressive evangelism and the spread of scriptural holiness; and in 1903 the JEB was established under the name of the 'One by One Band' of Japan, with its centre at Kobe. Apart from a few visits to England, Wilkes spent all his active life in Japan, pursuing his missionary work with unabating fervour. His best-known works (translated into many languages) are The Dynamic of Service (1920), The Dynamic of Faith (1921), The Dynamic of Redemption (1923).

M. W. Dunn Pattison (Wilkes's sister), Ablaze for God: The Life Story of Paget Wilkes (1936). Shorter Life by I. R. G. Stewart (London, 1957).

Wilkins, David (1685–1745), editor of the 'Concilia'. His parentage was German and his name anglicized from Wilke. After studying at several Continental universities, he became professor of Arabic at Cambridge in 1724. His patron, Abp. W. *Wake, had meanwhile made him Librarian at *Lambeth Palace and in due course secured for him several promotions, including the rectory of Hadleigh, a prebend at *Canterbury, and the archdeaconry of Suffolk. A pioneer in oriental studies and in Anglo-Saxon, Wilkins was a versatile, though by modern standards somewhat inaccurate, scholar. His reputation rests principally upon his Concilia Magnae Britanniae et Hiberniae (4 vols., 1737), a monumental collection of documents which long remained a standard source for the British and Irish ecclesiastical councils.

D. C. Douglas, English Scholars (1939), pp. 276–84. E. F. Jacob, 'Wilkins's Concilia and the Fifteenth Century', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 4th ser. 15 (1932), pp. 91–131. J. M. Rigg in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 260 f., s.v., with refs.

Wilkins, John (1614–72), Bp. of *Chester. Born at Fawsley, Northants, he studied at New Inn Hall and at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. In 1637 he was appointed Vicar of Fawsley, but soon resigned and held a succession of private chaplaincies. He became increasingly interested in the new scientific movement. In 1638 he published The Discovery of a World in the Moon, which argued that the moon was a physical world that might be habitable. In 1640 followed A Discourse concerning a New Planet, maintaining that the earth was a planet. From *c.*1645 he was a member of R. *Boyle's 'Invisible College' of scientists in London. As his sympathies during the Civil War had been with the Parliamentarians, the Visitors made him Warden of Wadham College, Oxford, in 1648. Here his tolerant disposition won warm approval and attracted to Oxford a brilliant group of scientists, including many of his former London associates, which used to meet in Wilkins's rooms in Wadham. In 1659 he was appointed Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, but he was deprived at the Restoration (1660). He was given a succession of benefices, among them the Rectory of Cranford, Greater London (1660), the Vicarage of St Lawrence Jewry, London (1662), and the Deanery of the collegiate church of *Ripon (1663). But his chief interests remained the furtherance of science and philosophical linguistics. When the Royal Society received its charter from *Charles II (15 July 1662), Wilkins, who had been largely instrumental in its foundation, became its first Secretary. In 1668 he became Bp. of Chester, where he advocated the toleration of dissenters. Wilkins was a strong upholder of natural theology. He held that it was the conflicting contentions of fanatics which were the main cause of unbelief. His writings include Mathematical Magick, or the Wonders that may be performed by Mechanical Geometry (1648), A Discourse concerning the Gift of Prayer (1649), An Essay towards a real Character and a Philosophical Language (1668), and On the Principles and Duties of Natural Religion (1678; posthumous).

P. A. Wright Henderson, The Life and Times of John Wilkins (1910). B. J. Shapiro, John Wilkins 1614 1672: An Intellectual Biography (Berkeley, Calif., and Los Angeles, 1969). A. Chapman, '"A World in the Moon". John Wilkins and his Lunar Voyage of 1640', Quarterly Journal of the Royal Astronomical Society, 32 (1991), pp. 121–32. F. Sanders in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 264–7.

Willehad, St (d. 789), Bp. of Bremen. A native of Northumbria, he was probably educated at *York. Apparently inspired by the examples of St *Boniface and St *Willibrord, he set out with the approval of King Alchred and a Northumbrian synod for missionary work in Frisia between 765 and 774 and for a time preached at Dockum. In 780 *Charlemagne sent him to preach to the Saxons at Wigmodia near the North Sea; but shortly afterwards his work was brought to an end by an insurrection under the Saxon chief, Widukind, in 782. After a journey to Rome, he returned to the abbey of *Echternach, then presided over by Beornred, a relative of Willibrord. Here he devoted himself to copying MSS; none of his work has been identified among those which have survived. Later, when Charlemagne restored peace, Willehad resumed his activities at Wigmodia. In 787 he was consecrated Bishop of the new see of Bremen, where he built a cathedral which was dedicated to St Peter on 1 Nov. 789. A few days later he succumbed to a fever. Feast day, 8 Nov.

The principal source is a Life written prob. soon after 838 at Echternach (commonly, but apparently erroneously, attributed to St *Anskar); best edn. in AASS, Nov. 3 (1910), pp. 842–6; Book of Miracles by St Anskar, ibid., pp. 847–51, with valuable introd. by A. Poncelet, SJ, ibid., pp. 835–42. O. H. May (ed.), Regesten der Erzbischöfe von Bremen, 1, Lieferung 1 (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hannover, Oldenburg, Braunschweig, Schaumburg-Lippe und Bremen, 11; 1928), pp. 1–4. A letter addressed to him in friendly terms by *Alcuin is pr. among the latter's letters, ed. E. Duemmler (MGH, Epistulae, 4; 1895), p. 31. G. Niemeyer, 'Die Herkunft der Vita Willehadi', Deutsches Archiv, 12 (1956), pp. 17–35. W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures, 1943; Oxford, 1946), p. 110. G. H. Klippel and A. Hauck in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 302–4, s.v.

William I (?1028–87), Duke of Normandy and King of England ('the Conqueror'). The illegitimate son of Duke Robert I (d. 1035), William after a stormy minority won and kept firm control of his duchy, whence in 1066 he was able to conquer England, which he ruled with equal firmness. In Normandy he presided over a continuing ecclesiastical revival in the archdiocese of Rouen: capitular organization developed under strong bishops (cf. *Odo of Bayeux) who were themselves almost all of aristocratic blood, and many new monastic houses (e.g. *Bec) were founded by William himself and by his greater subjects.

William had sought and obtained Pope *Alexander II's blessing in 1066; his relations with Rome were generally constructive and co-operative, and though he rejected *Gregory VII's demand for fealty (?1080), that Pope held the King in high regard for the support which he gave to reform. There was no conflict over lay *investiture, which William continued to practise; the episcopate in England was largely Normanized, several bishops (e.g. *Stigand) and abbots being deposed by canonical process, and the prelates nominated and invested by William were in most cases efficient and reputable. In co-operation with Abp. *Lanfranc the King saw to the implementation of Papal legislation on *simony, clerical immorality, and diocesan administration. As in Normandy (esp. at Lillebonne, 1080) William himself presided at important reforming councils. By a far-reaching writ of *c.*1072 William removed certain pleas (offences against the 'moral law') from the jurisdiction of the (lay) courts of the hundred to that of the Church courts.

William founded monastic houses at Caen (in penance for his marriage within the prohibited degrees) and Battle (in gratitude for his victory at Hastings). He knew how to use the sanctions of the Church to strengthen himself, and his domestic life was above reproach (no bastard can be attributed to him). Energetic, courageous, majestic, brutal, and avaricious, he exercised an enduring influence on three important provinces of the Church which he ruled at a critical time.

M. Fauroux (ed.), Recueil des Actes des Ducs de Normandie de 911 à 1066 (Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie, 26; 1961), pp. 242–453 (nos. 92–234); H. W. C. Davis and R. J. Whitwell (eds.), Regesta Regum Anglo-Normannorum 1066 1154, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 1–76 (nos. 1–288b). Early description of the Norman Conquest by William's Norman chaplain, William of Poitiers, Gesta Guillelmi ducis Normannorum et Regis Anglorum; mod. edn., with Fr. tr., by R. Foreville (Les Classiques de l'histoire de France, 23; 1952). D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke (eds.), Councils & Synods with Other Documents Relating to the English Church, vol. 1: 871 1204 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 563–634. Convenient Eng. tr. of the well-known assessments by the contemporary Anglo-Saxon Chronicler ('E') and by *Ordericus Vitalis in D. C. Douglas and G. W. Greenaway (eds.), English Historical Documents 1042–1189 (English Historical Documents, 2; 1953), pp. 163–4 and 281–9. The description by the 'monk of Caen' (ibid., pp. 279–80), must be used with caution because much of it has been borrowed from the Lives of *Charlemagne and *Louis the Pious; L. J. Engels, 'De Obitu Willelmi ducis Normannorum regisque Anglorum: Texte, modèles, valeur et origine', in Mélanges Christine Mohrmann, Nouveau Recueil (Utrecht and Antwerp, 1973), pp. 209–55. Docs. on the Church in D. C. Douglas and G. W. Greenaway, op. cit., pp. 601–5 and 626–49. Modern studies by F. M. Stenton ('Heroes of the Nations', 1908; rev. edn., 1925), D. C. Douglas (London, 1964; with bibl.), F. Barlow ('Teach Yourself History', 1965), M. de Boüard (Paris, 1984), and D. Bates (London [1989]). E. A. Freeman, History of the Norman Conquest of England (6 vols., Oxford, 1867–79 [still valuable for its appendices]). F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (3rd edn., ibid., 1971), pp. 584–667. D. J. A. Matthew, The Norman Conquest (1966), pp. 167–215 (on the Church); C. Morris, 'William I and the Church Courts', EHR 82 (1967), pp. 449–63. See also bibl. on LANFRANC.

William of Auvergne (*c.*1180–1249), also 'William of *Paris', French Scholastic philosopher and theologian. In 1223 he became a Canon of *Notre-Dame, and in 1228 Bp. of Paris. He was a protector of the *Mendicant Orders, an adversary of pluralism, and an influential personality at the court of St *Louis. His prolific writings mainly form a vast philosophico-theological encyclopedia, 'Magisterium Divinale ac Sapientale' (written between 1223 and 1240), consisting of 'De Trinitate', 'De Universo', 'De Anima', 'Cur Deus Homo', 'De Fide et Legibus', 'De Sacramentis', and 'De Virtutibus'. William used *Aristotelian language and principles of scientific procedure, but remained respectfully wary of many Aristotelian doctrines, esp. those he knew only through *Avicenna's commentaries. His advocacy of rational methods for discovering truth prepared the way for later *Scholasticism. But despite the boldness and originality of his approach, he was not entirely successful in synthesizing new terms with traditional ideas. He strongly opposed the superstitions, esp. on the subject of astronomy, rife among his contemporaries.

Collected edn. of his Works pub. Nuremberg, 2 vols., 1496; the most complete edn. is that of J. B. Le Féron (anon., 2 vols., Orléans and Paris, 1674; anastatic repr., 2 vols., Frankfurt, 1963). His two treatises De Bono et Malo were first ed. J. R. O'Donnell, CSB, in Mediaeval Studies, 8 (1946), pp. 245–99, and ibid. 16 (1954), pp. 219–71, and Tractatus de Gratia ed. G. Corti (Corona Lateranensis, 7; 1966). Modern edn. of De Trinitate by B. Switalski (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Texts and Studies, 34; Toronto, 1976); Eng. tr. by R. J. Teske, SJ, and F. C. Wade, SJ (Medieval Philosophical Texts in Translation, 28; Milwaukee, Wis. [1989]). The De Immortalitate Animae, an anonymous work prob. wrongly ascribed to him, ed. G. Bülow (BGPM 2, Heft 3; 1897). N. Valois, Guillaume d'Auvergne ...: Sa vie et ses ouvrages (1880). M. Baumgartner, Die Erkenntnislehre des Wilhelm von Auvergne (BGPM 2, Heft 1; 1893). J. Kramp, SJ, 'Des Wilhelm von Auvergne "Magisterium Divinale"', Gregorianum, 1 (1920), pp. 538–616; 2 (1921), pp. 42–103 and 174–95, incl. text. P. Glorieux, 'Le Tractatus Novus De Poenitentia de Guillaume d'Auvergne', in Miscellanea Moralia in Honorem Arthur Janssen, 2 (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 1st ser. 3 [1949]), pp. 551–65. E. A. Moody, Studies in Medieval Philosophy, Science, and Logic (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., and London, 1975), pp. 1–109 ('William of Auvergne and his Treatise De Anima'). A. Quentin, Naturkenntnisse und Naturanschauungen bei Wilhelm von Auvergne (Arbor Scientiarum, Reihe A, 5; Hildesheim, 1976). H. Borok, Der Tugendbegriff des Wilhelm von Auvergne (1180 1249): Eine moralhistorische Untersuchung zur ideengeschichtlichen Rezeption der aristotelischen Ethik (Düsseldorf, 1979). J. Rohls, Wilhelm von Auvergne und der mittelalterliche Aristotelismus (Münchener Monographien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, 5; 1980). S. P. Marrone, William of Auvergne and Robert Grosseteste: New Ideas of Truth in the Early Thirteenth Century (Princeton, NJ [1983]), pp. 25–134. P. Vernet in DTC 6 (1920), cols. 1967–76, s.v. 'Guillaume d'Auvergne', with bibl.

William of Auxerre (d. 1231), Scholastic theologian. At one time Archdeacon of Beauvais, he later taught at *Paris. He became a member of the Commission appointed by *Gregory IX in 1231 to examine and amend the physical treatises of *Aristotle, the reading of which had been unreservedly forbidden by the University of Paris in 1210. He is himself important as one of the first to make use of the doctrines of the newly discovered Aristotle, esp. in his chief work, the 'Summa Aurea'. This eclectic work, loosely based on the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard and influenced by *Anselm's *Ontological Argument, showed much originality, and, in its turn, influenced John of Treviso, one of the first Dominican theologians.

Summa Aurea pub. Paris, 1500 and 1518, and Venice, 1591; modern edn. of bks. 1 and 2 by J. Ribaillier (Spicilegium Bonaventurianum, 16–17; Paris and Grottaferrata, 1980–2). His other works remain unpub. P. Glorieux, Répertoire des maîtres en théologie de Paris au XIII^e siècle, 1 (1933), pp. 293 f. C. Ottaviano, Guglielmo d'Auxerre (d. 1231): La vita, le opere, il pensiero (Rome [1930]). W. Breuning, Die hypostatische Union in der Theologie Wilhelms von Auxerre, Hugos von St Cher und Rolands von Cremona (Trier Theologische Studien, 11; 1962), pp. 1–161; W. H. Principe, CSB, William of Auxerre's Theology of the Hypostatic Union (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 7; Toronto, 1963), incl. relevant texts. P. Mandonnet, OP, 'Date de la mort de Guillaume d'Auxerre (3 Nov. 1231)', AHDLMA 7 (1935), pp. 39–46. J. A. St Pierre, 'The Theological Thought of William of Auxerre. An Introductory Bibliography', RTAM 33 (1966), pp. 147–55. G. Gál, OFM, in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 921 f., s.v.; J. Ribaillier in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1192–9, s.v. 'Guillaume d'Auxerre'.

William of Champeaux (*c.*1070–1121), Scholastic philosopher. After studying under *Anselm of Laon, and (probably) hearing *Roscelin of Compiègne, he began to teach in the cathedral schools of Paris, whence he was driven (1108) by *Abelard's ridicule of his exaggerated *Realism. In retirement at the (then) priory of Saint-Victor, he appears to have modified his extreme doctrines, and by his lectures there to have laid the foundations of the *Victorine school. In 1113 he became Bp. of Châlons.

In his last years he seems to have abandoned the distinctive tenets of Realism altogether, though without elaborating any significant philosophical alternative.

Some of William of Champeaux's writings in J. P. Migne, PL 163. 1039–72. E. Michaud, Guillaume de Champeaux et les Écoles de Paris au XII^e siècle (1867). G. Lefèvre, Les Variations de Guillaume de Champeaux et la question des universaux: Étude suivie de documents originaux (Travaux et Mémoires de l'Université de Lille, 6, no. 20; 1898; mainly texts). H. Weisweiler, SJ, Das Schrifttum der Schule Anselms von Laon und Wilhelms von Champeaux in deutschen Bibliotheken (BGPM 33, Hefte 1–2; 1936), incl. a number of texts. K. M. Fredborg, 'The Commentaries on Cicero's de Inventione and Rhetorica ad Herennium by William of Champeaux', Université de Copenhague, Cahiers de l'Institut du Moyen-Âge Grec et Latin, 17 (1976), pp. 1–39, with extracts of texts. O. Lottin, OSB, Psychologie et morale aux XII^e et XIII^e siècles, 5 (1959), esp. pp. 189–227. J. Gross, Geschichte des Erbsündendogmas, 3 (1971), pp. 54–7. C. H. Lohr in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 10 (1965), cols. 1130 f., s.v. 'Wilhelm v. Champeaux', with further bibl.

William of Conches (*c.*1080–*c.*1154), medieval philosopher. He was a pupil of *Bernard of Chartres, whose efforts to encourage the study of the profane sciences and literature in the interests of a Christian humanism he sought to further. His writings, of which the 'Philosophia Mundi' and the 'Dragmaticon' became the most popular, deal mainly with natural philosophy. The former treatise was attacked by *William of St-Thierry for its supposed *Modalistic view of the Trinity. William of Conches's other writings include glosses on Priscian's Institutiones Grammaticae, *Plato's Timaeus, Macrobius' In Somnium Scipionis, and *Boethius' De Consolatione Philosophiae. A work on ethics, 'Moralium Dogma Philosophorum', has also been attributed to him.

The only edn. of the 'Dragmaticon' is that of G. Gratarolus pub. under the title Dialogus de Substantiis Physicis . . . confectus a Willelmo Aneponymo . . . [and other works] (Strasbourg, 1567; photographically repr., Frankfurt, 1967), pp. 1–312. The 'Philosophia Mundi' is pr. among the works of *Bede in PL 90. 1127–78, and among those of *Honorius 'of Autun', ibid. 171. 39–102; new edn., with Ger. tr., by G. Maurach (Studia, 16; Pretoria [1980]). Part of the text of his gloss on Boethius ed. C. Jourdain in Notices et extraits des manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Impériale, 20 (pt. 2; 1862), pp. 40–82; J. M. Parent, OP, La Doctrine de la création dans l'École de Chartres (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales d'Ottawa, 8; 1938), pp. 115–77, incl. further extracts of the text of the gloss on Boethius, pp. 124–36, and of that on the Timaeus, pp. 142–77. Glosae super Platonem ed. É. Jeauneau (Textes Philosophiques du Moyen Âge, 13; 1965). Glosae super Iuvenalem, ed. B. Wilson (ibid. 18; 1980). The 'Moralium Dogma Philosophorum' is pr. among the works of *Hildebert of Lavardin in J. P. Migne, PL 171. 1007–56; modern edn., attributing it to William of Conches, by J. Holmberg (Arbeten utgivna met Understöd av Vilhelm Ekmans Universitetsfond, Uppsala, 1929). T. Gregory, Anima Mundi: La Filosofia di Guglielmo di Conches e la Scuola di Chartres (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Filosofia dell'Università di Roma, 3 [1955]). M.-D. Chenu, 'Nature ou histoire? Une controverse exégétique sur la création au XII^e siècle', AHDLMA 20 (for 1953; 1954), pp. 25–30. B. Lawn, The Salernitan Questions (Oxford, 1963), esp. pp. 50–6 and 205 f. (rev. Ital. tr., 1969, pp. 70–5 and 233 f.). E. Jeauneau, 'Lectio Philosophorum': Recherches sur l'École de Chartres (Amsterdam, 1973), pp. 101–16, 125–92, 205–7, 267–78, and 335–70 (repr. articles previously pub. 1957 onwards). [E.] P. [M.] Dronke, Fabula: Explorations into the Uses of Myth in Medieval Platonism (Mittellateinische Studien und Texte, 9; 1974), esp. pp. 14–78 and 167–83. D. Elford, 'William of Conches', in [E.] P. [M.] Dronke (ed.), A History of Twelfth-Century Western Philosophy (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 308–27, with bio-bibliography, pp. 456 f. The attribution to William of Conches of a 'Tertia Philosophia' partly pr. by C. Ottaviano, Un brano inedito della "Philosophia" di Guglielmo di Conches (Collezione di Testi Filosofici inediti e rari, 1; Naples, 1935), pp. 19–52, has been disproved by T. Gregory, 'Sull'attribuzione a Guglielmo di Conches di un rimaneggiamento della Philosophia Mundi', Giornale critico della Filosofia italiana, 30 (1951), pp. 119–25.

William of Malmesbury (*c.*1090–*c.*1143), the chief English historian of his generation. He appears to have spent most of his life at the monastery at *Malmesbury, where he was offered, but declined, the abbacy in 1140. His work, though credulous and often careless in its chronology, has literary merit. He was a man of immensely wide reading, which is reflected in his autograph manuscripts which have survived, and in his 'Polyhistor', a sort of commonplace book. His two most important books were his 'Gesta Regum Anglorum' (1120) and his 'Gesta Pontificum Anglorum' (1125), which, as their titles imply, dealt respectively with the secular and ecclesiastical history of England. They were considerably revised both by William himself and, after his death, by others. His 'Historia Novella', which continues the 'Gesta Regum', is a contemporary narrative also of first-rate historical importance. It goes up to the year 1142 and is unfinished. William also wrote several theological works, including a treatise on 'The Miracles of the Virgin' and an abridged edition of the 'De Ecclesiasticis Officiis' of *Amalarius of Metz.

Most of his Works, collected from various edns., in J. P. Migne, PL 179. 945–1774, with frags. also pr. ibid. 127. 375–84. Crit. edns. of his De Gestis Pontificum Anglorum by N. E. S. A. Hamilton (RS, 1870); of his Vita Sancti Dunstani in W. *Stubbs (ed.), Memorials of Saint Dunstan (ibid., 1874), pp. 250–324, with introd., pp. xxxv–xxxvii; of his De Gestis Regum Anglorum by id. (2 vols., ibid., 1887–9), with introd. prefaces in vol. 1, pp. ix–cxlvii, and vol. 2, pp. xv–cxlii, with refs.; of his Vita Wulstani by R. R. Darlington (first full edn., Camden Society, 3rd ser. 40; 1928); Eng. tr. by J. H. F. Peile (Oxford, 1934); modern edns., with Eng. tr., of his Historia Novella (also incl. in RS edn. of De Gestis Regum Anglorum) by K. R. Potter (London, 1955) and of De Antiquitate Glastonie Ecclesie by J. Scott (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1981); modern edn. of his Polyhistor by H. Testroet Ouellette (Medieval & Renaissance texts and studies, 10; Binghamton, NY, 1982). H. Farmer, OSB, 'William of Malmesbury's Life and Works', JEH 13 (1962), pp. 39–54; id., 'William of Malmesbury's Commentary on Lamentations', Studia Monastica, 4 (1962), pp. 283–311; R. M. Thomson, William of Malmesbury (Woodbridge, Suffollk, 1987).

William of Moerbeke (d. 1286), translator of Greek philosophical and scientific works. Nothing is known of his early life. He was in Greece, as a *Dominican, in 1260, when he completed his earliest dated translations (of *Aristotle, De partibus animalium and Meteorologica). By 1267 he was at Viterbo, and until 1279 was attached to the curia as Papal penitentiary. He took part in the Second Council of *Lyons in 1274. In 1278 he was consecrated Abp. of Corinth, and in Corinth he translated the tria opuscula of *Proclus, which survive only in his translations. By the end of 1283 he was back in Italy, once more attached to the Papal court, probably until his death. His friends included *Witelo. The extent of his relationship with St *Thomas Aquinas is a matter of controversy, but it seems certain that Thomas encouraged his work as a translator and that he in turn kept Thomas informed of what he was doing. His translation of Proclus' Elementatio theologica (completed in 1268) enabled Thomas to identify the true nature of the Liber de Causis*. He translated or revised translations of many of the works of Aristotle, including some not previously translated into Latin (Politics, Poetics, and book K of the Metaphysics), several other works of Proclus (including the massive commentary on Plato's Parmenides), and works by other Greek philosophers and by some ancient commentators on Aristotle, such as Alexander of Aphrodisias, *John Philoponus, Simplicius, Archimedes and Galen. His translations of Proclus aroused an interest in him which is particularly evident in German Dominican writers such as *Eckhart and Berthold of Moosburg.

His trs. are listed, with notes of edns. and studies and biog. information, in J. Brams and W. Vanhamel (eds.), Guillaume de Moerbeke: Recueil d'Études à l'occasion du 700e anniversaire de sa mort (1286) (Ancient and Medieval Philosophy, de Wulf-Mansion Centre, 1st ser. 7; Louvain, 1989), pp. 301–83. M. *Grabmann, Guglielmo di Moerbeke, O.P., il traduttore delle opere di Aristotele (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, vol. 11, Collectionis totius, n. 20; 1946). Kaeppeli, 2 (1975), pp. 122–9 (nos. 1586–616). G. Verbeke in DHGE 22 (1988), cols. 963–6, s.v. 'Guillaume (138) de Moerbeke'.

William of Norwich, St (1132–44), supposed victim of a Jewish ritual murder. A tanner's apprentice at *Norwich, he was enticed from home on Monday in Holy Week 1144 and on Holy Saturday, six days later, his body was found with marks of violence in a neighbouring wood. Acc. to Thomas of Monmouth, a monk of Norwich and the only authority for the legend, William had been crucified and murdered by the Jews during the Passover. This story was substantiated by a converted Jew, Theobald, who asserted that, acc. to Jewish religious tradition, a Christian must be sacrificed every year to obtain the deliverance of the people. This is the first known case of the blood accusation against the Jews; but as the authorities took no action, the account is open to much suspicion.

The cult of William of Norwich dates from the translation of his body from the chapter house of the monks, where it had been buried, to the cathedral (1151) amidst a wave of religious enthusiasm. Many visions and miracles were reported to have taken place at his tomb, and throughout the Middle Ages he enjoyed great popularity. Feast day at Norwich, 26 Mar.; commemoration elsewhere, 25 Mar.

The Life by Thomas of Monmouth ed., with Eng. tr., full introd., and notes, by A. Jessopp and M. R. James (Cambridge, 1896). John Capgrave's version of the Legend, which depends on Thomas of Monmouth, is repr. in AASS, Mar. 3 (1668), pp. 590 f. M. D. Anderson, A Saint at Stake: The Strange Death of William of Norwich 1144 (1964). G. I. Longmuir, 'Thomas of Monmouth: Detector of Ritual Murder', Speculum, 59 (1984), pp. 820–46; id., 'Historiographic Crucifixion', in G. Dahan (ed.), Les Juifs au regard de l'histoire: Mélanges en l'honneur de Bernhard Blumenkranz (1985), pp. 109–27. R. Webster in CE 15 (1912), pp. 635 f., s.v.

William of Ockham (*c.*1285–1347), philosopher, theologian and polemicist, 'Venerabilis inceptor'. A native of Ockham in Surrey, William early entered the *Franciscan Order and studied and taught at *Oxford. He never became a regent master, but remained an 'inceptor' (hence his title), prob. owing to the accusation of teaching dangerous doctrines made by John Lutterell, the chancellor of the University. Lutterell went to *Avignon in 1323 and denounced Ockham for maintaining heretical positions. Ockham was summoned there by Pope *John XXII, and a commission of six theologians was set up to examine the charges. It censured 51 propositions taken from his works, but no formal condemnation followed. Ockham's philosophical and theological writings were composed during his periods at Oxford and Avignon. They include commentaries on parts of the 'Organon' of *Aristotle, a 'Summa Logicae', a Commentary on the '*Sentences' and seven '*Quodlibets'. In 1327 the Minister General of the Franciscans, Michael of Cesena, was summoned to Avignon in connection with the dispute on Franciscan poverty. He charged Ockham to examine the Papal constitutions on this subject. Ockham concluded that the Pope, John XXII, had taken up heretical positions. In 1328 he fled from Avignon and joined Louis of Bavaria, under whose protection he remained until 1347. In 1331 he was sentenced to expulsion from his order and to perpetual imprisonment, having been excommunicated since 1328. To this period of his life belong his polemical writings against the Pope and in favour of Louis. In 1332/3 he wrote his 'Opus Nonaginta Dierum', a violent attack directed against the Pope on the question of poverty. During the next years other writings against the Pope and in favour of the Imperial policy followed, among them 'Dialogus super Dignitate Papali et Regia', of which the first part was completed before the death of John XXII in Dec. 1334, 'Octo quaestiones' (1340–1), 'Breviloquium de principatu tyrannico' (*c.*1340–2), and 'Tractatus de Imperatorum et Pontificum Potestate' (*c.*1347). The tradition that he lived until 1349, and that towards the end of his life he took steps to be reconciled to the Church, has been shown to rest on evidence that will not withstand critical examination.

William of Ockham was a vigorous, critical and independent thinker, and at the same time a theologian in the Augustinian–Franciscan tradition. He contributed to the development of formal logic, and a logician's approach runs through all his work. He made much use of the principle of economy ('Ockham's razor'). He eliminated the notion, then generally accepted, of the existence of *universals. Only individual things exist, and they are directly apprehended by the mind. This intuitive knowledge is naturally caused. On the theological side much of Ockham's thinking is determined by his resolute attempt to eliminate anything that limited God's omnipotence and freedom. He considered that the doctrine of eternal ideas in the Divine mind in accordance with which the world was created and ordered limited God's freedom. He made a distinction between the absolute power (potentia absoluta) of God and His ordained power (potentia ordinata). God could have created a different order, provided that it did not violate the law of contradiction. The moral order is dependent on the Divine fiat. But God's omnipotence cannot be philosophically proved. It has to be accepted on faith through revelation. The same is true of His omniscience. Ockham also criticized the traditional proofs of the existence of God as not philosophically demonstrable. In short, he destroyed the conception of the relationship between theology and philosophy elaborated in the 13th century.

Ockham saw his task as the purification of *Aristotle's teaching and Christian theology of unwarranted assumptions such as necessary categories and real universals. His radical criticism of the prevailing belief in the reality of universals, and his grounding of human knowledge in intuitive cognition, and his rethinking of the relation of theology to philosophy marked the beginning of what was later characterized as the via moderna as opposed to the via antiqua represented by the *Thomists and *Scotists. It is also now generally agreed that 'by his interest in singulars rather than universals, intuition rather than abstraction, and induction rather than deduction, he prepared the ground for a more scientific approach to reality' (Gál). His philosophical and theological influence pervaded the university world from about 1340, though resisted by Thomas *Bradwardine and numerous other theologians, and even opponents of the via moderna were unconsciously affected; he was acknowledged as a mentor by G. *Biel and M. *Luther and universally as the inspirer of *Nominalism. His political theories played an important part in the development of the *Conciliar Movement in the 14th and 15th cents. He refused to acknowledge that the Pope had any right to determine the validity of the election of the Emperor. The Emperor had the right and the duty to depose a heretical Pope.

Crit. edn. of his Opera Philosophica et Theologica by G. Gál, OFM, and others (St Bonaventure, NY, 1967 ff.) now incl. Summa Logicae, Brevis Summa, Summulae in libros Physicorum, comm. on Aristotle's logical works and Physics, Quodlibeta Septem, and the majority of his comm. on the Sentences; his Opera Politica, ed. J. G. Sikes, H. S. Offler, and others (3 vols., Manchester, 1940–63, vol. 4, Oxford, 1997; 2nd edn. of vol. 1, 1974) incl. Opus Nonaginta Dierum, Octo Quaestiones, Contra Ioannem, Contra Benedictum, Compendium Errorum Ioannis Papae XXII, Breviloquium, De Imperatorum et Pontificum Potestate, Allegationes de Potestate Imperiali, and De Electione Caroli Quarti. Dialogus, ed. M. Goldast, Monarchia S. Romani Imperii, 2 (Frankfurt, 1614), pp. 392–957; and De Sacramento Altaris, ed. (with Eng. tr.) by T. B. Birch (Burlington, Ia., 1930). The Tractatus de Successevis (ed. P. Boehner, OFM, Franciscan Institute Publications, 1; 1944), formerly attributed to Ockham, is an early compilation from the Physics. Eng. tr. of a selection of his Philosophical Writings by P. Boehner, OFM (Edinburgh, 1957); also of pt. 1 of his Summa Logicae by M. J. Loux (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1974]); of Quodlibetal Questions by A. J. Freddoso and F. E. Kelley (2 vols., New Haven, Conn., and London [1991]) and of Breviloquium by J. Kilcullen, ed. A. S. McGrade (Cambridge, 1992).

L. Baudry, Guillaume d'Occam, 1 (Études de philosophie médiévale, 39 [no further vols. pub.]; 1949); E. A. Moody, The Logic of William of Ockham (1935); G. de Lagarde, La Naissance de l'esprit laïque au déclin du moyen âge, 4–6 (1942–6); rev. edn., 4–5 (1962–3); P. Boehner, OFM, Collected Articles on Ockham, ed. E. M. Buytaert, OFM (Franciscan Institute Publications, Philosophy Series, 12; 1958); H. Junghans, Ockham im Lichte der neueren Forschung (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Lutherthums, 21; 1968); J. Miethke, Ockhams Weg zur Socialphilosophie (1969); A. S. McGrade, The Political Thought of William of Ockham (Cambridge, 1974); G. [A.] Leff, William of Ockham: The Metamorphosis of Scholastic Discourse (Manchester, 1975); M. Damiata, Guglielmo d'Ockham: Povertà e potere (Studi Francescani, 75, nos. 1–4; 1978; 76, nos. 3–4; 1979); M. McC. Adams, William of Ockham (Publications in Medieval Studies, 26; 2 vols., Notre Dame, Ind., 1987). Commemorative vols. of Franciscan Studies, 44–6 (1984–6); From Ockham to Wyclif, ed. A. Hudson and M. Wilks (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 5; Oxford, 1987); Die Gegenwart Ockhams, ed. W. Vossenkuhl and R. Schönberger (Weinheim, 1990). L. Baudry, Lexique Philosophique de Guillaume d'Ockham (1958). Works on Ockham (1919–49) are listed by V. Heynck, OFM, in Wilhelm Ockham (1349–1949): Aufsätze su seiner Philosophie und Theologie (Franziskanische Studien, 32; 1950), pp. 164–83; J. P. Reilly, 'Ockham Bibliography: 1950–1967', Franciscan Studies, 28 (1968), pp. 197–214. G. Gál, OFM, in NCE 14 (1967), pp. 932–5, s.v.

William of St-Thierry (1075/80–1148), theologian and spiritual writer. Of noble family, he was born at Liège, probably educated there and at *Reims, *c.*1100 entered the *Benedictine Abbey of St-Nicasius at Reims, and *c.*1120 was elected Abbot of St-Thierry near Reims. In 1131 he took part in the first General Chapter of the Benedictines of the province of Reims, held in that city, and he appears to have held an influential position among the Benedictine Abbots of the area. Before his election as Abbot he made the acquaintance of St *Bernard, with whom he formed a close friendship. He was long anxious to join St Bernard at *Clairvaux, being dissuaded by the resistance of St Bernard himself; in 1135 he resigned his abbacy and joined a group of Cistercian monks from Igny who were establishing a house at Signy in the Ardennes.

Although he was drawn to the contemplative life, William devoted much of his energies to theological study. His first two treatises, De Contemplando Deo and De Natura et Dignitate Amoris, discuss the rapport between knowledge and love. After completing his first exposition on the Song of Songs, which he discussed with St Bernard when both were ill at Clairvaux, he turned to the Epistle to the Romans and the problem of grace: in what way does God give us His love and how do we receive it? In answer to his questions St Bernard drafted for him the De Gratia et Libero Arbitrio (1128), and in the same year William dedicated to Bernard his own De Sacramento Altaris, on man's encounter with God in the Eucharist. Before leaving St-Thierry he also compiled a treatise De Natura Animae et Corporis in which he tried to synthesize the teaching of the E. and W. Fathers on the relation of the body and soul. In 1138 he wrote to St Bernard pointing out the defects of Peter *Abelard's views on the Trinity and Redemption; he urged St Bernard to take up his pen against Abelard, and in defence of orthodoxy he himself wrote his Disputatio adversus Abelardum and attacked the teaching of *William of Conches in De Erroribus Guillielmi de Conches. These works were followed by two treatises on faith, Speculum Fidei and Enigma Fidei, written between 1140 and 1144. After he went to Signy he also wrote a second, much more individualistic, commentary on the Song of Songs and completed his Meditativae Orationes. The last years of his life were devoted to a synthesis of his doctrine and experience in the famous Epistola ad Fratres de Monte Dei de Vita Solitaria, known as the 'Golden Letter', which has often been attributed to St Bernard. His final work was devoted to a Life of Bernard, which he never completed. All his works, both ascetical and didactic, were remarkable for their wide knowledge of the Bible and the Fathers, Eastern as well as Western.

Opera ed. B. Tissier, Ord. Cist., Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, 4 (Bonnefontaine, 1662), pp. 1–237; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 180. 201–726; other works among those of St Bernard, ibid. 182. 531–3, and 184. 307–436. Modern edns. by M.-M. Davy of the Epistola ad Fratres de Monte Dei (Études de Philosophie médiévale, 29; 2 vols., 1940–49), of his De Contemplando Deo and De Natura et Dignitate Amoris (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1953), of his Comm. on the Song of Songs (ibid., 1958), and of his Speculum Fidei and Enigma Fidei (ibid., 1959); by J.-M. Déchanet, OSB, of his Comm. on the Song of Songs, with Fr. tr. by M. Dumortier, OCSO (SC 82; 1962), and, with his own Fr. tr., of Epistola ad Fratres de Monte Dei (ibid. 223; 1975), and of Speculum Fidei (ibid. 301; 1982); modern edns., with Fr. tr., by J. Hourlier, OSB, of his De Contemplando Deo and Oratio Domni Willelmi (ibid. 61; 1959) and of his Meditativae Orationes (ibid. 324; 1985) and by M. Lemoine of his De Natura du Corporis et Animae (Auteurs latins du moyen âge, 1988). Comm. on Rom. ed. P. Verdeyen, SJ (CCCM 86; 1989). Eng. tr. of his works by Sr. Penelope, CSMV, and others (Cistercian Fathers Series, 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, 24 (pp. 104–80), 27, 30, etc.; 1970 ff.).

Life by an anonymous author (d. 1148), ed. A. Poncelet, SJ, 'Vie ancienne de Guillaume de Saint-Thierry', in Mélanges Godefroid Kurth, 1 (Liège, 1908), pp. 85–96. J.-M. Déchanet, OSB, Guillaume de Saint-Thierry: L'homme et son œuvre (Bibliothèque Médiévale; 1942; Eng. tr., Cistercian Studies Series, 10; Spencer, Mass., 1972); id., Guillaume de Saint-Thierry: Aux sources d'une pensée (Théologie Historique, 49 [1978]); M.-M. Davy, Théologie et Mystique de Guillaume de Saint-Thierry, 1: La Connaissance de Dieu (Études de Théologie et d'histoire de la Spiritualité, 14; 1954; all pub.). Saint Thierry: Une Abbaye du VI^e au XX^e siècle (Saint Thierry, 1979; Acts of a Colloquium at the Abbey in 1976); Eng. tr. by J. Carfantan, William, Abbot of St Thierry (Cistercian Studies Series, 94; Kalamazoo, Mich. [1987]). D. N. Bell, The Image and Likeness: The Augustinian Spirituality of William of St Thierry (Cistercian Studies, 78; 1984). P. Verdeyen, La Théologie mystique de Guillaume de Saint-Thierry (Paris [1990]). L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., La Spiritualité de Cîteaux (1955; Eng. tr., 1958), chs. 4 and 5. M. B. Pennington, OCSO, The Last of the Fathers (Studies in Monasticism, 1; Still River, Mass., 1983), pp. 109–80. J.-M. Déchanet, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 1241–63, s.v. 'Guillaume de Saint-Thierry', with additional bibl. by R. Aubert in DHGE 22 (1988), cols. 1014–16.

William of Tyre (*c.*1130–prob. 1186) Abp. of Tyre, historian. He was born in Palestine, prob. of European (poss. Italian) parents of the merchant class. He studied at *Paris (1145–61) and *Bologna (1161–5) and was ordained priest before 1161. After returning to Tyre, he was appointed Archdeacon of Tyre in 1167 by Amaury, King of Jerusalem (1163–74), with an enhanced stipend on condition that he wrote the official 'History' of the reign ('Gesta Amalrici'). In 1168 he was sent on a diplomatic mission to *Constantinople and in 1169 summoned to Rome to answer charges of an obscure nature preferred by his Archbishop. He was appointed tutor to Amaury's son Baldwin (later Baldwin IV) in 1170 and Chancellor in 1174. In May 1175 he was consecrated Abp. of Tyre. In the next few years he took an important part in government. He led the ecclesiastical delegation from Jerusalem to the *Lateran Council of 1179, where he obtained some restriction of the independence of the military orders from the local hierarchy, and was entrusted by *Alexander III with a mission to Constantinople in connection with the union of the East and West. On his return to Palestine (1180) political intrigue prevented his being elected Patr. of Jerusalem. He continued, and prob. in 1182 revised, his 'History', adding the prologue in 1184.

William of Tyre's Historia Rerum in Partibus Transmarinis Gestarum, comprising the 'Gesta Regum' (begun *c.*1170) and the 'Gesta Amalrici', covers the period from 1095 (Preaching of the First *Crusade) to 1184. It is the primary authority from 1127 (where Fulcher of Chartres ends), and from *c.*1144 is a contemporary record. Although William's sympathies clearly lay with Raymond of Tripoli and the pullani (or native) crusaders, his work is marked by insight, tolerance, and the careful sifting of evidence from a wide range of sources, as well as by the clear delineation of the physical and mental features of the characters portrayed. It was translated into French in the 12th or 13th cent., and in this form had a wide circulation and many continuations. Another work by William of Tyre, the 'Gesta Orientalium Principum', partly based on the Arabic chronicle of Said-ibn-Batrik (d. 940), Patr. of Alexandria, has been lost.

Lat. text of History first pr. at Basle, 1549; repr. from edn. of J. Bongars (Hanover, 1611) in J. P. Migne, PL 201. 200–892; Lat. text, with Old Fr. tr. [ed. A. Beugnot and A. Prévost], in Recueil des historiens des croisades: Historiens occidentaux, 1 (Paris, 2 pts., 1844); Eng. tr., with notes and full bibl., by E. A. Babcock and A. C. Krey (2 vols., 'Records of Civilization', 35; 1943); crit. edn. of Lat. by R. B. C. Huygens (CCCM 63 and 63A; 1986). 13th-cent. Fr. version, ed. P. Paris (2 vols., Paris, 1879). P. W. Edbury and J. G. Rowe, William of Tyre: Historian of the Latin East (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 4th ser. 8; 1988), with bibl.

The text of the Continuation of William of Tyre, covering the period 1184–97, ed. M. R. Morgan (Documents relatifs à l'histoire des croisades publiés par l'Academie des Inscription et Belles Lettres, 14; 1982). Id., The Chronicle of Ernoul and the Continuations of William of Tyre (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1973).

William of Waynflete (*c.*1395–1486), Bp. of *Winchester. Educated possibly at Winchester College and then at one of the colleges or halls in Oxford, in 1420 he was ordained priest and also appointed master of St Mary Magdalen Hospital, nr. Winchester. By 1430 he was headmaster of Winchester College and in 1442 he was made provost of the newly founded Eton College and shaped its educational development. On *Henry VI's recommendation he succeeded Cardinal H. *Beaufort as Bp. of Winchester in 1447, and in 1448 obtained licence for founding a hall at Oxford, dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, in order to foster the study of theology and philosophy; in 1457–8 it was refounded as Magdalen College. As a moderate Lancastrian and a favourite of the King, he took an increasingly prominent part in public affairs, being delegated to mediate with Jack Cade's rebels in 1450 and with the Duke of York in 1452. In 1456 Henry appointed him Chancellor, and in the next year he was assessor in the trial of Bp. R. *Pecock. He resigned the Chancellorship in 1460 and soon afterwards acquiesced in the accession of Edward IV, although he renewed his support for Henry VI in 1470–1. He completed the building of Eton College and Magdalen, which he left the largest and best endowed of any Oxford college, besides in 1480 founding (in conjunction with John Anwykill) Magdalen College School and a school at Wainfleet, Lincs.

There is a short panegyrical Life by J. Budden (Oxford, 1602; repr. by W. Bates (ed.), Vitae Selectorum Aliquot Virorum qui Doctrina, Dignitate aut Pietate Inclaruere (London, 1681), pp. 51–89); some further information added by P. *Heylyn in Memorial of Bishop Waynflete, ed. J. R. *Bloxam (Caxton Society, 1851). Fuller modern Life by R. Chandler (London, 1811). V. Davis, William Waynflete: Bishop and Educationalist (Studies in the History of Medieval Religion, 6; Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1993). I. S. Leadham in DNB 60 (1899), pp. 85–9, s.v. 'Waynflete'; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 2001–3, s.v. 'Waynflete, William'.

William of Wykeham (1324–1404), Bp. of *Winchester. He was born of a poor family at Wickham, Hants, and educated at Winchester. He passed *c.*1343 from the service of the Constable of Winchester Castle into that of Edward III, who appointed him chaplain and rector of Irstead, Norfolk, in 1349. In 1356 he became clerk of the royal works at Henley and Easthampstead and surveyor of the works at Windsor. He was also responsible for the erection of Queenborough Castle in the Isle of Sheppey. In 1364 he became Keeper of the Privy Seal. Elected Bp. of Winchester in 1366, he was consecrated in 1367 and became Chancellor in the same year. Being blamed for the disasters of the French war, he was driven from office during an attack of anticlericalism in 1371. He devoted himself to the organization of his diocese, the reform of abuses, esp. in religious houses, and the plans for his future academic foundations. In 1376, owing to the hostility of John of Gaunt, he was accused in Parliament of malversation. Although found guilty on only one minor count, he was deprived of the temporalities of his see and also expelled from court. Although restored to favour before the death of Edward III and declared guiltless by Richard II in 1377, he took little further interest in politics. As a member of the commission of regency appointed in 1386 and as Chancellor from 1389 to 1391, he endeavoured to exercise a moderating influence both on the lords appellant and the King.

At Oxford he founded a college of 100 members dedicated to St Mary, but soon known as New College, for which he obtained a royal and Papal charter of foundation in 1379 (formally opened, 1386). At Winchester he established a school for 70 poor scholars to feed his Oxford foundation (Papal bull, 1378; royal charter, 1382). This college, which was the first independent and self-governing school in the country, was opened in 1394.

His episcopal Register, ed. T. F. Kirby (2 vols., Hampshire Record Society, 1896–9). G. H. Moberly, Life of William of Wykeham (1887), with two brief Lives written shortly after his death, the one prob. by Dr Thomas Aylward, one of his executors, the other perh. by Robert Heete (d. 1422), pp. 286–92 and 293–308 respectively. [T. Martin], Historica Descriptio Complectens Vitam ac Res Gestas Beatissimi Viri Guiliemi Wicami (London, 1597). R. *Lowth, The Life of William of Wykeham (1758; short suppl., 1759). M. E. C. Walcott, William of Wykeham and his Colleges (1852), esp. 'The Life of William of Wykeham', pp. 3–100. G. C. Heseltine, William of Wykeham: A Commentary (1932), with bibl. W. [G.] Hayter, William of Wykeham (1970). J. Tait in DNB 63 (1900), pp. 225–31; A. F. Leach in DECH, pp. 659–61, both s.v. 'Wykeham'.

William of York, St (d. 1154), Abp. of *York. William FitzHerbert was the younger son of Herbert of Winchester, chamberlain and treasurer of Henry I; he was a chaplain to King Stephen and by 1138 (prob. by 1130), Canon and Treasurer of York Minster. Elected Abp. of York in 1141, he received the temporalities of the see from the King, but, being accused of simony by the *Cistercians, he was refused consecration by *Theobald, Abp. of *Canterbury. Both sides appealed to Innocent II, who, in 1143, decided that William might be consecrated if he was cleared by the oath of himself and the Dean of York. Prob. consecrated by *Henry of Blois in 1143, he ruled his diocese conscientiously, but he failed to obtain from Card. Imar the *pallium which Lucius II had sent him in 1145. The whole history of his disputed election and subsequent deposition and restoration reflect the power struggle between Henry of Blois and St *Bernard within the Papal curia. In 1147 William was forced to go the Pope, *Eugenius III (a Cistercian), who suspended him from the exercise of his episcopal functions until the Dean of York (now Bp. of *Durham) cleared him in person, having previously done so by proxy. After William's relatives had attacked the Cistercian abbey of *Fountains, where Henry Murdac, the rival candidate for the archbishopric, was abbot, William was deposed at the Council of *Reims in 1147. Taking refuge with Henry of Blois, he lived in great austerity at *Winchester until the death of Eugenius in 1153, when he appealed for restoration. On the death of Henry Murdac in the same year, Anastasius IV restored him and gave him the pallium. As William entered York in 1154, the bridge collapsed, but the travellers escaped injury, supposedly through his sanctity and prayers. He was respected in his diocese, but died within a month of his return, possibly by poison. Buried in York Minister, he was regarded a martyr and miracles were reported at his tomb. He was canonized by *Honorius III in 1227; his relics were translated to a shrine behind the High Altar in 1284. Feast day, 8 June; that of his translation, 8 Jan., until 1478 when it was transferred to the first Sunday after *Epiphany. His cult remained local.

The earliest sources, besides the letters of St Bernard (q.v. for edns.), are the contemporary accounts by William of Newburgh, Historia Rerum Anglicarum (ed. R. Howlett, 1, RS, 1884, pp. 55–7 and 79–81) and (up to 1153) John of Hexham's continuation of *Simeon of Durham's Historia Regum (Symeonis Monachi Opera Omnia, ed. T. Arnold, 2, RS, 1885, pp. 306 f., 311, 313–21). An anonymous Life, preserved in a 13th-cent. MS in the Harleian collection (2, fols. 76–88), is pr. in J. Raine, Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, 2 (RS, 1886), pp. 270–91, with introd. pp. xviii f. and other material, pp. 220–7, 388–97, and 531–50.

The most important modern work is D. *Knowles, OSB, 'The Case of Saint William of York', Cambridge Historical Journal, 5 (1935–37), pp. 162–77 and 212–14, with bibl., repr. in The Historian and Character and Other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 76–97. Other arts. by C. T. Clay, 'The Early Treasurers of York', Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, 35 (1943), pp. 7–34, esp. pp. 8–10; C. H. Talbot, 'New Documents in the Case of Saint William of York', Cambridge Historical Journal, 10 (1950–2), pp. 1–15; A. Morey, 'Canonist Evidence in the Case of St William of York', ibid., pp. 352 f. T. F. Tout in DNB 19 (1889), pp. 173–6, s.v. 'Fitzherbert, William'.

Williams, Charles Walter Stansby (1886–1945), poet and theological writer. Educated at *St Albans and at University College, London, he worked from 1908 until his death in the London publishing business of the Oxford University Press. After some early poetry and plays, of which he later came to think poorly, he began to publish novels, largely devoted to supernatural themes, among them War in Heaven (1930), Descent into Hell (1937) and All Hallows' Eve (1944); and also a play, Thomas Cranmer of Canterbury, written for the Canterbury festival of 1936. Of his theological writings prob. the most significant was The Descent of the Dove (1939), an unconventional and penetrating study of the Church as governed by the activity of the Holy Spirit in history. His leading theological ideas were his concept of romantic love in which the image of God in the beloved is revealed to the lover (an idea most fully expounded in The Figure of Beatrice, 1943), and his quite literal understanding of substitution, of which the *Atonement was the culminating example. His poetic achievement culminated in his two volumes on the Arthurian theme, Taliessin through Logres (1938) and The Region of the Summer Stars (1944). Both in London and later in Oxford (in 1939–45) Williams by his life and writings did much, like his fellow-Anglicans T. S. *Eliot and C. S. *Lewis, to commend Christianity in a Catholic and sacramental form to many who would have been unmoved by conventional apologetic.

Williams's unfinished prose work 'The Figure of Arthur' ed., with comm. on his Arthurian poems, by C. S. Lewis and pub. as Arthurian Torso (1948). Further poems, ed. D. L. Dodds (Arthurian Studies, 24; Cambridge, 1991). Collected Plays, with introd. by J. Heath-Stubbs (1963). Selected essays ed., with biog. and crit. introd., by A. Ridler (London, 1958). Essays Presented to Charles Williams, by D. [L.] *Sayers and others, with preface by C. S. Lewis (1947). M. McD. Shideler, The Theology of Romantic Love: A Study in the Writings of Charles Williams (New York [1962]); G. [T.] Cavaliero, Charles Williams: Poet of Theology (1983); A. M. Hadfield, Charles Williams: An Exploration of his Life and Work (New York and Oxford, 1983). G. W. S. Hopkins in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 958 f., s.v.

Williams, Isaac (1802–65), *Tractarian poet and theologian. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Oxford, where he was drawn into the Tractarian Movement through the influence of J. *Keble. He was ordained priest in 1831, became tutor of Trinity College in 1832 and dean in the next year, and about the same time curate to J. H. *Newman at St Mary's. Besides contributing poetry to the Lyra Apostolica (1836) he wrote the famous Tract 80 on 'Reserve in Communicating Religious Knowledge', which lost him the election to the chair of poetry (1842). The defeat caused him to withdraw from Oxford and spend the rest of his life in retirement, occupied chiefly with writing sermons and poetry. Among his best-known poetical writings are The Cathedral (1838), interpreting Gothic architecture as a symbol of Christian doctrine, and The Baptistery (1842), containing an attack on the RC Church.

The Autobiography of Isaac Williams, ed. Sir G. Prevost (1892). O. W. Jones, Isaac Williams and his Circle (1971). W. P. Courtney in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 408–11.

Williams, John (1582–1650), Abp. of *York. Descended from an ancient Welsh family, he was educated at St John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1603. Through the patronage of *James I and Chancellor Ellesmere, he received a large accumulation of benefices, including the bishopric of *Lincoln (1621), and in addition the Lord Keepership. His accommodating and intriguing character occasioned the dislike of *Charles I and W. *Laud, leading to heavy fines in 1637 and 1639 in the Star Chamber. During the Long Parliament Williams headed a party of compromise in the Lords and, recovering royal favour, was translated to York in 1641. He proved an assiduous royalist throughout the Civil War, but was allowed to spend his last years in retirement in Wales.

Works repr., mainly photographically, with introd. and notes by B. Williams (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, 14; Sutton Courtenay [1980]). J. Hacket, Scrinia Reserata: A Memorial Offered to the Deservings of John Williams (1693). Life by A. Philips (Cambridge, 1700). R. D. Roberts, Mitre and Musket: John Williams, Lord Keeper, Archbishop of York, 1582–1650 (1938), with bibl. R. B. Knox, 'The Social Teaching of Archbishop John Williams', Studies in Church History, 8 (ed. G. J. Cuming and D. Baker; 1972), pp. 179–85; G. W. Thomas, 'James I, Equity and Lord Keeper John Williams', EHR 91 (1976), pp. 506–28; H. T. Blethen, 'Bishop John Williams's Recantation of his Holy Table, Name and Thing, 1638', JTS, NS 29 (1978), pp. 157–60. S. R. Gardiner in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 414–20.

Williams, John (1796–1839), missionary of the *LMS. Born in London, after a commercial education he was accepted in 1816 by the LMS, which had chosen the *South Pacific for its earliest work. In 1817 he sailed for the Society Islands, and in 1818 settled on Raiatea, where the missionaries opened a chapel and also published a code of laws. In 1822 he went further afield, visiting the Cook Islands, and claimed the discovery of Rarotonga. In 1830 he brought the first LMS teachers to Samoa. On 20 Nov. 1839 he landed at Dillon's Bay, Erromanga, in Vanuatu (New Hebrides), where he and John Harris were killed and became Protestant 'martyrs'. Williams is chiefly notable for his practical missionary skills, his advocacy of a missionary ship, and the burst of missionary enthusiasm that the news of his death aroused in England. A succession of ships of the name John Williams have been employed in furthering the evangelization of the South Pacific.

There is much autobiographical material in his A Narrative of Missionary Enterprises in the South Sea Islands (1837). E. Prout, Memoirs of the Life of the Rev. John Williams (1843). Other Lives by [W.] C. Northcott (London, 1939) and B. Mathews (ibid., 1947). J. Gutch, Beyond the Reefs: The Life of John Williams, Missionary (1974). E. I. Carlyle in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 423–5.

Williams, Norman Powell (1883–1943), Anglican theologian. Educated at *Durham School and at *Christ Church, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Magdalen College in 1906. From 1909 to 1927 he was Chaplain-Fellow of Exeter College, and from 1927 until his death Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church. He was a leading *Anglo-Catholic theologian. His principal works were The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (1927; *Bampton Lectures for 1924) and The Grace of God (1930).

E. W. Kemp, N. P. Williams (1954; memoir, with sermons). Id. in DNB, 1941 1950, pp. 959 f., s.v.

Williams, Ralph Vaughan. See VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, RALPH.

Williams, Roger (*c.*1603–83), champion of religious *toleration. Educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, and apparently ordained in the C of E, he sailed for N. America in 1630 in search of religious liberty. When he discovered that restrictions on religious freedom existed also at Boston, he set up a schismatic Church. He soon found himself in conflict with the civil powers, and in 1635 was ordered to leave Massachusetts and took refuge with the Indians who dwelt beyond the confines of the state, where he founded a settlement to which he gave the name 'Providence' (1636). In 1639 he established there the first Baptist church in the colonies. In 1643 he came back to England to try to secure a title for the new colony, and in the following year his friend, Sir Henry *Vane, procured him the desired charter, and Williams returned. While in England he published anonymously his vigorous pamphlet in defence of religious liberty, The Bloody Tenent of Persecution (1644). The constitution of his colony (later 'Rhode Island') included wide religious latitude, and when the *Quakers came to America in 1656 Williams granted them political toleration, though he sharply attacked their doctrines. He was a friend of the American Indians and learnt the language of the Narragansett tribe.

Complete Writings ed. J. H. Trumbull and others for the Narragansett Club (6 vols., Providence, RI, 1866–74; facsimile repr., with additional matter in vol. 7; New York, 1963). Correspondence ed. G. W. LaFantasie (2 vols., Hanover, NH, and London, 1988). Studies by O. S. Straus (London and New York, 1894), E. J. Carpenter (New York, 1909), E. Easton (Boston, 1930), J. E. Ernst (New York, 1932), S. H. Brockunier (ibid., 1940), P. Miller (ibid., 1953), O. E. Winslow (ibid., 1957), H. Chupack (ibid. [1969]), and H. Spurgin (Studies in American Religion, 34; Lewiston, Queenston, and Lampeter [1989]). E. S. Morgan, Roger Williams: The Church and the State (New York [1967]). W. C. Gilpin, The Millenarian Piety of Roger Williams (Chicago and London, 1979). E. S. Gaustad, Liberty of Conscience: Roger Williams in America (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1991]). S. H. Brockunier in Dict. Amer. Biog. 20 (1936), pp. 286–9, s.v.

Williams, Rowland (1817–70), Anglican scholar. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1839. Ordained priest in 1843, he was appointed tutor at King's College, and, in 1850, vice-principal and professor of Hebrew at St David's College, Lampeter. In 1856 he published his most important work, Christianity and Hinduism. In 1860 Williams contributed an article dealing with biblical criticism to Essays and Reviews*, which caused him to be prosecuted for heterodoxy by the Bp. of Salisbury (W. K. *Hamilton). The Court of *Arches having sentenced him to one year's suspension, the sentence was annulled by the Privy Council in 1864. Having left Lampeter in 1862, he retired to the living of Broad Chalke, nr. Salisbury.

Life and Letters of Rowland Williams, D.D., ed. E. Williams (his widow; 2 vols., 1874). Short study by O. W. Jones (Llandysul, Cardiganshire, 1991). E. Williams in DNB 61 (1900), pp. 450–3.

Willibald, St (700–86), Bp. of Eichstätt. He was possibly a relative of St *Boniface. After education at an otherwise unknown monastery at Waltham in Hants, he made a pilgrimage to *Rome in 722 with his father, St Richard, who died on the way at Lucca, and his brother, St Wynnebald. In 724 he set out from Rome for the East (Sicily, Cyprus, the Holy Land, Tyre, *Constantinople, and Nicaea). He eventually arrived back at *Monte Cassino in 730, and spent the next ten years there. In 740 he was again in Rome, whence Gregory III sent him to Germany. Boniface ordained him priest in 741 or 742 and shortly afterwards bishop. Before 750, with the assistance of Wynnebald, he founded a double monastery at Heidenheim in Württemberg, of which his sister, St *Walburga (q.v.) became Abbess after Wynnebald's death. Willibald was one of the 27 bishops and 17 abbots who joined in the confraternity agreement at Attigny in 762. He continued until his death actively consolidating the Church in Franconia. His body still lies in the cathedral of Eichstätt. Feast day, 7 July.

St Willibald's Vita is contained in the 'Hodoeporicon', an early and valuable history of his travels, written by a nun of Heidenheim who was a relative of St Willibald; text, with introd., and other material, in AASS, Jul. 2 (1731), pp. 485–519; better ed. O. Holder-Egger in MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 86–106; Eng. tr. by C. H. Talbot, The Anglo-Saxon Missionaries in Germany (1954), pp. 153–77. F. Heidingsfelder (ed.), Die Regesten der Bischöfe von Eichstätt (Veröffentlichungen der Gesellschaft für Fränkische Geschichte, 6. Reihe, 1; 1915–38), pp. 1–15 [1915]. The text of the Attigny agreement is pr. in MGH, Concilia, 2 (pt. 1; 1906), pp. 72 f. W. Grothe, Der heilige Richard und seine Kinder (Berlin diss., 1908). B. Bischoff, 'Wer ist die Nonne von Heidenheim?', Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, 49 (1931), pp. 387 f. [the nun's name was Hugeburc, concealed under a cryptogram in Clm. 1086]. M. Coens, 'Légende et miracles du roi S. Richard', Anal. Boll. 49 (1931), pp. 353–84 (text of Vita Sancti Richardi, pp. 385–97; but the introd. contains information and valuable texts on St Willibald). W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures, 1943; Oxford, 1946), esp. pp. 43 f. and 81. H. Löwe, 'Bonifatius und die bayerisch-fränkische Spannung', Jahrbuch für fränkische Landesforschung, 15 (1955), pp. 85–127; K.-U. Jäschke, 'Die Gründungszeit der mitteldeutschen Bistümer und das Jahr des Concilium Germanicum', in H. Beumann (ed.), Festschrift für Walter Schlesinger, 2 (Cologne, 1974), pp. 71–136, esp. pp. 80–101 ('Die Bischofsweihe Willibalds'). See also works cited s.v. BONIFACE, ST.

Willibrord, St (658–739), 'Apostle of Frisia'. A native of Northumbria, he was educated at *Ripon under the direction of St *Wilfrid. In 678 he went to an Anglo-Saxon religious community in Ireland at 'Rath Melsigi' (now thought to be Clonmelsch, Co. Carlow), where he remained for 12 years and was ordained priest. In 690, with about a dozen companions, he made his way as a missionary to W. Frisia. In 693, on a visit to Rome, he secured Papal support for his mission, and on a second visit, in 695, was consecrated Abp. of the Frisians by Pope *Sergius. On his return *Pepin granted him a site for his cathedral just outside Utrecht, and in 698 he founded the monastery of *Echternach in Luxemburg. In 714 he was temporarily driven from Utrecht by Duke Radbod, but despite this and other difficulties Willibrord continued his mission with success, making his way as far as *Denmark, Heligoland, and Thuringia. He received staunch support from the Carolingian Mayors of the Palace in Austrasia, as well as assistance from St *Boniface. Feast day, 7 Nov.

The Society of St Willibrord, founded *c.*1910, exists to promote closer relations between the C of E and the *Old Catholic Churches.

Prose and metrical Lives by *Alcuin pr. in AASS, Nov. 3 (1910), pp. 435–57, with other primary material, pp. 458–500, and excellent introd. by A. Poncelet, SJ, pp. 414–35, incl. refs. to earlier works; prose Life of Alcuin also ed. W. Levison in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 7 (pt. 1; 1913), pp. 81–141. 'Miracula' also ed. id. in MGH, Scriptores, 30 (pt. 2; 1934), pp. 1368–71, with further refs. Eng. tr. of Alcuin's prose Life in C. H. Talbot, The Anglo-Saxon Missionaries in Germany (1954), pp. 3–22. G. H. Verbist, Saint Willibrord, apôtre des Pays-Bas et fondateur d'Echternach (Université de Louvain. Recueil des Travaux publiés par les membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, 2nd ser. 59; 1939). Further Lives by M. A. Erens, O.Praem. (Tongerloo, 1939) and C. Wampach (Luxembourg, 1953). W. Levison, 'St. Willibrord and his Place in History', Durham University Journal, 32 (1939–40), pp. 23–41, repr. in id., Aus rheinischer und fränkischer Frühzeit (Dusseldorf, 1948), pp. 314–29, with other papers on Willibrord, pp. 304–13 and 330–46; id., England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures, 1943; Oxford, 1946), esp. pp. 53–69. G. Kiesel, Der heilige Willibrord im Zeugnis der bildenden Kunst (Luxembourg, 1969). N. Gauthier, L'Évangélisation des Pays de la Moselle (1980), esp. pp. 314–23. D. Ó Croinín, 'Rath Melsigi, Willibrord, and the earliest Echternach Manuscripts', Peritia, 3 (1984), pp. 17–42. Willibrord, Apostel der Niederlande, Gründer der Abtei Echternach: Gedenkgabe zum 1250. Todestag des angelsächsichen Missionars, ed. G. Kiesel and J. Schroeder (Saint-Paul, Luxembourg, 1989). A. G. Weiler, Willibrords Missie (Hilversum [1989]). A. Bange and A. G. Weiler (eds.), Willibrord . . .: Voordrachten gehouden tijdens het Willibrord-congres, Nijmegen, 28–30 september 1989 (Middeleeuwse Studies, 6; Nijmegen, 1990). Facsimile edn. of The Calendar of St Willibrord, ed. H. A. Wilson (HBS 55; 1918).

On the Society of St Willibrord see G. Huelin, St Willibrord and his Society (1960), pp. 49–77; J. Burley and J. Witten in G. Huelin (ed.), Old Catholics and Anglicans 1931 1981 (Oxford, 1983), pp. 62–85.

Wilmart, André (1876–1941), *patristic scholar. A native of Orléans, he studied under P. Batiffol, with whom he published the Tractatus Origenis (1900). In 1901 he entered the *Benedictine Order at *Solesmes and was ordained priest in 1906. His demonstration (1906) that the Tractatus were the work of *Gregory of Elvira helped to establish his reputation. From now on he contributed constantly to the Revue Bénédictine. His main interests were Latin patristics (esp. the Carolingian epoch) and also Latin (esp. *Gallican) liturgies, here stimulated by his friendship with E. *Bishop. His longer works include L'Ancien Cantatorium de l'église de Strasbourg (1928), an edition of twelve sermons of St *Augustine in the Miscellanea Agostiniana (vol. 1, 1930), and Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen âge latin (1932). In the field of liturgy special importance attaches to his contention that the letters attributed to St *Germanus of Paris, hitherto a primary authority for the Gallican rite, were spurious; to his edition of the *Bobbio Missal (1924); and to his work on medieval books of private prayers.

Lettres de Jeunesse et Lettres d'Amitié, ed. G. de Luca and M. L. Baud (Uomini e Dottrine, 6; 1963). J. Bignami Odier, L. Brou, OSB, and A. Vernet, Bibliographie sommaire des travaux du père André Wilmart (Sussidi Eruditi, 5; 1953), with biog. introd. pp. 7–10, docs. on his life pp. 13–27, and list of obituary notices p. 10.

Wilsnack. A former place of pilgrimage nr. *Wittenberg. After a fire in the church of Wilsnack in 1383 three consecrated hosts were said to have been found unharmed, but marked with drops of blood. The alleged miracle, followed by striking answers to prayer and other extraordinary events, soon drew to the spot crowds of pilgrims, which made of the small village a prosperous town. Though frequently suspected of fraud, e.g. by J. *Huss (1405) and *Nicholas of Cusa (1451), the pilgrimage was encouraged by *Eugenius IV (1447) and *Nicholas V (1453), and continued to flourish until, in 1552, Wilsnack became Protestant and the miraculous hosts were burnt by Joachim Ellefeld, an Evangelical preacher.

E. Breest, 'Das Wunderblut von Wilsnack, 1383–1552. Quellenmässige Darstellung seiner Geschichte', Märkische Forschungen, 16 (1881), pp. 193–248. B. Hennig, 'Kurfürst Friedrich II und das Wunderblut zu Wilsnack', Forschungen zur Brandenburgischen und Preussischen Geschichte, 19 (pt. 2; 1906), pp. 73–104. G. Wentz in Germania Sacra, herausg. vom Kaiser-Wilhelm-Institut für deutsche Geschichte, 1 (pt. 2; 1933), pp. 116–19, with full bibl. pp. 7 f. G. Kawerau in PRE 21 (1908), pp. 346–50, s.v.

Wilson, Daniel (1778–1858), Bp. of Calcutta. The son of a wealthy silk-merchant, whom he was expected to succeed in the business, he was ordained in 1801. In 1807 he became Vice-Principal of St Edmund Hall, Oxford. He resigned in 1812 to succeed Richard Cecil, by whom he had been much influenced, as minister of St John's, Bedford Row, in London. This chapel, now demolished, was a stronghold of *Evangelicalism. Its congregation included W. *Wilberforce and other members of the *Clapham Sect, and Wilson became the leading Evangelical clergyman in the capital. In 1824 he was appointed vicar of Islington, the living being in the gift of his family. Here he introduced an early celebration of the Holy Communion to supplement that at midday, founded the annual Islington Clerical Conference (1827), and the *Lord's Day Observance Society (1831). In 1832, at the age of 54, he accepted the bishopric of Calcutta, which extended over the entire presidency of Bengal and gave him some authority over the sees of Bombay and Madras; he had the title of Metropolitan but not Archbishop. He established his authority in *India, improved the provision of churches and chaplains for stations and regiments as well as improving the schools, excluded the caste system from the churches of southern India, and devoted much of his fortune and energies to the building of St Paul's cathedral in Calcutta (consecrated in 1847). Even in India he made known his criticism of the *Tractarians.

Bishop Wilson's Journal Letters, addressed to his family, during the first nine years of his Indian episcopate, ed. by his son, D. Wilson (1863). J. Bateman (son-in-law), The Life of the Right Rev. Daniel Wilson, D.D., late Lord Bishop of Calcutta and Metropolitan of India (2 vols., 1860). E. Stock, The History of the Church Missionary Society, esp. 1 (1899), pp. 290–332; 2 (1899), pp. 156–225. M. L. Loane, Oxford and the Evangelical Succession (1950), pp. 247–96. T. Seccombe in DNB 62 (1900), pp. 87–9.

Wilson, Thomas (1663–1755), Bp. of *Sodor and Man. Born at Burton, Cheshire, he was educated at Trinity College, *Dublin, for the medical profession. After ordination as deacon in 1686, he became curate to his uncle at Newchurch Kenyon, Cheshire (1687), and chaplain to the 9th Earl of Derby (1692). In 1697, after refusing a valuable plurality, he was persuaded by the Earl of Derby to accept the see of Sodor and Man. He was consecrated in 1698, installed in St German's cathedral, Peel, and, taking up his residence at Kirkmichael, held the bishopric for the rest of his long life. He promptly set himself to raise the standards of spiritual life and pastoral efficiency in the island, and was also active as church-builder, farmer, and founder of public libraries under the scheme of T. *Bray. Following his own high estimate of episcopal authority, and the freedom of the Manx Church from Acts of the English Parliament, he enforced Church discipline by his Ecclesiastical Constitutions of 1704, which inflicted public penance for slander, perjury, immorality, and other offences. This drew him into acrimonious legal disputes, notably during the governorship of Alexander Horne (1713–23), on whose wife Wilson had imposed penance for slander. In 1722 he suspended his archdeacon, R. Horrobin, for heresy, and on Horrobin's appeal to the governor Wilson was convicted and imprisoned for a time. When in 1724 the case was finally decided in his favour, Wilson was offered, but declined, the see of *Exeter in compensation. Theologically he had many affinities with the *Nonjurors. His devotional writings, esp. his Sacra Privata (posthumous, ed. C. Cruttwell, 1781), long enjoyed a wide circulation; and his Principles and Duties of Christianity (projected 1699, first printed 1707; 'the Manx Catechism') was the first book printed in Manx. Many of his sermons were also published.

He was commemorated in the Isle of Man by the 'Bishop Wilson Theological College' (closed, 1943) at Kirkmichael.

Works ed. C. Cruttwell (2 vols., London, 1781), with Life by id., vol. 1, pp. iii–xcvi; also in LACT (7 vols. bound in 8, 1847–63), with Life by J. *Keble, vol. 1 (pts. 1 and 2). H. Stowell, The Life of . . . Thomas Wilson (1819). A. B. Ziegler, Thomas Wilson, Bischof von Sodor und Man, 1663–1755 (Seges. Philologische und literarische Studien und Texte herausgegeben von der Philosophischen Fakultät der Universität Freiburg Schweiz, 15; 1972). A. Gordon in DNB 62 (1900), pp. 248–51.

Winchelsea, Robert of (*c.*1245–1313), theologian and Abp. of *Canterbury. He studied arts at *Paris, becoming Master and, in 1267, Rector of the faculty, before returning to England in the mid-1270s to study theology at *Oxford. He was at the time rector of Wood Eaton and canon of *Lincoln. After a further period overseas from 1278, he incepted as Master and by 1288 was Regent-Master in theology and Chancellor of the University. He was then already Archdeacon of Essex, and from *c.*1290 he was resident at *St Paul's. His theological teaching, which was primarily concerned with the doctrine of the *Trinity, survives in a series of quaestiones disputatae, some of which were delivered at St Paul's, and two quodlibeta*. Although a secular doctor, he was strongly influenced by the teaching of St *Thomas Aquinas and must have been involved in the disputes over the latter's doctrine which affected the University of Oxford in the 1280s. On 13 Feb. 1293 he was elected Abp. of Canterbury, but he returned from Rome only in Jan. 1295 after a lengthy papal vacancy. As Archbishop he was a determined upholder of ecclesiastical rights, reacting against the increasing control over the Church by royal government. He soon became involved in a struggle with Edward I, chiefly on the subject of taxation of the clergy in times of urgent necessitas or defence of the realm; he made vigorous use of *Boniface VIII's bull '*Clericis laicos' in order to defend the right of the English clergy to consent to clerical taxation for wars in Scotland, Gascony, and Flanders. His refusal to contribute towards the expenses of the French wars led to the temporary confiscation of his property in 1297, but his opposition bore fruit between 1297 and 1301, not least in helping the magnates to secure the King's Confirmation of Magna Carta and the Forest Charter. His strong hostility to the King's treasurer, Walter Langton, Bp. of *Lichfield, caused further deterioration in his relations with Edward, and the King was able to take his revenge after the election of Bertrand Got, Abp. of Bordeaux and a former royal clerk, as *Clement V in 1305. Taking advantage of improved relations with the Papal court and of Clement's revocation of 'Clericis laicos' and his annulment of the Confirmation of Magna Carta, the King secured Winchelsea's suspension from Canterbury in 1306. It was only Edward I's death in 1307 that brought him back to his see at the request of Edward II, but he soon found himself again in opposition to both King and Pope and in association with baronial grievances in the Ordinances of 1311. In the tradition of Stephen *Langton and Robert *Grosseteste rather than of St Thomas *Becket, Winchelsea was assiduous in the pursuit of his pastoral duties, a generous almsgiver, and, despite serious ill-health in the last six years of his life, a zealous administrator of his diocese. Attempts were made to secure his canonization in 1319–21 and in 1327, but without success.

Registrum Roberti Winchelsey, Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis, ed. R. Graham (*Canterbury and York Society, 51–52; 1942–56). A. G. Little and F. Pelster, SJ, Oxford Theology and Theologians c. A.D. 1282–1302 (OHS 96; 1934), esp. pp. 122 f. and 137–45. C. Smith, OSB, 'Some Aspects of the Scholastic Career of Archbishop Winchelsey', Dominican Studies, 6 (1953), pp. 101–26. J. H. Denton, Robert Winchelsey and the Crown 1294 1313 (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 14; 1980). P. Glorieux in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), col. 3553, s.v., for refs. to MS sources. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 2057–9, s.v., with further refs.

Winchester. Apart from legends of no authority, the history of Christianity in Winchester begins with the foundation by King Cenwealh of Wessex *c.*648 of a church dedicated to St *Peter and St *Paul and probably designed to serve a royal residence. A bishop, Wine, was first appointed in 660, possibly when the bishopric of Wessex was transferred thither from *Dorchester, Oxon. The association of the former Roman city with the kings of Wessex, and its refoundation by King *Alfred (871–99), coupled with the fame of St *Swithun (Bp. 852–62), assisted the growth in power of the see. St *Ethelwold (Bp. 963–84) replaced the secular canons, who had formerly ruled the cathedral, by *Benedictine monks, under a prior, with the bishop as titular abbot. He and his successor, St *Alphege (Bp. 984–1006), rebuilt the cathedral on a vast scale, with rededications in 980 and 993–4. Excavations in 1962–70 revealed the plan of successive stages of the Anglo-Saxon cathedral, including the place where St Swithun was prob. originally buried. New Minster, founded by Edward the Elder (King of Wessex, 899–924) in 901–3, and Nunnaminster, founded by Alfred's wife, Ealhswith, before 902, formed with the cathedral (Old Minster) the greatest ecclesiastical group in Anglo-Saxon England, an artistic, literary, and monastic centre without later parallel in the country. A century later the cathedral was wholly rebuilt in the Norman style by Walkelin (Bp. 1070–98) on an adjacent site. Of this building the transepts survive, but the remainder was gradually transformed from Norman to Gothic. *Henry of Blois (Bp. 1129–71), the brother of King Stephen, made valuable gifts of ornaments and furnishings to the cathedral and brought from the site of the Old Minster the remains of Saxon kings and bishops now in the mortuary-chests round the presbytery; he erected six episcopal residences, incl. Wolvesey Palace and Farnham Castle, which Henry II made indefensible, but which were subsequently rebuilt and later again restored by George *Morley (Bp. 1662–84); and he founded the Hospital of St Cross, the best extant example of a medieval almshouse. Godfrey de Lucy (Bp. 1189–1204) and his successor, Peter des Roches (Bp. 1205–38), built the retrochoir and Lady chapel of the cathedral in Early English style (much altered later). The W. front and perpendicular nave were the work of William Edington (Bp. 1346–66) and *William of Wykeham (Bp. 1367–1404), who also founded the college (charter, 1382; formal entry of warden and scholars, 1394). They and their successors were commemorated by a series of splendid *chantry chapels in the nave and near the shrine of St Swithun in the retrochoir. The magnificent stone screen was prob. completed by 1476. At the *Dissolution (1539) William Kingsmill, the last prior, became the first Dean of the new foundation.

The see of Winchester ranks fifth among the English bishoprics (after *Canterbury, *York, London, and *Durham) and the bishop always has a seat in the House of Lords (irrespective of his seniority). He is also Prelate of the Order of the Garter and Provincial Chancellor of Canterbury. Among later Bps. of Winchester of note are Henry *Beaufort (1404–47), *William of Waynflete (1447–86), Richard *Foxe (1501–28), T. *Wolsey (1529–30), S. *Gardiner (1531–51 and 1553–5), L. *Andrewes (1619–26), B. *Duppa (1660–2), G. Morley (1662–84), B. *Hoadly (1734–61), C. R. *Sumner (1827–69), S. *Wilberforce (1869–73), R. T. *Davidson (1895–1903), H. E. *Ryle (1903–11), E. S. *Talbot (1911–23), C. F. Garbett (1932–42), and A. T. P. Williams (1952–61). A Papal bull of 1500 transferring the *Channel Islands from the diocese of Coutances (in France) to Winchester was ineffective, and it was only on the orders of Queen *Elizabeth I in 1568–9 that they were united with the rest of the diocese. This was reduced in size in 1877, when the parliamentary divisions of East and Mid Surrey were separated from Winchester and joined to *Rochester, and much more drastically when the new sees of Guildford and Portsmouth were created in 1927. It now comprises most of Hants (except the SE and the Isle of Wight), a small part of Dorset, and the Channel Islands.

The Episcopal Registers of John de Pontois [Bp. 1282–1304], ed. C. Deedes (Canterbury and York Society, 19 and 30; 1915–24); Henry Woodlock [Bp. 1305–16], ed. A. W. Goodman (ibid. 43–4; 1940–41); John Sandale [Bp. 1316–19] and Rigaud of Assier [Bp. 1320–23], ed. F. J. Baigent (Hampshire Record Society [8]; 1897); William Edington [Bp. 1346–66], ed. S. F. Hockey, OSB (Hampshire Record Series, 7–8; 1986–7); William of Wykeham [Bp. 1367–1404], ed. T. F. Kirby (Hampshire Record Society, 11 and 13; 1896–9); Thomas Wolsey [Bp. 1529–30], ed. F. T. Madge and H. Chitty (Canterbury and York Society, 32; 1926); Stephen Gardiner [Bp. 1531–51 and 1553–5] and John Ponet [Bp. 1551–3], ed. H. Chitty and H. E. Malden (ibid. 37; 1930); and John White [Bp. 1556–9], with prefatory note by W. H. *Frere (ibid. 16; 1914). The Pipe Roll of the Bishopric of Winchester for the Fourth Year of the Pontificate of Peter des Roches, 1208–1209, ed. under the supervision of H. Hall (Studies in Economics and Political Science, ed. W. A. S. Hewins; 1903); N. R. Holt (ed.), The Pipe Roll of the Bishopric of Winchester 1210–1211 (Manchester [1964]). G. W. Kitchin and F. T. Madge (eds.), Documents Relating to the Foundation of the Chapter of Winchester A.D. 1541–1547 (Hampshire Record Society [1]; 1889); W. R. W. Stephens and F. T. Madge (eds.), Documents Relating to the History of the Cathedral Church of Winchester in the Seventeenth Century (ibid. [10]; 1897). A. W. Goodman (ed. into Eng.), Chartulary of Winchester Cathedral (Winchester, 1927); id. and W. H. *Hutton (eds.), The Statutes Governing the Cathedral Church of Winchester given by King Charles I (Oxford, 1925). G. W. Kitchin (ed.), Compotus Rolls of the Obedientiaries of St Swithun's Priory, Winchester (Hampshire Record Society [5]; 1892). W. de Gray Birch (ed.), Liber Vitae: Register and Martyrology of New Minster and Hyde Abbey, Winchester (ibid. [6]; 1892). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, esp. 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 189–218. S. Gale, The History and Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Winchester (1715); J. Milner, The History Civil and Ecclesiastical and Survey of the Antiquities of Winchester (2 vols. bound in one [1798]), esp. 2, pp. 11–157; J. Britton, The History and Antiquities of the See and Cathedral Church of Winchester (1817). F. Barlow and others, Winchester in the Early Middle Ages: An Edition and Discussion of the Winton Domesday (Winchester Studies, 1; Oxford, 1976); D. Keene, Survey of Medieval Winchester (ibid. 2; 2 vols., 1985); M. Biddle, Object and Economy in Medieval Winchester (ibid. 7. 2; 2 vols., 1990). Id., 'The Study of Winchester: Archaeology and History in a British Town, 1961–1983', Proceedings of the British Academy, 69 (1983), pp. 93–135, with bibl. Id., 'Winchester: The Rise of an Early Capital', in B. Ford (ed.), The Cambridge Guide to the Arts in Britain, 1 (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 195–205, with bibl. pp. 289 f. S. H. Cassan, The Lives of the Bishops of Winchester from Birinus, the first Bishop of the West Saxons, to the Present Time (2 vols., 1827). R. Willis, 'The Architectural History of Winchester Cathedral', Proceedings of the Annual Meeting of the Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland at Winchester, September, MDCCCXLV (1846), no. 2. J. Vaughan, Winchester Cathedral: Its Monuments and Muniments [*c.*1919]. J. Crook (ed.), Winchester Cathedral: Nine Hundred Years 1093 1993 (Winchester and Chichester, 1993). R. N. Quirk, 'Winchester Cathedral in the Tenth Century', Archaeological Journal, 114 (1957), pp. 28–68. Medieval Art and Architecture at Winchester Cathedral (British Archaeological Association Conference Transactions for the Year 1980; 1983). C. W. C. Oman in DECH (1912), pp. 643–7, s.v. There are also numerous arts. in the Papers and Proceedings of the Hampshire Field Club (Southampton, 1885–1955; Winchester, 1956 ff.) and the Winchester Cathedral Record (Winchester, 1932 ff.).

Windesheim, near Zwolle, in the Netherlands. Here a house of *Augustinian Canons was established in 1387 under the direction of *Florentius Radewijns by six of G. *Groote's disciples who had received their religious formation at Eemstein, a foundation of the community of Jan van *Ruysbroeck (q.v.). Their constitutions were approved by Boniface IX in 1395, and under their second great prior, Johannes Vos (1391–1424), they formed, with three other Dutch monasteries, the 'Congregation of Windesheim'. They were joined in 1413 by the seven houses of the Groenendael Congregation, and in 1430 by the Congregation of Neuss. Throughout the 15th cent. the congregation grew rapidly, esp. in the Netherlands, W. and N. Germany, and Switzerland. Their fervent aspirations to religious perfection, notably under the saintly priors J. *Busch (d. *c.*1480) and Johannes Mauburnus ('John of Brussels', d. 1501), became an example to many other communities.

The Canons of Windesheim were the chief monastic representatives of the '*Devotio Moderna' (q.v.). Their influence also reached out to the secular clergy and the laity, whom they exhorted to frequent Communion and veneration of the Blessed Sacrament. They included many fine scholars, copyists, and illuminators, and among their members were *Thomas à Kempis, the probable author of the *Imitation of Christ, and the *scholastic philosopher G. *Biel. In the 16th cent. the Congregation suffered great losses and all the Dutch houses were destroyed, Windesheim itself in 1581. It was reorganized under a Prior General in 1573 and continued to exist in Belgium and the Catholic parts of Germany until the secularization of the monasteries in 1802.

Statuta Capituli Windesemensis ([Windesheim], 1508); Ordinarius Divini Officii pro Ordine Canonicorum Regularium Capituli sive Congregationis Wyndesemensis (Deventer, 1521); Regula Beati Augustini Episcopi cum Constitutionibus Canonicorum Regularium Capituli Windesemensis (Utrecht, 1553); Acta Capituli Windeshemensis [1387–1611], ed. S. van der Woude (Kerkhistorische Studien, 6; The Hague, 1953), with detailed bibl. refs. J. Busch, Chronicon Windesemense, ed. H. Rosweyde, SJ, Antwerp, 1621; also ed. K. Grube, Geschichtsquellen der Provinz Sachsen und angrenzender Gebiete, 19 (1886), pp. 1–375. J. G. R. Acquoy, Het Klooster te Windesheim en zijn Invloed (3 vols., Utrecht, 1875–80). J. Andriessen and others (eds.), Geert Grote & Moderne Devotie: Voordrachten gehouden tijdens het Geert Grote congres, Nijmegen 22–27 september 1984 (Ons Geestelijk Erf, Middeleeuwse Studies, 1; Nijmegen, 1985), esp. section 4: 'Materiële cultuur en dagelijks leven in de frater- en zusterhuizen en de Windesheimse kloosters', pp. 299–343. W. Kohl and others (ed.), Monasticon Windeshemense (Archives et Bibliothèques de Belgique, Numéro spécial, 16; 4 vols., Brussels, 1976–84). R. T. M. van Dijk, O.Cist., in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 1457–78, s.v. See also bibl. to BRETHREN OF THE COMMON LIFE and DEVOTIO MODERNA.

Windisch, Hans (1881–1935), NT scholar. He became a Privatdozent at Leipzig in 1908. Later he held professorships at *Leiden (1914–29), Kiel (1929–35), and Halle (1935). He was an adherent of the *Religionsgeschichtliche Schule. Among his writings were Taufe und Sünde im ältesten Christentum bis auf Origenes (1908); Der Sinn der Bergpredigt (1929; Eng. tr., 1951), and comm. on the Catholic Epistles (Hb. NT, 1911; 2nd edn., 1930) and Heb. (ibid., 1913; 2nd edn., 1931), and on 2 Cor. (KEK, 1924).

K. Prümm, SJ, 'Zur Früh- und Spätform der religionsgeschichtlichen Christusdeutung von H. Windisch', Biblica, 42 (1961), pp. 391–422, and 43 (1962), pp. 22–56.

Windsor, St George's Chapel. The 'Royal Free Chapel of Windsor', constituted by Edward III to take charge of the shrine of the Order of the Garter (founded *c.*1348), received its statutes from William Edington, Bp. of *Winchester (1346–66), on 30 Nov. 1352. Originally it was designed to consist of a warden (later 'Dean'), 12 canons, 13 vicars, 4 clerks, 6 choristers, 24 poor knights, and a virger; but the ideal was never fully realized. The present fine perpendicular chapel, with its elaborate stone vaulting, dates from 1475–1508. In 1840 the canons were reduced to four (later for a time to three), while the minor canons, as the vicars came to be called, have also been gradually reduced to three. The chapter is under the direct jurisdiction of the Sovereign, which is exercised through the Lord Chancellor. Until the Confirmation of Marriages Act 1822, the Dean possessed the right of granting faculties for marriage licences and for proving wills.

W. H. St J. Hope, Windsor Castle: An Architectural Survey, 2 (1913), pp. 375–477. S. L. Ollard, Fasti Wyndesorienses: The Deans and Canons of Windsor (Historical Monographs relating to St George's Chapel, ed. S. L. Ollard; 1950); E. H. Fellowes, The Vicars or Minor Canons of His Majesty's Free Chapel of St George in Windsor Castle (ibid. [1945]); id., Organists and Masters of the Choristers of St George's Chapel in Windsor Castle (ibid. [1939]). E. A. Jones, The Plate of St George's Chapel, Windsor Castle (ibid., 1939); M. F. Bond, The Inventories of St George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, 1384–1667 (ibid., 1947); A. K. B. Roberts, St George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, 1348–1416: A Study in early Collegiate Administration (London thesis, ibid. [1947]); J. N. Dalton (ed.), The Manuscripts of St George's Chapel, Windsor, posthumously pub. by M. F. Bond (ibid., 1957); S. M. Bond (ed.), The Monuments of St George's Chapel, Windsor Castle (ibid., 1958); id. (ed.), The Chapter Acts of the Dean and Canons of Windsor, 1430, 1523–1672 (ibid., 1966), and other volumes in this series. H. W. Blackburne and M. F. Bond, The Romance of St George's Chapel, Windsor Castle (1933). W. St J. Hope in VCH, Berks, 3, ed. W. Page, P. H. Ditchfield, and J. H. Cope (1923), pp. 36–41. S. L. Ollard in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), pp. 667–9, s.v.

Windthorst, Ludwig (1812–91), German Catholic politician. The descendant of a well-known Hanoverian family, he studied law at Göttingen and Heidelberg and settled as a lawyer at Osnabrück in 1836. In 1848 he became Councillor at the Hanoverian supreme Court of Appeal at Celle, and in 1849 entered on a political career, twice becoming Minister of Justice (1851–3 and 1862–5). Having acquiesced in the enforced union of Hanover with Prussia in 1866, he became a member of the N. German Diet in 1867 and later of the German Reichstag. In 1871 he helped to found the *Centre Party, whose leader he remained till his death. The growth of the party, which was constantly harassed by the bitter opposition of O. von Bismarck, was due chiefly to his devotion and initiative. He played a prominent part in the *Kulturkampf, and, after Bismarck's change of policy, was reconciled to the Chancellor in 1879. He had a considerable share in the negotiations for the repeal of the *May Laws, and, after Bismarck's retirement (1888), his relations with the new Emperor, William II, became very friendly. His last political success was the defeat of the School Bill in 1891.

Ausgewählte Reden (3 vols., Osnabrück, 1901–2). There is much primary material in K. Bachem, Vorgeschichte, Geschichte und Politik der Deutschen Zentrumspartei, 2–9 (1927–32). M. L. Anderson, Windthorst: A Political Biography (Oxford, 1981), with bibl. Later short study by H.-G. Aschoff (Hanover, 1991).

wine. Wine is frequently mentioned in the Bible and appears to have been in everyday use in Palestine in NT times. The vine figures in the Lord's teaching (e.g. Jn. 15: 1) and the miracle of the turning of water into wine at Cana (Jn. 2: 1–11) has been taken to foreshadow the use of wine in the *Eucharist. Apart from certain ascetic sects who used water (see AQUARIANS), wine has traditionally been held to be one of the essential materials for a valid Eucharist, though some have argued that unfermented grape-juice fulfils the Dominical command. The words of administration in the Eucharist imply that the consecrated wine conveys to the communicant the Blood of Christ, but RC theologians have held that both the Body and the Blood are present in each of the Eucharistic species (see CONCOMITANCE and COMMUNION IN BOTH KINDS).

From the earliest period it has been the custom to mix water with the wine in the Eucharist; it is taken for granted by *Justin, *Irenaeus, and *Hippolytus, while by the time of *Cyprian a mystical meaning was given to the practice. The only important exception is furnished by the *Armenians, whose practice was condemned by the *Trullan Synod. In the C of E the admixture was not ordered after 1549, though its use was known in the 17th cent. and was generally revived in the 19th. It was sanctioned by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1892, and referred to by the proposed Prayer Book of 1928 as 'an ancient tradition of the Church'. See also MIXED CHALICE.

Provided that the wine is wholesome, its colour has always been held a matter of indifference, though white has been favoured since the 16th cent., when *purificators became common.

A conscientious abstinence from wine has led to the use of grape-juice by *Nonconformists, a use earlier sanctioned by W. *Durandus in his Rationale. The matter has sometimes been an issue in ecumenical discussions, e.g. the *Anglican–Methodist Conversations.

V. Zapletal, OP, Der Wein in der Bibel (Biblische Studien, 20, Heft 1; 1920). P. Lebeau, SJ, Le Vin Nouveau du Royaume: Étude exégétique et patristique sur la Parole eschatologique de Jésus à la Cène (Museum Lessianum, Section Biblique, 5; 1966), with bibl. A. *Harnack, Brod und Wasser: Die eucharistischen Elemente bei Justin (TU 7, Heft 2, 1891, pp. 115–44). A. Scheiwiler, Die Elemente der Eucharistie in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (Forschungen zur Christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, 3, Heft 4; 1903). J. J. Farraher and T. D. Terry, 'Altar Wine', American Ecclesiastical Review, 146 (1962), pp. 73–88. See also works cited s.v. AQUARIANS and EUCHARIST.

Winer, Johann Georg Benedikt (1789–1858), German theologian. From 1832 he was professor of theology at Leipzig. His celebrity rests on his NT Greek grammar (Grammatik des neutestamentlichen Sprachidioms), first pub. in 1822. It went through a large number of editions, and was several times translated into English, e.g. by W. F. *Moulton (1870). Its elaborate collection of material is still valuable, though Winer's conclusions have been largely invalidated by increased knowledge of Hellenistic Greek.

G. Lechler in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 368–71, s.v.

Winfrid or Winfrith, St. See BONIFACE, ST.

Winifred, St (d. c.650), in Welsh 'Gwenfrewi', the patron saint of N. Wales. Acc. to legends (late and not worthy of credence) she was a maiden of great beauty and attainments, who was sought in marriage by the Prince Caradog of Hawarden. For refusing his advances, she was wounded (or killed) by him, but miraculously healed (or restored to life) by her uncle, St *Beuno. A spring marked the scene, at the present Holywell (Welsh, 'Tre Ffynnon') in Flintshire, and here Winifred established a nunnery of which she became abbess. In 1138 her relics were translated to Shrewsbury and in 1398 her feast was ordered to be observed throughout the province of *Canterbury. Holywell, for many centuries a famous place of pilgrimage, has continued to attract sufferers down to modern times; Dr S. *Johnson saw people bathing there on 3 Aug. 1774. Feast day, 3 Nov.

The principal sources incl. a Life preserved principally in the Brit. Lib., Cott. MS Claud. A. v, attributed to Elerius, a monk, in the year 660 (actually c. 12th cent.), pr. in W. J. Rees, Lives of the Cambro-British Saints (pub. for the Welsh MSS Society, 1853), pp. 198–209, and a Life by Robert, prior of Shrewsbury, principally preserved in the Bodleian MS Laud. Misc. 114, saec. XII (*c.*1139); they are both pr. in AASS, Nov. 1 (1887), pp. 702–8 and 708–31 respectively, with introd. and other material, pp. 691–701 and 732–59. Eng. tr. of Life attributed to Elerius, with abridgment of Life by Robert of Shrewsbury, by J. Dalton (London, 1857). Collection of later material, mainly in Eng., ed. C. de Smedt, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 6 (1887), pp. 305–52. Life by Philip Metcalfe, SJ (no place, 1712; modern edn. by H. Thurston, SJ, London, 1917).

Wipo (d. after 1046), poet and royal biographer. Apparently a native of the Swabian part of the kingdom of Burgundy, he became priest and chaplain to the Emps. Conrad II and Henry III. He wrote much verse, the greater part of which has been lost. There survive a 'Tetralogus' (completed 1041), a eulogy of Henry III; his 'Proverbs', a series of maxims written for Henry after his royal coronation in 1028; and, best known, the '*Victimae paschali laudes', the *Sequence for Easter Day. His 'Gesta Chuonradi Imperatoris', written between 1040 and 1046, is one of the principal sources for the reign of Conrad II (1024–39).

Crit. edn. of his works by H. Bresslau (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum Scholarum, Hanover and Leipzig, 1915), with introd. and refs. 'Gesta Chuonradi' rev., with Ger. tr. and introd., by W. Trillmich in id. and R. Buchner (eds.), Quellen des 9. und 11. Jahrhunderts zur Geschichte der Hamburgischen Kirche und des Reiches (1961), pp. 507–613. Eng. tr. in T. E. Mommsen and K. F. Morrison, Imperial Lives and Letters of the Eleventh Century (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 67; 1962), pp. 52–100. R. Holtzmann, 'Wipo und die schwäbische Weltchronik', NA 35 (1910), pp. 55–104. Raby, pp. 217–19; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 372–4.

wisdom. In the OT wisdom, whether human or divine, occupies a prominent place. Fundamental to the OT teaching about human wisdom is the repeated affirmation that 'the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom' (e.g. Ps. 111: 10 and Prov. 1: 7). Human wisdom is both essentially practical and speculative, and the terms 'wisdom' and 'wise' are used to cover a diversity of activities ranging from ability as a carpenter (Exod. 36: 4) to the fundamental principles of virtuous living (Ecclus. 1: 10–12). Similarly, divine wisdom is manifested in creation and in God's guidance of nations and individuals (Wisd. 10–19). It is more than a mere quality and tends increasingly to become a *hypostasis, so esp. in Prov. 8 and Wisd. 7: 22 ff. The so-called 'Wisdom Literature' is generally reckoned to include Job, Prov., Eccles., Ecclus., and Wisdom (qq.v.). Such literature is found in all ancient Near Eastern cultures, and the combination of practical advice on sensible living with speculation about divine wisdom is characteristic of the genre, as is the attribution of wisdom to an ancient ruler (in the OT usually *Solomon, but in later times often *Ezra or *Enoch).

In the NT Christ is portrayed as a teacher of wisdom and endowed with the Spirit (Mk. 1: 10, Lk. 4: 18); St *Paul calls Him 'the wisdom of God' (1 Cor. 1: 24), 'in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden' (Col. 2: 3). Traditions of personified wisdom are echoed in the Christ hymn of Col. 1: 15–20, the Johannine prologue, and Heb. 1: 3, and the OT view of wisdom as a gift of the Spirit (Is. 11: 2) is found at 1 Cor. 12: 8. Among the Fathers most use 'Wisdom' as a synonym for the Incarnate Word or *Logos, but some (e.g. *Theophilus of Antioch and *Irenaeus) equate 'Wisdom' with the Third Person of the Trinity. In *Gnostic thought, which saw in Wisdom a Divine emanation and a cause of the creation and redemption of the world, the conception played an important part, and was understood in various systems as the spouse of the Logos, the mother of the Demiurge, etc.

In modern times Wisdom has again become a subject of speculation in connection with the Deity in the thought of Russian authors such as V. *Solovyov and S. *Bulgakov. These authors distinguish a created from an uncreated wisdom, which together form the unity of God and the world, and which, in their teaching, is closely connected with the Platonic World-soul, the *Theotokos, and the Holy Spirit. It also plays a major role in *Feminist Theology.

H. H. Schmid, Wesen und Geschichte der Weisheit: Eine Untersuchung zur altorientalischen und israelitischen Weisheitsliteratur (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 101; 1966). G. von *Rad, Weisheit in Israel (Neukirchen, 1970; Eng. tr., 1972); J. L. Crenshaw, Old Testament Wisdom (Atlanta [1981]; London, 1982); J. Blenkinsopp, Wisdom and Law in the Old Testament (Oxford, 1983). E. Schüssler Fiorenza, Jesus: Miriam's Child, Sophia's Prophet. Critical Issues in Feminist Christology (1995). U. Wilckens and G. Fohrer in TWNT 7 (1964), pp. 465–529 (Eng. tr., 7, 1971, pp. 465–526), s.v. σοφία.

Wisdom of Solomon. One of the *Apocryphal Books of the OT. Though it has been variously divided, it may conveniently be considered in three parts. The opening chapters (1: 1–6: 8) describe the different destinies awaiting the righteous and the wicked. In opposition to the 'ungodly', who maintain that, since this life is all, the only sensible course is to live for pleasure, the writer maintains that the righteous will be rewarded by a blessed immortality, while the ungodly will certainly be punished. Some scholars regard this section as a reply to Eccles. (cf. Wisd. 2. 1–10 and Eccles. 1: 11, 3: 19–22, and 9: 7–9). The second part (6: 9–9: 18) contains the meditation on Wisdom which has given the Book its name. Wisdom is 'the breath of the power of God, and a pure influence flowing from the glory of the Almighty' (7: 25), and she comes forth from God to dwell among men that she may make those who receive her 'friends of God, and prophets' (7: 27); and the section ends with *Solomon's prayer for Wisdom (9). The last part of the Book (10–19) gives a review of Israel's history down to the *Exodus, interrupted in 13–15 by a description of the origin and evils of idolatry. The good fortune of Israel's forefathers and the disasters overtaking their enemies, attributed in 10 to the activity of Wisdom, are used to illustrate the theories that 'by what things their enemies were punished, by the same things they in need were benefited' (11: 5), and that 'that wherewithal a man sinneth, by the same also shall he be punished'.

The ascription of the Book to Solomon (already questioned in the early Church) is now generally regarded as a literary device. The Book shows the blending of Jewish religion and Greek philosophy characteristic of *Alexandrian theology and was almost certainly written by an Alexandrian Jew. It was written at a time when traditional Judaism was under attack (2: 12, 19 f.), and 14: 16–17 seems to show knowledge of Emperor worship. Most scholars date the Book in the Ptolemaic period, either in the 1st or 2nd cent. BC; recent attempts to date it in the 1st cent. AD have not been widely accepted. The unity of the Book has been challenged by some critics, but is defended by most commentators, though many think that the author used some already existing material (e.g., the prayer in ch. 9 and the polemic against idolatry in 13–15).

The Book has had a great influence on Christian thought. Many critics explain the undoubted resemblances to it in passages of the Pauline and deutero-Pauline Epistles (e.g. Rom. 9: 21–23, cf. Wisd. 12: 12–18; Eph. 6: 11–17, cf. Wisd. 5: 17–20) as due to direct use made of it, and there may be reminiscences of it in Heb. (e.g. 1: 3, cf. Wisd. 7: 26), Jas. (2: 6, cf. Wisd. 2: 10), 1 Pet. (1: 6 f., cf. Wisd. 3: 5 f.), and Jn. (17: 3, cf. Wisd. 15: 3). In later writers the terms used of the Divine Wisdom are freely applied to Christ and so passed into the vocabulary of Christian theology.

Modern comm. incl. those of S. Holmes in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 518–68, J. von Fichtner (HAT, Reihe 2, 6; 1938), J. Reider (Jewish Apocryphal Literature, New York, 1959), E. G. Clarke (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1973), and D. Winston (Anchor Bible, 1979). P. Heinisch, Die griechische Philosophie im Buch der Weisheit (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, 1, Heft 4; 1908); C. Larcher, OP, Études sur le Livre de la Sagesse (Études Bibliques, 1969). J. M. Reese, OSFS, Hellenistic Influence on the Book of Wisdom and its Consequences (Analecta Biblica, 41; 1970). R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York [1949]; London [1954]), pp. 313–51, with bibl. p. 535. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 568–79. M. Gilbert, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 11 (1991), cols. 58–119, s.v. 'Sagesse de Salomon'; D. Winston in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 120–7, s.v. 'Solomon, Wisdom of'. See also works cited s.v. APOCRYPHA.

Wiseman, Nicholas Patrick Stephen (1802–65), English cardinal. Born in Seville, where his Irish grandfather had settled in the 18th cent., Wiseman was educated at Ushaw College, Durham, and at the English College, Rome, of which he became rector in 1828. He established a considerable reputation for learning, esp. in oriental languages, but his main interest was soon directed to the Catholic revival in England. On a visit there in 1834–5, he lectured widely on the RC faith and was one of the founders of the Dublin Review*. In this journal he responded encouragingly to the *Tractarians and throughout his life he worked to attract converts to RCism. In 1840 he returned to England as President of Oscott College, Birmingham, and Coadjutor to Bp. Walsh, *Vicar Apostolic of the newly created Central District. In 1850 he became Pro-Vicar Apostolic of the London District, and soon presided there in his own right. When in 1850 *Pius IX restored the RC hierarchy in England and Wales, Wiseman became the first Abp. of *Westminster and was made a cardinal. His flamboyant announcement of the event contributed to the so-called '*Papal Aggression' crisis of 1850–1, but by tact he was subsequently able to allay much of the fear and suspicion that had been aroused. He was criticized by RCs as well as Protestants for his *Ultramontane views, his independent policies, and his attempts to impose Italian devotional life and practices in England. It is, however, generally acknowledged that he did much to organize and advance the cause of the RC Church in England. He presided over and framed the decrees of the first three provincial synods (1852, 1855, and 1859); he struggled to promote legislation to remove RC disabilities and encouraged RCs to support parliamentary candidates well disposed to their cause; he welcomed religious orders to the archdiocese and founded schools and orphanages; and he wrote articles, essays, sermons, and even a novel (Fabiola; or the Church of the Catacombs, 1854) to promote RCism and foster a genuine Catholic culture in England.

W. *Ward, The Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman (2 vols., 1897). [A.] B. Fothergill, Nicholas Wiseman (1963); R. J. Schiefen, Nicholas Wiseman and the Transformation of English Catholicism (Sheperdstown, W.Va., 1984).

Wishart, George (*c.*1513–46), Scottish Reformer. The facts of his early life are obscure. Charged with heresy in 1538, he fled to England, where a similar accusation was preferred against him in 1539. After travelling on the Continent and studying for some time at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, he returned to Scotland in 1543 and may have been the Wishart who approached the English government in 1544 with a view to the murder of Card. D. *Beaton. In 1544 he began active propaganda on behalf of Reformed doctrines, going from place to place in great danger of his life and denouncing current abuses. In this work he was assisted by J. *Knox. He was apprehended by Bothwell at Ormiston in Jan. 1546, soon afterwards transferred to Edinburgh Castle, and burnt by Beaton at St Andrews on 1 Mar. 1546. He made an English translation of the '*Helvetic Confession' which was published posthumously (prob. 1548).

The primary authorities incl. J. Knox, History of the Reformation in Scotland (ed. W. C. Dickinson, 2 vols., London, 1949, vol. 1, pp. 60–72), and for his trial and death, Robert Lindesay of Pitscottie (*c.*1532–*c.*1578), Historie and Chronicles of Scotland (ed. Æ. J. G. Mackay, Scottish Text Society, 42–43, with glossary and index, 60, 1899–1911, vol. 2, pp. 52–82, with notes, pp. 421 f.), and J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments (ed. G. Townsend, 6, 1846, pp. 625–36). Notes by D. Laing appended to his edn. of The Works of John Knox, 1 (The Wodrow Society, 1864), pp. 534–7. C. Rogers, 'Memoir of George Wishart, the Scottish Martyr', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society [Original Series], 4 (1876), pp. 260–3, with his Eng. tr. of the Helvetic Confession, pp. 319–28. Æ. J. G. Mackay in DNB 62 (1900), pp. 248–51.

witchcraft. The alleged exercise of magical powers through the gift of supernatural beings other than God and His angels. The narrative of the witch of Endor (1 Sam. 28: 7–25) and the condemnation of witchcraft in the OT (Exod. 22: 18, Deut. 18: 10) and NT (Gal. 5: 20) have sometimes been adduced as scriptural proof of its existence. In the patristic age *Tertullian (Apol. 22) and St *Augustine (De Civ. Dei, 21. 6) believed in it. On the other hand, the belief was opposed by many of the Fathers, e.g. St *Hippolytus, St *Chrysostom, and St *Caesarius of Arles.

Before 1100 witchcraft in W. Europe consisted chiefly in the performance of certain pagan rituals divorced from their religious context, and the Church sought to minimize their importance, as when the (prob. 9th cent.) 'Canon Episcopi' denounced as illusory the claims of witches to be able to fly. In the 12th cent. learned, ritual magic, derived from Hellenistic and Arabic sources, reached the W., and the Church viewed this more seriously, condemning all rites which involved the invocation of spirits. Nevertheless, witches and sorcerers were arrested only if they were accused of conspiring to cause criminal damage. They were tried in bishops' courts and, if found guilty, were punished by civil magistrates in accordance with secular law. No attempt was made to seek such people out, and in 1258 Pope Alexander IV forbade the *Inquisition to deal with cases of witchcraft unless they were related to heresy. Theologians later argued that witchcraft was a form of heresy because it involved an overt or tacit pact with the *devil, and from 1398 the Inquisition was given jurisdiction over such cases. Few inquisitors sought to exercise these powers, but in 1484 two German inquisitors, Heinrich Kramer and Jacob Sprenger, meeting with obstruction from the S. German hierarchy, obtained from Pope Innocent VIII a bull giving them jurisdiction over witchcraft. There is no reason to suppose that the Pope had any central interest in this issue, or that his bull marked any new departure in Papal policy, but Kramer and Sprenger printed it at the front of their Malleus Maleficarum ('Hammer of Witches'), so that it appeared to give official approval to the contents of this naïve and obscurantist, but influential book, published at Speyer shortly before 5 Apr. 1487.

Although witchcraft trials steadily increased from the late 14th cent. onwards, they did not reach their height until the period between 1580 and 1630, and in countries such as *Hungary and *Poland not until the early 18th cent. Probably about 50,000 people were executed for the alleged crime but the pattern of prosecutions varied enormously, depending on the jurisdiction involved, the attitude of the local clergy and magistrates, and the willingness of the authorities in Church and State to coordinate witch-hunting. The so-called 'witch-craze' was not a simple or uniform historical development and it has often been exaggerated. All over Europe ordinary people were eager to denounce their female neighbours as witches in the sincere belief that they caused maleficium (harm). In combination with the fears of those in power, this could lead to panics, as occurred in parts of Germany. On the other hand, the territories covered by the Mediterranean Inquisition tribunals saw almost no witch-hunting and only a handful of executions. In France, in the area covered by the jurisdiction of the Parlement of Paris, appeals were made automatic in witchcraft cases in 1624 and acquittals thereafter were common. In the *Netherlands the death penalty ceased to be applied *c.*1600. In England the worst persecution occurred during the Civil War years, notably in 1645–6, when the activities of the witch-finder Matthew Hopkins led to *c.*200 executions. But for most people most of the time 'witchcraft' was a rather mundane affair—a cause of strange or unexpected illness, sudden misfortunes, and marital problems. Witch-hunting on any scale had ended everywhere by 1750 and the legislation dealing with witchcraft was repealed during this period. The last hanging for the crime in England was in 1685, the last burning in Scotland in 1727. The final legal execution took place in Switzerland in 1782.

The debates conducted in the Malleus continued to attract the attention of theologians, jurists, and philosophers for at least two centuries. Most accepted the reality of witchcraft, with important reservations, and gave what would then have been rational reasons for doing so. The belief was supported by a natural philosophy that allowed devils to cause physical events and by theocratic political ideologies. Above all, it was sustained by all the main Churches, who tried to extend the concept of alliance with the devil to include all the forms of religious error deemed to be 'magical' and 'superstitious'. During the 18th and 19th cents. a different set of intellectual and moral assumptions led to a dismissal of the belief in witchcraft as irrational. This did not prevent many people from continuing to fear the effects of maleficium and adopting measures to counteract it. The practice of benign forms of witchcraft ('Wicca') continues in the present day.

Materials Toward a History of Witchcraft collected by H. C. Lea, arranged and ed. A. C. Howland (3 vols., Philadelphia and London, 1939). The Malleus Maleficarum was repr., with brief introd. by A. Schnyder (Litterae. Göppinger Beiträge zur Textgeschichte, 113; Göppingen, 1991). [E.] G. [S.] Parrinder, Witchcraft (Harmondsworth, 1958); L. [P.] Mair, Witchcraft [1969]. J. Français, L'Église et la sorcellerie (Bibliothèque de Critique religieuse, 1910). J. B. Russell, Witchcraft in the Middle Ages (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1972). E. [M.] Peters, The Magician, the Witch and the Law (Hassocks, W. Sussex, 1978). B. Ankarloo and G. Henningsen (eds.), Häxornas Europa 1400–1700 (Rattshistoriska Studier, 13; 1987; Eng. tr., Early Modern Witchcraft, New York, 1990; Oxford, 1993); B. P. Levack, The Witch-Hunt in Early Modern Europe (1987); G. Scarre, Witchcraft and Magic in Sixteenth- and Seventeenth-Century Europe (Basingstoke, 1987). G. L. Kittredge, Witchcraft in Old and New England (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1928). W. Notestein, A History of Witchcraft in England from 1558 to 1718 (Washington, DC, and London, 1911). C. L'E. Ewen (ed.), Witch Hunting and Witch Trials: The Indictments for Witchcraft from the Records of 1373 Assizes held for the Home Circuit A.D. 1559 1736 (1929); id., Witchcraft and Demonianism: A Concise Account derived from Sworn Depositions in the Courts of England and Wales (1933); id., Witchcraft in the Star Chamber (privately pr., 1938). A collection of material on witchcraft in Elizabethan and Jacobean England ed., in modernized form, by B. Rosen, Witchcraft (Stratford-upon-Avon Library, 6; 1969). A. Macfarlane, Witchcraft in Tudor and Stuart England: A Regional and Comparative Study (1970). K. [V.] Thomas, Religion and the Decline of Magic: Studies in popular beliefs in seventeenth century England (1971), pp. 435–583. S. Anglo, The Damned Art: Essays in the Literature of Witchcraft (1977).

Witelo (b. *c.*1230), Polish mathematician and natural philosopher. A native of Silesia, he followed the arts course at the University of *Paris and later studied canon law at Padua. From there he went to the Papal court at Viterbo, where he joined a remarkable scientific circle that included *William of Moerbeke, famed for his translations of *Aristotle. Witelo's major work, the Perspectiva, was written (probably between 1270 and 1274) at Moerbeke's prompting and was dedicated to him. Treating of both mathematical optics and the physiological and psychological aspects of vision, it was largely based on the work of the Arabic scholar Alhazen (Ibn al-Haytham), and remained a standard text until the work of J. *Kepler. After his stay at Viterbo, Witelo probably spent the rest of his life in Poland. Only one other work by him is known to be extant, the Epistula de primaria causa poenitentiae in hominibus et de substantia et natura daemonum, written during his time at Padua. On some questions (e.g. prophecy and the future life) Witelo reveals the influence of *Avicenna and Algazel (al-Ghazzālī), who help to give his writings a *Neoplatonic slant. His teachings on the propagation of physical influence on the analogy of light are akin to those of R. *Grosseteste and R. *Bacon, who also may have influenced him.

The Perspectiva pub. Nuremberg, 1535 and 1551, and at Basle, 1572; the last was repr., with introd. by D. C. Lindberg (Sources of Science, 94; New York and London, 1972). Crit. edn., with Eng. tr. and useful introd., by S. Unguru and others (Studia Copernicana, 15, 23, 28, etc.; Wroclaw, 1977 ff.). Crit. edn. of Epistula de primaria causa poenitentiae by E. Paschetto, Demoni e Prodigi: Note su alcuni scritti di Witelo e di Oresme (Turin, 1978), pp. 81–132. C. Baeumker, Witelo, ein Philosoph und Naturforscher des XIII. Jahrhunderts (BGPM 3, Heft 2; 1908), incl. texts of the Liber de intelligentiis (pp. 1–71), which Baeumker then (erroneously) believed to be by Witelo, and of the philosophical preface and a few other passages of the Perspectiva (pp. 127–79). A. Birkenmajer, Études d'Histoire des Sciences en Pologne (Studia Copernicana, 4; Wroclaw, 1972), pp. 95–434 ('Études sur Witelo'), is fundamental. C. Baeumker, 'Zur Frage nach Abfassungszeit und Verfasser des irrtümlich Witelo zugeschriebenen Liber de Intelligentiis', Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, 1 (ST 37; 1924), pp. 87–102. A. C. Crombie, Robert Grosseteste and the Origins of Experimental Science 1100 1700 (Oxford, 1953), pp. 213–32; D. C. Lindberg, Theories of Vision from al-Kindi to Kepler (Chicago and London, 1976), pp. 116–21. Id. in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 14 (1976), pp. 457–62.

Witnesses, the Three. See JOHANNINE COMMA.

Wittenberg, since 1922 officially known as Lutherstadt Wittenberg, the cradle of the *Reformation. At its university (founded, 1502; united with that of Halle, 1815) M. *Luther became professor in 1508. On 31 Oct. 1517 he affixed his Ninety-Five Theses to the door of the Schlosskirche, declaiming against the medieval doctrine of *indulgences; and at the beginning of 1522 Protestant public worship was celebrated here for the first time, in the parish church. The *Augustinian monastery in the town, where Luther lived first as a monk and later with his family, is now fitted up as a museum (Lutherhaus). Both Luther and P. *Melanchthon are buried in the Schlosskirche.

H. Junghans, Wittenberg als Lutherstadt (Göttingen, 1979). W. Friedensburg, Geschichte der Universität Wittenberg (Halle, 1917); 450 Jahre Martin-Luther-Universität, Halle-Wittenberg (3 vols., Halle [1952–3]).

Wittenberg, Concord of (1536). An agreement reached by *Lutheran and *Zwinglian theologians in the disputed doctrine of the *Eucharist. After a preliminary conference between M. *Bucer and P. *Melanchthon at Cassel in Dec. 1534, a large and representative body of divines, including M. *Luther himself, met in May 1536 at Wittenberg, where a doctrinal statement drawn up by Melanchthon, which set forth an essentially Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist, though without insistence on *ubiquity, was accepted. The reunion thus achieved soon collapsed, however, largely through the refusal of the Swiss Zwinglians to accept the 'Concord'.

Text pr. among P. Melanchthon's collected works ed. C. G. Bretschneider, 3 (Corpus Reformatorum, 3; Brunswick, 1836), cols. 75–7; mostly repr. in Kidd, pp. 318 f. (no. 127); Eng. tr. of most of text in D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, 2 (1909), pp. 46 f. M. Bucer, Opera Omnia, 1st ser.: Deutsche Schriften, 6. 1: Wittenberger Konkordie (1536). Schriften zur Wittenberger Konkordie (1534 1537), ed. R. Stupperich and others (Gütersloh, 1988) [23 docs., not all by Bucer, and introd. with full bibl. refs.]. E. Bizer, 'Die Wittenberger Konkordie in Oberdeutschland und der Schweiz', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 36 (1939), pp. 214–52. T. Kolde in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 383–99, s.v. 'Wittenberger Konkordie'. See also works cited s.v. BUCER, M.

Wittgenstein, Ludwig (1889–1951), philosopher. Born in Vienna, with an immensely rich and cultivated family background, he took up mechanical engineering, studying in Berlin and Manchester. He then became interested in the principles of mathematics and in 1912 went to Cambridge to work with Bertrand Russell. In 1914 he returned home to join the Austrian army; he served on the Russian and then on the Italian fronts, becoming a prisoner of war. His Logisch-Philosophische Abhandlung, completed in August 1918, was published in 1921 and again, with C. K. Ogden's English translation, in 1922 under the more familiar title of Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus. Universally regarded as a philosophical classic, it concludes with the famous dictum: 'Whereof one cannot speak, thereof one must be silent'.

Thinking all philosophical problems solved, Wittgenstein trained as a teacher and worked in remote village schools in Lower Austria from 1920 to 1926. He then spent two years in Vienna, mostly engaged in supervising the building of a house for his sister. He was also being drawn back to philosophy by discussions with members of the Vienna Circle, who had founded logical positivism partly on what he considered to be a misunderstanding of his Tractatus. Early in 1929 he returned to Trinity College, Cambridge, as a research student, but he was able to submit the Tractatus and received his doctorate in June. From 1930 he lectured in the philosophy faculty in Cambridge, succeeding G. E. Moore as professor of philosophy in 1939. Having become a British subject in 1938, he worked throughout the Second World War (1939–45) as a hospital porter and laboratory assistant. In 1947 he gave up teaching to concentrate on writing. In 1949 he was found to have cancer. He continued writing copiously (in German) until a few days before his death.

Though notes that he had dictated had circulated semiclandestinely for some years, it was only in 1953, with the posthumous publication of Philosophical Investigations (incl. Eng. tr. by G. E. M. Anscombe), that philosophers in general were able to study his later work properly. Much more of his writing has since appeared (in German, with Eng. tr.), notably such major texts as Remarks on the Foundation of Mathematics (1956; 3rd edn. rev., 1978); The Blue and Brown Books (1958; Preliminary Studies for the Philosophical Investigations), On Certainty (1969); and Culture and Value (1980; the original German had appeared in 1977 as Vermischte Bemerkungen), which contains a number of reflections on Christianity.

It has slowly become accepted that in these later writings Wittgenstein has important things to say about many of the traditional *metaphysical problems: the relationship between thought or language and the world, the nature of meaning and understanding, states of consciousness, and the will. How radically he criticized the Tractatus is much disputed. His later style of writing, though very different and equally inimitable, is just as cryptic: he never wanted his writings 'to spare other people the trouble of thinking'. His later work is perhaps best approached as a kind of 'therapy' for people who are inevitably dominated by scientific models of understanding. That he is anti-*Cartesian in his philosophy of mind is plain; but his intervention in the ancient dispute between realists and idealists, with all its ramifications, is not easy to assess.

Some philosophers of religion, seizing on his appeal to 'language-games' and 'forms of life', have developed theories that others have labelled 'Wittgensteinian fideism': namely the doctrine that only participants in religious forms of life can play the appropriate language-games, so that religion remains immune to criticism from outside. How far such views are grounded on Wittgenstein's work is disputed. His remarks on religious matters in Culture and Value are not easy to interpret. It may plausibly be argued that a certain 'fideism' is adumbrated in Lectures and Conversations on Aesthetics, Psychology and Religious Belief (1966) and Remarks on Frazer's Golden Bough (1979). It seems likely, however, that the consequences for theology of Wittgenstein's later work will become manifest only when its significance for metaphysics and epistemology has become clearer.

N. Malcolm, Wittgenstein: A Memoir, with a Biographical Sketch by G. H. von Wright (1958; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1984). Full Life by B. McGuinness (London, 1988 ff.). The very numerous works on his thought incl.: A. Kenny, Wittgenstein (1973); id., The Legacy of Wittgenstein (Oxford, 1984); W. D. Hudson, Wittgenstein and Religious Belief (1975): A. Keightly, Wittgenstein, Grammar and God (1976); P. Sherry, Religion, Truth and Language Games (1977); D. Bolton, An Approach to Wittgenstein's Philosophy (1979); B. McGuinness (ed.), Wittgenstein and his Times (Oxford, 1982); F. Kerr [OP], Theology after Wittgenstein (ibid., 1986); D. [F.] Pears, The False Prison: A Study of the Development of Wittgenstein's Philosophy (2 vols., ibid., 1987–8); R. Monk, Ludwig Wittgenstein: The Duty of Genius (1990); D. Z. Phillips, Wittgenstein and Religion (1993). G. H. von Wright in DNB, 1951–1960 (1971), pp. 1068–71, s.v.

Wolfenbüttel Fragments. The title under which G. E. *Lessing issued between 1774 and 1778 seven extracts from the long (unpub.) work in which H. S. *Reimarus (q.v.) had attacked historic Christianity. The most famous of them was the last, entitled Von dem Zwecke Jesu und seiner Jünger (1778), in which Reimarus interpreted the purpose of Christ's work, as set down in the Gospels, in terms of *eschatology. Widespread attention was again drawn to it by A. *Schweitzer's Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906; Eng. tr., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910).

For bibl. see REIMARUS, H. S.

Wolff, Christian (1679–1754), less correctly 'Wolf', German philosopher. In 1706 he became professor of mathematics and natural science at Halle, then a stronghold of *Pietism. In an attempt to systematize the principles of G. W. *Leibniz, he developed a comprehensive system of philosophy. His supreme confidence in reason offended the Pietists, who eventually persuaded Frederick William I to expel him from Halle in 1723, urging on the monarch that the spread of Wolff's teaching would be subversive of military discipline, since its determinism would justify desertion from the army. Wolff spent his exile at *Marburg. On the accession of Frederick the Great (1740), one of the new king's first acts was to recall Wolff, who re-entered Halle on 6 Dec. 1740 in triumph. Wolff's system won great popularity and was in substance that taught in most of the German universities in the latter half of the 18th cent. It also provided the background of the Critical Philosophy of I. *Kant. Wolff wrote a very long series of treatises (in form textbooks), the earlier ones in German and the later in Latin. Among the latter were a Logic (1728), an Ontology (1730), a Cosmology (1731), Psychologies (1731–4), a Natural Theology (1736–7), an Ethics (1750–3), and an Economics (1750). Together they covered nearly the whole field of speculative philosophy.

Gesammelte Werke photographically reprod. with introd. by J. École and H. W. Arndt (Hildesheim, 1962 ff.; Abteilung 3, Materialen und Dokumente, 1973 ff., incl. important refs.). Wolff himself assembled his Kleine Schriften, 6 vols., Halle, 1736–40. Autobiog. first ed. H. Wuttke, Leipzig, 1841. The 1764 edn. of Wolff's Jus Gentium methodo scientifica pertractatum (orig. pub. in 1749) was photographically repr., together with useful introd. by O. Nippold and Eng. tr. by J. H. Drake (2 vols., Classics of International Law, 13; Oxford, 1934). Wolff finds a place in all histories of modern German philosophy. W. Arnsperger, Christian Wolff's Verhältnis zu Leibniz (1897); M. Campo, Cristiano Wolff e il Razionalismo Precritico (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, Serie Prima: Scienze Filosofiche, 30; 2 vols., 1939); A. Bissinger, Die Struktur der Gotteserkenntnis: Studien zur Philosophie Christian Wolffs (Bonn, 1970); W. Schneiders (ed.), Christian Wolff 1679–1754 (Studien zum Achtzehnten Jahrhundert, 4; Hamburg, 1983), with bibl. 1800–1982, pp. 321–45; C. Schröer, Naturbegriff und Moralbegründung: Die Grundlegung der Ethik bei Christian Wolff und deren Kritik durch Immanuel Kant (Münchener philosophische Studien, NF 3 [1988]); J. École, Introduction à l'opus philosophicum de Christian Wolff (1985 [collection of arts. orig. pub. in Giornale di Metafisica, 1961–83]). H. Stephan in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 452–64; G. Tonelli in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 8 (1967), pp. 340–44.

Wolfgang, St (*c.*924–94), Bp. of Ratisbon. Of Swabian descent, he was educated at the monastery of *Reichenau, taught in the cathedral school of Trier, and *c.*965 became a monk at *Einsiedeln. In 971 he set out to evangelize the Magyars. The following year he was elected Bp. of Ratisbon; he soon became an ardent reformer. His feast (31 Oct.) is widely observed in Central Europe.

The principal sources are the works of two monks of St Emmeran, Ratisbon: Arnold of Vohburg on St Emmeran, bk. 2 (written *c.*1037), and a Life of St Wolfgang by Othlo (written *c.*1052), which is more lively but less reliable; the best edn. of both these sources, with other material, and introd. and comm. by H. *Delehaye, SJ, in AASS, Nov. 2 (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 527–97. Festschrift to mark the 9th centenary of his death, ed. J. B. Mehler (Ratisbon, 1894). Other modern studies by I. Zibermayr (Linz, 1924; 2nd edn., Horn, 1961) and R. Zinnhobler and others (Linz, 1975). K. Bugmann, OSB, 'Der Mönch Wolfgang', Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, 78 (1968), pp. 9–27, with full refs. U. Schmid in CE 15 (1912), pp. 682 f., s.v.; K. Kunze in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 12 (1969), cols. 1334–42, s.v. 'Volfango'.

Wolsey, Thomas (1472/4–1530), cardinal. The son of a prosperous Ipswich butcher, he was educated at *Oxford, elected Fellow of Magdalen College *c.*1497, and ordained priest in 1498. He soon held a number of benefices, becoming one of the domestic chaplains of Henry Dean, Abp. of *Canterbury, in 1501, and chaplain to Henry VII *c.*1507. He retained the royal favour under his successor, *Henry VIII, became a royal councillor in 1511, and Bp. of *Lincoln in 1514. In the same year he was translated to *York, and in 1515 he was created cardinal. Three months later he was made Lord Chancellor of England, now wielding an almost royal power. His main interest was foreign politics, in which he frequently changed sides, skilfully holding the balance of power between the Empire and France, in a boldly conceived attempt to make England the arbiter of Europe. Though he himself was in favour of friendship with France, he had to sign a secret treaty of alliance with the Emperor (1521). The latter, however, on the death of *Leo X (1521), as well as on that of *Hadrian VI (1523), failed to exercise his influence to get Wolsey elected Pope. In the meantime the cardinal, though retaining the royal favour, had made himself enemies in the Church and among the nobility and gentry by his ruthless methods of obtaining money for the war with France, as well as by his arrogance and pomp. When, in 1527, Henry began to take steps to obtain his divorce, Wolsey endeavoured by all means to further the King's wishes. His plan to induce the Pope to cede to himself authority to decide the case proved a failure, however, and the cardinal, unable to obtain the Papal dispensation necessary for the divorce, was blamed by Anne Boleyn and, through her, incurred the King's displeasure. In 1529 he pleaded guilty to a praemunire. In the same year he had to resign the Great Seal and to give up all his property to the King, though later his archbishopric was restored to him. His last months, devoted to his diocese and to deeds of charity, were embittered by the knowledge that the King intended to suppress the two colleges he had founded at Ipswich and Oxford. Of these the latter, the present *Christ Church (q.v.), survived in somewhat different form. Owing to a denunciation by his Italian doctor he was arrested on a charge of high treason in Nov. 1530, but died soon afterwards on his way to London. A statesman rather than a Churchman, Wolsey had devoted his life to the aggrandizement of his king and country, fostering royal control of the Church by the use of his legatine powers and taking a vigorous interest in reform of the secular legal system; but his dream of making England the chief factor in European politics remained unrealized in his age.

Registrum Thome Wolsey Cardinalis Ecclesie Wintoniensis Administratoris transcribed by F. T. Madge and H. Chitty, ed., with introd., by H. Chitty (*Canterbury and York Society, 32; 1926). The primary sources for his official policies are the calendars of the State Papers for the reign of Henry VIII (cited s.v.). Important docs. connected with the divorce in S. Ehses (ed.), Römische Dokumente zur Geschichte der Ehescheidung Heinrichs VIII. von England (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte ... herausgegeben von der Görres-Gesellschaft, 2; Paderborn, 1893). The primary authority for his personal life is the record of George Cavendish (1500–*c.*1561), pr. as The Negotiations of Thomas Wolsey, the Great Cardinall of England (1641); this Life has very frequently been repub.; crit. edn. by R. S. Sylvester (EETS 243; 1959; also, with modernized spelling, New Haven, Conn., and London, 1962). The best modern Life is that of A. F. Pollard (London, 1929). Other Lives by M. *Creighton (ibid., 1888), E. L. Taunton (ibid., 1902), N. Williams (ibid., 1975), and P. Gwyn (ibid., 1990). J. Ridley, The Statesman and the Fanatic: Thomas More and Thomas Wolsey (1982). J. A. Guy, The Cardinal's Court: The Impact of Thomas Wolsey in Star Chamber (Hassocks, W. Sussex [1977]). S. J. Gunn and P. G. Lindley (eds.), Cardinal Wolsey: Church, State and Art (Cambridge, 1991). J. *Gairdner in women, ordination of. Although there is no doubt that there were women of standing among Christ's followers, and that in the apostolic and sub-apostolic period women exercised roles of leadership within the emerging local communities, it is not clear how these roles relate to the threefold ministry of *bishops, *priests, and *deacons that was in place by the 2nd cent. *Epiphanius asserts that some *Montanists had women priests and bishops (Pan. 49. 2), perhaps echoing *Firmilian's report of a prophetess who celebrated the Eucharist, preached, and baptized, but it is plain from these and a few other possible references to women fulfilling priestly functions in heretical bodies that such behaviour was regarded as an outrage in orthodox circles. There is evidence for a distinct order of *deaconesses (q.v.) in the Church during the patristic period. They had charge of female candidates for Baptism, washing them, anointing them, and helping them to change their clothes. They also sometimes instructed women *catechumens, visited the sick of their own sex and, where women entered the church by a different door from men, were sometimes employed as doorkeepers. It is, however, by no means clear that they should be seen as women in deacon's orders, while their precise relationship to formal groups of *widows and virgins is obscure and in some places overlapped. The order disappeared, in the W. by the 11th cent., in the E. slightly later. In the medieval period the ministry of women found its greatest expression in the authority of some *abbesses who came to wield far-reaching power and influence within and beyond their own communities, in some cases even over the local secular clergy.

DNB 62 (1900), pp. 325–43, s.v.; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 2077–80, s.v. See also bibl. to HENRY VIII.

The first Churches to admit women to official ministry were those who had abandoned the threefold order of bishop, priest, and deacon at the *Reformation and which had little or no centralized hierarchical structure. In 1611, for example, the Declaration of Faith of English Baptists (written in Amsterdam) provided for 'Deacons, men and women'. It was not, however, until the 19th cent. that the ordination of women became a serious concern in the life of some Churches. It was given considerable emphasis by the women's suffrage movement in the early 20th cent. and by subsequent liberal and radical movements in theology and biblical studies and by the *Ecumenical Movement. Nevertheless, such ordinations did not become common for some decades because many of the Churches which began to accommodate women into their leadership tended to embrace a tradition of biblical interpretation which in the view of many of its holders made the ecclesiastical 'headship' of women a theological impossibility. The chronology of women in ministry is complicated by the phenomena of unordained and unofficial women's ministries (e.g. as preachers, catechists, founders of local congregations) which in almost every denomination preceded their admission into the ranks of ordained clergy.

The office of deaconess was first revived at *Kaiserswerth in Germany in 1836, and soon spread from there to other countries. A. C. *Tait, Bp. of London, 'set apart' Elizabeth Ferard as the first deaconess in the C of E in 1862; she had founded the Deaconess Community of St Andrew the previous year. Although there had been several groups of women in the *Episcopal Church in the United States of America who had been calling themselves deaconesses since the 1850s, it was only in 1889 that the office was established by canon in the General Convention, which incidentally stipulated that deaconesses must be unmarried; in the following year three graduates of the recently established New York School for Deaconesses were set apart for the office by H. C. Potter, Bp. of New York. An American *Methodist deaconess institute was established in 1888, to be followed by the Wesley Deaconess Institute in England in 1890.

The first woman to be ordained as a minister of a recognized denomination was Antoinette Louisa Brown (later Mrs Blackwell), ordained as minister of the First Congregational Church in Butler and Savannah, Wayne County, NY, in 1853, but she was dismissed a year later. The next woman to be ordained was Olympia Brown in the Universalist Association (later joined with the *Unitarians) and from the later 19th cent. women were ordained in the USA by the *Disciples of Christ (Christian Church; 1888), some Baptist Churches, the *Methodist Protestant Church, the Cumberland *Presbyterian Church (an isolated instance in 1889), and the *Congregationalists who had nine women ordained by 1893. In England Congregationalists did not ordain a woman until 1917 and in Scotland not until 1929. In England the first woman minister was ordained to pastoral charge of a local Baptist church in 1918, and in 1925 the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland formally accredited women as ministers for the first time. Presbyterians in England accepted the ordination of women in principle in 1921, but the first woman ordained after the regular training was made a minister in 1965. The first woman minister in the Presbyterian Church of the USA was ordained in 1956. The Church of Scotland admitted women as *elders in 1966 and ministers in 1968. English Methodists had known women as preachers since the earliest days of the Wesleyan movement, and in 1924 women were allowed to be made local preachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church in the USA, but they entered the fully ordained ministry in the Methodist Church in the USA only in 1956 and in England in 1974. The *Mennonites in the USA ordained a woman in 1973. Other Protestant bodies have followed the same trend.

The first of the *Lutheran Churches to ordain a woman to full ministry was the Evangelisch-Lutherse Kerk in the *Netherlands in 1929. Since then member Churches of the Lutheran World Federation have gradually admitted woman to their ordained ministry, though some still do not do so. The most significant decision was taken in 1958 when the *Swedish Church, which claims to maintain the apostolic succession, became the first such Lutheran body to permit the ordination of women to the priesthood; the first ordinations took place in 1960. In the USA the Lutheran Church in America and the American Lutheran Church ordained their first women pastors in 1970, and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches did so in 1977.

Florence Tim Oi Li became the first woman priest in the Anglican Communion when in 1944 she was ordained by R. O. Hall, Bp. of Hong Kong, to serve Christians who were cut off by war or revolution in *China. His action was condemned by the *Lambeth Conference in 1948, and Li ceased to function as a priest until her orders were recognized by the diocese of Hong Kong in 1970. In the meantime the Lambeth Conference of 1968 had affirmed that those who had 'been made deaconess by the laying on of hands with the appropriate prayer should be regarded as within the order of deacons' and opened the way for canonical regulations on the subject within each province. In the Episcopal Church in the USA, for instance, legislation to this effect was passed by the General Convention in 1970. In 1971 G. Baker, Bp. of Hong Kong, ordained two women deacons to the priesthood. In the USA in 1974 eleven women deacons were irregularly ordained to the priesthood by bishops who had either retired or resigned their jurisdiction, followed by four more in 1975. In 1976 the General Convention passed legislation to permit the ordination of women to the priesthood and the episcopate, and the 15 earlier ordinations were regularized. The first ordinations to the priesthood under the new legislation occurred in 1977. In the C of E legislation was passed in 1986 allowing women to be ordained deacon; in 1993 it was followed by legislation allowing them to become priests, with the first such ordinations taking place in 1994. Women have regularly been ordained as priests in the following Provinces of the Anglican Communion: Hong Kong and Macao (1971), Canada (1976), USA (1977; then incl. *Mexico, 1983), *New Zealand (1977), *Brazil (after 1984), Burundi (1989), *Kenya (1990), *Uganda (1990), *Ireland (1990), the *Philippines (1991), *West Africa (by 1992), *Southern Africa (1992), *Australia (1992), England (1994), *Scotland (1994) and *Wales (1997). Various other Provinces have agreed in principle to the ordination of women to the priesthood, though no such ordinations have taken place to date (1995), and in some Provinces women ordained elsewhere are permitted to officiate.

The first woman to be ordained to the episcopate in the historic succession was Barbara Harris, who was consecrated Suffragan Bishop of Massachusetts in the Episcopal Church in the USA in 1989. The first diocesan bishop was Penelope Jamieson, consecrated Bp. of Dunedin, New Zealand, in 1990. These consecrations followed the establishment of the Abp. of *Canterbury's Commission on Communion and Women in the Episcopate in 1988 to examine the consequences for the Anglican Communion of the admission of women to the episcopate. The United Methodist Church (USA) ordained Marjorie Matthews as their first woman bishop in 1980, the first woman bishop in any major denomination. The Lutherans ordained two women as bishops in 1992, and a third in 1993.

Of the Churches which possess the historic succession, only some Anglicans and some Lutherans admit women to the priesthood and to the episcopate. The German, Swiss, and Austrian *Old Catholic Churches admit women to the diaconate, but this move has not been universally accepted by other Old Catholic Churches. The subject has been a matter of discussion in ecumenical, RC and some Orthodox circles, but the RC Church, the E. *Orthodox and the *Oriental Orthodox Churches maintain an ordained ministry which is exclusively male, holding such to be of the essence of orders. In the RC Church discussion was restricted when *John Paul II issued an apostolic letter Ordinatio Sacerdotalis (22 May 1994) declaring that the Church had no authority to confer priestly ordination on women; on 28 Oct. 1995 the Congregation for the *Doctrine of the Faith stated that the teaching excluding women from priestly ordination had been set forth by the ordinary and *infallible magisterium. Belief in the inherent impossibility of ordaining women to the priesthood held by some members of the Anglican Communion account for some of the controversy and schisms which have followed such ordinations in some Provinces.

Primary sources for statistics and events are contained in official reports and histories of the various Churches. Introductions to the questions surrounding the ordination of women incl.: P. Moore and others, Man, Woman, and Priesthood (1978); V. L. Brereton and C. R. Klein, 'American Women in Ministry: A History of Protestant Beginning Points', in R. Ruether and E. McLaughlin (eds.), Women of Spirit (New York [1979]), pp. 301–32; N. Carter and R. Ruether, 'Entering the Sanctuary: The Struggle for Priesthood in Contemporary Episcopalian and Roman Catholic Experience', ibid., pp. 356–83; E. M. Howe, Women and Church Leadership (Grand Rapids [1982]); J. W. Carroll and others, Women of the Cloth: A New Opportunity for the Churches (San Francisco [1983]); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, In Memory of Her: A Feminist Theological Reconstruction of Christian Origins (New York and London, 1983), pp. 243–342; T. Hopko (ed.), Women and the Priesthood (Crestwood, NY, 1983); W. Hauke, Die Problematik am das Frauenpriestertum vor dem Hintergrund der Schöpfungs- und Erlösungsordnung (1986; Eng. tr., Women in the Priesthood? A Systematic Analysis in the Light of the Order of Creation and Redemption, San Francisco, 1988); J. G. Melton (ed.), The Churches Speak on Women's Ordination: Official Statements from Religious Bodies and Ecumenical Organizations (Detroit [1991]); J. Field-Bibb, Women towards Priesthood: Ministerial Politics and Feminine Praxis (Cambridge, 1991); id., 'Women and Ministry: The Presbyterian Church of England', Heythrop Journal, 31 (1990), pp. 150–64. B. K. Stendahl, The Force of Tradition: A Case Study of Women Priests in Sweden (Philadelphia [1985]). F. C. Lehman, Women Clergy in England: Sexism, Modern Consciousness, and Church Viability (Studies in Religion and Society, 16; Lewiston, NY [1987]). C. M. Prelinger (ed.), Episcopal Women: Gender, Spirituality, and Commitment in an American Mature Denomination [the Episcopal Church] (New York and Oxford, 1992). Ordinatio Sacerdotalis is pr. in AAS 86 (1994), pp. 545–8 and the subsequent ruling of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, ibid., 87 (1995), p.1114. See also bibls. to DEACON, DEACONESS, ORDERS AND ORDINATION; also FEMINIST THEOLOGY.

Wood, Anthony (1632–95), antiquary and historian of *Oxford. In his later years he called himself 'Anthony à Wood'. He lived for most of his life in a house opposite the gate of Merton College, of which he became a member in 1647. He was an assiduous collector of facts, and, though his judgements were often prejudiced, his writings contain a mine of information about the university of Oxford and very many of its otherwise little-known members. In 1674 he issued Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis, printed in two folios at the expense of John *Fell, and in 1691–2 his Athenae Oxonienses; An Exact History of all the Writers and Bishops who have had their Education in the University of Oxford from 1500 to 1690, to which are added the Fasti or Annals of the said University for the same time (also in two folios).

His Athenae Oxonienses . . . to which are added the Fasti, or Annals of the said University, ed. P. Bliss (5 vols., London, 1813–20), with his autobiog. in vol. 1, pp. i–cxxv, and T. *Hearne's account of him, pp. cxxvii–cxxx. His Survey of the Antiquities of the City of Oxford (composed in 1661–6), ed. A. Clark (OHS 15, 17, 27; 1889–99); The Life and Times of Anthony Wood, Antiquary of Oxford, 1632–1695, described by himself, ed. id. (ibid. 19, 21, 26, 30, 40; 1891–1900); abridged edn. by L. Powys (London, 1932). A. Clark in DNB 62 (1900), pp. 349–53.

Woodard, Nathaniel (1811–91), founder of the 'Woodard Schools'. He was born at Basildon Hall, Essex, educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and ordained in 1841. While a curate in E. London he became convinced of the necessity of establishing public schools which would provide a sound middle-class education on a definite Anglican basis. When, in 1847, he was appointed curate at New Shoreham, he founded his first day school, and in 1848 outlined his ideas in his Plea for the Middle Classes, which aroused much controversy, but also received warm approval. In the same year he established the St Nicolas Society for the realization of his plans, and many schools were founded, among them St Nicolas's, Lancing (1848), and St John's, Hurstpierpoint (1850). There was at the time much discussion about provision of schools for the middle and working classes and strong views were expressed, esp. about how to combine a national educational system with various ecclesiastical interests. Woodard's organizing abilities, combined with his devoted service, won him wide moral and financial support, esp. among High Churchmen, and in recognition of his work he was made Canon of Manchester and Rector of St Philip's, Salford, in 1870. In 1873 he founded Denstone, the first of the Midland schools, in 1880 King Alfred's School, Taunton, and in 1887 a girls' school at Bangor (N. Wales).

Life by J. Otter (London, 1925). K. E. *Kirk, The Story of the Woodard Schools (1937); B. Heeney, Mission to the Middle Classes: The Woodard Schools 1848–1891 (1969); L. and E. Cowie, That One Idea: Nathaniel Woodard and his Schools (Ellesmere, Shropshire, 1991). J. A. Atkinson in DNB 62 (1900), pp. 383–5; A. L. Woodard in DECH, p. 649, s.v.

Woolman, John (1720–72), American *Quaker preacher. A native of Northampton, nr. Burlington, NJ, he led a long campaign against slavery from 1743 till his death, constantly travelling among the Quaker communities in America in support of Negro rights. In 1772 he crossed to England to further the interests of his cause and died at *York a few weeks after his arrival. His writings, remarkable for their unadorned sincerity and restrained but strong religious feeling, are among the best literary expressions of the Quaker ideal. The best-known, his Journal which he began writing in 1756, records his 'Life, Gospel-Labours and Christian Experiences'; it was pub. at Philadelphia in 1774.

The Journal, as well as Woolman's other writings, has been often repr. J. G. *Whittier issued an edn. with introduction (1871). Journal and Essays also ed., with biog. introd., by A. M. Gummere (1922); Journal and Major Essays, ed. P. P. Moulton (Library of Protestant Theology, New York, 1971). W. Teignmouth Shore, John Woolman: His Life and our Times (1913); J. Whitney, John Woolman, Quaker (Boston, 1942; London, 1943). H. J. *Cadbury, John Woolman in England: A Documentary Supplement (Journal of the Friends Historical Society, Supplement '31' [32]; 1971).

Woolston, Thomas (1670–1733), *Deistical writer. Educated at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, he was elected a Fellow of his college in 1691 and after ordination held a succession of college appointments. In various writings he defended the *Origenistic modes of exegesis of the OT, and in some polemical writings upheld the *Quakers as their modern exponents. His provocative methods led to the loss of his fellowship in 1721, whereupon Woolston announced his intention of founding a new sect. He entered the lists on the Deistical side in the controversy between A. *Collins and Edward Chandler (*c.*1668–1750, Bp. of *Durham from 1730) with his A Moderator between an Infidel and an Apostate (1725). This was soon followed by two supplements in which he maintained that the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection were allegories.

Collection of his Works in 5 vols., London, each work being separately paginated and dated, incl. [T. Stackhouse?,] The Life of Mr. Woolston, with an Impartial Account of his Writings (London, 1733); C. C. Woog, De Vita et Scriptis Thomae Woolstoni (Leipzig, 1743). *Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Mr. William Whiston, containing Memoirs of Several of his Friends also Written by himself (2nd edn., 1749), pp. 231–5. J. Leland, A View of the Principal Deistical Writers that have Appeared in England in the Last and Present Century, 1 (1754), pp. 126–43. L. Stephen, History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century (2 vols., 1876), esp. vol. 1, pp. 230–8; E. Sayous, Les Déistes anglais et le christianisme principalement depuis Toland jusqu'à Chubb, 1696 1738 (1882), pp. 122–45. R. M. Burns, The Great Debate on Miracles (Lewisburg, London, and Toronto [1981]), esp. pp. 77–82. A. Gordon in DNB 62 (1900), pp. 437–9.

Worcester. The diocese was founded *c.*680 on the initiative of St *Theodore, Abp. of Canterbury, for the tribe of the Hwicce, when the diocese of Mercia was divided into five. The first cathedral, which was dedicated to St *Peter, was richly endowed by the Mercian kings. The secular canons, who originally served it, were gradually replaced by *Benedictine monks under St *Oswald, who also built a new cathedral. This church, which was dedicated to the BVM, was completed in 983. Destroyed by the Danes in 1041, it was rebuilt (1084–9) by St *Wulfstan, but the only remaining parts of his work are the crypt and a few walls, much of it having perished by fire and by the fall of the central tower in 1175. In 1218 the cathedral, which contained the tomb of King *John between the shrines of Oswald and Wulfstan, was restored and reconsecrated. In the course of time several alterations were made in its structure, the choir being a particularly fine example of the Early English style, whereas the nave, redone in the 14th cent., shows chiefly Perpendicular work. From 1497 to 1534 the see was held by absentee Italian bishops who were the King's representatives at Rome. The monastery was suppressed in 1540 and a secular chapter was in place by 1542, the last of the priors, Henry Holbeach, becoming the dean. The size of the diocese was much reduced in 1541 and 1542 by the foundation of the sees of *Gloucester and Bristol. Among the better-known Bps. of Worcester are, besides those already named, St *Dunstan, *Wulfstan (d. 1023), T. *Bourchier, H. *Latimer, J. *Hooper, E. *Sandys, J. *Whitgift, G. *Morley, J. *Gauden, J. *Earle, E. *Stillingfleet, and C. *Gore. Every third year the Three Choirs Festival is held at Worcester.

Episcopal Register for the periods of vacancy of the See ('Registrum Sede Vacante'), 1301 1435, ed. J. W. Willis Bund (Worcestershire Historical Society, 3 vols., 1893–7); Registers of Godfrey Giffard [Bp. 1268–1301], ed. id. (ibid., 2 vols., 1902); of William Ginsborough (more usually Gainsborough) [Bp. 1303–7], ed. id. (ibid., 1907); of Walter Reynolds [Bp. 1308–13], ed. R. A. Wilson (ibid., 1927); of Thomas de Cobham [Bp. 1317–27], ed.

E. H. Pearce (ibid., 1930); calendars of the Registers of Adam de Orleton [Bp. 1327–33] by R. M. Haines (ibid., 1979), of Wolstan de Bransford [Bp. 1339–49] by id. (ibid., 1966); of Henry Wakefield [Bp. 1375–95] by W. P. Marett (ibid., 1972); and of Richard Clifford [Bp. 1401–7] by W. E. L. Smith (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Subsidia Mediaevalia, 6; Toronto, 1976). E. S. Fegan (ed.), Journal of Prior William More [1518–36] (Worcestershire Historical Society, 1914). J. M. Wilson, The Liber Albus of the Priory of Worcester. Parts 1 and 2, Priors John de Wyke, 1301–17, and Wulfstan de Bransford, 1317–39 (ibid., 1919). M. Hollings (ed.), The Red Book of Worcester containing Surveys of the Bishop's Manors and other Records chiefly of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries (ibid., 4 pts., 1934–50). J. M. Wilson (ed.), Accounts of the Priory of Worcester for the Year . . . 1521–2, and J. H. Bloom and S. G. Hamilton, A Catalogue of the Rolls of Obedientiaries (ibid., 1907); J. M. Wilson and C. Gordon (eds.), Early Compotus Rolls of the Priory of Worcester (ibid., 1908); S. G. Hamilton (ed.), Compotus Rolls of the Priory of Worcester of the XIVth and XVth Centuries (ibid., 1910). C. Price (ed.), Liber Pensionum Prioratus Wigorn: Being a Collection of Documents Relating to Pensions from Appropriated Churches and other Payments Receivable by the Prior and Convent of Worcester and to the Privileges of the Monastery (ibid., 1925). J. Atkins, The Early Occupants of the Office of Organist and Master of the Choristers of the Cathedral Church of Christ and the Blessed Virgin Mary, Worcester (ibid., 1918). R. R. Darlington (ed.), The Cartulary of Worcester Cathedral Priory (Register I) (Publications of the Pipe Roll Society, 76 for 1962–3; 1968). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 567–622. P. H. Sawyer, 'Charters of the Reform Movement: the Worcester Archive', in D. Parsons (ed.), Tenth-Century Studies (1975), pp. 84–93. W. Thomas, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of Worcester: With an Account of the Bishops thereof from the Foundation of the See to the Year 1660 (1736). J. Noake, The Monastery and Cathedral of Worcester (1866). W. M. Ede, The Cathedral Church of Christ and the Blessed Virgin Mary of Worcester: Its Monuments and their Stories (Worcester, 1925). P. Barker, Worcester Cathedral: A Short Architectural History (ibid., 1994). M. M. C. Calthorp in VCH, Worcs, ed. J. W. Willis-Bund and W. Page, 2 (1906), pp. 94–112, and F. M. Stenton and H. Brakspear, ibid. 4 (1924), pp. 394–408. H. W. Yeatman-Biggs in DECH (1912), pp. 649–53, s.v.

Worcester House Declaration (1660). See DECLARATIONS OF INDULGENCE.

Word of God. See LOGOS.

Wordsworth, Christopher (1807–85), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was the youngest son of Christopher Wordsworth (1774–1846), Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, and thus a nephew of W. *Wordsworth, the poet. Elected a Fellow of his father's college in 1830, he was Headmaster of Harrow from 1836 to 1844, and after holding various ecclesiastical appointments was consecrated Bp. of Lincoln in 1869. Throughout his life he remained a conservative *High Churchman, with great veneration for the early Church Fathers. In this field perhaps his most important study was St Hippolytus and the Church of Rome (1853), a reply to C. C. J. *Bunsen's book (1852). He also wrote a commentary on the Bible (NT, 1856–60; OT, 1864–71) and a series of hymns, published in The Holy Year (1862); several of these are still in use, among them 'Hark! the sound of holy voices' and 'Songs of thankfulness and praise'.

He pub. a collection of his works as Miscellanies Literary and Religious (3 vols., 1879). J. H. Overton and E. Wordsworth (daughter), Christopher Wordsworth, Bishop of Lincoln, 1807–1885 (1888). A. C. Benson, The Leaves of the Tree: Studies in Biography (1911), ch. 11, 'Bishop Wordsworth of Lincoln', pp. 260–83. V. Strudwick, Christopher Wordsworth: Bishop of Lincoln, 1869 85 (Lincoln, 1987 [slight]). J. H. Overton in DNB 63 (1900), pp. 9–11.

Wordsworth, John (1843–1911), Bp. of *Salisbury. The elder son of Christopher *Wordsworth, Bp. of *Lincoln (q.v.), he was educated at *Winchester and New College, *Oxford, became a Fellow of Brasenose College in 1867, and a prebendary of Lincoln in 1870. One of the best Latin scholars of his day, he worked assiduously from 1878 onwards at producing a critical edition of the *Vulgate NT (Mt. to Rom. pub. 1889–1911; minor edition of whole NT, 1911). In 1881 he was *Bampton Lecturer, and from 1883 to 1885 the first Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture at Oxford. From 1885 until his death he was Bp. of Salisbury. As a bishop he proved an invaluable adviser to Abp. E. W. *Benson (with whom he was intimate) and an enthusiastic worker in the cause of Reunion, esp. with the *Swedish and *Old Catholic Churches. To the latter end he published two treatises on the validity of *Anglican Ordinations, De successione episcoporum in ecclesia anglicana (1890) and De validitate ordinum anglicanorum (1894). In 1897 he composed the Latin Responsio sent by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in reply to '*Apostolicae Curae'.

Life by E. W. Watson (London, 1915). Id. in DNB, 1901 1911, 3, pp. 705–7.

Wordsworth, William (1770–1850), English poet. He was educated at St John's College, Cambridge, and went in 1791–2 to France, where he became a radical in politics and sympathized with the revolutionaries. In these years he went through a period of moral laxity and religious unbelief. After his return to England he devoted himself entirely to poetry. In 1797 began his friendship with S. T. *Coleridge, and in 1798 the two published jointly Lyrical Ballads, which contain the famous 'Lines written . . . above Tintern Abbey'. Wordsworth's chief aim in this collection, which was a landmark in English poetry, was to bring out the deeper spiritual meaning in everyday persons and events, a task for which he was particularly fitted by his capacities for minute observation and for the detection of the emotional qualities in commonplace things. In 1799 he settled at Grasmere. Among his later works are The Prelude, his spiritual autobiography (of which there are three texts—an early draft of 1799, a revised text of 1805, not published in his lifetime, and the final text published in 1850), and the Poems in Two Volumes (1807), containing the famous 'Ode to Duty' and 'Ode on the Intimations of Immortality'. In the poetry written after 1810 there is a marked decline of poetic power, e.g. in much of The Excursion (1814), on which he had been working for many years. The great inspiration of Wordsworth's art was nature, which he invested with spiritual qualities; this process at times brought his thought near to *pantheism. In his later years, however, he returned to a more orthodox form of creed. His Ecclesiastical Sonnets (1822), which give an account of the Church in England from the introduction of Christianity to the reign of *Charles I, are an eloquent expression of his devotion to the C of E, containing, at the same time, a fair appreciation of medieval English Catholicism. He was in sympathy with the *Oxford Movement and esp. with J. *Keble, whose Christian Year he admired. Having been little valued in his youth, Wordsworth's genius came to be recognized in his later years, and he was made Poet Laureate in 1843.

Edns. of Poems pub. by Wordsworth himself incl. those of 1807 (2 vols., London; repr. by T. Hutchinson, 1897, and ed. H. Darbishire, Oxford, 1914), 1827 (5 vols., London), 1832 (4 vols., ibid.), and 1849–50 (7 vols., ibid.). Modern edns. by T. Hutchinson (London, 1895, ed. E. de Selincourt, 1936), E. de Selincourt and H. Darbishire (6 vols., ibid., 1940–9), and S. Parrish and others ('The Cornell Wordsworth', Ithaca, NY, and Hassocks, Sussex, 1975 ff.). The 1805 text of The Prelude also ed. E. de Selincourt (Oxford, 1933); the texts of 1799, 1805, and 1850, together with recent critical essays, ed. Jonathan Wordsworth and others (New York and London [1979]). Modern edn. of his Prose Works by W. J. B. Owen and J. W. Smyser (3 vols., Oxford, 1974). [D.] W. Knight (ed.), Letters of the Wordsworth Family from 1787 to 1855 (3 vols., 1907). E. de Selincourt (ed.), The Early Letters of William and Dorothy Wordsworth (1787–1805) (Oxford, 1935; 2nd edn. by C. L. Shaver, 1967); E. de Selincourt (ed.), The Letters of William and Dorothy Wordsworth: The Middle Years (2 vols., ibid., 1937; 2nd edn. by M. [C.] Moorman and A. G. Hill, 1969–70) and The Later Years (3 vols., ibid., 1939; 2nd edn. by A. G. Hill, 4 vols., 1978–88). C. *Wordsworth, Memoirs of William Wordsworth (2 vols., 1851). Modern biog. studies by M. [C.] Moorman (2 vols., Oxford, 1957–65), M. L. Reed (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1967–75), and S. Gill (Oxford, 1989). Crit. studies by E. C. Batho (Cambridge, 1933), H. Darbishire (Clark Lectures, 1949; Oxford, 1950), F. [N.] W. Bateson (London, 1954), [H.] J. [F.] Jones (ibid., 1954), M. Rader (Oxford, 1967), M. Jacobus (ibid., 1976), J. Wordsworth (ibid., 1982), J. K. Chandler (Chicago and London, 1984), and K. R. Johnston (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1984). S. Prickett, Coleridge and Wordsworth: The Poetry of Growth (Cambridge, 1970); N. Roe, Coleridge and Wordsworth: The Radical Years (Oxford English Monographs, 1988). Bicentenary Wordsworth Studies, ed. J. Wordsworth (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1970). Critical Essays on William Wordsworth, ed. G. H. Gilpin (Boston [1990]). A. D. Martin, The Religion of Wordsworth (1936). T. J. Wise, A Bibliography of the Writings in Prose and Verse of William Wordsworth (1916); M. Jones and K. Kroeber, Wordsworth Scholarship and Criticism, 1973–1984: An Annotated Bibliography, with Selected Criticism 1809–1972 (New York and London, 1985). W. J. B. Owen in NCBEL 3 (1969), cols. 182–211.

World Alliance of Reformed Churches. This body, officially called 'The World Alliance of Reformed Churches (Presbyterian and Congregational)', was formed in 1970 by the amalgamation of the (*Presbyterian) World Alliance of Reformed Churches, founded in 1875 (from 1877 to 1954 officially called 'The Alliance of the Reformed Churches throughout the World holding the Presbyterian System'; its title was slightly changed in 1954), with the International Congregational Council, founded in 1891. In 1990 it had 157 member Churches, representing some 60 million members. Its headquarters are in *Geneva.

M. Pradervand, A Century of Service: A History of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches 1875–1975 (Edinburgh, 1975). A. P. F. Sell, A Reformed, Evangelical, Catholic Theology: The Contribution of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, 1875–1982 (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1991). Id. in D. K. McKim (ed.), Encyclopedia of the Reformed Faith (Louisville, Ky., and Edinburgh, 1992), pp. 403–7, s.v.

World Council of Churches. The 'fellowship of Churches which accept our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour', formally constituted at *Amsterdam on 23 Aug. 1948. The organization arose from the fusion of the two earlier movements, *Life and Work and *Faith and Order, the first practical steps being taken at their respective conferences at *Oxford and *Edinburgh in 1937. A further stage was reached at a conference at Utrecht in 1938, when a constitution was drawn up and a provisional organization ('The World Council of Churches in Process of Formation') established. Because of the Second World War the formal constitution was delayed until 1948. At that time it was decided that the International Missionary Council (see EDINBURGH CONFERENCE, 1910) should be considered as being in association with the World Council of Churches; it was finally integrated in 1961. Also in 1961 the constitution of the World Council of Churches was amended, so that the Council was defined as 'A fellowship of churches which confess the Lord Jesus as God and Saviour according to the Scriptures and therefore seek to fulfil together their common calling to the glory of the one God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit'. The work of the Council is reviewed at six- to eight-yearly intervals by a representative Assembly and from this is elected the Council's highest governing body, its 150-member Central Committee, which meets annually. Advisory committees give oversight to the various programmes and activities of the Council. Assemblies have been held at Amsterdam (1948), *Evanston, Ill. (1954), New Delhi (1961), *Uppsala (1968), Nairobi (1975), Vancouver (1983), and Canberra (1991). The headquarters of the World Council of Churches is in *Geneva.

At its formation in 1948 the Council had 147 member Churches; by 1993 the number had risen to 322. With the exception of the RC Church and the *Unitarians, the Council includes Churches from all the main Christian confessions and denominations, including nearly all the E. *Orthodox Churches (incl. since 1961 the Patriarchate of Moscow). Many of the member Churches are from the non-Western world. Although the RC Church is not a member, since 1961 the Vatican has appointed accredited observers to Assemblies; in 1965 a Joint Working Group was established between the Vatican and the World Council of Churches to discuss questions of common concern, and in 1968 the RC Church accepted full membership of the Faith and Order Commission and was thus involved in the production of the 1982 report on '*Baptism, Eucharist and Ministry'. Many national and regional Councils of Churches are Associate Members of the World Council, and there are many contacts with the Christian world communions.

A reorganization in 1992 gathered most of the work of the World Council into four programme units: (1) Unity and Renewal, including Faith and Order and work on worship, theological education, the laity and the nature of community; (2) Mission, Education and Witness, continuing the Commission on World Mission and Evangelism and work on education, health, and the theological significance of religions; (3) Justice, Peace, and Creation, covering a broad range of ecumenical social witness and action (one component enjoying consultative status at the United Nations); and (4) Sharing and Service, continuing the work of the Commission on Inter-Church Aid, Refugee and World Service. A General Secretariat co-ordinates the relationships of the Council with its member Churches and other bodies, including other faiths. The Ecumenical Institute at *Bossey is an integral part of the World Council.

G. K. A. *Bell, The Kingship of Christ: The Story of the World Council of Churches (Harmondsworth, 1954). D. P. Gaines, The World Council of Churches: A Study of its background and history (Peterborough, NH [1966]). M. van Elderen, Introducing the World Council of Churches (Geneva [1990]). W. A. Visser 't Hooft, The Genesis and Formation of the World Council of Churches (ibid., 1982). H. Krüger, 'The Life and Activities of the World Council of Churches', in H. E. Fey (ed.), The Ecumenical Advance (1970), pp. 27–62; 2nd edn. (Geneva, 1986) is unchanged apart from additional bibl., pp. 514–36. M. E. Brinkman, Progress in Unity? Fifty Years of Theology within the World Council of Churches: 1945–1995 (Louvain Theological and Pastoral Monographs, 18; 1995). See also other works cited under ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT.

World Evangelical Fellowship. See EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

Worms, Concordat of (1122), also the 'Pactum Calixtinum'. The agreement which was reached between Pope *Callistus II and the Emp. Henry V through the mediation of the German princes on 23 Sept. 1122; it ended the *Investiture Controversy. The Emperor's 'Precept' to the Church explicitly renounced all investiture by ring and staff in his dominions, and granted canonical election and free consecration. The Pope's 'Privilege' to Henry conceded that elections of bishops and abbots in the German kingdom were to take place (without simony or violence) in the Emperor's presence, and that before his consecration the elect was to receive the regalia from the Emperor by investiture with the sceptre. In cases of dispute the Emperor, with the counsel or judgement of the metropolitan and comprovincials, was to lend his assent and aid to the sanior pars. However, in the other parts of the Empire (i.e. Italy and Burgundy) no form of election in the Emperor's presence was granted; and consecration of the elect was to precede his investiture by the Emperor with the regalia, which should follow within six months.

Text ed. L. Weiland in MGH, Leges, Sectio 4, Constitutiones et Acta Publica Imperatorum et Regum, 1 (1893), pp. 159–61; conveniently repr. in Mirbt and Aland (1967), pp. 296 f. (no. 571); Eng. tr. in Bettenson, pp. 154 f. W. Fritz (ed.), Quellen zum Wormser Konkordat (Kleine Texte, 177; 1955). E. Bernheim, Das Wormser Konkordat und seine Vorurkunden hinsichtlich Entstehung, Formulierung, Rechtsgültigkeit (Untersuchungen zur Deutschen Staats- und Rechtsgeschichte, 81; 1906); H. Rudorff, Zur Erklärung des Wormser Konkordats (Quellen und Studien zur Verfassungsgeschichte des Deutschen Reiches, 1, Heft 4; 1906). A. Hofmeister, 'Das Wormser Konkordat. Zum Streit um seine Bedeutung', in Forschungen und Versuche zur Geschichte des Mittelalters und der Neuzeit: Festschrift Dietrich Schäfer zum siebzigsten Geburtstag (Jena, 1915), pp. 64–148; repr. separately, Darmstadt, 1962; P. Classen, 'Das Wormser Konkordat in der deutschen Verfassungsgeschichte', in J. Fleckenstein (ed.), Investiturstreit und Reichsverfassung (1973), pp. 411–60; M. Minninger, Von Clermont zum Wormser Konkordat (Forschungen zur Kaiser- und Papstgeschichte des Mittelalters, Beihefte zu J. F. Böhmer, Regesta Imperii, 2; 1978), esp. pp. 189–209. See also works cited under INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY.

Worms, Conference of (1540–1). The colloquy arranged, after the failure of the Conference of *Hagenau (q.v.), with a view to reuniting the Catholics and Protestants in Germany. The conference met on 25 Nov. 1540, with 11 representatives on each side. After a long debate on procedure, it was finally agreed that one theologian should speak for each party, J. *Eck being selected by the Catholics and P. *Melanchthon by the Protestants. In Jan. 1541 an agreed formula was reached on the disputed matter of *original sin; but on 18 Jan. it was decided to end the discussions at Worms in view of the forthcoming Reichstag at *Ratisbon.

W. H. Neuser (ed.), Die Vorbereitung der Religionsgespräche von Worms und Regensburg 1540/41 (Texte zur Geschichte der evangelischen Theologie, 4; Neukirchen [1974]). C. Augustijn, De Godsdienstgespprekken tussen Rooms-Katholieken en Protestanten van 1538 tot 1541 (Haarlem, 1967), pp. 46–72, with bibl., pp. 142–6. P. Fraenkel, Einigungsbestrebungen in der Reformationszeit (Institut für Europäische Geschichte, Mainz, Vorträge 41; Wiesbaden, 1965), pp. 37–70. V. Pfnür, 'Die Einigung bei den Religionsgesprächen von Worms und Regensburg 1540/41 eine Täuschung?', in G. Müller (ed.), Die Religionsgespräche der Reformationszeit (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 191; Gütersloh, 1980), pp. 55–88. G. Kawerau in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 489–92, s.v. 'Wormser Religionsgespräche I'.

Worms, Diet of (1521). The most celebrated of the long series of Imperial diets held at Worms, at which M. *Luther defended his doctrines before the Emp. *Charles V. It took place in the Bischofshof from 27 Jan. to 25 May. The Papal legate, *Aleander, who had arrived at Worms on 30 Nov. 1520, having put the case against Luther on 13 Feb. 1521, Luther was then summoned and arrived on 16 Apr. On 18 Apr. he made his final refusal to recant his doctrines, acc. to an early but unreliable tradition concluding his answer with the famous words 'Hie stehe ich. Ich kan nicht anders. Gott helff mir. Amen.' Charles V having announced on the following day his resolve to take firmer measures against his doctrines, Luther departed from Worms on 26 Apr. On 26 May his teachings were formally condemned in the Edict of Worms.

Many of the primary docs. are pr. in P. Balan (ed.), Monumenta Reformationis Lutheranae ex Tabulariis S. Sedis Secretis, 1521–1525 (Ratisbon, 1883); extracts from these and other collections, with further refs., in Kidd, pp. 79–89 (nos. 39–46). P. Kalkoff, Der Wormser Reichstag von 1521 (1922), with full refs. F. Reuter (ed.), Der Reichstag zu Worms von 1521: Reichspolitik und Luthersache (Worms, 1971). R. Bäumer (ed.), Lutherprozess und Lutherbann (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 32; 1972). [E.] G. Rupp, Luther's Progress to the Diet of Worms, 1521 (1951). Detailed bibl. in Schottenloher, 3 (1938), pp. 12–14 (nos. 27923–50), with refs. to other lists of specialized items, and on the Edict of Worms, ibid. 4 (1938), pp. 753 f. (nos. 44534–42). See also works cited under ALEANDER; LUTHER, M.; and REFORMATION.

Worms, Disputation of (1540–1). See WORMS, CONFERENCE OF.

Worms, Synod of (1076). The synod convened by King *Henry IV of Germany to secure the deposition of Pope *Gregory VII at the beginning of the *Investiture Controversy. Henry invited to the assembly, which met on 24 Jan. 1076, the Abps. of Mainz and Trier and a large number of other (mainly German) bishops. It issued a strong anti-Papal statement, charging Gregory with many serious crimes and calling upon the people of Rome to depose him; and an offensively worded letter was despatched by Henry to the Pope personally. As a result, the Pope excommunicated Henry at his Lenten synod.

Relevant texts ed. L. Weiland in MGH, Leges, Sect. 4, Constitutiones et Acta Publica Imperatorum et Regum, 1 (1893), pp. 106–13. G. Meyer von Knonau (ed.), Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV. und Heinrich V., 2 (1894), pp. 613–28. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, 3 (SSL 16; 1937), pp. 50–9, with important notes. H. Zimmermann, 'Wurde Gregor VII. 1076 in Worms abgesetzt?', Mitteilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, 78 (1970), pp. 121–31. See also works cited under INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY.

Worship, Directory of Public (1645). The 'Directory for the Public Worship of God', compiled by the *Westminster Assembly (q.v.), was designed on *Presbyterian principles to replace the BCP. An Ordinance requiring its use was passed by both houses of Parliament on 4 Jan. 1645. For the most part it contained general instructions rather than set forms of service. The principal service consisted of prayers, two lessons, Psalms and a sermon. The Holy Communion was to follow the morning sermon, with the people seated round the Holy Table. Instructions were provided for Baptism, visitation of the sick, and a form of marriage, but the burial of the dead was to be performed without ceremony, and feast days, apart from Sunday, were abolished. Penalties for using the BCP or failure to follow the Directory were imposed on 26 Aug. 1645.

The 'Ordinance for taking away the Book of Common Prayer, and for establishing and putting into execution of the Directory for the Public Worship of God' [incl. text of Directory] is pr. in C. H. Firth and R. S. Rait (eds.), Acts and Ordinances of the Interregnum, 1642 1660 (1911), pp. 582–607. It is also repr., with introd., by I. Breward (Grove Liturgical Study, 21; Bramcote, 1980).

Worship and Doctrine Measure. The Church of England (Worship and Doctrine) Measure 1974 came into force on 1 Sept. 1975 and gives the General *Synod power to regulate by *Canon all matters of worship, including *Alternative Services, provided that the forms of service in the BCP 'continue to be available for use'. It also lays down that decisions as to the forms used in churches be taken by the incumbent and guild or *Parochial Church Council jointly, with provisions slanted in favour of the BCP in default of agreement. In the case of occasional services, the choice lies with the conducting minister, subject to a right of appeal to the diocesan bishop where there is a dispute. The Measure also allows the General Synod to oblige clergy and lay officers to assent to the doctrine of the C of E in a prescribed form (see ASSENT, DECLARATION OF).

The text is pr. in Halsbury's Statutes of England and Wales, 14 (4th edn., 1986), pp. 776–83; also in R. D. H. Bursell, Liturgy, Order and the Law (Oxford, 1996), pp. 261–5.

Wounds, the Five Sacred. Though the Passion narratives of the Gospels expressly record only the opening of the Lord's side, the piercing of His hands and feet, a normal practice in contemporary crucifixions, is attested in the Resurrection appearances (Lk. 24: 39 and Jn. 20: 20 and 27). Devotion to the Five Wounds developed in the Middle Ages, esp. under the influence of St *Bernard's love for the humanity of Christ and His Passion, and was fostered by the *stigmatization of St *Francis of Assisi. Preference was soon given to the wound in the side from which the Church and the Sacraments, esp. Baptism ('water') and Eucharist ('blood'), were said to have sprung, and which led gradually to the cult of the *Sacred Heart. In the 14th and 15th cents. prayers to the Five Wounds became numerous in popular religious literature. *Portugal adopted the emblem on her coat of arms, the members of the *Pilgrimage of Grace wore it on their clothes, and the 'wells of pity' were engraved on many English rings in the 15th cent. The devotion figured prominently in the thought of N. L. Graf von *Zinzendorf and his followers. Today it is fostered esp. by the *Passionists, who observe a feast on the second Friday after Easter.

L. Gougaud, OSB, Dévotions et pratiques ascétiques du moyen âge (Pax, 21; 1925), pp. 78–128 (Eng. tr., 1927, pp. 80–130). A. Franz, Die Messe im deutschen Mittelalter (1902), pp. 155–61 and 703 f. R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 84–91. G. F. Holweck in CE 15 (1912), pp. 714 f., s.v.; O. Schmucki and E. Sauser in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 10 (1965), cols. 1249–51, s.v. 'Wunden Christi', with further bibl. See also works cited under SACRED HEART and STIGMATIZATION.

wrath of God, the. An anthropomorphic phrase for the Divine attitude towards sin. The expression is frequent in the Bible, esp. in the OT (e.g. Exod. 15: 7, Ps. 2: 12), where wrath is attributed to God not only when He punishes sinners but also when He sends trials to the just (e.g. Job 14: 13). In the NT the wrath of God is particularly connected with the Judgement on the Last Day, which St *Paul calls the 'day of wrath' (Rom. 2: 5, cf. 1: 18 and Mt. 3: 7), a conception elaborated in the Book of Rev., esp. under the metaphors of the 'wrath of the Lamb' (6: 16) and the 'wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God' (19: 15).

Patristic discussion in *Lactantius' De Ira Dei. M. Pohlenz, Vom Zorne Gottes: Eine Studie über den Einfluss der griechischen Philosophie auf das alte Christentum (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 12; 1909). R. V. G. Tasker, The Biblical Doctrine of the Wrath of God (1951 lecture [1952]). A. T. Hanson, The Wrath of the Lamb (1957). See also comm. to Romans, cited s.v., ad loc. H. Kleinkert and others in TWNT 5 (1954), pp. 382–448 (Eng. tr., 1967, pp. 382–447), s.v. ὀργή, with bibl. G. A. Herion and S. H. Travis in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 989–98, s.v.

Wrede, William (1859–1906), German NT scholar. He was professor of NT at Breslau from 1895 until his death. A member of the '*Religionsgeschichtliche Schule', he pioneered the 'history of traditions' approach to the Gospels in Das Messiasgeheimnis in den Evangelien (1901; Eng. tr., 1971). In this work, which gave its name to the whole discussion of the so-called *Messianic Secret (q.v.), Wrede challenged the current critical view that St *Mark's Gospel was an unadorned record of historical fact, and maintained that Jesus in His earthly life did not claim to be the Messiah, the Gospel story being a reading back of later beliefs about His Person into the narrative. His other influential writings are Über Aufgabe und Methode der sogenannten Neutestamentlichen Theologie (1897; Eng. tr., 1973), which reduced this theological discipline to a purely historical account of early Christian religion, and Paulus (1905; Eng. tr., 1907), which argued that the Christian religion received its essential form through St *Paul's radical transformation of the teaching of Christ. Penetrating, but less influential, were his Charakter und Tendenz des Johannesevangeliums (1903) and Die Echtheit des zweiten Thessalonicherbriefs (1903).

Wrede's Vorträge und Studien, ed. A. Wrede (brother; Tübingen, 1907), with introd., pp. iii–xiv. Eng. tr. of Über Aufgabe und Methode der sogenannten Neutestamentlichen Theologie by R. [C.] Morgan, The Nature of New Testament Theology (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 25; 1973), pp. 68–116. A. *Schweitzer, Geschichte der Leben-Jesu-Forschung (2nd edn., 1913), pp. 368–89 (Eng. tr. of 1st edn., 1910, pp. 328–49). G. Strecker, 'William Wrede zur hundertsten Wiederkehr seines Geburtstages', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 57 (1960), pp. 67–91, incl. list of his works. H. Räisänen, Beyond New Testament Theology (1990), pp. 13–18. A. *Jülicher in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 506–10.

Wren, Christopher (1632–1723), architect of *St Paul's Cathedral. The son of a future bishop, Wren was brought up and remained a *High Churchman. He was educated at Westminster School and Wadham College, Oxford. In 1653 he was elected to a fellowship at All Souls and in 1657 appointed professor of astronomy at Gresham College, London. Three years later he became Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, and in 1661 assistant, and later full, surveyor general. He was one of the founders, and from 1680 to 1682 president, of the Royal Society. His designs for the chapel of Pembroke College, Cambridge (1663) and the Sheldonian Theatre, Oxford (1664) having disclosed his outstanding ability, after the Great Fire of 1666 he was chosen as one of the rebuilders of the city. Besides his great work, St Paul's Cathedral, begun in 1675 and completed in 1716, Wren was responsible for building 52 London city churches, the Monument (1671–6), Trinity College Library, Cambridge (1676–84), Chelsea Hospital (1682–92), Hampton Court Palace (1689–94), and Greenwich Naval Hospital (begun in 1696). His great achievement as a church designer was to produce models specifically suited to the Anglican rite. In a Memorandum on Church Building (1708), he explains that for RCs 'it is enough if they hear the Murmur of the Mass, and see the Elevation of the Host, but ours are to be fitted for Auditories', allowing 'all to hear the Service, and both to hear distinctly, and see the Preacher' (Parentalia, p. 320). The need to maintain the centrality of the altar rendered Calvinist patterns of church-building equally unsuitable. His 52 churches, almost all built on the pre-Reformation foundations of the destroyed City churches, are examples of adaptation to difficult sites, while providing accommodation and audibility. In the case of St Paul's, and esp. his preferred Great Model (1673; in St Paul's), which was rejected but later adapted, he felt that grandeur in the classical style was essential, and he deliberately introduced echoes of *St Peter's, Rome.

Parentalia: or Memoirs of the Family of the Wrens: . . . but chiefly of Sir Christopher Wren. . . . Compiled by his son Christopher (London, 1750; repr., Farnborough, 1965), pp. 181–368; Life and Works of Sir Christopher Wren, from the Parentalia or Memoirs of his son Christopher [ed. E. J. Enthoven] (London and New York [1903]). J. Elmes, Memoirs of the life and works of Sir Christopher Wren (1823). Other studies by G. [F.] Webb (London, 1937), J. Summerson (ibid., 1953), E. F. Sekler (ibid., 1956), M. [D.] Whinney (ibid., 1971), K. Downes (ibid., 1971), and B. [D. G.] Little (ibid., 1975). Sir Christopher Wren A.D. 1632–1723: Bicentenary Memorial Volume published under the Auspices of the Royal Institute of British Architects (1923). P. Waterhouse and others, Sir Christopher Wren, 1632–1723 (1923). K. Downes, Sir Christopher Wren: The Design of St Paul's Cathedral (1988). Publications of the Wren Society (20 vols., Oxford, 1924–43). H. [M.] Colvin, A Biographical Dictionary of British Architects 1600–1840 (1978), pp. 917–31, s.v.

Wroth, William (1570 or 1576–1641), the first Welsh Nonconformist pastor. Educated at Oxford, he became rector of Llanfaches, to the west of Chepstow, in 1611 or perhaps 1617, and after a sudden conversion in 1620 became famous as a Puritan preacher. In 1635 he was summoned before the Court of *High Commission, but his case was delayed. In 1639, however, after he had ceased to hold his living, he established at Llanfaches with some associates the first separatist church in Wales.

T. Watts, 'William Wroth (1570–1641)', Congregational History Magazine, 2, no. 5 (1989), pp. 1–69. T. Richards in Dictionary of Welsh Biography down to 1940 (1959), p. 1093, s.v.

Wulfila. See ULPHILAS.

Wulfric, St (d. 1154), also 'St Ulrich', anchorite. He was born at Compton Martin, nr. Bristol, and ordained priest to the charge of Deverill, nr. Warminster. (It is not clear which village of this name is intended by his biographer.) After a conversion attributed to an interview with a beggar, who told him the contents of his purse and prophesied a life of sanctity for him, he returned to Compton Martin. He was enclosed *c.*1125 in a cell at Haselbury Plucknett, Somerset, where he practised very severe austerities and became renowned for his prophecies and miracles, e.g. that at his prayers the suit of mail which he wore was once cut with scissors as cloth. The statement that he was a *Cistercian seems to rest on a confusion. His cult was mainly confined to SW England, and he was never formally canonized. Feast day, 20 Feb.

Earliest account, written during his lifetime, by Henry of Huntingdon, Historia Anglorum, 9. 23 (ed. T. Arnold, RS, 1879, pp. xxix f.). Life by John, Abbot of Ford, prob. written between 1180 and 1190, ed. M. Bell, OSB (Somerset Record Society, 47; 1933), with full introd.

Wulfstan (d. 1023), Bp. of London from 996 to 1002 and Abp. of *York from 1002; homilist and law-writer. (He is not to be confused with the Wulfstan of the following entry.) He probably came from the eastern Danelaw, and was a monk, though it is not known where. He held the see of *Worcester as well as that of York from 1002 to 1016, and was a prominent royal counsellor. Wulfstan was a distinguished writer in Old English, probably surpassed only by his correspondent, *Aelfric. He was the author of numerous homilies (the exact canon is disputed), which are simple practical hortatory expositions of essential doctrines; the best-known, though not the most typical, bears the Latin rubric 'Lupi Sermo ad Anglos quando Dani maxime prosecuti sunt eos, quod fuit anno 1014'; this vividly depicts the miseries of the time and ascribes them, in traditional style, to God's anger at the sustained wickedness of all classes. His longest work is his 'Institutes of Polity, Civil and Ecclesiastical', an interesting attempt at a general work of political theory which is mainly concerned with the duties of the different ranks and classes of society. Wulfstan composed much of the legislation issued after 1008 by Kings Ethelred II and Canute, and drafted or influenced various private law-codes. There is much similarity of ideas and even of wording between these codes and Wulfstan's other writings. A number of MSS have survived which were either written or annotated by Wulfstan. He was a learned man of orderly mind, a conscientious prelate who stamped an ecclesiastical reformer's mark on Old English law. He was regarded as a saint at Ely (where he was buried); but his cult did not spread or become official.

Homilies ed. A. [S.] Napier (Sammlung Englischer Denkmäler in kritischen Ausgaben, 4, Abt. 1; 1883) [no more pub.] and D. Bethurum (Oxford, 1957), with introd. and notes; crit. edn. of 'Sermo Lupi ad Anglos' by D. Whitelock (Methuen's Old English Library, 1939; 3rd edn., 1963), with introd. 'Institutes of Polity' ed. K. Jost (Schweizer Anglistische Arbeiten, 47; 1959). The Laws of Ethelred II and Canute are ed., with modern Eng. tr., by A. J. Robertson, The Laws of the Kings of England from Edmund to Henry I (Cambridge, 1925), pp. 45–219. Wulfstan's Canons of Edgar separately ed. by R. Fowler (EETS 266; 1972). K. Jost, Wulfstanstudien (Schweizer Anglistische Arbeiten, 23; 1950), with detailed bibl. D. Whitelock, 'Archbishop Wulfstan, Homilist and Statesman', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 4th ser. 24 (1942), pp. 25–45; repr. in id., History, Law and Literature in 10th 11th Century England (1981), no. 11; more specialized arts. repr. as nos. 5, 8–10, 12–15.

A Wulfstan Manuscript containing Institutes, Laws and Homilies. British Library Cotton Nero A I, ed. H. R. Loyn (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, 17; Copenhagen, 1971); N. [R.] Ker, 'The Handwriting of Archbishop Wulfstan' in P. Clemoes and K. Hughes (eds.), England Before the Conquest: Studies in Primary Sources presented to Dorothy Whitelock (Cambridge, 1971), pp. 315–31.

P. Wormald in Dict. Sp., 16 (1994), cols. 1497–1500, s.v. 'Wulfstan (2) d'York'.

Wulfstan, St (c.1009–95), also 'Wulstan', Bp. of *Worcester. After ordination he spent some 25 years in a monastery at Worcester, where he became greatly respected for his humility and asceticism. Elected Bp. of Worcester in 1062, he accepted the office with extreme reluctance, but having resigned himself to it, administered the diocese with great effectiveness till his death. Largely through uncertainty as to the status of the see of Worcester in relation to *Canterbury and *York, Wulfstan found himself opposed at the beginning of his episcopate to both archbishops; but later *Lanfranc was won by the simple goodness of Wulfstan, and together they suppressed the slave trade between England and Ireland. In the secular struggles of the time he assisted *William I against the barons and William II against both the barons and the Welsh. His Life was written by Coleman, a monk of Worcester. Feast day, 19 Jan.

The Old English Life by Coleman, written between 1095 and 1113, has not survived; a Lat. rendering by *William of Malmesbury ed. R. R. Darlington (Camden Society, 3rd ser. 40; 1928; Eng. tr. by J. H. F. Peile, Oxford, 1934). J. W. Lamb, Saint Wulstan, Prelate and Patriot: A Study of his Life and Times (CHS, 1933); E. Mason, St Wulfstan of Worcester c.1008 1095 (Oxford, 1990).

Württemberg Confession. A Protestant confession of faith in 35 articles, compiled by J. *Brenz on the model of the *Augsburg Confession for presentation to the Council of *Trent in 1552. It contained some *Calvinist elements, but it was predominantly *Lutheran, with certain approximations (in view of its purpose) to the specifically Catholic position. Use was made of it by Abp. M. *Parker in preparing the Thirty-Eight Articles of 1563 (see THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES).

Text in H. Heppe (ed.), Die Bekenntnisschriften der altprotestantischen Kirche Deutschlands (Cassel, 1855), pp. 491–554. E. Bizer, Confessio Virtembergica: Das Württembergische Bekenntnis von 1551 (Stuttgart, 1952). P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, 1 (1877), pp. 343 f. and 627–9, with table illustrating the connexion with the Thirty-Nine Articles. See also works cited s.v. THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES.

Wycliffe, John (c.1330–84), English philosopher, theologian, and reformer. John Wycliffe was probably a member of the Wycliffe family who owned property near Richmond in N. Yorks. He was a Fellow of Merton in 1356, Master of Balliol (c.1360–1), and Warden of Canterbury Hall (later incorporated into *Christ Church), Oxford (1365–7); his expulsion from Canterbury Hall by Abp. Simon Langham in favour of a monastic establishment led to a bitter lawsuit and lasting disenchantment with monasticism. Wycliffe was rector of Fillingham (1361–8), of Ludgershall (1368–84) and of Lutterworth (1374–84), but until 1381 he lived mainly in Oxford, from 1363 in Queen's College. He was in the service of the Black Prince and of John of Gaunt after 1371, acting as envoy in negotiations with the Curia in 1374 and as propagandist for the government in 1376 and 1378; Gaunt and the Black Prince's widow protected him against ecclesiastical censures in 1377, 1378, and probably in 1382.

Wycliffe's early reputation was as a philosopher. Reacting against the prevailing scepticism of Oxford thought, which divorced the spheres of natural and supernatural knowledge, he returned to the philosophical realism of St *Augustine and R. *Grosseteste; in his Summa de Ente (c.1365–72) he argued that individual beings derived from God through a hierarchy of universals and were therefore in essence changeless and indestructible. From the beginning his philosophy was religious in character, and it was fed by a sense of the spiritual sterility of scepticism. As a theologian he sought inspiration in the Bible and the Fathers rather than in the speculation of the schools, and he fulfilled his doctoral obligations by an unprecedented, if unoriginal, series of lectures commenting on the whole Bible. His growing repugnance at the religious institutions of his time led to his gradual elaboration, on the basis of his philosophy, of a concept of the Church which distinguished its eternal, ideal reality from the visible, 'material' Church, and denied to the latter any authority which did not derive from the former. In his De Civili Dominio (1375–6) he maintained that secular and ecclesiastical authority depended on grace and that therefore the clergy, if not in a state of grace, could lawfully be deprived of their endowments by the civil power. This doctrine was condemned in 1377 by Pope *Gregory XI on the initiative of the English Benedictines, though Wycliffe escaped any punishment. In his De Ecclesia, De Veritate Sacrae Scripturae and De Potestate Papae (1377–8) he maintained that the Bible, as the eternal 'exemplar' of the Christian religion, was the sole criterion of doctrine, to which no ecclesiastical authority might lawfully add, and that the authority of the Pope was ill-founded in Scripture; and in De Apostasia (*c.*1382) he denied, in violent terms, that the religious life had any foundation in Scripture, and appealed to the government to reform the whole order of the Church in England. The friars in particular were the object of his denunciation. At the same time in De Eucharistia he attacked the doctrine of *transubstantiation as philosophically unsound and as encouraging a superstitious attitude to the Eucharist; he sought to free the Eucharist of the popular cult which conceived of it as miraculous and to inculcate a consciousness of its moral and spiritual effects.

These publicly proclaimed doctrines gradually lost him substantial support in Oxford and reduced his following to a small but loyal group of scholars, prob. with some friends at court. His Eucharistic doctrine was the breaking-point. It was condemned by the University in 1381; and after Wycliffe's public refusal to comply in his Confessio had created scandal, and the Peasants' Revolt, popularly though erroneously attributed to his teaching, had magnified the affair, a wide range of his doctrines and the persons of his followers (though not Wycliffe himself) were condemned by Abp. W. *Courtenay at the Blackfriars Council (the '*Earthquake Synod') in 1382. Wycliffe had to retire to Lutterworth, where he revised his works and produced a prolific series of pamphlets attacking his enemies. After his death the continued activity of his disciples, who, as they gained less educated support, became known as *Lollards (q.v.), led to further condemnations of Wycliffe's doctrine in 1388, 1397, and finally at the Council of *Constance in 1415.

Wycliffe aimed at propagating his views widely and was an energetic preacher in Latin and in English, as his surviving sermons show. Though he wrote in English, probably none of the English works attributed to him is really his. He apparently played no direct part in the translation of the Bible undertaken by his disciples (*c.*1380–92), though he undoubtedly inspired the project.

Wycliffe's philosophical influence in Oxford was considerable for at least a generation; his later influence in England, whether on the Lollards or in general, is less clear. However, his philosophical and theological writings from *c.*1380 exercised a major influence on Czech scholars, esp. John *Huss, and many of them survive only in Czech MSS. Though the 16th-cent. Reformers appealed to Wycliffe, his preoccupations were rather different from theirs. Outside the field of philosophy his ideas were not original and can be compared with the similar views of contemporary European reformers. His importance lies in his role in propagating them. Feast day in the ASB, 31 December.

Most of Wycliffe's works are published by the Wyclif Society (35 vols., London, 1883–1914); his Tractatus de Officio Pastorali, ed. G. V. Lechler (Leipzig, 1863); Trialogus, ed. id. (Oxford, 1869); De Iuramento Arnaldi, ed. id., Johann von Wiclif, 2 (Leipzig, 1873), pp. 575–9; De Christo et suo Antichristo, ed. R. Buddensieg (Gotha, 1880); Summa de Ente, ed. S. H. Thomson (Oxford, 1930); Tractatus de Trinitate, ed. A. du P. Breck (Boulder, Colo., 1962); Tractatus de Universalibus, ed. I. J. Mueller, with Eng. tr. by A. Kenny (2 vols., Oxford, 1985); other controversial pieces preserved in the Fasciculi Zizaniorum attributed to T. *Netter, ed. W. W. Shirley (RS, 1858); minor works ed. I. H. Stein in Speculum, 7 (1932), pp. 87–94; 8 (1933), pp. 503–10; and in EHR 47 (1932), pp. 95–103. The Eng. tracts ed. T. Arnold, Select English Works (Oxford, 1867–71), and F. D. Matthew, English Works . . . hitherto Unprinted (EETS 74; 1880), are probably not by Wycliffe. W. R. Thomson, The Latin Writings of John Wyclyf: An Annotated Catalog (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Subsidia Mediaevalia, 14; Toronto, 1983). Valuable modern studies incl. H. B. Workman, John Wyclif (2 vols., Oxford, 1926); K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity ('Teach Yourself History', 1952); and the standard biog., J. A. Robson, Wyclif and the Oxford Schools (Cambridge, 1961). A. Kenny, Wyclif (Past Masters, Oxford, 1985). Id., Wyclif in his Times (Oxford, 1986). B. Smalley, 'John Wyclif's Postilla super totam bibliam', Bodleian Library Record, 4 (1953), pp. 186–205; id., 'John Wyclif's Postilla on the Old Testament and his Principium', in Oxford Studies presented to Daniel Callus (Oxford Historical Society, NS 16; 1964), pp. 253–96; id., 'The Bible and Eternity: John Wyclif's Dilemma', Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, 27 (1964), 73–89; G. A. Benrath, Wyclifs Bibelkommentar (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 36; 1966). J. H. Dahmus, The Prosecution of John Wyclif (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1952). G. [A.] Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, 2 (1967), pp. 494–573. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 2103–6, with bibl. See also bibl. to LOLLARDY.

Wycliffites. See LOLLARDY.

Wynfrith, St. See BONIFACE, ST.

Wyttenbach, Thomas (1472–1526), Swiss Reformer. A native of Biel (Bienne), Switzerland, after studying at *Tübingen he lectured at Basle, teaching the new, philological method of Biblical study. U. *Zwingli was among his pupils. From 1507 to 1515 he was priest in Biel and then canon at Berne until 1519. In 1520 he returned to Biel and publicly supported the Reformation from 1523. Marriage in 1524 led to his deposition and the Reformation was carried through by his successor Jakob Würben in 1528. Wyttenbach left no writings, apart from some letters.

[S. Scheurer], 'Lebens Beschreibung Doctor Thomas Wittenbachs von Biel in der Schweiz', Bernerisches Mausoleum, 1 (Berne, 1740), pp. 1–110. F. A. Haller and H. Hermelink in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 574–7, s.v.

X

Xavier, St Francis. See FRANCIS XAVIER, ST.

Xian. See SIGAN-FU STONE.

Ximénez de Cisneros, Francisco (1436–1517), Cardinal Abp. of Toledo. A native of Torrelaguna in Castile, after studying at Alcalá de Henares and Salamanca, he spent some years in Rome, returning to Spain in 1465 with a letter from *Sixtus IV which provided him with the archpriestship of Uzeda in 1473. His diocesan, Carillo, Abp. of Toledo, who was offended by the appointment, incarcerated him, but in 1480 eventually gave way. Ximénez, restored to his benefice, promptly exchanged it for a chaplaincy in the diocese of Siguenza, where Cardinal Mendoza (later Abp. of Toledo) made him his vicar general. After fulfilling this office with distinction, he unexpectedly gave it up to become an *Observantine friar and entered the convent of San Juan de los Reyes at Toledo, recently founded by *Ferdinand and *Isabella. His life of extreme austerity soon attracted large crowds of penitents and he took refuge in a remote monastery, living for considerable periods as an anchorite.

In 1492 a new epoch in his life began when he reluctantly accepted the office of confessor to Queen Isabella, to whom he had been recommended by Mendoza. His advice was soon sought on affairs of state as well as on strictly spiritual matters. In 1494 he was appointed under the Queen's influence Provincial of the *Franciscans in Castile and in the face of formidable opposition carried through drastic reforms esp. among the *Conventuals. With royal support, he also encouraged reform in other Orders. On the death of Mendoza (1495), he succeeded, again with great reluctance, to the archbishopric of Toledo, the primatial and most influential see in Spain, and an office which carried with it the High Chancellorship of Castile. Behind the outward splendour of his position, Ximénez continued to live a severely ascetic life. In 1499 he followed the court to Granada, where he was active in promoting measures to convert the Moors.

On the death of Isabella (24 Nov. 1504), Ferdinand resigned his title of King of Castile, and Ximénez was faced with the delicate political task of establishing concord between Ferdinand and his son-in-law, the Archduke Philip of Burgundy, who succeeded to the throne. Ferdinand eventually agreed to retire from Castile. On the sudden death of Philip in 1506, Ximénez found himself the virtual ruler of Castile, until Ferdinand returned from Naples in Aug. 1507, bringing for the Archbishop a cardinal's hat. In that year he also became *Inquisitor General. In 1509 he led a Spanish force to Oran in Morocco for purposes partly religious and partly territorial. On the death of Ferdinand (23 Jan. 1516), Ximénez became regent of Castile during the minority of the later *Charles V (q.v.). Intrigues at home and in Flanders, where Charles was then living, made his position extremely difficult, but his vigorous measures enabled him to maintain his authority. On his way to meet Charles, who had landed in Asturias and virtually dismissed him from his office, he died at Roa on 8 Nov. 1517, not without a suspicion of poison.

In addition to his services to the Church, Ximénez was a zealous patron of learning. In 1500 he founded on a lavish scale out of his private income the University of Alcalá (opened 1508), to which he brought distinguished scholars from Paris, Bologna, and Salamanca. With his active encouragement, many devotional classics were published, some translated into Spanish; these were to influence the development of Spanish spirituality. At Toledo he revived the *Mozarabic rite and endowed a chapel in the cathedral for its survival. His chief contribution to scholarship was the famous *Complutensian Polyglot (q.v.; Lat. 'Complutum', i.e. Alcalá).

P. Gayangos and V. de la Fuente (eds.), Cartas del Cardenal Don Fray Francisco Jimenez de Cisneros, dirigidas á Don Diego Lopez de Ayala (1867); V. de la Fuente (ed.), Cartas de los Secretarios del Cardenal D. Fr. Francisco Jimenez de Cisneros durante su Regencia en los años de 1516 y 1517 (1875). The other principal materials are to be found in A. Gómez de Castro, De Rebus Gestis a F. Ximenio Cisnerio (fol., 'Compluti' [Alcalá], 1569). There is also an account written by a member of the Cardinal's household, J. de Vallejo, Memorial de la vida de Fray Francisco Jimenes de Cisneros, first ed. A. de la Torre y del Cerro (Madrid, 1913). Other early Lives by E. de Robles (Toledo, 1604), M. Baudier (Paris, 1635; Eng. tr., 1671), P. de Quintanilla y Mendoza (Palermo, 1653), J. Marsollier (Toulouse, 1694), and [V.] E. Fléchier (Paris, 1693; also 2 vols., Amsterdam, 1693). Important modern studies by C. J. *Hefele (Tübingen, 1844; Eng. tr., 1860), [Jerónimo López de Alvarez de Toledo y del Hierro], Conde de Cedillo (3 vols., Madrid, 1921–8), and J. García Oro (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 520 and 528; 1992–3). Other studies by J. P. R. Lyell (London, 1917, with good bibl.), R. Merton (ibid., 1934), and J. García Mercadal (2nd edn., Madrid, 1941). W. Starkie, Grand Inquisitor: Being an Account of Cardinal Ximenez de Cisneros and his Times (1940; popular). L. F. de Retana, CSSR, Cisneros y su siglo (2 vols., 1929–30). J. García Oro, OFM, Cisneros y la reforma del clero español en tiempo de los reyes católicos (1971); P. Sáinz Rodríguez, La siembra mística del cardenal Cisneros y las reformas en la Iglesia (1979).

Xystus. See SIXTUS.

Y

Yah, abbreviation of *Yahweh (q.v.). This form of the word is confined to poetical passages in the OT.

Yahweh. The Hebrew proper name of the Deity, formerly rendered in English as '*Jehovah'. It probably represents the correct original pronunciation of the *Tetragrammaton (q.v.).

year, liturgical. In the W. the Christian year is based on the week and the two festivals of *Easter and *Christmas. Easter, by its Passover connection, forms a link with the Jewish liturgical calendar, which is lunar; Christmas was fixed on 25 Dec. by the 4th cent., coinciding with the winter solstice according to the Roman calendar, and is thus a link with the Roman civil year which began on 1 Jan., and is solar.

The liturgical year in the W. Church begins with the period leading up to Christmas. The ASB reckons nine Sundays before Christmas, but in most calendars the year starts on *Advent Sunday. There are four Sundays in Advent and either one or two Sundays after Christmas bridge the gap to the *Epiphany (6 Jan.). Acc. to the calendar introduced in the RC Church in 1969, the 'Sundays of the Year' begin after Epiphany and are numbered consecutively, excluding the period from the beginning of *Lent to *Whitsunday. There are thus 33 or 34 'Sundays of the Year' (acc. to the date of Advent), six Sundays of Lent, and eight Sundays of Eastertide (the last being Whitsunday). The C of E retains the general pattern of the numeration of Sundays previously current in the whole W. Church: Sundays 'after Epiphany' are reckoned until *Septuagesima, *Sexagesima, and *Quinquagesima (called in the ASB the 9th, 8th, and 7th Sundays 'before Easter'); *Ash Wednesday introduces the 40 days of Lent, with its six Sundays; and five Sundays 'after Easter' lead up to *Ascension Day with its following Sunday and Whitsunday. The RC Church used to number the Sundays 'after Pentecost' to Advent, and this usage is adopted in the ASB and some other modern liturgies; in the BCP, as in the *Sarum Use, they are reckoned 'after *Trinity', i.e. the Sunday after Pentecost.

The liturgical year in the E. Orthodox Church has much the same shape as in W., with the following modifications: it begins on 1 Sept. (the beginning of the tax year in the Byzantine Empire), and the Sundays outside the period of Lent–Eastertide are numbered 'after Pentecost'. The period of Lent–Eastertide embraces the ten weeks before Easter to the Sunday after Pentecost (called the Sunday of All Saints); during this time the *Triodion and *Pentecostarion are used.

N. Nilles, SJ, Kalendarium Manuale Utriusque Ecclesiae Orientalis et Occidentalis (2 vols., Innsbruck, 1896–7). K. A. H. Kellner, Heortologie oder das Kirchenjahr und die Heiligenfeste in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1901). J. Dowden, The Church Year and Kalendar (1910). F. *Cabrol, OSB, Les Origines liturgiques (1906). A. A. McArthur, The Evolution of the Christian Year (1953). J. van Goudoever, Biblical Calendars (Leiden, 1959), esp. pts. 2 and 3. J. Pascher, Das liturgische Jahr (Munich, 1962). T. J. Talley, The Origins of the Liturgical Year (New York [1986]). A. Adam, Das Kirchenjahr mitfeiern [1979]; Eng. tr., The Liturgical Year (New York [1981]) (on the changes following the Second Vatican Council). G. *Dix, OSB, The Shape of the Liturgy [1945], ch. 11, pp. 303–96; P. Jounel in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (édition nouvelle), 4: La Liturgie et le temps [1983], pp. 45–166; Eng. tr. (1986), pp. 31–150. P. G. Cobb, 'The History of the Christian Year', in C. [P. M.] Jones and others, The Study of Liturgy (2nd edn., 1992), pp. 455–72; K. Donovan, SJ, 'The Sanctoral', ibid., pp. 472–84. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 3 (1908), pp. 158–66, s.v. 'Calendar'; T. A. Vismans, OP, and A. Hollaardt, OP, in LW 2 (1962), cols. 1303–10, s.v. 'Kerkelijk jaar', with further bibl.

Yew Sunday. A medieval name for *Palm Sunday, so called because branches of yew were carried in the liturgical procession.

Yiddish. A language used by Ashkenazi Jews which originated in the 10th cent. from a combination of German city dialects. Approximately 10 per cent. of its vocabulary is drawn from *Hebrew (and *Aramaic), 5 per cent. from Romance, Slavic, and international elements. Four periods of the language may be roughly designated: Earliest Yiddish, to 1250; Old Yiddish, 1250–1500, when the first contact with Slavs and Slavic-speaking Jews was made; Middle Yiddish, 1500–1700, a period of expansion; and Modern Yiddish, from 1700 onwards. It has a considerable literature, extending back to the Old period, and is still spoken and written. The Hebrew alphabet is used for writing Yiddish.

U. Weinreich in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 16 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 789–98, s.v., with bibl.

YMCA ('Young Men's Christian Association'). An association founded in London in 1844 by George Williams (1821–1905) out of his meetings for prayer and Bible-reading. It has always had an essentially lay and interdenominational character, and has become increasingly interconfessional. At its centre are Christians who wish to share their faith with others, but those of different or no religious faith are welcomed. Most local YMCA associations in Great Britain and Ireland follow one of two patterns of membership: either a single membership, admitting all who accept the aims and purposes of the movement; or a mixture of 'full' members—Christians, who have a part in defining policy—and 'associate' members, who are not necessarily Christian and have no voice in management. Women and girls have been accepted as YMCA members since 1964. The movement aims to foster a world-wide fellowship based on mutual respect and tolerance and seeks to develop stimulating activities in a welcoming environment. Since its early years it has worked to develop young people in body, mind, and spirit. It provides hostels (some of which take in people who have been sleeping rough), sports and leisure facilities, vocational training for the unemployed, drugs counselling, and summer day camps for children and Christian youth groups and camps. It used to work extensively with the Armed Forces at home and abroad, and still does so in Cyprus and Germany. YCare, the overseas development agency of the YMCAs of Great Britain and Ireland, was founded in 1984; it raises funds to help YMCAs in developing countries. The association is active in over 100 countries, of which 85 are affiliated to the World's Alliance of YMCAs, which dates from 1855.

L. L. Doggett, History of the Young Men's Christian Association (New York, 1922). [J.] C. [G.] Binfield, George Williams and the Y.M.C.A. (1973). C. P. Shedd and others, History of the World's Alliance of Young Men's Christian Associations (1955); [J.] C. [G.] Binfield, This has been Tomorrow: The World Alliance of YMCAs since 1955 (Geneva, 1991); C. Seymour-Jones, Journey of Faith: The history of the World YMCA 1945 94 ([1994]). R. C. Morse, History of the North American Young Men's Christian Association (New York, 1913); C. H. Hopkins, History of the Y.M.C.A. in North America (ibid., 1951).

yoga. A Sanskrit word from the root yuj, meaning 'bind together' or 'yoke' and used of any ascetic technique or discipline of meditation. The name is applied in a technical sense to an Indian system of religious philosophy aiming at the union of the soul with the Divine Spirit by means of concentration to the exclusion of all sense-perception. The earliest known description of the system occurs in the Upanishads (6th cent. BC); the technique was fully developed by Patanjali in the Yogasutras (either 2nd cent. BC or 5th cent. AD). It had considerable influence within Christian devotion (esp., perhaps, within RC monasticism). The term is used more loosely to describe a system of health culture involving ascetic aspects and postures, usually in connection with meditation, which has developed in modern times, esp. in the W. world.

M. Eliade, Le Yoga: Immortalité et liberté (1954; Eng. tr., 1958; 2nd edn., with additional material, 1969). J.-M. Déchanet, OSB, La voie du silence (1956; Eng. tr., 1960), and other works of this author. M. Eliade in id. (ed.), Encyclopedia of Religion, 15 (1987), pp. 519–23, s.v.

Yom Kippur (יוֹם כִּפּוּר). The Hebrew name of the Day of *Atonement (q.v.).

Yonge, Charlotte Mary (1823–1901), novelist. She was born at Otterbourne, near *Winchester, where she lived throughout her life. Imbued by her father with great devotion to the Church, she taught for 71 years in the village Sunday school. When in 1836 J. *Keble became vicar of Hursley (with which parish Otterbourne was then united) she soon fell under his influence, became an enthusiastic supporter of the *Oxford Movement, and determined to apply her remarkable talents as a storyteller to spreading the faith in fiction. Her first success was The Heir of Redclyffe (1853). Among those which followed were Heartsease (1854), The Daisy Chain (1856), The Trial (1864), The Pillars of the House (1873), and Magnum Bonum (1879). She also wrote Lives of Bp. J. C. *Patteson (2 vols., 1873) and of Hannah *More (1888), and from 1851 onwards she edited The Monthly Packet, a periodical which aimed esp. at commending Anglican ideals to young women. She issued in all some 160 books.

Collected edn. of her Novels and Tales (16 vols., London, 1879–80). C. Coleridge, Charlotte Mary Yonge: Her Life and Letters (1903), with text of her autobiog. of her childhood and early youth, pp. 1–119, and list of her works, pp. 355–68. E. Romanes, Charlotte Mary Yonge: An Appreciation (1908). G. Battiscombe, Charlotte Mary Yonge: The Story of an Uneventful Life (1943). M. Mare and A. C. Percival, Victorian Best Seller: The World of Charlotte M. Yonge (1947). G. Battiscombe and others, A Chaplet for Charlotte Yonge (1965), incl. genealogical tables and bibl. B. Dennis, Charlotte Yonge (1823–1901), Novelist of the Oxford Movement (Lewiston, Queenston, and Lampeter [1992]).

York. The Romans made York ('Eboracum') their military headquarters in N. Britain; *Constantine the Great was first acclaimed there in 306. The first mention of a Bp. of York occurs in the acts of the Council of *Arles (314). The original Christian community was destroyed in the Saxon invasions, though Roman defences and buildings were still in use and determined the pattern of royal and ecclesiastical occupation when Christianity was restored in the 7th cent. In 625 St *Paulinus was consecrated Bp. of York; he baptized the Northumbrian King, *Edwin, in 627 and received the *pallium in 631, but in 633 after another pagan invasion Paulinus fled to *Rochester, and York came under the care of the bishops of *Lindisfarne. The see was finally restored in 664 with the consecration of *Wilfrid, who reintroduced Roman usages and favoured *Benedictine monasticism. Among the early bishops was St *John of Beverley. In 735, under *Egbert, the brother of the King, the see was raised to archiepiscopal dignity and its archbishops became the primates of the Northern Province, as *Gregory the Great had originally intended. Egbert also founded the famous School of York; its pupils included his successor Ethelbert and the famous scholar *Alcuin. From 867 to 954 York was ruled by kings of Scandinavian origin; the archiepiscopal succession was unbroken. Later English kings regarded the Abps. of York (e.g. St *Oswald, *Wulfstan) as useful agents in a dubiously loyal region, and appointed them from outside the North; from 972 to 1016 the impoverished Abps. also held the rich see of *Worcester. They fostered the four great secular minsters (York itself, *Ripon, *Beverley, and *Southwell) which served as local centres of Church life, but it was only after the Norman Conquest that monasticism north of the Humber revived with new foundations, of which St Mary's (Benedictine, 1089), just outside the wall of York, was the richest.

Under the first Norman Archbishop, Thomas of Bayeux (1070–1100), began the long drawn out struggle for precedence between *Canterbury and York. In 1071, in a discussion at Rome between *Lanfranc of Canterbury and Thomas of York, Pope *Alexander II decided in favour of the former, who was to consecrate the Archbishops of York and receive their oath of obedience. But in 1118 Thurstan, Abp. elect of York, refused to submit and appealed to *Callistus II, who in 1119 consecrated him and released him and his successors from the supremacy of Canterbury. The controversy continued for two centuries, its influence being shown in the opposition of Abp. Roger (1154–81) to Abp. T. *Becket, and was finally settled by Innocent VI (1352–62), who decided that the Abp. of Canterbury was to have precedence and the title of 'Primate of All England', and that the Abp. of York should be styled 'Primate of England'. Either archbishop was allowed to carry his cross in the other's province. Only after this decision did some Abps. of York accept translation to Canterbury, T. *Arundel (1396) being the first, and F. D. Coggan (1974) the tenth.

At the height of its prosperity medieval York (much larger than Roman York) contained well over 40 parish churches (12 were pre-Norman; a few were demolished before 1410), nine religious houses, the great hospital of St Leonard, several lesser hospitals and 16 chapels. The city was one of the two largest provincial towns in England and long remained important as a regional capital. The Archbishop's role in regional affairs was most strikingly shown when Abp. Thurstan (1119–40) commanded the army which defeated the Scots at the Battle of the Standard (1138). Other medieval Archbishops included connections of the royal family (*William of York, 1143–7 and 1153–4; Geoffrey Plantagenet, 1191–1212), members of great northern families (Alexander Neville, 1374–88; Richard le *Scrope, who was executed for rebellion; George Neville, 1465–76), and civil servants who were cardinals (J. *Kempe, C. *Bainbridge, and T. *Wolsey).

There is evidence of *Lollard views in early 16th-cent. York, but the city was deeply conservative during the Reformation; it admitted R. *Aske, leader of the *Pilgrimage of Grace, without difficulty in 1536 and the cathedral clergy conducted him to the high altar, where Aske made his oblation. The Reformation brought not only the end of the York *Use, the dissolution of religious houses and of the city's hundred or more chantries, with consequent losses of buildings, furnishings, and books, but also the demolition of 14 parish churches and (after 1580) the end of the famous medieval drama of York. The house of the abbot of St Mary's (the 'King's Manor') became (1539) the seat of the royal Council of the North, of which the Archbishops were members and sometimes Presidents. Elizabethan York contained a few active *recusants, esp. women (see CLITHEROW, M). Puritanism became strong in York in the 17th cent., but the city supported *Charles I until its surrender to Parliament after a short siege in 1644; Methodism took firm root in the 18th cent. During the 20th cent. a number of the city churches were declared redundant and put to other uses. In the 1970s the Evangelical preaching of David Watson (1933–84) at St Cuthbert's and St Michael-le-Belfrey attracted attention. Among post-Reformation Abps. were E. *Grindal, E. *Sandys, L. Blackburne, 1724–43 (whose enemies accused him of buccaneering), T. *Herring, C. G. *Lang, W. *Temple, and A. M. *Ramsey.

No churches in York can be traced back to Roman times, though Roman materials were reused in several. The alignment of St Michael-le-Belfrey, unlike that of the adjoining Minster, follows the Roman street-plan. Since it lies near the centre of the Roman fortress, it may conceivably cover the wooden church and later stone basilica of King Edwin, of which no traces have been found under the present Minster. The Saxon cathedral, wherever it lay, was destroyed by the Normans during the rebellion of 1069. Abp. Thomas then began and Abp. Roger completed the great Norman church which preceded the present York Minster, rebuilt on the same site between *c.*1227 and 1472. Like its predecessors it was dedicated to St Peter. There were four restorations in the 19th cent. The foundations of the Central Tower and West Front, which rest on Roman rubbish, were strengthened between 1967 and 1972; serious damage was done by a fire in 1984. York contains much distinguished medieval glass, esp. in All Saints', North Street, and in the Minster, the windows of which were restored after 1945 under the guidance of Dean E. Milner-White (d. 1963).

Little remains of the medieval Archbishops' palace, which stood north of the Minster, near the site of the Roman legionary commandant's house. Abp. Young (1561–8) began its destruction; it was replaced by the present palace at Bishopthorpe.

In the 11th cent. York put forward claims to supremacy over English dioceses to its south and over dioceses in *Scotland. For four cents. it had only two English suffragans (*Durham and *Carlisle) until the addition of *Sodor and Man and the transfer of *Chester from Canterbury in 1542; the creation of new sees (beginning with Ripon, 1836) has at last brought the number of suffragans up to and beyond the twelve envisaged over 13 centuries earlier by Gregory the Great.

A university was founded at York in 1963. There is no faculty of theology, but the Borthwick Institute of Historical Research specializes in work on ecclesiastical archives.

Registers of Walter Gray [Abp. 1215–55], ed. J. Raine (Surtees Society, 56; 1872); of Walter Giffard [Abp. 1266–79], ed. W. Brown (ibid. 109; 1904); of William Wickwane [Abp. 1279–85], ed. id. (ibid. 114; 1907); of John le Romeyn [Abp. 1286–96] and Henry Newark [Abp. 1296–99], ed. id. (ibid. 123 and 128; 1913–17); of Thomas Corbridge [Abp. 1300–4], ed. id. (ibid. 138 and 141; 1925–8); of William Greenfield [Abp. 1306–15], ed. id. and A. H. Thompson (ibid. 145, 149, 151–3; 1931–40); and of William Melton [Abp. 1317–40], ed. R. M. T. Hill and others (Canterbury and York Society, 70, 71, 76, etc.; 1977 ff.). J. Raine (ed.), The Fabric Roll of York Minster (Surtees Society 35; 1859). 'York Statutes' in H. Bradshaw and C. *Wordsworth (eds.), Statutes of Lincoln Cathedral, 2 (1897), pp. 90–135. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 6, pt. 3 (1830 edn.), pp. 1172–1209. C. T. Clay (ed.), York Minster Fasti, Being Notes on the Dignitaries, Archdeacons and Prebendaries in the Church of York prior to the Year 1307 (Yorkshire Archaeological Society, Record Series, 133–4, for 1957–8; 1958–9). J. Raine (ed.), The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops (3 vols., RS, 1879–94). W. H. Dixon and J. Raine, Fasti Eboracenses: Lives of the Archbishops of York, 1 (1863). J. W. Lamb, The Archbishopric of York: The Early Years (1967). J. M. Cooper, The Last Four Anglo-Saxon Archbishops of York (Borthwick Papers, 38; 1970); D. L. Douie, Archbishop Geoffrey Plantagenet and the Chapter of York [Abp. 1191–1212] (St Anthony's Hall Publications, ibid. 18; 1960). J. Hughes, Pastors and Visionaries: Religion and Secular Life in Late Medieval Yorkshire (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1988). D. M. Palliser, The Reformation in York 1534–1553 (Borthwick Papers, 40; 1971); id., Tudor York (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1979); A. G. Dickens, The Marian Reaction in the Diocese of York (St Anthony's Hall Publications, 11 and 12; 1957). F. Drake, Eboracum, or the History and Antiquities of the City of York (1736), esp. bk. 2, 'The History and Antiquities of the Church of York', pp. 399–627. A. Raine, Mediaeval York: A Topographical Survey Based on Original Sources (1955). VCH, Yorks. The City of York, ed. P. M. Tillott (1961), esp. pp. 337–419; A. Stacpoole, OSB, and others (eds.), The Noble City of York (York, 1972). City of York (Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, 5 vols., 1962–81). P. Addyman, 'Archaeology in York 1831–1981', in C. H. Feinstein (ed.), York 1831–1981 (1981), pp. 53–87; E. Royle, 'Religion in York 1831–1981', ibid., pp. 205–33. J. Browne, The History of the Metropolitan Church of St Peter, York (2 vols., 1847). G. E. Aylmer and R. [C.] Cant (eds.), A History of York Minster (Oxford, 1977). H. Gee in DECH (1912), pp. 662–6, s.v.

Young Men's Christian Association. See YMCA.

Young Women's Christian Association. See YWCA.

Young, Patrick (1584–1652), biblical and patristic scholar. He was educated at St Andrews. After incorporation at Oxford in July 1605, he was ordained and became a chaplain at All Souls College. A year or two later he settled in London, where he was appointed Royal Librarian and prob. assisted *James I in preparing the Latin edition of his Works which appeared in 1619. From 1623 to 1647 he was rector of Hayes, Greater London. In 1633 he published from the *Codex Alexandrinus, which had reached the Royal Library from Cyril *Lucar in 1628, the editio princeps of St *Clement of Rome's Ep. I ad Cor. and in 1637 a folio Catena Graecorum Patrum in Jobum on the basis of two Bodley MSS; but these works, though important, embody only a fraction of his great erudition. On his title-pages he Latinized his name as 'Patricius Junius'.

Letters calendared and ed. J. Kemke (Sammlung Bibliotheks-wissenschaftlicher Arbeiten, ed. K. Dziatzko, 12; 1898), with Life, pp. v–xxix. 'Catalogus Librorum Manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Wigorniensis' made in 1622 1623 by Patrick Young, ed. I. Atkins and N. R. Ker (Cambridge, 1944). Life in T. Smith, Vitae Quorundam Eruditissimorum et Illustrium Virorum (London, 1707; sep. pagination). A. H. Millar in DNB 63 (1900), pp. 385 f.

yule. The word, of Teutonic ancestry, which etymologically seems to imply 'noise' or 'clamour', was prob. originally applied to a Scandinavian feast of obscure origin, possibly connected with the turn of the year, and hence in Old English to the season of Dec. and Jan. In later usage it came to denote *Christmas and its attendant festivities. Except in the north of England the term is now archaic, but it is still found in compounds such as 'yule-log' connected with old-fashioned Christmas celebrations. Until the middle of the 19th cent. it was also used as an exclamation of joy and revelry at Christmastide.

Yvo, St, of Chartres. See IVO, ST.

YWCA ('Young Women's Christian Association'). A charitable body devoted to the needs of young women, esp. those who are at risk or suffering discrimination; it sees its work as the practical expression of its Christian values. It is entirely separate from the *YMCA. It was founded in 1855 by Miss Emma Robarts, who started a Prayer Union, and Lady Mary Jane Kinnaird, who opened the first hostel for Florence *Nightingale's nurses in London. The two organizations united in 1877, and the YWCA is now a world-wide body. In Great Britain it is known primarily for its national network of safe, affordable accommodation, but it also provides education, training, counselling, and support through its women's and community centres.

A. V. Rice, A History of the World's Young Women's Christian Association (New York, 1948). F. Kinnaird in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 838–41, s.v. 'Young Women's Christian Association'.

Z

Zabarella, Francesco (1360–1417), Italian canonist. Having studied jurisprudence at *Bologna, he taught canon law at Florence from 1385 to 1390 and at Padua from 1390 to 1410, being at the same time employed in both the Paduan and the Venetian diplomatic services. Called to Rome by Boniface IX to tender advice in the matter of the *Great Schism, he took part in the Council of *Pisa in 1409. Though not in major orders, in 1410 he received the bishopric of Florence, which he resigned on being created cardinal by *John XXIII in 1411. After supporting John at the Council of Rome in 1412–13, he conducted the negotiations with the Emp. Sigismund for the Council of *Constance. His courageous conduct at the Council, which he continued to attend after John XXIII had fled (1415), contributed largely to the final healing of the schism. Though a supporter of John, he advised the Pope to abdicate, and until his death made continuous efforts to bring about the election of a new Pope. His collection of proposals for ending the schism entitled 'De schismate' (1402–8) was first printed in 1545. It was placed on the *Index, however, because it asserted the supremacy of the General Council over the Pope. His writings on canon law, the 'Lectura super *Clementinis' and the 'Commentaria in libros *Decretalium', long remained standard works.

G. Vedova, Memorie intorno alla vita ed alle opere del cardinale F. Zabarella (Padua, 1829). G. Zonta, Francesco Zabarella (ibid., 1915). W. Ullmann, The Origins of the Great Schism: A Study in Fourteenth-century Ecclesiastical History (1948), pp. 191–231; B. Tierney, Foundations of the Conciliar Theory: The Contribution of the Medieval Canonists from Gratian to the Great Schism (Cambridge, 1955), esp. pp. 220–37; T. E. Morrissey, 'Franciscus Zabarella (1360–1417): Papacy, Community, and Limitations upon Authority', in G. F. Lytle (ed.), Reform and Authority in the Medieval and Reformation Church (Washington, DC [1981]), pp. 37–54. See also works cited under CONSTANCE, COUNCIL OF.

Zacchaeus. The chief 'publican' (tax-collector), who was the subject of an incident related in Lk. 19: 1–10. Having climbed a sycamore tree to see Christ, he was called by name to come down and give Him lodging in his house.

Zachariah. The father of St *John the Baptist. (Lk. 1 and 3: 2). A Jewish priest, he is said to have received a vision in the *Temple promising him and his aged wife, *Elizabeth, a son, who would be 'filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb' (Lk. 1: 15). He celebrated the birth of the child and the coming redemption of Israel in the '*Benedictus'. Acc. to later tradition he was murdered in the Temple at the command of Herod. Feast day, 5 Nov.

Zacharias, St (d. 752), Pope from 741. Born in Calabria, he was the last Greek Pope and the last Pope to send letters to the E. capital to announce his election. Revising the policy of his predecessor, Gregory III, he gave up the alliance with Duke Trasamund of Spoleto, and, through his personal influence, induced Liutprand, King of the Lombards, to return four cities and all her patrimonies to the Church. He also obtained a 20-year truce, caused the King to abandon his attack on *Ravenna and persuaded him to restore what he had already taken of his possessions. King Ratchis confirmed this truce, but his successor, Aistulf, captured Ravenna in 751. His relations with the Frankish kingdom were very cordial, esp. through the influence of St *Boniface, to whose missionary activities he gave full support. In 747 he addressed a long letter to *Pepin III in answer to questions about Church reform, and in 751 he sanctioned the deposition of the last Merovingian, Childeric III, in Pepin's favour. Zacharias vigorously denounced the *Iconoclastic policy of the Emps. *Leo III and Constantine V, to whom he addressed two letters on the subject. He held synods at Rome in 743 and 745, the latter confirming the condemnation of the two heretics, Adalbert and Clement, by St Boniface. He made an influential Greek translation of the 'Dialogues' of St *Gregory the Great. Feast day in the E., 5 Sept.; in the W., formerly 15 Mar.

Two letters to Constantine V, ed. W. Gundlach in MGH, Epistolae, 3 (1892), pp. 479–87, 709–11. Jaffé, 1, pp. 262–70. R. Rau (ed.), Briefe des Bonifatius, Willibalds Leben des Bonifatius (Ausgewählte Quellen zur Deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 4b; Darmstadt, 1968), pp. 140–84, 210–12, 234–8, 256–70, 272–84, 288–306, 391–436 (incl. acts of the two Roman Synods). LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 426–39. Eng. tr., with valuable introd., by R. Davis, The Lives of the Eighth-Century Popes (Translated Texts for Historians, 13; Liverpool, 1992), pp. 29–50. O. Bertolini, Roma di fronte a Bisanzio e ai Longobardi (1941), pp. 493–513; id., 'I Rapporti di Zaccaria con Costantino V e con Artavasdo nel racconto del biografo del papa e nella probabile realtà storica', Archivio della Società romana di Storia patria, 78 (1955), pp. 1–21. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia [1984]), esp. pp. 49–57 and 65–71.

Zacharias Scholasticus (d. after 536), also 'Zacharias of Mitylene' and 'Zacharias Rhetor', *Monophysite writer. He was a native of Maiuma, nr. Gaza, and hence known, with *Procopius and *Aeneas of Gaza, as one of the 'Gaza Triad'. About 492 he became a lawyer at *Constantinople and is known to have been in later life Bp. of Mitylene. His most important work was a Church History, valuable for the years 450–91. It survives in *Syriac embedded in a later compilation. Zacharias was also the author of biographies of *Severus of Antioch, Peter the Iberian and others; of a dialogue, 'De Opificio Mundi', directed against the *Neoplatonists; and of a Refutation of the *Manichees. In recent years a collection of *anathemas against the Manichees, known as the 'Seven Chapters', has been ascribed to Zacharias.

His 'De Opificio Mundi', ed., with Lat. tr. and notes, by C. Barth (Leipzig, 1655; with Aeneas of Gaza's 'De Immortalitate Animae', pp. 164–326); it was repr. from the edn. of A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG 85. 1011–44; crit. edn. by M. M. Colonna (Naples, 1973). His Refutation of the Manichees was ed. A. Demetracopulos, Bibliotheca Ecclesiastica, 1 (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 1–18. His 'Church History', incorporated in a later Syriac Chronicle in which alone it survives, ed., with Lat. tr., by E. W. Brooks (CSCO, Syriaci Scriptores, 3rd ser. 5–6; 1919–24); Eng. tr. by F. J. Hamilton and E. W. Brooks (London, 1899). Syriac tr. of Lives of Severus of Antioch ed., with Fr. tr., by M.-A. Kugener in PO 2 (1907), pp. 5–115; of an Egyptian monk named Isaias ed. E. W. Brooks, Vitae Virorum apud Monophysitas Celeberrimorum (CSCO, Syriaci Scriptores, 3rd ser. 25; 1907), pp. 3–16, with Lat. tr., pp. 3–10; of a fragment of Life of Peter the Iberian, ibid., p. 18, with Lat. tr., p. 12. The 'Seven Chapters' are ed. M. Richard, Iohannis Caesariensis . . . Opera (CCSG 1; 1977), pp. xxx–xli; repr., with Eng. tr., introd., and comm., by S. N. C. Lieu in Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 26 (1983), pp. 152–218. M.-A. Kugener, 'La Compilation historique de Pseudo-Zacharie le Rhéteur', Revue de l'Orient chrétien, 5 (1900), pp. 201–14 and 461–80; id., 'Observations sur la vie de l'ascète Isaïe et sur les vies de Pierre l'Ibérien et de Théodore d'Antinoë par Zacharie le Scolastique', BZ 9 (1900), pp. 464–70. T. Nissen, 'Eine christliche Polemik gegen Julians Rede auf den König Helios', ibid. 40 (1940), pp. 15–22. E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (ST 173; 1953), pp. 194–204 (no. 21: 'Zacharias of Mitylene'). P. Allen, 'Zachariah Scholasticus and the Historia Ecclesiastica of Evagrius Scholasticus', JTS NS 31 (1980), pp. 471–88. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 323 f. (nos. 6995–7001). G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3676–80, s.v. 'Zacharie le Rhéteur'; K. Wegenast in PW, Zweite Reihe, 18 (1967), cols. 2212–16, s.v.

Zadokite Fragments. See DEAD SEA SCROLLS.

Zahn, Theodor (1838–1933), NT and patristic scholar. Born at Mörs, he was Privatdozent (1868) and extraordinary Professor (1871) at Göttingen and Professor successively at Kiel (1877), Erlangen (1878), Leipzig (1888), and Erlangen (again, 1892). He retired in 1909. His standpoint was that of sober conservatism and all his work was characterized by vast erudition and great thoroughness. His long series of studies on the NT *canon, embodied in his Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons (2 vols., 1888–92) and the successive fascicles of Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons (10 parts, 1881–1929), contained much pioneer work. He edited a Commentary on the NT, to which he himself contributed the volumes on Mt. (1903), Lk. (1913), Jn. (1908), Acts (2 vols., 1919–21), Rom. (1910), Gal. (1905) and Rev. (2 vols., 1924–6); he also wrote an Introduction to the NT (2 vols., 1897–9; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1909). His studies in the field of patristics included Marcellus von Ancyra (1867), Der Hirt des Hermas untersucht (1868), Ignatius von Antiochien (1873) and the Acta Joannis (1880). With A. *Harnack and O. von Gebhardt he edited Patrum Apostolicorum Opera (major edn., 1875–8; minor edn., 1877). Among his many works addressed to a less specialized public were Geschichte des Sonntags vornehmlich in der alten Kirche (1878) and Skizzen aus dem Leben der alten Kirche (1894).

Festschriften for Theodor Zahn, Leipzig, 1908, with contributions by N. Bonwetsch and others; and ibid., 1928, with contributions by P. Bachmann and others. Zahnbibliographie (ibid., 1918). E. Stange (ed.), Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart in Selbstdarstellungen, 1 (1925), last item (28 pp.). A. Meyer in RGG (2nd edn.), 5 (1931), cols. 2070 f., s.v.

Zaire, Christianity in. This huge area of central Africa was formed into a single country through the combined efforts of King Leopold II king of the Belgians, who wanted to establish a major colony in Africa, and H. M. *Stanley, the explorer, who returned to the Congo in 1879 in the employment of Leopold. The Congo Independent State, with Leopold as its king, was recognized by the European powers in 1885; it was annexed by Belgium in 1908, becoming the Belgian Congo.

The former RC missionary efforts dating from the 15th cent. in the extreme W. of modern Zaire and parts of Angola had effectively ceased at the end of the 18th cent. (see CONGO), but the late 19th-cent. exploration was quickly followed by missionary endeavour, both Protestant and RC. In 1878 a mission of the British *Baptist Missionary Society, led by George Grenfell, began work in the lower Congo region. In 1880 the *White Fathers, arriving in this part of Africa from the E. Coast, founded a mission at Mulweva (on Lake Tanganyika) in the E. of modern Zaire. The Baptists were soon followed by numerous other Protestant missions, mostly British and American, but including the Svenska Mission Forbundet from *Sweden. American *Methodists were active in Katanga, the American Presbyterian Congo Mission and the Congo Inland Mission in Kasai, and the Africa Inland Mission and the Heart of Africa Mission in the NE. Among RCs the Scheut Fathers, the national Belgian missionary society, were entrusted with a Vicariate Apostolic of the Congo in 1888; they were joined by Belgian Jesuits who took over the lower Congo in 1893, leaving Scheut the Kasai. *Trappists followed in 1895 and *Premonstratensians in 1898, while in 1910 *Benedictines from the abbey of Saint-André began work in Katanga. At Leopold's insistence, RC missionaries were almost exclusively of Belgian nationality.

From the mid-1890s Leopold's policy of financing the Independent State through a trading monopoly enforced with much brutality made missionary work difficult and provoked protest from Protestant missionaries, Swedish, American, and British. The ensuing international agitation led to Belgium's annexation of the Congo in 1908. Both before and after 1908, however, there was a relationship of close co-operation between the government and the RC Belgian missionaries, who were granted extensive privileges, esp. in the areas of education, health, and land grants. It was formalized by the Concordat of 1906, which was maintained by the Act of Annexation. Only in 1946 did the Protestants obtain equal treatment in regard to health and education. In general the alliance between the RC Church and the State was weakened in the 1950s when there was a socialist government in Brussels. At the same time independent African Churches and prophetic movements, which had all been banned since the trial of Simon *Kimbangu in 1921, but which had spread clandestinely throughout the country under various influences, including 'Watch Tower' ('Kitawala') and the 'Khaki movement' of Simon Mpadi in the 1940s, were allowed to come into the open.

After Independence in 1960 there was much popular resentment against missionaries, esp. RCs, and in subsequent disorders many were murdered. The attack at Kisangani in 1964 was led by a Kitawalan pastor. After 1965, when President Mobutu re-established an ordered and highly authoritarian state (named Zaire in 1971), the Churches recovered some security. The Churches were largely Africanized, Joseph Malula becoming the RC Abp. of Leopoldville (named Kinshasa) in 1964. In the following year, by presidential decree only three Churches were recognized: the RC Church, the 'Church of Christ in Zaire' (a loose federation of mission-founded Protestant Churches), and the Kimbanguists, to which the Greek Orthodox Church was added later. All other independent Churches were again proscribed. By far the most powerful Church remained the RC, which controlled the majority of the country's schools. In 1972 the campaign for Zairean 'Authenticity' led to a new Church–State conflict. Crucifixes were removed from schools and hospitals and all religious instruction was forbidden. By 1976 much of this was reversed. An uneasy balance in which the Churches remain effectively the only free organizations within the country but say little about human rights violations has remained the pattern.

W. H. Bentley, Pioneering on the Congo (2 vols., 1900), F. de Meus, OSB, and R. Steenberghen, OSB, Les Missions religieuses au Congo Belge (Antwerp, 1947). R. M. Slade, English-Speaking Missions in the Congo Independent State (1878–1908) (Académie royale des Sciences coloniales, Classe des sciences morales et politiques, Mémoires in-8°, NS 16, fasc. 2; Brussels, 1959). A. Andersson, Messianic Popular Movements in the Lower Congo (Studia Ethnographica Upsaliensia, 14; Uppsala, 1958). E. M. Braekman, Histoire du Protestantisme au Congo (Brussels, 1961). D. Lagergren, Mission and State in the Congo: A Study of the Relations between Protestant Missions and the Congo Independent State Authorities with Special Reference to the Equator District, 1885–1903 (Uppsala, 1970). M. Sinda, Le Messianisme congolais et ses incidences politiques (Bibliothèque historique, 1972). M. D. Markowitz, Cross and Sword: The Political Role of Christian Missions in the Congo, 1908–1960 (Stanford, Calif. [1973]). C. Irvine, The Church of Christ in Zaire: A Handbook of Protestant Churches, Missions, and Communities, 1878–1978 (Indianapolis [1978]). A. Hastings, The Church in Africa 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994), passim; id., A History of African Christianity 1950–1975 (Cambridge, 1979), passim.

Zambia, Christianity in. Missionary work began relatively late in the area of central Africa which came to be known as Northern Rhodesia until it was renamed Zambia when it became independent in 1964. The first effective mission was that of François Coillard of the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society who, after 20 years in Lesotho, began work among the Lozi at the court of King Lewanika in 1886. At much the same time the *LMS established a mission in the north of the country and Scottish *Presbyterians, advancing from Livingstonia, came in the east. The main RC missions were the *White Fathers in the north, esp. strong in Bembaland, and in the south the *Jesuits, who moved up from the earlier mission in Southern Rhodesia. There were few local clergy before the Second World War, but one of the earliest was David Kaunda, ordained as a Church of Scotland minister in 1929, the father of Kenneth Kaunda, Zambia's first President.

Missionaries of different denominations multiplied, particularly in the towns developing on the Copperbelt, and an early attempt to unite them ecumenically in the 1930s resulted in the formation of the African United Church (the United Missions in the Copperbelt) and in the establishment in Kitwe of the Mindolo Ecumenical Foundation. In 1965, soon after political independence, the United Church of Zambia (UCZ), comprising *Congregationalists, *Methodists, and the Paris Mission, was inaugurated at Mindolo. Other major denominations are the Anglicans, African Reformed (founded by a Dutch Reformed Mission from *South Africa), and *Jehovah's Witnesses. In 1953 Alice 'Lenshina', after a visionary experience, left the Presbyterian Church at Lubwa to found the Lumpa Church, whose membership grew very large over the next decade. In 1963 its followers came into armed conflict with the government and with Kaunda's party, UNIP; hundreds were killed, and the Lumpa Church was banned.

Most Zambians are members of one of the Christian Churches, the RC being the largest. Its first Zambian Abp. of Lusaka, Emmanuel Milingo, appointed in 1969, acquired a special following and international reputation on account of his ministry of healing and *exorcism, but he was in consequence made to resign in 1983 and has subsequently lived in Rome.

J. V. Taylor and D. Lehmann, Christians of the Copperbelt: The Growth of the Church in Northern Rhodesia (1961); R. I. Rotberg, Christian Missionaries and the Creation of Northern Rhodesia 1880–1924 (Princeton, NJ, 1965); R. Henkel, Christian Missions in Africa: A Social Geographical Study of the Impact of their Activities in Zambia (Geographia Religionum, 3; Berlin, 1989). F. J. Verstraelen, An African Church in Transition. From Missionary Dependence to Mutuality in Mission: A Case Study on the Roman Catholic Church in Zambia (2 vols., Leiden, 1979). G. Verstraelen-Gilhuis, From Dutch Mission Church to Reformed Church in Zambia: The Scope for African Leadership and Initiative in the History of a Zambian Mission Church (Franeker, Netherlands [1982]). P. Bolink, Towards Church Union in Zambia: A Study of Missionary Co-operation and Church-Union Efforts in Central Africa (ibid. [1967]). E. Milingo, The World in Between: Christian Healing and the Struggle for Spiritual Survival, ed. M. Macmillan (1984).

Zanchi, Girolamo (1516–90), *Calvinist theologian. Born near Bergamo in N. Italy, he became an *Augustinian Canon in 1531 and was sent to Lucca. Here from 1541 he came under the influence of *Peter Martyr and the writings of P. *Melanchthon and H. *Bullinger. He left Italy and, after visiting J. *Calvin in Geneva in 1551, he became Professor of OT at Strasbourg in 1553. His Calvinist leanings led to disputes over the Lord's Supper and *predestination, and in 1563 he gave up his position and became preacher at the Reformed Church in Chiavenna in N. Italy. He was appointed Professor of Dogmatics at Heidelberg in 1567, but when *Lutheranism was imposed in the Palatinate in 1576, he went to Neustadt. He collaborated with Z. *Ursinus on work on a Reformed Confession which was incorporated in the Harmonia Confessionum issued at Geneva in 1581. His other writings include De Religione Christiana (Neustadt, 1585; Eng. tr., 1599) on predestination and treatises on the nature of God and on Creation.

Opera Theologica (8 vols. in 3, [Geneva] 1605). [C.] Schmidt, 'Girolamo Zanchi', Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 32 (1859), pp. 625–708. O. Gründler, Die Gotteslehre Girolami Zanchis und ihre Bedeutung für seine Lehre von der Prädestination (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 20; 1965). C. J. Burchill, 'Girolamo Zanchi: Portrait of a Reformed Theologian and his Work', Sixteenth Century Journal, 15 (1984), pp. 185–207.

Zealots. A Jewish party of revolt. Acc. to *Josephus (Bell. Jud. 7. 8. 1), they were one of the revolutionary factions who, after the collapse of resistance to the Romans in Galilee, inspired the fanatical stand in *Jerusalem which led to its destruction in AD 70. They have been commonly identified with (1) the followers of Judas of Gamala who led a revolt at the time of the census of Quirinius (AD 6) and who, acc. to Josephus, was the 'author of the fourth sect of Jewish philosophy' whose members 'agree in all things with the Pharisaic notions' but 'have an inviolable attachment to liberty, and say that God is their only ruler and lord' (Antiq. 18. 1. 6) and (2) the Sicarii who, in the unsettled period before the outbreak of the Jewish war, tried to achieve their ends by assassinating their political opponents and whose refusal to surrender to the Romans at Masada is vividly described by Josephus (Bell. Jud. 7. 8. 2–7. 9. 1). His accounts of these groups, however, are not entirely consistent and leave room for doubt. The epithet ζηλωτής ('zealot'), applied in Lk. 6: 15 to Simon, one of the Twelve, is an accurate translation of an Aramaic word, derived from a root meaning 'to be zealous', which in Mk. 3: 18 is transliterated καναναῖος ('Cananaean'); it may mean that Simon belonged to the Zealot party, which in that case must have been already in existence in the lifetime of Jesus. But it may equally well be a description of his character, 'the zealous'.

W. R. Farmer, Maccabees, Zealots and Josephus: An Inquiry into Jewish Nationalism in the Greco-Roman Period (New York, 1956). M. Hengel, Die Zeloten: Untersuchungen zur jüdischen Freiheitsbewegung in der Zeit von Herodes I. bis 70 n. Chr. (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Spätjudentums und Urchristentums, 1; Leiden and Cologne, 1961; 2nd edn., 1976; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1989). M. Smith, 'Zealots and Sicarii, their Origins and Relation', HTR 64 (1971), pp. 1–19; M. Borg, 'The Currency of the Term "Zealot"', JTS, NS 22 (1971), pp. 504–12; S. Applebaum, 'The Zealots: The Case for Revaluation', Journal of Roman Studies, 61 (1971), pp. 155–70. R. A. Horsley and J. S. Hanson, Bandits, Prophets, and Messiahs: Popular Movements in the Time of Jesus (Minneapolis, etc. [1985]), pp. 190–243. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), p. 382, and 2 (1979), pp. 598–606. See also comm. on Mt. 10: 4. A. Stumpff in TWNT 2 (1935), pp. 886–9; Eng. tr., 2 (1964), pp. 884–6, s.v. ζηλόω. 'C. Der Zelotismus'; D. Rhoads in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 1043–54, s.v., with bibl.

Zechariah. The Hebrew form of the name rendered *Zachariah in Greek. It is widely used in modern English translations of the Bible for the father of St *John the Baptist.

Zechariah, Book of. One of the *Minor Prophets. The Book falls into two distinct sections, chs. 1–8 and 9–14.

The former, deriving for the most part from Zechariah himself, dates from the spring of 519 BC (1: 7) and the winter of 518/17 BC (7: 1). The Jews had returned from exile *c.*537, but the *Temple was not yet restored. After a short introductory prophecy (1: 1–6) there follow accounts of eight visions: (1) 1: 7–17, four horsemen who report that the whole earth is quiet; nevertheless the prophet declares that God will soon end the desolation of *Jerusalem; (2) 1: 18–21, four horns broken by four smiths, signifying the destruction of heathen powers; (3) 2: 1–13, a man with a measuring line who shows that the future glory of Jerusalem will not be confined by a city wall; (4) 3: 1–10, the cleansing of Joshua the High Priest from his 'filthy garments' (i.e. the removal of the nation's guilt) and his investiture with new dignity; (5) 4: 1–14, a seven-branched candlestick, supplied with oil from two olive trees. These are explained as two 'sons of oil', i.e. anointed persons who are prob. the High Priest and the Davidic prince (see MESSIAH). The latter seems to be identified with the person of Zerubbabel, the contemporary head of the royal line of Judah, who is exhorted to complete the restoration of the Temple; (6) 5: 1–4, a flying roll symbolizing the curse which will light on evildoers; (7) 5: 5–11, a woman, named 'Wickedness', carried away in an ephah (a large dry measure) from the holy land to a far country; and (8) 6: 1–8, four chariots representing four winds (or spirits) carrying God's judgement to the corners of the earth. Joshua the High Priest (perhaps the original text referred also, or only, to Zerubbabel here) is to be crowned as Messiah (6: 9–15). In chs. 7–8 Zechariah declares that the observance of fasts should give place to true righteousness and prophesies the future glory of Judah when the *Diaspora should be gathered in and the Gentiles seeking God should voluntarily join themselves to the Jews.

Chs. 9–11 and 12–14 both begin (like the following Book of *Malachi) with the descriptive title massah, i.e. prophetic utterance (AV and RV, 'burden'). They are prob. both anonymous prophecies, not only different in style from chs. 1–8, but also reflecting the circumstances of an age later than Zechariah. Even chs. 1–8, however, have undergone extensive editing in the post-exilic age, perhaps to make them reflect the version of events recorded in Ezra 3–6.

Comm. by H. G. Mitchell (ICC on Hag., Zech., Mal., and Jon., 1912, pp. 81–362), M. Bic (Berlin, 1962), W. Rudolph (KAT, 13/4, on Hag., Zech., and Mal., 1976, pp. 59–243), and R. [A.] Mason (Camb. Bib., NEB, on Hag., Zech, and Mal., 1977, pp. 27–134), and on chs. 1–8 by A. Petitjean (Paris and Louvain, 1969), D. L. Peterson (London, on Hag. and Zech. 1–8, 1985, pp. 109–320), and C. L. and E. M. Meyers (Anchor Bible, 25B, on Haggai and Zech. 1–8, 1987, pp. 85–445) and on chs. 9–14 by idd. (Anchor Bible, 25C; 1993). L. G. Rignell, Die Nachtgeschichte des Sacharja: Eine exegetische Studie (Lund, 1950). B. Stade, 'Deuterozacharja. Eine kritische Studie', ZATW 1 (1881), pp. 1–96; 2 (1882), pp. 151–72 and 275–309; P. Lamarche, SJ, Zacharie ix–xiv: Structure littéraire et messianisme (Études Bibliques, 1961); B. Otzen, Studien über Deuterosacharja, tr. into Ger. by H. Leisterer (Acta Theologica Danica, 6; Copenhagen, 1964). W. A. M. Beuken, SJ, Haggai-Sacharja 1–8: Studien zur Überlieferungsgeschichte der frühnachexilischen Prophetie (Studia Semitica Neerlandica, 10; Assen, 1967), esp. pp. 15–20, 84–183, and 230–336. Eissfeldt, pp. 429–40.

Zeno (*c.*450?–91), Emp. of the E. from 474. His life was a tissue of treachery and violence, and his reign a succession of disastrous wars against his relations and ministers, and against the Ostrogoths (see THEODORIC). He took an active, but ill-advised, part in attempting to reconcile the *Monophysites; but his *Henoticon (482) did nothing to bring about the reunion for which it was devised, and occasioned a new schism between Constantinople and Rome.

Accounts of his reign in E. Stein and J. R. Palanque, Histoire du Bas Empire, 1 (1959), pp. 360–64, 2 (1949), pp. 7–76, and in A. H. M. Jones, The Later Roman Empire, 1 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 224–30. E. W. Brooks, 'The Emperor Zenon and the Isaurians', EHR 8 (1893), pp. 209–38. A. Lippold in PW, 2. Reihe, 19 (1972), cols. 149–213, s.v. 'Zenon (179)'.

Zeno, St (d. *c.*375), Bp. of *Verona from *c.*362. Beyond the fact that Zeno was an African by birth, very little is known of him. His sermons ('Tractatus') have affinities with the writings of such Africans as *Tertullian and *Cyprian, but, as they did not come into circulation until the earlier Middle Ages, they were unknown to St *Jerome and *Gennadius. The 8th-cent. Life by the Veronese presbyter Coronatus is devoid of historical value. He is commonly represented in art with a fish. Feast day, 12 Apr.

Editio princeps of his sermons by A. Castellanus, OP, and J. de Lenco (Venice, 1508); more accurate edn. by P. and H. *Ballerini (Verona, 1739), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 11. 253–528; crit. edn. by B. Löfstedt (CCSL 22; 1971). A. Bigelmair, Zeno von Verona: Habilitationsschrift (1904). Studi Zenoniani in occasione nel XVI centenario della morte di S. Zeno (Verona, 1974). M. F. Stepanich, OFM, The Christology of Zeno of Verona (Catholic University of America, Studies in Sacred Theology, 2nd ser. 9; 1948). F. Segala, Il Culto di San Zeno nella liturgia medioevale fino al secolo XII (Studi e documenti di storia e liturgia, 1; Verona, 1982). M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 127–30. G. Bardy in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3685–90, s.v. 'Zénon'; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 1628–39, s.v. 'Zénon (2) de Vérone'.

Zephaniah, Book of. One of the *Minor Prophets. This prophecy claims to have been delivered by Zephaniah, a descendant of (King?) Hezekiah, in the reign of Josiah, King of Judah (d. *c.*608 BC). The prophet announces the approaching judgement of all nations including Judah in the coming Day of the Lord, but he holds out the hope of future conversion among foreign nations and of a faithful remnant among the Jews (1: 2–3: 8). He concludes by encouraging Jerusalem to rejoice in the loving providence of God (3: 9–20). The prophecy, as originally delivered, probably belongs to the years immediately before the reformation of Josiah *c.*621 BC, and gives some valuable information on religion and society in Jerusalem and Judah at that time. From the religious point of view, the Book is evidence of Zephaniah's deep moral sense, of his awareness of the sin of his people, and of his implicit faith in the justice of God in the expected day of judgement. The opening words of the well-known Christian hymn '*Dies irae, dies illa' are taken from the *Vulgate version of 1: 15–16.

Comm. by J. M. P. Smith (ICC on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912, pp. 159–263), J. H. Eaton (on Obad., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., London, 1961, pp. 119–59), and L. Sabottka (Biblica et Orientalia, 25; Rome, 1972). [J.] G. [H.] Gerleman, Zephanja textkritisch und literarisch untersucht (Lund thesis, 1942). P. R. House, Zephaniah: A Prophetic Drama (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 69; Sheffield, 1988). E. B. Zvi, A Historical-Critical Study of the Book of Zephaniah (Beihefte zur ZATW, 198; 1991). Eissfeldt, pp. 423–5. C. L. Taylor in G. A. Buttrick and others (eds.), The Interpreter's Bible, 6 (New York [1956]), pp. 1007–34. J. S. Kselman in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 1077–80, s.v.

Zephyrinus, St (d. 217), Pope. He succeeded St *Victor as Bp. of Rome in 198, but despite his long pontificate relatively little is known of him. His critic, St *Hippolytus, described him as a simple man without education (ἀνὴρ ἰδιώτης καὶ ἀγράμματος; Refut. 9. 11). In his office he was closely associated with his deacon, *Callistus, who succeeded him as Pope. Hippolytus charged him with laxity in enforcing discipline and failure to assert his authority sufficiently in repressing the heresies (esp. *Sabellianism) then prevalent in the Roman Church. He is traditionally commemorated (on insufficient grounds) as a martyr. Feast day, 26 Aug.; dropped in 1969.

Jaffé, 1, p. 12. LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), p. 139 f. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Le Cas du pape Zéphyrin', R. Bén. 38 (1926), pp. 321–30. J. Wilpert, 'Beiträge zur christlichen Archäologie', 12, 'Das Mausoleum des hl. Zephyrin', RQ 22 (1908), pp. 183–95; O. *Marucchi, 'La questione del sepolcro del papa Zefirino e del martire Tarsicio in seguito ad una ultima scoperta', Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia cristiana, 16 (1910), pp. 205–25; P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, 4 (ST 24; 1912), sect. 4, 'Del sepolcro di S. Zefirino', pp. 69–76. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, 1 (1930), pp. 22–4 and 38–40. Fliche and Martin, 2 (1935), esp. p. 103. J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 279 f. É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3690 f., s.v.; J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 12 f.

Zerbolt, Gerhard. See GERHARD ZERBOLT OF ZUTPHEN.

Zernov, Nicolas (1898–1980), Russian scholar and ecumenist. Born in Moscow, he left Russia after the Revolution in 1921. From 1923 he was involved in the Russian Student Christian Movement, first in Belgrade (where he read theology) and later in Paris. He studied in Oxford (1930–2) and in 1934 settled in England. From 1934 to 1947 he was Secretary of the Fellowship of St *Alban and St Sergius (q.v.). In 1947 he was appointed first Spalding Lecturer in Eastern Orthodox Culture in the University of Oxford, a post he held until his retirement in 1966. In Oxford in 1959 he founded, and became the first warden of, the House of St Gregory and St Macrina. This was designed to provide a point of meeting between Christians of E. and W. traditions, with a library, residential accommodation for students (esp. those of Orthodox background), and a place of worship for the Russian Orthodox community in Oxford. Later a church was built (consecrated in 1973) which is shared by the Russian and Greek Orthodox parishes. In his many books and articles—most notably Eastern Christendom (1961) and The Russian Religious Renaissance of the Twentieth Century (1963)—Zernov made the world of Eastern Orthodoxy, and esp. Russian Orthodoxy, familiar in the W. Throughout his life he worked tirelessly for the unity of all Christians.

Zernov's final autobiographical work, completed by his widow, pub. Paris, 1981; Eng. tr., Sunset Years (1983). K. [T.] Ware, 'In Memoriam Nicolas Zernov', Sobornost/Eastern Churches Review, 3 (1981), pp. 11–38.

Zigabenus, Euthymius. See EUTHYMIUS ZIGABENUS.

Zillertal Evangelicals. A body of Protestants, resident in the Zillertal, one of the principal valleys of the Tyrol, who seceded from the RC Church in 1829 and the following years. Religious and social boycott from the RC clergy and laity culminated in a decree from the provincial estates of the Tyrol, ordering all nonconformists to leave the country. On appeal to Frederick William III of Prussia in 1837, they were allowed to sell their possessions and settle at Erdmannsdorf in Prussian territory, where they were assisted by a grant from the Prussian government. In 1945 their descendants were exiled and dispersed.

F. C. Arnold in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 675–8; E. Beyreuther in RGG (3rd edn.), 6 (1962), col. 1910, s.v. 'Zillertaler Emigranten'.

Zimbabwe, Christianity in. The earliest Christian mission to Zimbabwe (formerly Southern Rhodesia) was that of Fr. Gonçalo da Silviera, SJ, who was martyred at the court of Mutapa in 1561. In the early 17th cent.

*Dominican missionaries baptized several of the kings, but the ceremony seems to have been little more than a recognition of Portuguese protection. After the establishment of the Changamire state in the late 17th cent., the Christian missionary presence was eliminated, to be resumed only in the later 19th cent., when R. *Moffat of the *LMS received permission of the Ndebele king Mzilikazi to establish a mission at Inyati. In 1877 the Jesuit mission to the Zambezi was reconstituted under a Belgian, Henri Depelchin, and in 1879 established a station at the Ndebele capital of Bulawayo. However, little progress was made until the conquest of the country by Cecil Rhodes and the creation of Rhodesia. In the Shona Rising of 1896 Bernard Mizeki, an Anglican catechist of Mozambican origin, who refused to leave his post at Mangwende, was martyred. In the following years the Churches grew rapidly. British *Methodists worked in the central part of Mashonaland, where John White established the important Waddilove Training Institution (1898); American Methodists worked in the east; *Lutherans joined the LMS in Matabeleland; while Anglicans worked in all areas. The Jesuits, mostly British, were joined by German Mariannhill Fathers and, later, Swiss Bethlehem Fathers. John White, who was President of the Missionary Conference (1924–8), did much to defend African rights, as did Arthur Shearly Cripps, an Anglican priest, poet, and novelist who worked in the country from 1901 until his death in 1952. In 1979 Abel Muzorewa, Bp. of the American Methodist Church, became the country's first prime minister in alliance with Ian Smith and in opposition to the main nationalist forces. Nevertheless, relations between the government of Robert Mugabe and the Churches since independence in 1980 have been mostly good. Most Zimbabweans were linked to some Church, of which the largest is the RC. There are many 'Independent', Black-founded Churches, some of them extensions of the Zionist Churches of *South Africa, but others, such as the two Churches of Vapostori ('Apostles'), founded by Johane Maranke and Johane Masowe in the 1930s, are native to Zimbabwe.

The source material for the early period is pr., with Eng. tr., in Documentos sobre os Portugueses em Moçambique e na África Central 1497–1840 (Documents on the Portuguese in Mozambique and Central Africa 1497–1840), 7 and 8 (Lisbon, 1971 and 1975), passim, and, in Eng. tr., in G. McC. Theal (ed.), Records of South-eastern Africa (9 vols., Cape Town, 1898–1903), passim. M. Gelfand (ed.), Gubulawayo and Beyond: Letters and Journals of the Early Jesuit Missionaries to Zambesia (1879–1887) (1968). General history of the early period by W. G. K. Randles, L'Empire de Monomotapa du XVe au XIXe siècle ([1975]; Eng. tr., Zambeziana, 7; Salisbury [1979]). M. W. Murphree, Christianity and the Shona (London School of Economics Monographs on Social Anthropology, 36; 1969). Christianity South of the Zambesi, 1, ed. A. J. Dachs (Salisbury, 1973); 2, ed. M. F. C. Bourdillon, SJ (ibid., 1977); 3, ed. C. F. Hallencreuty and A. M. Mayo, Church and State in Zimbabwe (ibid., 1988; deals with the period after 1921). A. J. Dachs and W. F. Rea, SJ, The Catholic Church and Zimbabwe 1879–1979 (Zambeziana, 8; Salisbury, 1979). N. Bhebe, Christianity and Traditional Religion in Western Zimbabwe 1859–1923 (1979). M. L. Daneel, Old and New in Southern Shona Independent Churches (1–2, The Hague, 1971–4; 3, Harare, 1988).

Zinzendorf, Nikolaus Ludwig Graf von (1700–60), founder of the Herrnhuter 'Brüdergemeine' or *Moravian Brethren. Born in Dresden, of an aristocratic family with *Pietist leanings, he was educated at A. H. *Francke's Adelspädagogium and at *Wittenberg University (1716–19). He then travelled in the Netherlands and France and in 1721 entered the service of the Saxon Government. His chief interest, however, was evangelization. He organized religious assemblies in his home, and from 1722 received on one of his estates Protestant emigrants from Austria, many of them descendants of the *Bohemian Brethren. Giving up his Government post in 1727, he devoted himself entirely to the spiritual care of this colony, called Herrnhut. Before long he was attacked as an innovator by *Lutheran orthodoxy, but his beliefs were examined and approved in 1734. Exiled from Saxony in 1736, he was permitted to return in 1747, and spent his last years in pastoral work at Herrnhut. During and after his exile he founded communities in the Baltic Provinces, the Netherlands, England, the West Indies, and N. America. His ideals of evangelism inspired many of his followers to work as missionaries, esp. among 'despised' races and peoples.

Opposed alike to the spirit of the *Enlightenment and of traditional Protestant orthodoxy, and also criticized by Pietists and *Methodists, Zinzendorf maintained a position of his own. In accordance with the 'Tropenlehre' which he elaborated ('God fulfils Himself in many ways') he was open to elements from Lutheran and Reformed sources as well as Moravian, and hoped to work pervasively from within the Protestant Churches, but circumstances forced his movement to adopt a separate organization. In 1737 he received episcopal orders from a Moravian bishop, D. E. Jablonski, and in England, where he was active from 1749 to 1755, the *Unitas Fratrum (the Moravian or United Brethren) was recognized by an Act of Parliament as an ancient Protestant Episcopal Church. For some time he had a considerable influence on *Evangelicals, esp. John *Wesley. Objection was taken, however, to his teaching on the relation between *justification and sanctification and to the emotionalism of his 'religion of the heart': the 'felt' fellowship with a Saviour conceived as at once creator, sustainer, and redeemer of the world found frequent expression in his hymns and in an almost playful cult of the Five *Wounds. Through F. D. E. *Schleiermacher his emphasis on the place of feeling in religion had an indirect influence on 19th-cent. theology.

Hauptschriften photographically reproduced from contemporary edns., ed. E. Beyreuther and G. Meyer (6 vols., Hildesheim, 1962–3, with Ergänzungsbande zu den Hauptschriften, 14 vols., ibid., 1964–85). Zinzendorf published his autobiog. under the title Περὶ ἑαυτοῦ. Das ist naturelle Reflexiones über allerhand Materien [c.1748]. Life by A. G. Spangenberg (8 Thle., [Barby] 1772–5; abridged Eng. tr., 1838; Ger. photographically repr. in the series of Materialien und Documente on Zinzendorf, ed. E. Beyreuther and G. Meyer, Reihe 2, vols. 1–8; Hildesheim and New York, 1971). L. K. von Schrautenbach, Der Graf von Zinzendorf und die Brüdergemeine seiner Zeit (written in 1782; ed. F. W. Kölbing, Gnadau, 1851). Modern Life by J. R. Weinlick (Nashville, 1956). H. Plitt, Zinzendorfs Theologie (3 vols., 1869–71). O. Uttendörfer, Zinzendorfs Weltbetrachtung (1929); id., Zinzendorfs religiöse Grundgedanken (Herrnhut, 1935); and other writings by id. W. Bettermann, Theologie und Sprache bei Zinzendorf (1935). L. Aalen, Den Unge Zinzendorfs Teologi (Oslo, 1952; Ger. tr., Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, 16; 1966). C. W. Towlson, Moravian and Methodist: Relationships and Influences in the Eighteenth Century (1957), passim. E. Beyreuther, Zinzendorf und die sich allhier beisammen finden (Marburg an der Lahn, 1959); id., Zinzendorf und die Christenheit 1732–1760 (ibid., 1961); id., Studien zur Theologie Zinzendorfs (Neukirchen and Vluyn Kries Moers, 1962). A. J. Lewis, Zinzendorf the Ecumenical Pioneer: A Study in the Moravian Contribution to Christian Mission and Unity (1962). H. Ruh, Die christologische Begründung des ersten Artikels bei Zinzendorf (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, 7 [1967]). P. Deghaye, La Doctrine ésotérique de Zinzendorf [1969]. D. Meyer, Der Christozentrismus des späten Zinzendorf (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 23, Bd. 25; 1973). M. Gerland, Wesentliche Vereinigung: Untersuchungen zum Abendmahlsverständnis Zinzendorfs (Theologische Texte und Studien, 2; Hildesheim, etc., 1992). H. Schneider in M. Greschat (ed.), Orthodoxie und Pietismus (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 7; Stuttgart, 1982), pp. 347–72, with bibl. D. Meyer (ed.), Bibliographisches Handbuch zur Zinzendorf-Forschung (Düsseldorf, 1987). B. Becker and J. T. Müller in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 679–703, s.v.; L. Cristiani in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3695–704, s.v.; E. Beyreuther in RGG (3rd edn), 6 (1962), cols. 1913–16, s.v., with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to MORAVIAN BRETHREN; also histories of PIETISM, cited s.v.

Zion. The citadel of *Jerusalem, taken by *David from the Jebusites (2 Sam. 5: 6–7). It was probably situated on the eastern ridge of the city, south of the site of the *Temple. The name came to signify the mount on which the Temple stood, 'God's holy hill' at Jerusalem (Ps. 2: 6); thence also, Jerusalem itself (Is. 1: 27), and allegorically the heavenly city (Heb. 12: 22, Rev. 14: 1). It has been inferred from certain references in Isaiah (e.g. 10: 24–6, 29: 5–8—where the name '*Ariel' is used for Zion—and 37: 22–9) and the Psalms (e.g. 46–8) that there was an ancient tradition of the 'inviolability' of Zion, perhaps celebrated in the pre-exilic cult of the Jerusalem Temple.

H. G. May (ed.), Oxford Bible Atlas (1962; 3rd edn. by J. Day, 1984), pp. 80 f. W. H. Mare in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 1096 f., s.v. On the inferences from Is. and Pss., W. H. Schmidt, Alttestamentlicher Glaube in seiner Geschichte (6th edn., Neukirchen, 1987), pp. 249–62; Eng. tr. (from 4th edn.), The Faith of the Old Testament (Oxford, 1983), pp. 207–20; R. E. Clements, Isaiah and the Deliverance of Jerusalem (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 13; Sheffield, 1980), pp. 72–89.

Zita, St (*c.*1215–72), the patroness of domestic servants. At the age of 12 she entered the service of the Fatinelli family at Lucca, where she remained till her death. Misunderstood and maltreated at first, she later won, by her religious fervour, the respect, and even veneration, of the family. She was canonized in 1696. Feast day, 27 Apr.

The principal authority is the Life by Fatinellus de Fatinellis (anon.) pr. in AASS, Apr. 3 (1675), pp. 499–509; see also Propylaeum ad Dec. (1940), pp. 158 f., with further refs. Modern Lives by A. Guerra (Lucca, 1875) and P. Puccinelli (ibid., 1949). On the ref. to St Zita in *Dante's Inferno, see F. P. Luiso, L'Anziano di Santa Zita (Lucca, 1927); cf. B. de Gaiffier in Anal. Boll. 48 (1930), pp. 229 f.

Zonaras, Johannes (12th cent.), Byzantine canonist and historian. After holding high positions at *Constantinople in the Imperial administration, he retired from the court during the reign of John II Comnenus (1118–43) and spent the rest of his life in monastic retirement on the small island of Niandro. The chief of his writings, a universal History (Ἐπιτομὴ τῶν Ἱστοριῶν) in 18 books, preserves much material that would otherwise be lost. It extends to 1118, and includes events of which Zonaras was himself an eyewitness. He also wrote a Commentary on Greek *canon law, starting with the *Apostolic Canons, notable for the aptness and directness of his comments. His other works include a commentary on the poems of St *Gregory of Nazianzus and a hymn to the Blessed Virgin (Κανὼν εἰς τὴν ὑπεραγίαν Θεοτόκον).

His Epitome of History, ed. M. Pinder and R. Büttner-Wobst (3 vols., C.S.H.Byz., 1841–97); also by L. Dindorf (6 vols., Teub., 1868–76). Collected edn. in J. P. Migne, PG 134 and 135. 9–438. M. DiMaio, Jun., 'Smoke in the Wind: Zonaras' Use of Philistorgius, Zosimos, John of Antioch, and John of Rhodes in his Narrative of the Neo-Flavian Emperors', Byzantion, 58 (1988), pp. 230–55, with refs. to recent lit. Krumbacher, pp. 370–6; G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica, 1 (Berliner Byzantinische Arbeiten, 10; 2nd edn., 1958), pp. 344–6; Beck, pp. 656 f., both with bibl. P. Meyer in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 715–19; É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3705–8, both s.v.

Zoroastrianism (also known as Mazdaism). The system of religious doctrine ascribed to Zoroaster (Zarathustra) which in later times became the dominant religion of Iran and under the Sassanian dynasty (AD 226–651) the official state religion. Its priests were called magi [Old Persian, magu]. After the conversion of Iran to *Islam, Zoroastrians sought religious freedom in *India, where they were called Parsis.

Of Zoroaster himself next to nothing is known with certainty. The Gathas, the oldest part of the Avesta*, the sacred writings of the Zoroastrians, are hymns ascribed to Zoroaster, an attribution accepted by many scholars. It would seem that his sphere of activity was what is now NE Iran, W. Afghanistan, and the Turkmen Republic of the former USSR. His dates have long been widely disputed, ranging from the traditional date of 258 years 'before Alexander' (which would place his floruit in the early 6th cent. BC) to some time in the middle, or at the end, of the second millennium BC.

Scholars are also divided about Zoroaster's original teaching, some regarding him as a monotheist and seeing later dualistic Zoroastrianism as a corruption of his teaching, others convinced of the essential continuity of Zoroastrian doctrine. According to Zoroastrianism, the world was made by one 'Wise Lord' (Ahura Mazda or Ohrmuzd) with the help of his holy spirit (Spenta Mainyu) and six other spirits, the Amesha Spenta or 'Holy Immortals'. Ahura Mazda is not, however, all-powerful, but opposed by an uncreated Evil Spirit (Angra Mainyu or Ahriman), who is supported by other evil spirits including the daevas, the ancient amoral gods of war. The created world is the arena for a combat between good and evil: human beings, having free will, have the duty to choose the good. At death each individual is judged according to his words and deeds on the 'bridge of decision': those who fail fall into hell. All human striving is to be directed towards the salvation of the world. In the last days of the world, the World Saviour, Saoshyant, will come in glory and there will be a final battle in which good will triumph over evil. A later teaching (first attested in the 9th cent. AD) holds that in this ordeal the wicked will be purified and saved.

Much of this teaching can be seen as a reform of earlier Iranian beliefs, and fire, regarded as present throughout the whole creation as a life-force, continues to play an important role in Zoroastrian ritual. Zoroastrian ideas, which underwent considerable development over the course of the centuries, are sometimes held to have influenced *Judaism and, less probably, Christianity and Islam. Beside the Parsis in India there is still a small Zoroastrian community in Iran.

Eng. tr. of primary texts by [N. E.] M. Boyce, Textual Sources for the Study of Zoroastrianism (Manchester [1984]). General studies incl. E. Herzfeld, Zoroaster and his World (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1947); R. C. Zaehner, The Teaching of the Magi (1956); id., The Dawn and Twilight of Zoroastrianism (1961); J. Duchesne-Guillemin, The Western Response to Zoroaster (Oxford, 1958); id., La Religion de l'Iran ancien (1962); id., Symbols and Values in Zoroastrianism: Their Survival and Renewal (New York [1966]), and other works; W. Hinz, Zarathustra (Stuttgart, 1961); G. Widengren, Die Religionen Irans (Die Religionen der Menschheit, 14; Stuttgart [1965]); [N. E.] M. Boyce (from vol. 3, with F. Grenet), A History of Zoroastrianism (Handbuch der Orientalistik, Abt. 1, Bd. 8, Abschnitt 1, Lieferung 2, Heft 2 (A); Leiden, 1975 ff.); id., Zoroastrians: Their Religious Beliefs and Practices (1979), and other works; G. Gnoli, Zoroaster's Time and Homeland (Istituto Universitario Orientale, Seminario di Studi Asiatici, Ser. Minor, 7; Naples, 1980). J. Duchesne-Guillemin in The Cambridge History of Iran, 3 (2), ed. E. Yarshater (1983), pp. 866–908. G. Gnoli in M. Eliade (ed.), Encyclopedia of Religion, 15 (1987), pp. 579–91; J. Baldick in F. Hardy (ed.), The World's Religions: The Religions of Asia (1988), pp. 20–36, s.v. 'Mazdaism'; [N. E.] M. Boyce in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 6 (1992), pp. 1168–74.

Zosimus (d. 418), Bp. of Rome from 417. He was a Greek by birth. His brief pontificate was marked by blunders. Thus his attempt to establish a vicariate of Arles, in disregard of already existing metropolitan rights in Gaul, had to be abandoned by his successor, and his policy twice suffered defeat in N. Africa. Having reopened the case of *Pelagius and his supporters (condemned by *Innocent I), he was forced by an Imperial edict to come into line with the views of St *Augustine and the African Church and issue his '*Tractoria' condemning Pelagianism. He was again outmanœuvred when, citing as *Nicene and therefore of oecumenical authority a canon which properly belonged to the Council of *Sardica (343), he tried to quash the sentence passed on the African priest *Apiarius by the Bp. of Sicca. Several of his letters survive. Feast day, 26 Dec.

Epp. ed. P. *Coustant, OSB, Epistolae Romanorum Pontificum, 1 (1721), cols. 933–1006; repr. J. P. Migne, PL 20. 639–704; see also Suppl. (ed. A. Hamman, OFM), 1 (1958), cols. 797 f. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 225 f. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums von den Anfängen bis zur Höhe der Weltherrschaft, 1 (1930), pp. 344–60. F. Floëri, 'Le Pape Zosime et la doctrine augustinienne du péché originel', in Augustinus Magister: Congrès International Augustinien, Paris, 21–24 Septembre 1954. Communications, 2 [1954], pp. 755–61. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 1212–44. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 530 f. (nos. 1644–7). É. Amann in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3708–16, s.v.; C. Munier in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 1651–8, s.v. 'Zosime (1)'.

Zosimus (later 5th cent.), Greek historian. He held an administrative post at *Constantinople. His history of the Roman Empire, in six books, going down to 410 and written after 425, prob. *c.*500, is one of the primary sources for the secular history of the 4th cent. Though based throughout on earlier histories, esp. those of the *Neoplatonists Eunapius and Olympiodorus, whose philosophical interests Zosimus shared, the history has a special interest because, without intentional distortion of facts, its author consistently developed a pagan and anti-Christian view of his subject-matter, attributing, e.g., the decline of the Empire as much to the neglect of the old religion as to any political cause. His account of ecclesiastical affairs also serves as an occasional corrective to the better-known accounts in Christian writers.

Ed. princeps of Gk. text by F. Sylburg (Frankfurt, 1590). Crit. edns. by L. Mendelssohn (Leipzig, 1887), with prolegomena; and, with Fr. tr. and introd., by F. Paschoud (Collection des Universités de France, 3 vols. in 5 parts, 1971–89). Eng. trs. by J. J. Buchanan and H. T. Davis (San Antonio, Tex., 1967) and R. T. Ridley (Byzantina Australiensia, 2; Sydney [1982]). F. Paschoud, Cinq Études sur Zosime (1975). W. Goffart, 'Zosimus, the First Historian of Rome's Fall', American Historical Review, 76 (1971), pp. 412–41. F. Paschoud in PW 19 (1972), cols. 795–841, s.v. 'Zosimos (8)'. zucchetto. The small round skull-cap used by certain RC ecclesiastics. It has been customarily worn since the 13th cent., and varies in colour with the different grades of the hierarchy, the *Pope wearing white, *cardinals red, *bishops violet, and others black. It is worn at *Mass, except during the *Canon.

Zurich Consensus. See CONSENSUS TIGURINUS.

Zwickau Prophets. A group of early *Anabaptists which sought to establish a community of the elect at Zwickau, an industrial town in S. Saxony. The chief were N. *Storch, T. Drechsel, and M. Thoma (or Stübner). They claimed to be guided by the Holy Spirit, rejected *Infant Baptism, and embraced chiliastic beliefs. The source of their doctrines is uncertain; only Thoma is known to have had contacts with Bohemia and *Hussitism. The three leaders visited *Wittenberg in the winter of 1521; there they met and impressed both P. *Melanchthon and N. von *Amsdorf. Their influence in Zwickau, esp. among women, survived into the 1530s.

Brief reports on the Zwickau Prophets drawn up for the Kurfürst Friedrich by P. Melanchthon and N. von Amsdorf, ed. C. G. *Bretschneider, Corpus Reformatorum, 1 (Halle, 1834), cols. 533–55. P. Wappler, Thomas Müntzer in Zwickau und die 'Zwickauer Propheten' (Wissenschaftliche Beilage zu dem Jahresberichte des Realgymnasiums mit Realschule zu Zwickau; Zwickau, 1908) (repr. in Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, no. 182; Gütersloh [1966]). R. Schwarz, Die apokalyptische Theologie Thomas Müntzers und der Taboriten (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 55; Tübingen, 1977). S. Hoyer, 'Die Zwickauer Storchianer—Vorläufer der Täufer?', Jahrbuch für Regionalgeschichte, 13 (1986), pp. 60–78 (repr. in J.-G. Rott and S. L. Verheus (eds.), Anabaptistes et dissidents au XVI^e siècle (Bibliotheca Dissidentium, scripta et studia, 3; Baden-Baden and Bouxwiller, 1987), pp. 65–83). S. C. Karant-Nunn, Zwickau in Transition, 1500–1547: The Reformation as an Agent of Change (Columbus, Oh., 1987).

Zwingli, Ulrich (or Huldreich) (1484–1531), Swiss Reformer. A native of Wildhaus in the Toggenburg valley, canton St *Gall, Switzerland, he was educated at Berne (1496–8), Vienna (1498–1502), and Basle (under T. *Wyttenbach, 1502–6). He was ordained priest in 1506, and from 1506 to 1516 was pastor at Glarus. Already a devoted admirer of *Erasmus, he gave himself up at Glarus largely to humanistic studies, taught himself Greek and prob. the rudiments of Hebrew, learned St Paul's Epp. by heart, and read the Fathers. In 1513 and 1515 he served as military chaplain to Swiss mercenaries in the Papal service and was present at the Battle of Marignano (13–14 Sept. 1515). In 1516 he left Glarus for *Einsiedeln, where the pilgrimage abuses at the famous shrine quickened his desire for reform; he also deepened his knowledge of the Greek NT with the aid of Erasmus' newly published editio princeps (1516) and improved his technique as a preacher. On 11 Dec. 1518 he was elected People's Preacher at the Old Minster in Zurich, where he remained for the rest of his life. Here, in an important office, he sought to carry through his political and religious ideals and met with strong local support. The rupture with ecclesiastical authority came gradually. The real beginning of the Reformation in Switzerland was Zwingli's sermons commenting on the NT in 1519. Attacks in his sermons on purgatory, invocation of saints, and monasticism soon followed. In April 1522 appeared his first Reformation tract, Von Erkiesen und Fryheit der Spysen, and later in the same year (22 Aug.) Architeles, advocating the liberation of believers from the control of the Papacy and bishops. The Bp. of Constance's Vicar General (Johann *Faber), sent to Zurich to deal with the situation, was silenced in a public disputation on 29 Jan. 1523, when Zwingli successfully upheld 67 theses before an audience of some 600. The sole basis of truth was the Gospel, and the authority of the Pope, the sacrifice of the Mass, the invocation of saints, times and seasons of fasting, and clerical celibacy were rejected. The city council gave Zwingli its full support and the Minster Chapter was reconstituted in independence of episcopal control. Matters were carried further at a second disputation on 26 Oct. 1523, which led to Zwingli's Eine kurze christliche Einleitung, expounding for the clergy the relations between the Gospel and the Law. Shortly afterwards steps were taken to abolish the Mass (eventually suppressed at Zurich in Apr. 1525), remove images and pictures from churches, and to institute the 'Prophezey', daily sessions of Bible-reading and exegesis for preachers and laymen. On 2 Apr. 1524 Zwingli publicly celebrated his marriage with Anna Meyer (née Reinhard) in the cathedral.

It was at this stage that Zwingli began to develop his characteristic theology ('Zwinglianism'). In 1522 he still accepted the traditional view of the Eucharist, but in a letter to Matthäus Alber of Reutlingen (16 Nov. 1524) he upheld a purely symbolic interpretation. He developed his teaching on the subject in a series of writings against M. *Luther from 1525 onwards. Against Luther's doctrine of *consubstantiation, he maintained that it is only the communicant's faith that makes Christ present in the Eucharist; there is no question of any physical presence. The Colloquy of *Marburg in 1529 failed to reconcile the opposing parties. Particularly in his Responsio brevis (1526), Zwingli distinguished more clearly than Luther between the human and the Divine nature in Christ. He also refused to admit the Lutheran distinction between the Law and the Gospel. This point of view led him to affirm, in the course of his disputes with the *Anabaptists in the 1520s that Infant Baptism was a natural development from the *circumcision prescribed in the OT. He was also unlike Luther in believing that the magistrate had the right to legislate in religious matters, and consequently he acquiesced when the Council of Zurich put one of the Anabaptist leaders to death by drowning in 1527.

Meanwhile the movement had spread to other parts of Switzerland. In a public theological disputation at Berne in Jan. 1528 Zwingli successfully upheld ten theses (see BERNE, THESES OF), and the canton joined the movement. Basle, St Gall, and Schaffhausen followed shortly afterwards. The movement met, however, with fierce resistance elsewhere, notably in the Five Forest Cantons (Lucerne, Zug, Schwyz, Uri, Unterwalden). War was only just avoided in 1529 and finally broke out in 1531, when the Forest Cantons made a sudden and unexpected descent on Zurich. They were met by a small force at Cappel, where Zwingli, who as chaplain carried the banner, was killed (11 Oct. 1531).

Collected edns. of his works by R. Walther, 4 vols., Zurich, 1539; 4 vols., ibid., 1545, and 3 vols., ibid., 1581; ed. M. Schuler and J. Schulthess (8 vols., ibid., 1829–42); ed. E. Egli, G. Finsler, and others (Corpus Reformatorum, 88 ff.; 1904 ff.). Zwingli Hauptschriften also ed. F. Blanke and others (Zurich, 1940 ff.). Selections of his writings tr. into Eng. by S. M. Jackson (Philadelphia, 1901); also by G. W. Bromiley, Zwingli and Bullinger (Library of Christian Classics, 24; 1953), pp. 47–279, with introd., pp. 13–40, and by E. J. Furcha and H. W. Pipkin (2 vols., Allison Park, Pa., 1984). Life by O. *Myconius, written in 1532, pub. Basle, 1536. E. Egli, Analecta Reformatoria, 1: Dokumente und Abhandlungen zur Geschichte Zwingli und seiner Zeit (Zurich, 1899). Modern Lives by R. Christoffel (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche, 1; 1857; Eng. tr., 1858), O. Farner (4 vols., Zurich, 1943–60), and G. R. Potter (Cambridge, 1976). Shorter studies by O. Farner (Emmishofen, 1917; Eng. tr., 1952), J. Rilliet (Paris, 1959; rev. Eng. tr., 1964), F. Büsser (Persönlichkeit und Geschichte, 74–5; Göttingen, etc., 1973), U. Gäbler (Munich, 1983; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1987), and M. Haas (Zurich, 1983). A. Baur, Zwinglis Theologie: Ihr Werden und ihr System (2 vols., 1885–9). W. Köhler, Zwingli und Luther: Ihr Streit über das Abendmahl nach seinen politischen und religiösen Beziehungen (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 6 and 7; 1924–1953), and other works of this author. J. V. Pollet, OP, Huldrych Zwingli et la Réforme en Suisse d'après les recherches récentes (1963). R. C. Walton, Zwingli's Theocracy (Toronto [1967]). G. W. Locher, Huldrych Zwingli in neuer Sicht: Zehn Beiträge zur Theologie der Zürcher Reformation (Zurich and Stuttgart, 1969; Eng. tr., Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 25; Leiden, 1981); id., Die Zwinglische Reformation im Rahmen der europäischen Kirchengeschichte (Göttingen, 1979). A. Schindler, Zwingli und die Kirchenväter (Zurich, 1984). E. J. Furcha and H. W. Pipkin (eds.), Prophet, Pastor, Protestant: The Work of Huldrych Zwingli after Five Hundred Years (Pittsburgh theological monographs, NS 11; Allison Park, Pa., 1984). F. Büsser, Wurzeln der Reformation in Zurich (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 31; Leiden, 1985), pp. 20–105. W. P. Stephens, The Theology of Huldrych Zwingli (Oxford, 1986). J. V. Pollet, Huldrych Zwingli et le Zwinglianisme: Essai de synthèse historique et théologique mis à jour d'après les recherches récentes (1988), incl. repr. of his art. in DTC, cited below. I. Backus, The Disputations of Baden, 1526, and Berne, 1528 (Studies in Reformed Theology and History, 1, no. 1; Princeton, NJ, 1993), passim. Zwingliana: Mitteilungen zur Geschichte Zwinglis und der Reformation, herausgegeben von der Vereinigung für das Zwinglimuseum in Zurich (Zurich, 1897 [1904] ff.; esp. 19: Reformiertes Erbe: Festschrift für Gottfried W. Locher zu seinem 80. Geburtstag, ed. H. A. Oberman and others, 2 Teile, 1992–3). G. Finsler, Zwingli-Bibliographie (ibid., 1897); U. Gäbler, Hulrych Zwingli im 20. Jahrhundert: Forschungsbericht und annotierte Bibliographie 1897–1972 (ibid., 1975). E. Güder, R. Stähelin, and E. Egli in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 774–815, s.v.; L. Cristiani in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3716–44, s.v.; J.-V.-M. Pollet, OP, ibid., cols. 3745–928, s.v. 'Zwinglianisme'.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF POPES AND ANTIPOPES

Antipopes are indicated by indenting the names to the right in [ ]

until c.64	St *Peter
	*Linus
	*Anacletus
fl. c.96	*Clement I
	Evaristus
	Alexander I
c.117–c.127	Sixtus I
c.127–c.137	*Telesphorus
c.137–c.140	Hyginus
c.140–c.154	*Pius I
c.154–c.166	Anicetus
c.166–c.175	Soter
c.175–89	Eleutherius
189–98	*Victor I
198–217	*Zephyrinus
217–22	*Callistus I
[217–c.235	*Hippolytus]
222–30	Urban I
230–5	Pontian
235–6	Anterus
236–50	*Fabian
251–3	*Cornelius
[251–257/8	*Novatian]
253–4	Lucius I
254–7	*Stephen I
257–8	*Sixtus II
259–68	*Dionysius
269–74	Felix I
275–83	Eutychianus
283–96	Caius
296–304	Marcellinus
c.307–308/9	Marcellus I
310	Eusebius
310/11–314	*Miltiades
314–35	*Sylvester I
336	Mark
337–52	*Julius I
352–66	*Liberius
[355–65	Felix II]
366–84	*Damasus I
[366–7	Ursinus]
384–99	*Siricius
399–401	Anastasius I
402–17	*Innocent I
417–18	*Zosimus
418–22	*Boniface I
[418–19	Eulalius]
422–32	*Celestine I
432–40	Sixtus III
440–61	*Leo I
461–8	Hilarus
468–83	*Simplicius
483–92	Felix III (II)
492–6	*Gelasius I
496–8	Anastasius II
498–514	*Symmachus
[498–9, 501–6	Laurentius]
514–23	*Hormisdas
523–6	John I
526–30	Felix IV (III)
530–2	Boniface II
[530	Dioscorus]
533–5	John II
535–6	*Agapetus I
536–7	Silverius
537–55	*Vigilius
556–61	Pelagius I
561–74	John III
575–9	Benedict I
579–90	Pelagius II
590–604	*Gregory I
604–6	Sabinianus
607	Boniface III
608–15	Boniface IV
615–18	Deusdedit or Adeodatus I
619–25	Boniface V
625–38	*Honorius I
640	Severinus
640–2	John IV
642–9	Theodore I
649–55	*Martin I[1]
654–7	Eugenius I
657–72	*Vitalian
672–6	Adeodatus II
676–8	Donus
678–81	*Agatho
682–3	Leo II
684–5	Benedict II
685–6	John V
686–7	Cono
[687	Theodore]
[687	Paschal]
687–701	*Sergius I
701–5	John VI
705–7	John VII
708	Sisinnius
708–15	Constantine
715–31	*Gregory II
731–41	Gregory III
741–52	*Zacharias
752	Stephen II
752–67	*Stephen II (III)
757–67	Paul I
[767–9	Constantine]
[768	Philip]
768–72	*Stephen III (IV)
772–95	*Hadrian I
795–816	*Leo III
816–17	Stephen V
817–24	Paschal I
824–7	Eugenius II
827	Valentine
827–44	Gregory IV
844–7	Sergius II
[844	John]
847–55	*Leo IV
855–8	Benedict III
[855	*Anastasius Bibliothecarius]
858–67	*Nicholas I
867–72	Hadrian II
872–82	John VIII
882–4	Marinus I
884–5	Hadrian III
885–91	Stephen VI
891–6	*Formosus
896	Boniface VI
896–7	Stephen VII
897	Romanus
897	Theodore II
898–900	John IX
900–3	Benedict IV
903	Leo V
[903–4	Christopher]
904–11	Sergius III
911–13	Anastasius III
913–14	Lando
914–28	John X
928	Leo VI
928–31	Stephen VIII
931–5	John XI
936–9	Leo VII
939–42	Stephen IX
942–6	Marinus II
946–55	Agapetus II
955–64	*John XII

[1] After Martin's banishment his successor was elected and consecrated.

List of Popes and Antipopes

963–5	Leo VIII[1]
964	Benedict V
965–72	John XIII
973–4	Benedict VI
[974, 984–5	Boniface VII]
974–83	Benedict VII
983–4	John XIV
985–96	John XV
996–9	Gregory V
[997–8	John XVI]
999–1003	*Sylvester II
1003	John XVII
1003/4–9	John XVIII
1009–12	Sergius IV
1012–24	Benedict VIII
[1012	Gregory]
1024–32	John XIX
1032–44	Benedict IX
1045	Sylvester III
1045	Benedict IX [for the second time]
1045–6	Gregory VI
1046–7	Clement II
1047–8	Benedict IX [for the third time]
1048	Damasus II
1048–54	*Leo IX
1055–7	Victor II
1057–8	Stephen X
[1058–9	Benedict X]
1059–61	Nicholas II
1061–73	*Alexander II
[1061–72	Honorius II]
1073–85	*Gregory VII
[1080, 1084–1100	Clement III]
1086–7	Victor III
1088–99	*Urban II
1099–1118	*Paschal II
[1100–1	Theodoric]
[1101	Albert]
[1105–11	Sylvester IV]
1118–19	Gelasius II
[1118–21	Gregory VIII]
1119–24	*Callistus II
1124–30	Honorius II
[1124	Celestine II]
1130–43	Innocent II
[1130–8	Anacletus II]
[1138	Victor IV]
1143–4	Celestine II
1144–5	Lucius II
1145–53	*Eugenius III
1153–4	Anastasius IV
1154–9	*Hadrian IV
1159–81	*Alexander III
[1159–64	Victor IV[2]]
[1164–8	Paschal III]
[1168–78	Callistus III]
[1179–80	Innocent III]
1181–5	Lucius III
1185–7	Urban III
1187	Gregory VIII
1187–91	Clement III
1191–8	*Celestine III
1198–1216	*Innocent III
1216–27	*Honorius III
1227–41	*Gregory IX
1241	Celestine IV
1243–54	*Innocent IV
1254–61	Alexander IV
1261–4	Urban IV
1265–8	Clement IV
1271–6	*Gregory X
1276	Innocent V
1276	Hadrian V
1276–7	*John XXI[3]
1277–80	Nicholas III
1281–5	*Martin IV
1285–7	Honorius IV
1288–92	Nicholas IV
1294	*Celestine V
1294–1303	*Boniface VIII
1303–4	Benedict XI
1305–14	*Clement V
1316–34	*John XXII
[1328–30	Nicholas V]
1334–42	*Benedict XII
1342–52	*Clement VI
1352–62	Innocent VI
1362–70	*Urban V
1370–8	*Gregory XI
1378–89	*Urban VI
[1378–94	Clement VII]
1389–1404	Boniface IX
[1394–1417	*Benedict XIII]
1404–6	Innocent VII
1406–15	Gregory XII
[1409–10	*Alexander V]
[1410–15	*John XXIII]
1417–31	*Martin V
[1423–9	Clement VIII]
[1425–30	Benedict XIV]
1431–47	*Eugenius IV
[1439–49	Felix V]
1447–55	*Nicholas V
1455–8	*Callistus III
1458–64	*Pius II
1464–71	Paul II
1471–84	*Sixtus IV
1484–92	Innocent VIII
1492–1503	*Alexander VI
1503	Pius III
1503–13	*Julius II
1513–21	*Leo X
1522–3	*Hadrian VI
1523–34	*Clement VII
1534–49	*Paul III
1550–5	*Julius III
1555	Marcellus II
1555–9	*Paul IV
1559–65	*Pius IV
1566–72	*Pius V
1572–85	*Gregory XIII
1585–90	*Sixtus V
1590	Urban VII
1590–1	Gregory XIV
1591	Innocent IX
1592–1605	*Clement VIII
1605	Leo XI
1605–21	*Paul V
1621–3	Gregory XV
1623–44	*Urban VIII
1644–55	*Innocent X
1655–67	*Alexander VII
1667–9	Clement IX
1670–6	Clement X
1676–89	*Innocent XI
1689–91	*Alexander VIII
1691–1700	Innocent XII
1700–21	*Clement XI
1721–4	Innocent XIII
1724–30	*Benedict XIII
1730–40	Clement XII
1740–58	*Benedict XIV
1758–69	*Clement XIII
1769–74	*Clement XIV
1775–99	*Pius VI
1800–23	*Pius VII
1823–9	Leo XII
1829–30	Pius VIII
1831–46	*Gregory XVI
1846–78	*Pius IX
1878–1903	*Leo XIII
1903–14	*Pius X
1914–22	*Benedict XV
1922–39	*Pius XI
1939–58	*Pius XII
1958–63	*John XXIII
1963–78	*Paul VI
1978	*John Paul I
1978–	*John Paul II

[1] His pontificate is dated from the deposition of his predecessor, but its legitimacy is contested.
[2] No account was taken of the previous antipope, who had resisted for a very short time.
[3] No Pope bearing the name of John XX ever existed.